"56. For each judicial district the Governor in Council may appoint a sheriff and the Lieutenant-Governor in Council may appoint a clerk of the court and may respectively name the place at which such sheriff and clerk shall reside and keep an office; and the clerk of the district within which the seat of Government of the Territories is situate, shall be registrar of the court sitting in banc."

Mr. FOSTER. Who appoints the sheriff?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The law now is that the Governor General in Council appoints both the sheriff and the clerk of the court. Under the proposed arrangement the Governor General in Council will still appoint the sheriff while the local Government shall appoint the clerk of the court.

On section 12,

12. Subsection one of the section substituted for section sixty-four of the said Act by section seven of chapter seventeen of the statutes of 1894 is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:—

"64. The Lieutenant-Governor may appoint justices of the peace for the Territories, who shall have jurisdiction as such throughout the same; but, until the Legislative Assembly otherwise provides, no person shall be appointed a justice of the peace for the Territories, or shall act as such, who is not the owner in fee simple for his own use and benefit of lands lying and being in the Territories of and above the value of three hundred dollars over and above what will satisfy and discharge all incumbrances affecting the same, and over and above all rents and charges payable out of or affecting the same, and who has not resided in the Territories for a period of at least three years."

Mr. FOSTER. He may not be able to read and write.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The only change is that the words "until the Legislative Assembly otherwise provides," are inserted in the 12th and 13th lines. The effect is that the qualifications of justices of the peace remains as it was, so far as this Parliament is concerned, but we give the Legislative Assemblies power to legislate in regard to the qualification of justices of the peace.

On section 14,

14. Subsection four of the section substituted for section sixty-four of the said Act by section seven of chapter seventeen of the statutes of 1894 is hereby amended by striking out all the words after "years" in the fourth line thereof.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This has to do with the qualifications of the police magistrates. The law as it is now provides that no person shall be appointed a police magistrate unless he is admitted and has practiced as an advocate, barrister, or solicitor, in one of the provinces of Canada for a period of not less than three years, or is a magistrate of not less than three years of standing in Canada. This has the effect of striking out the latter portion of that clause, because it is believed a man should not be a police magistrate unless he has been a practicing barrister for at least three years.

On section 15,

15. Subsection one of section eighty-eight of the said Act is hereby amended by striking out the words "Lieutenant-Governor" in the third line thereof, and substituting the words "Legislative Assembly" in lieu thereof.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In this section I desire to move an amendment which has been suggested by Mr. Justice Wetmore, of the North-west Court, and concurred in by the Department of Justice respecting the definition of larceny. By section 66 of the North-west Territories Act, the jurisdiction of the judges of the Supreme Court of the Territories is defined, and under subsection "A" of this section authority is given to the judges to try any person charged with having committed or attempted to commit larceny, embezzlement, or obtaining money or property by false pretenses or feloniously receiving stolen property in any case in which the value of the whole property so stolen, &c., does not, in the opinion of the said judge, exceed the sum of $200. The Criminal Act has abolished the use of the term larceny and the technical distinction formerly known to the Criminal Law by which stealing was denominated larceny and certain technical words used to describe the offence. The definition is a simple one, the act being defined as theft or stealing.

The distinction between a misdemeanour and a felony was founded on the old rules of the criminal law, and as the law exists at present, a question might arise as to whether the judges of the North-west Territories had jurisdiction to try for theft. In accordance with the suggestion of Judge Wetmore, I move in amendment that the word "larceny" in the sections I have read, be changed to "theft," and that the word "felonious" be struck out.

On section 16,

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The effect of this is to abolish the office of clerk of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, and put the office under the jurisdiction of the legislative assembly. We have a clerk there whom we pay $2,000 a year, and I do not see any reason why we should have such an officer there when the legislative assembly can employ their own clerk for a much less sum.

Mr. DAVIN. I think we ought to put in something to save the officer. The present occupant of that office is a Dominion officer, and he has been a most effective officer. I can safely say that at the time he became an officer of the Government, his qualities and talents were of the greatest advantage to the North-west Territories. I may say as regards the politics of this gentleman, Mr. R. B. Gordon, that I believe his politics are of the neutral tint; however, if he had any, he never manifested them. But I think that when we have had a man there in our employ, giving him $2,000 a year, and when we are about to amend an Act which will give another body power of either retaining that man or dismissing him, I think we ought to limit the power of appointing a clerk to the time when, either by death or by retirement, Mr. Gordon ceases to be clerk.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think that is a matter that may be left safely to the parties who are to be clothed with power to deal with it. I am afraid that the suggestion of my hon. friend is not practicable.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Gentlemen who have been doing official business with this officer for years past, I understand, are on perfectly good terms with him.

Mr. DAVIN. Quite so.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I wish to move:

That after the word "territory" in subsection one there be added the following words.—

"Subject to any right which may have been acquired under letters patent issued previous to such transfer."

The object of that amendment is, to avoid the Government being compelled to transfer a trail, without having regard to the fact that a patent might have been issued before for a certain part of the trail.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 20,

Mr. DAVIN. Why is it that the Minister is getting rid of subsection 2 of section 21? Is it no longer necessary?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It applies to any transaction, and it is necessary, it will be there.

Mr. DAVIN. But under this section you would repeal it?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There may be something in the point raised by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin), and I will amend the section to meet his views.

Mr. BERGERON. Do I understand that the intention of this Bill is, to give the Territories autonomous government like the older provinces ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The Bill will give the people of the Territories a government which shall not have the full powers of a provincial government, but in so far as they have power to deal with subjects, they shall do it in the same way as the other provinces. They will have Ministers who are responsible to the legislature, and the rules and precedents that apply to the provincial governments will apply to the government of the Territories.

Mr. BERGERON. Then the Territories will be constituted under one legislature, and I presume this Government will have to pay them the necessary expenses. Will this Bill increase the present expenses ?

THE MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. De facto, they have this kind of government now. They have an executive committee of the assembly who are the responsible advisers of the Lieutenant-Governor. It is a practice which has grown up, but the constitution does not provide for it in the proper form.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not see that there is much object in this Bill. I believe that as soon as we can, we should constitute the North-west Territories into a province, and give them responsible government in a complete form.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is what we are doing.

Mr. BERGERON. Not at all.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The Bill goes in that direction.

Mr. BERGERON. This Bill will make very little difference to them, except that I believe it will increase the expenses to us. Let the Territories have their own government, and pay for their own expenses, and let us get rid of them as soon as possible in that way.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The objection of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) is that we are not going far enough.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I must say a single word in qualification of what my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) has stated. I am sure that no one wants to get rid of our friends in the Territories.

Mr. BERGERON. I meant in the way of getting rid of paying their expenses.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. On the contrary, we want to steadily do what I think this Act does, and the time has come when such an Act was required. It gives them power to deal with the local business of the North-west Territories to a greater extent than they were able to do before ; but I do not think it is calculated to increase the expenditure. It rather increases their legislative power in accordance with the wishes of the people.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It would undoubtedly increase the efficiency of their administration.

Mr. DAVIN. Hear hear.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The principle upon which I acted is this. I met the representatives of the territorial government, and they explained to me—as of course I knew before—that there has been in the Territories for some years, an agitation in favour of what they called provincial autonomy. Now, it is a subject with which it would be extremely inconvenient to deal until it takes some shape in the public mind. I fancy that any Government that undertook to form an organization there, without something more defined to go by than we have at the present time, would find very considerable difficulty. But I said that if they wanted something of a practical character which would assist them in carrying on their business, no doubt their wishes in that respect could be met. They suggested, therefore, that a Bill such as I have presented to the House would, for the present, meet the views of the people ; and I have not thought it advisable to go further at the present time, but to allow matters to develop. At a future time the House may be called on to deal with the question of the organization of a provincial constitution.

Mr. BERGERON. I am sorry that the hon. leader of the Opposition did not understand me. I know that for some years it has been the ambition of the people of the North-west to have provincial autonomy, and I think upon that depends largely the hope of the future prosperity of the country.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Who will now enact the school ordinances ? Are they in the power of the Governor in Council or of the legislative assembly ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is no change in that respect. The legislative assembly in conjunction with the Lieutenant-Governor.

Bill reported, as amended.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR moved that the Bill be now read the third time.

Mr. DAVIN. I want to say a few words which I did not say before, lest I might delay the Bill. I am exceedingly glad to see this Bill go through. In 1888, when the Right Honourable Sir John Macdonald sat where the Minister of Trade and Commerce now sits, he brought down a Bill to amend the North-west Territories Act, and I gave notice of an amendment to that Bill that would have introduced then precisely the change which my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior has now happily introduced, and I congratulate him. I may, as a little piece of history, say what occurred. The leader of the then Government (Sir John Macdonald) resented my action, and withdrew his Bill, and brought down another Bill, with a clause in it which will be found in the Act of 1888, by which he introduced into our government what was called the Advisory Council. I would not then speak on the Bill, as there was no use trying to pass my amendment, and my respect for my great leader would not allow me to comment on that clause and pour on it the ridicule it deserved; but I said to a friend of mine, when he asked me why I did not comment on it, "It is a mere toy," as it turned out to be. In consequence of pressure brought by myself on the Government, we had a few years afterwards an amendment, which introduced a different state of things—which introduced a committee of four to aid the governor; but that committee of four is a very inconvenient piece of machinery, as the hon. gentleman knows, because, instead of being chosen by the Government, it was chosen by the legislative assembly. My hon. friend here (Mr. Bergeron) and, to some extent, my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, are under a complete mistake in supposing that there has been any agitation amongst the people of the North-west for responsible government. There is not. In this House, whenever I advocated it, I found the members from the North-west Territories opposing me. If the debates of 1888 are looked at, it will be found that Mr. Macdowall, and others, got up in the House and said that the Territories did not want responsible government; and in Regina, at the instance of a certain individual, a meeting was held at which resolutions were passed to prevent my action in this House being successful. I can say that the most thoughtful people in the Territories have always held the views that I have held; but at the same time there has been no agitation and I have battled for this thing single-handed. I believe it would have been a good thing for the Territories if we had had this legislation in 1888; and subsequently, in 1891, when another change was made, it would have been much better for the Territories if this change had been made; so that, instead of having a nondescript government, hampered in many ways, and with more power than a government should have, more irresponsible than this Government, which we now create will be, we should have had at once a stronger and more responsible government, and my belief is that we should have made more progress than we have done. I am very glad to see this Bill launched to the third reading, and to see that we are going to have responsible government in the Territories.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

DOMINION LANDS ACT.

Bill (No. 116) further to amend the Dominion Lands Act, was read the second time, considered in committee, and reported.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. Is it necessary to do more than call out the numbers of the clauses?

Mr. DAVIN. No; I have read them.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. DAVIN. I entirely support the motion that this Bill be read the third time. I may say that it embodies some reforms I have been contending for in this House for years. In fact I might on my own account say that while the Government have been accused of stealing many things from the Conservative party, there is no individual on this side from whom they have purloined in such a wholesale manner as from the humble individual now addressing the House.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I must congratulate my hon. friend from Western Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) upon having at last found a Government in Canada which he can heartily support.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

REFUND OF SUPERANNUATION FEES.

The House resolved itself into committee on the following resolution:

That it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may, in his discretion, repay to any person heretofore or hereafter dismissed from the public service the whole, or such portion as he deems advisable, of the amount contributed by such person to any civil service superannuation fund, with interest, to the date of dismissal, not exceeding... per cent per annum.

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). This resolution explains itself. Under the existing law, if a civil servant has served ten years, he may be retired on pension and he may be retired before ten years with a gratuity. This resolution deals with the case of a civil servant dismissed for cause, which, while in the judgment of the Government sufficient to justify his dismissal, is hardly sufficient to justify the loss of his superannuation money. We propose to pay in such cases back to the person dismissed the amount he has paid into the fund with interest, which otherwise he would entirely forfeit.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I suppose what my hon. friend really means is this, that when parties are dismissed from the service for being politically opposed to the Government of the day, they will not lose the amount they have paid into the superannuation fund. Of course I can only say, sympathizing deeply as I do with the unfortunate civil servants who so lose their positions, I shall be glad to see some compensation made to them, no matter how slight.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is not right in presuming that persons have lost their positions for holding a different political creed from ours, but if an official has been found guilty of political misconduct to a sufficient extent to justify the Government in depriving him of his office, we think we ought not to punish him further by taking away his superannuation money. Therefore we propose to pay him that money back with interest at 4 per cent.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Government might well be generous as well as just and allow them the legal rate of 6 per cent, which would be about the fair rate they would get for their money if invested outside.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Perhaps we might compromise by making it 5 per cent.

Resolution, as amended, read the second time.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 128) relating to the Canada Investment and Agency Company, Limited.—(Mr. Sutherland.)

Mr. FIELDING.

PROFESSIONAL STAFF, ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER asked :

1. Is it one of the conditions of appointments to the professorial staff of the Royal Military College of Canada that appointees may not resign their appointments during the currency of a college session, and without the intimation of their intention to resign at least six months prior to the close of the session?

2. If there be such a condition, is its practical effect to bind the appointees to their offices for periods of twelve months?

3. Has the Government notified the following members of the staff of the college that their employment is to cease from and after the 30th of this month or at any other early date :—

Forshaw Day, Esq., Royal Canadian Academician, Professor of Freehand Drawing and Painting ;

Arthur Dupouth Duval, Esq., M.D., Professor of French ;

John Waddell, Esq., B.A., Ph. D., D. Sc., Professor of Physics, Chemistry and Geology ;

Robert Carr Harris, Esq., C.E., Professor of Civil Engineering and Architecture ;

Capt. A. G. Wurtele, Instructor in Mathematics?

4. If so, what notice has been given to these gentlemen respectively of the intended termination of their employment?

5. In the cases, if any, in which such notifications have been made by the Government to the appointees, neither accompanied nor preceded by intimation of the Government's disapproval of the appointee's conduct or of his manner of discharging his duties, what compensation is it intended by the Government to make to the several appointees in lieu of the notice which the conditions of their engagement and character of their employment implied they should be entitled to?

6. What, if any, suggestion is there in the terms of the engagements of the respective appointees which would have led to their supposing that in accepting service they became liable to summary dismissal, or at short notice, without fault assigned or other cause to disentitle them to consideration for compensation in accordance with prevailing custom?

7. Is there a condition attaching to members of civil instructional staff that after a probationary period of one year a civil professor's services may be re-engaged for five years, and successively thereafter for periods, if desired, of six years?

8. If so, does the civil appointee correctly interpret this regulation as implying that in accepting service, the Government accords him the right to the expectation of continuance of employment, uninterrupted by summary dismissal, or dismissal at short notice?

9. On the occasion of Sergeant Major Morgans being recently called to rejoin his regiment in England, was it at the solicitation of the commandant with the assent of the Militia Department that the Sergeant Major agreed to return to Canada after discharge in England to resume duty at the Royal Military College?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). The following are the answers to the hon. gentleman's questions :—1. General Order 22 of the 23rd December, 1886, runs :

If a professor or instructor intends resigning his appointment, he must give six months' notice of his intention, and at such date as will allow him to continue his duty at the college to the end of the term, say 30th June.

This order was passed subsequent to the appointment of any of the professors and instructors whose names are mentioned on the above questions. I cannot find any agreement, under which these professors joined the college. 2. No, merely for six months, if the professor gave his notice at the proper time of the year. 3. Yes. From 30th June. 4. Professors Day, Duval, Waddell and Capt. Wurtele were given notice about the 1st of May. Professor Carr Harris was given notice on the 14th of June. 5. This is in the hands of the Government. 6. There is no definite suggestion, either to this effect, or to the contrary. 7. Yes. General Order of December, 1886, reads :

All first appointments to the superior civil staff will be on probation for one year, renewable, if approved, for six additional years.

However, this general order does not refer to the professors in question, as it was passed subsequent to their appointment to the college. 8. The Government reserve to themselves the right to take any action that they may deem desirable in the interests of the college, due compensation being made to individuals affected thereby. 9. Yes. I understand Sergt.-Major Morgans was re-appointed at the college, for such period, as his services proved satisfactory and efficient. This was in 1891.

SERGEANTS, ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER asked :

1. Has the Government notified the determination of their employment from and after the 30th of this month to Staff Sergeant Leaden, Chief Clerk and Quartermaster Sergeant at the Royal Military College ; Sergeant Major Morgans, late Scots Guard, Infantry Drill Instructor, Musketry Instructor, Gymnastic Instructor, and Keeper of the Records of the Royal Military College, and holder of the championship for Canada and the United States in sword, bayonet and foil contests ; and Hospital Sergeant Brogan, Royal Military College?

2. What are their respective ages?

3. What, if any, age regulation of the Canadian Government service affects their tenure of employment?

4. How long have they been in the Imperial and Canadian services combined?

5. Was their reputation of a very high class on their entering the Canadian service?

6. Have they since retained their reputation?

7. How many years have they been in the Canadian service?

8. What notice have they received of the intention to terminate their employment?

9. What gratuity, if any, is it intended to award them respectively on the termination of their employment?

10. Are Staff Sergeant Leaden, Sergeant Major Morgans and Hospital Sergeant Brogan members of the subordinate military staff of the Royal Military College?

11. Has a recent amendment of the Royal Military College Act required that in future appointments to the subordinate military staff shall be enlisted for service there as are members of the permanent militia for periods of three years?

12. Had Staff Sergeant Leaden, Sergeant Major Morgans and Hospital Sergeant Brogan not joined the subordinate military staff prior to the before mentioned amendments of the Royal Military College Act, would they now be liable to summary dismissal, or dismissal at short notice without military procedure under the Army Act and Queen's Regulations?

13. What, if any, reason is there for according them less consideration with regard to discontinuance of their service than will be secured to their successors under the amended College Act?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). The following are the answers to the hon. gentleman's questions :—1. Yes. 2. Sergt.-Major Morgans, 47; Sergt.-Major Leaden, 61; Hospital Sergt. Brogan, 62. 3. None that I know of. 4. Sergt.-Major Morgans, 26 years; Sergt.-Major Leaden, 39 years; Hospital Sergt. Brogan, 39 years. 5. I believe so. 6. Sergt.-Major Morgans is no longer the smart man he was, and is not sufficiently up-to-date as an instructor. Sergt.-Major Leaden is still an excellent clerk, but there is no further need of his services. Hospital Sergt. Brogan maintains his reputation, but there is no further need of his services. 7. Sergt.-Major Morgans, 19 years; Sergt.-Major Leaden, 21 years; Hospital Sergt. Brogan, 16 years. 8. About 2½ months. 9. This is in the hands of the Government. 10. Yes. 11. Yes. 12. (a) Yes. (b) Yes, as they have never been enlisted in Canada and are not now soldiers. 13. None.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. BENNETT. This morning when the Orders of the Day were called, I drew the attention of the Controller of Customs to a matter referring to the export duty on logs, and he said that this afternoon he hoped to be able to answer the question.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). I had not forgotten it. The Commissioner is preparing an answer for me, and as soon as I receive it I will communicate it to the hon. gentleman.

DEPARTMENTS OF CUSTOMS AND INLAND REVENUE.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on the following resolution :—

That it is expedient to provide that the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Inland Revenue shall each receive a salary at the rate of five thousand dollars per annum.

Motion agreed to, and resolution considered in Committee, reported, and read the first and second times.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 125) respecting the Departments of Customs and Inland Revenue.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I move to add this clause as part of the Bill which was omitted in the printing by mistake :

The salary of each of the said Ministers shall be $5,000 per annum, and shall continue at that rate until a readjustment of the departments of Government shall reduce the number of Ministers holding departments to thirteen or less, whereupon thereafter the salary of each of the said Ministers shall be $7,000.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me this is the proper time to deal with the distribution of the heads of departments. I would like to ask the Minister if it is contemplated to reduce the heads of departments to the same number that it was before. I remember very distinctly that at different times since the Controllers were appointed, the hon. gentlemen opposite who were then sitting on this side of the House, objected very strongly to the increase of offices, and to the appointment of a Commissioner of Trade and Commerce. Now, so far as we have any information, it is not the intention of the Government to do away with that office to-day. Might I ask the Minister if they have it under consideration, or if they have decided to reduce the number of Ministers to the same number as before, and to do away with the office of Minister of Trade and Commerce ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is perfectly right. The prevailing impression I think, on both sides of the House was that a determined effort should be made to reduce the number of Ministers, and that matter has been under the consideration of the Government, and is now engaging their very earnest consideration. The hon. gentleman sees that this Bill now introduced is merely to make the present Controllers in point of fact Ministers, and to entitle them to seats on the Cabinet Board ; and the express provision is made on the face of the Bill—not the mere statement that the Government are considering it—but that when the departments are reduced to thirteen, and not until then, their salaries should be the same as those of other Cabinet Ministers. But in the meantime, they do not receive any increase of salary whatever.

Mr. SPROULE. According to that, it would require another Bill to carry out the intention of the Government.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. DAVIES.

Mr. SPROULE. Originally it was thought that it could not be done in one Bill.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will show the hon. gentleman why it could not be done. There was only a difference of opinion as to the construction of the existing statute. The late Government thought that statute was wide enough to entitle them to call the Controllers of Customs and Inland Revenue to seats in the Cabinet. The present Government thought differently, and on reference to the Minister of Justice, it was determined, in order to put the matter beyond doubt, to introduce a statute entitling them to be called to the Cabinet as Ministers of the Crown ; and then provision was inserted that calling them Ministers of the Crown should not entitle them to an increase of salary. But it is expressly provided that, if in the readjustment of departments hereafter, the number is reduced to thirteen or below, then these gentlemen who are called to the Cabinet should receive $7,000 a year, but not until then.

Mr. WILSON. Why not make it ten ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It says thirteen or less, and that embraces ten. I do not think there is any difference of opinion.

Mr. MACLEAN. I cannot quite approve this discrimination against the Controllers. I think they ought to have $7,000 as well as the other Ministers. I think they do as important work. I think the two present incumbents of those offices are equal to their colleagues, and I think their colleagues ought to stand up for them and see that they are as well paid as themselves. As to the number of Ministers of the Crown, I would be prepared to support in this House a proposal to reduce the number to ten, and to pay the Ministers $10,000 each. I think that would be a long way in the right direction. But at all events, so far as I am concerned at present, I am quite prepared to let the two Controllers be paid as much as their colleagues.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not think there is the slightest difference of opinion between us at all ; we quite agree with the hon. gentleman's statement that this should be done. But the hon. gentleman sees that at present there is such a number of gentlemen holding departments that it is not thought advisable to increase the total amount paid to them in salaries ; but in the meantime, and until a readjustment takes place, they continue to receive their present salaries. But it is not intended that they shall occupy any subordinate position whatever, and as soon as the time comes they shall receive not only the same position as other Cabinet Ministers, but they will receive the same pay.

Mr. FOSTER. How many Ministers are there now ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are twelve Ministers ; with these two there will be fourteen.

Mr. FOSTER. That is, when the hon. gentlemen are now under full salary, there will be fourteen titled Ministers.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman knows well that a readjustment is contemplated by the Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. There is one good thing about this that I will mention for the comfort of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), who is troubled over this, I know. We shall have a very important leverage towards reducing the number to thirteen. When an item of $2,000 a year, in the hands of two such bright and intelligent men as the Controller of Customs and the Controller of Inland Revenue dangles in the distance, and that distance is to be traversed the very moment the Cabinet is reduced to thirteen there will be a very strong pressure to reduce the Cabinet to thirteen. Now, if the suggestion of my hon. friend for East York (Mr. Maclean) to make the salaries $10,000 when the number of Ministers is reduced to ten, or nine, is adopted, that will be a still more powerful leverage, and it would work from day to day until we might probably get the Cabinet down to proportions somewhere near what it was so devoutly wished it should be by the present Postmaster General and the member for North Wellington when they were not on that side of the House. Of course, we are only going to pay for the time being, according to the work which is done. Now, the Secretary of State is a man who is hardly worked. He has a very difficult department ; lots of details in it. He ought to get $7,000 a year, but the Controller of Customs simply walks into his office and walks out of his office, and so $5,000 is plenty for him. That is a very wise discrimination. And the Controller of Inland Revenue ; why he cannot expect more than $5,000 a year, and he ought to be very glad that he is going to get even that a little while, from these hardly worked colleagues of his. It is a beautiful illustration of how not to do what they promised to do and to get around a corner.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am glad we are getting a little enlightenment on both sides of the House. If my memory serves me right, it is not long since my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) introduced a Bill apportioning this $5,000 to the Controller of Customs. He now is getting enlightened, as some of the rest of us are, and although we might debate this from an economical standpoint, we all agree that the Controller of Customs is one of the hardest worked officials in the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. And so should be paid.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. And so will be, when the readjustment takes place. The hon. gentleman sees that the Bill anticipates that in the meantime, as the hon. gentleman knows, it is quite impossible this session to overtake all the work the Government have pressing upon them. They have been obliged to submit the Bill in its present shape, and until they get time to make the readjustment which they have under consideration.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) contend that he can make the readjustment without an Act of Parliament to give him authority.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. An Act of Parliament will be necessary of course to carry the readjustment out.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is a point in regard to this matter which has escaped attention, and I wish to draw the attention of hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches to it ; especially the attention of the hon. gentleman who is leading the House. I have already expressed my gratification at the step taken by the Government in bringing the Controller of Customs and the Controller of Inland Revenue into the Cabinet ; but I cannot understand why these gentlemen are brought into the Cabinet in an inferior position to that of other Cabinet Ministers. There is a very strong reason why that should not be the case. The Prime Minister when appealing to the country committed himself in the most open and public manner, to the declaration (by notifying the Controller of Customs through a letter) that it was his intention to apply to Parliament to place the Controller of Customs and Inland Revenue on the same footing as other members of the Cabinet. That public letter contained no insinuation, that when they were brought into the Cabinet there was to be a very invidious distinction made in their salaries. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has rather facetiously referred to the subject and I will do it more seriously. There is no person who knows anything of the administration of public affairs in Canada, who will not say that the duties of the Controller of Inland Revenue, and the duties of the Controller of Customs especially, are infinitely more onerous and demand a much larger amount of time and patience, and enduring attention to public business, than that of other Cabinet Ministers whom it would be invidious to name. You have arrived, at what I think a very sound conclusion, that it is desirable to have these gentlemen in the Cabinet, and you admit that they have a right to the same salaries as other Cabinet Ministers, and therefore having decided on these two questions of public policy, what is the object of postponing the increase in their salaries? If it is not convenient to make at the present moment, a reduction in the number of Cabinet Ministers which you evidently contemplate, why should you have these gentlemen in the invidious position of receiving a smaller salary. If it is not too late, I would suggest to the Ministers that they should reconsider this resolution and place the Controllers in the position which in justice to themselves and the duties they have to perform they have a right to. Under the circumstances, it would have been better to give the Controllers of the Inland Revenue and of Customs the full salaries so as to implement the promises of the Prime Minister, and then you could make your reduction in the number of Cabinet Ministers afterwards.

Mr. HENDERSON. There is no doubt a feeling in the country that perhaps there are too many Cabinet Ministers at the present time. However, we have them and we are entitled to deal fairly with them. I see no reason why the department which is presided over by the present Controller of Customs should not be as well remunerated as any other department. I believe it is one of the most difficult departments to manage, there is certainly a very large amount of work, and I can see no reason whatever why that gentleman should receive only $5,000 while other Ministers are paid $7,000 a year. My plan would be something different from anything that has yet been suggested. We have in the Senate two Cabinet Ministers. One, the Secretary of State, occupies to my mind a minor position, and one of very little public importance. There is no good reason why that gentleman should receive $7,000 a year, while the Controller of Customs should be put off with $5,000. Then again, in the Senate we have the Minister of Justice, and in this House we have the Solicitor General, both of whom receive together $12,000 a year. I would reduce the Minister of Justice and the Secretary of State down to $5,000, and raise the salary of the Controllers to $7,000 a year, and I think the money would be more equitably distributed than it is at the present time. Besides, we must bear in mind that the hon. gentlemen who have a seat in this Chamber, are called upon at times to spend money to secure their election, while in the Senate they have a life seat, and a smaller salary would remunerate them much better than it would members of this House. I hope the leader of the Government will take this matter into his consideration, and deal fairly with the case of the Controller of Customs. I am sure that the Minister of Justice, when he has in this Chamber an assistant in the Solicitor General to do half of his work, would be very well satisfied to take the sum of $5,000 a year.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am afraid that my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) has not got sufficient respect for that august assembly which sits so near us; but I will mention his suggestion.

Mr. FOSTER. Will you report how it was received?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I will consider that. The hon. the leader of the Opposition is perfectly correct in saying, that no man in the service of the Government is harder worked than the Controller of Customs, and probably than his colleague the Controller of Inland Revenue. It is also true, I admit, that the presence of these gentlemen in Council would be of very considerable service, as the hon. the leader of the Opposition admitted by his own action in summoning the Controllers to that position when he was Prime Minister; but I observe that he did not on that occasion raise their salaries. He may have intended to, but he did not do it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend will permit me to interrupt him for one moment, to say that I never was in a position to do so, because I could not summon them to any Government of which I was a member, having been deprived of the power. But I stood pledged, and if the party had remained in power I would have carried out the pledge, not only to make them members of the Cabinet, but to take the means which, unfortunately, I had not, of providing that they should receive the same salaries as the other Ministers.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I did not know that my hon. friend intended that; but the Government do desire to have the services of my hon. friend the Controller of Customs (Mr. Paterson) and my hon. friend the Controller of Inland Revenue (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) in the Cabinet at the earliest date. The other matter, with the concurrence of these hon. gentlemen, we have decided to leave over for the present. I may remind the leader of the Opposition, however, that the mere fact of one man having a larger salary and another a smaller salary does not, by English precedent, in the slightest degree detract from the position occupied by a Cabinet Minister. Many of the English Cabinet Ministers, men of the very highest position, for example, the Duke of Devonshire, who has occupied the highest post in the councils of the Conservative party, have received, if I remember rightly, £2,000 a year, while their colleagues received £5,000, a very much wider difference than exists between the Controllers and the other members of the Cabinet. I can assure the hon.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

gentleman and the House that no sort of distinction in the way of rank or position can possibly exist between the members of the Cabinet. The only difference is in the question of their present salaries.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it is to be regretted that the hon. Minister, when making this change, did not provide for the change all round. In all probability, they could not agree as to who should vacate his office so as to reduce the number. I presume the Government will adopt, with reference to themselves, the principle which they have adopted with reference to some of the departments, and reduce the number when one of them dies, by not filling the place. So, I presume we may live in hopes that with the first Minister who dies we shall have a reduction of the number to that extent; or else we shall be obliged to wait until we turn them out of office or until the people do so, before we get a reduction.

Mr. FOSTER. I was just going to suggest that the House would listen with a good deal of interest to a short statement from the leader of the Patrons on this auspicious occasion.

Mr. ROGERS. I was going to say a word on this subject, and I think I have very good reason for doing so. The general feeling throughout the country is that we are too much governed, too extravagantly governed, as has been pretty well acknowledged by the supporters of the Government as well as by the members of the Opposition. No doubt the Ministers feel that themselves, and therefore do not wish to increase the expense. Not only the Patrons and the supporters of the Government, but the members of the Opposition, when before the tax-payers, who have to bear the burden, took that position. I think the suggestion of the Government is very good—to reduce the number when the time comes, and not to increase the expense, and they are doing that. I know that it is in accordance with the wishes of the people.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). Before the Bill is reported, I want to add a clause to provide that the Ministers of Customs and the Minister of Inland Revenue shall be entitled to perform such statutory duties and exercise such statutory powers as are by different statutes vested in the Controllers:

Wherever, under or by virtue of any statute, any power or duty is given to or imposed upon the Controller of Customs or the Controller of Inland Revenue respectively, such power or duty shall be exercised or carried out, as the case may require, by the Minister of Customs or the Minister of Inland Revenue respectively.

Amendment agreed to; Bill reported as amended, read the third time, and passed.

COLD STORAGE TRANSPORTATION.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher) moved that the House resolve itself into committee to consider the following resolutions:—

1. That it is expedient to ratify certain agreements between the Government and certain companies, entered into under the authority of an Order in Council, dated the 4th of May, 1897 (copies of which Order in Council and agreements have been laid before Parliament), for providing cold storage on steamships from Montreal to the United Kingdom during the season of 1897, 1898 and 1899, as follows:—

With Messrs. H. & A. Allan and Messrs. David Torrance & Co., for two steamships each, and a regular and if possible, weekly service to Liverpool; with Messrs. H. & A. Allan and Messrs. William Thomson & Sons, for three steamships each, and a weekly service to London; with Messrs. H. & A. Allan and Messrs. R. Reford & Co., for one steamship each, and a fortnightly service to Glasgow; with Messrs. Elder, Dempster & Co., for five steamships, and a weekly service to Avonmouth;

Each steamship to have cold storage capacity of about 10,000 cubic feet, (to Avonmouth, about 20,000 cubic feet,) the cost of the refrigeration plant and insulation being estimated at $10,000 per steamship, (to Avonmouth, at $12,325,) one-half of which is to be paid by the Government in three equal annual instalments.

2. That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to enter into contracts with any person or company, for providing cold storage accommodation at Toronto, Quebec, Halifax, St. John and Charlottetown, the Government granting a dividend of 5 per cent annually for three years on a sum not exceeding $40,000, on the cost of the cold storage premises and refrigerating plant, at Quebec, at Halifax, and at St. John; on a sum not exceeding $50,000 at Toronto, and on a sum not exceeding $20,000 at Charlottetown.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FOSTER. Is this exactly in the line of the explanation given by the Minister last year?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

Rice, uncleaned, unhulled or paddy, three-quarters of one cent per pound.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I propose to make a reduction in that item to one-half cent. Without going into the complicated question of the quantity of uncleaned rice which is taken to make a definite quantity of cleaned rice, a question which is always very debatable, I may explain the position by simpler figures. Under the tariff of the late Government, the duty on cleaned rice was \$1.25 per 100 pounds, and on uncleaned it was 30 cents, making a difference between the two of 95 cents. Under our tariff resolutions, as they now stand, the duty is \$1.25, as before, on the cleaned rice, and 75 cents on the uncleaned, being a difference apparently of 50 cents. But when we come to examine the effect of the reciprocal tariff, we find that that difference is very much reduced. The manufacturer of rice has to import his raw material from countries which are not entitled to the benefit of the reciprocal tariff, and consequently pays the full rate of duty mentioned in the general tariff, but the cleaned rice will be imported from Great Britain and therefore will get the benefit of the reciprocal tariff. Applying the  $\frac{1}{4}$  reduction to the figures, you will find that the duties, under the resolutions as they now stand, would be as follows:—\$1.25 on the cleaned rice, less  $\frac{1}{4}$ —and I am arguing on the basis of the full reduction under the reciprocal clause—makes the duty 93 $\frac{3}{4}$  cents; and on the uncleaned 75 cents, thus reducing the difference between the two to 18 $\frac{3}{4}$  cents. Our attention was drawn to the fact that the duty was thus lower than was contemplated. By the change we now propose, the duty on the cleaned rice will stand at \$1.25 less  $\frac{1}{4}$  of 31 $\frac{1}{4}$  cents, making a net duty of 93 $\frac{3}{4}$  cents. The uncleaned rice we now propose to place at 50 cents, which will leave a difference of 43 $\frac{3}{4}$  cents between the two, as against 95 cents in the old tariff. By this change we have every reason to believe the rice men will be able to continue their business.

Mr. MONK. I would ask the hon. gentleman if he could see his way clear to reducing the duty to four-tenths of a cent, because although it is possible the rice mills will be able to continue under the change, it will be very hard for them to do so. The reason I make this request is because there is a rice cleaning factory in the town of Cote St. Paul, and because the municipal authorities have petitioned the Government not to cause the cessation of any further existing industries. Many industries have already been obliged to give up owing to changes in the tariff. I believe the hon. Minister is in possession of the figures. It is possible the mills will be able to go on, but only with the greatest difficulty, and as it is only a question of one-tenth of a cent I ask the hon. gentleman if he would see his way clear to reducing the duty to four-tenths of a cent instead of  $\frac{1}{2}$  a cent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have given the subject very great consideration, and the judgment we have reached in imposing a duty of  $\frac{1}{2}$  cent on the raw rice is as fair a conclusion as we can reach, and I regret we cannot accede to the hon. gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. FOSTER. I am very glad my hon. friend has revised his previous judgment in regard to this matter. I would like to enforce, if I thought there was any probability of my representations having weight, the request of my hon. friend to my left, but as the Government have come to their final decision, and I suppose a final decision must be reached some time or other, I do not suppose there is any use in my doing so, but I must congratulate my hon. friend on taking some little step towards protecting an industry in whose favour there is a good deal to say.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance if he is in possession of information as to whether this rice is cleaned entirely in England, or whether a portion of it is cleaned in other countries and imported via England into this country.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have no very special information on that point. Our information leads us to believe that the process of cleaning rice in England is substantially the same as in other countries, and there is scarcely any doubt that the rice will be cleaned in England and entitled to the reciprocal tariff.

Mr. MONK. I may inform my hon. friend that the rice is cleaned elsewhere as well as in England.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman has not quite answered my question. I asked if the Government was possessed of information as to whether rice imported into Canada from England was cleaned in other countries, including the countries of growth?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have no information leading us to believe that that is correct. I am not in a position to give the hon. gentleman any definite information as that point has not been brought to my attention.

Mr. EARLE. As a matter of fact, rice cleaned in China and Japan is imported very largely into the province of British Columbia, and it may be from some other countries. It is imported almost exclusively from China and Japan for use in our markets.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That would not come under the reciprocal clause.

Mr. CLANCY. It would go to England all the same.

Mr. FOSTER. It means simply that all the cleaned rice will come from England until the foreign countries get the benefit of treaty obligations, which will not be very long.

Item, as amended, agreed to.

Peaches and pears, n.o.p., the weight of the package to be included in the weight for duty, one cent per pound.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I must ask the consent of the House to go back to this item, which is No. 79. In this item, we have included pears. The old tariff item corresponding to that did not include pears. We inserted the pears for convenience of classification. Our attention has been drawn to the fact that the effect of the change has been to make a material difference in the rate of duty, and as that is not our purpose we propose that pears shall be struck out of the item.

Mr. FOSTER. Where do pears go ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They remain under the unenumerated class at 20 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. Was that the old duty ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes. If the House will consent to retrace its steps, I will propose that instead of concurrence in the article 79, the article be amended by striking out "and pears."

Item, as amended, agreed to.

Files and rasps, n.e.s., thirty per cent ad valorem.

Mr. CRAIG. As some items are being reconsidered, I would ask that item 278, files and rasps, be reconsidered, as I have a few remarks that I think I ought to make on the subject.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no objection, if the House consents.

Mr. CRAIG. I shall occupy very little time with what I have to say. In discussing this item the other day, I made an appeal to the Government to change the duty from 30 per cent as it is in this tariff, to 35 per cent, as it was before. I represented that this reduction would not benefit the consumer and would hurt the manufacturer and reduce the wages of the workmen. In the discussion that ensued, the House will remember, the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) made some remarks about these files, and that is the only reason I have for entering upon the discussion at this time. In the town of Port Hope which I represent, there is a company called the Globe File Company, which carries on an establishment for the manufacture of files. In reply to what I said at that time, it was contended by the hon. member for Hamilton that these files were an inferior article, made out of inferior material, by inferior workmen. He also said that they were not up to the standard, because of which first class merchants would not sell them, that they might peddle a few files through the country, but that the large houses did not care to buy them. I should not have said more on this subject if it had not been for the fact that the hon. gentleman made these remarks derogatory to these files. I consider it only a matter of justice to defend the quality of these files before the House and before the country, for remarks such as were made by the hon. gentleman are very apt to injure a factory and, no doubt, they have done some injury in the present case. I was very sorry that remarks should be made under cover of the privilege of this House, the author of which, if they were made outside the House, could be called to account. But, as the remarks were made in this House, the company has no redress, except that I should state the exact condition of affairs, and show that these files, far from being poor files, are good files. I shall have the pleasure of reading some letters on this subject which have been received by me since these statements were made. The first letter I shall read is from Messrs. Seybold, Son & Company, of Montreal, and is as follows :—

We have been buying files from you ever since you have been in the business, and have had no complaints from our customers regarding the quality of your files.

Mr. L. H. Hebert, dealer in hardware, Montreal, writes as follows :—

Regarding your files, I beg to say that I am keeping your files in stock since a good many years, and am fully satisfied of the quality and finish, and have no complaints from any customers.

I have another letter here from Mr. Madore, wholesale hardware merchant, Montreal, who says :—

I am selling the "Globe" files since a long time, and have never had any complaints against them. All my customers are asking for the "Globe" brand, which seems to me to be very satisfactory.

Messrs. Howden, Stark & Co., importers of general hardware, Montreal, write :

We have been handling your make of files for eight years, and must say they give our numerous customers every satisfaction.

Messrs. Letang, Letang & Co., hardware merchants, Montreal, write as follows :—

We have been handling your files for several years, and we have found them very satisfactory. Messrs. Letourneau, Son & Co., Montreal, write :

In answer to your inquiry about quality of files and rasps of "Globe Manufacturing Company," which we are buying from you since many years: If customers had not been satisfied, we would have made complaint before and ceased to buy from you.

Messrs. G. T. Pendrith & Co., of Toronto, send the following letter :—

We have used your files for the last five or six years, and always found them thoroughly satisfactory. As far as our experience goes, the quality has been high and the price low. We will continue using them as long as you keep up the present high standard of quality.

The James Morrison Brass Manufacturing Co., of Toronto, a firm well known in that city, say :

We have been using files of your make for some years. We have found them satisfactory in quality and price. Our foreman says he wants no better files than what you furnish.

The following is from Messrs. H. S. Howland, Sons & Co., a firm known all over the country :—

We have sold your files to some extent, and without any complaint of quality.

Mr. C. Kloepfer, wholesale dealer in carriage hardware, Toronto, says :

I have been selling your files and rasps for some time, and find that they give perfect satisfaction to my customers. I shall continue to use them as long as their quality keeps up to the present standard.

Messrs. M. & L. Samuel, Benjamin & Co., an old and very influential firm in Toronto, write as follows :—

The files we have sold of your make have, in nearly every instance, brought us repeat orders.

The following is from Messrs. E. C. Stearns & Co., manufacturers of Stearns bicycles :—

We feel it our duty to say something in favour of the "Globe" files, which we have used the past season, and found to be more satisfactory than the majority of those manufactured in the States. We will furthermore say that we will continue using same as long as the quality is kept up to the present standard of excellence.

I have another letter from the A. R. Williams Machinery Co., of Toronto, a firm that deals very largely in machinery :

We have seen the report of remarks before the House in Ottawa in regard to your files, and we must say we are greatly astonished at such statements. We have pleasure in saying that we have handled your files for a good many years past, along with the best American files, and we have reports from a large number of users of these files, that they consider them equal to the best American or English files, without exception ; in fact, some go so far as to pronounce them better than any other file they have ever used. Our confidence has been so much strengthened in these files that we are now offering them largely to our customers and pushing their sale in preference to American-made files. We have great pleasure in making this statement, and are prepared to back it up in any way desired.

The Gurney Foundry Co., a firm well known throughout Canada, write as follows :—

We have used "Globe" files almost exclusively for some years, and our superintendent reports that he is perfectly satisfied with them.

I think these letters ought to be satisfactory as to the quality of the workmanship. But some remarks were made as to the quality of the material. It was said not only that the files were made by inferior workmen, but that they were made of poor material. I have a letter here from Messrs. Park, Brother & Co., Limited, who supply the steel, which is as follows :—

We have seen, with regret, the remarks made in the House, that your files had a poor quality of material in them. We can say, without fear of contradiction, that we are, without exception, the largest makers of file steels in the world, and have supplied the Globe File Company for some years, latterly with the whole of their supplies, and beg to state that their purchases from us are only the most expensive file steels in all their grades.

Mr. CHARLTON. Whose letter is that ?

Mr. CRAIG.

Mr. CRAIG. That is from Park, Brother & Co., Limited, Toronto. I believe they are an American firm with headquarters at Pittsburg. I am not sure of that, but they say they are the largest file steel manufacturers in the world, and furnish to the Globe File Company. I might have had more letters, but I do not want to detain the House longer on this question. I have only referred to this matter because I thought it simple justice, after what had been said, to place the facts before the House and before the country. When I spoke on the subject before I said nothing as to the quality of the files, because I knew nothing about that subject. But I am very glad to know that the files made in Canada are of such a superior quality. These letters, I think, are quite conclusive. I have made some inquiries as to the workmanship, and I find that the men who make these files are skilled workmen and include some of the best workmen in Canada, men who are as complete masters of their business as any in the United States. So, instead of being made by inferior workmen, these files are made by first-class workmen. I do not wish to detain the House except to make another appeal to the Minister of Finance and the Controller of Customs—

Mr. BERGERON. The Minister of Customs.

Mr. CRAIG. Yes, the Minister of Customs. The Minister of Finance said, when this matter was discussed before, that the argument I made was not conclusive or had not much weight. It seemed to me that I had a very strong case, and it is strengthened by these letters which prove that these files are of first-class quality. My argument is that the reduction of the duty will not reduce the price to the consumer. I feel confident of that. It will hurt the manufacturer, however, and not only that but it will have the tendency, I am informed, to reduce the wages of the workmen, a thing which none of us would desire. Now, I am sure that the Minister of Finance and the Controller of Customs have no intention of injuring this industry, and it seems to me that I have made out a strong reason why the duty should be placed back to 35 per cent. But I want to give another reason, and that is that other articles made in Canada to-day out of steel which is obtained on terms just as favourable as this steel, are still left at 35 per cent. I do not want this industry in my constituency treated any worse than other industries ; and I do not think that I am asking very much in asking that the duty should be placed at 35 per cent instead of 30 per cent. If I could only prevail on the Finance Minister to do so, I think I would be doing something for the workingmen for whom I am principally concerned in that matter. I notice the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) has come in. I do not know whether he heard what I had to say, but I may inform him that I have been reading some letters in reference to this matter. I want to say to him that I have said nothing disrespectful about him, because I hope that he said what he did the other day, not knowing the true state of the case. But I want to tell him that I have been reading letters from all the leading dealers in Canada, among them Gurney & Co., Samuel, Benjamin & Co. and Pendrith & Co., of Toronto, and from hardware firms in Montreal. I read a letter from Park, Bro. & Co., Limited, of Toronto, who supply steel, and they say that they supply the most expensive file steel to the Globe File Company of Port Hope, and that they use no other. I am sure that no one will be more pleased to hear this than the member for Hamilton, and to know that this company is making a first-class quality of files. I do not know where he derives his information, or how he labours under this erroneous idea, and I am sure he will be rejoiced to know that there is no foundation for it at all, and that this company are entitled to have this justice done to them which I am now asking, namely, that the duties be made 35 per cent instead of 30.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). I am sorry that I did not hear what the hon. gentleman said. I have no desire to injure his friends. I do not know that I am prepared to take back a single statement I made on a former occasion. The hon. gentleman, in making his statement before, gave this House to understand that the very inferior quality of files that came into this country from the United States and England was the reason that they could not get a better price for the files they were making. I stated then, and I state now, that the files that we import from England and from the United States are of a quality superior to anything that is made in Port Hope. I have no doubt a lot of small mechanics use some of these files, but first-class mechanics who want a first-class file, will not use the Port House file to any great extent.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). That is my individual opinion, and I am giving it to you for what it is worth. I think that my firm knows as much if not more about files than any other house in Canada; and I have no hesitation in saying that I am quite satisfied that if these files were as good and as well suited to the trade as the files that we import, we would certainly buy files from Port Hope. I know Mr. Grose very well, as I said before, we buy a large quantity of goods from him, and if we could buy his files and satisfy our customers as well, we would certainly buy files from him. I have no doubt that certain parties will give him certificates that his files are suited for their purposes; but as I say, first-class machine shops throughout the length and breadth of the country, will not use those files to any great extent.

Mr. CRAIG. I am very sorry that the hon. member for Hamilton does not take back what he said. I notice he said that if these files were good, no doubt his firm would buy them. I want to say that his firm do buy them very largely, that is my information—that his firm sell as many of those files as they sell of any other files.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). I presume they do of the second and third class quality of files, but not of the very best quality of files, by any means.

Mr. CRAIG. I am surprised to hear the hon. member say that some inferior firms use these files. What does he say about Stearns & Co., who make the Stearns bicycle? He would not call them an inferior firm. The hon. member says that some inferior firms might use those files.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). I did not say inferior firms—I beg your pardon.

Mr. CRAIG. The hon. member still sticks to what he said the other day, that these files are far inferior in quality to files that come from the United States. Now, while the hon. member may be an authority on some things, I am satisfied that he is not an authority on files, as compared with men who are engaged in active business to-day and who have been using these files. As I remarked the other day, the hon. member is an importer, and he is trying, whether intentionally or not, to ruin this industry.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). Nothing of the kind.

Mr. CRAIG. All his remarks tended that way, because any man who wants to be convinced in the right way, would be convinced by the fact that firms such as I have quoted know a great deal more about it than he does himself. Now, what do Stearns & Co. say, speaking about these files:

We have found them to be more satisfactory than the majority of those manufactured in the States.

That is plain enough. And the A. R. Williams Company say this:

A large number of the users of these files consider them equal to the best American or English files, without exception.

Perhaps the hon. member puts himself above all these men in this country. He does not want to be convinced. This firm goes on to say:

In fact, some go so far as to pronounce them better than any other file that they have ever used. Our own confidence has been so much strengthened in these files that we are now offering them largely to our customers and pushing their sale in preference to American-made files.

The A. R. Williams Machinery Company stand as high as the firm of the hon. member for Hamilton. Then what do the Gurney Foundry Company say? The hon. member would attach importance to their opinions, I hope.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). Not upon an article of that kind, I would not attach any more importance to their opinion than I would to that of a wood sawyer.

Mr. CRAIG. Then what are the facts of the case? I submit this to the House and to the country. Here we have on one side an importer who buys these files on the other side to sell, and we have large firms who are using files constantly, who testify to their excellence, and the hon. member says that these practical men do not know anything about it, that he knows all about it himself, and that he won't take their opinion at all. I will guarantee that if he was selling them he would take their opinion, and pay some respect to it. Now, what do the Gurney Foundry Company say:

We have used "Globe" files almost exclusively for some years, and our superintendent reports that he is perfectly satisfied with them.

That is from the Gurney Foundry Company of Toronto, and I would not want a better recommendation than that.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. They do not use first-class files at all?

Mr. CRAIG. Perhaps the hon. member for Brant knows all about it. Then I would like the hon. member for Hamilton to say what he thinks about the firm of Park, Bro. & Co.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). They are only steel makers, they do not make files.

Mr. CRAIG. I am surprised that the hon. member should make such a remark about another firm; I think I will have to stop. But I want to say that this company say that they make more file steels than any firm in the world, and that they sell to the Port Hope Company only the best quality of file steels. The proprietors of the file factory themselves told me that they do so. I will now conclude by expressing the hope that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) will conclude to put the duty back to 35 per cent at it was before.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Craig) in bringing on this discussion upon the question of files for which there was no need, has led this House to believe that the files imported into this country by importers, which seems to be a crime in his eyes, were of an inferior quality. If he had left that subject alone he would not have got himself into the trouble he is now in.

Mr. CRAIG. It is you who is in trouble.

Mr. CRAIG.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Craig) led this House to believe there was nothing but poor files brought into this country and that we importers were selling a poorer quality of file than that manufactured in Port Hope.

Mr. CRAIG. I never said so. I never made any such remark.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon.

Mr. CRAIG. "Hansard" will show what I said.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). What I was going to remark was that the hon. gentleman brought up this discussion for the purpose of getting 5 per cent extra on the files of his constituents. If these files were as good as those imported from England and the United States, I would have no hesitation in buying them. I want the hon. gentleman to understand that I do know something about files; I have been buying them for forty-eight years. I have bought them, sold them and conversed with users of them who know more about them than the hon. gentleman who undertakes to champion his friends' cause here. I think that he is to blame for any injury that may be done to his friends in Port Hope, and if he had not brought up this matter I should have said nothing about it.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it was most ungenerous as well as most unkind for the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) to deal as he did with this firm. It must be plain to every member of this House who heard the strictures which he passed upon this firm, that, in the face of evidence to the contrary, he has treated them most unfairly. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wood), without any justifiable reason, tried to represent this firm as an inferior firm, as a firm turning out an inferior article, and what he said must do them a great deal of damage in their business, without any necessity for it. When the best evidence is brought up, of individuals and of the most respectable firms in the country that these files which are manufactured at Port Hope are regarded as good in quality that the users of them acknowledge them to be first-class files, it should be accepted as having considerable weight. We have the evidence of the parties who use them. Take the Gurney Foundry Company, in Toronto. They are using them in iron and steel work which is possibly the best test of the quality of a file than can be applied. Is it possible that the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) who is only a man who handles them, can be as good a judge as the men who use them, the men who know whether they will wear out rapidly or slowly, whether they are good or bad in quality and who know which are the best for them to buy. The firms and the men who use these files ought to be the best judges. A number of respectable firms give testimonials of the quality of these files. That ought to be sufficient to satisfy any reasonable man that they are of a superior quality. I think it was very ungenerous for the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) in the face of these certificates to contend that the product of that firm was inferior.

Mr. RATZ. I do not rise for the purpose of condemning this firm's files but, in my experience I have used quite a number of Globe files, as well as of English and American files, and I think that the American files are just as good as the Globe files are. I do not rise for the purpose of drawing a comparison between the two, but the English file is the best file that is made to-day. I think we must consider the consumer as well as the producer, and it appears to me that if the Globe file is protected to the extent of 30 per cent, that firm ought to be able to stand on their own ground. They should be able to manufacture a file and turn it out and that duty should be entirely satisfactory to the Globe File Company.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). If hon. gentlemen will get up and talk about things they know something about, we would get through this discussion sooner. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) who has just taken his seat, I suppose does not know anything about files. I have been selling files all my life, and selling them to every condition of user of the file, and yet this gentleman gets up and lectures gentlemen on this side of the House whose whole life has been spent in this business. I do think that if hon. gentlemen would confine themselves to subjects that they know something about it would be much more in the interest of getting through with the business.

Mr. CARGILL. I may say that I have been a user of files for forty years, and I have a very distinct recollection of the price that we formerly paid for them. All our files used to be imported from Great Britain or the United States. I have a very distinct recollection of the very high prices which I used to have to pay to my esteemed friend the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood).

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). I gave you a good article.

Mr. CARGILL. I am satisfied, after having tested the Globe file manufactured in the town of Port Hope that it is quite as good as any American file I ever used, which was manufactured in the United States and until we had a file manufacturing establishment in Canada we never got a file at as cheap a rate as we have since. I remember distinctly the opposition that was raised to the introduction of the National Policy. It was contended by hon. gentlemen occupying the Treasury benches to-day that it would ruin the lumber industry of this country, that it would increase the cost of every article that they use in connection with their industry, axes, saws, rubber belting, &c. What is the result to-day? We have to-day these various industries established in this country under the fostering care of the National Policy, and we are buying all these articles at a very much lower rate than what we obtained them for previous to the establishment of that policy in this country. I would, therefore, in concluding my remarks say that I have had occasion to use the Globe file manufactured in the town of Port Hope, that it has given me entire satisfaction, and that, comparing it in price and in quality with those imported from the United States, I find that it is in my interest to use the Port Hope file. I would therefore impress upon the Minister of Finance the necessity of restoring the former duty. I believe that rather than crush out an industry in this country that is to-day manufacturing an article, equal in quality, and supplying the consumer at as cheap a rate as Great Britain or the United States, the Finance Minister would be more patriotic than to take off the 5 per cent duty necessary to sustain that industry.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) seems to be wonderfully exercised because an hon. member of this House should say a word in defence of a manufacturing firm in Canada. I claim the right that any hon. member of this House has to express my opinion upon this or any other question. The hon. member (Mr. Wood, Hamilton) is pleased to say, "that the hon. member for East Grey is talking about something of which he knows nothing." The hon. member for East Grey was not exercising his judgment or speaking of his knowledge of files; he was speaking in regard to the certificates that were given from respectable firms and firms, so far as my knowledge goes, who are just as intelligent as the hon. member for Hamilton or the members of his firm, and who say most emphatically that the files manufactured by this firm are equal to those made in the United States or in England. That ought to be satisfactory. It is not my judgment, but what I refer to more particularly is that the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) should, sheltered as he is, behind the privilege of Parliament which protects him in anything that he says and that he should traduce or speak as he has done of a respectable firm of manufacturers. He knows that he dare not go outside of the precincts of Parliament and make the statement that that firm are turning out a third or fourth-class article, because if he did, he would be amenable to the law. He would be at once brought into the courts and be compelled to justify his statement. But when an hon. gentleman stands up here, protected by the privilege of Parliament, and avails himself of that privilege to say what the hon. gentleman has said regarding this firm he is very ungenerous and unfair especially in the face of the information that has been given to this House from several respectable firms, who both sell and use these files, and who give evidence to the effect that they are just as good as files imported either from the United States or from England.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). I do not intend to follow the hon. gentleman in his tirade. I simply made a statement which was drawn out by the hon. member for East Durham (Mr. Craig). I have his words before me from "Hansard," to the effect that the inferior quality of the files brought in from England or the United States was the cause of the factory at Port Hope being compelled to sell their files at such low rates, intimating to this House and to the country that only a common class of files were brought in by the importers of Canada. I repudiate that statement, and I say here, with some knowledge of the business—and I claim to have some knowledge of it, after spending fifty years in it—that the best quality of files sold in this country are brought from England or from the United States. When the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) talks of certificates, I could get thousands of certificates stating that the files of this factory are not to be compared to the first-class files imported from those countries. But I do not think it worth while to do so. I do not wish to injure that firm. I know Mr. Grose very well; I knew him before he was connected with this factory at all; and I have not the slightest wish to injure him. But the hon. member for East Durham has no right to state that there is no class of files brought into this country to equal the class of files made at Port Hope. The thing is absurd, and when a gentleman like the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) undertakes to lecture members of this House upon the propriety of statements made here, and says that I would not dare to say outside what I say here, I tell that hon. gentleman that outside or inside, I shall be prepared to back up the statement I have made, in his presence or in the presence of Mr. Grose himself. We have bought and sold these files, and do you suppose that if they had given as good satisfaction to our customers throughout the country, we would decline to purchase them again? I have no prejudice against any man's manufacture; but I want to sell the class of goods my customers require. If my customers required them, I would sell them.

Mr. SPROULE. They must require them, for you sell them.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). We sell a hundred dozen of the better class of files to one dozen of the files we get from them. I do not know that we buy a hundred dozens a year from Mr. Grose, while we buy thousands of dozens from other makers, and I am quite prepared to say that if Mr. Grose made as good files as were made elsewhere, and sold them at as good a price to the purchaser, we would be quite as ready to purchase from him as from any one else. I have only to say that when the hon. member for East Grey undertakes in the future to lecture people on this side of the House, he had better talk of something that he understands, because on this subject he does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. MACLEAN. I just wish to express my surprise that so prominent a Liberal as the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) should make such rasping remarks on the "Globe" files, and when I happen to meet the editor of that newspaper, I will direct his attention to the matter.

Mr. CRAIG. I do not want to prolong this debate; I only want to occupy two or three minutes more of the time of the House, and I thank hon. gentlemen for listening so patiently. What I wish to say is in answer to the statement of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) that I brought all this about. I brought nothing about. I said not one word about the quality of the files made in England, in the United States or anywhere else, or about the quality of the files made in Port Hope. But I said this, and I want to repeat it to the Controller of Customs (Mr. Paterson), that what we want the 35 per cent duty for is to keep out the poor American files. I did not say that there are not good American or English files brought into the country. The better files come in at good prices and we are not afraid of them. In fact, I said nothing about the quality of the files at all; so that the remarks made by the hon. member for Hamilton about the inferior quality of the files and about the steel used and about the workmen, were entirely gratuitous and uncalled for by anything I said; and I think the least he could do would be to rise and say he is sorry he made such a mistake, and, like a man, withdraw what he said. If I had not been able to get these certificates from gentlemen like the hon. member for East Bruce (Mr. Cargill), who knows something about files, it might do a great deal of injury to this factory. It is very easy for an hon. member to get up here and in an off-hand way say that this factory makes poor articles. That question was not under discussion. If the hon. gentleman objected to the 35 per cent duty, he might have said so; but he need not have run down the goods made at this factory. I am sorry that any member should resort to an argument of that kind, when I have shown that there is no reason for it. If the hon. gentleman does not want to buy these files, I have nothing to do with that. I have nothing to do with this factory; I am not concerned in this industry at all; but I am told that if this duty is reduced to 30 per cent, it will have the effect of reducing the wages of the men employed in the factory, and they are the people whose interests I am looking after—the manufacturers can look after themselves. I ask the Controller of Customs again to give us the 35 per cent, and I will wait a moment to see what he has to say about it, and then I am done. I would like to know what the Minister of Finance has to say about this request.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I am sorry that I cannot oblige the hon. gentleman. My view is different from his, that is all.

Mr. KENDRY. I may say that we use files for a special purpose. Some years ago we imported our files from the United States; but for some time we have been using the files manufactured by the Globe File Company of Port Hope, and we have found them to be superior to any we got in the United States for that purpose. I could not sit in my seat and hear the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) make statements which tended to injure any of our industries in this country. This hon. gentleman has said that he wants to run down our Canadian manufactures.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). Nothing of the kind.

Mr. KENDRY. He is an importer, and you will find that he has a larger profit on the imported article than he has on the Canadian article. I have no doubt that is the reason for the position he takes: the hon. gentleman's pocket makes all the difference to him. But it is not becoming in any member of this House to run down any industry which we are trying to build up in this country. I have heard this hon. gentleman make statements before which were not correct, and I hope he will have the manliness to arise and take back what he said about that manufactory.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). Will the hon. gentleman be surprised to know that I have as much interest in manufacturing in Canada as he has, and that is considerable. Therefore I do not think I am prepared to say anything against the industries of the country.

Mr. KENDRY. The hon. gentleman may have as much interest in rasps, but not in files.

India-rubber boots and shoes; rubber belting, rubber cement and all manufactures of India-rubber and gutta percha, n.o.p., twenty-five per cent ad valorem.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to ask that rubber belting be left at the old duty. As my hon. friend knows, the rubber industry is one which has had very encouraging development in this country for the last six or seven years, and is rapidly assuming the place of a foremost manufacture. Rubber belting is really the staple of the rubber industry in this country, and I do not see why my hon. friend should have reduced it to 25 per cent. The request is very reasonable that it should be left at 30 per cent.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. We have departed somewhat from the classification in the old tariff, which was 32½ per cent, and in making a different classification, while the duty on this belting has been reduced by 7½ per cent, on portions of their other products we have increased the duty 2½ per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. Rubber belting is two-thirds of the whole industry, so that you are really striking a very heavy blow at it by reducing the duty from 32½ to 25 per cent. I think my hon. friend might have left it at 30 per cent, and the industry might then be kept alive.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. We were waited upon in this matter, and considered it very carefully. If the hon. gentleman will remember, in our original resolutions we put the belting altogether, the leather and the rubber, but having gone more fully into the question, our minds were inclined somewhat in the direction of the hon. gentleman's, and we thought we had perhaps made a mistake in putting all belting at 20 per cent. Therefore, in the amended resolutions, we left rubber belting at 25 per cent. This belting is very largely used by all manufacturers, and we thought we had arrived at a pretty fair figure, which would not do any injustice to the manufacturers of belting and be a little help to some of the other manufacturers, the duties on whose products were reduced.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will find that even in reducing the duty to only 30 per cent, he would be making quite as much and in some cases a larger cut on the rubber belting than he has made on the products of some of the manufacturers who use the belting. If he has any intention of basing the scale of duties on incidental protection, if he chooses to call it that, he should not make one industry bear the burden exclusively. It seems to me that in making a reduction of 2½ per cent, he would be giving fair compensation to those who use the belting, and on whose products the protection has also been reduced. I would press my hon. friend to make it 30 per cent. He will find, if he looks over his tariff, that in some respects that would be a larger cut for the rubber belting men than some of the manufacturers who use it have been subjected to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The matter has already received very careful attention, as my hon. colleague the Controller of Customs has explained; and in view of the large extent to which this belting is used by some other manufacturers, for instance, the milling industry, we thought the rate a very fair one.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has illustrated his reduction by one industry, the milling industry. He may take any other industry as well, and he will find that in reducing the rate on rubber belting to 30 per cent, he would be giving as large a cut on that as he has made on the products of the manufacturers who use the belting and would benefit by the reduction.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman loses sight of the fact that in making a different classification, while this item has been reduced, the rate has been increased on other products of this industry; for instance, on rubber hose, which is a large item, and other lines.

Item agreed to.

India-rubber clothing and clothing made waterproof with india-rubber, rubber or gutta-percha hose, and cotton or linen hose lined with rubber, rubber mats or matting, and rubber packing, thirty-five per cent ad valorem.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. If the hon. gentleman would like to have that at 30 per cent, we might oblige him.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not in that business.

Item agreed to.

Buckthorn and strip fencing, of iron or steel, twenty per cent ad valorem.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There was some discussion over that item, and we propose to amend it so as to make it read as follows:—

Buckthorn strip fencing, woven wire fencing, and wire fencing of iron or steel, n.e.s., fifteen per cent.

In the previous discussion the item of woven wire fencing was the subject of special mention, and my hon. colleague the Controller explained that it would come in at 25 per cent. Our attention was drawn to the fact that a considerable portion of the material used will be obtained free. They will not be all obtained free as some hon. gentlemen think, but undoubtedly a considerable portion will. We propose therefore to reduce the duty to 15 per cent.

Mr. CLANCY. There is another class of fencing which is not entirely woven that is brought in in strands. Would that come in under the n.e.s.?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not see my hon. friend from Essex (Mr. McGregor) here, and I am very sorry. He appeared to be very much exercised by a desire to get free fencing for the farmers, and he was strongly in favour of barbed wire fencing going on the free list. He was not so strong in having woven wire fencing, on the free list, but he wanted that, although the raw material is free, stiffly protected. He also had a very strong idea as to the bad character of barbed wire fencing, and as to the good character of this woven wire fencing, which laid him open to the imputation of wanting bad fencing for the farmers to come in free and their good fencing to be highly protected. He was also in favour of free wire, and in the course of the discussion he took great pains to point out the way in which farmers could make their own fences by using a machine which would only cost $50, and which every farmer should have. I wanted to ask my hon. friend, if he were here, if he is a member of the firm of McGregor, Banwell & Co. of Windsor, but I am sorry he is not here. I am glad, however, to see him just now entering the House. Let me tell my hon. friend that I was just deploring his absence: It is proposed by these hard-hearted Ministers to protect woven wire fencing of which the raw material is duty free, and I wanted to hear the voice of my hon. friend raised in protest on behalf of the farmers. I was going on to contrast what was seemingly an inconsistency in his position with reference to the fencing on the one hand of barbed wire and on the other of woven wire, and to express my wonder why my hon. friend wanted bad fencing made free for the farmers and the good fencing highly protected. And then I was mentioning that my hon. friend was very strong in his ideas that the farmers could make their own fencing if this wire came in free, and there was a nice little machine by which that could be done and it only cost $50 for the machine. And I was wondering why these things were so until I happened to take up a little paper called "Wire-fence Gem," on the heading of which I see "McGregor, Banwell & Co." and I was wondering whether the McGregor in this case was the same individual who represents the riding of North Essex in this House. If my hon. friend (Mr. McGregor) would only satisfy me upon that point, I should be very much obliged to him.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Are you finished?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend would gratify me very much by giving an answer now.

Mr. MCGREGOR. When you are finished I will answer.

Mr. FOSTER. I will have to proceed to give some of the scintillations from this "Gem," and I shall proceed on the understanding that my hon. friend (Mr. McGregor) is the McGregor who is mentioned here. This is a paper published in the interest of the "fencing gem," a wonderful little machine which costs the consumer in the neighbourhood of $50, and by which the farmers, if they had free wire, could make their own fences. There are some gems in this "Gem." I shall trouble the House with only two or three. Here is one :

There have been numerous attempts to copy our inventions, and many imitations tried and abandoned at the appearance of legal proceedings. All quite complimentary, indeed, to the original Gem Fence Machine. They, at least, go to prove the merit and success of our device, yet we must decline to be thus infringed upon.

Years of patient thought and investigation, and of hard work by way of experiments with scores of different contrivances—often ending in more or less of a failure—were necessary to produce and perfect this modern invention.

And, therefore, we shall prosecute to the fullest extent of the law any one found in manufacturing, selling or using any infringement upon the Gem Fence Machine, automatic springs or adjustable wire-tightener, all of which are fully covered by patents issued in the Dominion of Canada and the United States.

Going on a little further, I find the following concerning fencing :—

The first to meet with general favour was barb wire. It was, however, found difficult to make a complete fence of it, as hogs, sheep, &c., would go through it easily. Then some tried various styles of smooth wire, with unsatisfactory results. Several styles of woven fence, made in factories, have been placed upon the market. These have all been high-priced.

Yet my hon. friend is in favour of a protective duty on this woven wire fencing.

They have also been unsuited to various and ever-different tastes and needs of users. The cost of material for such fences was not large, but manufacturers' profits and those of the middle dealers increased the cost to the consumer enormously.

And yet my hon. friend was in favour of keeping up the protective duty upon this woven wire fence. But he goes on to still further develop this idea, and in the course of the editorials, &c., there is this other gem, speaking of the farmer providing his fencing :

The fence manufacturers were required to go out of business. Their doubling and trebling of the actual cost of wire fencing was too much for the buyer, who felt that he could do all that himself and save 50 to 75 per cent of the cost of his farm fencing, which might amount to hundreds of dollars.

Then there is this :

Push your city. Push your town. Push your business. Push your county. Push your locality. Push for new business. Push for new enterprises. Push for new people. Push for emigration. Push. Push. Push. The way to succeed is to succeed, and "Push" is the potent word for success.

And so my hon. friend seems to have entered into a mild little kind of conspiracy by which he was to get barb wire on the free list, woven wire fencing to come in under a protective duty, while the materials were to be free as far as possible, and then push, push, push for this little machine and success.

Mr. MCGREGOR. I think the advice that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has just read is very good. The literature that the hon. gentleman has read says, concerning this "Gem Fencing" machine :

It will weave any sized cross-wire, large or small. Will weave them upon any kind of wire, twisted, braided or plain. Weaves cross-wires so tight that they cannot be slipped. Weaves any sized wire. It matter neither as to size or spacing of either cross-wire or running-wires of fence.

The article that is sold is a small machine with which the farmer weaves his own fence. The cost is $5, not $50.

An hon. MEMBER. It is $50 for the machine.

Mr. MCGREGOR. I will sell you 5,000 of them at $5 each, if you want them. There is no use of having any nonsense about this matter. It makes no difference to the firm I am connected with whether the duty is 5 per cent or 10 per cent, because the farmer pays the duty. If we pay more for the wire and we sell him the wire, he has to pay more for it. Now, generally speaking, the farmer buys his own wire, choosing the quality that he wants to use on his farm, whether barb wire, twisted wire or plain wire, and he pays for what he gets. If he buys the machine that my hon. friend speaks of, he pays $5 for it, and he manufactures his own fence at his own pleasure. I am not mixed up with any woven fence or any fence that affects this question at all, because whatever the duty is the farmer has to pay.

Mr. DAVIN. May I ask my hon. friend (Mr. McGregor) a question? I understand him to mean that he manufactures a fence too?

Mr. MCGREGOR. No, we manufacture no fence of any kind; what we have to do with is this machine for weaving fences. My hon. friend seems to want me to advertise the business a little, and so I may do a little advertising. We say to the farmers: We have an article that you can use and build your own fences, whether a hundred rods or a hundred miles, and the cost is $5 for the machine. Instead of using woven fencing the farmer can buy the wire and make the fence. Now, the plain wire makes as good a woven fence as can be got in this country or on the other side. What we propose to the farmer is, that instead of buying woven fencing, for which he has to pay 60 cents or 70 cents a rod, we enable him to make the same thing, paying 20 cents or 25 cents for the wire, and he can do the work himself.

Mr. MACLEAN. But that is the National Policy.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Possibly it is. Now, the amount of woven wire fence brought into this country, concerning which my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) makes such a fuss, is about $3,000 or $4,000 a year. So the duty would have very little effect one way or the other. The hon. gentleman has evidently not looked into this matter. The larger portion of the woven wire fencing used in Canada is made in Canada.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman says that he is not concerned in this question of duty. Now, if the logic of hon. gentlemen opposite in the past has been good the duty will mean this—that if there is a high protective duty put upon other classes of fencing, the hon. gentleman (Mr. McGregor) will sell his fencing more readily.

Mr. MCGREGOR. No, no.

Mr. CLANCY. Certainly the hon. gentleman's fencing will come into use because the other is excluded. I am afraid that the hon. gentleman has committed himself irrevocably to the National Policy after all.

Mr. QUINN. I believe it was understood that all the items respecting wire should be reserved—items 256, 257 and 258. I desire to suggest that item 257 should be 35 per cent instead of 30 per cent. I do this because of the effect of the proposed duty upon the industry of the Rubber Insulating Wire and Cable Company of Montreal, which, I understand, will be completely wiped out if the duty is reduced to 30 per cent. The raw materials which go into the manufacture of covered wire are covered by articles 258, 214 and 348.

There is another article, wax, which is raised from a 20 per cent duty to 30 per cent under the general heading; but the other articles under items 258, 214, and 248 are increased 5 per cent, and 5 per cent, and 2½ per cent. So the duty on the raw materials having been increased, it ought necessarily to follow that a protection equivalent to the increase given on the raw material, should be given to the manufactured article in this country. I would like to draw the attention of the Minister to this item, and ask him if he cannot see his way clear to increase the duty from 30 to 35 per cent in order to continue the existence of this industry. I will read a letter which I have received:

Dear Sir,—The new tariff in its present form will wipe our industry out of existence.

Our raw materials are tinned copper wire, rubber sheeting, cotton yarn, ozokerite.

The duty has been lowered 5 per cent on our manufactured product, and increased on all our raw materials, with one exception.

See Article 258: Wire of all kinds, n.o.p., 20 per cent. The old rate was 15 per cent; increase, 5 per cent on the tinned copper wire.

Article 214. India rubber, n.o.p., 25 per cent—unchanged.

Article 348. Cotton yarn, 25 per cent; old rate, 22½ per cent; increase, 2½ per cent.

Mr. MCGREGOR.

Ozokerite wax I do not see mentioned; it was 20 per cent. The duty on paraffine now is 30 per cent; increase, 10 per cent.

Kindly draw the attention of your confrères to the foregoing facts, who, we are sure, will do justice in the matter and classify our product 35 per cent.

Your respectfully,
ALEX. BARRIE & CO.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I may say to the hon. gentleman that the subject has been considered and reconsidered, and the item was raised from a figure lower than the duty stood at originally.

Mr. SCRIVER. I may say with reference to the matter to which attention has been called by the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Quinn), that I had a communication from this firm some time ago from which I gathered that they were satisfied with the increase which had been made in the customs duty, an increase of 5 per cent, as I understood.

Item agreed to.

Skates of all kinds, roller or other, and parts thereof, thirty-five per cent ad valorem.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The specific duty which prevailed before has been abolished in this case. I do not know whether the Controller of Customs is aware how cheaply German skates can be put into the Canadian market. They can be put in, as I am informed, for about 20 cents a pair, on account of the very low scale on which labourers in Germany are paid; and it is almost impossible to compete with prices like that if you pay workmen in this country the ordinary rates. The result of the change which the hon. gentleman has made in this case, will necessarily entirely take away the occupation of between one hundred and two hundred men in my constituency. The staple product of the industry in which they are employed, is skates, and it is absolutely impossible that they should continue the manufacture unless the old duty is retained. I suppose that if the matter has been considered and reconsidered, as the hon. gentleman states, it is useless for me to say anything about it; but I cannot avoid expressing my great regret that this change has been made, because the only result in my constituency will be that between one hundred and two hundred men will be thrown out of employment, and will have to seek occupation in the United States or elsewhere.

Item agreed to.

Mowing machines, harvesters, self-binding or without binders, binding attachments, reapers, cultivators, ploughs, harrows, horse rakes, seed drills, manure spreaders, weeders, and malleable sprocket or link belting chain for binders, twenty per cent ad valorem.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Before this item is adopted I would like to urge upon the Government the desirability of reducing the duty on agricultural implements, especially. It will be remembered that when the tariff was announced I placed before the House what I thought were very strong reasons why that duty should be, if not removed entirely, at least very materially reduced. In the west we feel that duty very keenly indeed. The people of that country, especially the settlers, were led to believe, and many of them did believe, that if there was a change of Government that duty might be entirely removed. I felt myself very keenly upon the point, and when I came to the capital I went into the question most carefully. I discovered, however, after investigating the duty upon the raw material, that it would probably be unfair to the agricultural implement industry to remove the duty entirely. But I brought myself to believe that inasmuch as the Government have reduced the duty on raw material very considerably, at least a corresponding reduction ought to be made in the duty on these agricultural implements. I may say that it has been a source of great satisfaction to the people of the west who purchase those implements, to find that a reduction of $5 per binder has been announced by the manufacturers. It will also be a matter of gratification to the west, particularly, to know that in the agreement that has been announced between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway with reference to the construction of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, provision has been made for a reduction in the freight rates on agricultural implements. I may say in explanation of my position on this question, that when an amendment was introduced to the motion to go into Committee of Supply, to place agricultural implements, and I think lumber and one other article, on the free list, I voted against that amendment. I did so because the amendment as put before the House, was equivalent to a motion of want of confidence, and I explained to the House on that occasion that if a motion were made that it would be in the interest of the farmers to place these articles upon the free list, I would be prepared to vote for it. I re-assert that position at the present time. I am not prepared, as I say, to vote want of confidence in the Government and for this reason: If that vote resulted in the retirement of the present Government and the return of a Conservative Government, this duty instead of being lowered, would most likely be increased. I do not think the country or the House could have any possible hope that that duty would be in any way lowered; and for that reason I regard my position as a perfectly tenable one. I support the Government on its general policy, while I regret that this duty has not been lowered; and to bring the matter to a focus, I move that the duty be reduced to 10 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. What focus does my hon. friend wish to bring it to? He says he is going to vote for the Government, even though they keep it on.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I propose to vote here in committee that the duty be reduced to 10 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. And my hon. friend, to make everything certain, advertises the Government before he makes that motion, that he is not going to vote want of confidence in the Government, no matter what they do.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not apprehend that a vote in committee for a reduction of 10 per cent is a vote of want of confidence in the Government's general policy.

Mr. FOSTER. And so my hon. friend's motion is one of those motions that has nothing in it but wind. My hon. friend (Mr. Richardson) has let the wind out of the bag before he elevated the bag.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It comes with very bad grace for an hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) who desires to be leader of the Opposition to talk about wind when we have been listening to nothing else but wind from his lips ever since the House met.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Richardson) seems a great deal wiser than when the House met.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I should not be doing my duty did I not express my opinion upon this important question. I may say that the farmers of the west remember with pleasure the reduction that was made by the late Government when the duty was lowered to 20 per cent, and they still feel that there is need for a further reduction. The argument I believe that was brought to bear upon the Government against any further reduction was the fact that there had been a large reduction by the late Government and that that reduction was below the average rate of duty in the Tariff Bill. We do not wish to argue this point, but inasmuch as the duty on steel and iron has been reduced we believe that there ought to be a corresponding reduction in the duty on these agricultural implements. This is a large question; it is a larger question than many members of the House are aware of. I would call the attention of the House to this point, that in 1896 the North-west Territories paid $1,294,435 for their agricultural implements. They paid the duty of 20 per cent that amounted to a little over $275,400. It is one of the necessities of a farming country that they should have their agricultural implements which are really their raw materials reduced to the very lowest possible point. Now no one can plead here that the manufacturers have not reaped a generous harvest in their business during the past year. They have made money in abundance and we need not occupy the time of the House by going into a calculation to show what they have made in their business. We ask your consideration of this point, that inasmuch as there has been a reduction in the raw material used by the manufacturers there ought to be in all justice a reduction in the duty upon these implements, especially as coming from the United States. The business from the United States is increasing year by year and it now stands in the relationship of 1 to 2½—that is 2½ coming from the Canadian manufacturers, and 1 per cent coming from the Americans. The Government has been pleased to investigate this matter, but this investigation does not lead us to hope that any substantial relief will be realized for the people by that consideration, so that we leave the matter with the House and we would ask for the consideration of the amendment that the duty be reduced to 10 per cent on these farm implements.

Mr. ROGERS. The Patrons must have something to say in regard to this matter. Speaking of the tariff as a whole my first impression upon looking over it was that it was not much of a free trade tariff. The Patrons never asked for free trade. They were, as I have said before and as I will say again, always very moderate and reasonable in their demands. They have been in the past and I think they will be in the future. They asked for a tariff for revenue. Speaking about the matter of protection in my own constituency I said that in view of the fact that we had to raise from $38,000,000 or $40,000,000 of revenue, there would always be incidental protection in spite of all we could do. But as far as possible we desired that the different imposts should be in the interest of revenue. This principle has been followed in most instances but not in all of them. The reduction which was made by the late Government from 35 to 20 per cent was, I am very pleased to say, brought about by the agitation raised through the country against this high tariff on agricultural implements. The Government did not dare go to the country with this enormous duty on these articles and they reduced it to 20 per cent. It had always been contended that it could not be done, that the manufacturers could not live, that it would close them up, and that is the kind of argument they are advancing to-day. It puts me in mind of a little story I heard of a boy who ran to his father and said: "Father, a badger has run up a tree." The father replied: "Oh, no, my boy, a badger could not run up a tree." Oh, yes, he did," the boy replied, "Towser was after him." And so it was with the late Government. The Government thought they could not reduce the tariff, but when Towser got after them in the shape of the agricultural vote they found they could do it, and I believe that if the present Government do not continue to reduce duties in the interest of agriculture and in accordance with their promises, Towser will be after them too. I would say as regards my vote that when this question was up before it was coupled with free lumber. The farmers in Ontario never asked for free lumber. I believe that if the Americans put $2 a thousand on our lumber, that they would not favour removing the duty on their lumber coming into Canada. In regard to my vote on agricultural implements, under the present system with a duty upon the raw material used by manufacturers in the shape of coal and iron, I would not ask the manufacturers to give us free implements. Place them on the same plane as the manufacturers of barbed wire and binder twine who get their raw material free and I would ask them to give us agricultural implements free. We wish to be reasonable in all our demands. If they do not get their raw material free we do not ask them to give us agricultural implements free. We do say that we hope that the Government will give us a corresponding reduction of duty in all articles as they have done in raw material of iron, on agricultural implements, spades, shovels, axes and such things. I think they should give us a corresponding reduction in comparison to what has been given upon the raw material. In having granted a bonus to the pig iron manufacturers the Government have acted against a principle which we believe in. We do not ask for a bonus on our manufactured products in the shape of butter or anything else. We are against the principle of bonusing industries and we object to a bounty going to the iron manufacturers. I am ready to support any action that will give a corresponding reduction to what is given on raw materials.

Mr. DAVIN. What I want to point out is that here we have a supposed leader of the Patrons telling us that they did not expect agricultural implements to be placed on the free list.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Did he say that?

Mr. DAVIN. He said so. And we have the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) telling us that the impression was given in his constituency and all over the west that we should have agricultural implements free, and though that impression was given by the hon. gentleman we have the hon. gentleman who was struggling for power as a Patron come here and saying that the Patrons did not expect that agricultural implements would be placed on the free list. Let me point out that the difficulties that he sees in the way of agricultural implements being placed on the free list are mere imaginary lions in the path. There is nothing to prevent the Government carrying out their promise to place agricultural implements on the free list and saying to the manufacturers of the imported material used in the manufacture of these implements: "We will give you a rebate on what you have paid." The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) comes here to-day and apologizes for having voted with me. His constituents have taken him to task.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. My constituents did not take me to task, and I did not come here to apologize.

Mr. DAVIN. All I can say is that if it was not an apology, it was the finest piece of unconscious imitation that I ever saw in my life. The hon. member has also to apologize for himself to his constituents, because on May 5th he telegraphed to his own paper: "Fighting for the farmers." Does anybody suppose that if those men, who came here as independent members, like the Patrons and the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), to represent independent constituents, had voted for my motion, the Government would not have considered the matter? That was the time to force the Government's hand, and if we had done so, we should now have implements free. But now, after the decision has been taken, and the Government have promised to do something for the implement men, they come with this bogus motion in committee. What nonsense it is talking about a vote of want of confidence. The very man who talks about it is the man who, with the pen in his hand, denounced me because I did not vote want of confidence in the late Government; and he refused to vote at a time when he knew it was important for his constituents that the vote should be taken. But here we have this gentleman and others—I do not know whether he is the head or the tail. It may be said of them as John Bright said of the cave of Adullam, that they are like the Skye terrier in "Punch,"—it is impossible to tell which is the head and which is the tail, because the tail is so like the head and the head so like the tail.

It being Six o'clock, the committee rose for recess.

After Recess.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). I wish to answer a question which was asked this morning by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett). I asked my commissioner about it, and he states that a circular was issued to the officers on the north shore of the Georgian Bay, that supervision should be exercised, and that the logs should not be towed away until the dues were paid to the Ontario Government. I am informed that that has been the practice since confederation. But the commissioner is inquiring into the whole subject.

Mr. CHARLTON. It has always been necessary to get that certificate.

Mr. DAVIN. When six o'clock was called, I was pointing out the inconsistency of my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Richardson).

Let me recall what was done on 5th May. The hon. gentleman telegraphed to his paper an article headed: "Fighting for the farmers," and stating:

Manitoba and North-west members, including Douglas, Oliver, Richardson, Jameson, Macdonell and a number of Ontario men—

There were fifteen anyway, and what did they do?

They bombarded Fielding and Paterson for an hour yesterday, pressing for the immediate abolition of the arbitrary valuation of American agricultural implements.

Bombarded! Fancy the ordeal through which the Controller of Customs and the Minister of Finance must have gone. There was not only the hon. member for Lisgar, but my hon. friend from Eastern Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas), my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver), my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Jameson), and my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Macdonell), all tall men of their inches, with a cohort from Ontario; and they were bombarding those two unfortunate Ministers. No wonder that on certain occasions those two gentlemen came pale to the House, after being bombarded by these gentlemen. We know what bombarding is: it is throwing bombs. But this is only a metaphor; it is figurative language; but it illustrates the arguments, the threats, the objurgations, and the various other instances of the larger language of the earlier gods which these gentlemen must have indulged in. I know the Finance Minister must have suffered, and for various reasons the Controller of Customs must have turned pale.

Mr. Richardson, who spoke first, pointed out that with the duties on raw materials reduced, and no corresponding reduction in the duty on implements, it would be difficult for western members representing rural constituencies to defend the Government.

And why? Because of the very reason we had from him here to-day—that very many of them were led to believe that if a change of Government took place the duty on agricultural implements would be removed. That exactly was the impression. But I used to say to the people I addressed, that the argument that a revenue tariff government would make implements free was a fallacious one—that a revenue tariff government could not do it; and we find the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers) as good as saying that they could not. But I said to them, a Government believing in scientific protection can do it, and I will tell you why. I will not say for the reason my hon. friend from Eastern Assiniboia gave, because they are a raw material of the farm. I rather put it on this ground, which is unassailable, that the farming industry is an exceptional industry, and that if the farming people are prosperous, the whole country will be prosperous. If the farmers are not prosperous, the country cannot prosper, and therefore it is the bounden duty of Parliament to direct all its energies to making the farming community prosperous, and when we find that the amount of money invested in farming is very large and that the people interested in agriculture make up half the population of the country—

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). More.

Mr. DAVIN. I will accept what my hon. friend from Guysborough says, that they are more than half the population. Nevertheless, here is an industry on which the prosperity of the country depends and yet there is not an industry in the country that pays so badly at this moment. Therefore it is in an invidious position, and from this very desk, year after year, when the Conservative Government was in power, I used arguments, to which in the end they yielded, in favour of putting this industry on a better footing. I moved to have agricultural implements put on the free list long before the Patrons were heard of, not to speak of the period when the institution first saw the light. I held that a protectionist Government could have done what a revenue tariff Government could not do consistently with its policy. Now, with regard to the motion of my hon. friend, I propose to treat him as he would not treat me. I shall support his motion. It would please me better to have moved to put agricultural implements on the free list, but if I should do that in amendment to his motion, it might be said that my amendment would imperil it, and therefore I take the view that half a loaf is better than no bread. I shall take 10 per cent reduction as better than no reduction at all and shall support the motion of my hon. friend. But having said that, let me point once more to the peculiar position in which the hon. gentleman and his friends are placed. Here is the strong language used by my hon. friend the member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), that it would be impossible to defend the Government if they did not put agricultural implements on the free list, and we found him stating this afternoon that very many people were under the impression that they would be placed on the free list. We find the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) also writing in his paper as follows:—

Mr. Douglas took even stronger ground, and spoke of the deep disappointment in the west on account of there being no reduction. Mr. Macdonell spoke strongly also, kicking against the arbitrary valuation which increased the duty from 20 to 30 and 40 per cent.

Having used one arm of warfare, the bombs having given out, he took to kicking, and he kicked like a steer. Now, here is the result of the bombarding and kicking, and I call the attention of the committee to it:

Mr. BLAIR.

A promise was given to take up the matter at once and investigate the price, and see if the valuation was not above the price charged by the American manufacturers to dealers who buy by the carload. This was deemed satisfactory. It may be taken for granted, that if no reduction is made in the duties in the tariff, the farmers' interests will be protected in the question of valuation. It is believed this would result in a reduction of 5 to 10 per cent.

But there is not one word about the valuation from the hon. gentleman to-day. My hon. friend says he understands that implements are selling $5 apiece less, but if they are, it cannot be because of any reduction made by this Government in the interests of the farmers, since the hon. gentleman himself says nothing of the kind has been done. But what has happened? We have implements for sale at lower rates in consequence of the policy of the late Government, which made the great reduction from 25 to 20 per cent. Why, I remember, when in Winnipeg, you would pay nearly three times the amount for a binder which you would pay to-day, and when every agricultural implement you saw in Winnipeg had the saucy American flag flaunting from it to herald where it came from. But, in consequence of the wise and far-seeing policy of the late Administration, a policy quite consistent with placing agricultural implements, when the time came, on the free lists, their prices have declined from year to year.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to point out, before I sit down, the curious position in which we are placed. Here we have my hon. friend from Lisgar making the motion he has just made, supported by the speech to which we have just listened. Then we have my hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) also supporting that motion, and expressing his disappointment at the same time, and then we have my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Rogers), who should be the farmers' advocate, not calling to have the things that farmers use placed on the free list, but telling us he did not expect anything of the kind and that the Government were doing all they could. The Government, he said, introduced a tariff which was not much of a free trade tariff, and so on; yet in spite of that, he is content with everything, everything is lovely, and the goose hangs high so far as he is concerned. Under these circumstances, the House must admit that we are face to face with very great and curious inconsistencies. However, I intend to support the motion of my hon. friend from Lisgar, and I hope he will get sufficiently strong support to enable him to carry his motion and thus compel the Government to place these things 10 per cent lower on the tariff.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think it would be rather a pity were I to allow the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) to go scott free after the remarks he has just made. He accused me of inconsistency, and spoke very loudly and enthusiastically in favour of putting agricultural implements on the free list. Now, I may say that I had occasion some four or five weeks ago to refer to the Regina "Leader," which was published by my hon. friend for many years. As I read the paper, I became so interested in it that it seemed to me almost as if I had lit upon a second edition of Boswell's "Life of Johnson." I read through the paper for some five or six hours, going through its files for nearly ten years back, I was so deeply interested in it. The only difference I could find between the Regina "Leader" and the famous "Life of Johnson," by Boswell, was that that in the case of the Regina "Leader" my hon. friend from West Assiniboia was his own Boswell. I discovered that that paper described very minutely every personal movement of the hon. member. If he had occasion to dine with Sir John Macdonald, that fact was promptly telegraphed to the Regina "Leader." If on the other hand, he had occasion to dine at Government House, that interesting news was announced in double-leaded type in the columns of the same valuable journal; and I gather from the frequency with which my hon. friend's name appeared in that organ, that he was his own correspondent while at Ottawa. Of that fact I could not possibly have any reason for doubt. I also could not help coming to the conclusion that if he did not learn in that excellent society in which he recently boasted of having been born, that champagne was at its best when cooled to a temperature of 48, he at least learned it at Rideau Hall, and I could not help thinking that during all this time when my hon. and fashionable friend from West Assiniboia was accustomed to dine with the Princess Louise and the Marquis of Lorne, he must have forgotten his old friend the Widow McManus who lived out on the plains of West Assiniboia, and where the practice of drinking whisky out of a tin cup or a dipper was in high favour.

Mr. FOSTER. What has this to do with agricultural implements?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The hon. gentleman will see that very shortly. In the Regina "Leader" of 5th April, 1883, my hon. friend expressed himself as follows:—

We are not disposed to grumble at agricultural implements being still more protected.

The increased protection to which the hon. gentleman then referred was announced in the Budget of Sir Leonard Tilley, then Minister of Finance, when the duties were increased on mowing machines to $10 specific duty and 20 per cent ad valorem, on harvesters to $25 specific duty and 20 per cent ad valorem, and on self-binders to $40 specific duty and 20 per cent ad valorem. So that my hon. friend was then evidently satisfied with those increases.

Mr. DAVIN. I have just said that that was the policy that enabled us to get cheaper binders, that that was a proper policy.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will call your attention, Mr. Chairman, to this policy that is to get us cheap binders, when my hon. friend advocates in his paper that this increased protection is exactly the thing wanted.

Mr. DAVIN. At that time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will leave it to the judgment of this House whether that reasoning is good. In the session of 1891, the present Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) moved that binder twine be put on the free list, and my hon. friend from Western Assiniboia voted against it; and I understand that he excused himself on the ground that he did not know what his constituents wanted in the matter. I took the trouble to turn up the hon. gentleman's paper, and I find in an article on "binder twine" printed on the 7th April, 1892, these observations:—

In the interests of the farmers of Western Assiniboia, the "Leader" raises its voice against the duty on binder twine. We have felt for years that the National Policy bore too heavily on the North-west, and with regard to the particular item of binder twine, no one has come forward to defend a proceeding which compels the farmers to pay some $400,000 more for the twine than the twine is actually worth.

He made a speech in Parliament supporting the reduction in the duty on binder twine, and it will be interesting to see how he voted. On Wednesday the 26th April, 1892, nearly three weeks after the above article appeared, Hon. Robert Watson, then M.P. for Marquette, moved that binder twine be placed on the free list; and the record shows that the hon. member for Western Assiniboia shirked the vote. In the session of 1893, the present Postmaster General again moved that binder twine be placed on the free list, and the record shows that the hon. member for Western Assiniboia supported the motion in a speech, but voted against it. Then, in 1893, the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) moved a resolution to the following effect:—

Since the introduction of the protective system, sufficient time has elapsed for the establishment and development of such manufacturing industries as, under existing conditions, can be successfully carried on in Canada. Moreover, many manufacturers sheltered behind the rampart thus erected have formed combinations and trusts which prohibit competition and maintain monopolies.

That the existing tariff, defensible only as a protective measure, has proved in many instances oppressive and burdensome to the great mass of the consuming classes, and especially to those engaged in agricultural pursuits; is unfair and unequal in its incidence, and has been productive of discontent, verging on disloyalty, among those who suffer from its injustice.

That no sufficient reason has been adduced, or exists, requiring investigation respecting the foregoing facts, which are notorious, nor justifying delay in the passage of remedial legislation, which is imperative.

And the hon. member for Western Assiniboia on that occasion shirked the vote. But he explained the matter in an article he sent to the Regina "Leader," that court journal to which I have already referred. If you will allow me, I will read the reasons which the hon. gentleman gave for his course. I think they will be extremely interesting to the House. I shall quote very briefly :

Any resolution impugning the existing fiscal policy is, as demonstrated on the strictly party vote on Mr. McCarthy's motion, regarded as one expressing want of confidence in the Government. It was impossible for Mr. Davin, advocating a protective tariff, to support a resolution condemning such a tariff and suggesting unrestricted reciprocity with the United States, but we do not exaggerate when we say that Mr. McCarthy's proposals of reduction of customs met with the private approval of many members of both parties. It is easily understood that, with party discipline—

And I would call special attention of the House to this sentence :

—with party discipline carried to the extreme to which it is in this country, individual action must be controlled by party reasons. Parliamentary procedure here leaves the private members no initiative. Expression of honest and true opinion is restricted. The individual responsibility of the people's representatives is overshadowed by the power of the Cabinet.

I think that the House will agree with me after listening to these sentences, that when it was charged recently that the hon. gentleman had crawled under the barn, the statement was warranted by the facts. The article continues :

Members of Parliament, in order to be supporters of the Government, would not require to be extreme protectionists, just as there would no longer be a necessity for a Liberal being a free trader.

Now, in order to keep up the ruse with his constituents, on Monday, February 13th, 1893, the hon. member moved as follows :—

That it is the opinion of this House that the duty on barbed wire, on agricultural implements, on coal oil and on cotton should be reduced so as to give no more than reasonable protection, and that the duty on binder twine should be abolished.

But he never pressed that motion to a vote. He conveniently took to the woods. The present Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) had previously introduced a resolution to make binder twine free, but this the hon. member for Western Assiniboia had opposed. I will read a brief extract from his speech as reported in his own paper :

Mr. Foster had promised to make known the Government policy on the tariff, and in the face of such a request he (Davin) could not have voted for the motion. Had he done so, he would have been supporting what, coming from a member of the Opposition, was practically a vote of want of confidence in the Government.

Now, in the session of 1893, Mr. Cleveland had a motion for free coal oil, and respecting this, the hon. member for Western Assiniboia sent the following to his paper on 13th February, 1893 :—

A proposal was now before the House to abolish the duty on coal oil. He (Davin) could not go that far,— —Though he was quite willing the other day that it should be placed on the free list or the duty reduced to 1 per cent—

—but that the duty should be reduced. Speaking on binder twine, he (Davin) made a strong appeal for free binding twine for the farmers of Manitoba and the North-west.

The House is already aware how the hon. gentleman voted. In the "Leader" of 14th December, 1893, I find an article from the hon. gentleman on "the tariff" :

When, last session, Mr. Davin was battling for tariff reform, a gentleman in Regina said, condemning Mr. Davin : "We have no use for any man who is not with the Government every time." With them, if they are wrong, even if they are not with the country! If Sir John Thompson and his colleagues are now in favour of tariff reform, they must have been mistaken last year in not going for it. In fact, they were. Had they yielded on four or five articles, Martin would not be member for Winnipeg to-day. The moral is surely this, that if the member representing a constituency is pressing wise reforms on the Government in a friendly manner, we should support him, not try to weaken him. And it must be said that, as a constituency, we have supported him. But there will be flies in the ointment to the end of time.

I am afraid that when the hon. gentleman goes back to his constituents, a couple of months hence, he will find himself overwhelmed with flies, and they will not be in the ointment either. Then came the visit of the hon. ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) and Hon. Mr. Angers to the west, when the hon. member for Western Assiniboia proclaimed that what was wanted was free lumber, coal oil, agricultural implements, barbed wire, &c. He pointed out that coal oil at Regina was 50 cents a gallon. Yet when Mr. Cleveland's motion was up to put it on the free list, the hon. gentleman voted against it. Then came the tariff revision of 1894, when agricultural implements, lumber and barbed wire were reduced; binder twine was reduced and coal oil was made 7½ cents, though, before the session closed it was reduced to 6 cents. It would be interesting to see what the hon. member for Western Assiniboia said at that time. In the "Leader" 29th March, 1894, he spoke thus :

From a commercial and political standpoint, the tariff reductions are bold throughout, and, looking at them all round, are eminently satisfactory.

Those changes meant coal oil, 6 cents a gallon, agricultural implements, 20 per cent, vexatious restrictions in the case of coal oil continued and barbed-wire and binder twine still heavily taxed. And yet, according to the hon. gentleman, the reductions were eminently satisfactory. Now, the present Government have taken the duty off binder twine and barbed wire, reduced the duty on coal oil one cent per gallon, and have agreed to remove restrictions as to the importation, which I am credibly informed, will cut the duty almost entirely in two, and yet the hon. gentleman is not satisfied. He wants—and I am not blaming him for that, but I am pointing out his inconsistency—he wants coal oil on the free list, and he has just told you that he would like agricultural implements on the free list also. The present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved in amendment to the motion for Committee of Supply on 1st April, 1894, the effect of which amendment was to lower the duties on agricultural implements and the necessities of life. The hon. member for Western Assiniboia opposed that and asserted :

That, if the Opposition were in power, they dare not reduce the tariff lower than it has been reduced in the measure just brought down. The changes were too radical to suit Laurier and his friends ; it left them but little to complain of, and for that reason they were not pleased.

I looked over the correspondence sent by my hon. friend to the "Leader" and in the issue of 19th April, 1894, I find the following :—

In Mr. Davin's speech on the tariff, he dwelt on the absurdity of the suggestion made by Sir Richard Cartwright, Mr. Charlton and others, that the Government, if sustained at the elections on the tariff, would not carry out its promises. He (Davin) pointed out that such a thing was never known as a government propounding a policy and winning on it, and then going back on it.

But, he said, it was not uncommon for men in opposition to propound opinions and propose measures in regard to which, on getting into office, they became silent.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I must apologize to the committee for taking up so much time, especially as we are reaching the close of the session. I would not have done so, but that I felt it desirable, inasmuch as the hon. gentleman has been masquerading as the farmers' friend throughout that country, that his record should be thoroughly exposed in this House, in order that the House and the country, and especially his constituents, should know exactly how much weight to place upon his representations.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I want to ask a question of the Controller of Customs as to the basis of valuation placed upon implements coming in from the United States. During the past they have been valued at $100, which was the retail valuation. I wish to ask the Controller whether the retail price should be the basis, or the price at which implements are sold to agents by the United States manufacturers. If the latter basis were adopted, it would materially affect the price of implements in the North-west. This is a point of some importance to the consumer, inasmuch as these implements are gradually being brought in, and we think it is only right that the valuation should be upon the wholesale price and not on the retail price.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. In answer to the hon. gentleman I would say that I am going into that question again. Rulings have been given in that way. The hon. gentleman asked me if the duty will be charged on the retail price ; I answer that it would not be charged on the retail price except when only one machine was brought in, or a case like that. The buyer purchasing wholesale here, would be entitled to enter at the price at which the wholesale buyer would purchase in the United States. I am taking steps to inquire again in reference to that matter, and will endeavour to carry out the law in the case.

Mr. SPROULE. Has not that always been the ruling in the past with regard to valuations ?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. That is as I understand the law to be.

Mr. MACLEAN. There is no special rule for the farmers as against other importers.

Mr. OLIVER. It may be stated for the information of the House that there has been one law for the farmer in this matter and another law for other people. There has been an arbitrary valuation placed by custom-house officers in the past on these agricultural implements coming in from the States, an arbitrary value of $100 on self-binders, which was above the wholesale price in the United States. Our contention is that there should not be such a valuation, but that agricultural implements should be placed on the same footing as any other implements or produce coming into the country, that the price at the point of production should be the basis for duty. Some of us have pressed this matter upon the Controller in the past ; certainly I think we are entitled to a somewhat more definite answer than has been given.

Amendment (Mr. Richardson) negatived.

Item agreed to.

Clothes wringers for domestic use, and parts thereof, thirty-five per cent ad valorem.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the meaning of that clause ? When clothes wringers are not for domestic use, what will their duty be ?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Large wringers used in laundries will come in at the machinery rate.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to ask the Controller of Customs a question with regard to the item of woodenware, item 324, although it has already been passed. Some time ago I gave the Finance Minister a letter from the Handle Manufacturers Association of Canada, and I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he has acceded to the request of the handle manufacturers. This letter objected to the duty being reduced to 25 per cent, and asked that it be increased to 35 per cent, on wood handles, such as rake handles, pick handles and others.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think my hon. friend's suggestion was for an increase; we have not I think changed that item.

Mr. INGRAM. But I think the hon. gentleman changed some other items which affect that.

Item agreed to.

Watch cases, thirty per cent ad valorem.

Mr. FOSTER. Could I have a chance of success if I were to press upon the Ministers the necessity of raising watch cases to the old duty of 35 per cent?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Do you think that it is necessary?

Mr. FOSTER. I think under a 30 per cent duty you will find that the Americans, suppose the duties were levelled all round, would take our market, and I do not see why that should be. But if you are going to give the quarter reduction, as you say you are, to Great Britain, which will let Swiss and German manufactures in, I think without the shadow of a doubt you will wipe out this business. Now this is a large business, although watches are not a necessary of life. The duty so far as it goes does not amount to much; but if you take off a quarter from that 25 per cent, they get no protection at all. My hon. friends know from what examination they have made, that with the low rates of wages in Switzerland and Germany, no Canadian can compete against them unless he has a vantage ground. I fear you will shut up industries which have attained a very considerable extension.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is an article which in all probability will still come chiefly from the United States. The Americans, I think, are almost beating the Europeans in the matter of watch cases, and I do not think, even with a reduced rate, there will be any large importation from England.

Mr. FOSTER. The Americans are flooding our country with these, and that is all the more reason why you should not reduce the duty which has had the effect of giving our own men the industry to a large extent. German cases are being made with cheap labour which will come in at a quarter less.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. They are not coming in.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friends know that our contention is, and they have provided for it, that these other goods will come in. But suppose we take the argument that they don't come in from Germany, these goods will still come in through Great Britain. They will be brought over to Great Britain, the parts will be put together there, and then they will come into this country as English manufactures, and there is no way to keep them out.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Nine-tenths of all the imports come from the United States, and will continue to bear the duty. It is very unlikely that any very great amount will come even from Switzerland, which is the United States' greatest competitor. I would say, however, that something is due to the Canadian consumer who does not appear to have a single friend on that side of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will find that it will have the effect that the American or the Swiss producer or worker will get the wages and keep his family, that the goods will be imported and that you will not find a reduction of a single cent per watch made, to the people, because of this duty you are taking off watch cases. The 5 per cent added would be sufficient to enable the Canadian manufacturers to hold their own in the market. It is an extremely small margin to the individual in the end; it is very little but, in the aggregate, it means the profit upon the manufacturer's business, and it is the one point as to whether he can keep his factory open or not.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I remember, with a tariff of 17½ per cent, they held their own.

Mr. FOSTER. These are different from the good old days when you and I were boys. The keenness of competition; the whole character of competition is changed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. And Canadians have kept well up in the procession.

Mr. FOSTER. Canadians have kept well up in the procession, but not better in watchmaking in Ontario and Quebec than in coal-working in Nova Scotia. The Minister of Finance has kept the duty on coal in Nova Scotia and with a twinkle in his eye he says that he will raise it. But, in reference to this industry, I have visited these factories and gone through them carefully. They are furnishing employment to a large quantity of skilled labour. Why should we transfer all these things to another country?

Mr. SPROULE. The Minister of Finance said in his Budget speech, and afterwards, the same thing was reiterated by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) that they were endeavouring, as far as possible, to put the taxation of the people upon the luxuries of life. Watches may be regarded as the luxuries of life, and therefore we would naturally expect that they would put a higher duty upon these than upon the necessaries of life.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are a good many people who will not agree that a watch is a luxury. I think it should be classed among the necessaries of life. Articles that were once regarded as luxuries are not exactly looked upon in the same light to-day. Many things that we regarded a few years ago as luxuries are now among the necessaries of life. A watch is almost as necessary as anything else you could name, and I certainly think there is no article more universally used, no article more deserving to be admitted at a low rate.

Mr. FOSTER. A man would not want it for breakfast.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, but if he does not have one he will be likely to miss his breakfast.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not believe that many people will regard a watch case as a necessary of life and buy it for that purpose.

Item agreed to.

Axes, scythes, sickles or reaping hooks, hay or straw knives, edging knives, hoes, rakes, pronged forks, snaths, farm, road or field rollers, post hole diggers, and other agricultural implements, a.e.s., twenty-five per cent ad valorem.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask my hon. friends if they have been able to reconsider their decision upon this item?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The matter was reserved and, so far as our present information goes, I have not seen any sufficient reason for changing it. The particular complaint was in regard to the item of axes, and that is certainly an article of so universal usage that I think it ought to be placed at a moderate rate of duty. We have not been able to continue the old rate.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has largely reduced the rate on this. What corresponding advantage is he giving so as to enable him to reduce the rate.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The manufacturer gets free steel, which is some compensation.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, but my hon. friend will not contend that this is very much of a compensation.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have always found that when the manufacturer has not these things free he says they amount to a great deal, but when he wants more than that he says they do not amount to much. My own opinion is that 25 per cent is not a bad rate.

Mr. FOSTER. He has reduced the duty on these articles from 30 to 25 per cent. I suppose in that reduction he has gone upon the ground that he has made a compensating reduction in the raw material, and, as far as that compensating reduction goes he would be perfectly right in reducing the duty. Of course, the duty on any article has to be lowered as well as the duty on any raw material. All that has been done, so far as I can see, for the manufacturer of these tools is to give him the steel free, but in a dozen axes the quantity of steel that is used is small, comparatively. A large part of the material is iron, and my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has not reduced the ad valorem duty on his iron. If my hon. friend will make a calculation, from now to two or three years ago, taking the prices of iron in both periods, and taking the duties upon iron as they existed then and as they exist now, he will find that on the ad valorem basis he is charging a larger percentage of duty upon the iron of the axe-maker than was charged two, three or four years ago. The reduction on the steel is almost infinitesimal, because there is so very little steel, comparatively, used. The old rate would not be anything more than compensating the present ad valorem duties relatively placed on the raw material. My hon. friend will find that he is giving no advantage to raw material taking iron and steel both at an ad valorem comparison and he has reduced the ad valorem duty on the manufactured article. Now, my hon. friend here tells me—most atrocious pun—that I will have a good deal of assurance to stand up here and axe the Minister of Finance in regard to this matter. But I would like to axe him just one question and it is as to why he makes a difference between this class of manufacturers and others. He gives raw material and puts a 35 per cent duty upon various implements that are made. Why is it that in this case he puts a much less percentage upon the manufactured article? Take saws—you have the raw material free, but you give a duty of 35 per cent, and there are other articles which come within that same category. Why does my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) reduce one to 25 per cent and keep the other up to 35 per cent? All that I would ask in this matter would be that the duty should be made 30 per cent. That is not an inordinate duty, and I would like the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) to inform the committee how it is that he has made the distinction and if it would not be wise to make the duty 35 per cent?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Axes are among the farmer's tools or implements. There is a strong prejudice in the minds of the Government favourable to the farmers' interests and that is the only object we have in bringing that duty down. We have no desire to discriminate in respect to this industry. Some things are more universally used than others, and they are taxed at a lower rate. I will think over the suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) before we take the item in concurrence, but I would say to him frankly that with an article so universally used as an axe we will be open to criticism if we impose a higher duty.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend must also recollect that axes will be brought in from Germany and Belgium and from England. That competition, with the reduction of 25 per cent, will, of course, be ruinous to these manufactories, and they are not small. If I am not wrongly informed, there must be from twenty-eight to thirty of these factories in Canada, mostly in Ontario and Quebec, with a very large amount of capital; and the gentlemen connected with them assure me that it is perfectly impossible for them to keep their factories going under the stress of the competition that this rate of duty will impose upon them. With one-fourth off 25 per cent, you will have merely 17½ per cent, or thereabouts.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I hardly think that there will be European competition in the matter of axes.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is wrongly informed. There most certainly will be such competition. The industry is a large one and widely disseminated. It is rather a grave matter, unless you are going to make one fell swoop, and make your tariff a free-trade tariff entirely. If you are going to do that, why in the name of goodness, do you not do it all round?

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). Will the hon. gentleman name the articles in this list coming from England that will be subject to the 25 per cent reduction? I do not see any articles except one or two of small import.

Mr. FOSTER. In the first place, my argument is that the duty is reduced below the sustentation point for American competition, and when the one-fourth reduction takes place, you are liable to have a competition from across the water in these articles, especially in axes and scythes.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). Not from England.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, from England.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman may be a very wise man. He may have been born a hundred years ago and may have known how things were then, and have kept himself abreast of all the wisdom of the century down to the present time; but he is altogether too dogmatic when he attempts to judge everything the wide world over. In the first place, if these axes are not made in Great Britain, they can be made in Great Britain. All the British manufacturer has to do is to adapt himself to the style.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). Which he has never done.

Mr. FOSTER. That is exactly the answer I wanted from my hon. friend. He has based the whole of his argument upon this live-and-never-learn-anything principle that he seems to have adopted; but give the British manufacturer an advantage of 25 per cent, and in the stress of competition and the necessity for finding markets, there will be an inducement for him to study the needs of this country; and if he does so, he has just as good steel and iron, just as good machinery, and just as good skill, and consequently he can make axes which will come here at the minimum rate of duty, and enter strongly into competition with the products of our own people; and the German manufacturer can do the same. My hon. friend presumes too much upon that traditional quality of the Englishman to think that what he has done is good enough for everybody, and that he will do no better. The German has not subscribed to that principle in the last ten years but has applied an immense amount of industry, enterprise and money in finding what every country under the sun wants, in colour, texture, style and everything else, and has then gone to work to make it. And the British manufacturer, under the tuition of this competition, is not going to remain behind his German competitor. He will adapt himself to the circumstances and become a competitor; and you will find that the German manufacture, finished in England, will come in under that clause at the 25 per cent reduction, and you cannot prevent it.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) may know a great many things, and I admit that he is a well-educated man in almost any branch of industry in this country, but I can only say that for the last forty years efforts have been made by Americans and Canadians to get the American or Canadian style of axe manufactured in England, and, up to the present time, I have never seen an English axe of the American pattern sold in this country. It may have been, but I have never seen it, and I have come across a great many axes of all kinds from all countries. A few sickles and a few straw knives might come in, but certainly not hay forks nor manure forks, although they have tried to imitate them in England.

Mr. FOSTER. What does the hon. gentleman say about scythes?

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). We used to get a great many scythes in the days of William Moore.

Mr. FOSTER. Do not scythes come from England now?

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). Very few of them.

Mr. FOSTER. Would my hon. friend be surprised if I told him that since this tariff came in, thousands of dozens of scythes have come in from Great Britain?

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). I would be surprised. For years English scythes held the market, but for a long time very few have come to this country.

Mr. FOSTER. They are coming now.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). Canadians and Americans have kept the market for scythes because the articles they produce are a far better style for this country than the English scythes. Snaths certainly cannot come in from England; neither can field rollers or such things; and post hole diggers are not known in England. Out of the whole list there are only one or two articles in regard to which the manufacturers of Canada need have the slightest fear of English competition. If the door were opened to American competition, the hon. gentlemen would have a right to raise his voice; but so far as the English and Germans are concerned, I am quite sure the manufactures of this country can hold their own, even if they did come in. But I deny that English axes will ever be used in this country unless the English manufacturers change their mode of operation, which they have not done, although for many years efforts have been made again and again by Canadians and Americans to induce them to do so.

Mr. MONK. I cannot allow this item to pass without offering some protest on behalf of the manufactures of my own county. The capacity of those men to continue operations under this reduced tariff has been practically put to the test, in the town of Cote St. Paul, where there are extensive works, no later than last Saturday. That is the municipality I referred to this afternoon as having petitioned the Government, in view of the special circumstances mentioned in that petition, not to drive out of the limits of the town the manufactories in operation at the time of the coming into power of the present Government. Last Saturday over sixty workmen employed in the axe factory at Cote St. Paul were obliged to quit work, and the reason is not difficult to explain.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). Not on account of English competition.

Mr. MONK. I must begin by stating that I do not wish to bring down upon these men the vituperation of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood). I am quite prepared to concede at once that the English axe or the American axe is just as good as the axe manufactured in this country; and that admission will take away from the hon. member the occasion for vilifying what is manufactured in our own country. What I was proceeding to say was that those manufacturers, being unable to continue work under the 25 per cent tariff, were obliged to notify their workmen that they must reduce their wages 10 per cent; and so sixty skilled French Canadian workmen refused to accept that reduction—and I do not blame them, because their wages were low enough—and the works were closed. It is impossible to believe that men of business would resort to such a proceeding as that for the sole purpose of forcing the hand of the Government. The members of the Government held an inquiry throughout the country since last session, and I submit to the Minister of Finance that these men have demonstrated clearly that they are placed in such a position of disadvantage by this legislation that they are unable to continue. Why is it, I ask, that the manufacturers of axes and other articles mentioned in this item are treated so differently from the manufacturers of similar articles? There is some reason for that. When the Minister of Finance said that he did not wish to crush out the manufacturers of this country, surely he was serious, and did not wish to carry out a policy of extinction. Yet we find these men have 10 per cent stricken off their protection, which is an altogether different treatment to that meted out to other manufacturers of articles in a similar category. This is very serious matter for the portion of the constituency to which I have just referred. The hon. Finance Minister tells us that the axe is one of those articles which is in daily use and on which therefore a reduction should be made, but a hammer is of still greater daily use. For instance, I seldom wield an axe, but have frequently used a hammer, though I am a lawyer. Well, we find that hammers have a protection of 35 per cent and free steel and free handles. We find that the manufacturers of adzes have a protection of 35 per cent, and they pay $7 a ton on their steel. The makers of shovels get a protection of 35 per cent, and they pay $7 a ton on their steel. The manufacturers of picks, mattocks and grub hoes enjoy a protection of 30 per cent and pay $7 per ton on the steel they use. Manufacturers of augers and auger bits get a protection of 30 per cent and free steel. Rasping knives have 30 per cent protection and free steel. Saws have the same protection. Skates have 35 per cent protection. Why is this difference made between these articles and axes. Surely there must be some reason. The hon. Minister of Finance tells us that we are benefiting in respect of the steel we use, but surely he must have been informed that that is a very small protection indeed for our particular industry. In the manufacture of a dozen axes sixty pounds of iron is used and only nine pounds of steel, which reduces the protection to 2¼ cents. That is the benefit we reap, and in contradistinction to that there is a reduction of 50 cents per dozen on the prices of our axes. These are facts which surely ought to strike the committee.

Again, if we turn to what we pay on our raw material, I find that the manufacturers of axes, scythes, forks, hoes, rakes and sickles and hay forks, on which the duty is 25 per cent, will have to pay duty on the raw materials entering into the production of these goods as follows:—

On iron costing 90 cents per 100 pounds the duty is 35 cents per 100 pounds.....	39
On handles for forks, hoes, rakes and hay-knives, turned in the rough.....	25
On malleable castings, in the rough.....	25
On beeswax.....	10
On brazing wire.....	20
On oil.....	20
On glue.....	20
On bronze.....	30
On grindstones.....	15
On labels.....	35
On sheet steel.....	5
On varnish.....	40
On soft coal, costing 90 cents per ton at the pit, 60 cents per ton, or.....	75

From the above figures it will be seen that the rates of duty which these manufacturers will have to pay on what constitutes their raw materials average higher than the proposed duty on the finished goods. Yet, under these circumstances, our protection of 35 per cent is reduced to 25 per cent. And I would like to call the attention of the committee to this fact, that in view of a possible reduction in the duty, all our sales for some months have been made subject to any reduction that may take place in the tariff, so that in reality we lose 10 per cent on these past sales.

It seems to me, under these circumstances, the Government is discriminating between this industry and other industries of a similar nature, and that that discrimination is unjust; and really I am forced to the conclusion that similar industries have received protection because they have been enabled to make the Government representations through friends of the Government, which influence probably the manufacturers of axes have lacked. It is impossible not to be tempted to that conclusion when we see the immense differences made between the treatment meted out to men engaged in other similar industries.

The committee is perhaps not aware that there are over twenty-eight manufactories of axes and other articles embraced in this item of the tariff, and that a very large amount of capital has been invested in that particular industry. Not very long ago, I believe there was an axe factory started at Bedford in the province of Quebec, with a capital of $75,000, and not started by rich men, but in which most of the people in that district are interested. That, at least, is the information which has been conveyed to me. In one of these factories there is a very considerable output and a large consumption. It consumes 1,500 tons of coal, 300 tons of grindstones, 200 tons of iron, 100 tons of steel, 12,000 axe boxes, 4,000 scythe boxes, 2,000 tool boxes and 10,000 dozen handles for forks, hoes, &c. And the same factory manufactures 12,000 dozen scythes, 16,000 dozen forks, 6,000 dozen hoes, 2,500 dozen rakes, and 15,000 dozen axes. There is also this to be noticed, that there is a very considerable amount paid out in wages by these factories to skilled workmen, of whom there are over 1,500 employed by them, representing over 6,000 people who will have to suffer by the reduction, unless the Government upon reflection see fit to alter this item of the tariff on concurrence.

To give the committee some idea of the wages paid by the different factories in comparison with the raw material used, on every dollar's worth of material used they pay in wages, on scythes, $1.53, on axes $1.33, on two-pronged forks $1.12, on three-pronged forks $1.08, on four-pronged forks $1.11, on hoes $1.06, on rakes $1.25.

It is with the greatest difficulty that during the past year they have been able to fight foreign competition, and I have no doubt, for my part, whatever the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) may say, what the hon. ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) has stated here will be borne out, namely, that we will be flooded with axes brought from England and principally from Germany. There can be no doubt that the manufacturers in these countries will not lose sight of the opportunity now afforded them. Why, if we look at the Trade and Navigation Returns, you will find that in the item of axes and these other articles, there were imported here under the old tariff as follows:—

Chopping axes.....	$ 4,191	$11,696	$32,000
Hay and manure forks...	1,374	3,697	8,400
Hoes.....	278	617	1,000
Saws.....	38,277	74,309	80,000

It is evident thus that it is with the greatest difficulty we have been able to compete against foreign manufactures. This reduction of 10 per cent is going to ruin these people. If the reduction were carrying out a uniform rule, if it were the putting into execution of a principle of policy, if it were the carrying out of a free trade tariff or a tariff for revenue only, I would not have the same ground for complaint. But what I complain of is the unjust discrimination. Where there is such a considerable discrimination as 10 per cent, it must be apparent that some explanation is needed. I say frankly and sincerely that I have no special desire to find fault with the Government, but the only explanation which can find room in my mind is that the claims of these other industries, which enjoy better protection, have been presented to the Government by people having more power with it than those connected with this particular industry. I have been told, with what amount of truth I know not, that the people engaged in this industry, represented by item 280, have the misfortune of being connected with the Conservative party. Speaking of my own constituency, it is quite natural to suppose that during the last election, when the issue was, in that constituency, whether we should have a tariff for revenue purely and simply or a tariff which would afford protection to our industries, the people engaged in an industry which owed its very existence to the protective system should have favoured the candidate who believed that that system was absolutely necessary to the welfare of this country. But surely there was nothing wrong in that, surely you would not assimilate the case of those men to that of offensive partisanship on the part of civil servants. That issue being presented to these people, as it was in my constituency, fairly and squarely, they had every right to take part in the campaign and uphold the principle upon which their very existence depended. And they did so, probably to a great extent, but to what extent, I am unable to say. Under all these circumstances and in view of the fact that the town of Cote St. Paul is already affected by this tariff and by previous reductions, I deem it my duty to point out to the committee and to the Government the great discrepancy between the treatment meted out to the manufacturers of these articles and that meted out to the manufacturers engaged in producing similar articles; and I appeal to the Government to take these representations into consideration, and, if possible, not place the town of Cote St. Paul in the unpleasant position of seeing all its industries either diminished or completely obliterated by this new tariff. I have heard more than once—and it is another clause to which I have been inclined to ascribe the sweeping reductions referred to—statements from members representing the North-west that what they wanted was still greater reductions. I may say, for my part, I am tired of hearing these representations made by these men when I reflect upon all that we have done for the development of that country. There would be no North-west to-day at all if we had not made it for them. Do these gentlemen think, have they reflected what part in the distribution of the immense funds that we have sent there the large capital invested in industries in the eastern provinces has taken? We have spent there over $300,000,000. Do these gentlemen imagine that of all the money that we have spent there, an immense proportion has been brought into the public coffers by the industrial people of the eastern provinces? It is a reflection which they never seem to make, and I tell you, for my own part, I am not sufficiently informed to be moving in that direction now, but expression has been given to that idea this morning, and it is an idea which, I believe, will become a fruitful one in my mind—that it is time the North-west Territories should be organized into provinces and allowed to take upon their own shoulders the immense burdens we are bearing to-day, if they are not prepared to recognize the part which the east is entitled to have in the preparation of the tariff of this country.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). I think the manufacturers have a very able advocate in the person of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) who has just taken his seat. If he was informed upon these articles as he is, perhaps, in some other things, it would be of importance to hear him in this House. He leaves out of account, in advocating the case of the manufacturers, the reduction that has taken place in the duty on raw material. He forgets that they have a reduction of \$3 a ton, or 33 $\frac{1}{3}$  per cent on the article of iron. That amounts to something. In the article of steel also there is an important reduction. He tells us that there is 5 pounds in every axe made in this country. That shows how little he knows of the weight of axes. If the parties who loaded him up so well had been honest and had given him full particulars, they would have told him that the average box of axes weighs from 45 to 48 pounds, which is considerably different from the 60 pounds per box which he states.

Mr. MONK. I beg the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Wood's) pardon. I said that 60 pounds of iron entered into the manufacture of a box of axes. That is the information I have; of course I do not pretend to know, for I never made an axe.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). I understand. But there is no such weight, except in the case of a broad axe.

Mr. BRITTON. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) is quite right in that, because in the manufacture of an axe there must be waste.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). There is very little waste.

Mr. BRITTON. There is so much waste that I can venture to say, from some knowledge of the facts, that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) is well within the mark in saying that 60 pounds of iron is required in making a dozen axes.

Mr. McMILLAN. In the discussion of these items, there is one class of inhabitants of this country that is entirely left out of the calculation in all the statements made—the workingmen and the farmer. The workingman in the winter has only his axe to depend upon, and his wages, in very many cases, have been reduced to a mere living pittance. The farmers of this country, also find their incomes reduced even more than any other class within the last ten or fifteen years, and certainly some consideration should be given to them. In saying this, I know whereof I speak, having farmed in Canada for fifty years and having paid very strict attention to these matters. The prices of our implements have not been reduced in proportion to the reduction of prices on the principal exports of the farm. The mechanics in the agricultural implement manufactories can certainly stand it to have their wages reduced a little, considering that those wages have been going up steadily, while the farmers' and workmen's wages have been reduced from time to time 10, 15, 20 and 30 per cent. Last winter, in the section in which I live we could get workmen, good, able-bodied men, for $3 and $4 a month, and, even at that rate, many of the farmers were not sufficiently well off to be able to engage men. Certainly, in dealing with these matters the consumers are entitled to some consideration.

Item agreed to.

Embroideries, laces, braids, fringes, cords, elastic, round or flat; garter elastic, tassels and bracelets, n.o.p.; braids, chains, cords or other manufactures of hair, n.e.s.; handkerchiefs of all kinds; lace collars and all similar lace goods; lace nets and nettings of cotton, linen, silk, or other material; shams, curtains, when made up, trimmed or untrimmed; regalia, badges and belts of all kinds, n.o.p.; linen, silk and cotton clothing, and all other articles made up by the seamstress from linen or cotton fabrics, n.o.p.; corsets of all kinds, corset clasps, busks, blanks and steels, and corset wires, tipped or untipped, thirty-five per cent ad valorem.

Mr. BRITTON. I hope that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) has thought of putting in the words that have been the subject of some discussion. This item affects one industry, and, so far as I know only one. While this has been changed, as the hon. gentleman will see, very considerably from the item as it appeared in the first resolutions presented to the House and, while it is, so far, satisfactory, I think, to all the interests concerned, it may not effect the object intended unless the words are inserted "cut to lengths or in coils" after the words "tipped or untipped" in the latter part of the resolution. I would ask the Minister of Finance if he would consent to put these words in. It is important, as it seems to me, that these words should be in, because, if not, wire may be brought in under section 258, and steel might, perhaps, be brought in under item 568 of the free list. Of course, it cannot do any harm to have these words in—at least so far as I can understand the question—and, if they are not in, the section may not be of any benefit to any industry that uses these goods, but the law may be evaded by having the wires brought in coils under the items that I have mentioned. The hon. Minister of Finance will remember that this whole section, No. 352, is substituted for section No. 320 of the old tariff. That section, I suppose, the old Government carefully considered, and, because of the existence of section 320, an industry grew up and is now in existence in the constituency of my hon. friend from South Leeds (Mr. Taylor). Of course, it is a matter of some importance to that industry, and it seems to me to be only carrying out the intention of the Government in the introduction of this item 352 that this change should be made. This is a dutiable item, and I am not asking to have any change in the rate, but only to have these words inserted, and I hope the hon. Minister will consent to that.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. We are putting in "cut to lengths"; we are not putting it "in coils." We do not see our way to do that.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think the way the Minister suggests will cover part of the difficulty. But I think you might improve that by putting in the words "japanned" and "tempered." I know that the most expensive machinery used in the manufacture of corset wire is the wire for japanning and tempering. They may be imported with all that work done in a foreign country, in Germany, for instance, because Germany is the principal competitor now in the corset wire industry. If he will put in the tempered and the japanned, that will meet the case. Then it cannot come in either in coils or otherwise, without paying this duty.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. If my hon. friend is anxious for that, we had better hold the item over until we are able to see what the effect might be.

Mr. TAYLOR. You might pass it now, and put it in on concurrence.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. We will consider it on concurrence. We do not promise to put it in.

Mr. BRITTON. But so far as the hon. gentleman sees at present, there is no objection to it.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. No; but it might possibly conflict with some other items. It has not been brought to our attention before.

Mr. BRITTON. If it does not conflict with any other item, then the hon. gentleman will consent to its going in.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think we had better hold it over. We have every desire to meet the hon. gentleman's views, but we do not care to commit ourselves to words, the effect of which we do not understand at the moment.

Item agreed to.

Shirts of any material, and ladies' or misses' blouses and shirt waists, thirty-five per cent ad valorem.

Mr. HENDERSON. With reference to this item I desire to say a few words. I have no desire to find fault with the quality of the goods manufactured by Canadian shirt-makers in Canada. They make a good article of shirts. The white cotton shirts made in this country are well made, of good material, the linen is of sufficient quality, and they are in every respect equal to the requirements of the people of this country, with one exception. I may say, as a business man, that this exception has been brought to the attention of shirt-makers year after year, but they have not met the difficulty. I think it unfair to a great many people of this country that they should be compelled to buy, continuously, imported shirts and pay the duty when they ought to be able to secure in this country, a shirt in every respect as well suited to their wants and at a much cheaper price. The whole difficulty with Canadian shirt manufacturers is that they are too economical, they will not make a shirt that is sufficiently long for a man five feet ten inches, and upwards. I state this as a fact that is known to every business man in this country. Manufacturers have been warned that this matter would be brought to the attention of the Finance Minister if they did not change their method and make us something suitable for the requirements of our people. Take the English shirt, and you will find it four inches longer than the Canadian of the same size or number. German shirts are about one inch longer than Canadian. Until the Canadian manufacturers are prepared to do away with this miserable little economy in which they save about one and a half or two cents on a shirt, I for one, although a protectionist in principle, am prepared to vote that the protection afforded to the Canadian shirt-makers be reduced to 15 per cent. I would therefore move that the duty on white shirts be reduced to 15 per cent—unless the Finance Minister will give us some assurance that he will induce the manufacturers of white shirts in this country to do away with their miserable economy and give us a little more length.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand the Finance Minister will not take that subject under his supervision.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think I will have to let my predecessor speak for me on that point.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think we can decide on 354 and 355 until 355a is disposed of. I would like to know what my hon. friend proposes to do.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I may say that this item in the tariff has given us much consideration and difficulty. I am sorry to say that we have not been able to reach a solution which we can regard as satisfactory to all concerned. For the present it is my intention to ask that the item 355a be struck out. It was a change inroduced as a special concession, with the view of assisting the shirt manufacturers. We are led to believe that it is likely to create confusion and difficulty, and we have concluded not to ask the House to concur in that item. I am sorry we have not been able to reach some arrangement which would be satisfactory at once to the cotton makers and the shirt makers, and we had hoped that they would have been able to come to some understanding which would have assisted us in the matter. Unfortunately, their views are in conflict, and, for the present, whatever we may do ultimately when we reach 355a we shall ask the House to strike it out.

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend not propose then to revise the duties on 354 and 355? If, with a duty of 15 per cent on the raw material, he proposes to give them 35 per cent in each of these cases, surely if he strikes out the 15 per cent and restores these cotton fabrics to the original duties, as shown in 349 and 350, he must see that he is committing a great injustice to the collar, cuff and shirt makers, on his own basis of giving them 25 and 35 when the raw material was 15. If, now, raw material is raised from 25 to 35, what protection does he give the collar, cuff and shirt makers? The hon. gentleman has himself declared that there was a certain proportion that should exist between the two, he has distributed that proportion when he strikes out 355a. What does he propose then to do in order to restore the proportionate duty which he himself has declared by this tariff is necessary.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid I shall have to admit that in putting in that item 355a we attempted to do something for the shirt manufacturers which, on reflection, we see we cannot do successfully, and probably I may say that we should not have done. We have adopted the 35 per cent rate in regard to these manufactures as a maximum rate which we desire to apply, and if we could give the cotton manufacturer and the shirt manufacturer each a part of that 35 per cent, we should be very pleased to do so, and that is what we tried to do. We are led to believe, however, that we would do more harm by keeping that item than we would be doing good, and as the balance of convenience is that way, we have concluded to strike it out. My hon. friend asks, What protection do you give the shirtmaker in that case? As respects the coloured cotton, we give him none, except the protection which always exists on the labour, that is to say, with a duty upon coloured cottons of 25 per cent, the duty on shirts would be 35 per cent, the only protection the shirt maker would have. There would be the protection on the labour as between the Canadian and the made-up article, which it is well to remember is always considered. If you have 35 per cent upon raw materials and 35 per cent upon the manufactured articles, that does not prove that there is no protection. There is protection, of course, to the extent of the labour involved in making up the goods from the raw material to the finished article, and the effect of striking out this item is to leave the shirt manufacturer with only that protection. I do not see any way at this moment, unless we are prepared to increase the duty on shirts, to go above 35 per cent, and we shrink from doing that. The other side of the question is that we may reduce the cotton duties. We are led to believe that if we do that there would be a larger disturbance than there would be any compensation for in the concession to the shirt people. Still, I am not quite satisfied with the result myself, I confess that I think we are making a choice of evils and doing less harm by striking that item out than by adopting it.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, I will take my hon. friend on his own reasoning. In the first place he is tying himself to a pedantic rule which no business man ever does, and no business Government should ever attempt to do. This tariff ranges all the way from nothing up to more than 35 per cent, and there has been no fixed rule. Neither by a minimum provision nor by practise is it understood that a Government which is making a tariff, is to bind itself by pedantic rules. He will say for instance that he would not have less than a certain minimum duty or that he would not have more than a certain maximum duty. It would be subordinating circumstances widely differing and conditions as diverse as can be to a mere arithmetical rule for the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) to say: "We have a preference for 35 per cent as the highest tariff rate that we can fix. We know if we carry out that preference in that respect that we will destroy a great industry but such is our respect for preference that we would rather destroy an industry than depart from this rule." My hon. friend takes the ground that there is no going higher than that, no matter what may be the result. My hon. friend admits that he has pretty nearly equalized the duty on the raw material and the duty on the finished article, but there is the protection on the labour. My hon. friend knows that the protection of 30 per cent on the labour that is put upon a great many of these articles is no protection at all so far as the Canadian manufacturer goes because he has to compete with labour 50 or 60 per cent cheaper than Canadian labour and so my hon. friend's fancied protection of 30 per cent on the labour put upon shirts, collars and cuffs, vanishes into thin air. But he says he has to do this in order to help the cotton industry. I am very glad that he did not sacrifice the cotton industry. He would have struck a blow at the cotton industry, but it would have struck a worse blow at the interests behind the cotton industry. He has felt the force of the business and financial pressure and given way to it, and I am glad that he did give way; he has given away and restored the duties on cottons. But what is the reason that he is going to throw eight or ten thousand people in Canada out of employment as this most inevitably will. They have capital, banks and large aggregate influences behind them, but dependent upon these industries there are eight thousand people in Ontario and Quebec, 90 per cent of whom are women in the families and homes of this country who are making a living for themselves and their families out of this industry, which if you keep the duties as you propose to make them will be transferred to the continent and Great Britain and in part to the United States of America. I ask my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) whether his pedantic rule ought to stand in the way and whether for the sake of not giving more than 35 per cent on articles like collars and cuffs he is going to take the responsibility of taking the bread and butter from 8,000 people, 90 per cent of whom are women in the homes of our families in Ontario and Quebec. What purpose would be served by transferring the collar, cuff and shirt industry to foreign labour? When you have rooted out all your manufacturers you will have the same prices paid for these articles in this country that you had before. I ask my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) whether he does not think that it is most unfair to sacrifice the interests I have mentioned with the large amount of labour involved in it. Since he had to give way in the matter of the cotton duties is it fair to sacrifice an equally great and in some respects a greater industry? In the matter of distributed employment I do not think that the cotton industry is so much greater than this industry. In the total amount of wages paid the cotton industry is greater, but in the distribution of what goes to make up the difference between poverty and comfort in thousands of homes this industry is perhaps under the economical conditions of our people in Ontario and Quebec more important than the cotton mill. Does my hon. friend think that he is treating that great industry and these people fairly when at first he says: "You shall have 35 per cent on your finished product and you may get your raw material at 15 per cent. That is my fiat." Pressure comes and the 15 per cent is thrown to the winds and this rate goes to 25 per cent on plain and to 35 per cent on the coloured goods. That protection goes up and yet the disparity is allowed to exist. Surely my hon. friend, for the sake of Canadian labour and of Canadian homes and for the sake of what depends upon these will restore the duty. There has been an example in this country and the result was that Troy did the work. When a duty was put on, the Troy business was transferred to this country and wages were paid to build up Canadian homes. It will be the same state of things if this duty is allowed to remain, and you will find that Troy will do the work and that Great Britain and the continent will do the work, and that you will have goods sent in here which will compete to the destruction of this industry. That may be all very well for the hon. gentlemen who have this wonderful respect for the 35 per cent line, but it will not do much towards keeping people when hungry and lacking employment because of the destruction of capital and labour which gave them work. I do appeal to my hon. friend to be just. He must have had the idea of being just when he brought down the tariff No. 2. He has now disturbed the equality in the heightened duty of the one; let him restore that proportion by giving an equivalent duty on the manufactured article.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend's proposal is that the duty be increased on shirts to 50 per cent. I very much regret to say that that does not strike me favourably. I do not think that as a result of this duty, the industry will be seriously affected. That argument is always used when you disturb any duty and I am not surprised that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) using it now. My information is that while undoubtedly the industry will not have as good a time as it had before there will be fair conditions enabling it to be carried on. I think the tariff as brought down will place the shirt makers in a less favourable position than they were in before, but it will not be as disastrous to that industry as my hon. friend suggests. We will still make shirts in Canada, and these people will go on earning their living, although the profits to the manufacturers will not be so great as in the past. I wish I could see my way clear to meet the hon. gentleman's suggestion, but it seems to me that it would be leading to a higher rate of duty which would not find favour in the House.

Mr. FOSTER. The result will have to be the arbiter between my hon. friend and myself. I sincerely hope that his expectation will be carried out and that these people will be able to keep employment in this work, but I very much doubt that it can be so with the competition which comes to them from cheap labour. My hon. friend knows that he is not even giving them 35 per cent, and he is going to take a quarter off that.

Mr. QUINN. It is impossible for me to allow this item to pass without expressing my sentiments against the change which has been introduced at the last moment by the Finance Minister. It is considerable of a shock to me to learn at the very last moment that the hope held out to the working people in Montreal, where there are three shirt factories, employing men, women and children, is destroyed, and that the continuation of their employment in these factories is going to be rendered impossible by the step which is now taken. The hon. Minister thought at one time to give the shirt manufacturers a protection by reducing the duty on their raw material to 15 per cent. He could not have done this without taking into consideration all the circumstances of the case. He must have thought seriously over the matter before attempting to make such a reduction as 10 per cent in favour of the manufacturers. What argument has he put before the committee to prove that the decision which he has now come to is the proper one, and that the decision he came to when he allowed this reduction was erroneous? I cannot see it. I could not express anything like as well the mercantile view of the case as it has been expressed by the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster). To put it as the very least evil that will be done, there is no doubt that if the factories are not closed up, a very serious reduction will be made in the wages of the employees; and what does that mean? It means in the city of Montreal alone that the wages of 2,000 wage-earners will be reduced from 10 to 15 per cent. Their means of livelihood are limited enough at present; the remuneration they receive in this particular industry the world over is one which years ago called forth the "Song of the Shirt" from Hood; and that song is just as powerful to-day, and means as much to-day in England and other countries, not excluding Canada, as it did at the time it was written. Certainly, if this change is persisted in, there would be attached to the name of this Government the stigma of having, as the least evil that can happen, compelled the women of this country to work for wages equal only to the wages earned by the English women who brought forth the "Song of the Shirt."

Item agreed to.

Cotton duck, twenty-two and one-half per cent ad valorem.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I wish to add, after "cotton duck" the words "gray or white, n.e.s."

Mr. BRITTON. I would like to ask that an exception be made in favour of sail manufacturers who import cotton duck for the purpose of making it into sails in their own factory. That will leave the matter as it has been for some years. The old item was 421, and the only change that was made in that item by the new item 395 was the leaving out the comma, after the word "canvas," and the collectors were instructed that the comma being left out, they were not to admit what was, by a contradiction of terms, called cotton canvass at 5 per cent. This item, 369 c., is entirely new, and it will only be bringing it to accord with what has been done in other cases, if cotton duck is allowed to be brought in as before by sail manufacturers to be used in their own factories. You have allowed that to be done in the case of duck brought in for use in the manufacture of belting and hose, and canvass for bicycle tires and for other purposes in item 496, which reads in part as follows :—

Canvas or fabric, for the manufacture of bicycle tires, when imported by the manufacturers of bicycles for use exclusively in the manufacture of bicycle tires in their own factories.

I propose to extend that to the manufacture of sails when used for that purpose by a sail manufacturer in his own factory.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will let the item stand, and look into the matter. It is a new suggestion.

Mr. BRITTON. It should come in under section 395, at 5 per cent ad valorem.

Item allowed to stand.

Socks and stockings of all kinds, thirty-five per cent ad valorem.

Mr. HENDERSON. The former duty was 10 per cent per dozen pairs and 35 per cent. Now, these are articles that are surely cheap enough in this country. They are generally sold in single pairs and nobody objects to the cost, and I think it is very important for the maintenance of the industry that something more than 35 per cent should be given. The hon. Minister of Finance has been generous in some instances and retained a small specific duty with the ad valorem, and I hope in this case he will take into consideration the interests of the men who are making these articles. The factories are small and consequently more numerous, and I think he ought to restore the specific duty of 10 cents per pair along with the 35 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Yarns, woollen and worsted, n.e.s., thirty per cent ad valorem.

Yarns, composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the alpaca, goat, or like animal, costing thirty cents per pound and over, when imported on the cop, tube or in the hank by manufacturers of woollen goods for use in their products, twenty per cent ad valorem.

Mr. ROSAMOND. Could the hon. gentleman make the duty on yarns 35 per cent ad valorem? There will be a great injury done this industry if the tariff is made as low as 30 per cent. There is a large number of people employed in making these yarns, and I am almost certain their wages will be reduced unless the tariff is raised. With the 25 per cent preferential reduction, the duty will afford no protection whatever.

Mr. HEYD. I pray the indulgence of the House while I say a few words on this subject. In connection with this item, it would be well to consider items 372 and

Mr. BRITTON.

373 and 378, which are the products into which yarns ultimately go. Those familiar with the question will realize that the Government are seriously interfering with the manufacture of socks and stockings and knitted goods. The tariff on stockings and socks used to be 10 cents per dozen specific and 35 per cent. And on manufactures composed wholly or in part of wool or worsted, the duty was 5 cents per pound and 25 per cent ad valorem. The present rate is a very serious reduction, running from 40 down to 30 and in some cases 25 per cent. In this particular case the consumer is not interested, and it is therefore a matter in which the widow and orphan and working-man need not be taken into account. The cost of the manufactured article will not be influenced, whether the Government reduce this item or increase it, but the interest is divided between the spinner on the one hand and the knitting establishments and weavers, on the other. In order I presume to meet the sacrifices to which the manufacturers of the woollen goods have been submitted, the Government have felt bound to make certain concessions, and they have permitted worsted tops to be imported free of duty, so as to allow our weavers a chance to vary the classes of goods which they had been making in the past. The question comes in right at this point, what is the exact amount of duty that would best subserve the interests of the various industries engaged in making these articles? If we sacrifice the spinner for the benefit of the weaver and the knitter, there will be a direct loss to the country, and if we sacrifice the weaver and the knitter for the benefit of the spinner, there will be a similar loss, so that the difficulty for the Government was to find out how best to serve both these interests. I might inform the committee that already disastrous results have fallen upon certain manufacturers engaged in the woollen industry, which is one of the largest in the country. Owing to the introduction of free tops, the spinning industry has been seriously injured. If we take the mill of Mr. Forbes of Hespeler, whose spinning plant was estimated to be worth $80,000, we find that owing to the importation of free tops its value has been reduced by 60 per cent, because the top-making part of his machinery has become worthless, and those men who have money invested in large spinning plants are exceedingly anxious that the duties on yarns shall not be so reduced as to make their plants equally valueless as the top-preparing plant of the spinning industry. The reduction would have this further result that it will transfer to Great Britain the labour now being done in this country. There are 1,500 men engaged in the various spinning industries of the country, preparing manufacturing yarn. I am not a protectionist, though my hon. friends to my right say that I am.

My hon. friends on the other side say I am a free trader. I am neither one nor the other; but I am prepared to take each article on its merits and do what I think it is best to do in the interests of the country. That is more important, to my mind than to be a protectionist or a free trader—these are only phrases to me and do not count for anything. I am exceedingly anxious that, in the arrangement of the tariff, when the consumers are not affected, those engaged in manufacturing should be given every facility for carrying on their industry. At present 90 per cent of the capital invested and 75 per cent of the product are to be credited to men who have spinning outfits, while the other 10 per cent of the capital and 25 per cent of the product are to be credited to men who have no spinning plants and who buy their yarn. Three-quarters of the capital in a mill is invested in the spinning department. Take a mill costing $280,000—and we have complete mills in this country that cost that amount—they produce no more of the finished article than would a mill costing $80,000 that buys its yarn. Therefore this item, fixing this duty at 20 per cent, is one of the utmost importance, because it strikes at the very basis of the woollen industry of our country, and, if the rate is too small, the spinning industry of our country is seriously injured, and the 1,500 men engaged in the spinning industry will probably lose their employment, and we shall transfer to Great Britain the labour now being done in our factories, and that without any benefit being conferred upon the great mass of the consumers. If I thought that I was going to interfere with the welfare of the great consuming classes of this country, I would not say a word, because I believe the consumers should be considered in this matter. But this is a question in which we can leave the consumer out of consideration, and deal with the two branches of the manufacturing trade, the spinners on one side and the knitters and weavers on the other. It must not be forgotten that we are dealing with this question on a preferential basis. On that basis we have 15 per cent on yarn, and the preferential arrangement will leave it at 11¼ per cent for the weaving and knitting interest. That does not represent the proportion that they should get of the protection. As I have said, the spinning interest is much larger than the weaving and knitting interest, and ought therefore to get a greater amount of protection, for the reason I have already suggested. I would suggest to the Government to raise the item to 25 per cent and, if not, then to 22½ per cent. That will leave the spinners at 17 per cent, and the weaver and knitter at 9¼ per cent. That would be a better balance, and I believe it would lead to the establishment of a French top making plant costing probably $80,000 in this country in a short time. If we got an establishment of that kind to make tops in this country, we could induce the present weavers to put in spinning plants, which they could do, and thus keep the labour in this country. I believe that the Government should strain a point and do whatever they can in favour of so important an industry as our spinning industry. I do not want to move a resolution on the subject, because if the Government does not want to concede the point, it would be absurd. I may say, also, that I have no wish to embarrass the Government, but my suggestions are in accord with those that have been made by Mr. Kendry and others engaged in the trade. If the Government will make this 22½ per cent instead of 20 per cent that will leave 17 per cent for the spinner. To make it 25 per cent would leave the knitter and weaver only 6¼ per cent, which would be too little. I do not want to be too hard on any branch of the industry and I think that 22½ per cent would be about right. It would be a benefit to this industry and would not be an injury to the consumer in that line.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Some parties who are interested in this line of manufacture have suggested that the wording of the clause should be amended so as to read as follows:

Yarn, composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the alpaca, goat or like animal, costing thirty cents per pound and over, when imported on a cop, tube, or in the hank for manufacturers of woollen goods for their use in their products, twenty per cent ad valorem.

The reason of this suggested amendment is that some importers buy this article in very large quantities and sell it to the smaller manufacturers. It is claimed that only two or three manufacturers in the province of Quebec can buy this article in large quantities, and sell it to the other manufacturers. But with this amendment, the importers could buy and import the article, paying the duty of 20 per cent only when it would be sold to the manufacturers for their use in their products. A similar amendment to that which I now suggest has been made in other cases. The importer could be required to pledge his oath, and regulations could be made by the Controller of Customs that would prevent the benefit of the clause going to others than those for whom it is designed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As to the last suggestion made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) who has just sat down, I may say that it was brought to my notice only a few moments ago by another gentleman. I am willing to take the matter into our consideration, though it is fair to point out that the privilege proposed to be granted is apt to be abused. I know that it is granted under this tariff in some other cases, but I do not think that we should extend it more than we can help, because when an article is allowed to be imported for one purpose at one rate, while if imported for another purpose it must pay a higher rate, there is a strong temptation always to enter it at the lower rate, and there is no doubt that this privilege has been abused in the past. As to the rate of duty, I may say that that subject received very careful consideration from the Ministers, and we were led to believe that, in the general interest of the woollen trade, we should be doing right in making this duty 20 per cent. Our first proposal, as hon. gentlemen will remember, was a lower rate, but after full consideration, we concluded that 20 per cent on the yarns would give a fair chance for the spinner and for the cotton mills. It was represented that a considerable number of the mills were anxious to have the yarns at a lower rate, which would enable them to open up new lines of manufacture and do a more profitable business than in making the inferior grades which have occupied so much of their attention. I would suggest that the item be allowed to pass now, and before concurrence, I propose to consider what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) has said.

Item agreed to.

Fabrics, manufactures, wearing apparel and ready-made clothing, composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the alpaca, goat or other like animal, n.e.s.; blankets, bed comforters or counterpanes, flannels, cloths, doeskins, cassimeres, tweeds, coatings, overcoatings and felt cloth, n.e.s., thirty-five per cent ad valorem.

Mr. ROSAMOND. Does not the hon. Minister think it would be well to add a little to that duty? The manufacturers of ready-made clothing have always been accustomed to have a little extra protection, and, under this, it is taken away from them altogether. It would be advisable to add to this somewhat in fairness to the manufacturers of ready-made clothing, who are very large employers of labour.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is very much the same question as the shirt question, which was discussed a little while ago. I must say that I see some difficulty in meeting the views of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Rosamond). I am afraid we cannot increase that rate.

Mr. QUINN. Would it not be well to carry out here the system adopted in some other cases and put on a specific duty in favour of the manufacturer of clothing besides retaining the 35 per cent ad valorem? I think the hon. Minister must realize that with the high rate of duty imposed on the cloth which goes into the manufacture of clothing, it would be absolutely impossible for our wholesale clothiers to go on and continue their business.

Mr. FIELDING.

Hats, caps and bonnets, n.e.s., and hat, cap and bonnet shapes, thirty per cent ad valorem.

Mr. MONK. I wish to represent to the committee that there is an important factory in this line in the town of Cote St. Paul, and those interested in it anticipate that, under the operation of the preferential clause, their business will be wiped out completely. There is a very large number of farmers' families in my constituency who do a great deal of the work for the factories which have been referred to by my hon. friend from Montreal Centre (Mr. Quinn), and who will be very much affected by the reduction. A great number of the wives and daughters of the farmers do work at their homes for these factories, and, I think it is but right that I should call the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance to the fact that he will alienate, not only the farmers, but the wives and daughters of the farmers.

Item agreed to.

Caps, hats, muffs, tippets, capes, coats, cloaks and other manufactures of fur, n.o.p., thirty per cent ad valorem.

Mr. QUINN. Would the hon. Minister add 5 per cent to that item, because when the preferential clause comes into operation, there will be 7½ per cent taken off and the duty then will be altogether insufficient.

Item agreed to.

Bituminous slack coal, such as will pass through a half inch screen, subject to regulations to be made by the Controller of Customs, twenty per cent ad valorem.

Coal, bituminous, round and run of mine, and coal n.e.s., sixty cents per ton of 2,000 pounds.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It will be remembered that in an earlier stage of the session I asked that the coal items be held over. Reference was several times made to a certain statement as to the views of the Government, which was made prior to the opening of the session, and in which we indicated that the policy of the Government in this matter would be to some extent influenced by what might occur in the neighbouring states in relation to the coal trade. I am glad to be able to say that what has since occurred, though it has not gone so far as we might desire, has been in the right direction. A change has been made in the American tariff, and, so far of course as it has made any progress, the change is in the direction which we should all desire to see it made. It will be remembered that in the Dingley Bill, as first proposed, the coal duty was increased to 75 cents per ton, which we regarded as a very unfavourable duty to our trade. I am glad to note that in the Tariff Bill as it stands to-day in the Senate, a change has been made, evidently for the purpose of meeting to some extent the Canadian view of the coal question; and since our American brethren are moving in that direction, we think it is right that we should meet them, and show that we are disposed to carry out the policy which was foreshadowed some time ago. In the American Tariff Bill as it stands to-day, the general rate of duty on coal is 75 cents, but there is a proviso which appears to have been inserted for the particular purpose of meeting the Canadian trade. That proviso declares that the duty on coal shall be 60 cents per ton when imported from any country which imposes a duty of no higher rate. Sixty cents per ton is the Canadian duty to-day, with this exception, that the American duty is upon the long ton of 2,240 pounds, while the Canadian duty is upon the short ton of 2,000 pounds; so that in reality our duty is a little higher than what they propose. We propose that item 175 shall read as follows:—

Coal, bituminous, round and run of mine, and coal n.e.s., 54 cents per ton of 2,000 pounds (being the equivalent of 60 cents per ton of 2,240 pounds); provided that whenever the United States Congress shall reduce the duty on bituminous coal to a sum not exceeding 40 cents per ton of 2,000 pounds, the Governor in Council may, by proclamation, reduce the duty mentioned in this item to 40 cents per ton of 2,000 pounds.

We are not without hope that our American neighbours, having started in the right direction by coming down to our 60 cent duty, and a little below 60 cents, may be disposed to go further; and although it is a subject in which there is some difference of opinion, we do not think that a further reduction of the American duties would be to the advantage of the Canadian coal trade.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the old United States duty?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. To-day it is 40 cents under the Wilson Bill; it was increased by the Dingley Bill to 75 cents, and it stands to-day in the Senate Tariff Bill at 75 cents, with this proviso, that the duty shall be not more than 60 cents when imported from a country which imposes a like duty, a proviso which has clearly been put in to meet the Canadian position. We propose by this item to meet them to that extent by imposing a duty which will be equivalent to the American duty, but which will be expressed in our short term ton at 54 cents per ton. Then, in order to encourage them to go further in well doing, we put in a proviso that if they are prepared at any future time to reduce their duty still further to 40 cents, then we shall have authority, by Order in Council, to reduce our duty to a like figure. Then, with regard to slack coal we propose as follows:—

Bituminous slack coal, such as will pass through a half inch screen, subject to regulations to be made by the Controller of Customs, twenty per cent ad valorem, but not to exceed 13 cents per ton of 2,000 pounds (being the equivalent of 15 cents per ton of 2,240 pounds).

My hon. friend, I think, is aware that in the American tariff there is a similar provision, that that duty on slack coal shall be 15 cents per long ton from any country which imposes no higher duty. We by our tariff to-day of 20 per cent ad valorem, do not impose any higher duty; but in order that we might get the benefit of their reduction, we think it well to express the duty in our tariff in terms which will show that we are meeting them. Therefore, we put in this proviso that the 20 per cent ad valorem shall not exceed 13 cents per ton, which is the equivalent of 15 cents on the long ton. I feel that this is a settlement for the moment at all events, of the coal question, which will be in the direction of the Canadian trade. Though there are, I know, some persons who regard any reduction of our coal duty as a misfortune. I think the gentlemen interested in the coal trade themselves are, the most of them, gradually coming to the conclusion that a reasonable measure of access to the American market will be beneficial to Canadian trade.

Mr. CLARKE. What about anthracite coal? Is there any duty on that?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No. Inasmuch as the Americans have not proceeded with their 75 cents duty as was at first proposed, we do not think it is expedient at present to raise the question of a duty on anthracite. Circumstances might arise, if our American friends were to proceed in the other direction, we might be obliged to take that view, but as they are moving in the right direction, we prefer to meet them in the same spirit.

Mr. CLARKE. There will be no duty on anthracite coal?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We do not propose at present that there shall be any duty on anthracite coal. That is a point which may arise in the future, if our anticipations of American action are not realized.

Mr. FOSTER. On what ground does my hon. friend proceed to make the Canadian tariff? Because this is fixed, the House adjourns next week, our duty on coal is then what the hon. gentleman proposes, if the House ratifies it. But he does not know to-day, has not the least idea, what the United States duty will be when the Tariff Bill is finally passed. The House of Representatives put a certain duty upon coal, the Senate now has been doing its part of the tariff revision, and has practically made a new tariff in many respects. But that is only one branch of the legislature. When that Senate Bill is arranged, then the point comes as to whether the House of Representatives will agree with it. If it does not agree with it, as is very probable, a conference takes place between the two and the tariff is then fixed, but not until that time. They may fix the coal duty at 75 cents, but my hon. friend does not take any power to raise it. He makes reciprocity in coal contingent upon what is the proposal in one branch of the legislature at Washington, but when that branch of the legislature is not omnipotent, and the tariff on coal in the United States is not yet made, and is just as liable to be 75 cents as it is to be 50 or 60 cents, that my hon. friend should then put Canada in a position of giving to the American coal-owners and producers access to our markets at 54 cents per ton, whilst any of our producers who want the American market for coal would have to pay 75 cents, would be manifestly jug-handled and unfair. If, however, the United States do not proceed in the way expected, the hon. gentleman puts us in a position where their products may come into our country at a cheaper rate than our products can go into their country. If the hon. gentleman wants reciprocity in coal with the United States within certain limits, he should fix a maximum limit as well as a minimum limit, so that our duty shall be within certain limits just what the United States put upon our coal, that at least would not have the element of unfairness. But to legislate fixedly in our legislature upon what is only the action of one branch of the legislature in the United States does not seem to be proceeding with prudence.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is just a possibility that what the hon. gentleman says will turn out to be correct, that the Americans might increase their duty. But all our information, and we have taken some pains to get information so far as possible on the subject, leads us to believe that the 60 cent rate which the Senate have now adopted will be adopted by the lower House; and indeed there is a possibility, though I do not dwell much upon that, of even a lower rate being made. But we do not think it is wise to say that the thing is as certain as my hon. friend seems to think it is the other way. We think in all probability, a 60 cent rate or a better one, will be maintained, because the influences which were in favour of a 75 cent rate in the lower House are largely the influences which are now controlling the Senate, and which have virtually, as I understand, agreed to support this 60 cent rate. It would be possible, however, that what the hon. gentleman suggests might occur, and that might lead towards reconsidering the matter at an early day. But I do not think that when the Americans are moving in the right direction on that point, it would be well to assume that they are going back upon it. I think, on the contrary, we have something to gain by saying to them frankly: Now, as you have begun to move in this direction and signified by the action in the Senate your willingness to reduce this rate to 60 cents, we will meet you on the same line. I think it more likely the result will be that they will adhere to their view. If they should not, then the matter will have to be reconsidered. But we think we would serve the best interests of all concerned now by assuming that the step will be adhered to by the Republican party, which now controls both houses.

Mr. FOSTER. I am sorry that I cannot agree with my hon. friend. The Government may have sources of information that possibly we have not, and there is a strong probability, I am willing to acknowledge, that the Senate will be dominant in fixing the tariff, although there is no certainty as my hon. friend will agree. But if my hon. friend wanted to deal in a square and honest way with them instead of going the whole distance, he should simply say: Yes, we are prepared for reciprocity within certain limits, but we are not prepared to give away our market at 54 cents if you put 75 cents on yours. For we are not prepared to give our market up at 54 cents, if they put 75 cents on. So you adopt the practice of grading the duty by Order in Council making the limit as between 54 cents and the higher duty on the short ton corresponding with a possible 75 cent duty on their long ton. It would be saying to the Americans what we all want to say that we are willing to trade with them on equal terms. I do not think we ought to go farther than that. I think that would be taking a fair and honest position, if we were to legislate within the limits of the 75 and the 54 cent rate, taking our short ton in comparison with their long ton.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The duty on coal in the United States has been considerably lower than ours, and I think we have something to gain by showing in the most emphatic and formal way we can on our statute-books that we are disposed to meet them if they want a lower rate than 75 cents. The question of a 75 cent rate of duty has ceased to be a practical one. The 40 cent rate under the Wilson Bill, and the 60 cent rate imposed in the Senate are before us. If our duty were made higher there would be something in the argument of the United States that they have been in a position to deal with us and that we have not been willing to meet them half way, because we have been upholding a 60 cent duty while they had a 40 cent duty.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, but the political complexion has changed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We think that in this particular matter there is something to be gained by the Canadian people meeting the United States in the right spirit, and I think there is a possibility of their meeting us in the same spirit. It is not wise to be too critical and to assume that they do not mean to do that which they seem to be willing to do.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I would be very pleased indeed if I could think that the concession which the Minister of Finance proposes to make is likely to result in any substantial advantage to the Canadian coal owners and so far as my knowledge of the managers of these works goes, they do not anticipate that any advantage will be derived from any attempt to placate the authorities at Washington. So far as the duty on coal is concerned on the bulk and value coming from the United States into Canada as compared with that going from Canada into the United States our duty has been infinitely lower than theirs because the large proportion of the product of the United States coming into this country is hard coal upon which we impose no duty at all. So that it is very far from being the case that Canada is imposing a higher duty than the United States on coal. Our duty on coal is exceedingly small in comparison with theirs. Another point to be kept in mind is the fact that a good deal of coal comes not from the United States but from Scotland and England. That portion of the trade will be benefited in the future by 25 per cent under the reciprocal clause of the tariff so that coal instead of having a duty of 54 cents will only have about 40½ cents coming from Great Britain. In reference to the remarks made by the Minister of Finance as to the advantages to be derived by Canada and Canadian coal owners under concessions to be made by the United States Government, my acquaintance with the coal owners and managers leads me to believe that in so far as the province of Nova Scotia is concerned they do not anticipate any advantage. The fact of the matter is to the best of my knowledge the prices at which soft coal is sold and delivered in the United States to large railway corporations and others is so exceedingly low that it will be impossible for producers of coal in Nova Scotia to take advantage even of an open market in the United States. I have been informed on what I regard as good authority that contracts have been made by railway companies in the United States for the delivery of coal at $2.16 per ton. If that is the case it is absolutely impossible for the Canadian coal producers to get any market whatever in the United States and I am very much afraid that the most that can be expected in Nova Scotia is the benefit that may result to the Dominion Coal Company in Cape Breton and to no other producers. It cannot help the coal miners in Pictou and Cumberland counties. So far as my knowledge goes it would only be of this advantage that the Dominion Coal Company might perhaps be enabled to deliver some small quantities of coal at the seaports in the extreme eastern part of the United States; it will be utterly impossible for them to reach any points inland in the United States where coal is largely consumed.

I think it was rather an unfortunate thing that the Government should have concluded to tie their hands in so far as any legislation in this matter is concerned by the action now proposed. I am sure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) should pay a considerable amount of attention to the fact which has been presented by the ex-Finance Minister who pointed out that it was not at all possible to say what duty the United States might put upon coal. They may in any case put on a duty of 75 cents per ton. In that case as this House is about to prorogue it might be impossible for the Government to take any action to remedy what would be an unfortunate change in the tariff. My hon. friend is not right that it will be better to lose a little for a few months. If the proposal is adopted it will cover a period during which all the coal contracts of the great corporations in Canada involving the purchase of a large amount of coal will be made, and great injury will result to the coal trade in Nova Scotia and other parts of Canada before it is in the power of Parliament to make the matter right. I am sure it would not be difficult to frame a clause so as to provide for that contingency. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) now provides for the contingency of the United States lowering their rate; why not provide for the other contingency of their raising their rate. I am sure that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance realizes how very little is to be gained by the Nova Scotia producers through the introduction of coal into the United States, and if the Nova Scotia producers should lose the Canadian market before Parliament should meet again, the coal interest will suffer a great disadvantage without any possibility of countervailing this whatever. I am alive to the fact that the Government is opposed to placing any duty on anthracite coal, and I may say that our miners in Nova Scotia will be disappointed at this determination of the Government, because I have heard it argued that a duty on anthracite coal would be paid not by the people of Canada but by the producers in the United States. This duty would be a great advantage to the coal producers of Nova Scotia and it seems to me that a strong case can be made out in support of the contention that the duty would not be paid by the consumer in Canada but by those great competing corporations in the United States who control the prices of anthracite and who can raise them far more than the amount of a 50 cent duty if it suits them to do so. I am sure it would not result in any injury to Canada if a duty on anthracite coal were imposed. But that would be too much to ask because it would be asking the Government to go beyond the measure of protection given by the late Government on coal. I am, however, justified in asking that the present amount of protection be retained. I am sure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) knows how much difficulty is experienced by the coal managers of Nova Scotia in giving employment to the men who mine the coal for a sufficient number of days in the week to enable the population of our villages to live in comfort. It is a hard thing for the coal owners to do anything at all; they have not been realizing profits and they find it impossible to give employment to the mining population to enable them to live in comfort. I would urge my hon. friend at least, in drafting his resolution, to so prepare it, as to guard against any possibility of the United States either raising their tariff or leaving it at a point as high as it is at present.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend is mistaken when, in the closing words of his remarks, which are in excellent taste, coming as they do from the representative of a coal county, he assumes the probability of the Americans raising their duty above the 60 cents. He overlooks the fact that the Americans, for many years have had their duty much below ours.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I refer to the 60-cent rate which was first suggested.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the American duty were now and had been for some time 75 cents, there might have been some force in my hon. friend's argument; but inasmuch as it has been for some time 40 cents, considerably below ours, we have been placed at a disadvantage in the discussion of the coal duty at Washington. Where my hon. friend and I disagree is as to the value which the American market is to the coal trade. That has been a vexed question in the past. I know that many coal miners have not taken the view that the American market was of much consequence to them; but I think there is a growing feeling among them that it is of value to them. My hon. friend says that one company only would obtain any advantage from that market. That company, however, the Dominion Coal Company, is the largest in Nova Scotia. It operates a number of mines, and its operations are very extensive; and if it could obtain access to the American market, it would be a very important advantage to that company. But one thing my hon. friend has entirely overlooked, and I ask him to consider it. It is true, the owners of the mines in his own county of Pictou have not generally regarded the American market as of much value to them, and they still may maintain that view, though I think some of them are coming to the view that it is of value to them in an indirect way. He says that to-day it is hard to get employment for our coal miners. That is true. Why? Because we have been mining coal for the limited market of the Dominion of Canada. Because we have more coal output in the province of Nova Scotia than we can find a market for; and if we are to go in that way, we shall often have hard times for our miners. We shall have short periods of prosperity, followed by periods of depression; whereas, if we could get access to the American market, through the influence of the large interest that wants our coal, not to please us, but to please themselves, we would have some hope of developing the coal mines of Nova Scotia, and affording a larger measure of employment to the people than we can hope to afford so long as we confine ourselves to the limited market of Canada. That great corporation, the Dominion Coal Company, have been reaching out for the American market, and making a struggle which a weak company could not do; and if it secured an outlet there for the product of its mines, it would be in a smaller degree a competitor of the other coal miners at home; and then the Pictou and Cumberland mines would have a better chance of competing in the home market. But if this great, powerful company has no access to the American market, it is going to compete with the other companies for the coal trade of Montreal, which is the principal market at present. The competition of this company in the only market open to them is going to be severe, and the mining companies to which my hon. friend has referred have every interest in striving to get access to the American market for our coal, because they will, to that extent, diminish the competition that occurs at the present time at Montreal, and the miners who do not expect to ship coal to the States are beginning to see that point. If we assume, then, that it is desirable to get access to the American market, look at the position which we have occupied for some years past. The Americans have brought the duty down to 40 cents, and we have had the duty at 60 cents, and whenever any one has proposed that we should be given better terms in the American market, the answer has been made, "Your duty is above ours, and you will have to meet us on even terms." I think we ought at once to bring down our coal duty to the point at which they propose to fix theirs. They do not propose to continue it at 40 per cent, and we do not propose to bring ours down to that figure. But, in the new tariff Bill it is fixed at 60 cents, and I think that we would make a mistake in the interest of the coal producers of Nova Scotia and of British Columbia, both of which have to be considered in this House, if we did not take power to fix our duty as now proposed. As long as they move in the direction of a reduction, let us meet them, and when they cease to move in that direction, then it will be time enough for us to revise our judgment.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). The Government are putting it out of their power to revise their judgment by their operations of this year. I do not think there would be any difficulty in the Finance Minister arranging his motion so as to provide for that contingency. There is a good deal in what the hon. gentleman says about the stress of the home competition being increased if the Dominion Coal Company are shut out of the American market; but the action of the United States is in that direction, because they are raising the duty 50 per cent, even if they adopt the lower rate of 60 cents instead of 75 cents. So that all the circumstances of the case are precisely those that will increase the competition in the Canadian market; and now is the time when that market should be carefully conserved for the Nova Scotia and British Columbia producers. But just in the face of the Dominion Coal Company being shut out of the American market, the hon. gentleman proposes to take away the protection they at present have, and therefore the whole stress of his argument tells against his own proposition.

Mr. ELLIS. Of course, we could not expect the Minister of Finance to take the duty off coal altogether, but if he had done so he would have no doubt met the public opinion of the province from which I come better than he could by many other things he has in his tariff. The province of New Brunswick wants free coal. We get some relief under the operation of the preferential clause so far as it applies to English coal; but, unfortunately, there are not now so many vessels that bring coal for ballast as formerly, steamers finding it more convenient to carry water ballast, and the relief from that direction is not so great as it might be supposed to be. In our province we find matters rather hard, between the oil tax and the flour tax for the benefit of Ontario, and the coal tax for the benefit of Nova Scotia. The one redeeming feature in the tariff which Sir Charles Tupper brought down when he proposed the iron duties was the relief he gave from the duty on anthracite coal from the United States, and it is utterly absurd for my hon. friend to say that at any time the American producer of coal pays the duty. It is undoubtedly the consumer of coal who pays the duty in the end. One of the last things I would desire to see would be a duty on anthracite coal, which goes so largely into consumption, particularly in the province from which I come, for the benefit of the coal producers of Nova Scotia.

Mr. HENDERSON. I sent the hon. Controller of Customs a memo. respecting item 497, asking him to amend it by inserting the word quebracho in the sixth line. It is a tanning extract used in the tanning of light leather and has come into use during the past two years. It would be used to a much larger extent if placed on the free list. Nearly all those extracts are already on the free list, and it would simplify the tariff by placing this one along with the rest.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend handed me a memo. on the subject which unfortunately I have mislaid, but I shall look into it and bring the matter up again.

Mr. ROSAMOND. I should also like to call the attention of the hon. Minister to item 497. In the old tariff there was a provision placing "patent prepared dyes" on the free list, which I see has been omitted from this item. I would ask the hon. Minister to include that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I shall look it up.

Mr. ROSAMOND. The hon. gentleman will find it in item 572 of the old tariff. There is another item to which I would like to call his attention, and that is item No. 538. In the old tariff, the corresponding clause reads: "Olive oil for manufacturing purposes," but in item 538 of this tariff it reads: "Olive oil for manufacturing soap." That would prevent its being used for other purposes in manufacturing, such as combing wool for making worsted tops. It has been on the free list up to the present, and I think it should remain on the free list.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I shall look into it.

Mr. ROSAMOND. I would also call the hon. gentleman's attention to another item. In the old free list, acids used for medicinal, chemical or manufacturing purposes, not otherwise specially provided for, were included. I do not know whether this was omitted intentionally or not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It was left out intentionally because it was subject to much abuse.

Committee rose and reported progress.

I. C. R.—EXTENSION TO MONTREAL.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I beg to lay on the Table copies of Order in Council and reports in connection with the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. The leader of the House (Sir Richard Cartwright) tells me that the late Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) asked to have brought down a copy of a report which he said had been furnished with respect to this same subject, the taking over of the Drummond County Railway and the valuing of the road, during his administration. I have communicated with the Deputy Minister, who informs me that he made no such report whatever. The only reports that he made on the subject he made from time to time for the purpose of entitling the Government to the payment of subsidies which were being earned by it under the Subsidy Acts. Beyond that, the Deputy Minister tells me, he furnished to the ex-Minister when the late Government were considering this same subject, an estimate of the cost or value of the Drummond County Railway, and these are the only reports or statements which were furnished by him to the late Government.

Mr. FOSTER. Were any reports made by an engineer under the instructions of the department, though not made by the Deputy Minister?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I did not ask him with regard to that, though I am almost inclined to think there were none. But I was informed that the ex-Minister of Railways stated that the report was from the Deputy Minister himself and, that being my information, my question was only directed to that point.

DISMISSALS ON THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I also desire, Mr. Speaker, to lay upon the Table a copy of the telegram sent by myself to the General Manager of the Intercolonial at Moncton, asking him to furnish me with a list of those dismissed on the Intercolonial Railway. It will be remembered that I gave a statement from recollection, but I have the despatch now, and I produce it, together with the general manager's reply and the list furnished by him.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 137) respecting trials by jury in certain cases in the North-west Territories—from the Senate.—(Mr. Davies.)

Bill (No. 138) further to amend the Criminal Code of 1882—from the Senate.—(Mr. Davies.)

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I had intended to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) to go on a little further but, on consideration, I think we cannot, in conscience, seek to keep him longer. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the hon. leader of the House tell us what will be taken up tomorrow?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. In the morning probably the fast line service, and, perhaps, any other Bills that want a stage. Then, if, as I hope, we get through these promptly, we shall probably go on with the Supplementary Estimates. In the afternoon probably the Bill for the extension of the Intercolonial to Montreal will be taken up, and any other subjects that the hon. gentleman will allow us to proceed with.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 11.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 16th June, 1897.

PRAYERS.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 139) further to amend the Petroleum Inspection Act.—(Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière.)

Bill (No. 140) further to amend the Act respecting Judges of the Provincial Courts.—(Mr. Davies.)

RAILWAY RATES AND TOLLS.

Mr. HENDERSON asked:

1. What are the general rates and tolls of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, west bound, from the city of Toronto, in the province of Ontario, to the city of Winnipeg, in the province of Manitoba, as now charged or as contained in its present freight tariff, whichever rates are now the lowest, for carloads or otherwise, upon the classes of merchandise hereinafter mentioned, whether the shipment be by all rail line or by lake and rail: Upon all green and fresh fruits; coal oil; cordage and binder twine; agricultural implements of all kinds, set up or in parts; iron, including bar, band, Canada plates, galvanized sheet, pipe, pipe-fittings, nails, spikes and horse shoes; all kinds of wire; window glass; paper for building and roofing purposes; roofing felt, box and packing; paints of all kinds and oils; live stock; wooden-ware; household furniture?

2. What are the said company's rates and tolls on grain and flour, respectively, east bound, from said city of Winnipeg to said city of Toronto by all rail line or by lake and rail?

3. Is it the intention of the Government to stipulate in any agreement with said company for the construction of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway for special or reduced rates and tolls on any other articles of merchandise than those named in questions one and two; as, for example, hides and skins, eastbound, and manufactures of leather westbound?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I am not in a position to explain to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) as to what the general rates and tolls on the Canadian Pacific Railway, west bound, are, but I can, as I suppose the hon. gentleman can, procure a tariff schedule and hand it to him; nor can I say what the companies' present rates and tolls are on grain and flour, respectively, east bound from the city of Winnipeg. Question No. 3: It is not the intention of the Government to include in the agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway any other articles or merchandise than those named in the agreement of which notice has already been given.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to rise to make a personal explanation. A few days ago, speaking about the Quebec bridge in the House, I said that the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) in a moment of bad humour against his leader had said at Quebec, "no bridge, no vote." The hon. gentleman denied the assertion and asked me to give my authority. I said at the time that this had been reported in the public press and he also denied that, I said that I had read that somewhere and to-day I give to the House proof of my statement. I referred to a statement made in the Quebec House on the 21st March, 1890, by the Hon. L. J. Pelletier, ex-Attorney General of Quebec, in the presence of the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) who was sitting as the member for Quebec County in the House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I expect from the tone of the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Choquette) that he will conclude with a motion.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. No.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then I object to a discussion of this kind being raised on the pretext of a personal explanation.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am afraid from what I gathered of his remarks that any question such as is raised by the hon. member (Mr. Choquette) would lead to a discussion and so, therefore, I think the hon. gentleman had better put himself in order by concluding with a motion.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. It was not my intention to conclude with a motion. I made an assertion here which was denied and I desire to put the proof before the House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We want to know before he proceeds whether he will conclude with a motion.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It would not be fair to me if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Choquette) did not conclude with a motion, because he would be putting something before the House to which I could not reply.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member (Mr. Choquette) will conclude with a motion.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I do not wish to raise a debate.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, chair; order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman will understand that upon the Orders of the Day being called, there is no more parliamentary right for any speech to be made without a motion being before us than at any other time. But a practice has grown up in this House of introducing any important public question that urgently requires an answer from the Government, or a personal explanation may be in order at any time, but a personal explanation must be an explanation of what an hon. gentleman has said himself, not what anybody else has said, and therefore I think in anything of that kind which involves discussion or a reply should not be brought up in this way, but if the hon. gentleman wishes to bring it up, and wishes to move the adjournment of the House, he is at liberty to do so.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I wish to put the House in possession of—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. member had better adopt my suggestion.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I will not make a motion.

FISHERY INSPECTION.

Mr. CLANCY asked:

Has Henry Linley, of Cedar Springs, in the county of Kent, fishery inspector, been dismissed? If so, has his successor been appointed, and what is his salary or remuneration?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). The answer to question 1 is, yes. The answer to question 2 is, yes; at a salary of $125 per annum.

BUOY SERVICE AT MABOU HARBOUR.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (for Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) asked:

1. Were tenders invited shortly before the local general elections in Nova Scotia, in April last, for the buoy service at Mabou Harbour?

2. If so, did the lowest tenderer refuse to accept the contract?

3. Was the next tenderer asked to perform the contract, or did he express his readiness to accept it?

4. If the next tenderer signified his willingness to do the work, was his offer accepted, and if not, why not?

5. When were new tenders invited?

6. To whom were blank forms of tender distributed?

7. What was the amount finally accepted for the work, and who was the successful tenderer?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). The answer to the first question is: Post bills were sent out on the 8th April last inviting tenders up to the 25th of April for this buoy service.

No. 2. Yes. On the 4th of May the harbour master, by direction, called upon the person whose tender was the lowest to place the buoys, but he did not begin the work. The contract was sent him to sign. No. 3. Yes, but reply not received until it was decided to call for new tenders. No. 4. Answered by former question. No. 5. Bills sent out 2nd June to 12th June. No. 6. To harbour master for distribution and posting, when the first poster was sent out. No. 7. $20 per annum. Edward Doyle.

FISHING ON RIVER MATANE.

Mr. Fiset asked :

1. Whether the Government has leased for rod-fishing, during the summer season, that part of the River Matane which is affected by the tide ?

2. If so, to whom has the river been leased, for how many years and on what conditions, and is it the intention of the Government to deprive the riparian proprietors, on that part of the river, of their right to fish with rod and line in front of their own land ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). 1. Yes. 2. Walter Cassels, for nine years from 1st January, 1894, on payment of an annual rental of $100, and to efficiently guard and protect the river at his own expense, also to build and maintain in the dam across said river (known as Price's dam) an efficient fishway. Mr. Cassels having the exclusive right of fishing under his lease, the Government is unable to grant the right of fishing to riparian proprietors.

ONTARIO APPEALS TO SUPREME COURT.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick) moved second reading of Bill (No. 131) respecting the Supreme Court of Ontario and the judges thereof.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman explain this Bill ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The Bill has for its object to restrict the appeals to the Supreme Court except in certain specified cases arising in the province of Ontario. A Bill similar in terms was introduced in the Ontario legislature, but as it was beyond the power of the province of Ontario to regulate appeals to the Supreme Court of Canada, this Bill is introduced to give effect to that which was done in the province of Ontario.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is nothing in this Bill which will affect anything sub judice ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No. It is a simple matter of procedure, and will therefore apply only to future cases.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This Bill strikes me as one of great importance. Of course, it comes with very great authority to this House, as it affects the province of

Mr. DAVIES.

Ontario simply, and is introduced by the Minister of Justice (Sir Oliver Mowat). But the effect of this Bill is to introduce a very important change into the law affecting appeals from the greatest province of the Dominion, that is, to provide that no appeal shall lie from the Court of Appeal of Ontario to the Supreme Court of Canada except in certain cases. My impression is that there have been important cases—my hon. friend will correct me if I am wrong—in which the Court of Appeal of Ontario has been unanimous, and the judgment of that court has been reversed by the Supreme Court of Canada. If that be the case, the House will see that it is a very serious matter to deprive, not individuals, but the whole population of Ontario, of the right of an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, which has been established and is sustained at great expense to this country. The excepted cases, in which appeals are allowed, are : where the title to real estate or some interest therein is in question ; where the validity of a patent is affected ; where the matter in controversy exceeds the sum of $1,000, exclusive of costs. While these large interests are protected, the Bill is certainly likely to curtail the rights now enjoyed by the people of Ontario to have a judgment of the Supreme Court in matters which may be of vital consequence to them, though not exceeding $1,000. There is already a great protection against unnecessary and ill-founded appeals to the Supreme Court in cases involving smaller amounts than $1,000, because the parties would necessarily have to pay a large amount of costs. I do not propose to say more, as this is a legal matter ; but it strikes me as a very radical change in the administration of justice in Canada. We have established a Supreme Court to which the humblest citizen has an equal right with the most wealthy and powerful to have the advantage of an appeal, if they so desire and have the means of carrying it on, and this Bill would seem in a large number of cases to limit the right now enjoyed by the people.

Mr. TISDALE. As I understand this Bill, in an election case, for instance, we could not appeal to the Supreme Court from the Court of Appeal of Ontario without the consent of the latter court.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Is there any possibility of such a thing as that ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No. There is a specific tribunal appointed under the election law.

Mr. TISDALE. I apprehend that an appeal could be taken direct from the Superior Court of Ontario to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Could it get to the Court of Appeal in Ontario ?

Mr. TISDALE. I cannot say. I am merely raising the question. I am not as conversant with the practice of the courts as I formerly was, not having paid attention to the changes in the procedure; but that is one of the questions that might be raised. The Bill provides that no appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court except in four cases, namely, where the title of real estate or some interest therein is in question; where the validity of a patent is affected; where the matter in controversy exceeds the value of $1,000 exclusive of costs; where the matter relates to the taking of an annual or other rent, customary or duty or fee, or a like demand of a general or public nature affecting future rights, and in other cases, where the special leave of the Court of Appeal for Ontario or of the Supreme Court of Canada to appeal is granted. I am not prepared to say that it is an unreasonable proposition to fix a limit in amount of money, but where there are questions of principle involved, the right to appeal should not be limited by any amount of money, as questions of principle are beyond all questions of money. There must be many questions of principles outside these four exceptions I have mentioned. It is a principle of British law and Canadian law that in matters of principle there should be no limit to the right to appeal to the highest tribunal possible, and as far as my memory goes, this is the first attempt made to put in the control of the court of appeal the right to appeal from the decision of that court in matters of principle. I do not say that there is no need of limiting appeals, but we should be careful how we run the risk, to use the mildest expression, of curtailing our federal rights by making the right of appeal to the Supreme Court, which is a federal court, dependent on the consent of the appeal court of the province. We might, thus be making our right of appeal on a question of principle arising between the province and the Dominion dependent on consent of the appeal court of the province.

Mr. McNEILL. This is unquestionably a very grave matter, and I am quite sure the gravity of it justifies the criticisms that have been passed on the measure. It seems to me that after all we need not very much fear doing what is suggested, because, as I understand it,—and if I am wrong my hon. friend the Solicitor General will correct me—the principle of the Bill had been accepted by the Ontario legislature, and is only not the law in Ontario because it was found that the Ontario legislature had not the power to give effect to the wishes of the representatives of that province.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). There was a case before the Supreme Court in which that court declared that the law passed by the Ontario legislature was ultra vires.

Mr. McNEILL. Then I understand we are simply giving effect to the desires and wishes of the representatives of the people of Ontario. Was there any substantial opposition to the measure in the provincial legislature?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I know nothing of what took place in the provincial legislature, but I had a case in which the Supreme Court declared the legislation of Ontario in this respect was ultra vires.

Mr. McNEILL. It was at all events the desire of the representatives of the people in that legislature, and we must remember that after all the public, especially those who are not very affluent members of the commonwealth, require legislation of this kind very much. It is no doubt a very serious matter to interfere with the right of appeal from one point of view, but from another point of view it is very important to protect litigants from vexatious appeals—appeals which are carried by wealthy corporations and which often make it impossible for private individuals to vindicate their rights before the courts at all. The very fact that such an appeal is hanging over a litigant often makes it impossible for him to vindicate his just rights in the courts. It is unquestionably from this point of view I judge that this legislation has been approved by the provincial legislature, and that we have been asked to do for the province what its own legislature was unable to do, that is to say, give effect to the wishes of the people of that province.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It may be proper for me to state that, so far as election cases are concerned, arising out of federal elections, they naturally would be governed by our own statutes, and the courts vested with the trial of these election matters are by that fact alone federal courts. It has been laid down that provincial courts, quoad election cases are federal courts, and an appeal lies from these courts to the Supreme Court. I would like to point out to my hon. friend that in Ontario alone, of all the provinces of the Dominion, the right of appeal to the Supreme Court is unlimited. In all the other provinces, the appeals are limited according to the amount involved. In the province of Quebec, there is no appeal to the Supreme Court in any case in which the amount involved does not exceed $2,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Are there many appeals from Ontario?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I understand there are a great many.

Mr. TISDALE. I do not question that point and quite concur in the idea of the $1,000 limit, but what I object to is mixing all these other things in a blanket, as it were.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There will be right of appeal to the Supreme Court, under this Bill, in all cases in which the amount involved exceeds $1,000. In all other cases involving future rights, titles to land, rights of the Crown and anything of that sort, the right of appeal will exist, independent of the amount involved, and in every case without exception an appeal may be granted by the court from whose decision the appeal is desired.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). As my hon. friend has properly said, the raison d'être of this measure lies in the fact that the Ontario legislature has abolished intermediate appeals. Appeals now go from the divisional court to the court of appeal, and the consequence is there is an enormous number of trivial cases brought before the Appeal Court of Ontario. This Bill does not limit the right of appeal from the divisional court, from a final judgment of any court in Ontario, but it only limits the right of appeal from the Appeal Court of Ontario.

Mr. TISDALE. I have lost track of the procedure. My hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Lount) would, no doubt, be able to inform us on that point. My recollection is that, at one time, at all events, when I was not so rusty upon the procedure as I am now, an appeal had first to be taken to the Court of Appeal before you could go to the Supreme Court. Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lount) may remember how that is. My impression is that we must still go to the Court of Appeal. Therefore, in many matters of principle there is danger here.

Mr. SPEAKER. Hon. members, I trust, will remember that we are not yet in the Committee of the Whole. I would suggest that it would be better to go into Committee of the Whole and have this discussion there—it will be more regular.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Before we go into Committee of the Whole, I would call the attention of the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) to an anomaly which exists in the law of the province of Quebec. No appeal can be taken from the Court of Queen's Bench to the Supreme Court in any case where the amount demanded does not exceed $2,000; but by an amendment made in the law some years ago, appeals were permitted from the Court of Review of the province of Quebec, and, strangely enough, the amount in that case is not the same as when the appeal comes from the Court of Queen's Bench. I think the amendment was 54 and 55 Victoria, chapter 25. It provides that the amount in any case of appeal shall be not less than £500 sterling, when it comes from the Court of Review. I do not see any reason why this difference should exist between a case coming from the Court of Review and a case coming from the Court of Queen's Bench. Probably this would be the time to bring this matter before the House so as to amend the law and make the amount the same in either case. I remember the case of Couture versus Bouchard, brought to the Supreme Court, on an appeal from the Court of Review, in which the amount involved was $2,006. If the appeal had come from the Court of Queen's Bench, the amount would have been large enough to allow the appeal to the Supreme Court, but coming from the Court of Review, as it was not £500 sterling, the appeal was not allowed. This should be remedied.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That matter will be considered hereafter. The difficulty referred to arose from a misunderstanding on the part of those who drew the Bill. They evidently confused the appeal to the Privy Council with the appeal to the Supreme Court. This Bill is simply to reenact what has already been passed by the legislature of Ontario.

Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not propose to occupy the time of the committee at any length, but I have asked a question which I think, probably, the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Lount), who is a member of the bar, can answer, and which, I think, is of interest to the House. I have raised the point that this proposed law would deprive the people of the province of Ontario of a right which they now enjoy, and of which, as the Solicitor General has shown, they avail themselves of to a very large extent. If this Bill passes, a large number of appeals to the Supreme Court of Canada will be shut off. The answer is that this applies to the province of Ontario, and that the legislature of Ontario have already passed a similar law which was found to be ultra vires and, therefore, they are obliged to come here. Now, I would not like to be bound to hold that as a satisfactory answer, because the legislature of Ontario have done a good many things that I think they ought not to have done, things to which there was grave objection. What I ask is whether there was any substantial opposition to the adoption of this law in the legislature of Ontario on the part of any considerable number of the representatives of the people. If there was not, that would go a great way with me. But if the law was carried by a majority against the protests of a number of representatives of the people, I should be disposed to give great weight to that fact.

Mr. LOUNT. In partial answer to the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), I may say that this Bill is the embodiment of what might be called the best legal talent in Ontario. The benchers of the law society met and considered very carefully all matters which related to the proposals embodied in this Bill. I am not aware to what extent there was opposition to this Bill in the Ontario legislature, but I have not heard, and I do not remember seeing in the newspaper reports that there was any opposition.

Mr. BRITTON. It is necessary, apparently, that there should be some limit to the amount in which appeal can be allowed from the Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court. Whatever that amount may be, it must be arbitrarily fixed. It has been thought by those who have considered the matter that $1,000, exclusive of interest, would be a fair and proper amount as a minimum in a case in which appeal was allowed to the Supreme Court. Apart from that question, I wish to point out that this Bill does not, apparently, deprive any considerable class of their right to go as far as they like, because hon. gentlemen will see that there may be an appeal to the Supreme Court :

(a.) Where the title to real estate or some interest therein is in question ;

(b.) Where the validity of a patent is affected ;

(c.) Where the matter in controversy in the appeal exceeds the sum or value of one thousand dollars, exclusive of costs ;

(d.) Where the matter in question relates to the taking of an annual or other rent, customary or other duty or fee, or a like demand of a general or public nature affecting future rights ;

(e.) In other cases where the special leave of the Court of Appeal for Ontario or of the Supreme Court of Canada to appeal to such last mentioned court is granted.

This takes in all cases of frontage taxes upon lands for local improvements in cities and towns, and also in case of drainage in townships, and all similar questions. It will be observed, also, that it allows an appeal in all cases where permission is granted by the Court of Appeal. If I understood the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) aright, he said that it was unprecedented to leave the discretion as to whether there should be an appeal to the court whose decision was appealed from. Any objection of that kind is obviated, because the Bill allows the Supreme Court also to grant permission to appeal. So, it seems to provide for almost every possible case that may arise—that is if you once determine that appeal shall not be allowed in an amount under $1,000, and that is the only question that is debatable. I know one case in which unanimous decision of the Court of Appeal was overruled by the Supreme Court. I know one case which has been cited with a good deal of comment in which, in an Ontario matter, all the judges of the province of Ontario who pronounced upon it, and one of the judges of the Supreme Court were on one side and judges outside of the province of Ontario on the other side. And yet that decision—of course, as it was a decision of the court of last resort—fixed the law under an Ontario statute and in a matter relating to property in Ontario. That is, of course, an anomaly, and I do not think that there can be any argument founded on the fact that in some cases the decision of the Supreme Court may overrule the unanimous decision of the Court of Appeal. Now, one other point. As the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Lount) said, this matter was referred to the law society to get their opinion on legislation of this kind. I do not remember the precise terms of the Ontario statute. I assume that what the hon. member for Centre Toronto says is correct. I did not know that this matter was coming up and, therefore, did not look into it. Assuming, though, that the Ontario statute is exactly the same as this, that matter was considered by the benchers, and they thought that the limitation of appeals to the Supreme Court to $1,000 and upwards was right, and, on the other point, they thought, as I now have expressed it, that it was better to limit the right of appeal as is provided in the statute.

Mr. CASGRAIN. There has been a good deal of difficulty in interpreting this clause in the Supreme Court as regards the province of Quebec, because it was a question whether the amount demanded was the amount which should decide the jurisdiction of the court, or the amount of the judgment in the lower court. For instance, where an action for $10,000 damages is taken out, and the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench from which the appeal was brought, was only for $100, it was in several cases decided that there was no appeal. But since then the law, I think, has been amended so as to make the amount demanded decide the jurisdiction of the court. Of course the question of interpretation may arise upon these words, but if the wording of the clause was changed to mean the amount demanded, then there could be no difficulty in the interpretation.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think the section of the statute originally included the amount in controversy.

Mr. BRITTON. That is an important point, because it has either been lately decided in Ontario, or it is sub judice now. A case comes up in this way : Action is brought for $1,000 damages, an amount, say, of $500 is recovered, and the judgment would go for $500. But the plaintiff claims a much larger sum than that, and still the judgment goes for the $500. As between that and the $1,000, there is really only $500 in controversy. So it is a question as to whether the amount actually in controversy at the time of the appeal, is to govern, or whether the amount claimed by the plaintiff is to govern ; and that ought to be settled in some way.

Mr. TISDALE. I see great objection to changing the phraseology. In any case people would always claim damages to a large enough amount if they had a desire for litigation. I am strongly in favour of shutting off appeals where it is simply a money matter, and $1,000 I think is quite a reasonable amount. I am glad to hear what fell from the lips of the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Lount) that this matter had been considered by the Law Society of Ontario, because if they have approved of it, that would satisfy me. No doubt that body is the most representative that could be got. I think if you do not adopt this wording, you would leave an opening for doubt and trouble.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There have been rulings of the Supreme Court holding that the amount in controversy means the amount demanded. But in order to put the point beyond dispute, so far as Quebec is concerned, I suggest that we add the following as a subsection :—

Whenever the right to appeal is dependent upon the amount in dispute, such amount should be understood to be that demanded and not that recovered, if they are different.

Mr. FRASER. I think it should be the reverse, in order to stop appeals, and that it should be the amount recovered instead of the amount demanded.

Mr. SPROULE. It is all in the hands of the lawyers now, and if they wish to continue the litigation they will advise their clients to put the amount high enough so that there may always be an appeal. I agree with the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) that it would be a much fairer thing to say the award of the court was the amount upon which the appeal should be made, instead of the amount claimed.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I have the greatest possible reluctance to interfere among my learned friends. My experience of the law has been that of a litigant, and I think it would be greatly for the benefit of the great majority of the people of Canada to have as few appeals as possible ; and I am in favour of limiting the power of appeals—speaking simply in my individual capacity.

Mr. SPROULE. Then if we adopted the other wording and provide that it is the judgment of the court below that regulates the amount, it would be much better, because it would shut off a great many appeals.

Mr. CASGRAIN. That would not be fair for the plaintiff. I think the amendment that was introduced here in 1891 was the result of many years' experience in litigation before the Supreme Court. It was the result of a great deal of discussion, and was passed by the House unanimously, not only by the lawyers, but also with the consent of those unfortunate people who have to come to lawyers for advice, and sometimes to pay costs.

Bill reported.

FAST ATLANTIC SS. SERVICE.

The House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed resolution, page 3976, declaring it expedient that the fast line contract be ratified and confirmed.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Before this debate is proceeded with I would like to state to the House that I accidentally omitted one matter of considerable importance. Messrs. Petersen, Tate & Co. agreed besides the stipulation contained in the contract that they would establish a freight service of vessels of speed and capacity, and one condition of this freight service was that in the summer season they would go to Montreal and in the winter season they would go to whichever of the ports, Halifax or St. John, was not selected by the contractors for the fast service.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I beg to ask the hon. gentleman what the speed of these boats he speaks of is to be ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They will be not less than the Beaver Line of speed and probably considerably more.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What is that ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That is an average speed of 11 knots an hour ; that is for freight service, you will understand.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). Mr. Speaker, when you left the Chair yesterday I was reading an extract from Mr. Sandford Fleming's pamphlet on this question and I ask that I may be allowed to finish that extract. As I said the other day, both the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) and his friends are in favour of this and that being the case of course the Government will have the support from the other side of the House, so that nothing I can say will induce the Government to take any other course. Having expressed my objection as I have done I will content myself with concluding the extract that I was reading the other day. I may only further say that had I any encouragement that the Government would in any way deal with this matter I could have furnished them with a larger number of facts and figures to convince them of the inapplicability of the fast line service to the St. Lawrence route, but being convinced as I am that the Government and most of their supporters are in favour of this project I shall not detain the House at this late stage of the session by continuing the debate any longer than by simply reading the balance of the extract that I commenced the other day. Mr. Fleming proceeds :

With respect to all that has appeared in the press on this subject, I can only remark that I have consulted many experienced men, the commanders of mail steamships and others, and I have read everything published which I have been able to obtain, but I have seen nothing not in accord with the facts I have submitted. I will add, that no one would more truly rejoice than myself, if the investigation of the facts led to different conclusions. I repeat the main conclusions to which I conceive these irresistibly lead :

1. That our great waterway, the St. Lawrence, will always be employed to the greatest advantage in the conveyance of staple products and all ordinary merchandise at the lowest possible rates ; and that to secure low rates the products must be carried on steamships of moderate speed. 2 That any attempt to establish on the St. Lawrence route, now followed, a line of trans-Atlantic steamships to rival those running to and from New York, must result in disappointment. 3. That if we desire to establish such a fast line successfully, the steamships must arrive at and take their departure from one of our Atlantic seaports.

I referred to the advantages and disadvantages of several ocean ports in the maritime provinces, and mentioned those which seemed to be entitled to the preference ; but the gravamen of my offence is, in having pointed out, as mildly as possible, that steamships could not run regularly at great speed with ordinary safety between Montreal or Quebec and the United Kingdom by the ordinary route followed.

These are the conclusions arrived at, Mr. Speaker, by a gentleman well qualified to judge of the feasibility of the St. Lawrence route and I am therefore fully convinced that the statement that I have already made cannot be refuted, that the St. Lawrence route is unsuitable for a 20-knot service. This matter was taken up some time ago by some parties as a pure speculation and I will simply read one extract from an article sent to the Toronto "Globe" by a correspondent on the 14th of August, 1896, when this matter was before the public before :

The agitation for a fast Atlantic service was originally started by speculators, who, for their own personal ends, asked the Government of Canada to endorse their scheme, so that they would be able to float it in Great Britain. Sir Charles Tupper, under the impression that the fast line was a drawing card in the country and would help them in the general elections, adopted this scheme as a Government measure, but the fast line was voted down, along with the other extravagant measures proposed by the Conservative party. Let our present Government learn wisdom from the past and ignore all such schemes, and let there be an end to extravagance, at least until the country has had an opportunity to recover from the enormous burdens placed upon it by the lavish expenditures incurred by Sir Charles Tupper and his followers.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wood, Hamilton) the date of that article ?

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). Yes. August 14th, 1896.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think if the hon. gentleman will search the files of the "Globe" he will find one of the strongest articles that paper has ever published in favour of the fast line service.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). If it would not be taking up the time of the House I could read an article published in the "Globe" on the following day of a column and a half in length in the strongest language denouncing the whole scheme and pointing out that we could never compete with a fast line service from Chicago by way of New York. The railway carriage necessary to carry on the business between Chicago and the Atlantic ports in Great Britain was so much greater than by New York that it was an utter impossibility to compete with that port. Therefore if the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) will take the trouble to go to the files of August 15th, 1896, he will find there the statement that I have outlined, and if any other hon. gentlemen have anything to say upon this question I will furnish them with the papers for the hon. gentleman's (Sir Charles Tupper's) information which will verify the statement I have already made.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It recanted since.

Mr. ELLIS. I do not propose to say very much upon this question except to emphasize the opinion which I expressed last year in regard to it. I have to congratulate the Government upon the fact that it has been enabled to provide for a service at a less expense than the first amount, or rather than the amount last voted, $750,000. But I do remember very well when the original proposition was made to vote $500,000 to the project, that it appeared to me then that the Liberal party was as a party opposed to this very large expenditure, and I remember distinctly that the leader of the Opposition then and the Premier now introduced a resolution in the House or in the committee. I have forgotten which, expressing disapprobation of the proceeding because of the lack of information which then prevailed. I have to congratulate the Government on the other hand that they have carried out the pledge made by the preceding Government in reference to the port of St. John to give that port an opportunity to compete with Halifax as to which port for the winter terminus the contractor shall select. But even were the port of St. John selected as the winter terminus I would hesitate as to the advisability of spending such a large sum of money for this service. In other words, I retain the opinion which I think the Liberal party itself held in 1889. I believe that the country can employ $500,000 to better advantage than upon this line which will enter into competition with the port of New York and to great disadvantage as compared with the port of New York. However, I see that it is a hopeless case, for the now Opposition, having, when holding the reins of power, introduced the proposal will naturally support it and the Government having adopted it, it will carry so that the talk against it is useless beyond just giving expression to the opinion which one feels about it. I quite agree with the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood), and any man who has given the subject any attention must come to the conclusion that this fast line of steamers cannot be a success on the St. Lawrence route. What the Government should do, if they decide to have a fast line of steamers, is to throw aside all local influences, and devote themselves solely to the securing of the fastest possible service, with one Atlantic port both for summer and winter. I do not say whether Louisbourg, Halifax or St. John is the best port; but the attempt to bring these fast steamers by the Gulf of St. Lawrence in the summer time, over the reefs and shoals which have constantly destroyed vessels passing by that route, will prove that the scheme cannot be carried out as against lines entering the harbour of New York, with which this line must compete. Further than that, the information which we lacked in 1889, we still lack. We are adopting a class of steamers which are unknown, and I regret that it has not been stated to the House why this class of steamers is chosen in preference to steamers of a well-known type. It may be that the experiment will be very successful; but that this country should spend $500,000 a year upon an experiment which is itself a doubtful one, and in experimenting on steamers which are practically unknown in Atlantic travel is a matter which does not commend itself to my mind. Now, I do not want to enter into discussions or quote newspaper articles here at all. I merely state my own opinion, which I feel bound to give expression to, inasmuch as I have held that opinion from the very first. I am fearful that the difficulties of the route will be so great that there will be a failure in that respect, and that we shall have the contractors coming back on the country for a larger subsidy; because there is no doubt that, having once put our hand to the plough, we shall feel it a matter of pride to carry it through, and we cannot see the end of the expense.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Mr. Speaker, you, as well as many others in this House, are aware that on three different occasions I expressed my opposition to the policy of establishing a fast steamship line.

Mr. FOSTER. What about the fourth occasion?

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). If the hon. gentleman will have a little patience, he will know exactly about the fourth occasion. I expressed my opinion that at the present juncture in our history we were not prepared to undertake so large a scheme. I also stated that I did not believe there was a demand on the part of the people of this country for an expenditure of money along that line. I also stated that I did not believe that a fast steamship line was in the interest of the great majority of the taxpayers of this country. I also stated that we had now on the ocean, plying between this country and England, a larger number of vessels to carry our trade than we had trade to supply them, and that we had a capacity for passenger service far beyond the necessity, with the exception of about a month or a month and a half in each year. I also stated that it was very doubtful indeed, no matter how much money we could spend for a service on the north route, whether it could compete successfully with a service on the south route, owing to the fogs and the ice. That argument is somewhat weakened by the contract which is about to be entered into by the Government with Petersen, Tate & Co., because I understand that under the contract they are to provide at their own expense, a fast tender which is to go out and meet the incoming vessels. I think my strongest argument was that in our present financial condition we could not well afford, as was then proposed, to spend $750,000 a year for this service, in addition to the taxation the people of this country were then called upon to bear. I am bound to say, however, that that argument has been somewhat weakened and modified by the excellent bargain which our present Government are about to make, provided we accept their policy. Though I am opposed to the policy, I think that the Government, having accepted the policy, deserve credit far above their predecessors, for having made a bargain for a service equal to, if not better, than what was proposed before, for $250,000 a year less. I must say that I think the service is better in very many ways. First, the steamers are to carry twenty-five cabin passengers more than the other; it is faster than the other; there is a fast tender provided which was not provided for in the other contract; there is to be paid $250,000 a year less, and there is to be a reduction of about $200,000 a year of subventions paid to other steamship lines for carrying the mails across the Atlantic, to be applied to the $500,000, which will bring the expenditure down to $300,000 a year. We are about to receive a fast Atlantic service for about $300,000 a year, for which, under the late Government, we were to pay $750,000 a year; and even if you subtract the subventions now paid from the $750,000, we would still have to pay $500,000 a year. But, notwithstanding these things, which can be stated in favour of the fast line contract, I am still of the same opinion as before, that at the present time the country is not in a position to assume the responsibility of expending so much more money every year. As has been said, this is a luxury. Perhaps it is; but we had better pay for the necessaries before we involve this House in an expenditure for luxuries. The time may come when the conditions of the country may be changed, and when this may be considered a necessary investment in the interest of the country, and when my opinion on the subject may change. But, at present, I am of the same opinion that I was two years ago; I am of the same opinion that I was in the year following when I repeated the arguments I first used; and I am of the same opinion that I was last year, when I repeated them again, that, no matter how good the bargain is, this policy is premature and not in the interest of the taxpayers of this country.

Mr. GILLIES. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take up the time of the House very long in discussing this very important question; but inasmuch as I have always regarded it as one not of local importance merely, but of Canadian and Imperial importance, I venture to trouble the House with one or two observations in a direction that has not hitherto been touched upon. I have always regarded a fast Atlantic service as a necessary commercial corollary to the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It was, therefore, with the greatest heartiness that I gave my support to this project when it was first brought up in this House, very shortly after I had the honour of taking a seat here. At that time, a proposition was submitted to this House by the late Finance Minister, asking for a subvention from the Parliament of Canada to a fast Atlantic service to the extent of $500,000 a year, which was voted by Parliament. Continued conscientious and earnest efforts were put forth by the late Government to have that vote crystallized into a contract with some substantial company, but they failed. Subsequently, in 1894, the same Finance Minister submitted to this House a measure offering the sum of $750,000 a year to any responsible company that would tender for a weekly fast Atlantic service. The idea met with the universal approval of Parliament, inasmuch as the measure passed without a division, showing how truly and accurately the proposition of the Finance Minister expressed the commercial mind of Canada. But, Sir, from that time until now even that great offer of $750,000 a year has not resulted in our having a fast Atlantic service established.

I am delighted to find that the present Government have been more favoured than their predecessors in this respect. No member within the walls of this House feels better pleased than I am with the success which they have met; and when I say that, I am sure my feeling will be shared by all my colleagues in this House from the maritime provinces, and I am ready also to assume that it is shared by my hon. friends from the different parts of this wide Dominion. I would like to point out a weak spot in the contract, but before I come to that let me say that I was very well pleased to hear the statement as to the probable success of this steamship line that was given us the other day, on the introduction of this resolution, by the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell), to whom I suppose we should fairly give the credit for the success these negotiations have met with. The efforts made by the Allan people to bring about the defeat of these negotiations reflect, in my opinion, very little credit upon that great concern. Whether the Petersen, Tate Company are a responsible concern or not, I do not know, but I am willing to assume that the Government knew with whom they were dealing before entering into this transaction, and if the contractors should not be able to carry out their agreement, then, of course, the loss is theirs. If the contract be a favourable one for the contractors, it was long enough before the country, tenders were advertised for in every great and leading paper in Great Britain and on the continent, and there was ample opportunity for the Allan people to come forward and show their enterprise by taking up the scheme. But I should like to point out what I consider the weak spot in this contract. I find that there is no penalty whatever imposed on the company in the event of failure. The time between now and the completion of the contract may lapse, and then Messrs. Petersen, Tate & Company may quietly turn round and say that they were unable to raise the money, and there is no remedy for the Government. We will have simply lost two years and the contractors will have suffered nothing.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The hon. gentleman fails to notice that they will lose some £20,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend behind me is mistaken with regard to the contract. The forfeiture by the contractors is £20,000—£10,000 cash and £10,000 guaranteed in case of failure on their part.

Mr. GILLIES. I am very glad indeed to find that there is such a provision in the contract. Without it we would, as I have indicated, be largely at the mercy or dependent upon the financial ability of the contractor. There is another point to which I wish to draw attention and that is the restriction put on the contractors in the selection of the port. When the proposition for a fast line service was before the House in 1894, I tabled the question which appears in "Hansard," asking the then Finance Minister if the company would have a free hand in selecting a port on this side of the Atlantic. The then Finance Minister replied that in the provisional contract two ports would be inserted, namely, the ports of Halifax and St. John, but that in the final contract the company would be at liberty to select any port they thought most suitable on this side. I find in the contract before us, that Petersen, Tate & Company are limited, for winter purposes, to the harbours of Halifax or St. John, and to the port of Quebec in the summer. That limitation, I think, should not have been imposed on the company, and I propose to bring to the notice of the House the claims of another port which the House has heard of before and which, if it had been in the minds of the Government at the time these negotiations were carried on, would, no doubt, have found prominent mention in this contract. I refer to the harbour of Louisbourg, situated on the eastern coast of Cape Breton. It is not a port that is unknown to hon. gentlemen or to history. Louisbourg, we all know, attained great importance under the French régime. The early French colonists—the superior of whom as explorers and pioneers no continent ever saw—well knew the strong strategic position of Louisbourg and its strong possibilities as a maritime port and commercial centre, and the results proved the wisdom and accuracy of their provision. During the early part of the past century it was strongly fortified by the French Government. So strongly was it fortified that it was known as the Dunkirk of America, and on its fortifications the French Government expended over £1,200,000 sterling. This at once shows the importance attached to its position by the government of France. I know that there is an impression among hon. gentlemen that the port of Louisbourg is situated on a rocky, iron-bound coast, that it is encircled by fogs, that in winter it is inaccessible on account of ice and stormy weather, and that therefore it is not suitable as a terminal port for the service that we are now establishing. I wish to remove that impression, and I think that I can give evidence to show that there is no port on this side of the Atlantic which can compare with Louisbourg as a terminal point for the trans-Atlantic service. In the year 1874, when the Intercolonial Railway was fast approaching completion and the question arose as to what was the best port on the Atlantic sea-board for the terminus of that line, a committee was appointed by this House to inquire as to the best and most expeditious route for the conveyance of mails and passengers between the Dominion of Canada and Europe and to find on the shores of the Atlantic the most suitable port accessible the year round as a terminus for the Intercolonial Railway. The words of the resolution are as follows:—

Resolved, That a Select Committee be appointed to inquire as to the best and most direct route for the conveyance of mails and passengers between the Dominion of Canada and Europe, and of finding on the shores of the Dominion a harbour accessible, both in winter and summer, to be the terminus of such shortest route, with powers to send for persons, papers and records, and to report from time to time.

That committee obtained evidence of the fullest character. They examined sea captains, ship masters and owners, hydrographic engineers and underwriters, and on the 23rd of May, after a long, patient and full inquiry, they reported as follows:—

1st. That there are but three harbours possessing the qualities necessary to commend them to the attention of your Honourable House, viz.: Halifax, Louisbourg and Paspebiac.

That, from the evidence given before your committee, it has been shown that Louisbourg is a first-class harbour, having the geographical advantage of being the nearest available harbour of this Dominion to Europe.

It is 230 miles nearer to Europe than Paspebiac, and 196 miles nearer to Europe than Halifax by direct route.

It should also be observed that the approaches to Louisbourg are very easy, and that the anchorage is good in the north-east portion of the harbour, which is entirely sheltered from winds, and that the harbour is capable of floating vessels of any size.

Further on they say:

Your committee recommend that a survey be made between Louisbourg and some point on the Intercolonial Railway, to ascertain the practicability of building a railway between the most suitable point of said railroad and the harbour of Louisbourg.

Now, that report was made by the committee after they had taken the fullest evidence, and it settles at once and that is for ever the question of the suitability of Louisbourg as the terminus on this side of the Atlantic for this steamship service. That report shows that the harbour of Louisbourg is accessible the year round, that it is commodious, it is large, it is well sheltered and absolutely safe, and is capable of accommodating vessels of any size or any class. The requirements of the resolution were, as will be perceived, that the harbour selected would be "accessible winter and summer. That is the greatest certificate that the harbour of Louisbourg could get from any committee inasmuch as the late Mr. Power, of Halifax, was member of that committee—a man intensely interested in the success of Halifax and strongly and unreservedly, and unreasonably, in my opinion, opposed to Louisbourg. Inasmuch as this report came from a committee largely hostile to Louisbourg and prepossessed in favour of Halifax, it is the highest and best certificate that could be given in favour of Louisbourg. The statement of this committee that Louisbourg possesses "all the necessary qualities," namely, that it is "accessible winter and summer, that it is commodious and safe and capable of floating vessels of any size," is a sufficient answer to the oft repeated statements of interested persons to the contrary, and should silence for ever the voices of people who in their dread that Louisbourg should get the prominence it deserves, would lead to the exclusion of the ports in which they are specially interested.

That is all I have to say on that phase of the case, but I may draw the attention of the House to the fact that since that report was made, the advantages of Louisbourg have vastly increased, and that port is able to claim, more than ever, the right to be chosen as the terminus of the fast Atlantic service. Louisbourg has since then been connected with the great coal fields of Cape Breton, and a large pier has been built there, the largest coal pier, I am told, on the continent of America, a pier at which any vessel in the line which is now being established can ride at anchor, and with chutes from which the largest steamers can bunker. These are advantages that Louisbourg has more than she had in 1874, and more than Halifax, St. John or Quebec can offer.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Not more than Quebec.

Mr. GILLIES. Yes, Sir, certainly, or any other port that you can mention in Canada. There is no port in the Dominion of Canada that has the advantage of having a coal pier under which the largest vessel floating can take bunker coal. What does that mean? Louisbourg coal can be put into the bunkers of a ship at Louisbourg for $1.75 a ton. If Halifax is chosen as a port, the coal must be taken to Halifax at extra cost for freightage, and if to Quebec, the cost is still greater and then it must be loaded into the bunkers of the steamers. My hon. friend from Quebec (Mr. Dobeil) is a better authority on this point that I can hope to be, because he is largely engaged in this line of business, and I am sure that he will agree with me that, if coal can be put into the bunkers of a steamer at Louisbourg at $1.75 a ton, that same coal carried to Halifax, bulk broken, and afterwards taken out of store and lightered into the bunkers of a vessel, must cost from $3.50 to $4 a ton. The same reasoning applies to St. John and Quebec. Let us see what that means. Mr. Huddart, when he was here in 1894 promoting this enterprise, stated that the class of steamers required to carry out the terms of his service would consume 2,500 tons of coal on every single trip. So, if you take the coal at Louisbourg, you will save about $5,000 on every single trip as compared with taking coal at Halifax. This leaves out of account the fact that there are 200 miles of steaming saved by selecting Louisbourg instead of Halifax, and even more if you compare Louisbourg with St. John. In the fifty-two trips that the company are obliged to make under this contract, they would save $260,000 in the item of coal alone, over and above what would be saved through the shorter ocean trip to Louisbourg as compared with Halifax or St. John.

I regret that my time is limited, and I know I am imposing upon the House, but I seek to convey to the minds of my hearers, the representatives of the people in Parliament assembled, the idea that Louisbourg is the best port as a terminus, as compared with the three ports that are mentioned in this contract. I do not speak from any personal interest in the matter. I do not represent the county in which Louisbourg is; I do not live in Louisbourg. I speak as a Canadian interested in this measure, and in this great service which I hope will not only be a benefit to Canada, but a credit to the people who endeavoured to establish it in the first instance, and a credit to those who are carrying it out. One point more before I sit down. If Louisbourg is made the terminus of this great trans-Atlantic service, passengers landed at Louisbourg will find themselves in New York seven and a half hours sooner than if they had landed in Halifax. The distance from Liverpool to New York is 3,025 miles, which, at twenty miles an hour, means 151½ hours. From Liverpool to Halifax is 2,466 miles, which, at twenty-six miles an hour, means 123½ hours' steaming. By land from Halifax to New York, at forty miles an hour, means twenty hours. Thus the trip by water and land from Liverpool to New York by way of Halifax will take 143 hours, which, compared with 151½ hours between Liverpool and New York by steamer, would leave eight hours in favour of the Halifax route.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I must really remind my hon. friend (Mr. Gillies) that it is very inconvenient to pass the regular time for adjournment, and it would be better to adjourn now and we can take this matter up again at three o'clock.

Mr. GILLIES moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1 p.m.

Second Sitting.

WEDNESDAY, 16th June, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

TENDERS FOR BUOY SERVICE,
COUNTY OF INVERNESS.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (for Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) asked:

1. What steps, if any, were taken to obtain tenders for the buoy service at Mabou, in the county of Inverness, in April last, shortly before the local general elections?

2. What offers were received, names and amounts?

3. Did the lowest tenderer refuse to enter into the contract?

4. Was the next lowest tender asked if he was ready to do the work for the amount of his tender? If so, what did he reply?

5. What is the name of the successful tenderer and contractor in each case?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). 1. Bills inviting tenders were sent out on the 8th of April. 2. Daniel D. Doyle, $17 per annum; Angus F. Rankin, $24 per annum; William F. Rankin, $34 per annum; Malcolm McFadyen, $39 per annum; John McInnis, $39 per annum; John McEachen, $40 per annum; Edward Doyle, $40 per annum; Angus D. Rankin, $45 per annum; Thomas White, $45 per annum; Finlay Rankin, $63 per annum. 3. Yes. 4. Yes, by letter from the department, but before the answer was received the Minister decided to invite new tenders. 5. The successful tenderer was Edward Doyle in the last case and there was only one contract.

ATLANTIC FAST SS. SERVICE.

The House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed resolution of Sir Richard Cartwright, declaring it expedient that the fast line contract be ratified and confirmed.

Mr. GILLIES. I have only a few words to say to complete the argument I began at the previous sitting to show the advantages which Louisbourg offers as the terminus of the fast Atlantic service. Now, what advantage will passengers and mails have in being landed at Louisbourg instead of Halifax? From Liverpool to Louisbourg the distance is 2,270 miles. A vessel steaming 20 miles an hour would make the passage in 113½ hours. From Louisbourg to New York, at the rate of 40 miles an hour, it takes 23 hours to make the trip. That shows a time consumed of 136 hours between Liverpool and New York via Louisbourg, as compared with 143 hours via Halifax, and as compared with 151 hours going direct to New York. Well, that gives an advantage to Louisbourg over Halifax of at least from 7 to 10 hours. Therefore the traveller going to any of the western cities of Canada, Montreal, Ottawa, Hamilton, London, Toronto or Winnipeg, has this much advantage in time in landing at Louisbourg as compared with Halifax, and the British and European mails would be landed that much sooner at their western destination. This means very much for the business people of Ontario, and they are therefore directly interested in insisting upon the best port being selected as a terminus, and the most direct route to that port taken in order that they may participate in the quick transit of passengers and mails from Europe to their western homes. They are consequently as much interested as I can possibly be in the selection of Louisbourg as the terminus. There is besides the saving of the ocean voyage of 196 miles by landing at Louisbourg instead of Halifax. As I said in the beginning, I have no personal interest at all to serve in bringing this to the notice of the House, I simply have the public interest at heart and nothing more. In this hope I will be joined by the majority of the members of the House. I have nothing at all against Halifax, I like Halifax. I have nothing at all against St. John; I admire the spirit and the energetic enterprise of the people of that city. I have nothing against Quebec; I have as much attachment for that grand old city as any man can have that is not a native of the place. I simply say that if Halifax is the port best adapted for the terminus—and I have shown that it is not—then by all means let us have it. If St. John is the best terminus, then let us have it; if Quebec, then let the terminus be there; but if Louisbourg be the best terminus, and the argument is decidedly in its favour, then let it be at Louisbourg. All I want is that this port be thrown into competition with other ports and that the company may have a free hand in selecting its terminus. I think I have made out a good case. With a line of railway direct from Louisbourg via St. Peters, which must and will be constructed in the interests of the country, I have shown the advantages the traveller will have in landing there as compared with either St. John, or Quebec, or Halifax. I have shown the savings the company will make in the item of coal alone. I have referred to the report of the special committee of the House of Commons made in 1874, a committee that was appointed for this very purpose, and which reported that the harbour of Louisbourg is accessible all the year round, is commodious, is sheltered, is safe, and is capable of floating any vessel in the British marine. I have nothing further to say than to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Government of which he is a prominent member to be good enough to see, before this contract is permanently ratified, that the harbour of Louisbourg and consequently the people of Cape Breton will have a fair show, and that the public interest and the success of this undertaking may not be imperilled by the interests of any one port being unduly pushed over those of another, by political influence or any other influence that I need not mention.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am not prepared to say that if we are to have a fast line contract at all, we are not considering the terms of an agreement which is as favourable as we could possibly hope to secure.

I believe the conditions of the agreement now before the House are of a character to warrant us in according to that agreement our support, provided we felt warranted in supporting a fast line at all. I have, however, on former occasions, voicing the sentiments of my own constituents, and the sentiments, I believe, of a very large portion of the population of the province of Ontario, I have placed myself on record here as opposed to a fast line between Canada and Great Britain so long as the condition of affairs is such as we find it. But I am bound to say that the obligations which have been incurred, or are proposed to be incurred, by the Government during this session, are somewhat startling in their extent. We have in this proposition for a fast line, an expenditure of $500,000 per annum contemplated. That amounts to interest upon a capital sum of over $16,000,000 at 3 per cent; and even if we are able to supplant, by the ratification of this contract, steamship agreements that are now in existence and by that means perhaps save $200,000, we are still practically adding to our public burden the interest upon $10,000,000. Then we have the arrangement with regard to the entry of the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal. It may be that this scheme will so add to the business of the Intercolonial Railway as largely to increase its earnings and to pay the rentals of $210,000 which are contemplated. It may be on the other hand that they will not, and that there will be an addition from this source to our liabilities and our burdens as well. If the scheme does not pay the $210,000, the charge is equivalent to an addition of $7,000,000 to the public debt. Then we have a proposal to grant a subsidy of over $3,600,000 to the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, as heir to which will follow another scheme, probably requiring a further expenditure of public money. Now, we find in all these schemes foreshadowed by the Government, an addition to the public debt of anywhere from 18 to 27 million dollars, according as to whether the reduction in the steamship subventions is more or less, and according as to whether the Intercolonial Railway pays or does not pay, in consequence of its entry into the city of Montreal. In addition to this we have to provide for the enlargement of the canals; so that we have, all told, a formidable increase in the burdens of the country. I stand somewhat appalled at the magnitude of these increases, and I am inclined to scrutinize closely a fast line contract, not with the view of determining whether this contract, which reflects credit upon the Government that has made it, so far as its conditions are concerned, not with the view of determining whether the terms of this contract could have been made better than they are, for I am free to confess that I believe that they could not; but I confront this question with the view of ascertaining whether a fast line contract is necessary at all. Under the condition of things that exists, under the circumstances of the country I arrive at the conclusion that at the least the entering into of this arrangement for the expenditure of half a million dollars annually by this Government is premature. This contract runs for ten years, but it will naturally merge into a continuance of that expenditure so that it will put an additional burden on the country which will not be temporary but permanent. My hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), a public man of great experience, a gentleman who has given this question careful consideration, tells us that in his opinion this expenditure which has been provided for will be inadequate and that we will not secure a fast line service for $500,000. He, of course, has reason in one sense to make this assertion for it is a fact that tenders have been submitted by the Allan line and by Mr. Huddart and both of these tenders, made by responsible parties, conversant with the navigation difficulties of this route, call for a vastly larger sum than the tenders of the firm which we have under consideration to-day. My hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) says we are all agreed upon this question. I must assure the hon. gentleman that we are not all agreed. I have discussed this question before my constituents and I should be stultifying myself if I supported this measure, and I should be guilty of cowardice if I allowed it to go through without stating what my position is. The position I take here is the position my constituents will require me to take if they do not withdraw from me their confidence. The question is, Mr. Speaker: Do we need this fast line? In answering that question, in arriving at a conclusion as to the matter, we are bound to take into consideration the circumstances of this country. We might want that fast line; it might be a good thing to invest the money that would be required to get it if we had an abundance of means, but we are bound in answering that question to take into consideration the condition of this country. When I look around I see that the farmers of this country are poor, that the business of agriculture is depressed, that farmers who have mortgages on their farms in a great many cases are unable to pay the interest. Men holding mortgages are afraid to foreclose because it would be disastrous to them to get the farms into their hands. I find labourers are not able to get employment during the whole of the year. I find that while certain business men are prosperous, in a sense, with the aid of the law imposing protective taxes for them, the great masses of the people, the producers, the farmers, the labourers, the tax-payers are not in good circumstances and that the condition of the country is one which does not warrant the Government in embarking in enterprises involving an expenditure of money where that expenditure can be avoided. Now, I hold that the fast line is not essential. It would be a convenience; it would benefit many business interests in this country, there is no question, but it is not absolutely essential. We have the Allan Line, the Beaver Line, the Dominion Line, the Donaldson Line, and ample provision is made in regard to cold storage. We can have all the tramp steamers that trade will warrant for the transportation of the freight we have to offer. There is no difficulty about procuring transportation and the only question is as to whether it is necessary to have a subvention granted that will procure for us a service that is a little more rapid than the service we have at present. It would be convenient to have a rapid service; it is not essential. I thought last session that the position taken by my hon. friend the member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell) was the position of a business man. He thoroughly understood the wants of this country and all the conditions appertaining to this matter. I agree with the position taken by him then that what we need are steamers with large freight carrying capacity, with a fair amount of speed, of say, 18 knots an hour, and that a line of this kind would serve our purposes better than a line running at a greater cost with small freight carrying capacity. Now, Sir, the only object of having this line so far as I can see is to secure the passenger trade. An 18 knot service will do just as well for our freight requirements as a 20 knot service and probably better. The slower service will do just as well for cold storage requirement as the fast line, and I think the principal object in obtaining this fast line is to have a line that will attract passenger traffic to the Canadian route. This is desirable of course, but I would like to know what interest my constituents in Norfolk can have in the question, whether passengers can be attracted from Chicago to the Canadian line rather than to the New York line. Will their interest in this matter warrant them in paying their portion of the $500,000 to secure it? It is a question of no consequence to them at all whether passengers go by Quebec or New York. I believe my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Wood) was quite right yesterday in assuming the probability of our being unable to command that traffic if we establish this fast line. It is an interrupted traffic; it will begin at Montreal or Quebec for six months in the year and at a maritime port, Halifax or St. John, for the balance of the year, and the natural obstacle in the way of the service securing passenger traffic will, in my opinion, not be exactly insurmountable, but so great as to throw the balance of the chances in favour of the New York route. Under any circumstances we will have failed, to a large extent, in securing control of the passenger travel we hope to get. Further, I say that this expenditure is not demanded by our interests. We can get along without it. We do not need to add practically $16,000,000 to our debt. When we come to examine the point of the scheme, there is no doubt that it is an Imperial scheme. It is a scheme the entering into of which is not forced upon the Government by any demand on the part of Canadian public opinion. The influences brought to bear upon the Government, the potent influences, that have led to the entering into of this contract are Imperial influences beyond question. It is all a part of one great scheme—fast service across the Atlantic, a transcontinental service by the Canadian Pacific Railway, Pacific steamship lines to Japan, China and Australia and the Pacific cable—all these are items in one great scheme of which this line is a part and we are entering into this scheme largely because it is desired by Imperial statesmen and demanded by Imperial influences.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I wish at the very outset to say to my hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) that he is entirely wrong in the view that the suggestion in reference to this fast Atlantic service came from the Imperial Government. The Government of Canada have again and again endeavoured to obtain the support of the Imperial Government. They brought it before them and pressed it upon them in every possible way. I myself in conjunction with the representatives of Australasia visited the Colonial Office, again and again, and pressed this matter in the strongest possible way and it is only after the advent of the present Government, of which the Right Hon. Mr. Chamberlain is a member, that I was able to get the Imperial Government to consent to the earnest entreaty of Canada and the Australian colonies. It was only then that I was able to induce the Colonial Minister to take it up and agree to bear one-third of the expense.

Mr. CHARLTON. Well, I suppose my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) is quite able to speak for himself and his Government, but I do not think he has answered for the gentlemen who are responsible for the scheme under the consideration of the House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). On that point I can certainly say, on behalf of the present Government, that there has never been any attempt on the part of the Imperial Government to influence our judgment. All we have done has been done by us voluntarily as representing the people of Canada. Whether we were wise or not is a fair matter of opinion, but it would not be correct to assume that we were doing this under the influence of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am very happy to hear the statement of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). But I must say that it forces me to lose the opportunity of believing that there is a sufficient reason on the part of the Government for entering into this scheme that I would have had, had my supposition in regard to the Imperial desire to have this scheme been correct. If this is not a portion of a scheme for establishing communication from England to Australia, if it has not something to do with the development of interprovincial and intercolonial trade within the Empire, then I am entirely mistaken, and if this scheme has not to justify it the idea of the development of Imperial interests, it is a scheme which has less to justify it than if it had.

Mr. MILLS. All the more power to its elbow.

Mr. CHARLTON. The elbow to which it is proposed to put this power is, I think, rather weak. If it is not for Imperial interests, it is an elbow which had better be conservative of its powers, and attempt to pay its debts, and get out of its difficulties. If we had entered on this scheme purely of our own volition, if it were a scheme for which we did not ask the approval of the Imperial Government, if it were a scheme purely and entirely Canadian in its inception and purposes, I would have still less to say in favour of it than I say on the supposition that the Imperial Government are interested in it. We are not required to establish a fast Atlantic service to contribute largely to the laying of a Pacific cable, or to increase the efficiency of our steamship service with Australia, from the standpoint of purely colonial or domestic interests: and if this scheme of a fast Atlantic service has not to commend it the reasons which I have expressed, it has still less to commend it than I supposed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. As I am not permitted to speak again on this subject, my hon. friend will permit me to say that he must not confound Imperial interests and Imperial pressure. I believe that we may congratulate ourselves upon having satisfied the Colonial Secretary that there were great Imperial interests in this movement; but, so far from having acted under Imperial influence or pressure in bringing this matter forward, the fact is the very reverse. It has been the colonies which have been trying to get Her Majesty's Government to regard it, as we felt they ought, as having very great Imperial importance; and I think the result shows that we succeeded in inducing Her Majesty's Government to believe that in addition to the colonial interest, there was a great Imperial interest in being able to draw Canada and the mother country so much more closely together.

Mr. CHARLTON. Let us examine, for a moment, into the position of this matter, with reference to its bearing on Imperial interests as well as on our own domestic interests. The question may arise as to whether we have done our duty to the Empire—as to whether we are sufficiently liberal in promoting Imperial interests. As regards the establishment of a fast line of transcontinental transit and a Pacific service, let us see what we have spent. We have provided a railway across this continent. That railway, of course, serves important Canadian interests; but it is also an Imperial highway, which adds vastly to the power and the strength of the British Empire. We have spent in establishing that railway, $70,000,000; in addition to that we have given towards it 18,000,000 acres of land; and, in addition to the money and the land, we have given to the company special privileges, some of which we are now buying back, largely at the cost of the proposed subvention to the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. If we sum up the expenditures we have made for the promotion of this Imperial railway line, the aggregate would not fall short of $100,000,000. Now, if the Imperial authorities do not ask from us this fast Atlantic service, as the hon. gentleman assures us they do not, we may consider it from the standpoint of our own interests; and if we do consider it from that standpoint, there is still less reason than when it is considered from the other standpoint, for incurring this enormous expenditure. Our attitude to the Empire should of course, be a friendly one; it is. It should be a loyal one; it is. Canada will never shrink from supporting Imperial interests. She has done her duty, and more than her duty already in that respect, and that she is prepared to do in the future. But the question which we have to examine dispassionately is whether Canada's loyalty to Imperial interests requires us to incur this enormous expenditure for a fast Atlantic service. As we are told by the hon. leader of the Opposition that Imperial interests do not require it, that point is disposed of. Then the question comes, is it our interest to do so, apart from Imperial interests? And I cannot see that it is our interest to enter into this large expenditure at the present time. The sections of the country which must pay the expenditure are not directly interested in the scheme to a large extent. At least $300,000 of the $500,000 will be paid by the province of Ontario, for the time at least; the provinces of the North-west must bear their proportion, and the province of British Columbia must bear its proportion. There is no part of this Dominion from and including Ontario and west of Ontario, that is specially interested in incurring this large obligation; and if that is the case, and the province of Ontario is to pay three-fifths of the expenditure, as a representative of that province, and consulting the interests of my own constituents, I believe the entering into this obligation is premature. This country, burdened as it is with debt, with its enormous floating charges, with its meagre population, with its interests progressing slowly as they are, with the conditions of business such as exist in the country, we should refrain from embarking on any scheme involving any expenditure of money which can reasonably be avoided at the present time. That is the position I take on this matter. The present prospects of business in this country are not flattering. The conditions may change, but there is nothing in present conditions to warrant us in incurring any large expenditures which can be avoided. In conclusion, I say, as a justification for my questioning the propriety of entering into this compact at the present time, that it is equivalent to the interest on over $16,000,000. Even after cancelling the other steamship contracts, it will be equivalent to the interest on $7,000,000 or $8,000,000; and, in the present condition of the country, with the absolute necessity that exists of making large expenditures in other directions, I question very seriously the wisdom of embarking on this project at the present time. I have taken the liberty of expressing these opinions, not from any personal considerations, but because they are the opinions of my constituents, and because my constituents will demand that I should say on this floor what I have said before them, and what I would be bound to say at any place or at any time if I reflected their opinions on this matter.

Mr. CLARKE. It would be a matter of regret if the opinions given expression to by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Charlton) were understood by the House as being the opinions of the people of the great province of Ontario of which he is a representative. I have no doubt that, so far as he can accurately gauge the opinions of his own constituents, the hon. gentleman has given expression to them. But I repudiate, on behalf of a great many other constituencies of the province of Ontario, and on behalf of a great many gentlemen having large commercial interests in that province, the expressions to which the hon. gentleman has just given utterance. As a humble member of this House, I support this scheme, not only because it is required by Canadians, but because it is a part of an Imperial scheme in the very best sense of that term. We have had constructed across this continent the best line of railway in America; we have a canal system communicating with the ocean from the head of the great lakes unparalleled by any fresh water system in the world; we have a postal system which we are proud of; we have had established on the Pacific Ocean lines of steamships connecting with the far east and the Australian colonies, and second to none that traverse those great waters; and this fast Atlantic steamship line is needed to complete the chain of communication between the motherland and the extreme limits of our great Empire. This is not a question that has only been considered yesterday or to-day by the merchants and leading business men of the province of Ontario, and, I am surprised that a gentleman of the wide experience of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) should ignore the fact that the Toronto Board of Trade, composed of at least 1,000 members, one-third of them living outside of the city of Toronto, and all of them prominent merchants, manufacturers or financiers doing business throughout the province of Ontario, has placed itself on record emphatically and unequivocally in favour of a fast Atlantic steamship line. I do not desire to take up the time of the House; but lest the remarks of the hon. gentleman should be taken as voicing the wishes and feelings of the mercantile community of the province of Ontario, I hope the House will bear with me while I read a few extracts from the annual reports and messages presented to the Toronto Board of Trade by the various presidents of that body in the last five years. In 1892, while Mr. Hugh N. Baird, one of the largest merchants in the province, the ramifications of whose business extend throughout the Dominion, occupied the position of president of that body, he had this to say in his annual address:

There is no subject of more immediate interest to business men than the improvement of our passenger and mail service across the Atlantic. It is, indeed, a matter of the first necessity to our commerce. Speaking in this room but a few days ago, a member of the board showed that on a recent trip of a great New York liner to Liverpool, one-fifth of the passengers were Canadians. Why should we, having ports on our own seaboard 400 to 600 miles nearer Liverpool than New York is, be compelled to send our buyers, our mails, our express freight through the latter city for quicker despatch? The great strides Canada has already made in railways from ocean to ocean, and in fast service on the Pacific, will largely miss their aim, unless we make the further stride of quick travel on the Atlantic as well. It is perfectly true, that this country has outgrown the present service.

I am, therefore, heartily in accord with the resolution passed at the special general meeting of the board on the 16th instant, which recited that "A first-class Canadian fast Atlantic steamship service would materially increase the value of our European exports, decrease the cost of delivery of our European imports, largely augment the volume of our passenger travel, improve our foreign and postal service, and otherwise be of great national importance." It is clear to us, besides, that the concluding portion of the resolution, urging the need of governmental arrangements necessarily required "to secure such a service and give it control of such railway service as said line of steamships must have," will meet the views of commercial men throughout the country.

These are the views presented to the board of trade by Mr. Hugh M. Baird, in delivering his annual message at the close of his term of office in 1893. Surely it cannot be asserted that this gentleman did not know what he was talking about when he used the strongest and most emphatic language possible for a person in his position to use in advocating the immediate establishment of a fast Atlantic steamship line.

In 1893 this matter was also referred to by the retiring president of the board of trade, who in that year was Mr. R. R. Wilkie, the managing director of one of the largest financial institutions in the province of Ontario. Mr. Wilkie presented his views of the necessity for a fast Atlantic steamship service in the following words:—

This board has put itself on record more than once in favour of a high-class steam service to and from Great Britain. It is no exaggeration to say that the present service is slow and inefficient and has had the effect of driving Canadians to foreign ports and foreign lines of steamers.

It is humiliating for us, as Canadians, to consider that in a voyage to England, unless we are prepared to lose from three to five days of time, we are compelled to take ships from a foreign port and travel over a route 430 miles longer than via Quebec.

The last extract I shall read is from the report of the president of the board of trade, delivered in 1896, at the close of his term of office. Mr. Stapleton Caldecott, one of our leading merchants and importers, then president of the Toronto Board of Trade, thus referred to the fast steamship line:

The question of a fast Atlantic steamship service is one of great importance to Canada and to the Empire. The council is deeply impressed with the value and the necessity for this service. The day is past when Canada will be satisfied with anything less than a twenty-knot service. We possess great geographical advantages, being several hundred miles nearer Great Britain than either Boston or New York. Shall we lose this advantage through having slow boats, many knots per hour below the vessels that run between United States ports and England? With a fast Atlantic service, a swift through rail route from the Atlantic to the Pacific, with a further swift line of steamers from Vancouver to Japan, China and Australia, I see nothing to prevent Canada from becoming the great highway of the world between the east and the west; teas, coffees, fruits, silks and other eastern products will be carried by our railways, and Canada itself brought prominently before the world in a manner that in the past the most sanguine never conceived possible. In what better way can our country be advertised? In what better way bring to the notice of toiling millions the grand rolling prairies of the North-west, that only want the hands of men to blossom into fruitfulness and become the means of wealth and happiness to millions of the human race?

The fact that the Hon. Joseph Chamberlain has promised an Imperial subsidy of £75,000 per annum, if such an Atlantic service is organized, united to the further fact that the Dominion Government has promised a further subsidy of $750,000 should make this important service an accomplished deed within the next two years. The Government can confidently rely upon the cordial support of the board in promoting this great Imperial project.

I think after reading the opinions of these gentlemen—gentlemen who are well and favourably known throughout the Dominion—I need not take up the time of the House at greater length. I can congratulate the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell) upon what seems to be the very favourable arrangement he has made. If he has succeeded in securing vessels of the proper capacity, speed and build, and saved the country an expenditure of $250,000 annually, I think he is entitled to the thanks of the House and the country. I cannot give an opinion as to whether these vessels will turn out to be successful, but I compliment the Government upon the fact that they are carrying out the policy which was inaugurated by their predecessors, and the adoption of which will be a permanent advantage, I believe, not only to Canada, but to every other portion of the Empire. I cordially support the resolution in favour of the subsidy proposed by the hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. McMILLAN. I cannot allow this opportunity to pass without giving expression to the sentiments and feelings of the farmers of the eastern part of Ontario with regard to this question. I have been at several large meetings in that province, at which the fast steamship line was fully discussed, and I have yet to hear of a farmer who lifted up his voice in favour of such a large sum being expended on that service. At that time no doubt the expenditure was expected to be much greater, because it was thought that the sum of $750,000 per year would have to be given; but let me say that the late commercial crisis through which Canada has passed was due in a great measure to the depressed condition of the agricultural industries, and when the fast steamship project was first introduced, circumstances were even then more favourable to it than to-day, because we had not then any provision for transporting our perishable products across the Atlantic in cold storage. Now, however, that we have steamers plying to Glasgow, Liverpool, Bristol and London, provided with cold storage facilities for the carrying of our perishable products and landing them in the best condition, we have not the same necessity for a fast line of steamships as we had previously. It may be said that this line will take our products across three or four days more rapidly, but what advantage would that be to the farmer? Once we have cold storage, our products cannot suffer by being two or three days longer on the ocean. I have crossed the Atlantic frequently during the last few years, and as far as my experience goes, it will be impossible to run a line of steamships at a speed of twenty or twenty-two knots an hour by the St. Lawrence route. Here is the opinion of a gentleman from the city of Quebec on that very question. I take it from an article which appeared in the "Queen's Quarterly Magazine," written by Mr. Sandford Fleming. In that article he quotes from the work of Mr. Henry Fry, a prominent timber merchant of the city of Quebec :

Among other things stated by Mr. Fry, is, that the distressing loss of life and property were not due to any want of skill or experience on the part of owners or captains. He, however, expresses the opinion that the Government was not blameless in exacting speed, in the face of the serious obstacles which were presented to rapid steaming, and in imposing heavy penalties for non-punctuality in the delivery of the mails within the periods stipulated by contract.

Now, this is a condition imposed on the steamship company at present, which will almost compel them to run their vessels at hazardous speed after they have entered the Straits of Belle Isle and the Gulf of St. Lawrence. During the past three years, I have myself been twice nearly wrecked, when the vessel was only going at eight knots an hour. At one time I could have stepped from the side of the vessel on to an iceberg, which, by the merest chance, the captain happened to see just in time to avoid striking. Another time we were within two rods of striking an iceberg, and the vessel only going at a speed of seven knots an hour. In the month of July last, when the steamer was going at six or seven knots an hour, and the weather was very foggy, we struck an iceberg just outside the Straits of Belle Isle, and had it been a stormy night we would certainly have gone to the bottom. As it was, we had to steam back to St. Johns, Newfoundland, and lay there for two weeks. It is almost impossible for any steamship to make the speed provided in this contract. Although the company have provided for a line of torpedo boats to run ahead of the steamships, what is to become of the torpedo boats if she strikes? The loss of life will, of course, not be so great as on board the vessel, but the danger to those on the torpedo boat is just as great; and as she will have to keep half a mile ahead of the steamer, it will only be by the sound of the whistle that the steamer will be able to follow her, because you cannot see ahead any distance in the fog. I have been frequently on the river when you could not see from the rear to the front of the vessel so dense was the fog, so that there will only be the sound of the whistle from the torpedo boat to guide the steamer.

Let me repeat that the agricultural community is not going to be benefited by this fast line, because we have a sufficient number of vessels already to carry all our products to the mother country, and a sufficient amount of cold storage provided for our perishable products. All that can be said in favour of this project is that, in a measure, the honour of the Canadian Government is pledged to it. Whether that pledge was given of our own accord or through pressure I cannot say, but we are told that it was given voluntarily by the Canadian Government, at its own instance. Well, so much the worse for the Canadian Government, if Great Britain did not require this line in the Imperial interests. In the name of the farmers of Ontario, I warn the Government fairly to-day that when they came into power it was with the idea of reducing expenditure and not increasing it, and that if they go on increasing it on the lines they are taking at present, they will have to settle with the people.

Mr. CASEY. This is a question on which, of course, everybody will have his own opinion, but I should be sorry to have it thought that the opinion of Ontario, or even of the agricultural part of Ontario, was generally hostile to the scheme proposed by the Government. I do not pretend to be as successful a farmer individually as my hon. friend (Mr. McMillan) who has just taken his seat, but I represent a farming constituency and must answer to a large and intelligent body of farmers for my vote on this question. I do not feel very much afraid to face them after supporting the proposition of the Government. My hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. McMillan) says that the farmers do not need this fast line so much as they did before the cold storage was provided. Well, Sir, that must be admitted; but it is perfectly open to us to say, on the other hand, that the Government that has provided cold storage for the special convenience of the farmers may fairly provide a fast line more particularly intended for passenger traffic for the benefit of the rest of the community. I am not one of those farmers, or farmers' representatives, who think that all the legislation of the country should be directly for the farmers, and I do not think that my hon. friend from South Huron is one either. It is not necessary to show that all the laws we pass here are in the special interest of the farmers in order to obtain the farmers' support for them. The chief argument for this fast line, to my mind, is the advertisement it will give the country. I use the word "advertisement" in the broad sense of the word. This fast line will draw a stream of through travel across Canada; and will tend to make Canada the highway between Great Britain and the far East. There is no reason, if the parties interested somewhat improve the service on the Pacific, and if this scheme proves a success, why the stream of travel from England and from all Europe that now goes by the Suez Canal should not go through Canada. An hon. friend behind me says that this would be a costly advertisement. The sum of money involved is certainly considerable, but the price of an advertisement does not always tell the cost of it. No advertisement is costly which produces results in proportion to the price, and I believe that this advertisement will produce results more than in proportion to the price. My hon. friend from South Huron said one thing that I fully agree with. He pointed out that the farmers were opposed to an expenditure of $750,000 for securing this fast line, and there is all the more force in his remarks, because it was to that large expenditure that the farmers chiefly objected. But I think that when the farmers find that the fast line has been secured at a cost of $250,000 less than the country was pledged at first to give, a feeling of thankfulness to the Government for that saving will take the place of one of opposition to the granting of the subsidy to the fast line. Now, this was practically our position—that the country was pledged to an expenditure of $750,000 for this service. How, in honour, could the Government get out of that obligation? If they are able to secure the service for $250,000 less than was proposed, I think that the words of my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Clarke), when he congratulated the Ministry on the arrangement made, are thoroughly appropriate to the situation.

The difficulties of navigation, of course, have to be taken into account. It is not pretended that this is the ideal fast line, that it is the fastest line possible between Great Britain and Canada; it is only contended that it is the best available line under all the present circumstances of the case. It is, of course, advantageous to bring passengers and freight as far into the country as they can be brought by ship, instead of having to transfer them to the more expensive railway. That is the reason for choosing Quebec rather than some extreme point in the east as the summer terminus of the line. The difficulties of navigation in the Straits of Belle Isle are considerable, but the fact remains that the faster the steamers we have composing our line of communication with Great Britain, the more able they will be to make up for loss of time in the Straits of Belle Isle, and to make a fast trip on the whole. I was in Montreal last autumn when the steamship "Canada," a vessel something of the type of those here proposed, arrived at that port after a passage averaging 18 knots an hour—that is, 18 knots an hour to Montreal with a long stretch of difficult river navigation included in the route. If it was possible for a steamer with no special inducements to keep up a high speed to make an average of 18 knots an hour to Montreal, it is surely possible for vessels specially constructed for the purpose and whose owners are bound by contract, to make an average of 20 miles an hour to Quebec. Of course the "Canada" did not keep up the speed of 18 knots an hour in the Straits of Belle Isle, but made up for time to be lost by going all the faster in the open water. The steamers on this line will do the same: if they are going to make an average of 20 knots, they will have to do better than that in the open water. In view of these considerations, I think that the farmers or any other class of the community have no reason to grumble at the bargain that the Government have made, but have every reason to congratulate themselves that the country is saved one-third of the amount which it was first proposed that the service should cost.

Mr. ROGERS. My sentiments are very fully expressed by those members who have spoken from the agricultural standpoint, so it is not necessary for me to reiterate them at length. I do think that we should be guided to a great extent by the views of such an authority as Mr. Sandford Fleming. He is a man, as all know, of advanced and progressive ideas, and he has expressed a strong opinion adverse to the feasibility of this scheme. The hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) has read us the opinion of the board of trade on this subject. We all know that business men and all those anxious to hustle forward and backward, are interested in having a fast line. But when the Board of Trade of Montreal or the Board of Trade of Toronto or the Banker's Association holds their annual gatherings, the things that are talked about are not the number of manufacturers in the country, the number of business men we have or the number of lawyers and doctors turned out of our colleges, but the number of bushels of wheat we have to export, the money we bring into the country for that and other farm products which is over $60,000,000. It is all very well for them to talk of these matters, but these products are the result of our toil, late and early, year in and year out. Its all very fine for them to pass resolutions in favour of lavish expenditure if the same was in their own interest. As the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) has said, the necessity is not so much for speed as for ample facilities and cheap rates for the transport of our goods. We are already paying subsidies to 17 steamships—and three more will be added to the list—to carry the products of Canada to Europe. Even this will be a heavy load to bear, without paying so much merely to secure speed. We feel also that nine-tenths of the people going to the old country do not care even if they are detained a day or two longer on the ocean voyage. Most of them are travelling for pleasure or for their health and, with a day or two longer on the steamer, they become better acquainted and are just beginning to enjoy themselves. Those who wish to go quickly will take the New York route, which is quicker as well as safer. The leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) says that the scheme will not be successful because we have not granted subsidy enough; the great majority of the people, the men who make this country what it is and keep it where it is, will not shed one tear if the scheme does fail. One great reason is that the system of ship-building is rapidly changing from year to year, and in a few years hence we may have vessels crossing the ocean at the rate of 30 knots an hour. Then where will our 20-knot service be under a 10 years contract at $500,000? I think if this contract is put off for a few years we will not lose anything in the long run. I am aware that there are not many members of the House who hold the same opinions that I do with regard to this contract and I fear our influence will not prove very strong with the Government. I would be very glad to support any motion to postpone this contract for a time, but, as I know there are so few who hold the same opinions, I shall not take the responsibility of moving an amendment to that effect.

Mr. RATZ. I would like to say a few words on this question before a vote is taken. The hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) stated a few moments ago that he represented a farming constituency, and I gathered from his remarks that the farmers in his section were in favour of this fast Atlantic service. That may be the case, but if that is the case, I can say that the farmers of my constituency are not of the same opinion. The farmers of North Middlesex, the constituency which I have the honour to represent, so far as I have come in contact with them, are not at all in favour of this fast Atlantic service. They know this much about it, that they are the ones who will ultimately have to foot the great bulk of the bill, and they are the people who actually should be consulted, and their ideas should be taken into consideration. Now, as has been already stated, it makes very little difference whether a farmer's bushel of wheat or his barrel of flour gets to Great Britain a day or two earlier than it would by the ordinary Atlantic service; it is of no material consequence to him. Arrangements have already been made for cold storage for the carriage of our perishable products by the present service, so that the cold storage provided in this fast service will not benefit us to any great extent. Of course, it may be said that it will draw a certain amount of travel through the Dominion of Canada. That may be true, but will that advantage be sufficient to justify us in making this expenditure of $500,000 yearly to pay this service? Now, a great deal has been said about the difficulties of travel through the Straits of Belle Isle; and there is no question that this proposed Atlantic service cannot travel any faster through those Straits than ordinary vessels do at the present time, and it may be that 20 knots an hour cannot be made on this account. There is another question of considerable importance, perhaps. I understand that one of our modern inventors has now under construction a new model of a ship by which he intends to cross the Atlantic in 48 hours. Now if that rate of navigation turns out to be possible, where will this service be? Why, we won't be in it at all. We would have to go back on this contract, and then no doubt hon. gentlemen who are now pressing this fast service would be dissatisfied with it, and would want to cross the Atlantic in 48 hours. For these reasons, representing the constituency I do, I feel obliged to protest against this scheme.

Mr. STUBBS. It is not my intention to occupy the time of the House at any length; but as this is one of the questions that possess a good deal of interest for the farmers of Canada, and as I represent a rural constituency, I must say that this project is unanimously condemned by the farmers of Cardwell. If there is a vote taken on the question, I shall feel it my duty to vote against it. It appears at the present time as if this fast Atlantic service resolution was going to be carried without many dissentient voices. In that case, I congratulate the present Government on making a bargain a great deal better and more advantageous to the people of this country than the bargain that was made by the late Government. But even though the bargain may be a good one, it appears to me not to be in the interest of the country, and if the question comes to a vote, I shall feel it my duty to vote against it.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the vote is carried I want to congratulate the Government, and specially the leader of the Government, on the most noted if not the most instant conversion which has taken place with reference to his new attitude in respect to the fast line service. It was not quite as instantaneous as that celebrated conversion we read of in the New Testament, but I am inclined to hope that it is just about as thorough. We hear no more of those outbreathings of slaughter and persecution of any such idea as this from my hon. friend. He has adopted the Imperial policy; he has by his action declared that in the years previous, not years of youth but of mature age, and not very long ago, he was either mistaken or he was criticising for opposition's sake. I congratulate the Government on being toned down by the responsibility of office, to a different view on these great matters from that which they permitted themselves to hold when they were merely in Opposition and, as they thought, irresponsible. But I want to point out to my hon. friend, so that it may be a lesson to him if he ever goes into Opposition again, that there are certain perils connected with taking a position of opposition for opposition's sake upon every great policy which is propounded by a Government. My hon. friend took the position of opposition to a fast line service, took it very strongly; he educated some of those gentlemen who are sitting behind him to-day. But while my hon. friend has been able to turn thoroughly and quickly, the present aspect of the other side of the House shows that some of the hon. gentlemen who follow him have not been able to catch on quite so quickly, and to change quite so readily. My hon. friend from the city of Hamilton (Mr. Wood), is so far behind the times that he pins his faith upon this question of policy to an editorial in the "Globe." In simple innocence, he read what he saw was an editorial of the "Globe," and came to the conclusion that if he would plant both his feet on that, he would be on solid ground. So he planted both his feet on that editorial of the "Globe" of a few months ago, and he came before the House in all the confidence and vigorous assertion that he is capable of, and declared that he was right in opposing a fast service, and said: Here is the ground upon which I stand on, a file of the "Globe" of a few weeks ago. But my hon. friend has done poor service to the "Globe," because the "Globe" last night came out with strong and well-defined head lines and talked about the vigorous and bold policy of the present Government, saying this was a Government that was not afraid to spend a dollar if it took it into its head to spend it. that it was going to carry out a bold and vigorous policy—what of, Sir? Of a fast line service across the Atlantic; and its editorials for the last two or three weeks have been just as strongly commendatory of this fast line service as was that editorial ante-dating by a few weeks the present date upon which my hon. friend was so misled as to take his stand. Let him learn from that there is nothing stable in a "Globe" editorial, that in fact there is nothing stable in the utterance of a Liberal statesman when he is on the Opposition side of the House. Let him tone down the exuberance of utterance upon those lines of policy until he diligently listens and carefully finds out what the leaders say, and what the "Globe" itself says at this present date, in this present year of grace, 1897, and this month in which action is proposed. Now, some of my hon. friends who have expressed their opinion strongly against this measure are non-progressists, they have not been able, as I said, to catch on quickly enough. Some of them will come to it probably in this vote, as the leader of the Patrons almost intimated that he would. He thought it would carry, but he said they were only a small band, and of course principle does not count for anything. If you have got votes enough to overbear an adversary, do it; but if it is only principle that you are on don't show your colours. I commend this to the Patrons, and to the Patron leader in this House. Now, there is a point of criticism which hon. gentlemen who are opposed to the fast line, make as a bit of solace to the Government while opposing this scheme, and that is, that they have made a better money bargain. That, my hon. friends will find out, remains to be seen. If it is of the essence of this matter that it is honestly gone into and from a conviction that an Atlantic fast service is a necessity of to-day, it is open to this criticism which I make and which I feel it is right to make, that the hon. gentleman and the Government, in asking the House to pass this resolution, are experimenting, and dangerously experimenting. They are taking all the perils of experimenting. Why, Sir, they have taken this new type, and it is admitted by hon. gentlemen from Ontario, who have taken as a basis for a decreased cost the new type upon which the vessel is to be built, this bottle-necked type. It is something new. Coal barges have been built upon this model; coal steamers also; but there was never a passenger vessel which was proceeding upon any well-defined or important route that was built upon this model, the bottle-necked pattern, so to speak. My hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) is in this position, that he is recommending, and his Government are taking up a vote of Parliament of $500,000 and more, to enable an inventor, no, not an inventor, but the broker of an inventor, to experiment with an invention that has not yet been tried on the trackless waste of water anywhere in the world. Now, it may succeed, but if it does succeed that removes only one out of the list of contingencies. It is all very well for my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) to quiet the apprehensions of his followers by indulging in prophecies that this will be a great success. Mr. Knapp will do that. Go down to the town of Brockville and talk with Mr. Knapp who is now having built, a steamer that is not bottle-necked, but barrelled, and is going to roll in forty-eight hours all the way from Halifax to Liverpool on the otherside. He will tell you that he has not the slightest doubt that that will prove a great commercial and navigating success. My hon. friend (Mr. Dobell) can only prophesy. He can only hope that maybe this will turn out well, but I am informed by a pretty good authority that these gentlemen who have undertaken this business are coming to the conclusion that the new line type as applied to vessels of this size is a doubtful experiment at the best, and that they are coming very rapidly to the idea that they will have to drop the models which they have submitted and adopt vessels of the type of the "Campania," and others of that kind. If that be so, I submit that the fault that the Government has committed is in using this fast line vote in an endeavour to experiment with a new type of vessel which has not been proved by any actual experiment and they will consequently run a risk of failure which will be no slight thing for this country. The Government had the offer of a firm who were known to be able to carry out their contracts, who had large interests in Canada, who were proceeding upon the lines of vessels which were in use on all the great steamship routes of the world, and although the cost was $200,000 or $250,000 more, there were the certainties on these points, that they would have a company able to carry out their contract, a company which had large interests in Canada, whose interests are bound up with those of this country and who have a great interest in a route between Canada and England. The second point of criticism that I wish to make is this: When the hon. gentleman undertook to change the line and type of vessels it was their duty to throw the matter open to tender to all steamship companies. There was a change of policy in the line and type of vessels that they proposed to take. It is very different to ask tenders from shipping firms for a type of vessels like the "Lucania" and the "Campania," which are well understood because the running powers and all the mechanism are well known. When these tenders have been received the Government says, "No, we will not have that; the cost is too great. We will alter our conditions of tender; we will alter our conditions of contract, and we will contract for a line that is built upon a totally new model and a totally new plan." Then, I say, it would only have been fair to the shipping interests of this country and the shipping interests of all countries and to the public interests of this country, as well, that new tenders should have been asked for on the new lines. I wish to make these two points of criticism and to say that if, after the lapse of a few years, during which this experiment is going on, it is proved that it is impossible for the contractors to carry out this contract or that this build of vessel is a failure, the Government will have to take the responsibility of giving a very black eye indeed to any future attempt to connect Canada with Great Britain by a fast Atlantic service. They will discredit the idea and discredit the route, as well, by any possible failure that may take place in the matter. The Government say that it is costing less than the original proposition. Granted that it is; but suppose that these steamers are built and they commence to run and they are found to be failures, that it is actually impossible to run them for the small subsidy, the alternative is in the face of the Government, as to whether the line shall be discontinued or whether, upon actual proof being given that these vessels cannot be continued without a greater subsidy, the Government shall come down and ask for a supplementary vote in order to keep the line running, basing their ground for the asking of that vote on the demonstration that the subsidy is too small. In facing that alternative they will ask Parliament to implement the amount and Parliament will be very likely to implement the amount if they feel that it is impossible for the service to be carried on for so small a subsidy. Is that fair to the general contracting public? If you give to a steamship company the power to get a contract under which they propose to carry on an experiment, putting it at a low figure, and finding out afterwards that they have to change the type of their vessels, the subsidy is too low and they apply for more, it will be giving to that line a step over all their competitors and enable them to get a contract really without tender to the disadvantage of reputable firms who have had an interest in Canada for many years, and whose interest would be bound up in the success of the service that they would be carrying on between Canada and the old country. That is all I have to say in the way of criticism. No one will be more heartily glad than myself if the venture of the Government proves successful, but there are great risks in attendance upon the experiment. If they gain this fast line under the conditions which were laid down and of the excellence which they demand, no one will be happier than we who sit on this side of the House, and if it shall prove that they have been unable to do that at a decreased cost to the country. The element of risk in experimenting with a new line of vessels is one that ought not to be left out of consideration, and must meet with criticism on this and that side of the House. There was no element of risk in the other scheme. The lines of vessels were well known, but there is the element of risk in this. I do not wish to take the time of the House to any greater length. My views are well known upon the general policy of a fast Atlantic service. I am in favour of it. I shall support, with these criticisms, the resolution of my hon. friend opposite (Sir Richard Cartwright) for the establishment of a fast Atlantic service, and I will again hope that it will be gained for the sum they have named.

Mr. McNEILL. Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to take up more than a moment or two in discussing this matter. There is one thing that, at all events, I am sure we are all pleased with and it is the very fair nature of the criticism which has been used in reference to the project. Both the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) and the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Foster) have, I think, criticised the proposal of the Government in a most fair and straightforward manner. I should be very sorry, for my part, if I thought the view of my hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. Foster) in one respect at least was a sound one. I cannot believe, and I would be sorry to believe that if what he describes as a pure experiment, the employment of a line of steamships of a kind of construction which has never been on a passenger route before, resulted in failure, that failure would be regarded as in any degree a reproach to the possibility of our establishing a successful fast line across the Atlantic. This is, no doubt, as my hon. friend has said, to a certain extent in the nature of an experiment; and if, unhappily, it should turn out that these vessels are not so well qualified as we hope for the service which they are expected to perform, because they are of a peculiar type, that fact should not, I think, in any degree militate against the possibility of establishing a fast line with vessels of the ordinary type of construction. But as regard the course pursued by the Government, I think it only fair to say that if it is to be an experiment, it is at least, if I understood aright the interesting statements made by the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell), an experiment which commanded the approval of experts of the Admiralty; and the best evidence of that is that the Imperial Government are prepared to give the grant towards this line which they agreed to give, notwithstanding that vessels of this construction are being employed. If the Admiralty thought they were vessels of bad construction, or vessels not likely to perform the service required of them, certainly the Imperial grant would not be forthcoming. From that point of view, I think we may well justify the Government in entering upon this experiment, if it ought to be called an experiment. I wish, for my part, to say that I am delighted to find that in this matter the Government have taken the energetic course which they have taken, and that they have so speedily placed us in a position to believe that we shall have a first-class line of steamers plying between Canadian ports and British ports within two years. I am delighted to think that we have reached that point in this matter. To all those who have been endeavouring to promote an Imperial policy—and I venture to make use of that expression, notwithstanding what has been said by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton)—it is very gratifying to find that we have arrived at last at this position, that both the great parties in this country admit that the best and safest and surest market for the surplus products of Canada is to be found in the mother country; and that we have arrived at this other point, that both parties are prepared in as short a time as possible to provide the quickest possible communication between Canada and that market. And when hon. gentlemen representing agricultural constituencies have spoken of the farmers of this country being opposed to a policy of this kind, I wish to say that the farmers of this country have been largely misled in regard to this policy. I feel satisfied that when the matter is fairly put before the farmers of this country, they will not be opposed to such a policy. I want to call the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite who have spoken on this matter, especially the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan), to the fact that the line which is now being established is to provide special accommodation for the products of the farmers. A very large space is to be provided for cold storage accommodation which was not the case with the fast line which was contracted for previously. That is a very great advantage to the farmers. One of the arguments that used to be urged against a fast line was that we did not want passenger vessels only, but that we wanted vessels that would carry freight. These vessels will carry from 1,500 to 2,000 tons of freight. When these facts are placed before my hon. friend's constituents, I am quite sure that there will not be the same opposition among them to such a service that there was when they were promised no such advantages. When the hon. gentleman says that it does not matter to the farmers whether their products are carried a few days more quickly or a few days more slowly across the Atlantic, he overlooks the fact that the farmers are likely to have in the mother country a market for perishable goods; and if we are to send our fruits and other perishable products to the markets of the mother country the facilities provided by this line for carrying them across the Atlantic in a few days and in good condition, will be an incalculable boon to the farmers of Canada; for by this means they will have a market for these products which otherwise they would not have had at all. For my part, I heartily congratulate the Government on the arrangement they have made, and I sincerely hope that it will turn out to be as successful as they expect.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. GUAY. I draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Godbout) has not voted, nor has the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Choquette).

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I am paired with the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague), otherwise I would have voted for the resolution.

Mr. GODBOUT. I am paired with the hon. member for Kent (Mr. McInerney). I would have voted in favour of the resolution.

Mr. McNEILL.

Mr. HEYD. I understood that my pair with the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. Ferguson) commenced this evening, but I hear it began at three o'clock; therefore, I desire to withdraw the vote recorded by me.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion has been declared carried, but the hon. gentleman's explanation will be taken into account by the reporters of the Debates of the House.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 141) respecting cold storage on steamships from Canada to the United Kingdom.—(Mr. Fisher.)

ACT RESPECTING INTEREST.

Bill (No. 134) respecting interest was read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

2. Whenever any interest is, by the terms of any written or printed contract and whether under seal or not, made payable at a rate or percentage per day, week, month, or at any rate or percentage for any period less than a year, no interest exceeding the rate or percentage of six per cent per annum shall be chargeable, payable or recoverable on any part of the principal money unless the contract contains an express statement of the yearly rate or percentage of interest to which such other rate or percentage is equivalent.

Mr. TISDALE. Suppose the document made the interest payable half-yearly, would the Act apply?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). If the interest is made payable at a certain rate or percentage for any period less than a year, it would apply, but if the interest is so much per year, payable half-yearly or otherwise, it would not apply.

Mr. TISDALE. If the note was made for a term of years, and the interest payable half-yearly, would this Bill apply?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No. If the contract provides for the payment of a sum of money with an undertaking to pay interest thereon at so much per annum, the interest may be made payable monthly or quarterly or semi-annually, and this Bill would not apply. It is necessary that the rate of interest per annum should be stipulated. If, on the other hand, the interest is made payable so much per day or week or month, and not at a certain rate per year, the Bill will apply.

Mr. SPROULE. If, for instance, as is usually done, there is a foot note on the promissory note to the effect that interest at the rate of 2 per cent shall be charged then this Bill would apply, because the rate is for a period less than a year.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). Suppose the interest is not made payable by the day or week or month, but is added in a lump sum to the principal and does not appear on the face of the note as interest at all, would the Act apply? It seems to me it would not.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is not intended to apply to any such case as that.

Mr. TISDALE. I am strongly of the opinion that it would apply under the wording, if you cover up the interest with the principal. Take the ordinary banking way of doing business. There is no question of interest at all in the note, but you pay what is called a discount, and that is added to the principal: For instance, you borrow $100 from a bank and they charge 7 per cent, and you give a note for $107 without mention of interest at all. Would this clause make that clause bad as regards the extra 1 per cent?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It would not. The object is to prevent people from charging so much interest for a short time, for instance a day or a week or a month, without the person who is undertaking to borrow the money and pay the interest knowing the exact nature of the obligation he has contracted. It is substantially an extension to promissory notes of the provisions already in our statutes applying to loans made with a sinking fund or mortgage attached. I understand my hon. friend to point out this case. Would it be possible for a man to borrow $10 and give his note for $20, and agree to pay 6 per cent per annum on that $20, without that note coming under this proposed legislation? I think that would be an avoidance of the spirit of the Act, and would be reached by the third clause if the borrower did not know how much he was paying for interest annually.

Mr. SPROULE. In that case, would not the interest be considered as principal? It does not appear as interest, and in giving your note you give it for value received.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The second section seems to me to refer to a contract which has, in express terms on its face, the payment of interest at a certain rate; and if you take a note in that way, it must mention the rate of interest per annum or you cannot recover more than 6 per cent. But suppose I borrow $100 and agree to pay $75 interest, and in pursuance of this agreement I give my note for the $175, would that come within the terms of the section? It would be a practical evasion, but if we mean to include that kind of case, our wording should be broader.

Mr. TISDALE. The object, I take it, is to protect those who do not understand what they are promising, or do you mean to go further and compel people to express on the face of the note the interest they are willing to pay? I believe that in the case of money as in that of any other commodity, provided people understand what they are doing, they have a right to agree to pay any price or any rate of interest they please. Since we adopted the principle of free money with regard to interest, or the right of people to agree to pay any rate of interest they please, we have had cheaper money.

I am quite prepared to support any legislation that will prevent imposition, but I cannot understand from the Bill precisely what is meant. Now, my view of the Act is in accord with that of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Davies), and if it means what he says it does, I am in favour of it. But if it means that if a man shall not agree to pay whatever rates he pleases, why then, I think it is a step in the wrong direction. We had that matter before the House two or three sessions ago. It was referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee and was discussed in Committee of the Whole, and we finally affirmed the principle of what I call free money, in the sense of allowing bargains to be made for money the same as for any other article. I thought it meant what the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries said, but I presume that the hon. gentleman who introduced the Bill understood what was covered by it better than I did, for I have not had the same time to consider it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). The object is to protect the borrower so that he may know exactly the nature of the contract he is entering into. A hypothetical case is put by the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) in which, he says, the law can be evaded, and a man may take one of these usurious contracts. If he attempts to evade the law, and, as a result, a usurious contract is entered into, under the 3rd clause he has a right to recover.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The object is to protect ignorant people who go to borrow money, from being charged exorbitant rates of interest. If this is the object, it seems to me that object should be stated in plain terms and the Bill should be made to cover the case. I do not think that the expressions used in section 2 cover the case which my hon. friend (Mr. Tisdale) alluded to. Suppose a man goes to borrow ten dollars and a note is made out for fifteen dollars, to be paid in a month. I do not think that that case will come either under section 3 or under section 2. Section 2 says that the rate of interest is to be stated in the contract, but in the case which my hon. friend gave, there would be no arrangement concerning a rate of interest. There would simply be an agreement to pay a bulk sum at the expiration of a certain time. Then there could be no recovery under section 3, because that relates exclusively to what is said in the second section. It seems to me, therefore, that this law will be evaded every time and that the borrower will be practically left where he is.

Mr. BRITTON. This Bill, as it seems to me, is intended to meet a particular case that is said to have occurred in the province of Quebec, in which a very large judgment was recovered against a man because he had signed a note under which he agreed to pay interest at a rate of so much per day. The Bill does not provide in any way against the state of things suggested by the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain). Though I agree with him as to what will be done, I think it can hardly be said there will be an evasion of the law, if the law does not provide against that which is suggested. Where it is agreed that a lump sum is to be paid, there is no contravention of the second section of the Act. If the agreement does not contravene the second section, the money could not be recovered because, as has been said—and it need not more than be repeated—if it is not paid under a state of circumstances that the section provides for, it cannot be recovered under the third section of the Act. If I may be allowed to say anything against a Bill that is introduced by the Government, I do submit that this is a piece of rather useless legislation. Still, there is no doubt it provides, at all events, for one case, the case of a man being led to sign a contract that will prove a very hard one, and will make him liable for a very large sum if it is allowed to run on, through having a rate of interest specified at so much per day or per week. Such legislation has been enacted in Ontario in reference to building societies to which the principal is to be paid back on the sinking fund plan. They are prohibited from carrying on business on this plan unless the mortgage under which the instalments are paid states the rate of interest secured and being paid by the borrower. In case that is omitted, only 6 per cent can be recovered. Now, if this Bill is intended to go as far as the Solicitor General indicates, the second clause ought to be widened in some way so as to reach the class of cases to which he refers. But if the Bill is intended only to meet the particular case to which reference has been made, I think that no change is necessary.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think the Bill clearly states on the face what it intends to do—that where a man enters into a contract to pay a certain sum of money in a certain time, after the lapse of that time, it shall not be content to charge him 2 or 3 per cent per month that such a rate cannot be collected, and if it is collected, it shall apply on the principal.

Mr. POWELL. No, no.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not understand the meaning of the clause if that is not the meaning.

Mr. POWELL. You have been reading some other Bill.

Mr. McMULLEN. It provides where interest is charged "at any rate or percentage for any period less than a year," if it is in excess of 6 per cent that is collected, than the amount that is over 6 per cent shall apply on the principal. I know that there are people who lend money and who have notes drawn in that way, and I think that the innocent borrower should be protected against an extortionate rate of interest sought to be imposed upon him in this way. In a case such as that stated by the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), where the interest is embodied in the principal, I do not see very well how you can legislate to reach that. I question very much if you can do so. But I think it is well we should pass a law of this kind, because there are cases within my own knowledge of people who have been robbed and almost ruined by enormous rates of interest attached to notes after the time of their maturity. We should try to protect the innocent who are forced to borrow money, so that if he gets into the clutches of a man who is unscrupulous enough virtually to rob him, the law shall step in and prevent him from extorting this 4 or 5 per cent per month.

Mr. QUINN. While I congratulate the Government upon introducing a Bill much on the lines of a Bill introduced by myself, I realize that it does not exactly cover the line I wanted to cover. As has been explained by the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) the object is to protect innocent and indigent borrowers and place them in a position that an extortionate rate of interest cannot be exacted from them by usury. While I do not like to speak against the provisions of this Bill which is somewhat upon the lines of my own, I venture to offer a word or two of criticism. The Bill provides that if a man, no matter what his circumstances, agrees to pay a rate over 6 per cent—say 60 per cent—that amount can be collected from him. Now, we all know how usurers operate. It is not by disguising the rate of interest that is paid per annum or by offering a small rate of interest at the time they made the loan. They make the loan in this way: A man borrows $100; he signs a note agreeing to pay $150 in a month, and to the end of that note is tacked a clause to this effect: "In the event of this note not being paid at maturity, interest at the rate of $10 or $20 or $50 per month shall be charged." Under this Act they would not be allowed to collect $10, or $20, or the amount that would be charged, and I apprehend that is the intention of the Bill, and that it is a correct construction to put upon the clause. But in order to get over this Bill, all that would be necessary by the usurer would be to say, instead of interest at the rate of $10 per month, interest at the rate of 60 per cent per annum, and that rate could be collected. Now, while I think this is a move in the right direction, I think it does not do all that is required at the moment. As has been said by several hon. members who have already spoken, this Act originated on account of certain transactions, not only in the province of Quebec, but in other provinces. Probably we hear more about them from the province of Quebec, because public spirit is greater there, and interests itself more in protecting the poorer classes of the people. But the fact is that usury exists in different parts of this country besides the province of Quebec. It is probably brought to light in the province of Quebec more frequently than in any other province; but I know, as a matter of fact, that usury thrives all over this country, and that they exact the severest payments from people of indigent circumstances, particularly if they are ignorant persons. I am glad to see this Bill introduced, and am heartily in favour of the clause. I think it does not do all that it ought to do, but it is a step in the right direction, and I support it on that ground. When the time comes, and we find that usurers have adopted means to overcome this and evade the law, then it will be the duty of the House to interfere and bring in other legislation to operate against them. It is only by expressing the opinions of this House on this question as we are doing now, that we can notify these people that attention is being given to them, and that if they attempt to circumvent the provisions of this Bill in any way, still greater attention will be given them and the subject of usury in the future.

Mr. POWELL. I think my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is certainly right in his construction of this section. I will take two cases. The agreement may state the amount of the loan or debt and also contain a promise to pay. That case may be provided for by this section and it may be said by a forced construction that it meets the words of the section which, in terms, require the amount of interest to be set forth. It may be argued that inasmuch as the amount of interest appears on the face of the agreement the rate of interest appears, by the terms of the written, or printed, contract. But in a case where there is no recital of the amount actually due or received, the Act does not apply. Supposing a note is for $107 and $100 is the principal. By the terms of the agreement, the rate of interest in no way appears expressly or by inference. The interest is outside of the written agreement. Suppose that $90 were the principal, the terms of the written agreement show no difference. If there was anything on the face of the agreement to show the amount received and the amount to be paid, then it is possible the language of the section might cover the case, but not otherwise.

THE COMPANIES ACT.

The House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 135) to amend the Companies Act—(from the Senate).—(Mr. Fitzpatrick.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Difficulty has arisen in the construction of the words, "limitation" and "commercial paper" discounted by the company. The words "commercial paper" here apply to what is commonly known as trade paper. There is a difference of opinion as to the meaning of the words, and we think it proper to make it clear.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 132) further to amend the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons.—(Mr. Davies.)

I.C.R.—EXTENSION TO MONTREAL.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair) moved that the House resolve itself into committee to consider a certain proposed resolution (page 4088) declaring it expedient to confirm an agreement entered into with the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada and the Drummond County Railway Company and Her Majesty for the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to the city of Montreal.

Mr. FOSTER. Is my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) going to make his statement on these resolutions before going into committee?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will do it in committee.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it would be much more in order to make the discussion on the principle of the thing before going into committee and leave the committee for the discussion of the items.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We will go into committee first.

Mr. FOSTER. I as one member of the House wish to discuss this on the principle of the thing outside of the mere discussion in the committee stage. We have had no discussion upon it at all. It is not generally the practice to propose a resolution, and go into committee upon it without any explanation of the resolution at all, and I do not want to speak before I have heard the explanation of the Minister.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I think my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) will perceive that it will be much more convenient in this case for the Minister to make his statement in committee and then reply from time to time as occasion requires. He will have greater facilities for dealing with it in committee than he would have with you, Mr. Speaker, in the Chair and then going into committee afterwards.

Mr. FOSTER. But the House may not have a disposition to go into committee.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think it does not really make any difference. The question has been submitted to the House by the general statement of the Minister of Railways and now the resolution is formally moved. When the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) moves that the House should go into committee, the discussion can be taken probably with more regularity and with less loss of time. Then if the House decides to go into committee it is a mere question of discussion in reference to the various clauses.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) does not propose to give the House any information in reference to the position of the Government we will have to discuss this question without that information. Are we to be forced to discuss this question before the House is given any explanation? This is the first time within my knowledge that a responsible Minister has shown such discourtesy in introducing a question by refusing to discuss the principle of it before going into the details in committee. The discussion that we had was simply upon a statement that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) made.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is quite true, Mr. Speaker, and yet it was a statement of the terms of the proposed arrangement between the company and the Government, and although a considerable discussion took place at that time it was merely upon the statement which I then gave to the committee. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) knows very well that it is a mere matter of technical objection that he is now raising, and there is no want of courtesy on the part of the Government in the slightest degree. This course has been the usual course and it is a course which I thought would doubtless commend itself to the general approval of the House, because we thereby afforded every possible opportunity to hon. gentlemen on both sides to express their views on the features of these proposals. I need not say that I am quite unable to admit any discourtesy such as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) asserts I have committed. On the contrary I must take whatever course is the acceptable one without the slightest choice on my part. It is not a matter of any considerable moment one way or the other so far as any statement I have to make is concerned. I am willing to make it if it is insisted upon.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think it is better.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If that is the desire I have no objection. Mr. Speaker, in endeavouring to meet the wishes of hon. gentlemen opposite the other day I made a brief statement to the House as to the terms on which the Government propose to enter into an arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the Drummond Railway Company for the purpose of carrying out the policy and extending the Intercolonial Railway to the city of Montreal. I think, Sir, that my hon. friends opposite rather got the advantage of me by reason of my having pursued that course. My purpose simply was to comply with the request which had been made by the hon. gentleman himself (Sir Charles Tupper) and in respect to which I did on the 20th May last indicate to the hon. gentleman the course that I would pursue if it met with his approval. The hon. gentleman on that day asked me whether there would be an announcement made of the arrangements which had been declared to be concluded on the opening day of the session. I replied as follows:—

I think I will be prepared, at the first opportunity which will be convenient for the purpose, to make a complete statement of the proposed arrangement. I do not know just in what form the hon. member would desire that it should be presented.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What I propose is, that the promise made by the Governor General should be fulfilled and that this arrangement should be laid before this House for its approval.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no question but that will be done in the ordinary course. I thought that the hon. gentleman desired to have some explanation prior to the submission of the resolution and the Bill, so that the House might be informed as to the details. I shall take occasion, if it will answer the convenience or suit the purpose of the hon. gentleman, when the Estimates are on having reference to the Railway Department, to make a full statement with regard to these details.

Having given the hon. gentleman that assurance at his own instance and request, when the items relating to the Railway Department were reached in Supply I availed myself at once of the opportunity of presenting to the House a statement of the terms which had been agreed upon between the contracting parties and I made, I think, as the hon. members will at once acknowledge no pretense to do more than to state these terms. I presented no reasons or arguments in support of the policy which is being proposed to Parliament. I did not pretend at all to enter into the subject, or in any way to justify the course the Government were proposing to take. But the hon. gentlemen opposite took advantage, I think somewhat unfairly, of the course I was pursuing, and precipitated a discussion which appeared, and was necessarily, under the circumstances, very one-sided; because I had not contemplated for one moment that I would be expected, and did not come prepared, to present the case to the committee in support of the Government policy. Knowing, as every one knows, that there was no resolution asking the opinion of Parliament upon it, I felt that it was scarcely a convenient opportunity, to say the least of it, to present the case, as I thought it could and should be presented, when the question was fully and fairly before the House.

I do not know, Sir, that I can complain of the course which the hon. gentlemen opposite then took, although I acknowledge that they have to some extent succeeded in conveying a very erroneous and false impression with regard to the wisdom of the Government policy, and have succeeded, to some extent at all events, in creating an entire misconception of the question in the public mind. Notwithstanding that, I do not know that I much regret the course which the hon. gentlemen have taken. It very clearly indicated a determination upon their part to condemn the policy which we were outlining without being willing to take the amount of time which would reasonably be required to consider it in all its bearings, and to form a proper judgment upon it; and this also afforded me an opportunity of getting some idea of the line these gentlemen proposed to take in resisting the propositions the Government were presenting to Parliament. I observe, Mr. Speaker, that the word has gone forth to the Opposition press as to the kind of reception they are to give this proposition. I notice that it is to be characterized, and is being characterized, in very strong terms. It is called a flagrant job, and I am characterized as being a bold jobber and corruptionist by reason of having made this proposition to Parliament as a member of the Administration. Well, Sir, one would almost think that the experience which some gentlemen have had in the past with regard to charges of that description, would have led them to exercise a little care, a little caution, and a little judgment, before starting out on such accusations. We all know how very easy a thing it is for people to make charges of jobbery against Governments. It does not require very much material to formulate these accusations, and it is very often done by reason of the absence of any real solid objection against the proposals which are made. It is easy enough for our friends opposite to say that a transaction is a job, and to charge members of the Government who are identified with it, and the Government as a whole who are promoting it, with being guilty of corruption. But seeing that these charges flow so glibly from some lips, I would have expected that our hon. friends opposite, with their past experience, would have paused a little, and have taken the trouble to study these proposals and to ascertain their real nature and their real merits, at least, before adopting such a method of criticism.

Well, Sir, I think that these proposals, when they come to be examined, will justify themselves. I am prepared to justify them before this Parliament; I am prepared to justify them fully before the country, and I think it will be made clear, before this discussion is over that if there ever was a proposition submitted to Parliament which had a solid foundation, which was meritorious in the extreme, which could be justified in the public interest, which was a reasonable, fair and just proposition, the one I am about to submit elaborately fulfils all these conditions. I will undertake before I sit down to show this Parliament that the utmost care and judgment have been exercised in the consideration of all the details of this arrangement from beginning to end. I am willing as a member of this Government to take upon myself, if it were necessary, the entire responsibility of having initiated this policy and of having had it pressed upon the consideration of my colleagues. There is nothing in it, I tell these hon. gentlemen, upon which they can found the suspicion of jobbery; there is nothing in it that will not stand the test of a critical examination by the business men of this country.

Now, I take it, the first question that will naturally arise for the consideration of Parliament in this connection is this: Is the general policy involved in this question one that ought to be commended? That policy is the question of an extension of the Intercolonial from its present terminus to the city of Montreal. That question I propose to examine for a few moments before I enter into a communication of the details. That is the large question that underlies the whole matter; and if it is not possible to convince Parliament that there is an ample justification for extending the railway from its present terminus to the city of Montreal, then the whole proposition should and will fall to the ground, and be condemned by the judgment of Parliament. But I am willing to confess I thought it impossible that there would be any voice raised in this Parliament against the wisdom of the policy involved in these proposals. I thought there was scarcely any man familiar with the conditions under which the Intercolonial Railway had during all these years been operated and maintained, who would not be free to recognize the difficulties and disadvantages under which, from every business point of view, it has been managed and operated. I thought it would be conceded at once that the same conditions which apply to the operation of other railways in this and other countries, would be applicable to the case of the Intercolonial Railway, and that there was a need, a pressing and imperative need, at the earliest possible moment when an arrangement could be effected on reasonable terms, that an arrangement should be made by which the Intercolonial Railway should reach Montreal and establish a terminus in that great city. What are the reasons which made it our duty as the owners and operators of this vast property to propose this policy and to press it upon the favourable consideration of Parliament? Why, Sir, where does this railway terminate? In a little village 170 odd miles from the city of Montreal—in a little village so situated that the Intercolonial Railway is practically blocked from reaching Montreal and the country west of that city, by a piece of railway owned by a rival and competing line. What would be the feeling with which the owners of any railway would encounter such a condition of things? I said the other day, and I repeat, that there is no railway company in this or any other country which, if it found itself in a like case, would not strain every nerve and assume every reasonable responsibility in order to relieve itself of the incubus under which it laboured, the trammels under which it was operated, and to remove the blocks which prevented it reaching a point where it might fairly undertake all the business that offered, and where it might pursue under favourable conditions the object for which the railway was established. Under existing conditions, I say the Intercolonial Railway cannot be successfully operated. I venture to say that there is nothing which has given occasion for more discussion in this Parliament in times past than the fact that the Intercolonial Railway has been operated all these years at a loss. People have pointed to the annual deficit recurring from time to time, and have drawn the inference that there was something wrong in the system of owning and operating Government railways. The idea has gone abroad and has sunk deeply in people's minds, that because the Intercolonial Railway has not been a paying property—or, in other words, has scarcely in all its history been able to show a balance on the right side of its accounts—there was something inherently vicious in the Government ownership of railways, and that the less a Government had to do with them the better. That was an idea which I think I am justified in saying strongly impressed itself upon the people's minds. But I think I shall be able to show this committee that if there has been one thing more than another which has led to this state of affairs, it is that the Intercolonial Railway has been cribbed, cabined and confined. I will give this committee, before I get through, good reasons for believing that after this extension shall be concluded, and after it shall have an opportunity of getting into successful competition, the days of deficits will be over, and we shall be able—I do not say to pay interest on the capital invested—I do not think the country looks for that—but by the business arrangements which we shall be in a position to make, and by the facilities which will be secured to us in Montreal, to show a balance on the right side of the account and to reverse the record which has been exhibited in the running operations of this railway in times past. I do not desire to make any reflection upon the administration of the Intercolonial Railway in the past. I do not say that it has not been wisely handled or that it has been extravagantly handled. I am not in a position yet to express any definite opinion on that point; but I do say, as far as I have been able to exercise any little judgment I may have, that the extension of this railway to the city of Montreal will reverse the position it has had in the past by creating business which cannot fail to produce vastly improved results.

When I assumed control of the Department of Railways, I asked myself the question: Can anything be done to get us into Montreal? Though not a railway man, though not pretending to any experience in railway matters, though not versed in the details of railway management, I did feel that when we had a railway which traversed 1,200 miles of this country, which crossed through the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and a large portion of the province of Quebec, it was our bounden duty, if we could accomplish it upon reasonable terms, to lose no time in carrying out this policy of extension to Montreal. As I said the other night, and as I repeat now, I do not arrogate to myself any credit for having conceived the idea, because I know it was in the minds and intention of hon. gentlemen opposite. I know that they looked into this matter, and I know that if they did not come to any decision, it was because it is always more convenient to put these proposals off than to take them in hand. Every Government has influences behind it urging the advisability of not taking up these large proposals, but of putting them off from day to day, and they are put off; but I felt that we could not take up this question under more favourable circumstances as a new Government, coming into a new Parliament, seeking to initiate a new policy. I felt that if there ever would be a time in the life of this Government when we could command the support and confidence of Parliament, the present was the time to take up and carry this policy to completion.

I wish to make no reflection upon the management of the Grand Trunk Railway. I do not think that the conduct of that company with respect to the Intercolonial Railway has been different in any particular from what would have been the conduct of any other railway situated in like position. Their object has always been naturally to make the best out of existing conditions, and in that view they imposed at times onerous terms upon the Intercolonial Railway which prevented our carrying any considerable proportion of the freight traffic to Montreal. And the inconsiderable portion of freight traffic which did find its way via the Grand Trunk Railway to Montreal over the Intercolonial Railway, found its way under conditions which were not as favourable. I venture to affirm, as they would have been if the Government had owned that piece of railway, or as they will be in the future if we are authorized by Parliament to become owners of that piece of railway. In all that through business, the policy of the Grand Trunk Railway has been to exact from us all they could. There have been at times undoubtedly, arrangements made which were somewhat fair, but they certainly were not as fair as we thought they should have been. No doubt the Grand Trunk Railway exacted from us a larger proportion of the mileage rate than they should have received or should have been fairly chargeable against the mileage. So that upon every ton of freight carried to and from the Intercolonial Railway via the Grand Trunk Railway system from Montreal to Lévis and Lévis to Montreal, we have been obliged to pay to the Grand Trunk Railway Company from the freight rates we received, a larger portion than was due to them, or that they would have been fairly entitled to get, if they had been simply charging us the pro rata mileage.

I said the other day, and repeat it now, in order to revive the recollection of hon. gentlemen, that we were not in a position to exercise any control in any respect over these freight charges. We could not send representatives to the conventions held for the purpose of arranging these matters. We had no right to be represented at these conventions at all, and therefore had no say whatever in the arrangements reached. All these things pointed to the necessity, it seems to me, of the adoption of the policy we are now submitting to Parliament, and to which, I venture to hope, Parliament will give its almost unanimous support and approval.

I understand that the objection is raised to this proposition that we are not thereby able to shorten the route between Halifax and Montreal as compared with the route over the Canadian Pacific Railway. A comparison is instituted between the mileage from Halifax via the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal and the mileage from Halifax via the Canadian Pacific Railway to Montreal, and because the mileage is greater by the Intercolonial Railway, the argument is adduced, that since we cannot absolutely annihilate distance, since we cannot overcome that difference, we are therefore not making a reasonable proposition. I for one admit frankly to-night, as I did the other night, that the question of mileage did not enter into the consideration at all in my mind, and I doubt if it entered into consideration in the minds of any of my colleagues when we were studying this question, as we did very carefully. We know that in order to be able to make the Intercolonial Railway a success, we should be able to carry our through traffic to Montreal; and that unless we could succeed in making an arrangement of the kind we now submit, we never could do it. Therefore it was not a question to my mind of greater or less mileage, but a question of getting into Montreal by the shortest way over our own road and on the most favourable terms, in order that we might work out the natural results which, as a railway, we hoped to accomplish. But if we are to consider the question of mileage between Halifax and Montreal, what is to be said with regard to the fact that we own the railway from Halifax to St. John, which forms part of the connection that the hon. gentleman includes in the Canadian Pacific Railway? I refer to the Government railway from Halifax to St. John. I presume that we are to be considered as owing some obligation to this country, and I think it is proper for us to take into account what will pay in the interests of our road, having regard, at the same time, of course, to the interests of the country. Well, the Intercolonial Railway, so far as this question is concerned, is the proprietor of all that track not only via Moncton to Lévis but from Halifax to St. John, a distance of over 270 miles of railway, which the hon. gentleman includes in his calculation.

But from another point of view, why should we consider this question of mileage at all? What becomes of the consideration, that the whole distance from Moncton all the way up through the province of New Brunswick to Lévis runs through a portion of country which does produce traffic which we ought to carry to the city of Montreal? Is Halifax the only point to be considered in the calculation? I apprehend that all that traffic producing country from Moncton to the north, all the way round, making some 700 miles of the Intercolonial Railway, is a portion of the road which may fairly enter into our calculation, when we consider whether or not we should bring our road to Montreal. But the hon. gentleman does not think, in that large and broad view he takes of all these matters, that the interests of the people who live along that portion of the railway are at all worthy of consideration. The question which we therefore have to ask ourselves—but in fact there would be no question whatever to ask ourselves, if we yielded to the force of the hon. gentleman's argument. All we would have to do would be to call to mind the fact, which everybody knows, that the mileage over the Intercolonial Railway would be greater to Montreal than over the Canadian Pacific Railway; and having recalled the fact, we would at once decide that the Intercolonial Railway must remain where it is for all time, and we would have to come to that decision because forsooth we cannot annihilate distance, because we cannot reduce that 76 miles. That is the conclusion at which the hon. gentleman arrives. As I have said, I hope to be able to convince, not the hon. gentleman, but some of those behind him as well as our friends on this side, that there are reasons why it would be unwise for us to sit down in that utterly helpless fashion and allow this great undertaking to remain unfruitful, because we could not shorten the distance from Montreal to Halifax over the Intercolonial Railway, which happens to exceed that over the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Again we are told that we are adding to the public debt by this proposal. So we have been reading in the newspapers which are published in the interests of our hon. friends opposite. And so we have heard from my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition. They have told us that we are adding $7,000,000 or $8,000,000 to the public debt by this proposal. A little consideration will convince anybody that there is no ground at all for that statement. I entirely and absolutely repudiate the soundness of any such claim. You might just as well charge a merchant who happens to think that it would be an advantage to his business if he were to remove his store from a back street to a front street, with having added $8,000 or $10,000 to his liabilities because he has agreed to pay an increased rent of $300 or $400 a year. These gentlemen say: You are adding to the public debt I deny it. We are entering into an arrangement which, I will show you, as far as our foresight and the judgment and experience of the men who have been operating the Intercolonial and are responsible for it, are able to assure us, will enable us to pay every dollar of rental we have engaged to pay, and have a surplus besides. Is it possible that these gentlemen can say that we cannot increase the business of the Intercolonial by getting into Montreal? Is it possible for them to make the statement, against the experience of railway operations and of business men the world over, that we cannot hope for an increase in the earnings of this road and cannot hope to pay any portion of the rental we are incurring by means of the earnings upon this additional mileage, over and above the expenses of working, and so extinguish the debt which the hon. gentleman says is being incurred under the proposal of the Government? We shall not add one dollar to the public debt, unless we fail, by the operation of the railway under the conditions agreed upon, to pay the rental we have engaged to pay upon acquiring these roads. If we fail in that, then, having engaged to pay this rental for ninety-nine years, we shall certainly be assuming what will be equivalent to an addition to the public debt. No man can say with absolute certainty what will be the result; we cannot demonstrate it with geometrical positiveness, but we can form a judgment upon it, we can take the experience of business men, we can learn from the experience of other railways, and draw a fair business conclusion. And if the conclusion that we arrive at is that these new roads acquired under the conditions proposed, will enable us to pay the rental, and that conclusion is justified by experience, we are incurring no debt, and the charge made by hon. gentlemen opposite is an assumption, and has no solid ground upon which to rest.

Now, to give to the House an idea of what our estimates are, what the opinion of the Government is, and what the judgment of those who are advising the Government in this regard is, I will call your attention for a few moments to some data that I have in my possession. I have before me an estimate which has been furnished by the chief engineer of railways as the result of consultation with the general manager of the Intercolonial Railway, which shows the gross earnings of the road, and also the working expenses for the last year or two, and an estimate of what may be expected under the new arrangement with the road extended to Montreal. According to this statement, the gross earnings of the Intercolonial Railway for 1895-96 were $2,957,640. The working expenses were $3,012,000, a difference against the road of about $55,000. It is estimated that the gross earnings for the year after the extension to Montreal will be $3,885,000, and the working expenses, $3,363,000. In other words, the gentlemen who are responsible for the management of the Intercolonial and who have advised me in this regard estimate that there will be a surplus of $520,000 on the first year's operation of the Intercolonial extended to Montreal. Now, I deduct from the earnings which I have stated the rental of $210,000, and I get a net surplus of $310,000, or a margin of, say, three hundred thousand dollars as the result of carrying out this policy of extension.

Now, the gentlemen who give me these figures are not guessing about these matters; they are proceeding upon judgment formed after years of experience of railway operation. They know what the conditions have been, and they can form a fair judgment of what the conditions will become. They have given me an idea as to where this increased revenue is to come from. The tons of freight carried last year numbered 1,379,000. These gentlemen estimate that the amount to be carried in the first year after the extension will be 1,896,000, or about 500,000 tons additional. When you consider that the Intercolonial had only carried some three or four hundred thousand tons of through freight during the past year, when you realize that the earnings of the road, both as to freight and passenger traffic have been in the proportion of four of local against one of through business, you can realize the adverse conditions under which the people's railway has been carried on, you can realize without my pressing the facts upon you how absolutely impossible it has been to operate this road under anything like favourable conditions.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman has given the receipts for 1895-96 and he gives us estimate of receipts in the future. Would he be good enough to give us, also, the estimate of receipts for the current year?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman has asked for the receipts for a year that is not quite ended. I have not that information in my possession. It will probably be a month or even more before I shall be in possession of that information myself. But I may tell my hon. friend that my impression is that the deficit this year will be greater than it was last year: instead of being $55,000, I think it more likely to be $100,000. I may not be entirely correct in that; it is an estimate based upon appearances as they were a few months ago. But the fact, as I say, that we have carried only a small proportion of through passengers and through freight in times past, shows under what disadvantages the road has been operated. We look for an entire change in this respect. Under the conditions that have existed, people scarcely think of taking the Grand Trunk and the Intercolonial going to the maritime provinces. Many do, but the great majority do not. I have gone into the counting-rooms of merchants in Montreal, and have found that they did not know that the Intercolonial had an agent in Montreal though we have had one there for years—and there are gentlemen on this side of the House who know that that is true. How can you expect to operate a railway successfully under such circumstances? I admit that a Government railway must always operate at a disadvantage as compared with railways owned by private corporations; but no railway operated by a corporation could survive such conditions as have been imposed upon the Intercolonial. The sooner we get out of these conditions, the sooner we get alive, the sooner we wake up to the fact that we have a railway and that it is our duty to work it and give it a chance to yield us profit, the better for the road and for the country. I was amused to hear the argument put forward that in acquiring this piece of railway from Lévis to Ste. Rosalie—I am not going into the details, but I will deal with this point now—we were simply entering into competition with the Grand Trunk. We are not entering into competition with the Grand Trunk. We are getting possession of a property that is going to take us, without competition, to a connection with the Grand Trunk. The Grand Trunk will continue to run its road from Lévis via Richmond into Montreal, but it will not compete with us except at the point of departure, Lévis. Perhaps I ought to add the further points between Ste. Rosalie and Montreal. For the rest of the road each line will have its own traffic, and I am led to believe that the traffic along the line which the Government is to secure is a very profitable traffic, and also that the traffic on the Grand Trunk from Lévis via Richmond to Montreal is a very profitable traffic. From Ste. Rosalie around by way of Richmond to Lévis we shall not compete with them; they will get their traffic and we shall get ours. We will compete with them in the trains between Ste. Rosalie and Montreal, because, under the terms of the contract, we are to have the same rights that the Grand Trunk has to pick up traffic, carry passengers, and to get for ourselves the proceeds of any traffic, either freight or passenger, that we carry on that part of the road.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman have the kindness to hand me that calculation he used?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will give you the statement.

Mr. FOSTER. I noticed it was only a statement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Well, perhaps the hon. gentleman may be able to refute it. Now, another proposition which has been put forward unhesitatingly by hon. gentlemen opposite, as if they were in possession of accurate knowledge and were justified in doing so, is that this proposition ought to be condemned because the Drummond County Railway is comparatively worthless, and is unsuitable. Well, I observe that a statement was read by the hon. gentleman from a paper in his hand, and he seemed to be unwilling, at the time, to give us the name of his authority. But I see later that it has found its way into the Montreal "Gazette"; and I wish to make a moment's reference to this statement, because it contains some very extraordinary allegations. The statement bears the signature of F. A. Salisbury, C.E. Now, I do not know Mr. Salisbury; perhaps it is my fault that I do not know him. I have inquired about him, and I am labouring under the great disadvantage of not being able to find anybody who does know him. Possibly Mr. Salisbury may be a gentleman of some considerable reputation in his own profession; I see that he signs himself in this publication as a civil engineer. But I have reason to believe that Mr. Salisbury, in this matter, is moved and impelled in the interest of one, Mr. Armstrong, to start out in this attack upon the Government's proposal. Now, why should Mr. Armstrong interest himself so deeply in this matter? Has he a rival road? Perhaps he has. Has he any particular interest to complain of any action of the Government? I do not know. All I know is that he is connected with an enterprise which he made a very strong effort to induce us as a Government to take up, and he did not succeed. I believe that he accompanied his failure to impress the solid and valuable merits of this enterprise upon the Government with a threat that he was going to have his revenge, and I suppose he is having his revenge. Now, what does he say in this statement? He says:

This railway has been constructed in as cheap a manner as is possible. The grade of the line, to a very large extent, is a surface one, consequently having bad grades that would have been avoided in a first-class line by accepting heavier work.

He says this railway has been constructed in as cheap a manner as is possible. Now, Mr. Salisbury may be a very excellent authority, he may be a sufficient authority to satisfy hon. gentlemen opposite who rely upon his statement. But I set against the statements of Mr. Salisbury, reports which have been received from time to time in the office, reports upon which our friends opposite paid a subsidy to this same company. They thought these reports were sufficient for that purpose, although the standard the Government sets up in respect to these roads is a moderately high one; these gentlemen felt that when the road reached that standard they were justified in paying, and they paid over, subsidies from time to time as they were applied for by the company, until the subsidies to the full amount authorized by law have been paid to this company. Well, as to its being constructed in a cheap manner, I affirm that this road is not constructed in a cheap manner, and I refer you to the report which has been given upon this subject by the chief engineer of railways, and to reports made by other engineers who have examined this road. They say the road is a good road, they say the road-bed is a good road-bed, they say it has been well constructed; according to their statements it is not by any means subject to the strictures which this gentleman (Mr. Salisbury) has passed upon it. This is what the chief engineer of railways says in this respect to this road:

In compliance with your request for information as to the general character of the road constructed by the Drummond County Railway Company from Ste. Rosalie Junction on the Grand Trunk Railway, via Drummondville and St. Leonard to Moose Park, a distance of 73 miles, together with a branch of 17 miles in length from St. Leonard to Nicolet, and also my views as to the standard on which the balance of the road from Moose Park to its junction with the Grand Trunk Railway near Chaudière Bridge, should be built, assuming that the line was to form a section of the Intercolonial Railway, I have to report:

That 73 miles of the road are built and in operation; that the gradients and alignments are favourable, there being only one grade exceeding 53 feet per mile, and that one is 64 feet to the mile; that, with one exception, there is no curve with a less radius than 1,433 feet, and that the one exception is a curve of 953 feet radius.

Then, the roadbed is well and substantially built, the cuttings being 20 feet, and the embankments 15 feet wide at sub-grade. Ample drainage is provided by substantial steel structures, resting on massive masonry, spanning the larger rivers, and steel-plate girders, resting on strong, well-built masonry, spanning the streams of a lesser magnitude, whereas, the general drainage throughout the smaller rivulets has been passed through culverts constructed of sound cedar timber, 10 x 10 inches square.

Then he goes on, as hon. gentlemen will have seen who have read the printed copy of this and other reports which have been placed upon the Table. You will see that he declares:

The road is well ballasted with a very fine quality of gravel; the station buildings are neat buildings, of what I consider sufficient capacity for the requirements of the road, and the water service is good. I think you will agree with me, from the description that I have given of the work, that a really good road has been secured, fully up to the general standard of railways in Canada.

Now, is not Mr. Schreiber, chief engineer of the Government, as good an authority as Mr. Salisbury? And how can any one venture to condemn this road upon the strength of a statement made by a man whose name even my hon. friend opposite was unwilling to disclose, lest, as he thought, probably, it would have militated against the value of the testimony that he was giving. Now, in addition to that, there are reports which have been received from other gentlemen who have gone over this road, and who have examined it since these statements were made. One of them is Mr. Ridout, an official in the department, of long experience. He says :

In accordance with your instructions, I have made an inspection of the Drummond County Railway, from its junction with the Grand Trunk Railway at Ste. Rosalie to the Duchesne River, a distance of 70 miles.

I found the line in excellent condition, fully ballasted, with the exception of about three miles near the St. Francis River, the location of which is to be changed in order to reduce the grade to 53 feet per mile. The track throughout is in very good condition, the rails being 56 pounds steel and in good order ; new ties were being put in where required.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but it will save time, as he is giving Mr. Schreiber's report, to say that this report was made on the 2nd of February, and that he adds here one sentence, which the hon. gentleman did not read :

Should you finally decide to acquire the road, before the matter is absolutely closed, I suggest it would be prudent to have an examination made into its condition.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not read it, not because there was anything in it which I was unwilling to read, but because I had put that same report the hon. gentleman has in his hands, in the hands of every member of this House. I entirely assent to every word therein stated. True, Mr. Schreiber says it would be well to go over the road, and the road was gone over ; before this resolution was submitted to Parliament the road was gone over, and if we had found that there was anything different from what had been represented to us and what we had been led to believe with respect to the condition of this road, it would have been a small matter to insist, and we would have insisted, upon all these conditions being fulfilled. However, what Mr. Schreiber therein referred to was the necessity of looking the ground over in the spring to see whether, in any particular, not as to the general character of the road, not as to the road-bed generally, not as to the quality of the bridge structures, not as to the alignment, not as to the ballasting, but as to any exceptional or minor particulars in which it might be well to have the road examined before the arrangement was finally concluded. Now, Mr. Ridout goes on to add :

All the bridges are of steel superstructure on very good cement masonry abutments and piers. At the St. Francis River, there is at present 60 feet of trestle-work, which is to be replaced with a permanent structure. The line is fenced throughout, with exception of about  $7\frac{1}{2}$  miles through dense woods and swamps, where fencing is not at present required. The station buildings and sidings are amply sufficient for the traffic ; some of the buildings require repairs and painting, which, I am informed, is to be done at once.

And which is being done. Still another report was obtained from another engineer in the department, Mr. Johnson, who says :

Having made an inspection of the Drummond County Railway for a distance of about 70 miles from Ste. Rosalie, I beg to submit the following report :—

I found the roadbed to be firm and in very good shape throughout, and, with the exception of three miles purposely left without ballast in view of a contemplated change of alignment, well ballasted, the material being of exceptional excellent quality. The rails are all in good condition, weighing 56 pounds to the yard. The grades are not excessive, the only point at which 1.00 per 100 is exceeded being at the St. Francis River, the approaches to which, on either side, are now 1.20 per 100. I understand, the company are to reduce this grade before the road is taken over by the Government.

In that respect he is entirely right.

The percentage of curvature is exceptionally small, the curves, with one exception (one of 6°), not exceeding 4°, or a radius of 1,433 feet.

I may say, in this connection, that on my return journey, the train, consisting of an engine and combination car, made the distance of 68 miles in 90 minutes, including two stoppages, the last 28 miles being run in 30 minutes, without the least discomfort to the passengers on the train.

The principal bridges are those over the Black River, the two branches of the Nicolet and the Becancour. These are all fine substantial steel superstructures resting on massive well-built masonry abutments and piers.

And yet the statement is circulated broadcast, it is affirmed by hon. gentlemen opposite and published in their press that this is a poor worthless road that it is unsafe to use it in its present condition and that our proposition ought to be condemned. I put it to the House whether a statement made under such circumstances, emanating from interested sources, should have weight. I referred to the report of Mr. Salisbury, yet statements are made by hon. gentlemen opposite without data or information who ask the House to condemn this proposition before they have heard the whole facts and in the face of the information I am now furnishing to the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. May I ask when the examination reported upon by Mr. Ridout was made ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. Ridout's and Mr. Johnson's examination and reports were made since the statements were made in this House. Mr. Kingsford's report, which I might have perhaps forgotten to read, but which I think it is desirable to read, was made on the 2nd of June. Mr. Kingsford has been down on the line for some time, and his instructions were to go over the road and make his report on it, which he did.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Do I understand that my hon. friend did not pay any respect to Mr. Schreiber's suggestion that before concluding any arrangement, he should have the road properly examined at a time of the year when it could be done or did he make his examination after he had made his contract ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is not correct in what he is stating.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It appears so from the papers.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The signing of the documents between the Government and the Grand Trunk Railway Company did not take place until after the date which they themselves bear and they are not dated until the 25th or 27th of May. We have abundance of evidence to satisfy us as to the character of that road. There are numbers of persons whom I had met, and with whom I and others had conversed, who had been over the road, who knew it thoroughly and who had travelled over it at a rate of speed which could not possibly have been safely attempted if the road were not in good condition. These gentlemen, some of whom are on the other side of the House and could inform hon. gentlemen there, no doubt, knew about the road before any of these surveys were made and were prepared to certify as to its character and quality. Let me read Mr. Kingsford's report. Mr. Kingsford is known to many hon. members of this House as an engineer of large experience and as a man of character and standing. He says :

In accordance with my instructions, I beg leave to report on the constructed portion of the Drummond County Line, in respect of its character and condition.

The line itself commences at St. Rosalie Junction. The intermediate two miles which connect it with the Grand Trunk system, is under the control of the St. Hyacinthe station master, and the semaphore admitting ingress upon it is under the direct control of that official.

The line is constructed for 73 miles to Moose Park. The first 27 miles to Drummondville pass through a good farming district. The land generally is in excellent cultivation. Several small villages succeed each other between Ste. Rosalie Junction and Drummondville, namely, St. Edward, St. Helene, St. Eugene, Duncan and St. Germain. Drummondville is the important place on the line. The following villages are then met :—St. Cyrille, Carmel, Mitchell and St. Leonard.

St. Leonard Junction is 19 miles from Drummondville ; at this point a branch runs 16 miles to Nicolet.

The Athabasca branch of the Grand Trunk is crossed near Maddington Falls an St. Wincelas, one mile and a half south-east of Aston station.

Proceeding east from St. Leonard Junction, the villages of St. Wincelas, Maddington Falls and Forestdale succeed, when the terminus of the present line is met at Moose Park.

I think it proper to premise my report by remarking that the season of the year in which it is made demands consideration, for it is not an act of justice in the first week of June to consider the condition of a roadbed with the spirit of exactness which might justly be exercised ten or twelve weeks later. At this date the frost has not been four weeks out of the ground, and the first attention given to maintenance of the line has been to place it in proper security by renewing the ties, where most required, by lifting and adjusting the track and straightening the steel rails where necessity exacts. This imperative duty is the first consideration, while the removal of what in themselves are blemishes affecting the appearance of the line, are left to a later date. Another duty is that of clearing out the ditches to enable them satisfactorily to fulfil the duties entailed upon them : unimpeded drainage. Consequently, in many parts of the line bunch grass has sprouted over the roadbed, which to an observer without practical experience does not suggest a favourable opinion of its character, while, in fact, it does not affect the safety and character of the roadbed.

On the condition of the roadbed it is my duty favourably to report. The ballast is of an excellent character, and there is plenty of it. It is not very neatly dressed off, as on older lines, but that is more a matter of appearance affecting the finished look of the work than in any way a detriment injurious to the safety and character of the track. I have myself been on a train which travelled forty miles an hour, and I never felt the slightest anxiety as to the propriety of this speed.

This road is said to be a bush road. It is for hauling lumber, according to the statements of the hon. gentleman.

I have reason to believe that there are occasions where specials have been run between Drummondville and St. Hyacinthe at the extreme rate of 60 miles an hour, and I do not believe that those acquainted with the condition of the track felt that any risk was being incurred during the journey. The outer portion of the track to Drummondville is cleared off generally, and the fencing in good condition. East of Drummondville, this same condition is by no means universal. There are spots where the light bush has yet to be removed. I cannot precisely give the extent of this ground where such work is necessary, but with a sufficient party, a few days would rectify it. Where the land is under cultivation, the fencing is regular and efficient. In the places where the line passes through a timbered country of light bush with a thick undergrowth, fencing has not been constructed, but no inconvenience arises to the line, for the bush itself is close and thick, and animals are not likely to stray through it.

It will thus be seen that in these 73 miles there is a good roadbed, well ballasted ; the rails in line ; the ditches freely carrying off the water, with regularity of different grades, the whole in efficient and satisfactory working order.

While what may be called the ornamental work the roadbed may require attention to obtain the neatness observable in an older line and always agreeable to the eye, I have to report the line, to the extent named, to be in excellent condition.

What warrant is there for condemning the Government for having got a road such as has been described by this gentleman ? What ever may have been the statements which have been made in respect to this proposition, we put forward this testimony to the House and we confidently rely upon it as being sufficient to satisfy the country. The officer who is responsible for the advice he gives the Government in this matter, visited, reported upon the road before we took this matter up. His report was made in winter, at a time when it was impossible to examine it. That report was received. We had the chief engineer's assertion in regard to the general quality of this road, and now we have the additional testimony of these three gentlemen who have gone over the road, made a careful inspection of it, and who have reported that the road is in excellent shape. Mr. Kingsford directly controverts each statement which is being made by hon. gentlemen opposite in condemnation of the road. There is another thing which I think I might very properly mention in this connection, and which came to my knowledge when we had these negotiations. It was that this road when built was intended to be taken over by the Grand Trunk Railway and used by them as an extension of the Grand Trunk Railway system. They were going to acquire the road and shorten their connection. All their arrangements were concluded and they went home to London, where difficulties arose which prevented the carrying out of the arrangement. So that we have the assurance, and I give it to the House, that this road was built under the very eye and supervision of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, with the expectation that they were coming into the ownership and possession of the road as soon as it was finished, with a view of its being made a part of their system. That perhaps may not be a material fact, but it is improbable that this road could have been carelessly built, or neglected or passed over in any slipshod way, when the expectation was that it was being built so that it might become a part of the Grand Trunk Railway system. This road is attacked as being a worthless road on the ground that it is simply a lumber road, and that it is not going to furnish any traffic. We have some material on that point, which I take much pleasure in supplying to the House. I have before me the sworn returns made from time to time of the earnings of the Drummond County Railway. These earnings I will give to the House for the last three or four years as tending to show what the result of the operations of this road was during this period. In 1892-93 the net earnings, after having taken out the gross working expenses, show a result of $12,644; in 1893-94, the surplus had increased to $20,125; in 1894-95 it had increased still further to $35,204; in 1895-96, it had fallen to $29,067. This would be, of course, on the seventy-three miles. I have a certified statement here, from the books of the company, showing that for the ten months ending on the last of April of this year, the net revenue was $28,445, not including the months of May and June, which I am sure are better than the months preceding. I am told that the year just about to close, to the end of June, will show $35,000 as the net earnings of this railway. Last year the result was between $29,000 and $30,000, the year before $35,000, and the year before that something less. Mark you, these are the net earnings upon this piece of railway which has been pronounced worthless, and which has been operated only as a local road, without any through connections whatever. Now, extend that road, add the necessary forty-three miles and make it part of a through road, and will any person say that it is an unreasonable conclusion that it will duplicate, perhaps triplicate, the net results of its operations in the past? And even if the operation of the Drummond County Railway for the seventy-three miles, for the next year, for the year after, or for the years to come, showed nothing better than a net result of $30,000 or $35,000 a year, I think I would be warranted in taking that amount out of the $64,000 a year that we would be paying in rental, and at one blow cutting away one-half of the debt which these hon. gentlemen say is being piled up in the country.

Mr. HAGGART. When dealing with that part of the matter, will the hon. gentleman be kind enough to give the gross earnings of the road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will do so with pleasure. The gross earnings have been as follows:—

For 1892-93.....	$60,689
1893-94.....	68,677
1895-96.....	93,118

It is only fair that I should say that in the accounts, the sworn accounts which have been returned, and which are now on file in the department, there appear to have been paid during the year 1895-96, out of working expenses a sum exceeding $10,000—I think, speaking from memory, that it is $12,000—for bridge construction on that road, which ordinarily might fairly be charged to capital. Now, we have in 1895-96 $93,000 of gross earnings; the working expenses were $64,000; so that the net earnings were $29,000. If you have a net result of $30,000 a year only in the future—and I have in my possession facts and data which go to show that in all reason, from the prospects and promises of business, there must be a considerable increase in its earnings, even if it were continued to be run only as a local road; but if you take it as realizing only $30,000 a year in the years to come, I am surely entitled to take that $30,000 out of the $64,000 which these gentlemen are charging me with, and to thereby cut in two this mountain of debt which they accuse the Government of adding to the burdens of the country by the acquisition of this railway.

Now, from all the data and information which I can obtain, I think the character of the country through which this road runs has been very much misrepresented. There are gentlemen on the other side of the House who have been over it and who can certify to the correctness of what I am now saying, that so far from being an uninhabited country, for many miles along the completed portion of the road there is quite a thick population and a developing population. There are two magnificent water powers, one of them eight thousand or ten thousand horse-power, which I believe is inviting one of the cotton companies, which is likely to establish itself there permanently in a very short time. That is the information with which I am furnished. I do not know that the negotiations are concluded, but they are looking to that result. Why, Sir, there are at this very moment no less than from 8,000 to 10,000 car-loads of freight waiting to be carried over that road—business which has been preparing during the past winter; and a large lumber company promises to produce a great lumber freight for this road for many years to come. The country is a good agricultural and well-settled country, and if the information I have received is to be relied upon, and it has come from reliable sources, it is a slander on that country to say that there is not a reasonable expectation of this Drummond County Railway being run as a local road and paying a considerable margin over its working expenses. We are not getting it to run it as a local road; but while we are getting a shorter line, and a line just as well situated for the purpose of giving us a close connection with the city of Montreal, we are at the same time getting a piece of railway which itself furnishes more than enough business to pay its working expenses and to leave a very handsome margin of profit. So far as the future of this road and its business prospects are concerned, I do not think it can be successfully impeached; and I invite the gentlemen opposite to confer with some of their own friends who sit behind them or beside them, and who have some knowledge of this road and the country through which it passes, and its business prospects, even as a local undertaking, and they will conclude that the strictures which they have passed upon it are altogether unjustifiable, and that we have made no mistake in acquiring the Drummond County Railway.

Now, Sir, let us look for one moment at the terms upon which we have acquired this Drummond County Railway. I have stated to the committee that the chief engineer of my department gave us an estimate of the value of this road. That value was based upon what he judged would be the cost of its construction, and it was the same information exactly as had been furnished by him previously to my predecessor in office. That value was in the neighbourhood of $1,600,000, and he had no doubt at all that the road was worth that amount. It was especially worth that amount in view of our policy to extend the Intercolonial Railway from Lévis to Montreal or to some point on the Grand Trunk for the purpose of reaching Montreal; and he felt that if we determined in the first place, to make a connection across the country for the purpose of getting the shortest possible route from Chaudière Junction to St. Rosalie, or to St. Hyacinthe, it was infinitely better for us to acquire this road, even if we should pay more than it would cost to build a new one, because there would be removed a competitor out of the way, and we would thereby secure the business which had been worked up already by the Drummond County Railway, and which, if it were running as a competing road, it would be likely to hold for the future.

Mr. HAGGART. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the chief engineer of his department stated that there was $1,600,000 expended on the road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. I said he estimated it upon what he judged was the cost of that road. He said he had sworn statements in his possession as to what the road had cost, and he judged also as to what would be the cost of constructing a new line across that country, and his round figures were in the neighbourhood of $1,600,000.

Mr. HAGGART. That is the new line. But what was the cost of the road as at present? What was his estimate as to what it did cost?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have the exact figures, $1,535,000. That corresponds with the statements which were filed in the department and which are accessible to hon. gentlemen at any time they desire. Now, taking that sum of $1,600,000 as a basis, is it possible to suggest that any fairer or more reasonable arrangement could be made than the one we have adopted?—an agreement to pay a rental of $64,000 a year, and at the expiration of the 99 years lease to become absolute owners of the property unencumbered, so that in paying the rental, we are actually paying for the road itself. That certainly commends itself to my judgment as an arrangement which should stand criticism and meet approval. Therefore, having regard to all the circumstances, we concluded that it would be advisable that we should make that arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway and agree to pay them the rental I have stated.

It is claimed that this was an improvident arrangement, but you must not overlook the fact that there are conditions imposed with regard to the 43 miles remaining to be built, which conditions are of a stringent character. We impose upon the Drummond County the obligation of building a road more expensive than the one they have constructed, or than one of the type which they have built. We require that they should build a railway connecting the two points and covering the uncovered ground, and we insist that they should build it up to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway in all respects. And they have got to do that before this arrangement will be carried out. In addition we stipulate that they should lay down 70 pounds of steel per yard of rails, which of course will be a very considerable item added to the cost of construction, and taking the arrangement altogether, I believe we can confidently rely on its approval in every detail by this House. We had some fault to find with the grades at one or two points, and we stipulated that the road should be straightened. The contract shows that the grades objected to must be reduced so as to bring them down to a grade not exceeding one foot per 100 feet on any portion of the through line. They are now straightening out the line. One of these engineers has told us that they are now proceeding to reconstruct a portion of the line in order that they may escape the heavy grades which at present they have to travel over and reduce them to the figures stipulated.

But it is said that we should not have done this but should have taken over the present Grand Trunk Railway road. My objection as to that are what I stated the other day. In the first place, the distance is considerably greater. I do not know accurately what it is, some people say it is 20 miles and others that it is something less; but suppose it were only 15 or 16 miles, whatever may be the actual mileage, 15 miles is a very considerable difference, particularly when you are getting a road which is objectionable in other particulars. Let us take the question of grade. I stated the other day that on that portion of the Grand Trunk Railway, the grades were heavy and were a serious objection. I was asked to state where they were, but could not say positively from memory. But I have now the information and shall give it to the House. The chief engineer reported that the grades were the objection, and that he could not recommend our acquiring that part of the road, even if it were possible for us to acquire it, on account of the grades and the distance. As to the grades, you will see, when I read his statement to you, that they are very serious objections to our taking over that road, even if it had been possible for us to arrange to acquire it and if there had been no objection on the ground of distance. The chief engineer reports that between Danby station and South Durham the grades range, rising east at one point 54.45, at another point, 55 to the mile up to as high as 61.41. Between South Durham and Lisgar, the grades still rising east, range from 55.50 to 61.40, and then falling east, they range 53.88 up to 62 and a fraction. Between Lisgar and Richmond the grades range from 62 down to 58; from Richmond to Warwick they range from 52.80 to 54.43 and up to 55.58. From Warwick to Lévis they range from 55.58 to 72.33 at Lévis, down to 54.43 at Chaudière Curve, and up to 58.66 at Pen<sup>n</sup>sons Sidings. These are the grades upon that portion of the road, and railway men say that they are a very serious objection to that branch. But there is no use of our talking of getting that portion of the Grand Trunk, because we could not get it. As I said the other day, we did not go into any close figures, because we thought it would not be of any use, and I shall tell you why. In the first place we could not buy the road. We could buy a part of it but not the whole of it. We could buy the portion between Lévis and Richmond but when I asked Mr. Wainwright what they wanted for that piece of road, he said, "we will take $2,500,000 for it." and so I did not talk any more about it. It would have been absurd to think of it. I dare say the Grand Trunk Railway might have taken less. It flashed through my mind that they might have taken $2,000,000, but who would give $2,000,000 for the ownership of 96 miles of road, when we were getting 133 miles from the Drummond County Railway for less money? But then if we got that piece of road from Richmond to Rosalie we would have to pay $1,000 per mile rental between those points and they would own one-half of it. They would not part with that any more than they would with their right hand. They would give us one-half the same as they give us one-half from St. Rosalie to Montreal, but more they would not do, and we would be in the position of paying as much for the use of 40 miles from Richmond to Rosalie, or two-thirds as much, as over the whole road from Chaudière by the Drummond Counties Railway. Any one who considers these facts must see that no reasonable business man would enter into any other arrangements than the one we have entered into, at all events, comparing the Drummond Counties Railway proposition on the one hand and the Grand Trunk proposition on the other. I do not think that any one will say that our proposition to pay for the one undivided half interest of the road from St. Rosalie to the bridge of $37,500 per year for those 35 miles is an unreasonable price. I think when we compare it with the sums which are paid by other railways in arrangements entered into voluntarily between themselves, you will find that we have effected an arrangement which is fairly and reasonably satisfactory. The $37,500 was arrived at in this way. The Grand Trunk Railway claimed it would cost $1,500,000 to build that road, and I think that any person who knows about what it costs to build roads in that section of the country—I think the hon. leader of the Opposition who has had some little experience, would say by all means accept $1,500,000 as a reasonable probable estimate of the cost of building 35 miles of road in that section. That was the figure they placed. They said if you are going to own half you will have to pay one-half or interest on one-half at the rate we pay, 5 per cent per year. So that dividing the $1,500,000 by half, which makes $750,000, and taking the interest at 5 per cent, we have the $37,500 which we agreed to pay, not for the use of the line but for the ownership, just as fully as the Grand Trunk Railway itself has of that railway. Now, we have had some little experience in the way of railway building. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) bought 125 miles of road from the Grand Trunk Railway and paid for it $1,500,000, and he bought it when it was in such a condition that it cost something like $2,500,000 before he got it into working shape. And when the hon. gentleman was presenting that proposition to Parliament he did not think it necessary to enter into very minute details or to bring it down months before the end of the session so that everybody might have the opportunity of reflecting on this large transaction in all its details. Not a bit of it. Absolutely all he told Parliament at the time he introduced this proposal to buy the 125 miles from the Grand Trunk Railway, was that it was desirable to buy it. That was the reason he gave at that time. He paid $1,500,000 for the road and spent $1,100,000 or thereabouts in putting it in shape, so that, before he had it in proper running order it cost $2,576,000 or $20,115 per mile. The hon. gentleman had a further experience in his capacity of Minister of Railways in connection with the building of railways. He started to build 14 miles in order to cut the loop at St. Charles, he wanted to get into Lévis by a handier way—a very proper thing for him to do. He commenced building these 14 miles of road, and before he got through he had spent $1,178,000—over $60,000 per mile, and of the total about $800,000 or $900,000 was for land damages. If we were to undertake to build from 35 to 40 miles of road to get into Montreal from the Drummond County Railway, having the experience of the hon. gentleman before our mind, we might very well hesitate and might well conclude that it would be much better for us to take the valuation which the Grand Trunk put upon their road and the estimate they gave us of the building of a new one, and give them a fair rental for their portion of the road. If we are to get into the city of Montreal, there is no way by which we could get in with such advantage. I would not venture to propose to my colleagues nor would I dare to ask Parliament to authorize us to proceed with the construction of a railway in that locality, involving the building of a bridge, then expropriating our way into Montreal, and after that, providing terminal facilities and a station there. That would be a wholly absurd proposition to submit to Parliament. Some one has said that it would cost $20,000,000. I do not think that that would cover it. at any rate we should have no guarantee that it would cover it. And we now make an arrangement under which we enjoy advantages ten times greater than this independent construction would give us. We have the use of the bridge and we have the use of the terminals and the stations—all the advantages that it has cost the Grand Trunk millions of money to acquire and years of experience to complete, and we get it all on reasonable terms. I stand amazed that men in this House and in this country, while approving of the policy of the Government in seeking a terminus for the Intercolonial in Montreal, will yet cavil at the terms and conditions under which we have secured that end. I say that the time will come when the men who now criticise us will acknowledge that we have made a first class arrangement, that we made a good business stroke for the benefit of the country when we completed this contract. I am as confident as I can be of anything that has not actually happened that the result will justify the course we have recommended.

Now, we have proposed to pay $40,000 for the use of the bridge and $62,500 for the use of the terminals. I wish to state one fact here which will give you an idea of the closeness with which this arrangement was considered and the estimates made. We asked Mr. Pottinger and Mr. Schreiber, who were here together, to go into the calculation and let us know what would be a fair rental to pay for the use of all the Grand Trunk terminal facilities at Bonaventure station, and there was not $5,000 difference between the figures they gave us and the figures finally agreed upon between the Grand Trunk and ourselves. Assuming that we ought to get into the city of Montreal and that the general policy pursued is a wise policy, I say that no man can reasonably complain of the terms of the arrangement under which this is to be accomplished. Talk about jobbery; I want to know in what line of this transaction from beginning to end there is any justification for such a charge? Where is the detail, where is the circumstance, where are figures upon which you can hang a suspicion of jobbery about this affair? Of course some people are acute to scent job in almost any transaction—that is the natural function of some minds. But let the transaction be looked at in all its details, let reasonable estimates be made of the value of the property we are acquiring and the interest we are acquiring, and I venture to say that there is no foundation upon which the slightest suspicion of any wrongdoing can rest.

Mr. GIBSON. No Curran Bridge there.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, Sir. This is a business transaction; it has merit in itself, and when you examine the details of the contract drawn between the two companies and the Government, you will see that we have taken every means possible to safeguard the public interest. Why, Sir, when the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) himself was buying the Grand Trunk line from Lévis to River du Loup, a line of 125 miles, what was the criticism passed upon it from the other side? His critics said to him: Under your arrangement you have no security, you have no terms and conditions which will assure the Intercolonial a safe and proper entrance into Montreal or access to the business of the west. And the reasons which suggested those criticisms are the reasons which have led to the present arrangement being concluded which we are now proposing to Parliament. We have given to this arrangement the most careful study. It is not my arrangement; it is not the arrangement of any one individual member of the Government; it is not the arrangement of the Grand Trunk or of the Drummond County Railway—it is an arrangement which the Government, as a whole, have carefully considered in all its details, and one which has been subject to careful scrutiny and examination by the Government from a business standpoint. And, as I was saying a moment ago, if you examine the details of the contract which has been entered into between the Government on one hand and these companies on the other, you will perceive very clearly that we have been solicitous and careful, that every term and every condition should be introduced which would ensure us an opportunity to gain our share of the western trade. As you will see, we have engaged with the Grand Trunk to carry the freights for us from the west to Montreal and to deliver these freights to us when they get them there, not to take them around by the Richmond line or by Lévis—not to carry them off on the Grand Trunk, but to deliver them to us. So, when we send our canvassing agents through the west, as all railway companies do and ought to do, and those agents pick up traffic and make contracts, we may be sure that the business will fall into our hands when it reaches Montreal. But we have in another respect made an unprecedented arrangement—that is with respect to running rights over a railway owned by another company. We have, under the contract, a condition under which we are entitled as between Ste. Rosalie and Montreal, to pick up for ourselves and for our own profit and advantage all the business that we can upon that line. If we carry a passenger we can pass into our own treasury the proceed of that passenger's ticket. If we carry a ton of freight we get the full benefit of it. We do not, as in the case of the agreement of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway, respecting the line between Toronto and Hamilton, pay over to the Grand Trunk 85 per cent of every dollar we earn—whatever we earn is ours. So far as this road, the bridge and the terminals are concerned, they are, for the purpose of our use, just as much the property of the Government as they are the property of the Grand Trunk itself.

Now, I submit the resolution that has been tabled with the confident expectation that it will receive the approbation of the members of the House. I know that we have been suffering under a disadvantage; I know that hon. gentlemen opposite and their press have been misrepresenting the facts and have been creating prejudice to some extent in the public mind. But I have always felt confident that when the details of the transaction came to be known, they would be generally approved. And I desire to say that I had no object, and the Government had no object, in delaying the submission of this transaction to Parliament. Everybody knows that we have been driven by the business that has been pressing upon us; everybody knows that the tariff has occupied attention almost to the exclusion of everything else, and that we have not had an opportunity to invite attention to these matters at as early a stage of the session as we desired. But we have not fallen far behind the example set us by the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) when he had a similar proposition to submit to Parliament. I do not say that because he did a thing that is a justification to anybody else for doing the same thing. But I do say that I think any criticism coming from such a critic can hardly be considered valuable in view of the course which he felt himself justified in taking under similar circumstances in times past. When he had to submit to Parliament the proposition to buy a portion of the Grand Trunk, he did not hurry, the instant Parliament was opened, to lay the matter before the House and ask Parliament to deal with it. Parliament met, that session, I think early in February; but it was three months after, and it was the second day before prorogation when he took Parliament into his confidence, informed them of the arrangement he had made, and asked the House to provide the money. Now I would not have desired to do that; the Government had no object in the world in delaying this matter. We had nothing to fear from the closest examination of the facts. But I confess that I never expected there would have been any serious objection to the policy itself. I thought of course that hon. gentlemen opposite would criticise the details, no doubt it would be their duty to do so, no doubt they would fulfil the legitimate functions of an Opposition by doing so. But I had no expectation that they would be denouncing this proposal in the violent and extreme manner in which they have been doing, and to have done so, at all events, with such a very short period in which to consider the whole matter.

Now, we have laid this matter before Parliament in all its details. The matter has been thoroughly and carefully studied out, its various aspects have been taken into account, not by my department alone but by all the members of the Government in Council. We have turned it over in its various aspects, there is no detail of it that has not undergone careful consideration. I feel, therefore, that I am in a different position, fortified by the judgment and opinion of all the members of the Government, from what I would have been had I been simply asking Parliament to accept this proposal based upon my own individual and perhaps unaided judgment. Now the House is asked to support it as a sound commercial transaction. This country has long complained, as I have said, of the deficits which have annually occurred in the working of the Intercolonial Railway. I think we are justified in expecting that the carrying out of this plan will put an end to the period of deficits, and will rapidly bring to us a period when we can announce to Parliament and to the country that the Intercolonial Railway has been run with a balance on the right side of the account. I put the proposal therefore, Mr. Speaker, before the House with the confident expectation that it will meet with approval.

Mr. FOSTER. The House has listened with steady attention and with interest to the speech of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals, in explanation. I was going to say, though I think I must qualify that and end by saying in apology for the course which he has seen fit to recommend to the House. The hon. gentleman wished to go into committee without making a statement, and wished to go directly into the details of the scheme. By a little gentle pressure he yielded and made his statement to the House before going into committee, as was the proper way to do. But if the hon. gentleman, before beginning his speech, felt that he was hardly used in being forced to that method of exposition, he had not proceeded one minute in his statement until he completely justified the demand from this side of the House that he should give information with reference to his resolution before he asked us to go into committee. The hon. gentleman said that the other evening he was taken entirely at a disadvantage, he had not the information ready at hand, and he therefore was not able to give it, and he complained that it was a little unfair that the other night we sprung the discussion upon him when he was not prepared to discuss the question. That is just what we thought, that he was not prepared the other evening to discuss the question, that is, to discuss it in a business way, which is, of course, the only way that it would be proper for a Minister of Railways to put a proposition like this before the House. And it was because he was taken at a disadvantage the other evening and was not prepared for the discussion, that I thought it would be well to take the discussion now, and that he should give the information that he had not at hand a few evenings ago. Well, Sir, my hon. friend all the way through his address to-night, has not, and I leave myself in the judgment of the House, addressed himself to this House in the manner of a gentleman laying a simple business proposition before the House, endeavouring to explain it thoroughly, and reason out the grounds upon which he asked us to accept. The hon. gentleman's speech has been a declamation, in large part. The very first point that he took up and grew somewhat heated over, was that he had been charged in the newspapers with jobbery, with a flagrant job. I thought of the old French proverb, that he who begins to excuse himself overhastily brings the accusation against himself. My hon. friend would have done better, I think, if he had simply treated this in a business way instead of taking up seven-eighths of his speech in trying to defend himself from the imputation of a job, or in trying to criticise the operations and the administration of the hon. gentlemen who preceded him. On a proposition asking the House to enter into a payment of $210,000 for 99 years, together with all the incidental yearly expenses of management and maintenance, upon a doubtful venture as to whether a sufficient amount of new business would be found to bring, according to his own judgment, revenues to offset those expenditures, it was not too much to ask that the hon. gentleman should have left aside the controversial subjects of jobbery and of previous administrations, and addressed himself simply and solely to the question in hand. Now, I ask this House, which has listened to the hon. gentleman for two hours if they have had much more from him in the way of new business for this company, except mere prophecy and contingency. The only thing of a solid nature that the hon. gentleman pretended to give us was a bald statement upon a sheet of paper, in which it is stated that the estimated traffic on the Intercolonial Railway for the first full year of operation, after being extended to Montreal, will be so and so; that the receipts will be $900,000 greater in the gross; that its working expenses will be $350,000 more in the gross; that its profits will be $520,000 the first year; that the tons of freight will be increased by nearly 300,000 tons, and the number of passengers will be increased by over 630,000. Now, I say that I am just as wise after that statement has been read in that form, as I was before; and the hon. gentleman is just as explicit as he was before, and this House is just as wise as it was before. This House does not sit here to take a set of figures and swallow them without having given to it the basis upon which those figures are totalled up. My hon. friend has said over and over again that he trusted to the verdict of business men upon this, that he had a business proposition, and that he trusted it to the business sense of the House, and to the business sense of the community. That statement contains the kernel of truth in that it is the only thing this House wants. If the proposition has anything of merit in it, it must commend itself to the business sense of the House and of the country. There is no sentiment which rules in a matter of this kind, imperial or otherwise. It is a matter of pure business, and nothing else. What the hon. gentleman has utterly failed to do, after all his declamation is excised, after all his prophecy is cut out, what he has failed to do is to lay down the basis of his anticipations as to where this immense added business will come from, and what will be its nature. This House has listened for two hours and now can a single gentleman in the House get up and do more than merely say: Well, it is stated by somebody, we do not know the basis upon which it has been stated, that there will be that increase. But as to the means which that increase is to be obtained and the grounds upon which it is based, there is no report of anybody, there is no statement of anybody, and there is no basis laid down by the Minister himself. That is where I see the cardinal defect in the presentation of this scheme, as the Minister has given it to us. Now, as a business man the hon. gentleman appeals to this House, and on the business view of it I challenge the judgment of the House, and I challenge the judgment of the country.

In the first place my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) has not taken a business method of putting this matter before the House. Granted that this side of the House has no rights to information at all or anything of the kind, that it is just simply a part of the legislature which is to be driven down by the superior force of numbers, on the other side of the House the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) owed something to his own followers. He owed something to the men who sit behind him, and I ask those gentlemen who sit behind him and it is within the judgment of the House if the hon. gentleman who brought down this proposition three days before they are going to ask this House to prorogue, has treated his own followers as business men who have a right to come to a conclusion upon business reasoning and business principles. The hon. gentleman sadly underrates the intelligence of his own followers if he thinks that he has made an appeal to them on business grounds to-night. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) says that there is a suspicion abroad that he has been holding this over for some purpose of his own. What has the hon. gentleman done? He says they have been so busy with the tariff that they could not get the information down to the House before. Does my hon. friend know that there is in the report printed and laid upon the Table of the House a statement which shows that the Minister had decided the matter on the 24th of March. What is the reason that after the Order in Council, the fiat of the Government was passed that it could not have been laid on the Table of the House with the information pertinent to it and upon which members of the Council are supposed to have made up their minds. The matter was concluded before Parliament met or was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne as having been concluded. But the hon. gentleman justifies himself in his statement by saying that although the Order in Council was passed the contract was not signed. The contract was signed on the 15th of May, and on the 15th of May the hon. gentleman had that contract under hand and it is one whole month before he deigns to lay the finished contract on the Table of the House for the information of the House. Too busy with tariff matters to look after that. How much had my hon. friend to do with tariff matters? If he had to do with tariff matters I simply say that on the 15th of May the contract was completed and signed and could have been laid before the House by a simple waive of his hand and he could then have gone on with all of those disquisitions into the tariff business which was so pressing upon him. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) kept that contract signed and sealed in his pocket until five days before the House is asked to be prorogued and five days before prorogation was to be asked there is still no shred of information upon the Table of the House for the hon. gentleman's supporters to make up their minds whether or not we should increase the debt of this country to an equivalent of $7,000,000. The hon. gentleman attempted a statement in reference to this matter three or four days ago which he admitted he was unprepared to make. I call the House to witness that the only information placed before us is the Order in Council and the reports of the three engineers as to the quality and condition of the Drummond county section of 73 miles, not one shred more. Granted that the Drummond County Railway is fairly well built, that it is a substantial road; it ought to have been before he touched it at all. He should not have allowed himself to have taken one moment's time to prove that the Drummond County road was a fairly built road. The sanction of this proposal does not depend on whether the road is a fairly built road.

Granted that it was a fairly well built road, is it a business transaction which we ought to go into? If my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) has proved that the road is a substantial and well built road of its class all the better; I do not want to deny it. There is no reason why I should. If it is not it is utter condemnation of the hon. gentleman. If it is it does not help him one iota in the proposition he puts before the House because that was based on the road being a fairly well built road. But the hon. gentleman has himself demanded that the standard shall be raised. The hon. gentleman made a condition that the 33 miles of road from Chaudière should be built as the rest of the Drummond County road is built? No, Sir. The hon. gentleman made a condition that it should be built on the standard of the Intercolonial Railway and he himself said to-night that that would cost them a great deal more money because he required them to bring it up to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway. He has pointed out that rails are to be laid on that portion of the road of 50 pounds.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. 56 pounds.

Mr. FOSTER. Of 56 pounds so that the first thing the hon. gentleman will have to do is to lay that 73 miles of road with 70-pound rails, make himself a roadbed and do everything else to bring it up to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Many miles of the Intercolonial Railway are yet laid with 56-pound rails.

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend say that he proposes to operate that road from Forest Vale into Ste. Rosalie in the present condition of the road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, the rails are good—they are new rails.

Mr. FOSTER. Then my hon. friend is not going to have a first-class road equivalent to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are miles now of the Intercolonial Railway that are laid with 56-pound rails.

Mr. FOSTER. Then my hon. friend is not going to the expense of providing that road with 70-pound rails?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They are new rails, and good rails.

Mr. FOSTER. He is going to have a section of 33 miles with 70-pound rails. What is the reason? Is his only ground for demanding that they provide that section with the 70-pound rail, that he proposes to put that road up to the same standard as the Intercolonial Railway. The hon. Minister has looked for a great increase of travel, a great increase of freight; he is going to have three or four hundred thousand tons more of freight carried in the first year. Is he going to undertake that greatly increased travel with a road inferior in weight of rails and roadbed. That will be poor economy for my hon. friend because he knows as well as I do that it is the best economy to take up these 56-pound rails, sell them and put down 70-pound rails, that the easier the traffic can be carried the better the general result will be.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) allow me to ask him a question. Is he aware of any railway in the country doing that?

Mr. FOSTER. Doing what?

Mr. GIBSON. Setting aside 56-pound rails and replacing them with 70-pound rails.

Mr. FOSTER. The Intercolonial Railway is continually taking up lighter rails selling them and putting down a heavier weight of rails. You must do that if you are going to have heavy traffic.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have heavy traffic now.

Mr. FOSTER. The only reason why it has been stipulated that that 33 miles of road should have 70-pound rails was on account of the heavy freight traffic which the hon. gentleman the Minister of Railways, expected he would have. He says that he expects a large accretion of heavy freight upon this road. Having mentioned that point, namely, that my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) was not showing very much faith in his present proposition in the way in which he has treated the House with reference to the information regarding it, let me go one step further. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) made his report to Council and the Order in Council was passed virtually authorizing this contract to be gone into on the terms which it contains on the 24th of March. He asked for a report from his chief engineer. The chief engineer reported very generally upon the condition of the road on 2nd February, but the chief engineer who is a cautious man declared in that report:

Should you finally decide to acquire the road, before the matter is absolutely closed I suggest it would be prudent to have an examination into its condition.

The chief authority upon which the hon. gentleman relies said: From my general knowledge and in a general way this is a fairly good road; but if you contemplate purchasing it on these terms, it would be prudent for you to have a special examination made. The hon. gentleman took the portion of the report which agreed with him, and omitted carrying out the very essence of the prudential consideration which his chief engineer urged upon him, and he went to Council and got the order authorizing the contract. He made the contract itself without ever having asked for an examination, and without ever having sent a man down to make an examination; and it was only in June, and as the hon. gentleman himself stated here to-night, only after these charges had been made in the House—and they were not made until this explanation was made the other night—that he thought it the better part of prudence to have a report on that road from one or two of his engineers.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think the hon. gentleman intends to misrepresent what I said, but he is doing so all the same.

Mr. FOSTER. In what way?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. By stating that no engineer was sent to examine the road until after these charges were made. I stated most unhesitatingly that Mr. Kingsford had been over the road in the last month, and that I had received a report from him which bears date some days prior to the time of the discussion.

Mr. FOSTER. My position is perfectly right in this respect, that no report of an engineer was made until after the contract had been authorized on the 24th day of March, and until after the contract had been signed, sealed, and delivered on the 15th day of May.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is not what the hon. gentleman stated. I stated to the House, also, that the contract was not signed on the date it bears, nor was it signed until long after its date. I cannot say the exact date when it was signed, but it was prepared for the printer and was printed, and a mistake in it was corrected, and it was again printed, and it was many days after the date the contract carries on its face before it was actually signed.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I do not know where we are to end. These are the two reports that were laid on the Table of the House by my hon. friend; these are the only papers we have to go by; and he says that though the agreement bears date the 15th day of May, it was not signed by the parties to that agreement on the 15th day of May. But how does that help my hon. friend? Does it make a pin's difference, his crawling out of a few days in May in regard to signing the contract, when he went to the Council on the 24th day of March and got the authority to sign the contract on the terms of it, and got that authority without having any examination of the road at all? How is my hon. friend's position bettered by the latter statement, even if it be a statement of fact? And what is this House reduced to, when we have Ministers laying on the Table of the House a contract signed in accordance with an Order in Council which bears date the 15th day of May, and when the hon. gentleman is cornered on it, after it has been discussed nearly five days, he states that that date is wrong, and that it was signed several days after that date? This is a new method of conducting business by this business Government. Now, Sir, I am not going very largely into the question of the nature of the reports which the hon. gentleman has got, even at this late day, and after the matter had been discussed in this House. The reports are thoroughly general. All they do, the best of them, is to give a general good character to the road, and I am quite willing to take that, and leave it at what these gentlemen say. But as for having any explicit and thorough examination of that road, and a report upon it in detail, it cannot be found within the lids of this book, and I fancy that my hon. friend has brought down all he had. Now, in order that the House may judge of this transaction has all the information which the hon. gentleman should give to the House been given yet? What knowledge has this House to-day of the condition of that road in so far as its rolling stock is concerned?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are not buying that.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend, with his back towards his opponents, instead of his face—the attitude of a man brave in his own words—interjects in the face of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), as if he had some private spite against his colleague, something which he means to come, by way of rebound, to his opponents on this side of the House, whom he does not face; and what does he say? When this House is asked to give its sanction to a contract conferring certain powers, one of these powers authorizing the Minister to buy the rolling stock at a valuation fixed by himself and agreed upon between him and the company alone, it has not given it any information as to the rolling stock. He says he has not bought it yet, but he asks us to vote him the power to buy it. We are not given one item of information with reference to that rolling stock—as to how much it is, as to its character or its quality. We are to vote him the power blindly. He is to make whatever arrangement he chooses for the rolling stock, no matter as to its quantity, its character, its distribution, and the like of that; and he tries to shield himself by the statement that it is not bought yet. I hope it is not, because he has not the authority to buy it, and he ought not to do things which Parliament does not give him the authority to do. We have not any information yet, although the hon. gentleman promised to give it before we voted on this, as to the estimated cost of the maintenance of this road, and the estimated operating expenses. I ask hon. genlemen opposite how they are going to come to a conclusion as to this matter unless they have put before them an estimate of the expenses which are necessary for this Government to put that road into a good position, the expenses which are necessary for maintaining it, and the expenses which are necessary for operating it. Some fair estimate of these expenses ought to be given. It was promised by the Minister, and it is not yet before the House.

Now, it seems to me that my hon. friend went wide of the question when he took a half hour of his time to demonstrate that the idea of getting into Montreal was a good idea, and that because the idea of getting our road into a metropolis like Montreal was a good idea, therefore we should not say anything as to the means adopted by which the idea was to be carried out. I touched upon that the other night, and I thought the hon. gentleman would not make the mistake of attempting to argue on a question like that. Does he not understand—this hon. gentleman who thinks it is the pink of courtesy to turn his back to his opponents—that this House ought to have some rights? Does he not think that he ought to give us some information on this point? I know we ought to be able to get information from the intelligence which is spread over the other side of my hon. friend's countenance, but I do not think my hon. friend should expect us to expect this information out of the back side of his countenance, which he so benignly turns to this side of the House. It has just been brought to my attention that my hon. friend is bound by the 8th section of the agreement to purchase the rolling stock and railway supplies of the company at a valuation to be agreed upon between the company and the Minister. It is not an option as to which he may do it or not. He is bound hand and foot to purchase that; and if he has bound himself hand and foot to purchase it, he must know the nature and condition of this rolling stock and these supplies, and it is his duty to lay before the members of this House that information. My hon. friend has given us not a shred of information upon it. He has not given us the report of an officer upon it. I doubt if to-day he has in his office the report of one of his engineers or officers with reference to this rolling stock and these supplies; and yet my hon. friend tried to shield himself for the lack of this information by saying that he had not bought it yet.

Now, Sir, in approaching this question from a business point of view, let us ask ourselves whether the main question is, not simply the idea that it would be a good thing to get into the city of Montreal, but the ways and means of getting in and the results you will achieve after you get in. I leave it to the House if these are not the two salient points. The idea, as a sentiment, may be excellent. We might all say that it would be very desirable to get that road into Montreal. But no matter how much we may like the idea sentimentally, or how strong might be our desires, as a business set of men, these two considerations are the ones which must govern us. On what terms can we get into Montreal? And what will be the business return when we do? The sentimental idea must be set aside, and these two considerations are the ones alone which we, as business men, should keep in mind and reflect upon. Now, as to the terms upon which we get in. We have pretty fully discussed them, but it will be as well to glance at them briefly again. We get into that city and enjoy such advantages as we buy for these considerations. For the use of the Grand Trunk Railway road from Ste. Rosalie to Victoria bridge, the price we pay is $37,500 per year, which represents, at 3 per cent, a capitalization of $1,250,000. Translated into that language, which all can understand, it simply means this, that for the privilege of getting to Victoria Bridge over the Grand Trunk line, for the right of user simply, we are to pay what is equivalent to setting aside the sum of $1,250,000, payable to the Grand Trunk Railway.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the length of that portion of the road?

Mr. FOSTER. It is somewhere about thirty-five miles. Then for the simple right of user of the bridge, we pay $40,000 yearly, which, on a capitalization at 3 per cent, is equivalent to one and a third million dollars. Then, again, we give to that company for the extension of the bridge, $300,000 out and out in cash—a sum not to exceed this. Then, with regard to the terminals, we pay simply for the right of using them, $62,500 per year which, capitalized at 3 per cent, makes $2,080,000. So that, translated into a language we can all understand, for the simple right of user of the Grand Trunk Railway from Ste. Rosalie into Montreal, and its terminals, we set aside the sum of $4,963,000, capitalizing, at 3 per cent, the amount we pay. Now, we can all understand that. The hon. gentleman scouts the idea of translating the transaction in that way, but we must take this matter up as we find it, and we find $4,963,000 to be the amount of liability we have assumed. Then, as I stated before, after we get the right of user, for which right we have to pay $4,963,000 we have to pay our share of the cost of maintenance year in and year out for the ninety-nine years. I say that that is an immense sum which we must put upon one side of this account and hold it there when we come to ask ourselves what we are going to get. I cannot compute the cost of maintenance which we are to pay. My hon. friend would not give the information to the committee the other night, and he has not given it yet. He promised to give it, but has forgotten his promise. He promised to give us, before this discussion went on, the cost of maintaining and operating this portion of the road, so far as an estimate could give it. If we had that estimate, we could calculate the cost. We could place it then alongside of this sum of $4,963,000, and be able to get two parts of the account which run to our debit.

Now, when we come to the Drummond County road, what do we find? For the right of user and ultimately of possession—we ourselves, of course, maintaining the whole of the road—from the very moment we commence to work upon it on the first of November, we paid $70,000 per year, which, capitalized at 3 per cent, makes two and one-third million dollars. Adding up all these figures, we find that this arrangement will cost us $7,250,000 in round numbers chargeable to capital account. This has actually to be set aside and to draw interest at 3 per cent in order to make the yearly payments which we are bound to make for the mere right of user in case of the Grand Trunk Railway and ultimately the possession of the Drummond County road. We cannot brush that away; we have incurred this liability, no more and no less, and I am simply putting that on the one side of the account, and when we come to the other side I want to get all we can fairly expect as the result of any increased business.

But before I come to that, one point of this arrangement which ought to be noted is this. Her Majesty's Government binds itself to this further obligation. If the Grand Trunk Railway should come to the conclusion at any time that the traffic of their road calls for extensions and improvements in the terminals, on the bridge, on the road up to Ste. Rosalie, it can make these improvements, it may even double-track the whole of the way, and it will charge one-half the cost to the Intercolonial Railway or this Government, and this Government will have to pay another yearly sum of 5 per cent upon half the amount expended on these extensions.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not unless we consent and use them.

Mr. FOSTER. Not until we consent and use them, but is the hon. gentleman going to tell us that he will not consent and will not use those extensions and improvements after his high-flown declamation as to the accretion of traffic he is going to have, how he was going to pull on all this western country, throw the freight into Grand Trunk cars and compel the Grand Trunk Railway to deliver it up when they get down to Montreal to the Intercolonial Railway? My hon. friend thinks that 5 per cent on the cost of one-half of the improvements is not too great for us to pay, no matter whether our trade is a mere fraction of the whole or not. When the Grand Trunk Railway comes to the conclusion that its terminals in Montreal have to be enlarged, that double tracking must take place, that improvements are to be made, it will simply set to work and make them, and charge the Dominion Government with 5 per cent upon their one half share.

Now, let us look at the treatment given the Drummond County Railway and see what the fortunate owners of that road have got. The Drummond County Railway cost $1,500,000 according to my hon. friend, but he was good enough to add another $100,000, and to pay them at the rate of 4 per cent on a cost of $1,600,000. But have the fortunate owners of that railway ever put $1,600,000 into that road? Will my hon. friend say that they have put half that amount into that road? If he will look at the records in his own department, he will find that the subsidies which have been given that company and helped to build that road, which he declares cost the company $1,500,000, amounted to $782,000 in round numbers.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The amount of subsidy paid by the Dominion Government—I speak of that portion of the road which has been built—amounts to $287,000.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is wrong; it amounts I think to $297,920. But I shall not quarrel about a little difference.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think my recollection is correct.

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot take the hon. gentleman's recollection against his own report which I have in my hand. But this little difference of $10,000 is a mere bagatelle in the large amount of $7,000,000 which is at stake. What I have said is absolutely correct. If the hon. gentleman will turn up his own report of Railways and Canals, he will find that subsidies have been given to that company for the building of the road amounting to $782,000 in round numbers. Subtract that from their own statement of the cost $1,500,000 and you will find that the company have spent of their own money, or money they have put into their road, the sum of $720,000 or thereabouts. My hon. friend is, therefore, buying back $297,000 of the Dominion's own money. He is paying those men who own the road, at the present time, and who did not put more than $700,000 into it, $1,600,000, which is a net 8 per cent per year, or a little over, during ninety-nine years, on all they have put into it. Now, I take that as one indication that these gentlemen at least ought to be satisfied with the bargain, and that of the three parties, if there is dissatisfaction at all, that dissatisfaction ought not to exist with the Grand Trunk Railway nor with the Drummond County Railway, but must exist with the people of this country who have to pay and build and, in this case, to a certain extent, have to pay twice over. So that on one side of the account we have, as I have stated, what amounts to this capitalization of seven and a quarter million dollars. Now, what have we on the other side? I would ask the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) who gave us a nice disquisition in the form of a prophecy that this arrangement would, no doubt, come out all right, but forgot to give us one single fact upon which he based that prophecy. My hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) is going to get into the city of Montreal and when he gets into the city of Montreal he will be ready for the hauling of freight and passengers. When he gets ready for the hauling of freight, he will find that that freight is divided up into two classes—into what you may call local traffic, and what you may call through traffic. He will be able to ask for business from Montreal for all points along the Intercolonial Railway for distribution in that country itself, and also freight from these places along the line to Montreal and the west for distribution. But when he is ready to carry local freight to or from Montreal, who else is ready to carry freight for the same points? The distributing points are very largely St. John, Halifax, Yarmouth, and other towns. A man who has local freight to ship to the city of St. John for distribution over the wide area which St. John serves—and it is a very wide area, taking in not only a great part of New Brunswick, but also a part of Nova Scotia—has two roads by which he may send it; he may send it by the Intercolonial to St. John, or he may send it by the competing line, the Canadian Pacific Railway, to St. John. And the Canadian Pacific Railway line to the city of St. John, even giving the hon. gentleman the saving which he says he will make, is 248 miles shorter than by the Intercolonial Railway. Now, I will ask my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works if he will dispute that assertion. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals declared for himself and for his colleagues that they never took mileage into account at all. Do you think that the man who has freight to ship will take mileage into account, or will he not? Do you think that the rate of freight to the city of St. John will be governed by the length of haul, or will it not? If there is anything that governs a freight rate is it not the comparative distance that the freight has to be hauled. I make the assertion, which every man sitting in this House will bear me out in making, that it is impossible that the Intercolonial Railway, starting from Montreal should compete successfully and on a paying basis with a company which carries freight to the same point of distribution and has 248 miles less of haulage than the Intercolonial itself. Now, suppose we take Halifax, the other great city of distribution.

Mr. FOSTER.

Freight from Montreal for Halifax, is being sought, but not by the Intercolonial alone.

The Canadian Pacific Railway has its line running into Halifax, and that line is just 76 miles shorter than the Intercolonial would be from Montreal to Halifax, even if you count the shortening of the line which the hon. gentleman declares he will make. The hon. gentleman does not take mileage into account. Will not the shipper of freight take mileage into account? And will my hon. friend try to maintain before business men that, in the keen competition for business to-day, the Intercolonial Railway can profitably compete for freight which goes through to Halifax for distribution, with a road that has an advantage of 76 miles, just as good a road, and with just as easy gradients in the main. Now, what local freight will the hon. gentleman get out of Montreal? He will get out of Montreal, local freight for the points along the line until he gets down to some point where the distribution can more profitably take place from St. John, and so can be taken from the other end of the line. I do not care where you fix that point. Let us fix it arbitrarily and for the sake of argument, at Moncton. The Intercolonial Railway will have the monopoly of distribution on points along the line down, say, as far as the town of Moncton in New Brunswick. I am not going to say anything as to the character of this trade more than that the amount of it over and above what will go to-day by the Intercolonial will not be appreciably greater and will not appreciably affect the result. Are there other kinds of local traffic that the hon. gentleman can get? But he says: We are going to get a chance to sit down among the railway magnates and talk over rates; we are going to send our agents into the west and they will gather freight and put it on the Grand Trunk or the Canadian Pacific Railway, and it will be handed over to us at Montreal and we will carry it from there. What has your shipper in the west to say about that? What does he want to get? He wants to get the cheapest freight to St. John or to Halifax, and is it likely that he will send by a line which is 248 miles longer than another line and which is equally open to him? However, if it be over a country that is served only by the Grand Trunk Railway, what is there about this traffic that could not be arranged for with the Intercolonial terminating where it does to-day and under arrangements that have long existed between the Grand Trunk and the Intercolonial.

So much for the local freights. The other kind of freight that my hon. friend is setting his net for is what is called through freight, that is either freight that is seeking the old country by way of Halifax or St. John, or freight that is coming, from the old country and that is seeking this country. Now, at Montreal, when my hon. friend is there seeking to fill his cars with freight, and when shippers are asking what are the through rates to Liverpool, the through rates to Glasgow and to other points in the old country, what is the condition which confronts them? The Grand Trunk has its through line to Portland and its steamship connection from Portland to Glasgow, Liverpool and ports on the continent, and, on shipments for Liverpool or any other point in the old country, the Grand Trunk has a distinct advantage of about 400 or 500 miles of land carriage in its line to Portland. Will my hon. friend gain anything in that case on through freight which is lying in territory which the Grand Trunk Railway is able to serve and upon the serving of which the shareholders depend for the dividends that are to be paid to them? Will the Grand Trunk, now that this arrangement has been entered into, sit idly by with the advantage in its favour and give its freight to the Intercolonial to take them by the longer route. No; then, as regards shipment to the old country, there is one competition that is not got rid of in the least degree by getting into Montreal. We are to have a line of freight steamers when this fast line is able to begin the service, both from Halifax or St. John. Suppose that your fast line is in working order, suppose that the freight line is running. We will say, for the sake of argument, that the fast line runs out of St. John and the freight line out of Halifax—and I do not wish to depress the hopes of the people of Halifax. I assume this only for argument's sake—and you are asking freight through these two ports in the winter season. The Intercolonial comes in to compete for the freight through St. John and through Halifax, the through freight which is to pass through these ports. What is the competition? If it is to go out of St. John, the Canadian Pacific Railway has its line 248 miles shorter, and has its traffic arrangements, and has that advantage in its haulage which it is impossible to overcome. If it is Halifax that is to be the port of shipment, there is yet the 76 miles, and you cannot make much of an arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway for freight in the winter time in a Grand Trunk Railway country when the Grand Trunk Railway is interested in carrying it by its longest haul of land mileage down to Portland and sending it from there to the old country. So that on the matter of through freight bound for the old country either way, and vice versa, the difference between the mileage of the two is incontestably against my hon. friend. My hon. friend thought it wise to tell the House that when he went into this he did not take into account the question of mileage at all; then he was good enough to tell us afterwards that the same was true of all his colleagues, and that they threw out the question of mileage and competition on shortened mileage altogether, and that they stood as a unit in not having taken the question of mileage into consideration. I submit to this House and to the country that the question of mileage is the whole question so far as traffic is concerned over the Intercolonial Railway from Montreal, as deriving its accretion of business and consequently of profits. But my hon. friend from Drummond and Arthabaska (Mr. Lavergne) had a perfectly easy way of settling that the other night. He said: Of course it is a longer haul but then if the Intercolonial Railway gets into Montreal and wants that freight it can take it, whether the freight pays for its carriage or not. Ah, that is it. No doubt the hon. member for Drummond and Arthabaska thought his argument good. He said that if the Intercolonial Railway is bound to get that freight it can get it, it can get it by lowering the rates. How much profit would go to the Intercolonial Railway carrying freight against a shortage of 400 miles as against the Grand Trunk Railway through Portland?

Mr. CHARLTON. And with all the disadvantages which my hon. friend depicts weighing against the Intercolonial Railway in consequence of the greater length, would he be opposed to any scheme whatever for securing entry into Montreal for that road?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think that I would. I did mention this point of view when, as my hon. friend will recollect, I said that there was every difference between an idea and the way in which that idea should be carried out, and the results that might come from it. I unhesitatingly say that while sentiment, and a certain amount of business sentiment, may be to a certain extent well based, would be strongly in favour of getting that road into the metropolis, after all we must be guided by the terms upon which we can get it in, and by what we are going to find when we get there. So I say that if the Intercolonial Railway is going to take freight in competition with those lines of shorter haulage, it can only take it by carrying freight at unremunerative rates, and if it carries freight at unremunerative rates the deficit is made greater instead of being lessened. For we have in the first place certain, $210,000 per year to put to the debit; we have certain, the cost of the maintenance and operation to put to the debit; we have also the contingent 5 per cent interest on the half cost of the very great and may be very expensive improvements that may hereafter be carried out. All that is certain to be paid, but the revenue is a contingency; and I have given my reasons for believing that for business men that contingency does not promise very much in the line of its being fulfilled successfully in the great growth of freight and of profits on the carriage of that freight. Now, Sir, this simply voices, in a rough and ready way, my views with reference to this matter. I have sought to discuss this question from the business point of view ; and I challenge the Government now, which has able men in it, to meet these arguments and convince us if they can, and convince the country, which is of more importance, that there is any reasonable grounds for believing that under the circumstances which I have detailed, it is possible for them getting into Montreal with that large amount of expense placed directly and continuously against them, whether it is possible that any reasonable business can be hoped for or expected, or any large growth in freight tonnage and in freight receipts. That is the kernel of the whole matter. It is not a light thing to rush into an expenditure which is equivalent to an addition to capital debt of $7,300,000. My hon. friend who sits before me to-day (Mr. Charlton), voiced his opposition largely to the fast line service on the ground that a Government which had gained its place by promises of economy, which had gained its place by continually declaring that we were adding too much to the public debt, had, in this first session of its regular work, undertaken such stupendous additions to the public debt of the country and done it seemingly with a light heart. No one would be disposed in this House to make any opposition to an expenditure of seven million dollars if it were necessary, if we could fairly show that the other side of the account so far as the Intercolonial Railway goes, would show enough increase to offset it. But there is the weak point in the whole argument. Where is this business to be got ? The Minister of Railways is a business man, he says. Let him tell us to-night, or let any other member tell us, where he proposes, under these competitive circumstances, to get this 400,000 extra tons of freight against the competition of the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, which is just as strong, and stronger in the city of Montreal than it would be at Lévis. The Minister of Public Works gave us another idea, and I commend it to the attention of the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). The Minister of Public Works, when some of his followers from the city of Quebec, or interested there, began to feel that the million dollars subsidy to the bridge was fading away, my hon. friend assured them by declaring that the subsidy to the bridge would be given all the same. There is then another million or two, which after you go to the expense of getting this road into the city of Montreal, will have no raison d'être except simply as a local contribution to what will be a local work ; but it will be a million or two added. Now, I take this view, and I commend it to the House to be thought over, whether under these circumstances, it would not have been far better for the Government to have the connection at Lévis with the Canadian Pacific Railway and with the Grand Trunk Railway, and that in view of the strong competition at Montreal that they knew they must have and always will have on account of the distance, whether there would not be a decided saving and a decided advantage by making the connection there at the cost of a million dollars or so, instead of pressing this scheme with an expenditure of seven million dollars, to which we are tied irrevocably, and for ninety-nine years in one case and for perpetuity in another, to which we are tied most certainly. Now, there is one point in favour of this, and that is that if you make Quebec or Lévis the competitive point, you have the advantage of drawing on both the railways for freight which will be carried over their lines, and consequently contribute to their roads from Montreal down to Quebec and to Lévis. Quite a large amount of freight can be influenced by the combination of two roads where the determining road on the one hand has an advantage in putting freight over its line and getting the advantage of a haul for 100 or 200 miles more over its own rails. That would have been a way in which the Intercolonial Railway might have recouped itself for some of its difficulties, and certainly have done it at a very small cost. I will go further—at no cost. For the Minister of Public Works tells us we have to give the contribution to the Quebec bridge anyway, and what the Minister of Public Works says, in this present Cabinet, has to be carried out so far as expenditures go. So then the House is face to face with this, and the House could not do better than to say that it does not believe that this is an arrangement which commends itself to business men in the country. I do not believe it will. Here is an immense expenditure. Even if you get rid of a little of the deficit, suppose we get rid of $100,000 of the deficit, you are piling up $210,000 certain, and all the cost of maintenance, and operation, and of interest upon improvements besides. But my hon. friend the Minister of Railways gave a new version of the cause of the deficit, and it is a notable one which I call to the attention of the House. Heretofore my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, and my hon. friend the Minister of Railways, and all the rest of my hon. friends on that side of the House, have been declaring up and down this country that the deficits on the Intercolonial Railway were due to the gross and corrupt mismanagement of the Tory party. To-night we are absolved entirely. The pure and lofty politician from New Brunswick, the Minister of Railways, to wit, who now turns his beaming smiles upon the Opposition, declared that that was not the cause of the deficit at all, but the deficits were due to the fact that the Intercolonial Railway was cribbed, cabined and confined, and that if it could only get out of this state and get up into the glorious freedom of the city of Montreal where it would find its competitors stronger than they are at Lévis, it would do away with these deficits. One thing then we have to thank the Minister of Railways for, and that is that he has absolved the Tory party from any charge of mismanagement as being the basis of deficits heretofore. Now, I am not going to take up the time of the House any longer in reference to this matter.

An hon. MEMBER. Go ahead.

Mr. FOSTER. I know my hon. friend thinks it is all right. I will therefore go on just a moment more. There was an alternative route that has been mentioned; that was the South Shore route. There stands on the statute-books of this Parliament the sum of $229,500 voted for the completion of that line along the south shore of the River St. Lawrence. That we will have to pay any way. I have no personal knowledge of this section, but it is conceded upon all sides that the south shore country is a country which locally would pay a road to run through and pay well. So that if that route could have been taken and that sum of $229,500 which we have to pay out as part payment of the construction, any way, the Intercolonial Railway could have been extended to that route and have gone over the Grand Trunk Railway bridge and into the city of Montreal, and you would have had the advantage of a section of country in which that road would have been assured a local traffic which would have fairly well paid for the running of the road, and the road would have been shorter.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Shorter than the Drummond County road?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend asks me if it is shorter than the Drummond County road. I cannot tell him whether it is shorter or not. I think there is not much difference between them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is quite a difference.

Mr. FOSTER. How much?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Over ten miles.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Blair) does not think that mileage amounts to anything at all when it suits his argument. But he seems to think that ten miles amounts to a great deal when he is asked to take another route. Four hundred miles of advantage to the Grand Trunk Railway on a freight rate never entered into the minds of the hon. gentleman or of his colleagues as an element of competition. Two hundred and forty miles in favour of another road going to St. John, never entered into the minds of the hon. gentlemen, but when it comes to a difference of ten times one it is something stupendous.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Particularly when the hon. gentleman states to this House that it is shorter; I think it is somewhat material.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, if it is ten miles longer.

Mr. HAGGART. It is twenty-seven miles shorter.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It cannot possibly be.

Mr. FOSTER. We are all expected on this side of the House to deal with this question mostly in the dark. The first thing you would have thought that the Minister of Railways would have given to the House would have been the exact length of the Grand Trunk Railway, of the Drummond County and of the South Shore. That was information which we should have had. But we have not got that and we have to delve and dig in the dark as best we may. If 400 miles and 248 miles and twenty-six miles are not material, no matter what the local trade is, the Minister of Railways cannot come to the conclusion that ten miles is a very great obstacle so far as the South Shore is concerned. I think I have taken up most of the points. I have simply this to mention at the last. My hon. friend (Mr. Blair) said that the business men were in favour of this proposition, but my hon. friend failed to show it. He did assert that the business men favoured the idea, if kept down under proper conditions. But if this proposition has ever been favoured by business men it has not been shown yet. I have before me the Toronto "Globe," which I will not quote to the House, not only giving editorials deprecating what was then mooted, but what it thought would never materialize, but giving the opinions of business men as well. The weight of the editorial was decidedly against the proposed scheme. The Montreal "Herald" went to work early in the year and interviewed business men in the city of Montreal. Without taking the time to read these, I think I may state that the majority of the business men who were interviewed were opposed to the proposition as a business project. So that if we take the cool calm declaration of all these organs of the party and all the business men, it is a pretty good showing, prima facie, that this proposition is not favourably received by them. Of course, business men in Montreal would like to get as many railways going into Montreal as possible. No doubt, they would be to a certain extent in favour of that. But whether the project is a wise one to be carried out all depends upon the cost which it will entail and the results which may come from it. Now, I trust that this House will not look at this question in a partisan way at all. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) made the statement that the Opposition had tried to use the argument in such a way as to make a partisan attack upon the Government. A partisan attack was not made upon the Government. This has been treated from this side of the House as a business proposition, or as one that ought to be viewed in a business light; we have endeavoured to discuss it in that way. The vote that took place this afternoon shows that hon. gentlemen on this side of the House remain firm to the policy which they had for years advocated, and will support the Government in carrying that policy out, even though the means are not the best in their opinion that might be adopted. The House this afternoon showed by this vote that though the proposition was one which hon. gentlemen on this side of the House thought might well be better, yet for the sake of a policy which had been determined upon they were willing to give an almost unanimous support to the Government upon this idea which, though not their own idea, they are endeavouring to push to success. The same thing would take place if a proposition were made to bring the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal which commended itself to the attention and consideration of gentlemen on this side of the House in a favourable point of view. This side has just as much at stake in the Intercolonial Railway as hon. gentlemen opposite. The Intercolonial Railway has been as much their child as it has been the child of hon. gentlemen opposite. The future of the Intercolonial Railway is just as dear to us as to hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, and I shall make this statement that if I can be shown to-night any proposition emanating from that side which would be actually in the line of carrying out the future good of the Intercolonial Railway, I would support it and so would hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. We oppose it because we think the scheme is a bad one, and because we think there is no business in sight which will be of such value and of such volume as to make the venture fairly equal, in point of revenue and expenditure. On these grounds I oppose it, and not on partisan grounds. Hon. gentlemen opposite could not hope to gain very much if they were successful. They would gain, as every Government does, credit for good administration. We could hope to gain nothing by a partisan opposition to a scheme of the kind if the business features of it appeared to us as being fair. Let us just leave out the idea that this is simply a partisan attack. It is not that in any sense of the word, and this House on both sides will be doing itself an injustice if it allows itself for a single moment to be led away by the statement that partisan opposition is at the basis of the attitude we take with reference to this question.

Mr. POPE. Mr. Speaker, at 11.30 I have become convinced that the province of New Brunswick was designed on too small a scale. If it had been made larger, it would have been possible for the ambition of these two men who have addressed the House to-night to have been fully satisfied, and we would have had their speeches rolled into one, and would have been saved at least half the time of this House on this occasion. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), has told us for nearly three-quarters of an hour—

Some hon. MEMBERS. An hour and a half.

Mr. POPE. Three-quarters of an hour of the time that he spoke, that it was useless for us to try, with the Intercolonial Railway, to compete with other lines of railway going out of the city of Montreal to the maritime provinces, in carrying freight for Europe. After he had thoroughly convinced us, from his standpoint, that that was a fact, the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) asked him if he would agree on any conditions to the Intercolonial Railway being extended to the city of Montreal, and he admitted that there were conditions under which he would agree to that extension. When he admitted that, he answered all the speech he had made for the first three-quarters of an hour.

I do not intend on this occasion to go into the details which hon. gentlemen opposite must have gone into in order to defend the proposition which they are responsible for placing before this House and this country. I am not here to severely criticise either them or hon. gentlemen on this side. But I have heard quite enough, not only to-night but on previous occasions, to the effect that we should not attempt to compete for traffic over the people's railway in this country, in competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway. We have had quoted to us different distances, the Canadian Pacific Railway in many instances being given the preference, and the Grand Trunk Railway being given the preference in other instances. But I am bound to say that with this country behind me, with the rate at which we can borrow money, without dividends to pay, with the resources which the country has as a freight agent, I would be prepared to enter into an agreement or go into a meeting where freight rates were to be settled, and I would take my chances of getting what was right in the interest of the people of Canada. It is well known that there is no railway corporation in this country that can borrow money at the rate of interest at which the Dominion of Canada can borrow it. It is well known that there is no such force behind any railway corporation as the Dominion of Canada behind her own railways; and I presume that when these hon. gentlemen took into consideration this project, they found that the people of Canada had invested large sums of money in two great highways, one the canal system, and the other the Intercolonial Railway; they found them 150 miles or thereabouts apart; and they undertook to bring them into closer communication, and to bring them together at the commercial centre of Canada, the city of Montreal. Were they warranted in doing that? Is there any great railway in Canada or any railway reaching from the United States towards Canada that does not make every effort, be the financial cost what it may, to get to the city of Montreal? Are we to learn no lessons from these corporations? Sir, is it possible that men who are entrusted with the finances of these corporations, and shareholders who are desirous of earning dividends for the people who have put their money into these various railways, are all wrong in going to the city of Montreal, and that we are right in stopping at a little point like Lévis and handing over all our traffic to other roads? Is it right to concede that all the traffic originated in the western part of this country? For every man knows that the railway that originates the freight has the power of arbitration—that it arbitrates the rate, takes off the cream and gives you the skim milk. The Intercolonial Railway has been handling skim milk for years, as the many deficits which we have had in the operation of that railway prove.

The responsibility of the statement made by the Minister of Railways with regard to the proposed extension rests with him and with the Government to which he belongs. He has intimated, as I gather from the remarks of the ex-Minister of Finance, that it is possible by this transaction to save to this country some $300,000 or $400,000. Sir, I take him at his word. I hold him responsible for that statement, and this country holds him responsible for it; and I am bound to say that in my opinion, though it may be faulty, if proper administration and economy are used in the operating of that railway—even though it may not be possible for a Government to administrate a railway as economically as private corporations can do it—I say that when you look at the deficits we have had since the Intercolonial Railway was constructed, it is time for us to consider some proposition which some honourable body of men like the Government in power are willing to assume responsibility for; and I am not assuming responsibility when I say that I am prepared to support the resolution which these hon. gentlemen have introduced into this House, and to ask them to vindicate their word to this Parliament and to the people of this country.

There are three routes by which the Intercolonial Railway might possibly be extended to the city of Montreal. One is via the Grand Trunk Railway over the Richmond road; the other is the route chosen by the Government, by the Drummond County Railway; and the other is by the road known as the South Shore Railway. There is no very great difference in the respective distance of these routes. The length of the Grand Trunk is 126 miles, that of the Drummond County is 113 miles, and that of the South Shore I have no exact figures of, but I am informed that if it came to the Victoria Bridge it would be 120 miles, and if it went to Longueuil, and the country incurred the expense of constructing another bridge across the St. Lawrence, it might be six or seven miles shorter than the other two routes. But when we face the question of the construction of another bridge across the St. Lawrence the hon. members on both sides of this House would say that under these circumstances the South Shore route would have to be abandoned, and we would have to make our choice between the Drummond County Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway. Well, Sir, as the Minister of Railways has stated, and as I have been informed by Mr. Wainwright, it is impossible to obtain the Grand Trunk Railway at the same price at which we can get the Drummond County Railway. That brings me down to the question whether we can get the Drummond County Railway, which is a shorter route than the Grand Trunk, at less money. I know of no one who can place a better value on the Grand Trunk than the Grand Trunk people themselves, and they say we cannot get the Grand Trunk at the rate at which we can get the Drummond County road; and when we take into account the fact that the grades on that road are easy, and that there is no railway in the province of Quebec with better curvature, I say that the Government are justified in acquiring the Drummond County Railway at the best terms possible for the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. Having heard in the lobbies of the House, and in various parts of this city a condemnation of the character of the Drummond County Railway, which was astonishing to me, I took the opportunity last Saturday of going over that road as far as the rails are laid, and I must say that I was agreeably surprised with its character, with the amount of new business that I saw ready to be shipped, and with the character of the country through which it passes. It was in all its parts and details satisfactory, so far as I am aware. I have heard hon. gentlemen in this House make the statement that this is but a logging road, and that statement has also been made by gentlemen who did not belong to this House at all. Sir, if it be a logging road, what was the late Government doing for the last eight or nine years? That road was built under its administration, under the direction of its officers, inspected by its engineers, and it honestly earned every dollar of the subsidy, and must have complied with all the conditions of the Subsidy Act. It has also been stated that it runs through an unsettled country. Well, if there be nothing else against a railway except that it penetrates a forest its entire length and opens up a new country and new settlements, I for one will be prepared to assume the responsibility of supporting the claims of that railway for consideration. But it is not a fact that this road runs completely through an unsettled country. For its first thirty-five miles, it runs through the old settled country down beyond the town of Drummond. The next section runs through a new settlement and in that section we see illustrated the advantages of the policy of the late Government in encouraging railway construction by means of Government subsidies. Under that policy we found railways penetrating the forests before any settlement was made and making it possible for settlers to go in and overcome adverse circumstances and find an easy transport for their products to the foreign markets of the world, and there hold their own against the competition of foreign countries. In no part of this country will you find settlements more flourishing or conditions more promising than in that new settlement penetrated by this road, where the settlers find work during the winter in hauling, taking out lumber, carrying it to the mills or the rivers, thus being enabled to remain at home and save the expense of travelling, and developing that section of the country until it has reached a flourishing condition. And this is due to that road, which some hon. gentlemen have called a logging road. For the other part, after we pass on the Intercolonial section, we have, I believe, about forty-three miles. I do not think it is necessary to discuss the question whether that forty-three miles is good or bad road. For it is to be built on the standard of the Intercolonial Railway, and that standard is considered sufficient for this country for some years to come. The first twenty-five miles of the road is through a forest, but that forest, a portion of which is owned by the King Bros., has always been represented as one of the best forest preserves of spruce and pine timber to be found anywhere in the Dominion. The last twenty miles run down through a forest to the junction at Riviere du Loup, which is a very well settled old farming country. So that you have twenty miles on the one hand and thirty-five miles on the other, or fifty-five miles, running through an old settled country, and twenty-five miles running through a partially developed country, and twenty-five miles through forest land. That is the history of that road from the time it leaves Ste. Rosalie until it reaches the junction with the Grand Trunk Railway. I noticed in travelling over that road immense quantities of timber. It has been intimated that the timber has all been taken out by those who built that road. Gentlemen who are not in the lumber business might be prepared to accept that statement, but when you know that the road crosses the Nicolet River and the St. Francis and other rivers coming out of an enormous forest country that lies above, you are bound to know that what little lumber may have been taken along the actual line of that road is but a very small percentage of what is bound to be shipped over it for many years to come. I saw millions and millions of feet sawn lumber ready for shipment, and millions of feet in logs, and from inquiry I am perfectly satisfied that these mills are a permanency, representing very large investments. Some of the milling companies own thousands of acres of land, and one company, according to its own statement, will ship this year some 20,000 carloads. I was told that there were 20,000 cars of bark shipped, and I have no reason to doubt the statement.

Mr. WALLACE. It is a tan-bark road.

Mr. POPE. The hon. ex-Minister of something or other says it is a tan-bark road. If he will go down into that section and do some of his backing there, he will get tanned. Now, I am very sorry that the hon. gentleman disturbed me, because I am nervous, and these interruptions upset me. I heard some remarks made also with regard to the gentlemen who are connected with the Drummond County Railway. I heard very serious reflections cast upon them, and perhaps it is only natural, in a hot contest, as this promises to be, that such remarks should be made, but being personally acquainted with them for years, I must bear testimony to the honour and uprightness of the gentlemen associated with that road. I have known them for years, and have never known anything dishonourable against them or any institution with which they are connected. It is stated that they are going to make money. Well, suppose they do make money. I am bound to say that they would be a pack of fools if they invested their money in that road, and if they pledged their credit to the extent I know they did, notwithstanding what is said to the contrary in this House, to acquire sufficient funds to carry the road out to satisfactory completion, without expecting a fair remuneration for their enterprise. Out of this transaction I do not believe—it may be a weakness of mine not to be a believer—that the amount of money these gentlemen are going to receive will be, after everything is paid, more than a fair recompense. It has been said outside this House, if not in it, that this road has received subsidies from the two Governments. That is not the case. It receives subsidies from two Governments for a portion of the way, but for the balance—leaving out of question the forty-three miles which they will have to build, and for which they get no subsidy at all—from about St. Leonard down, they received no subsidy from the local Government. So that they have only received subsidies from the two Governments on a portion of the road. It has been stated that the Government would be obliged to re-lay the rails over the seventy miles now constructed. I have no hesitation in saying that these rails are comparatively new and in good condition, and that so far as speed is concerned you can go just as fast over a fifty-six pound rail as over a seventy or eighty pound rail. But modern railways have found that, owing to the vibration and the wear and tear of the rolling stock and ties, it is an economy to have heavier rails. Take the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway, you will not find them tearing up the fifty-six pound rails which are in good condition in order to replace them by heavier rails.

Mr. INGRAM. That is being done on the Intercolonial Railway. They are removing fifty-six pound rails and putting on sixty-seven pound rails.

Mr. POPE. If they are only putting on sixty-seven pound rails, that is very poor policy. They ought to put on eighty or ninety pound rails. No railway man, let him be the present or an ex-Minister of Railways, will think, when he has the credit of his country behind him, of laying sixty-seven pound rails.

Mr. McCLEARY. But you have said that fifty-six pound rails are more economical for running purposes.

Mr. POPE. No; you got me wrong end to, Sir. You will have to load up the other way. I find myself under very peculiar circumstances politically about two-thirds of the time. Somebody must have been stealing, and, being a Conservative, I do not want to charge it upon this side of the House, and, consequently, I am bound to lay it to the door of hon. gentlemen opposite that they have been after our policy and after propositions that I have heard made on the other side of the House not only to-day but in days gone by. The extension of the Intercolonial to Montreal is not a new thing, it is not one that has not been heard of, it is not one that has not been proposed--and even over this same route--not accepted, though, by any Government until this Government has accepted it. I cannot say whether it has been seriously considered by any previous Government or not, but it has been considered by public men in this country, it has been considered by men who have sat in Parliament and heard the reports of the deficits on the Intercolonial Railway year after year. It would not have been unnatural, in fact it is most natural, of course for a thoughtful man to try to conceive of some idea by which to remedy, if possible, this great deficit. The ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) said it would make a wide difference in the far west whether you are shipping over a thousand miles or whether you are shipping over 800 miles. I say that it does make a little difference to the road that has to carry the freight, if you like, but I can tell him that if he was a shipper of lumber or other goods in this country, he would know that distance to the shipper very often does not affect him. As a shipper of goods do you suppose that I am going to stop my book-keepers and have them look up the records and see whether a thousand feet of lumber is going to travel a 100 miles for $10 or 150 miles for $10? That would not be practical business. We keep book-keepers for other business than that. Any man doing business extensively in this country knows that the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Grand Trunk, the New York Central--all roads that have made a vast reputation and have lines of railway as good as those in any part of the world, over and over again carry freights for long distances for the same prices that other companies carry the shorter distances.

Mr. CHARLTON. I desire to say a few words, being a western man, and having, I believe, a few points to present that will be of value in connection with this discussion upon the proposition now laid before the House by the Government. The ex-Minister of Finance, in the able speech that he addressed to the House said that he did not seek to discuss the question from a partisan standpoint but from a business standpoint and it is from a business standpoint that I propose to say a few words about this matter. We have on hand a railway some 1,200 miles in length. I presume, considering the experience we have had in connection with that road, that were we now at the point where we had to decide whether we should build the road at all or not, we would not build it, but would apply the $50,000,000 that it would cost to some other purpose. But the road is on our hands and must be carried on, and the question that the Government have to consider in connection with the operation of the road is whether it is possible to extricate itself from the difficulties that surround it in connection with that enterprise. It is known to us all that the road has not paid, that it has failed to pay even its running expenses, that it has been a burden upon the country; and the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair), in managing its affairs naturally cast about to see if it was possible to put the road upon a basis which would overcome this difficulty and avoid the loss to the country that has hitherto characterized its management. Now, my experience with regard to railway matters would lead me to suppose that the Minister of Railways would do in reference to this matter, exactly what he has done. He has a road the western terminus of which is not an advantageous road--practically the road terminates nowhere--and if it is to be placed in a position to earn money it must have a better terminus. And casting about for a better terminus, the hon. Minister naturally cast his eyes upon the great commercial emporium of Canada where many lines of railways centre, where a vast amount of business can be obtained, and he has come to the conclusion that the interests of the road require that it should have a terminus in the city of Montreal. Now, my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance tells us that it is not at all practicable to obtain a large addition of tonnage for conveyance over this road even with the terminus in Montreal. I think the hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken in that assumption. The Intercolonial, if it enters the city of Montreal, will connect with the Grand Trunk, it will connect with the Canadian Pacific Railway, it will connect with the Parry Sound road, it will connect with the entire system of Canada, and, if it has proper facilities for carrying on the business, it will have inducements to offer and will have opportunity to draw tonnage from all these lines and an opportunity decidedly to increase its movement of through freight. I believe that the amount of business that is to be acquired by entering Montreal is very large. I asked the hon. gentleman if he took the position that it was not in the interest of the country for the Intercolonial to seek an entry into Montreal at all, and he said: No, he would not take that position; he would not assert that it was not desirable to have the Intercolonial terminate in Montreal. If that is the hon. gentleman's decision, the next question is: If it is desirable to enter into Montreal are the conditions upon which the Government are to secure an entry into Montreal favourable conditions, are they conditions that we are warranted in ratifying? That is the simple, the only question before us. Is the cost at which the entry into Montreal is to be secured, an annual payment of $210,000 out of proportion to the advantage to be gained? Is it likely to prove a bad bargain? Are we paying an exorbitant price for entering that city. That is the business question before the House, and that is the question we have to consider in making up our minds whether we will support the policy of this Government in this matter or not.

Let us look at the matter in its details. We have other railway transactions by comparison with which we can form an opinion with regard to this rental of roads. It is only a few days ago that the Wabash road closed an arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway for running powers over its line from Windsor to Suspension Bridge. And the sum it agreed to pay was $1,000 per year per mile, with half the cost of the maintenance of the road to be charged against the Wabash. That furnishes a basis of comparison with the bargain proposed to be made for the lease of these lines, to enable the Intercolonial to run from Lévis to Montreal. And I am just reminded that under their bargain the Wabash are confined to through business; they are not allowed to do local business. But in the case of the Intercolonial, they can do local business or any business they please. The Drummond County Railway, I think I am correct in saying, is 115 miles in length with a branch of 17 miles. That makes a total of 132 miles of road. Upon the basis of the rental paid by the Wabash, the rental for this road would be $132,000 a year. My hon. friend (Mr. Blair) is getting it for $70,000, about half the amount paid by the Wabash to the Grand Trunk for running privileges, but without power to do local business upon the great western division of the Grand Trunk. I say that so far as that part of the bargain is concerned, it is on the face of it, a good bargain. There is no sound reason for adverse criticism of it. In addition, it must be remembered, the Government own this road at the end of ninety-nine years. Then let us consider that portion of the arrangement respecting the line of the Grand Trunk from Ste. Rosalie to the Victoria Bridge. The Government virtually pays the same rental for that that the Wabash pays for the Grand Trunk—they pay $37,000 a year for 35 miles of road, a little over $1,000 per mile per year. The hon. ex-Minister of Finance says that $40,000 represents a very large sum for running powers over the Victoria Bridge. But the Victoria Bridge cost a very large amount of money. It cost $6,000,000 originally, and a very large sum, about $2,000,000 is to be spent in putting the bridge into better condition. That represents a cost of $8,000,000 to the road for the bridge. Now, $40,000 a year for the privilege of using that bridge, estimating it upon the basis of $8,000,000 cost is a very moderate charge indeed.

The Government is paying interest upon about a quarter of the cost of the bridge. There can be no reason to find fault with that portion of the bargain. Then, with regard to the terminal privileges in the city of Montreal, has anybody an idea what those terminal privileges are worth, the enormous yard room the Grand Trunk Railway has in that city, its depots, its sidings? Millions upon millions of dollars would not purchase the property that the Grand Trunk Railway uses and owns in Montreal for the prosecution of its business; and the Intercolonial Railway, for an annual rental of $62,500, gets the use jointly with the Grand Trunk road of its terminal privileges. Now, I have looked this question over carefully. I represent a constituency up west that wants to see the affairs of this country economically managed, and I should feel disposed to criticise the Government if I thought it had made a bargain in this matter that was extravagant or injudicious. But I cannot see it in that light. I have listened to this discussion open to conviction, I have examined this pamphlet, and taken from the report of Mr. Schreiber, and other engineers visiting that road, and I believe the policy the Government is adopting with regard to this matter, is a sound business policy. If they get into Montreal with the Intercolonial Railway, they are taking a business risk that they are warranted in taking. The condition of that road is such that something has to be done, and something has got to be risked, and the Government are bound, if they do their duty by the country, to manage the Department as the Minister of Railways and Canals is doing, with skill, with energy, with forethought. He has taken the very course that, as a prudent business man, he was bound to take; and I feel bound to say that I am disposed to sustain him in the course he has taken. Now, it is said by my hon. friend: "Oh, you may get into Montreal with the Intercolonial Railway in another way. Here you are with the Grand Trunk Railway running to the seaboard at Portland and with the Canadian Pacific Railway running to the seaboard at St. John. Both these roads have shorter lines than the Intercolonial Railway, and you cannot compete with them. My hon. friend from Compton (Mr. Pope) has answered that argument very well, indeed. I would like to ask my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance whether the Canadian Pacific Railway finds it impossible to compete with the Grand Trunk Railway for business going to the seaboard from Montreal, though the distance to the seaboard by the Canadian Pacific Railway is much greater than by the Grand Trunk Railway. The Canadian Pacific Railway is a successful competitor with the Grand Trunk Railroad, and the argument made by my hon. friend, that because these roads are somewhat shorter than the Intercolonial, consequently, the Intercolonial has no chance to secure business in competition with them.

Then there is another consideration, and one, perhaps, that has not occurred to any of the hon. gentlemen who have been discussing this matter, and that is that we may at some time, most unfortunately, have a condition of international relations that will result in the abrogation of the bonding privilege. The Canadian Pacific Railway passes through the northern end of Maine, the Grand Trunk Railway runs down through the state of Maine to Portland. Where would these roads be if the bonding privilege was abrogated? What would their competition with the Intercolonial amount to then? Why, the Intercolonial Railway would then become invaluable to us, it would then be the only road reaching down to the seaboard passing entirely over Canadian territory. Were we to fail to make the arrangement that it is proposed to make with the Intercolonial Railway, and if that contingency arose, we would wish that we had lost no time in doing it before. If there was no other consideration in connection with this matter, save the one I mention now, it would amply justify the Government in taking this course to secure the entry for the Intercolonial into Montreal and an all-rail route over our railway system centering in Montreal, and to the seaboard within our own Dominion, and that railroad route passing entirely over our own soil.

My hon. friend says we might have had a Quebec connection, that we could have built a bridge across the St. Lawrence and then we would have had connection. What would we have connected with? A branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway road. We would have had no better connection with the Grand Trunk Railway, we would have had no connection whatever with the Parry Sound Railway, which will be a very important connection, indeed, to this road, and maybe more important than a connection with either of the other great lines. That would not have answered the purpose. Then he says it was not necessary to use this Drummond County road, why not build the South Shore road? Well, is my hon. friend aware that the construction of the South Shore railway, when we have got another line constructed which would answer the same purpose, would have been a waste of money? And when the road is constructed it seems it would not have answered the purpose as well. It is somewhat longer, and it would have cost more. There are expensive bridges to be built upon the line of this road, there are bridges across the St. Francis, over the Yamaska, and over the Nicolet, and these will cost an enormous amount of money. The line selected by the Government is undoubtedly the better line of the two. It is a line that will secure a greater amount of local business. The hon. member for Compton, a practical man, describes the country through which it passes; it passes through a wilderness of timber, and as long as timber reserves last, they furnish a railway line with one of the most important and profitable items of business for transport that a road can secure. So I say the policy of the Government with regard to the entry that is about to be secured into Montreal for the Intercolonial Railway is, I believe, worthy of the endorsement of this House. I believe that the cost of securing that entry is, under the circumstances, a moderate one. I believe the Minister of Railways, in the management of this matter, has shown rare good sense and good business principles, and I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that, with all my regard for economy and desire to check expenditure. I shall support this scheme. I hope, although we cannot say that it will be so, I hope that this connection will result in lifting the Intercolonial Railway out of that slough of despond in which it has been for several years placed. I hope it will wipe out these deficits. I believe that this arrangement ought to pay a rental of $210,00 a year, and leave an addition to pay a share of the expenses of keeping that road in order, and a considerable surplus revenue. But whatever that surplus revenue may be, if we get any at all, it will be so much clear gain, and so much added to the earnings of the Intercolonial Railway, and so much placed to the credit account of that road that will put it upon a firmer and a better basis as a business enterprise. I do not think that there is any justification for the severe criticism that has been engaged in as to the policy of the Government with regard to this scheme.

Mr. HAGGART. At this late hour of the night, I will try to make my remarks on this question as brief as possible. The resolutions which the hon. Minister of Railways has brought down for the consideration of the House, necessitated, as the ex-Finance Minister has shown, an expenditure which, when capitalized, would amount to over seven million dollars. The first question which this House has to consider is whether there is any necessity for building that road, and if there is such a necessity, is the expenditure in excess, or not, of what is absolutely required for the purpose. The Minister of Railways and Canals stated that when the Intercolonial Railway was making arrangements with different parties in the east for freight, it was taken by the throat at Point Lévis. He says they could not make any arrangement for carrying freight to Montreal, and therefore this connection became a necessity, and that when he came into office he perceived the necessity of getting to Montreal as a point of distribution. Well, does the hon. gentleman know that we have an arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway and with the Canadian Pacific Railway by which the Intercolonial Railway can contract to deliver freight in Montreal over those roads? Does he not know perfectly well that such an arrangement extends all the way from Halifax to Montreal? He has only to account for the mileage carriage of his trains from Point Lévis to Montreal, or from St. John to Montreal, by the Grand Trunk Railway, and the Canadian Pacific Railway. As to that part of his scheme, then, it is perfectly absurd. As chairman of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council he has the power of compelling these companies to carry his freight, and he is able to utilize their terminal facilities in the city of Montreal when he thinks it is in the interests of the country to do so. The hon. gentleman may be perfectly right in his idea of the necessity of extending the road from Quebec to Montreal. Then we have the financial question to consider, and we have to ask ourselves what amount should be properly expended for this extension. I say that the amount proposed to be expended by the Minister of Railways is enormously in excess of the requirements. When I was Minister of Railways and Canals I had occasion to consider this very matter, and I made inquiries with regard to this same route which he proposes to follow, and I considered that I could have made arrangements with the Grand Trunk Railway for a mileage rate over their road and for the use, on payment, of their terminal facilities, and for the acquisition of the Drummond County Railway, if I thought it was necessary to purchase it. But I never contemplated any such expenditure as the hon. gentleman now proposes. There was information in my department showing that the expenditure would not be in excess of $1,700,000, let alone $7,200,000. The hon. gentleman has at his fingers' end in his department, figures which would show the cost of traffic and the increased earnings which would accrue to the Intercolonial Railway by the extension to the city of Montreal, and the amount of freight and passengers that he would carry from Point Lévis and from St. John to Montreal. Has he furnished us with any information of that kind? Now, let me analyse his figures in which he says that the increased earning of the road would amount to $900,000. He gives us the statement of the engineer in chief of the department. He says that the increase in tons of freight carried will be from 1,379,618 to 1,698,000. On the number of passengers, the increase will be from 1,471,863 to 2,100,000 passengers making an increased carriage of passengers to the extent of 600,000 per year. Does not the absurdity of it strike the House. I looked over the figures to see the amount that this railway of seventy-three miles carries. It carries 27,000 passengers per year. Add 10,000 in consequence of the extension of the road to Chaudière, and that would give you 30,000 a year. Double that on account of its being a through road, and that would give you 74,000 passengers per year. Where then are the 525,000 passengers with which the number is to be supplemented? You have only to draw attention to that statement, and to these figures to demonstrate the absurdity of it. It amounts to 2,000 passengers a day to be carried between Montreal and Quebec in excess of the number at present carried. How many trains would it require to carry them? These are the figures upon which the Finance Minister tries to justify the expenditure of this enormous sum for the purpose of having the road completed to Montreal—an expenditure of $7,000,000 and some odd thousands. It may be possible that the amount that he pays for the Drummond County Road is not in excess of the absolute value of the road. The cost of that road, as furnished to the department, the hon. gentleman stated this evening to be $1,530,000, of which that company received in bonuses from the local and Dominion Governments over $800,000, leaving the amount that they actually expended in the building of the road at $700,000. We all know how these returns of expenditure are made. The contractor for the building of the road receives so much of the bonuses given by the local and the Dominion Governments, and these are supplemented by the bonds issued by the road. He includes the amount which would be absolutely required, the cash expenditure for the building of the road, and probably he takes the bonds, and he always makes an estimate of the cost of the road which is in excess of what the railway company could have it built for, if they had the cash and spent it upon the road. We have no return to the Government for the amount they have paid out in cash. Let us suppose it was $700,000. It would make the amount paid by the Government for this road nearly $2,300,000. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Pope) said that these gentlemen had a perfect right to make a legitimate transaction, but 300 per cent is too much money to make out of an undertaking of that kind. The country might take the road for the purpose of utilizing it, and, if it did so, it would be justified in giving them a legitimate profit. Why do not the Government proceed in the manner in which they could do? If that road is absolutely necessary for the country to be utilized in the interest of the Dominion, why do the Government not exercise the right of eminent domain and take it at a fair valuation, and pay what the arbitrators award as a fair amount which should be paid for this road, instead of paying an amount which is largely in excess of what the value of the road is? The Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) had no information to base his report upon which he gave to Council recommending the purchase of this road. He had the report of Mr. Schreiber, his chief engineer, who told him that a new road could be built, between the points named, for $1,400,000, yet he gives nearly $2,300,000 for this road, or nearly $1,000,000 in excess of the amount which his own engineer stated was necessary for it. A remarkable thing which he states in regard to the contract which was laid on the Table of the House a few days ago was, that though the contract was dated on the 15th of May, the signatures were not made for a long time afterwards. The affairs of the Department of Railways and Canals are managed entirely different from what they were before, if this is so. The last thing to be put into a contract, after the signatures, is the date. The secretary of the department affixes his stamp, with the date of the contract, upon the day it is signed, and, when that stamp is fixed, the date is on the contract—that is, as it used to be in the department. The date was affixed at the signing of the department.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). They have no secretary now.

Mr. HAGGART. They have a secretary, because they are obliged to have one. The agreement which they have made in reference to the Drummond County Railway, pales in comparison with the arrangement they have made with the Grand Trunk Railway Company for running from Ste. Rosalie into the city of Montreal and using the terminals and the bridge. They pay their share, according to the mileage, and they help the company to pay their share of the officers employed in connection with the operation of the road, trackmen, train dispatchers and agents, and mark you, they pay one-half of the whole value going into the city of Montreal. Is it not a notorious fact that the Intercolonial Railway, doing the business that it does, will not use that road or the terminals to the extent of one-hundredth part of what the Grand Trunk Railway will? Is there an arrangement by which the Grand Trunk Railway will pay to the Government the rent of their user of the half of the road? We pay for half of the railway from St. Rosalie to Montreal, for the user of the road, according to the amount of the train mileage, but the Grand Trunk Railway Company does not pay us one cent for the part of our property which they use, and for which we have paid. That is a most extraordinary bargain. I never heard of anything like it in a contract. The Grand Trunk Railway should pay to the Dominion Government, for the user of that part of the road that belongs to the Dominion of Canada which the Intercolonial does not use, and which will be used by this company. They do not. If the Grand Trunk wanted at any time, for the purpose of enlarging their business in Montreal, to extend their tracks, they could do it, and one-half the expense would be paid by the Government, or nearly the whole of it, because the Government, for the amount which they expend, pay 4 or 5 per cent a year in perpetuity, an amount equal to nearly two-thirds of the whole amount of the extension which they make to their terminals in Montreal. As to the necessity of the extension of this road from Lévis to Montreal, it is questionable whether it will be any advantage or not. I hope it will be to the advantage of the country. In respect to that part of the road from Lévis, 125 miles, over $1,500,000 was spent, and the hon. Minister of Railways stated that that road was in good order. Every one in this House knows as well as I do that that road is in as good order as any part of the Drummond County Railway that we are purchasing; and to complete that road up to the requirements of the Intercolonial Railway there was an expenditure of $2,000,000. Will not history repeat itself on that section of road? Is it possible, then, that the extra earnings out of the terminals in Montreal will be so in excess of the amount at present earned by the Intercolonial Railway as to repay to this country the $210,000, the amount we have to pay to the Grand Trunk Railway for the agents and other expenses, the amount we have to pay for keeping our portion of the road in repair, and also to pay, as the Minister of Railways says in such roseate colours, the sum of $300,000 or $400,000? Is it an absurdity. If we can realize the $210,000, I will venture to say that amount will be the utmost that can possibly be realized. The Minister of Railways ought to be able to come down with a calculation furnished by his officers showing the amount of the traffic that passes from one end of the Intercolonial to the other—from St. John in one direction and from Point Lévis in the other; and a calculation of the increase, within a few thousand dollars, which we ought to expect from the extension to Montreal. He does not give us a single calculation of what it will require to put that road in first-class order from the end of the 73 miles to the Chaudière Junction. We do not know what the railway company have to expend on it. He ought to have had information furnished by the officers of his department, in order to satisfy us to the fullest extent on these points; but he has left us totally in the dark in reference to them. The hon. gentleman goes to Council with a recommendation from Mr. Schreiber for the purchase of the road. But Mr. Schreiber does not speak positively as to the state of the road. He says it is the duty of the Minister to make further inquiries in order to find out whether the road is in a satisfactory condition or not. I understood the Minister to say that after Wednesday's debate he sent officers down to see what the state of the road was. He corrected himself and said that they went down a few days before. The hon. gentleman could have got from the principal officer of his department, and he ought to have furnished to this House, information as to the quantities of all kinds—the amount of earth excavation, the amount of rock excavation, the amount paid for the right of way, bridges and everything else, in detail; and there are a great many gentlemen in this House who would be capable of casting up the figures, and forming an opinion whether the amount paid for the road was in excess of what it ought to be. What kind of an inquiry did Mr. Ridout make, or could he make, with regard to the character of the road? He leaves here last Saturday, goes down to Montreal on Sunday morning, and is back here on Monday evening, and upon that examination the Minister reports to this House that he is perfectly satisfied as to the quality of the road, and recommends its purchase. It was an examination made long after he had recommended the purchase to the members of the Government and obtained an Order in Council for that purpose. I venture to say, Mr. Speaker, that if the Minister and the Government of the day had decided to build that road from Point Lévis to Montreal, all the expenditure that would have been necessary to accomplish that would have been at the utmost $1,700,000 for construction; and the annual payment for user, that is, for car mileage to the Grand Trunk Railway Company for the use of their road from Ste. Rosalie to the bridge, and from the bridge to Montreal, would not have been more than $20,000 or $25,000 a year. For these expenditures everything would have been accomplished for which the Minister now proposes to saddle the country with an expenditure in excess of $7,000,000.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, I have a few remarks to make on this subject, in order to state my reasons for the vote I intend to give on the question. One objection I take to this scheme is that it has been brought down here so late in the session that there is not time for us properly to consider it. The answer which the Minister of Railways has made to that objection is that the Conservative Government when in power did the same thing. To my mind that is no answer at all. I am not prepared to say that everything that was done by the Conservative Government was right, and I am not prepared to allow hon. gentlemen to use that as an argument. I hold that it is no argument. We want them to do what is right by rule of right, and not by judging what has been done by parties on this side. I say it is a very serious objection to a most important scheme, that it is brought down within a few days of the closing of the session. The matter is necessarily hurried, because there is no time for its proper consideration or discussion. Another complaint I make is of the lack of definite information. This objection has been dwelt upon by the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) and the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart), and I think it is a very important objection to this scheme. Even as to the condition of the road the information is very general; it is not at all definite. As has been pointed out, we have no information as to the rolling stock which is to be taken over. On a great many other points the House is entitled to more information than we have received. However, these are only general objections. Now, Sir, the Minister of Railways gave as a reason for bringing this scheme down to the House and asking the endorsement of the House for it, that the Intercolonial Railway has for some years shown a deficit; and he thinks that it ought to be made a paying road, and argues that by extending it to Montreal it will be made to pay. I do not know whether that is a good argument or not. I do not consider that the Intercolonial was built in order to make money. The Intercolonial Railway was a political road, built entirely to unite the lower provinces with the upper provinces at the time of confederation. That was part of the bargain. The Government had to build this road, and if there had been no bargain, I do not think it would have been built. I do not think there is any need to make the Intercolonial Railway pay; but no argument has been offered to show that with this extension it will pay. In fact, the argument is all the other way; it goes to show that this road will not pay. Now, I intend to read a selection from a paper, which I am sure will have a good deal of weight with members on the other side of the House. I would ask their careful attention to this short selection which I will read from the Montreal "Witness," a paper which always supports the Government when it can, but which I am bound to say is a good deal more independent than a good many of the papers which do support the Government. I intend to read a short selection from the "Witness" on this very subject, which puts the case from my point of view better than I can do it myself. The article is headed "Intercolonial Extension," and appears in the daily "Witness" of Saturday, June 12th. It begins by saying that the Intercolonial Railway is one of the political railways built by the Government as a part of the price of confederation. It goes on to say that this road has never paid, and that although economies have reduced the deficit, it has always been a drain on the treasury. Now, I shall quote the words of this article and ask the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite to them:

How to at least lessen the burden, is the problem; to reduce the expenditure, or even continue the present reduced expenditure, and yet maintain the line in working order, seems impossible. The Laurier Government has decided upon the bold course, that of extending the line and attempting, by gaining business, to greatly increase its earnings. To this end the Government has secured connections which will make Montreal a terminal of the road and give it a better opportunity for securing traffic between Montreal and Halifax and intermediate points, instead of taking merely what comes to the Intercolonial through the other competing roads. To this end it has increased the capital charges of the road by two hundred and ten thousand dollars annually. It seems very doubtful, indeed, that the extension will make the road a paying one, or will even greatly reduce the deficit. The Intercolonial will have to compete with the Canadian Pacific for the Halifax business, and the line of the latter is shortest by seventy-six miles, and it will have the Grand Trunk also as a competitor. Its competition may, however, benefit both Halifax and Montreal and the whole country through which it runs, for Government competition ought at least to be real.

The arrangement entered into will certainly benefit the Grand Trunk Railway, which by it secures the urgently necessary reconstruction of the Victoria Bridge at small cost to itself. The Drummond County Railway will also be a great, a very great, gainer. That the Intercolonial will greatly benefit, seems doubtful.

But the extension of the Intercolonial is a very doubtful policy, and to create an annual charge of two hundred and ten thousand dollars for such a project at a time when economy and retrenchment were necessary, and while expenditures upon the fast Atlantic service, upon rapid deepening of canals, and upon the Kootenay Railway and other public works to which the Government was committed, had just increased the cost of public works by about a million dollars annually, seems unwise, especially in view of the fact that there was no public demand for the extension of the Intercolonial.

My objection to this scheme is not the same as those of some hon. gentlemen who have spoken. I object to extending this road to Montreal at all. I am not going to discuss whether the Drummond County Railway is a good road or not, but I object to the Government going further into the railway business at all. I think, on the contrary, that if the Government would go out of the business altogether, it would be to our advantage. I agree with the "Daily Witness" that this extension is not likely to reduce the deficit at all, and may increase it, and, considering the enormous indebtedness to which the Government is already pledged, it is making a very great mistake by increasing that debt to the extent of $7,000,000 more. Looking at the matter from a business point of view, without any question of party at all—and it is a matter of dollars and cents which ought to be discussed free from all party considerations—the expenditure is going to be very great. We have no guarantee that there will be an adequate return, and I believe that the people generally wish the Government to withdraw from the project and not incur such enormous expense. If the sentiment of the country were taken, I believe it would be that the Government should not go into the railway business more extensively, but get out of that business altogether if it could see its way to do so. I would be glad if the Government would make an arrangement with one of the leading companies to take over the Intercolonial Railway and relieve us of the burden. I am opposed to the Government going into the railway business any further and endeavouring to compete with the Canadian Pacific Railway and Grand Trunk Railway on unequal terms.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation). As the Grand Trunk Railway and the Drummond County Railway, which the Government ask us to purchase by the resolutions now under consideration, run through a portion of the county I represent here, I wish to say a few words in explanation of the vote I am about to give on the resolutions now before the House. This Drummond County Railway, when it was subsidized by the Dominion Government and the Quebec legislature, was only looked upon as a colonization road. When this road was built, the promoters did not aim so much at making it yield a large margin of profit as using it for opening up the country it passes through. The subsidies granted by the local legislature and the Dominion Government were given with a view to opening up a portion of the province of Quebec which was then without any railway communication. The Government now propose to extend the Intercolonial Railway to the city of Montreal, and as a result of carrying out this policy of extension, have agreed to pay what I consider an exorbitant price for the rental of the Drummond County Railway. While, to my mind, the 99 years lease is also for too long a period of time. Now, it is contended that the Drummond County Railway is a first-class line, perfectly equipped, and being in need of no considerable repairs, I may say that I know perfectly well the condition of the road, as it runs through a portion of the county which I have the honour to represent in this House. I may say that I have to stand a regular storm from those of my constituents whose farms are crossed by this railway. These people are all the time complaining to me about the fencing which divides their farms from the railway and about the crossings on their farms. I may further remark that if my hon. friend from Compton (Mr. Pope) had gone over the road outside of the summer season, he would have found that the ballasting of the road is far from being a first-class ballast, as he stated.

The rental which the Government have agreed to pay, as I said a little while ago, is an exorbitant one. Notwithstanding what the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) said about the earnings of the road, and notwithstanding also the altogether fanciful estimate given by the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) as to the receipts of the railway in the future, I for one, do not hesitate to say, in view of the condition of that railway and the local freight and passenger traffic which the Intercolonial may get from it, that the Government will not be able to realize on that portion of the road a sufficient sum to pay the works they have undertaken to carry out, and the yearly rental of $210,000 which they will have to pay for running powers over their lines to the Grand Trunk Railway and the Drummond County Railway. The late Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) has just shown to the House that the Government had entered into arrangements for securing an entry for the freight of the Intercolonial into the city of Montreal, also for getting the freight of the other companies which are feeders of the Intercolonial. Therefore, although we assent to the views of the hon. gentlemen opposite as to the desirability of improving the condition of the Intercolonial and increasing its movement of through traffic, still I am of opinion that the Government, in view of the exorbitant rental they have agreed to pay, together with the cost of the maintenance of the road from Ste. Rosalie to Montreal, will not be able to realize sufficient earnings to pay the rental and to keep this portion of the road in repair.

The Government, I think, before many years elapse, when they realize that their policy of increasing the earnings of the Intercolonial is doomed to failure, will bring another scheme down to the House and endorse the views of my hon. friend from East Durham (Mr. Craig), who has just taken his seat; when he said that the interest of the country demanded that the Government should go out altogether of the railway business and get rid of the burden of the Intercolonial, seeing that railways are operated more successfully by private companies than by the Government. The idea has gone abroad and has sunk deeply into people's minds, and experience has also shown, that a Government cannot operate a railway as successfully as a private company. Therefore, I hold that the Government, instead of taking steps for extending the Intercolonial from its present terminus to Montreal, at the cost of such sacrifices to the country as they are now asking the House to endorse, ought to have made arrangements with one of the leading companies, either with the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway, to take over the Intercolonial, on such conditions as were calculated to secure its successful operation. But I am afraid that the Government, after making that bad bargain and paying such an exorbitant rental, will later on come down and ask the House to give its assent to the sale of the Intercolonial to one of the leading companies, so as to have it operated under the most favourable conditions to the road itself and to the trade interests of the country.

The hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) tried to impress upon the House, a little while ago, that the country through which this road passes was a well-timbered country, and that owing to the fact that the road crosses rivers coming out of an enormous forest country, the lumber freight would furnish the railway line with one of the most profitable items of business for transport that a road can secure. Let my hon. friend allow me to tell him that he labours under a false impression and that the few timber reserves which are to be found along the line of the Drummond County Railway will be exhausted before many years have elapsed. That is, in fact, one of the main reasons why the shareholders and owners of the Drummond County Railway are so anxious to sell their property to the Government. These gentlemen, for several years past, have been quite alive to that fact. It is no longer a paying property, the road being unable to pay its running expenses, owing to the fact that the lumber preserves being pretty well exhausted, the lumber freight—and I call the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) to this point—is no longer a profitable source of earnings for the road, notwithstanding all said to the contrary by my hon. friend from Compton (Mr. Pope). And I hold that if confined merely to local traffic, the road would no longer be able to pay its running expenses. The hon. member for Compton endeavoured to create the impression that the best forest preserves of spruce and pine timber were to be found in the Eastern Townships, so that the Drummond County Railway might safely rely, for many years to come, upon the lumber freight to feed its traffic. The rivers flowing towards the St. Lawrence which the hon. gentleman spoke of as being crossed by the railroad, are crossed by that branch of the Grand Trunk Railway running to Quebec and by that portion of the road running to the United States; so that this portion of the forest country to the east is accommodated by the Grand Trunk, and therefore, these forests shall never be cut down by the milling companies which are accommodated by the Drummond County Railway Company. Those forest preserves consist mainly of spruce timber, which is exported to the United States, under the shape of deals and pulp. Now, the Grand Trunk, through its branch line from Richmond to Quebec and its main line from Richmond to the frontier, shuts out altogether the Drummond County Railway from the benefits of that lumber traffic. The Government, therefore, unless they secure through traffic, will find it impossible to pick up enough local business to feed their line. This explains why the owners of the Drummond County Railway are in such a hurry to get rid of their road. My hon. friend from Compton (Mr. Pope) says that the Drummond County Railway has opened up a notable portion of the lands of our province, which it is desirable to clear and settle. Our views coincide in that respect, but it may likely take twenty-five or thirty years to cut down those forests and clear the lands, so as to develop and secure sufficient local business to the road which henceforth will constitute a portion of the Intercolonial between Lévis and Ste. Rosalie, and meanwhile the Government will not get enough local business to defray their running expenses on that portion of their railway system. The settlers who will go and settle down within that territory will import very little and hardly export any products to the markets for some years to come. The history of this road will not be unlike that of the road which came before a committee of the House a few days ago. We had lately, before the Railway Committee, the Pembroke Railway Company, which has been in liquidation for a number of years, after having built a railway like the Drummond County Railway, for the purpose of opening up that portion of the province of Quebec. Not being able to make both ends meet, owing to the lumber freight having dwindled away, that railroad could not secure enough local business to pay its running expenses; and that was the reason why the committee was asked to allow the company to wind up and sell the railway to a more powerful company.

Therefore, although I approve of the scheme of providing terminal facilities for the Intercolonial in Montreal, I think the Government are paying an exorbitant and injudicious price to the Drummond County Railway and to the Grand Trunk Railway Company; they are paying, I say, an annual rental which is out of proportion to the advantages to be gained by the Government from the operation of that portion of the road. Let the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), and the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) allow me to tell them that, contrary to their expectations, the deficit of the Intercolonial, far from being wiped out, now that Montreal is made the terminus, will be greater than it was previously. Those who say that the amount of local traffic secured by this scheme will more than suffice to pay the running expenses of the road are not familiar with that portion of the country through which the Drummond County Railway runs, and do not know how keenly this road has to compete even for local traffic.

On these several grounds, Mr. Chairman, I cannot see my way to endorse the resolutions now before us, however anxious I might be to do so. One portion of the county which I have the honour of representing here, is crossed by the Drummond County Railway and by the Grand Trunk Railway, which, in the future, will be made a part of the Government railway system. However anxious I may be to see the Intercolonial secure running powers over the Drummond County Railway, and a larger share of through traffic secured to this road, I do not think it to be in the interest of my constituents that it should cease to be a colonization road. In my opinion, the Drummond County Railway, while being operated as a local line and picking up local freight and passengers, will prove of greater advantage to the ratepayers along the line of the road than they could otherwise secure, through the Intercolonial and Government ownership of railways.

As to operating the Intercolonial as a matter of public policy, the Government, I believe, are making a mistake in purchasing the Drummond County Railway for the price agreed upon under these resolutions, because, to my mind, a 99 years' lease is equivalent to a purchase of the road. I also think that the sum paid to the Grand Trunk for running powers over its road and the use of its station buildings on the line from Ste. Rosalie to Montreal is too large a sum. In bringing to a close these rather lengthy remarks, I say again that, however anxious I am in principle to have this policy of Intercolonial extension to Montreal carried out, I cannot approve of the heavy expenditure which the country is being saddled with, and, therefore, from a business standpoint, I will vote against the resolutions now before us.

Mr. WALLACE. Before the question is put, I wish to say a few words on this most important matter now submitted to the House. I am sure that hon. members who take an interest in this question regret that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has not furnished to the House that full information to which we were entitled before being asked to come to a decision and vote such a large amount of money. Why, we have not to-day a map showing the location of the proposed line of railway. We have no means of ascertaining the location of the lines or the condition of the country, unless we follow the example of the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) and take a trip down there and examine the road. But perhaps most of us have not such a deep interest, personally, in the matter, and may not be disposed to go to that trouble. I am reminded by the attitude of the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) that when dogs go after sheep, they always have a hankering for blood, and are not safe to be trusted with sheep again. In like manner, when some men get a little taste of corruption, especially in obtaining railway funds from the Government, they are anxious to participate in another feast, if there is another haul to be made. I am not, therefore, surprised at the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) taking a trip down the road in order to have another long look at this interesting railway. I do not see the hon. gentleman here now.

An hon. MEMBER. He is barking outside.

Mr. WALLACE. He was barking up in the province of Ontario during the last Dominion election, and as the result of his barking, a constituency which formerly gave 1,600 of a Conservative majority, went 1,700 against his candidate, so that his bark was not a very effective one on that occasion. The hon. member for Compton is not in his place at present, or I would, perhaps, refer to the fact that he always takes occasion to follow the example set by the turkey which sat on the fence and first looked to the one side and then to the other, and finally dropped down on the side on which there was most corn. That looks very much like his attitude to-night. Speaking of corn, I am reminded that in 1890 the hon. member for Compton advocated the duty on that article, but some three years later, when his business operations somewhat changed and he became an importer of corn, he voted for free corn.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER (Mr. Brodeur). The hon. gentleman has not a right to refer in such a way to the manner in which an hon. member has discharged his duties.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) was referring to me, which just recall certain things in his career which—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) perhaps has the right to refer to what has been done by the hon.

Mr. WALLACE.

member, but I do not think he has the right to refer to his motives as being interested.

Mr. WALLACE. That is a ground of objection you did not refer to before, Mr. Speaker. I suppose it is not parliamentary to refer to a gentleman's motives, and, if I have referred improperly to the motives or have imputed improper motives to the hon. member for Compton, I shall regret it very much, because I would not like to impute improper motives to any one. But if his motives are improper in themselves, what am I to do? Am I to keep quiet or am I to refer to improper motives if such they should be?

I was going to settle down to the matter under discussion, just as you called my attention to the nature of my remarks. I noticed that the hon. Minister of Railways, in his strong and vehement speech was not anxious to convert this side of the House to his views. He turned his back on us, though his face is none too good for any kind of audience in this country, and he tried to convince the members behind him that the course he was taking was right. Apparently he had a very great deal of difficulty in convincing them. I noticed that he did convince the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) to a very considerable extent, but there were others who were not convinced. But I was delighted to know that there was one member who applauded the hon. Minister from start to finish, who approved every word and every sentiment, every argument—if the hon. Minister can be said to have used argument—and every vehement statement that he made. The Minister could not say anything that was not applauded by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson).

We were delighted to see that the hon. member for Lincoln approved the construction of this road. People were asking themselves whether the hon. member had any interest on this matter. He approved and applauded every sentence uttered and it has whispered about that—

Mr. GIBSON. Go ahead; I will stand anything that you can say.

Mr. WALLACE. I am glad to see that I have waked the hon. gentleman up a little. It was whispered about that the hon. member for Lincoln had a very fat contract with the Grand Trunk Railway, that the money that Parliament was voting would be devoted to the enlargement of the Victoria Bridge and that the member for Lincoln had the contract on that work. It may not be violating the independence of Parliament Act in words, but it looks awfully like violating it in deeds; it looks as if the member for Lincoln, in asking this Parliament to vote money for the enlargement of Victoria Bridge by the Grand Trunk Railway was actually, by indirect means, voting money into his own pocket. So I do not wonder that when the Minister of Railways talked, the hon. member for Lincoln applauded most heartily. What is this scheme which has been brought before the House, announced in the Speech from the Throne just about three months ago as a bargain which was completed, the papers concerning which would be laid on the Table of the House in order that members might have the information to which, of course they were entitled, and Parliament's approval which would be asked, because the contract would not be binding until Parliament had approved of it? What has happened since? We have been going along for about three months. Four or five days ago, the Minister of Railways was urged to make a statement of this bargain. Well, Sir, I think that every member of this House was humiliated to hear the Minister advocating an expenditure of $210,000 per annum for ninety-nine years, which capitalized, amounts to about $7,000,000—a scheme for the expenditure of an enormous amount of public money—and laying it before the House in such a halting, inconclusive way, without facts to present to the House, without the information to give to the House which alone could form a proper basis for a decision upon the matter—altogether a rambling incoherent statement. When the Minister is coming before the House, I say that it is his duty to be prepared with statements, it is his duty to be ready to give facts and figures, to answer such questions as may properly be asked, by hon. members who seek information on the subject under discussion. To-night we have another speech, but to-night, as formerly, there is a conspicuous absence of facts necessary to form conclusion. But statements are made of the most absurd and extravagant character. We are told, for instance, that 630,000 more passengers would be carried in a year if this little wheelbarrow road were constructed and these connections made. Where will they be carried to? That would mean about 2,000 passengers—or about 100 cars of passengers—per day, all to be carried by reason of the completion of this little road over and above the number carried already. Does any hon. member of this House for a moment believe such an assertion as that? Why, to-day a passenger can buy Intercolonial tickets from agents of the road in Montreal, Toronto, and every city where traffic can be secured. And if the passengers go into Halifax, St. John, Moncton or any place else on the Intercolonial, it does not change cars. He goes into a Pullman and that Pullman goes through, partly over the road of the Grand Trunk and partly over the Intercolonial. That is a matter for settlement between these two concerns, but it makes no difference whatever to the passenger who travels over the road; he buys his ticket, he travels to his destination, and whether the Intercolonial has an entrance into Montreal, or into Toronto, the passenger will pay neither 5 cents more nor 5 cents less for his ticket. The agents of the Intercolonial in the west are just as well able to canvass for freight and passenger business as if the road were running into Montreal to-day. But the hon. Minister of Railways tells us that the Grand Trunk takes the freight business away to Portland and will not send the freight down along the Intercolonial. It may be true that it is to their interest to take the through or ocean freight that way, but in the case of points on the Intercolonial from Quebec eastward to Halifax or St. John, the Grand Trunk has the same interest in taking passengers to these points, or in taking them from Montreal to Quebec as the Intercolonial has in taking them on eastward. They cannot take them by any other Grand Trunk route, and they are just as anxious as the Intercolonial could possibly be if they had a route to Montreal straight through, to get the passengers to go by that road. It is true that for the through traffic they may be anxious to put the business by Portland because they have a longer line, but for all the other traffic, they are working heartily in co-operation with the Intercolonial, to make that traffic larger. Then, with reference to through traffic, the Grand Trunk if it is their interest to push the trade to Portland will continue to do so, even if the Intercolonial goes to Montreal. You say that there will be another competitor for the business. To my mind, the competition is the very greatest absurdity. What does the competition mean? There is a business between Montreal and Quebec which is chiefly done by water and done more cheaply by water than these railroads could do it. There are already three railroads between these two cities, and there will be four when this road is completed, and there is not business enough for one road. It is a wilful waste of the money of the people of Canada to attempt to construct another road—we have already the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway and the South Shore, we are told is soon to be completed—and now there is to be a fourth line. This line the people of Canada have practically built by the bonuses they have given, and now they are to pay for it over again.

There is no excuse, to my mind, that would justify the unnecessary expenditure of this money. We are giving running powers over the Intercolonial Railway from St. John to Halifax, and we could claim as a reciprocity to have equal running powers and the same privileges on the Canadian Pacific Railway from Quebec to Montreal. But the Government did not ask for that. Here is a road with not half enough to do. If the Intercolonial Railway required to run a road to Montreal—and I have not heard anything yet that will convince me that that is a necessity—they could easily make arrangements to run their cars on these through roads, especially the Canadian Pacific Railway, while they are giving running powers over another section of the Intercolonial Railway to the Canadian Pacific Railway. But we are going to-day on a route that has very little traffic compared with other lines of railway, and it is running side by side with other lines of railway. The country through which they run does not furnish a great quantity of business because they pass through no large towns, and whatever business there may be, is divided into three or four parts. Now, take this Drummound County Railway for which these gentlemen came to the Dominion of Canada and got $3,200. Their representatives come here and push this Government, I have no doubt, to get that money, and after they have got it one of them gets up here and reproaches the Government for being so obtuse as to vote money for such a purpose. They went to the province of Quebec, and one gentleman said that they only got a bonus from the province of Quebec for a certain portion of their road. We are told around this House that if they did not get a bonus for another portion of their road, it was not for want of trying, that they had gone down more than once, persistently pressing their claims for a bonus for this other portion of the road, but the Quebec Government of that day, wisely concluding that they were a gang of boodlers, refused to give them any further bonuses. And we hear one of them squealing to-night because that railroad was not able further to rob the treasury of Quebec.

Mr. POPE. One of whom? One of the boodlers?

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) gets up to ask me a question. He is not raising a point of order, if he wants information, I can give it to him, and lots of it.

Mr. POPE. The hon. member has insinuated that I was a boodler, and connected with this railway. He says one of the gang of boodlers. I wish to know whether he insinuates that I am one of the boodlers connected with that road, or that I have one dollar or one farthing in it directly or indirectly. I have not any interest in that road one way or the other, good, bad, or indifferent. I have not anything to make out of it, whether it is built or not. When the hon. gentleman insinuates that I am a boodler he is insinuating what is not true.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman has not risen to a point of order, he is making an explanation of his innocence, and I suppose we all acknowledge how innocent he is, and how lamb-like he is. He tells us that he has no interest in the road. Has he ever had any interest in the road?

Mr. POPE. Never.

Mr. WALLACE.

Mr. WALLACE. Has he ever received any consideration, directly or indirectly, from the road?

Mr. POPE. Never.

Mr. WALLACE. We are delighted to hear it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I hope the hon. member was not referring to the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) when he spoke of boodlers; otherwise I would ask him to withdraw the expression.

Mr. WALLACE. I did not need to refer to him, because he was interrupting me while professing to rise to a point of order. He was interrupting me for the purpose of getting in a little speech of his own. Now, Mr. Speaker, when I was interrupted by the hon. member for Compton with his bogus point of order, I was going to refer to the cost of construction of this road, or rather the price which the Government was paying for it, which I conceive to be beyond the expense of building it. Now, figures have been given to the effect that ninety and one-half miles of road are to be handed over to the Government, for which the Government pays $35,000 half yearly, and a computation has been made that this is equivalent to $2,200,000 in cash, and that that is the cash equivalent of $35,000 a year paid half yearly. Now, ninety and one-half miles of railroad for which $2,200,000 have been paid, is $24,366 a mile. Nobody pretends to say, I venture to think the hon. member for Compton will not pretend to say, that the construction of that road cost $24,366 a mile. Now, the Government paid, in the first instance, $287,000 towards the construction of the road; the local government gave about $300,000, making a total, with $15,000 from municipalities, that the company received in cash from these sources, of more than $600,000. Now, the company, in addition to that, from other sources, received $141,000, and they have a debt standing against them of $221,000, making a total of $966,000, or, in round numbers, a million dollars. We will assume that was the cost of the construction of the road. Now, they have issued bonds to the extent of a million dollars; they have issued stock to the extent of $400,000. Of that million dollars of bonds and $400,000 of stock, not one dollar was paid in for the construction of the road. In making an estimate of what it was proper to pay these men, this million dollars of bonds and $400,000 of stock should not be taken into consideration at all, but only the money actually expended on the road, and that was less than a million dollars, of which $603,000 had been paid by the local and Dominion governments, including $15,000 by municipalities. Therefore, less than $360,000 have been put into that road, and yet Parliament is asked to-day to vote more than six times as much as it has cost those men, and we are buying back our own railway, which the late Minister of Railways tells us we are entitled to get back. I find a statement that the Eastern Townships Bank is the holder of the bonds of this railway. I wonder if the hon. member for Compton is largely interested in the Eastern Townships Bank.

Mr. POPE. I am not interested to the extent of one dollar.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not know whether he is or not.

Mr. POPE. Then, why do you ask the question?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not think the hon. member has a right to put such questions.

Mr. WALLACE. Speaking to the point of order, I think I have, because I am discussing the affairs of the Drummond County Railway, and those who have, perhaps, had an unsavoury connection with it. If the cap don't fit anybody, they don't need to wear it. Now, I say that this very fact of the road costing the owners, or the company, less than $360,000 a year, and they getting from this Government more than $2,200,000, leaves a very large margin for somebody, a good deal of profit for the "boy." We heard to-night a very eloquent plea by a member of this House that the "boy" should have something, that there should be the greatest encouragement given to those who had sufficient enterprise to put $360,000 into a job, and that they should be encouraged to draw $2,200,000 out of it, and that this Dominion Parliament should present them with that money. I was struck by the innocent simplicity and virtue of the demand that these people should be paid six times as much money as they put into it, and of course the member for Compton (Mr. Pope) was not interested at all, but he was delighted to see that men who had enterprise were to receive their reward. I think the people of Canada will not view the matter quite in that light. We have a statement made by the Minister of Railways and Canals, and which he repeated to-night, that everybody was in favour of this road. He asked, "Who is opposed to it? The city of Montreal is a unit in its favour." I read from the leading commercial journal of Montreal, and find that it is quite hostile to it. But suppose individuals went to Montreal, and said to the people there "You have two lines from Montreal to Quebec. Have you any objection to us building you another line?" Montreal would have no objection, certainly not, but if you were to go to Montreal and ask the people of that city to contribute to the cost of building a road to Montreal they would have a most decided objection to burdening themselves with the construction of a line of unnecessary railway. The argument that applies to Montreal also applies to Halifax. Halifax will not object to having a through line upon the Intercolonial road to Montreal or to Toronto or to Winnipeg or to Vancouver, B.C. They would be delighted to have all these connections. The more connections a railway has with outside points the better they like it. But is that an argument that is to be given us for assuming the responsibility for $7,000,000, that these men are not protesting and kicking at having another railway forced into their town. That is no argument. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) was bound to give to this House reasons which would justify the expenditure of this money. There is no data given us by which we can conclude that this extension will add to the business of the Intercolonial. The statement which has been presented bears absurdity on the very face of it. Unless the Minister is able to give us much better reasons than that, I do not think he will succeed in convincing this House or this country that this is a wise expenditure of public money. It has been said in the "Globe" newspaper: "Just look at the enterprise of this Government; they are not afraid to do anything; they are not afraid to spend money." It is true that they have been preaching economy for eighteen years, but now that they have come into power do they practice economy? Oh, no. The leader of the Government (Mr. Laurier) said: "We are not afraid to spend money. We are fellows that are not afraid." Just as flies are attracted around a molasses barrel, you see a so-called Conservative getting up and saying: "You are admirable fellows. We are flies, and we are going to attack that molasses barrel." And they will go buzzing around; they are most illustrious patriots but they will stick to the molasses as long as there is any molasses left. I said that the "Globe" newspaper had said that this Government represents a party of enterprise. Some people said that they should not go so rapidly into these enterprises, but the "Globe" newspaper says that the Government should go to these enterprises because before the end of their parliamentary term that the people will be able to judge whether these enterprises were justifiable by the results accomplished. This was a good reason, but there is another one, and it is that there are a good many men—I do not say like our hon. friend (Mr. Pope) because he has told us that he is virtuous, that if he is not virtuous he is nothing—but there are men who are not virtuous who have not these pure and incorruptible ideas that the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) has and they are willing to go in and take the plunder, if there is plunder and it looks as if there was when a $360,000 job has paid over $2,200,000. Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Railways was very positive on two or three occasions to-night in saying that they are not increasing the public indebtedness of this country by this proposal before Parliament—that if they paid their way, if they made money out of this transaction instead of increasing the indebtedness it would relieve our burdens. That would be very true. If you go into an enterprise involving an expenditure of $100 and clear $1,000 you are not increasing your burdens, but the Minister of Railways and Canals before he forces this vote upon the House of Commons is bound to furnish us with some evidence besides the statement which has been given to-night that by the contract which he is now making the Government which are now unable to make both ends meet on the Intercolonial Railway will be able to pay their way by the addition of a poorer branch to it. It cannot be done. It takes more than 100 cents of expenditure for every 100 cents received and by the construction of this road it will take more than 100 cents to earn 100 cents and they will find that large as has been the deficit upon the Intercolonial Railway it will be $210,000 greater on account of the undertaking which the Government proposes to ask us to carry through to-night.

(In the Committee).

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would call the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to the fact that we have done a tolerably good day's work, and he can hardly expect us to go any further to-night.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. If the hon. gentleman desires that, of course we cannot refuse his request. Still, I would be glad if he saw his way to let us get through with this.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid we cannot go any further to-night.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Then I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 2.10 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 17th June, 1897.

PRAYERS.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock a.m.

HOGS FED ON AMERICAN CORN.

On the proposed introduction of Bill intitled: "An Act to prohibit the exportation from Canada to Great Britain of bacon and hams made from hogs fed on American corn."

Mr. HENDERSON. With reference to this Bill, I desire to say that as there is yet a forlorn hope that the Finance Minister may in the interests of the farming community of this country, allow the article of Indian corn to be placed again on the dutiable list, and as the session is so near an end that there will be no possibility of reaching a Bill of such importance this session, I beg to ask that the Bill be dropped.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright.) Really this is a great disappointment. I had hoped that my hon. friend would have explained to us how, in the case of a hog fed half on Canadian corn and half on American corn, we could distinguish between the two layers of bacon.

Mr. FOSTER. That is easy enough. Take the side of the hog that is best in grain, and you may decide that that was fed on Canadian corn.

Mr. McMILLAN. It is wonderful what education will do, because I did not think it was possible that the sense of smell could be developed so keenly in the human family that a person could tell whether a piece of bacon had been fed on American corn or on Canadian corn.

Mr. HENDERSON. Education does a great deal. For example, last night we had the extraordinary spectacle of a gentleman on the other side of the House being educated to vote away millions of money after he had declared himself in favour of economy.

Bill dropped.

DISMISSAL OF W. S. COTTINGHAM.

Mr. ROCHE asked:

1. Was W. S. Cottingham, formerly engaged in the Dominion Lands Office at Brandon, dismissed because of a letter supposed to have been written by him to the member for Marquette in June last? 2. If so, how came the letter into the possession of the Hon. Minister of the Interior?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton.) W. S. Cottingham, formerly engaged in the Dominion Lands Office at Brandon, was dismissed for political partisanship. The letter written by him to the member for Marquette was part of the evidence on which he was dismissed. I am not at liberty to say how the letter came into my possession or into the possession of the department.

I. C. R.—EXTENSION TO MONTREAL.

The House again resolved itself into committee to consider a certain proposed resolution (page 4088) declaring it expedient to confirm an agreement entered into with the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada and the Drummond County Railway Company and Her Majesty for the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to the city of Montreal.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to see if I understand clearly what it is we are getting. We get an undivided one-half share between Ste. Rosalie and Lambert station, that is at the eastern end of Victoria Bridge. We get the right of user of the Grand Trunk Railway and property between St. Lambert and Bonaventure Station in the city of Montreal, including the two. That is simply the right of user and not an undivided one-half interest. We get the user only of that and one-half divided interest from Ste. Rosalie to St. Lambert, inclusive. We only get the right of user from St. Lambert to Bonaventure Station. As to the Victoria Bridge we get the right of user only and as to the terminals we get the right of user only.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no particular value in our having an undivided interest in the bridge or station. On the contrary there would be a disadvantage. As to the railway between Ste. Rosalie and the Victoria Bridge, our owning an undivided half entitles us, as a matter of right, to the business we get on that portion of the line.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has taken an undivided interest in that other bridge across the Chaudière River. Why not apply the same argument to that as to the Victoria Bridge?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is a portion of the line where traffic is picked up and in respect to which we claim we should be allowed to retain all we earn. We pick up nothing on the Victoria Bridge or at the Bonaventure Station.

Mr. FOSTER. Do we pick up anything on the Chaudière Bridge?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We do by the connecting lines.

Mr. FOSTER. What I have called attention to is the seeming inconsistency between getting an undivided half interest in one bridge because it would be to the benefit of the country, and not getting it in the other because it would not be to the interest of the country. I cannot quite understand the hon. gentleman's ground on that point.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know that I can make it clearer. I consider there would be a vast difference between including the Chaudière Bridge and the Chaudière connection in the arrangement we made with respect to the line from Ste. Rosalie to Lambert, and in including the Bonaventure Station and the line from St. Lambert to Montreal. We had no object in getting an undivided half ownership of the latter and do not know that the Grand Trunk would have been willing to give us an equal property in the Victoria Bridge and in their Bonaventure Station.

On paragraph 10,

That the parties hereto shall enjoy in all respects equal rights to said tracks, buildings and improvements used in common unless wherein restricted in this lease, and the trains of Her Majesty shall in every respect be treated by the officers, agents and employees of the company, as trains of a similar class of the company, and the higher class trains shall have equal preference over trains of the lower class belonging to either of the parties, and Her Majesty shall have a perfect right to run all classes of trains, passenger, mixed, freight and other trains over the said joint section, subject only to the restrictions and regulations prescribed and provided for in this lease. In case of doubt between the trains of the company and Her Ma-

Mr. FOSTER.

esty of the same class, under the established rules the trains of the company shall have the preference. The main tracks are as far as practicable to be kept unobstructed for the use of both of the parties hereto.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In what way would the relative proportions which the Intercolonial and the Grand Trunk will have to pay for the offices of the Grand Trunk, used in common by the two, be determined?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have nothing to pay for the use of the offices. As regards the officials connected with the passenger traffic, you will see later on that we pay pro rata the number of passengers we carry and the amount of business done. We pay for the freight officers also according to the amount of our business.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose the Intercolonial Railway authorities will have no right to give orders or make regulations with regard to these officers, but all orders must be transmitted through the Grand Trunk Railway authorities?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is practically the case. Their officers are in charge and they direct them to carry out the arrangement in good faith and give the Intercolonial trains such precedence as they would be reasonably entitled and to such advantages as we acquire under the contract.

On paragraph 12,

That the station masters, freight agents, ticket agents and baggage masters of the company on the said joint section shall as far as the business and traffic of the Intercolonial Railway is concerned to all interests and purposes but subject to the payment of a share of their wages as is hereinafter provided, be the employees of the Intercolonial Railway and shall from time to time in regard to such business report directly to and receive and carry out the instructions of the proper officials of the Intercolonial Railway.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That provides that we shall pay a share, but it is not defined, what is perhaps defined later, what our share will be. It will be in proportion, I suppose, to the work done for us as compared to the work done for themselves.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is quite correct. The hon. gentleman will find a later provision dealing with that point.

On paragraph 14,

That all business and traffic secured by agents of the Intercolonial Railway or carried in its trains shall be the business and traffic of the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that confined to sections of the road which this contract covers as to undivided interest or right of user? I suppose it does not refer to the Grand Trunk system outside of these portions of the line.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Of course it does not confer any control over the Grand Trunk line, except that portion of it that we acquire. That clause was introduced for the purpose of asserting our proprietorship in the business we do. The hon. gentleman will find it covered specifically and in terms later on. This clause is inserted, perhaps, out of abundance of caution more than anything else; it covers the same ground that is covered by a later clause.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. Minister does not apprehend my point. To make it plain—this clause, I understand, has no reference to what any Intercolonial Railway agent may gather in Ontario.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A later clause has to do with that.

Mr. FOSTER. This has simply to do with the lines in which we acquire the right of interest or the right of user?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I stated that.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. Minister says that we have the use of half the bridge and terminals at Montreal. Does that preclude the Grand Trunk from making arrangements for user with any other company or road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman has misunderstood me. We have the user of the bridge and terminals of the line in Montreal to the extent of all the business we can do, up to the capacity of the road. We have the same user as if we owned the property cut and out. But, so far as the bridge and terminals are concerned, we are in a technically different position from that we occupied with respect to the line of railway.

Mr. HAGGART. The half ownership, as I understand the hon. Minister, applies only to the Chaudière portion of the road, and as to the other, we have the right of user to any extent.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. So we have to the road.

Mr. HAGGART. Does that mean that we have any control over any arrangements of the Grand Trunk with other railways to use the road to the same extent that the Intercolonial Railway does? Have we anything to say about any such arrangements?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are in this position: that if any other company acquires any right under any leasing agreement or traffic arrangement, to use the same lines that we have acquired, whatever may be the consideration that is paid by them to the Grand Trunk is, in the first place, taken from the amount of our rental.

Mr. FOSTER. Proportionately?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, taken out of the amount of out rent proportionately. Then, as to amounts that may be paid by any of the other companies in the way of wheelage, the cost goes against the road, and the balance is divided between the Grand Trunk and the Intercolonial Railway according to the amount of wheelage of each of them. You will find a later clause that covers that.

On paragraph 15.

That the Intercolonial Railway shall have the right to carry in and on its through trains traffic to and from and between all points on the line of railway extending from Ste. Rosalie to Montreal, both inclusive, and in the conducting of its business between and including these stations shall have the right of conducting this business in as full and complete a manner as the company itself.

That the rates and fares charged between points on the joint section shall be those established by the company and to and from points on the Intercolonial Railway shall be the same by the company and the Intercolonial Railway.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would call the attention of the hon. Minister to this clause. The right of user, according to this clause, is confined to through trains. We can take no share in suburban traffic or in communication on that portion of the road except on our through trains.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A through train would be one to or from a point off the main trunk line, beyond Ste. Rosalie.

Mr. FOSTER. Do I understand that this could be done—from a point five miles beyond Ste. Rosalie could you run a train service twenty times a day to or from Montreal and get the benefit of all the passenger traffic so carried?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Under a literal interpretation of the contract, that would be permissible, I think. But I do not imagine that the Grand Trunk would expect us to treat them in that way under the arrangement, and I do not think we would be justified in doing so.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid that the hon. Minister will find that the terms of this clause entirely preclude that view of the question. I think the clause will be held to cover only trains running through to the terminal portions of the Intercolonial Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I hardly think so. I think that under the most liberal interpretation of this clause in favour of the Grand Trunk, we would have a right to run trains from any point at a reasonable distance—for instance, if we chose, from Lévis or Drummondville. Suppose that the business of the Drummond County branch of the line, in our view, called for the running of trains three or four or five times a day into Montreal, that would be quite within the interpretation of the clause.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is a very important point if the Minister is right.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think there can be no question about that. I may say frankly that one of the chief difficulties we had to encounter in our arrangements with the Grand Trunk was the point on which we strongly and peremptorily insisted when we came to prepare our detailed contract, that we should have the right to pick up traffic on all portions of the line and get the benefit of the receipts of that traffic. Of course it was contended by the Grand Trunk that no such arrangement had ever been made before, that it was not customary between railway companies and that it was an unreasonable demand on our part. We said: We have no desire or intention to interfere with what you would call your suburban traffic, but we do claim the right, on all trains that may be passing over your line, to pick up any traffic that we may and get the benefit of it. And that point was finally conceded.

Mr. SPROULE. Any service between Drummond and Montreal of two or three trains a day must surely be considered local, so that this section could not apply. There must be some distinction between a through train and a local train.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I desire to call the attention of the hon. Minister to the latter paragraph of this section. I would like the hon. Minister to explain it. It seems clear that this provides that rates are not to be fixed by the Intercolonial or by any joint arrangement, but by the Grand Trunk itself.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is quite correct, as to the thirty-five mile section between Ste. Rosalie and Montreal. We conceded that because we could not cut the rates below those that the company would be willing to have in force. I cannot think that great exception could be taken to that, because, under any other view, the Grand Trunk would be surrendering to us at our own discretion to destroy the traffic.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What I suggested was that the rates should be jointly arranged between the Grand Trunk and the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that the question as what constitutes through trains is a very important one for all parties to this contract, and it is almost impossible that these negotiations could be brought to a close without a very complete discussion of what the term meant. It may be that the Minister is correct in saying that a train starting from a few miles from Ste. Rosalie would be a through train. But the matter must have been fully discussed. What is the hon. Minister's view of the Grand Trunk's idea as to what constitutes a through train in this respect?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have stated that when the terms of this arrangement were being discussed, it was strenuously objected to by the Grand Trunk that we should claim or be allowed to carry traffic taken up or set down on this joint section to our own profit. In other words, they insisted that we should pay to the Grand Trunk Railway 85 cents out of every dollar that we received, and this we could not agree to. I frankly acknowledge that we have expressed to the Grand Trunk Railway very clearly that we had no desire or intention of using this section for the purpose of running away with their business, but we are not subject to any limitation at all beyond what we should be upon this joint section. It would be strictly within the meaning of this clause and not at all at variance with anything that took place in the discussion or any understanding that was arrived at, that we should put on as many trains as we thought in our judgment it was desirable to do in the interest of our business, at any point on the Drummond County line.

Mr. INGRAM. Would the Minister explain what the words "through trains" mean.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A through train under this section would, in strictness, mean any train which was going from a point beyond the joint section through and over this section which is covered by the agreement. It certainly does not mean a train from Halifax, it does not mean a train from Moncton or St. John, necessarily, nor a train from Miramichi. It means any train which, coming beyond this joint section, passes through that joint section.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hope my hon. friend will be found to be right, but I am afraid he will find that no such liberal construction will be given by the Grand Trunk Railway Company to that point under this clause. I think they will hold that any train going any moderate distance over the Drummond County Railway would be held to be a local train and not a through train.

Mr. SPROULE. I would ask the Minister if we have any right to alter any portion of this agreement, because if so, I think that instead of saying "through trains" we should take out the word "through" in the second line, and say that "The Intercolonial Railway should have the right to carry in and on its trains, traffic," and so forth.

Mr. FOSTER. On the Intercolonial Railway, would the Minister consider a train which ran from Sussex to St. John, a through train? We have certain terms that are well known amongst commercial men, and in train matters I suppose it is the same. We who live along the line make an easy distinction between a through train and a local. At Sussex, a through train is one that goes from Quebec to Halifax or goes from Halifax to Quebec or Lévis. But the Moncton train that starts from St. John or Sussex and returns between those points, is a local train. There must be some language peculiar to train work which defines the difference between a through train and a local train.

Mr. LOUNT. I have not heard the Minister answer the question put by the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) in regard to an amendment.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think there need be no change in the agreement which has been entered into. I think the agreement will be found to be very complete. If any doubt should arise with regard to the meaning of these words, there is a provision made in the contract for resolving that doubt.

Mr. FOSTER. Would a question of that kind go to arbitration?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It might possibly. The 47th section provides that if any difficulty should arise under any clause of this agreement, or respecting the carrying out of the same, such difference may be referred to arbitration. If it becomes necessary at any time fully to determine just what that phrase might mean, it could be settled under this 47th section. At all events, that is what the Grand Trunk Railway were willing to do, and those were the terms under which they were willing to give us this preference.

Mr. LOUNT. The reason I desired an answer to that question was for the purpose of discussing this clause. It appears to me that according to the language used in railway management the words "through train" perhaps have a larger meaning than is apparently given to them by the Minister. A through train is well understood in the language of railway men, and when you have occasion to purchase tickets or to travel upon a railway, it is generally defined to be the main line between the two extreme points; and a train which is made up along that railway is called a local train. That is the definition which is apparently given in railway management. Speaking of a local definition, one can see in reading this section that the words "through train" might be intended to mean and might be read as only a train running between the two points of Ste. Rosalie and Montreal. But after all the court would probably give an interpretation to it as it generally applied in railway management, and in railway management I apprehend that the definition given to these words would mean a train between the extreme points, and that always when we speak of a local train we speak of a train that starts at some point between the two extreme points.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Even if that interpretation be correct, no change can be made in that regard. This is the language which was agreed upon after a good deal of debate between the company on the one hand and the officers representing the Government on the other. Whatever may be the ultimate determination of the meaning of these words, they will have to remain.

Mr. SPROULE. Then it is almost useless for us to consider this clause by clause, if we have nothing to do but swallow it holus bolus.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has stated the matter in a nutshell. This comes from giving us insufficient time.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If you had a month in which to discuss it, it would not be different.

Mr. FOSTER. But if my hon. friend had proceeded in a business way, it might have been different. We might have had the sense of the House on the undertaking, before we were all bound hand and foot to the party machine.

On paragraph 18,

That local tickets issued by either of the parties hereto for passage between and including Ste. Rosalie and Montreal or any intermediate station shall be accepted on all trains of either party hereto between said points, and the party who issued the tickets shall, on presentation of the ticket so used and collected, pay to the party who carried the passengers the full amount received for the said ticket.

Mr. HAGGART. I suppose the clause only allows parties who purchase tickets at any station between Ste. Rosalie and Montreal to use them on the through trains of the Intercolonial Railway as well as on the through trains of the Grand Trunk Railway?

Mr. LOUNT. On all trains.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think that clause is only susceptible of this construction, that local tickets do not extend outside, either on the Intercolonial Railway or on the Grand Trunk Railway, but are entirely confined to this district between Ste. Rosalie and Montreal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They have certain classes of tickets which they call local tickets.

On paragraph 23,

That the company shall and will, from time to time when requested to do so by the officials of the Intercolonial Railway, make temporary repairs upon the engines and other rolling stock used in the business and traffic of the Intercolonial Railway, such repairs to be made promptly with all reasonable despatch, and Her Majesty shall pay the company the actual cost to the company of the labour and materials used in such repairs.

Mr. INGRAM. Speaking of the charges, is there any arrangement between the Intercolonial Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway in respect to charges on business handled by the Grand Trunk Railway? Is there a schedule of charges arranged between the two services?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The charges that are to be made by the Grand Trunk Railway Company will only be a proportionate amount of the expense, of the actual sum which they lay out for the purpose, dividing it according to the amount of business they do.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) wants to know is whether there is any scale or schedule of charges, but I would suggest that that does not appear to be necessary, because the interest of the Grand Trunk Railway Company will be to make the charges as moderate as they can on their own account.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair), is it proposed to regulate charges by the Grand Trunk Railway Company to other railway companies for crossing the Victoria Bridge?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know that it is except in so far as the general provision of the Railway Act would apply. If other railway companies have any complaint to make they can bring it before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council.

Mr. WALLACE. I am told that the Montreal and Province Line Railway, operated by the Central Vermont Railway, run their trains up to the bridge and they are then charged an exorbitant price for crossing.

Mr. HAGGART.

They are charged 25 cents for each passenger crossing the bridge.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You would not suggest that that is an exorbitant price.

Mr. WALLACE. They make a charge for the cars which, in itself, would be a fair charge, and then they charge for the passengers.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If it were the case that unfair charges were made, I think there would be a remedy.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the remedy?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If a railway company desires to acquire the right of crossing the Victoria Bridge controlled by the Grand Trunk Railway, it might obtain it by an application to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council.

Mr. WALLACE. This company have their road right up to the bridge now, and they must cross. They have gone before the Privy Council and complaint is made that the prices charged are very exorbitant.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Of course, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) will see that it does not bear upon the present clause.

Mr. WALLACE. Perhaps not. But when the Government are adjusting this matter it is a good time to take into consideration the general public interest.

On paragraph 24,

That the company shall and will carry passengers on through tickets, and freight on through waybills, from and to points on its railway and leased and controlled lines to and from points on the Intercolonial Railway and its leased and connecting lines so as to avoid re-ticketing and re-waybilling.

Mr. FOSTER. This is the course of traffic, both freight and passenger, is it not?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

On paragraph 30,

That if the company shall at any time lease or in any way grant to any railway company, or to any person or persons whomsoever, either with or without payment, any running powers, rights or privileges, on or in any way connected with the railway premises of the company hereinbefore described, between and including St. Rosalie and St. Lambert, the company shall pay to Her Majesty one-half of all the income it now receives or may hereafter receive for any running powers, rights or privileges, now granted or hereafter to be granted between the aforesaid points of Ste. Rosalie and St. Lambert. As to the other portions of the company's line herein demised the company reserves to itself all revenues from any source whatever arising from the use thereof.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I want to draw the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) to this clause. I do not raise any question in reference to the latter part of the clause, but what I do want to call the hon. gentleman's attention to is the fact that the company may grant to any railway or to any number of railways the right to run over this portion of the road of which half the cost of maintenance and double-tracking is to be borne by the Government and these railways may make no payment whatever.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, that is true. They may do very much as they please with their own property.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, but that is your portion of the line; the Government has a joint interest in it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We shall have the use of it. If the Grand Trunk Railway Company choose to allow any other company to use it without consideration, I apprehend they will do so at their own loss.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The point is this, that under this agreement that portion of the line between Ste. Rosalie and Montreal is the portion of the line that is jointly the property of the Government, and the company and the Government are bound to pay one-half of the cost of maintenance of that road and of the double-tracking of the road, if necessary. I do not object at all to the company permitting other companies, or any number of them, to run over the same line, but they should not be permitted to allow them to do it without paying anything, because, if they did, half the cost of the wear and tear of the road would fall upon the Government, and therefore it is most unjust. They have the right, under this clause to make any terms they choose outside of the portion of the road that is jointly used by the Government and the company. They can make one arrangement outside of that; they can make a heavier charge for the use of their line outside of this branch, and then they can allow them, in consideration of the high charge that they have made, to run over this branch for nothing, as we have to pay one-half of the cost of maintenance. I do not mean to say that this privilege would be abused, but it would permit a great injustice to be done to the Government, which is responsible for one-half the cost of maintenance.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is under a misapprehension in regard to the meaning of one of the clauses which we have already passed. To say that the Government would be required to pay one-half the cost of the maintenance though the company may allow other companies the free use of their line is directly in conflict to the expressed words of clause 19, which provides that the Government shall only pay its proportion of the car mileage on all the cars passing over the road.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That applies to salaries, and not to the maintenance of the road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I thought that section covered the case. I may in a moment, perhaps, be able to show the hon. gentleman the clause applying to it.

Mr. HAGGART. We are to have the half ownership of the line between Ste. Rosalie and the bridge. What is to prevent the Grand Trunk Railway getting a handsome price for the passage over the bridge and allowing a free passage over the section between Ste. Rosalie and St. Lambert, in which we would have a half interest?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That would be directly contrary to the words, I think, and certainly to the spirit of the arrangement.

Mr. HAGGART. My hon. friend suggests that the Grand Trunk Company may give the user of the joint section for a nominal sum to a third party, provided they contribute a good sum to the bridge and the approaches.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I call attention to the third clause, which I think meets the point.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I see the force of that; but what I say is that under this arrangement, if the Grand Trunk Company receive payment from another company for running over this portion of the line, you shall share in the profits; but outside of that, they may make an arrangement with another company for a nominal consideration or for nothing.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that a fair interpretation of this clause would not bear that construction, because the Grand Trunk Company would be obliged to pay over to the Government a proportion of the revenue from everything carried over the line.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the Grand Trunk Company should by any indirect arrangement receive a consideration from another company for the use of this line, it would unquestionably be liable to account to the Government for its proper proportion of the amount received. No indirect arrangement could be made by which it could fail to account to the Government for one-half of the income it received.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This clause allows the company to give away the right for nothing if they choose.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has no right to inquire into any indirect favours which the company gets at all. That is the company's own business. Suppose the Grand Trunk Company allows another railway to run over the section, and gets a payment of $20,000 a year for it. The Government will then get one-half of that fee, and it will get a certain amount off its maintenance in proportion to the mileage run by the third company. But under this clause you give to the Grand Trunk Company the undoubted right to allow the other company to run over the section for nothing. In that case the Government gets nothing of the $20,000, but it has the same advantage exactly in the matter of maintenance, no more and no less. The direct loss to the Government is $10,000. You are leaving it completely in the power of the Grand Trunk Company to roast the Intercolonial.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Suppose the Grand Trunk should receive from another company running powers over a portion of that company's line, and in consideration thereof or in partial consideration thereof, should grant to such company power to run over this line, would the hon. Minister think that that case would be covered by this clause? It seems to me that it would not. Moreover, it would hardly seem to me that what the hon. gentleman has said is correct, namely, that the Government have joint ownership over this section of line. We have joint user in a certain sense, but not joint ownership, so long as the Grand Trunk can make arrangements. With all deference to the opinion of the hon. Minister, I have a great deal of doubt that such would be the case.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think there would be no difficulty at all in the case the hon. gentleman suggests. Suppose the Grand Trunk Company were to receive certain rates from another company for the right to cross over this line. There would certainly be a consideration having value; and if the Grand Trunk Company and the Government failed to come to an understanding as to what the value of that concession was, it would become a subject to be referred to this board of arbitration to deal with.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It all depends upon the question whether what the Grand Trunk Company would receive would come within the meaning of the word "income." With all deference to the opinion of the hon. Minister, I would have a great deal of doubt that such would be the case.

Mr. BLAIR.

On paragraph 35,

That if at any time hereafter the business or traffic shall, in the opinion of the parties hereto necessitate or warrant the laying of double tracks between and including Ste. Rosalie and St. Lambert, or the making of more extensive yard improvements at Point St. Charles or intermediate points between that Point and Bonaventure station, or the laying of additional tracks between such points, or shall warrant or necessitate any further expenditure for the proper and efficient conduct of its business, and the company shall lay the said tracks or make the said improvements or make the said expenditure, Her Majesty may have the full and unlimited use of all or any such work in the same manner and to the same extent as if the said work had been included in the premises hereby leased, the right, use or privilege in which are demised hereby, and if Her Majesty should determine to use any such works or improvements, and the Minister should so declare, such works and improvements are hereby understood and agreed to form part of the leased premises, and Her Majesty shall pay annually for the use of any such works and improvements five per cent upon one-half of the actual cost to the company of the construction of said works and improvements; but in case of all betterments or of additional works on such joint sections which the company may be required to make under the provisions of any statute or of any order of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, or other competent authority, Her Majesty shall pay the interest upon one-half the cost thereof at the rate aforesaid.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I want to draw my hon. friend's attention to a very serious point which arises under this clause. This is a most onerous clause. Under it the Government may be called upon to pay 5 per cent on one-half an expenditure made by the Grand Trunk Railway, in which the Grand Trunk Railway would probably have ten times the interest that the Intercolonial would have. The Intercolonial are to have no advantage from this expenditure unless the Government pay, not a proportionate rate according to this service rendered, but the interest on half the cost. Under this clause, I have no hesitation in saying that the Grand Trunk Railway may make any expenditure they please. They may incur enormous expenditure in connection with their terminals and this line which is to be jointly used by the Government and the Intercolonial Railway, and they can do that at the entire cost to Canada. They can hypothecate this very contract in London and obtain the money at 3 per cent to do that work on half the cost of which we agree to pay them 5 per cent. When you consider this line from Ste. Rosalie to Montreal, the bridge and terminal station and everything connected with it, the expenditure may be immense, and almost the whole, if not the whole of that expenditure, will have to be paid by the Government, although according to the other clauses of this contract which divide the cost of maintenance according to mileage, the Government may enjoy an absolutely insignificant portion of the advantage. I also draw attention to the last clause :

But in case of all betterments or of additional works in such joint sections which the company may be required to make under the provisions of any statute or any order of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, or other prominent authority, Her Majesty shall pay the interest upon one-half the cost thereof at the rate aforesaid.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Of course the hon. gentleman has not had, I can see, much opportunity of considering the matter very fully, and is starting criticisms which just occur on a superficial reading of the section, but I can assure him that this was all very fully considered and threshed out over and over again, not only by the officers of my department and myself, but by the Department of Justice. If the hon. gentleman had had occasion to think out these various phases, he would see at once that it became imperatively necessary to make some provision having regard to the future. In the first place, the question arose what should be done in case the law stepped in and ordered certain things to be done on this railway. Suppose the Privy Council decided that this railway should provide some additional protection to the public on its track or at its terminus, how should that be paid for? It did not appear reasonable that we should enjoy the usage of the track and terminus and not contribute half our proportion towards the cost of these improvements ordered. These are not works which are left to the discretion of the Grand Trunk Railway.

Mr. HAGGART. Why not?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Because they are works which may be required by law. I am not referring to the last clause. They are works which may be imposed upon the Grand Trunk Railway by law and to the cost of which it is necessary the Government should pay its share because the Government would be using them.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend does not appear to me to seize my point, even with reference to that smallest and least important part of the clause. My point is that I see no reason why the Intercolonial Railway, having the small interest which it will have in these works and terminals, should pay one-half.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am coming to that. I was pointing out that it would be our duty to bear our proportion. The hon. gentleman says we have only a small interest. That is not so. We may not use these works at the outset to the same extent as we hope to use them later, but we shall use them, and therefore, as is generally arranged between particular companies making similar arrangements, having acquired one-half the property, we pay interest on one-half the expenditure. As to the rate of interest, the hon. gentleman talks about the Grand Trunk negotiating a loan on the basis of 3 per cent interest. I am sure they would be very much pleased to know that any such favourable terms could be secured, but the hon. gentleman must have sufficient experience to know that neither the Grand Trunk nor any other company could borrow upon an arrangement of this kind at a low rate of interest and transfer this arrangement as a security to any person making the loan. The transfer of this as security would be useless, if it should happen that the Grand Trunk Company had any existing bonds or mortgages upon these particular works, because this security would be only valuable as a means of raising money to the extent to which it would have priority over other liabilities. The Grand Trunk are paying 5 per cent yearly and are likely to have to continue paying that rate; and if they have to borrow money in order to make these improvements at 5 per cent interest, we should reasonably expect to have to bear one-half the cost at the same rate of interest. We could not make a contract upon the supposition that they could finance by a transfer of this arrangement and only pay 3 per cent. It would be absurd to entertain such a supposition. I wonder that my hon. friend could think it was at all possible for us, in making an arrangement extending over a period of one hundred years, to suppose that the Grand Trunk Railway should be able to make as favourable financial arrangements as the Government of this country, unencumbered, and having at its back the whole resources of the country.

Mr. POWELL. This is to be a permanent charge on the treasury of the country. Would it not be much better for us to borrow at 3 per cent and pay the Grand Trunk Company in cash.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I trust the hon. gentleman does not suppose that we did not consider how valuable it would be, if we could effect such an arrangement. But we could not. What would be the position of the Government if we were to ask Parliament to give us a million dollars or more to pay the Grand Trunk Railway Company for the purchase of these rights. The first question which the hon. gentleman would ask would be: what security have you got that you are going to get a real or proper title to the property you are paying for?

I shall be bound to admit to him at once that the property of the Grand Trunk is encumbered—I assume, two or three times over. Therefore, we could not buy the property, but had to treat it as encumbered property, and so we had to resort to some such agreement as this. Does my hon. friend suppose that I would agree to pay a rental and 5 per cent on half the cost of these extensions if, by coming to Parliament for the money, I could have bought a half interest. The hon. gentleman will see how utterly impracticable it would have been to take any other course or accomplish the arrangement in any other way. As to the rate being excessive, I venture to say that it is not. At all events, the Grand Trunk would not agree to grant us these concessions upon any other terms, and we could not ask or expect them to do so; we could not ask them to accept a less rate than they have paid and are likely to continue to pay. Now, as to the first, and, I suppose the hon. gentleman will consider, the chief objection that he has raised—I said that this clause had been very carefully considered. The question came up in this form: Suppose that the business from St. Lambert to Ste. Rosalie becomes so great that it is desirable to lay down another track, how will the cost of laying down that track be divided? Shall we, in the first place, reserve to ourselves the right to say whether we shall or shall not use it. It will be observed that we reserve to ourselves the right not to contribute a dollar. If the improvement is one that we think we can do without, we shall not be bound to pay. But if it became necessary in our own interest, if our traffic increased to such an extent that it would be better for us to have this improvement, is it not proper that we should have the right to do it, that, in making an agreement to cover a long term of years, we should provide for such a contingency, which the Grand Trunk have considered, and which, as has been said in the House, is regarded as imminent? Suppose that it becomes necessary to have a new track between Ste. Rosalie and St. Lambert, what would be the fair division of the cost? Would it not be fair that we should pay half the cost of construction? Why should we not do it? We are acquiring a half interest in this road, and if a track is to be laid down which would be in our interest equally with theirs, and if we desire to use it, why should we not pay for it on the same basis as that upon which we agree to pay in case of the original road? I do not see how it would be possible to make any other arrangement. I would like my hon. friend to suggest some form of arrangement which would be equitable and likely to agree to other than that which I have laid down—on the assumption that another track would be absolutely necessary for the purposes of the Government as well as of the Grand Trunk. I know that the officers of my department carefully considered this question in all its bearings. We had Mr. Pottinger up here and one of the traffic officers, and they and the chief engineer spent many days in going over every possible phase of the question that occurred to their minds, and none of us could hit upon any other expedient which we could commit to writing and which could be put in the form of a contract whereby the future could be provided for on any different terms or in any other way than that which is now laid down.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. Minister has said that this is a locality in which there is such pressure for traffic that it may become necessary to provide for double tracking—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I say, if it is necessary.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman says that it is absolutely necessary to make provision. Any person who knows the situation of the line from Ste. Rosalie to Montreal knows that the pressure of traffic will absolutely compel the double-tracking of the line at no distant day. Under this clause there is a complete engagement on the part of Canada to share to the extent of the interest at 5 per cent on one-half of the cost of these improvements, which will be necessary. Under the terms that the Grand Trunk have secured at the hands of the Minister of Railways there must be an enormous expenditure of public money at an early date. And the point I make is this: The business of the Intercolonial Railway, even if it assumes the proportions that my hon. friend has intimated, would be utterly insignificant in the extent to which it would require the use of the Grand Trunk works compared with the extent to which the Grand Trunk itself must use them. Therefore, in the expenditure for extension of these works, it was unjust to Canada to compel us to pay one-half for a work in which we have a comparatively small interest—certainly not a tenth interest. Now I come to the question of the division of the cost. I say that we are going to pay practically the whole of these extensions. Under this unfortunate arrangement the hon. Minister has bound us to pay the whole, or almost the whole cost. I show that in this way: The hon. gentleman says the Grand Trunk cannot borrow money in England at 5 per cent. I grant it. I am, perhaps, saying too much in that, I think they could borrow money for less than that even situated as they are. But the hon. gentleman underrates the credit of Canada. What have the Grand Trunk to borrow money on? They have a contract with the Government binding Canada to pay them $210,000 per annum for ninety-nine years. That contract they can hypothecate. I do not hesitate to say, from my personal knowledge of the money market of the world and of the money market of London, that the Grand Trunk Railway can take that contract and, on the strength of it, obtain any amount of money for these purposes up to the amount that will be covered by the $140,000 per annum. I do not wish to be understood as taking a position of the slightest hostility to the Grand Trunk Railway Company. That great company has conferred upon Canada immense benefits and is entitled not only to fair but most liberal treatment in any arrangement that it may be necessary for the Government to make with them. My hon. friend has intimated that, in addition to the $140,000 a year that he has bound the Government of Canada to pay for ninety-nine years, he proposes to ask Parliament for $300,000 more in connection with the new bridge over the St. Lawrence. I have not a word to say against that. I have no hesitation in saying that I would give the most hearty support to my hon. friend and to the Government in making that large, handsome contribution toward the reconstruction of that important bridge for the Grand Trunk Railway Company. Therefore, I am not speaking in a spirit of hostility to the company. But I say that in making a business arrangement the interests of Canada have been sacrificed, shamefully sacrificed, and that this clause is one that will put upon the shoulders of the Canadian people an enormous expenditure for the Grand Trunk Railway Company under the guise of expenditure for extensions that we may require to use to a small extent.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I must say that I think the hon. gentleman's criticisms of these various sections would be very much more effective if they were governed by reasonable considerations. When the hon. gentleman talks about enormous obligations being put on the shoulders of the people of Canada by this 35th clause, he is simply, as the slang phrase goes, talking through his hat.

Now, what is this clause? This clause, as any person can see who reads it in a spirit of fairness is framed to enable the Grand Trunk Company, if its business calls for it, to extend its facilities; but it does not say that it may extend these facilities at the cost of Canada, it does not contain one syllable which justifies any such assertion. But is it not reasonable that in making a contract with the Grand Trunk Company we should allow them to extend their operations if they like, and in such a way that they may use them exclusively themselves and that we should be under no obligation to use them; but if we do use them, that we should pay what would be fair and reasonable as our contribution towards their construction? Why, Mr. Chairman, we could not make an arrangement that would be effective to extend over the period of even five years, unless we took into account the possibility of the need which might occur of the extension of these various ways, and taking that into account, to provide for it in some rational manner. But when the hon. gentleman says that we are piling enormous burdens upon the people of Canada, he is simply indulging in the most exaggerated flight of imagination. Now, "if at any time hereafter the business or traffic shall, in the opinion of the parties hereto, necessitate or warrant the laying of double tracks between and including, St. Rosalie and St. Lambert," they would have actually put it into our power to say, as one of the parties to this agreement, whether it should be necessary. But if the business requires the making of more expensive yard improvements at Fort St. Charles or the laying of additional tracks between that point and Bonaventure station, why the company may go on and make provision for these improvements. Supposing no such provision as this were contained here, and after a year or two it should be found that some additional facilities were needed which had not been provided for and which Parliament desired should be made, then we have to add to the agreement in order to make it cover that case; and is it not necessary that we should at all events, seeing the possibility of such a need arising, make provision for it in our contract? Now, the hon. member says that the country is paying the whole of this cost, and that the Grand Trunk Company could take this contract into market and finance upon it. I thought I had made a very complete answer to the hon. gentleman's suggestion when he put that forward a few moments ago. I venture to say this, that if the Grand Trunk Railway's secretary or president were to take this contract and go into the office of any financier in London and offer to assign it, they would laugh at him. They would say to him: Why, I think that you are scarcely in any legal position to give us an assignment of the rental as security for that line, and if the secretary or president were to ask why, they would say: Because you have already put in one mortgage and practically several mortgages upon your property, and these mortgages cover all the rentals which you are going to receive, and your prior mortgagees have a right to ask that the rental should be paid to them and not to us. They would simply laugh at the idea of transferring the lease which had been given after the mortgage incumbrances had been placed upon the property. So that when the hon. gentleman tells us that, he, on a moment's consideration, will see that he was telling us something that is without any basis. I am free to admit this, and I will give the hon. gentleman the full benefit of it, that I think it not unlikely that the Grand Trunk Company might go into the general market and they might be benefited in floating their bonds by the statement that they had made an arrangement with the Government of Canada whereby the Government was to pay them an annual rental for the use of these facilities. It might help their position in the market, but it would not enable them to give this as an absolute security which could be transferred for such a purpose, but it might have the effect of improving their general standing in the money market. To that extent I would be willing to concede that they would be benefited. But I do not assent to the view that it would materially reduce the rate of interest which the company would have to pay. Now, touching the other statement which the hon. gentleman made as to the congested condition of the business upon this road: The hon. gentleman quite misunderstood my previous statement. I did not say or admit that the condition of business upon the portion of the line between St. Lambert and St. Rosalie was such that a new track, in my opinion, would have to be laid down at an early date. I did not say that. I quoted the remarks made from the other side urging that that was the case. Now, I do not think that the difficulty which the Grand Trunk Railway has been experiencing from the congestion of its business, has arisen upon the track between St. Rosalie and St. Lambert. I think it has arisen altogether on the bridge. Hon. members know that there is only a single track upon this bridge, and under the regulations it is impossible for trains to follow one another except at a certain rate of speed, and at certain intervals between their passage, and that regulation limits the passage of trains to a certain extent, and a congestion does arise at certain seasons of the year. But it arises there, and there is no excuse at all for the statement that there is any congestion of business upon the main line between these points which I have named. Although I do not agree with that statement, still I say, assuming what some hon. gentlemen opposite said the other day that this congestion did exist, assuming that the possibility which the Grand Trunk Railway contemplated, would arise in the future, that is, assuming that the business should become so pressing as to render it necessary that another track should be laid, then we should desire to make provision for it, and we have made provision for it. I say we have made provision for it in the only way in which it possibly could be done, and for these two reasons: First, because you could not put it in the form of an agreement, in any other practical way; and in the next place, if you did, you would not get the Grand Trunk Railway Company to agree to it, because we have tried to get the most favourable terms and conditions which we could get in our arrangements with the Grand Trunk Railway Company upon this point.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE moved the adjournment of the House.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

CONDUCT OF PUBLIC EMPLOYEES.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies) presented a return upon an order of the House, asked for by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) in regard to the commissioners appointed to make an investigation into the conduct by public employees so far as the Marine and Fisheries Department is concerned. He said: In reference to the apparent delay, I may say that the Secretary of State's Department did not send to the Marine and Fisheries Department for this return until the 12th June, so that my department has not been to blame.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). Mr. Speaker, I beg to lay on the Table a copy of the contract for cold storage accommodation in steamships in accordance with the Bill presented to the House.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). I promised my hon. friend from Elgin that I would lay on the Table of the House the return he moved for. It has been sent over, but I find that three or four documents have been omitted. I will try to get it down to-morrow.

THE PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT.

Mr. GIBSON. I beg leave to move, seconded by Mr. Fraser, that the second report of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the Printing of Parliament be concurred in.

Mr. FOSTER. What is that report?

Mr. GIBSON. It is the report which was presented to the House two weeks ago. It recommends the advisability of lighting the vaults underneath the departmental buildings by electricity as soon as possible, on account of the danger from fire by gas.

Motion agreed to.

MAPLE BAY POST OFFICE.

Mr. McINNES asked:

1. Was William Beaumont, Esq., the postmaster at Maple Bay, Vancouver Island, at the time British Columbia entered confederation?
2. Has he presented a claim to this Government for arrears of salary due him by the Colonial Government of British Columbia? If so, what are the particulars of his claim?

3. Did the Dominion assume liability for such claims under the terms of union between British Columbia and the Dominion?

4. Is it the intention of the Government to investigate and settle this claim?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). 1. The post office at Maple Bay appears to have been vacant when British Columbia entered the union. Mr. Beaumont's name appears as postmaster for the first time in the list for 1872. 2. There is no record in the department at Ottawa of a claim made by him for arrears of salary due by the colonial government of British Columbia. 3. If such were made it is probable that the Dominion would not be responsible for such a claim.

MAIL ROUTE CONTRACTS.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (for Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) asked :

What is the name of each tenderer and the amount of each tender in the cases of the last contracts entered into covering the following mail routes respectively :—

- (a.) Orangedale to Margaree ;
- (b.) Margaree Harbour to Cheticamp ;
- (c.) Mabou to Margaree Harbour ;
- (d.) Mabou to Whycocomah ;
- (e.) Mabou to Port Hastings ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). In all these cases I am assuming that the question refers to the tenders that have recently been invited. My answer is, assuming that to be the case, that in each of these cases the tenders were opened on the 11th instant, in accordance with the public notices to that effect, and the contracts were awarded to the lowest tenderers. The inspector was instructed to complete the contracts, but as he has not yet reported the results to the department, it would be inadvisable to furnish the information asked for, at present.

POSTMASTER AT HOPEFIELD.

Mr. McDOUGALL (for Mr. Martin).asked:

1. Has the Postmaster General or any official of the department, or any member of the Government, received a petition asking for the dismissal of Angus McPhee, late postmaster at Hopefield, in Prince Edward Island?

2. If so, the names of the petitioners?

3. Was there more than one petition received ?

4. If so, the names attached to each?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). The Post Office Department received a letter from the Honourable Mr. Davies, inclosing one from Mr. McKinnon to him, and also a letter from Alexander McDonald to Mr. McKinnon. Mr. McKinnon's letter stated that the late postmaster at Hopefield had not given satisfaction to the community and that a number sent and received their mail for some years at other offices, and recommending the change. Mr. McDonald's letter to Mr. McKinnon stated that numbers of persons at the post office had petitioned the Postmaster General to have the post office changed from the place of Angus McPhee to the residence of Mr. H. Bonnell, but the petition has not reached the department, that a number of the petitioners neither sent nor received mail matter at their post office because of the dissatisfaction with the postmaster. The Honourable Mr. Davies, in his letter, quite concurs in the recommendation for a change, and expresses it as his opinion that a change would be in the public interest. Accordingly, the change was made.

POST OFFICE AT EAST BAY.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER asked :

Has the Hon. Postmaster General received a largely signed petition from East Bay, Cape Breton, protesting against removing the post office at that place to the residence of Alexander McGillivray and urging in the public interest to leave the office where it has been for many years?

If so, has the matter been considered, and will the Hon. Postmaster General act on the wish of the petitioners?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). The postmastership at East Bay, south side, Cape Breton, became vacant by reason of the death of the postmaster, Hugh Macdonald, and his successor was appointed on the 26th of May, 1897. No petition against the removal of the office to the residence of Mr. McGillivray had been received up to the time of his appointment, but on the 10th of June, 1897, a petition to such effect was received, but too late, inasmuch as Mr. McGillivray had been appointed.

INLAND REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

On the Orders of the Day being called,

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). Mr. Speaker, before you call the Orders of the Day I would claim the indulgence of the House for a few minutes to make a personal explanation, and I hope this indulgence will be granted. A few days ago I laid on the Table of the House a return of the changes that had taken place in the personal staff of the Department of Inland Revenue. I do not wonder that at first sight, and without any further explanation, the public press on both sides should have come to the conclusion to which they have come, namely, that in this department there have been twenty-eight dismissals and forty-two appointments ; and I do not wonder that many of our friends should have expressed their disapprobation at such a state of affairs. I thought as the House was sitting that it would be more proper, more convenient and showing greater respect to the House to give the explanation to the House instead of giving it to the public press. It will only take about three or four minutes to read the statement which I have prepared and which I am going to hand over to the "Hansard" so that it may be published officially. I hope the House will give me that privilege. Instead of there having been forty-two appointments, I have only made thirty-eight. How I deduct from these forty-two, is this: There was Mr. P. E. Richeldt, one of the officers in this department, who was appointed on the 30th June last, before I took charge of the department. Mr. Plunkett was appointed on the 7th July last, before I took charge of the department. The name of Mr. Clement, one of the officers of the department has been entered twice on the list, by mistake. Then, there was Miss Sullivan, whom we only had for five months as a copyist, and whose services were dispensed with before the reports were got out. By deducting these four from the forty-two, it leaves thirty-eight. I beg to read this statement to show the reason for these thirty-eight so-called appointments, as well as for the dismissals.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman is going beyond a personal explanation, I hope he will move the adjournment of the House. The hon. gentleman will put himself in order by moving the adjournment of the House, though I am sure the House is quite anxious to hear his explanation.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I will bow to your decision, Mr. Speaker, and put myself in order by moving a motion in a moment.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. May I venture to interpose the question as to whether the adjournment of the House, moved by a member of the Government, and defeated, would not cause the resignation of the Administration?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). We will take that into our most serious consideration.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is not the question of order.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I will first give a list of the so-called dismissals. I may tell you, at the same time, that I think it is only fair that I should make this statement, because this question will come up sooner or later, when our Supplementary Estimates are considered. I have prepared a list which I intend to give to my hon. friend the member for Brockville (Mr. Wood), who is now absent. I will hand it, also, to the hon. the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper). It is as follows:—Dismissed for active partisanship, 11; customs officers collecting inland revenue on commission, removed from the customs and thereby disqualified to continue making inland revenue collections—because the law lets us employ officers in the customs to make collections only as officers of the customs, and the moment they cease to be officers of the customs they become disqualified to collect our revenue, 2; temporary officers dispensed with on account of exhaustion of funds, 8; miscellaneous, failure of duty, or resignation, or economy, 10; retired with gratuities, 4; superannuations, 11; deaths, 7. Altogether this makes fifty-three vacancies created in the department since I have had the honour of being in charge of it. Now, I have filled these vacancies in the following manner. The number of appointments made to fill the fifty-three vacancies was 25, and not 42, as has been stated. I appointed these 25 officers because I considered them indispensable for the work of the department. Then I had to organize three new offices in British Columbia, which became indispensable owing to the mining development and the starting of breweries and cigar and tobacco factories in that province. These offices are at Trail, Vernon, and Nakusp. Then I commissioned two officers of the Customs Department to collect for the Inland Revenue, to replace the two customs officers who were removed, as I stated a moment ago. Instead of appointing two new officers to take their places, I commissioned two officers of the Customs Department to collect the revenue. Then I appointed one preventive officer without pay, and I promoted to permanent positions seven temporary officers who were appointed by the late Government. These are not new appointments, but the promotions of men to the permanent list who were entitled to be appointed permanently. The only new appointments I have made in order to fill these 53 vacancies are the 25 appointments I have mentioned; so that altogether there are 15 men who have not been replaced. I will not take up the time of the House any longer, and I thank the House for its indulgence. I beg to move that the House do now adjourn.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to ask my hon. friend what constitutes active partisanship. We know what constitutes offensive partisanship. That I think we agreed was to be a cause of dismissal; but I believe the House has never gone further. Now we have another term—active partisanship. Does it mean that if a man walks quickly to poll his vote, instead of going slowly and deliberately, or that if he happens to be, like my hon. friend here (Mr. Foster), a bicycle rider, and goes at a rapid pace, he is guilty of active partisanship? What I would like to know from my hon. friend is, first, what is active partisanship, which is now the official term agreed on by the Government, as shown by this official paper, as a cause of dismissal, and, in the next place, how he arrives at the conclusion that these 11 men were guilty of active partisanship. Was it by means of a judicial commission appointed by the Government, for which they would of course not select active partisans of their own, to inquire in regard to active partisans, but men with a due regard to their judicial character?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. The term active partisanship, if I am not mistaken, is a term which has been adopted in such books as "May" and "Todd" to describe the undue interference of public officers in election contests. If it did not take up too much of the time of the House, I could explain the case of each one of the 11 men whom I dismissed for active partisanship.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear; no, no.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. If I am allowed to do that, I would like to answer the question of the hon. leader of the Opposition as to what I consider active partisanship.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Would my hon. friend be good enough to favour us with the extract from "May" which defines active partisanship as a cause of dismissal?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Perhaps I have something better than that. I will give a few instances of what I consider active partisanship. In one case, Mr. Cosgrove, an officer of the department, actually took the place of a Conservative candidate, and stood on the hustings and argued with one of my hon. friends here and contested with him his right to contest the county. He did that in two instances. I have the names of the places where this happened. I then wrote to the officer and asked him if this was true, and he admitted that he had done it. I then told him that certainly I could not consider that it was allowable to a public officer to play such a part as that.

Mr. WALLACE. Will the hon. Controller give us the names of the places where this man Cosgrove acted as a partisan?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Mr. Cosgrove admitted it. I can give the names to-morrow, because I have a copy of the letter.

Mr. WALLACE. What constituency?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. The constituency of Labelle. In another case, Mr. McHimm, an officer of the department, during the elections chose to bring some electors into his office, which was a Government office, and treated them there to drink and entertained them on the subject of the pending election. That may not be called offensive, but certainly it is active partisanship. Of course, I did not look out for these cases, but the accusations were brought to me, and as I had pledged myself in the House last session to inquire into any accusations of this kind, I could not refuse to investigate this case. In another case, newspapers were brought to me showing that the name of Mr. Fiset was placed at the head of the paper as its managing editor—a paper which strongly supported the Conservative cause during the last general election. I would not have dismissed him for that only, but after the election that paper insulted and abused the Liberal party and the Administration which had been entrusted with the government of the country. I sent for Mr. Fiset and asked him if that was his name at the head of the paper, and he said it was. "Well," I said, "you are not employed by the country to edit a paper of this kind and to forget so completely what is due to the neutrality of a public officer as to attack the constituted Government." These are some cases of what I consider active partisanship.

Mr. QUINN. Mr. Speaker, I certainly feel like congratulating the hon. Minister, who has enjoyed such a high reputation in our province up to the time of these dismissals, upon taking the earliest opportunity of vindicating that reputation before this House. But, as regards active partisanship, there was a young man employed in the department as to whom I would like to ask for some information from the hon. Controller. The one I refer to is Mr. Michael Doheny, who was employed in the Inland Revenue office in Montreal. He passed his examinations, and for some two or three years was a very efficient officer; but without any notice and without any charge being brought against him of active or offensive partisanship, and really without any cause whatever which he or anybody interested in his behalf has been able to discover, he was dismissed from his office. I would like to know what was the cause of his dismissal, and if he was replaced, by whom he was replaced, and whether the person who replaced him was either as competent to do the work or to fill the position generally as Mr. Doheny was. As a matter of fact, Mr. Doheny was an excellent officer, while the man who replaced him is utterly incapable of filling the position.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. In the case of officers appointed by the late Government, not as permanent but as temporary officers, when I found that the funds which for the payment of these temporary officers were exhausted, it became my duty to see how many of them I could dispense with. He was only a temporary officer, and I am sorry to say that I had not a good report of his conduct in the department, and I shall show my hon. friend the report.

Motion to adjourn, negatived.

GLOUCESTER FISHING SCHOONERS.

Mr. KAULBACH. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to draw the attention for a few moments of the hon. Minister of Marine and Finance to another article in connection with the fisheries of Nova Scotia, and the treatment they suffer at the hands of the Gloucester fishing fleet. I take it from the Montreal "Daily Star":

Halifax, June 16.—The statement of Hon. L. H. Davies in the House of Commons, discrediting the telegraphic report of the disturbance of the nets of the Nova Scotia fishermen by Gloucester fishing schooners, has awakened indignation at Prospect, where the loss of the fishermen from that cause has been particularly great. Every man in Prospect has suffered more or less from the fishing schooners sailing through their nets and tearing them.

A gentleman of unimpeachable veracity, who has just reached the city from Prospect, says Mr. Davies' statement has raised a storm of protest from the Prospect fishermen and produced considerable exasperation. The fishermen are anxious for Commander Spain to pay Prospect a visit to investigate the complaints.

The names of the Prospect men who were talked with on the subject and who have had nets damaged are: J. L. Hardiman, James Doherty, Edward Coolen, Folbert Duggan, Joseph Doherty, Joseph Martin, James Horn, Patrick Duggan, James A. Coolen, William Shea, Wm. Christian and Wm. Wagner. The last-named lost six nets.

This is a very sad state of affairs, and I feel bound to bring it to the notice of the House and the hon. Minister in particular. I appeal to him to use every effort in his power to have these poor fishermen protected and cared for in the best possible manner. As my hon. friend well knows, they have no other occupation by which to obtain a livelihood; and if their nets are to be destroyed in this way, they will certainly suffer to such an extent that the Government will have to provide them with provisions. Those fishing schooners from the neighbouring republic, sailing along our shores destroy, as is well known, the fishing industry entirely on our shores by driving the fish away. The fleets number, sometimes from sixty to eighty and one hundred sail. I have often seen sixty to eighty sail off the harbour of Lunenburg at one time, which had a deadly effect when found inside of the three mile limit. The incident referred to in the Montreal "Star" happened in the county of Halifax, and not in my county, but I have similar complaints from the fishermen in my county. They complain that it is impossible for them to prosecute their industry if the American schooners are not more carefully looked after and the offenders brought to justice.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). It would be obviously imprudent on my part to cast any judgment upon the newspaper report to which the hon. gentleman has called my attention. When he brought this matter before the House a few days ago, I wrote immediately to Commander Spain, inclosing the cutting from the newspaper quoted, and asked for a report. I have not yet obtained a report, and until I do so the hon. gentleman cannot expect me to make any statement.

JUBILEE DAY.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to ask the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) whether Jubilee Day is a bank holiday.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). Not to my knowledge.

Mr. WALLACE. I would ask the hon. gentleman whether the law that makes it a public holiday does not make it a bank holiday?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have always been under the impression that any day proclaimed a holiday is also a bank holiday.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). The Banking Act contains that provision.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the opinion of the Solicitor General?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not give opinions on documents I have not seen.

USE OF GILL-NETS AND SEINES.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Davies) whether any new regulations or orders have been given to the overseers on the St. Lawrence in the district of Montreal to allow fishing with gill-nets and seines and other instruments that destroy the fish? In Lake St. Louis, I am told, that by the use of these instruments parties have completely destroyed the fishing. Orders were given under the late Administration to prevent the use of these destructive methods, but I am aware that on the eve of the election those orders were not so stringently enforced, but were relaxed. I thought, however, that after the elections were over, whatever Government would be in power would still see that the regulations imposed for the sake of preserving the fish would be enforced. I beg to draw the hon. Minister's attention to the fact that unless orders are given to prevent seining and netting, the fishing in the St. Lawrence will soon be completely destroyed.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). The hon. gentleman is perfectly right. The relaxation made in the order before the general elections worked a great deal of evil, and I have done my best to counteract that by giving instructions to have the law carried out everywhere. If there has been any destruction of the fish since, it is not because of any relaxation in the rules, for instructions have been given to carry them out.

Mr. BERGERON. I am very glad to hear that, but I may say that the orders have not been executed. Will my hon. friend instruct the overseers to see that they are executed?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will.

JUBILEE DAY.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I want to draw the attention of the hon. gentleman leading the House to a matter I brought under his notice a few days ago, and which he said would receive his attention. I refer to the Bill which came down from the Senate and was introduced here by the hon. Controller of Inland Revenue. It is a Bill providing for the observance of the Queen's birthday as a public holiday, and I draw attention to the fact that this Bill, thus introduced by a member of the Government, will have no chance of being dealt with unless the Government placed it in Government Orders. I am afraid it has escaped my hon. friend's attention.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I will see to it to-morrow.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—EXTENSION TO MONTREAL.

The House again resolved itself into committee to consider a certain proposed resolution (page 4088) declaring it expedient to confirm an agreement entered into with the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada and the Drummond County Railway Company and Her Majesty for the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to the city of Montreal.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. SPROULE. There are two or three features of this clause that strike me as worthy of attention. One is the amount we are to pay in the event of any tracks or sidings being laid down on the Grand Trunk Railway. We are compelled to pay 5 per cent interest on one-half the cost. Now that strikes me in this way: Suppose the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals and I went into partnership and agreed to invest money in a plant out of which we both expected to get a return. But if one of us was getting twice or three times the return received by the other, I think it would be hardly fair to expect the man getting the smaller amount to pay half the cost of the plant. This seems to me to be the position in this case. The Grand Trunk, I am informed, will use the stations and tracks, perhaps, eight times as much as the Intercolonial Railway, and yet the Intercolonial Railway is obliged to pay one-half of the cost of the improvement. That appears to me to be very unfair. The same criticism, in my opinion, applies to the right we have acquired from the Grand Trunk, over the other portions of its line, because while we have acquired half the right to use the works, the use of them by the Grand Trunk will be much greater than the use of them by the Intercolonial Railway. As to the rate of interest, it seems to me very unwise to bind us for ninety-nine years to a certain rate of interest, when we know that interest is falling all the time. While money may be worth 5 per cent to-day, fifty years from now it may be worth only 2 or 2½ per cent, and we must still be paying 5 per cent for money which the Grand Trunk is getting at 2 per cent. For these reasons, I think this bargain ought to be changed. I do not know what we are going to do if we cannot make any changes. It is too bad if we are face to face with a hard and fast agreement which we must either accept altogether or reject altogether. While I admit that there are some good features in the bargain, there are some very bad ones, and we should be allowed to accept those that we think good and reject those that we do not approve.

Mr. FOSTER. I listened to the hon. Minister of Railways in the attempt he made to meet the objection so strongly presented by the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), and I do not think he succeeded in convincing those who were listening to him that the terms here laid down were either wise or at all fair to the country. We have here an illustration of the wrong that is done to this House and the wrong that is done to the interests of the country in having an important matter like this put off to the very end of the session. It is impossible to get the attention of the House, no matter how flagrant is the section which you are discussing, no matter how prejudicial to the interests of the country the conditions we are asked to ratify. The hon. Minister in bringing down the proposition at this late hour and in the way in which he has brought it down has most effectually shut off all free discussion in this House. But he has not cut off the discussion in the country or among business men in the country. Now I wish to make a remark or two emphasizing what has already been stated, but which cannot be stated too strongly. In the first place, the hon. Minister was face to face with these facts: The Grand Trunk has the major part of the traffic that is to come and go upon the tracks and the bridge and in the terminals and yards. He was simply getting the right of user for that proportion of the traffic which the Intercolonial Railway would do, and that is admittedly very small in comparison with that of the Grand Trunk. Probably the traffic for which the hon. Minister is asking this House to pledge itself to this bargain is not one hundredth part of the total traffic on the joint section and on the terminals under discussion. He is to pay a round price of $140,000 per annum for ninety-nine years to get what is sufficient trackage for the Intercolonial Railway. Now if there is to be this year or next year or later large additions to these facilities, these additions are due entirely not to any increased use of the works by the Intercolonial Railway, but it is for the accommodation and the accommodation solely of the Grand Trunk traffic, which is already large and congested and is yearly increasing. The Grand Trunk Railway is also just commencing to double-track and enlarge the Victoria Bridge, which means that it is face to face, this very hour, with a large contemplated accession to its traffic; and it is bound, whether we go into this arrangement or not, to make these enlargements so as to provide for that traffic. Another fact in point is this: That from Bonaventure station up to Ste. Rosalie the Grand Trunk has only one line, and that is the line of which we have the right of user, and this line must carry all of its traffic—that which goes to Chaudière, that which is local, and that which goes on to Portland, the great through and ocean traffic that the Grand Trunk is carrying. Just at this point the Minister of Railways, without any authority of this House, without the knowledge of any single member of his party outside of the Cabinet, steps into the breach and pledges the people of Canada for ninety-nine years to pay one-half the cost of future enlargements at the rate of 5 per cent interest—enlargements which will be rendered necessary and only rendered necessary—

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What does the hon. gentleman mean by the statement that I pledged the country to pay 5 per cent on half the cost of these enlargements?

MR. FOSTER. I mean exactly what the English states, and I think my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) is able to understand it.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman states that immediately after saying that the Grand Trunk are now proceeding to double-track the bridge and enlarge it. The hon. gentleman knows that we have no part whatever in the cost of the erection or construction or extension of the bridge and the laying down of the second track. That is not included either expressly or impliedly.

MR. FOSTER. My hon. friend could not have understood me to state that it was.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You implied it.

MR. FOSTER. I did not intend to imply it; and I did not imply it so far as I could bring my language to express what I meant. I will state it so that my hon. friend will probably understand. I say he undertook this negotiation under this state of affairs:

MR. FOSTER.

The Grand Trunk, with a congested traffic and anticipating an accretion of business, was obliged to undertake to double-track and enlarge the bridge and to provide better facilities at its terminus for handling its business. Had not the Minister of Railways stepped into the gap, they would have been obliged to make these extensions and provide these terminal track and yard improvements no matter what they cost. It is admitted beyond doubt that if they are made, they are made solely for the accommodation of the Grand Trunk Railway traffic. Now the present facilities are sufficient for the Intercolonial Railway's traffic—sufficient for years and years to come; nobody will deny that. If then the additions are made, they are made solely to provide the conveniences necessary for the Grand Trunk itself. Now, at that point, the Minister of Railways steps in and without the authority of Parliament pledges the credit of this country, he pledges every member of his party, not one of whom knew the kind of transaction he was proposing to carry out for ninety-nine years to one-half the cost of the subsequent additions and enlargements and track-laying and yard improvements, no matter to what extent they may go, no matter what they may cost, at the rate of 5 per cent per annum. Now the hon. Minister tried to ridicule the idea that the Grand Trunk could make use of this guarantee in the financial markets of the world. He cannot delude business men and financial men on that score. I will tell him what he has done. He has done what the leader of the Opposition said he had done—put into the hands of the Grand Trunk an asset of \$140,000 a year for ninety-nine years, which this Dominion Government has to pay, which every financier on the streets of London knows that this Government will pay, and that is one of the most undoubted collaterals that the Grand Trunk could give in order to raise money with which to improve these lines for their own benefit. for the benefit of all of its shareholders and its stockholders, those to whom it is indebted, and who would be only too willing that any necessary improvements that were to take place should be made on that collateral to get the money for the road and, consequently, for their own interest, at a less rate of interest than they could otherwise get it. But he has done more than that. Interest at 5 per cent is not an interest that this Dominion should be obliged to pay, it is an insult to its credit that it should be asked to pay it. The credit of this country is such in the London market that it can get what money it wants at 3 per cent. Suppose this condition is fixed, suppose that after this contract is passed the Grand Trunk Railway comes to the conclusion that its business requirements make it necessary to undertake enlargements at its terminals, its yards, its tracks and sidings, and the section which runs out to Ste. Rosalie, which amount to three million dollars in the aggregate, the Grand Trunk holds this Dominion liable for the interest of one-half that amount at 5 per cent. The whole amount that the Grand Trunk Railway wants to raise is, say \$3,000,000; we would pay 5 per cent on \$1,500,000 of that; that is, we pay \$75,000 per year, or we pay, in other words,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent upon the whole loan they would have to make. When Parliament consents to that, the company can go with that proposition to financial men in London and say: We want a loan of three million dollars, here is the Dominion's undertaking to pay  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent upon that three million dollars for ninety-nine years; will you give us a loan of three million dollars at  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent interest guaranteed by the Dominion of Canada for ninety-nine years? I do not believe you will find a financial house in London which would not take a loan of that kind.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What is the guarantee in this arrangement?

Mr. FOSTER. The guarantee is simply this, that you, as Minister of Railways, have made a hard and fast bargain with the Grand Trunk Railway Company that when they undertake to say that their business makes it necessary that in terminals, in yard room, in double-tracking, in all these arrangements, it is necessary for them to expend three million dollars, you have to elect to say whether you will use any of these conveniences or not. How can the Minister of Railways avoid using those conveniences? Every time that he runs a train from Ste. Rosalie into Bonaventure station, he runs it under the company's rules and regulations. He may take the track that is laid there now, or he may have to take the double track which they have laid down under these conditions of improvement. His cars are to be shunted under the company's regulations; the company, in the management of its traffic, shunts these cars on to the new enlargement and the new additions in the yards. So all the way through it is practically impossible for my hon. friend to avoid using them, and if he uses them the country must pay. Now, what collateral have the Grand Trunk Railway to lay before the financial men in London? This, that the Dominion Government pays 5 per cent on half the cost, which is  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent upon the whole cost, and on that any financial man in London will give the Grand Trunk Railway a loan of three million dollars at  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent on the guarantee of the interest by the Dominion of Canada. And what will be the result? They will raise the whole amount of money which is necessary to build what is only necessary for their own traffic and their own convenience, and they will do it entirely at the expense of the Dominion. Why could not my hon. friend have taken a manly grasp with the Grand Trunk Railway, and said: Whatever improvements we want, we will use, and whatever is the charge, this Dominion is able to pay you. But we don't want to pay 5 per cent per year interest when our credit stands at 3 per cent in the London market. Instead of doing that, he has opened a way for the Grand Trunk Railway to finance what is necessary of any sum that may be expended in the matter of these improvements and enlargements, and to do it with scarcely a single cent of cost to themselves. That is the agreement that my hon. friend has made, in his secret way, keeping everything to himself, not consulting his own supporters, he does not trust them, he does not think that they are able to see into the intricacies of an arrangement like this, until he has got it all matured, and three days before they want to get a check for their indemnity in their pocket, they must pass it or they must reject it, with all the consequences that it entails. That is the kind of arrangement that he has drawn Canada into. It is an improvident arrangement, and I do not think that there is another gentleman in this House who would have entered into it outside of my bold friend the Minister of Railways.

On paragraph 41,

That in respect of all traffic originating through the company's system west of Montreal and offered for shipment for any point on the Intercolonial Railway via the Intercolonial at Montreal, the company shall not ask, impose or exact any rates or tolls from the point of shipment to Montreal which shall discriminate or tend to discriminate in favour of the company and against the Intercolonial Railway taking or receiving such business at Montreal, or which shall induce such shipment via the company's line to Lévis or Chaudière for delivery to the Intercolonial at either of such points in preference to Montreal.

Mr. HAGGART. What about freights west of Montreal? Suppose freight offers west of Montreal via Halifax. There is no provision in any clause that I see with reference to trade that comes west of Montreal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Section 44 provides for that.

Mr. SPROULE. In the event of a renewal of this contract for a second or third term, would the interest run on for ever at the same rate?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is optional for the Government to renew, they are free to do it or not, as they please, but they are under no compulsion.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. gentleman agree to renew it at the end of the first term?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot tell what will be done then.

Mr. HAGGART. I think the hon. Minister misunderstood my question. Suppose freight is offered in Europe to points west of Montreal, say London or Hamilton, where is the provision under this agreement that that freight might not be cornered or captured by the Grand Trunk Railway at Montreal, and an exceptional rate charged from Montreal west? Your 44th clause is intended to apply to it, but it says east of Montreal. Surely this is a mistake for west.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The matter the hon. gentleman is referring to is dealt with by the 43rd section, which declares that freight rates and fares shall be agreed upon and made, from time to time for traffic to and from all points on the Intercolonial Railway and all points on the company's railway.

Mr. HAGGART. That is not a reply. Where is the power under this agreement for the Intercolonial Railway to make arrangements to carry freight past its own line, which is virtually to Montreal, over the connecting line of the Grand Trunk Railway? You say that they may make arrangements, and make satisfactory arrangements, but if they do not do it, what is the result?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Well, then, there is a provision for arbitration if they do not agree in what is fair between the two roads.

On paragraph 43,

That through rates and fares shall be agreed upon and made from time to time for traffic to and from all points on the Intercolonial Railway, including the lines hereby demised, and all points on the company's railway, including all lines leased by them, and such rates and fares shall, as regards traffic to and from all points on the Intercolonial Railway, and to and from all points on the company's lines and leased lines, be divided on the basis of the mileage, except where such division would act unfairly by reason of one line of railway having a largely preponderating mileage, in which case the division of rates and fares shall be settled on a reasonable and equitable basis by mutual agreement, and in default of agreement, by arbitration as herein provided.

Mr. HAGGART. Now, the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) says that my point is covered by clause 43. Does he not see that it only applies to freight that originates on some point on the Intercolonial Railway or Grand Trunk Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Originates? No.

Mr. HAGGART. Certainly it does.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot get at what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) desires to know. Certainly as to all freights which originate at any point on the Intercolonial Railway or any point on the Grand Trunk Railway east or west all through rates and fares shall be agreed upon. There is a covenant that these parties shall agree to adopt a tariff on a mileage basis, and if they cannot come to an agreement the matter is to be referred to a board of arbitration except upon traffic shipped to and from Europe to Halifax. This is a matter which we have endeavoured to cover by the 44th clause.

On paragraph 44;

That as regards traffic shipped to and from Europe and the British Isles through Halifax per Intercolonial Railway, the rates of the company for the carriage of such traffic east of Montreal shall not be higher per passenger per mile, and per ton of freight per mile than the amount per passenger per mile, and per ton of freight per mile, charged by the company on similar classes or descriptions of traffic carried by it for others to and from the same places, and intended for or coming from the same place in Europe or the British Isles. In ascertaining such rates of freight, all drawbacks or deductions allowed are to be taken off before fixing the rates.

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend say that a case like this is covered? Suppose that the Intercolonial Railway agents in London or Liverpool are seeking for freight, we will say, for points on the Grand Trunk Railway west of Montreal, agents of the Grand Trunk Railway are also catering for the same freight.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. At Montreal for points west.

Mr. FOSTER. No. What I was saying was this. There is an Intercolonial Railway agent and a Grand Trunk Railway agent in Liverpool, and they are both catering for the carriage of freight bound for western Ontario at points on the Grand Trunk Railway system. The freight might go by Halifax or St. John on the Intercolonial Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway to that point, or it might go via Portland and the Grand Trunk Railway to that point. Is there anything in my hon. friend's sections in the agreement which prevents the Grand Trunk Railway from catering for the freight at a rate of discrimination against the Intercolonial Railway, which will be catering for the freight to go by Halifax or St. John over the Intercolonial Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway? The agents of the Grand Trunk Railway will meet the agents of the Intercolonial Railway in Liverpool, and when these agents ask for freight to go via Halifax, the Intercolonial Railway and Grand Trunk Railway to a point in western Ontario, the Grand Trunk agent will step in and say: "We will take that freight at a cheaper rate by way of Portland, over the Grand Trunk Railway to this point in western Ontario." I say that this does not meet this point at all. Perhaps my hon. friend could not meet it. Evidently it is not met, and it is not a matter which my hon. friend could refer to arbitration. Does my hon. friend think that it is perfectly open for the Grand Trunk Railway to compete with this combination of the Intercolonial and the Grand Trunk Railway on freight to points west of Montreal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I frankly acknowledge that I do not think it would be possible to cover the point in the express terms of a written contract. As hon. gentlemen are aware, there are two classes of arrangements between railway companies, one a leasing contract or agreement, which refers to the use of the road, and the other a traffic arrangement which refers to the interchange of traffic. Traffic arrangements are of a temporary character. They do not last more than a year and sometimes not more than for the season for which they are made. Traffic arrangements are made between companies for six months sometimes. We never proposed embodying in this agreement anything that would be the subject of an ordinary traffic arrangement, and what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) alludes to would come within that classification. I do not think it would be an easy undertaking to make an agreement covering the kind of traffic described by the hon. gentleman where the Grand Trunk Railway have a terminal of their own which would be entering into direct competition with us and where they have their own railway system beyond our terminus at Montreal.

Mr. FOSTER. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that it would be impossible for him to get the Grand Trunk Railway to agree not to compete.

Mr. HAGGART. All I was contending for was a provision in this agreement covering the case of traffic originating on either of the lines of railway. On freight originating in England for points west of Montreal there is no arrangement in this agreement, I tried to make that point plain to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, but he seems not to have understood it until it was put by my hon. friend (Mr. Foster). There is no arrangement in this agreement by which freight shipped from Great Britain or Europe can be sent further than Montreal. Although we have control of the whole line and built it ourselves, no arrangement has been made by which we can enter into competition with the Grand Trunk Railway or any other railway.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, I acknowledge that I cannot understand what the meaning of section 44 is. Will the Minister of Railways give us his view of it, an actual case, for instance?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is an error in one of the words in that clause—"east" should be "west" of Montreal. There are two or three verbal errors in the agreement in other places. That means that any arrangement which may be made by any shipper for the shipment of his freight from any European point to Halifax, if that freight is carried through Halifax for a point beyond Montreal, then the company cannot charge any higher rate per ton for such freight per mile than the amount charged by the company on similar classes of traffic carried by it for others to and from the same places.

Mr. HAGGART. That is why I asked the question. I suggested that if the word "east" were "west" we could understand the clause.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the word, but in the printer's copy it reads "east." I thought the point that the hon. gentleman wanted to get at was as to our control of the rates west from Montreal. This would be made the subject matter of competition on the other side, and I do not see how it would be possible to make any arrangement which would enable us to enter into successful competition with the Grand Trunk when they have a port of their own.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, we are in a very grave fix. We have the matter locked up like the laws of the Medes and Persians and it cannot be departed from; we have to swallow it all as it is or none. Here it says "east," and east it must remain for ninety-nine years.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, in the agreement which we signed I can assure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) that these corrections have been made.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). That is a mere typographical error.

Mr. FOSTER. This ought to be a perfect transcript of the signed document. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) ask the committee to change the word from east to west.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I ask the committee to make it conform to the agreement itself. There are two or three words which have been incorrectly printed and which I will ask the committee to correct. I have them marked.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the agreement been laid on the Table of the House?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I think so.

Mr. FOSTER. No, we have had nothing but these printed documents.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The original agreement?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Oh, no.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it should be brought down to the House. The word should be made "west," instead of "east." My hon. friend will be in a box, if it is not.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How big a box? It is not very serious. Suppose it says "east" it has no meaning at all. If it reads "west," we have some power on their shipments.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. When the hon. gentleman is told that this is only a typographical error, what is the use of wasting time about it?

Mr. FOSTER. We were told that this contract was signed on the 15th May. When there was trouble about it, the Minister told us that it was not signed on the 15th of May, although to-day we have passed this resolution declaring that it was signed on that date. Therefore I think we ought to see the original contract. We have as much right to compare the printed document with the original contract, to see if there are any errors in it, as the Minister has. Is any demand more reasonable than that the original contract should be before the House.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I venture to say that my hon. friend cannot recall a case in his whole parliamentary experience, in which, when an agreement was submitted in printed form to the House for ratification, the original was brought down and laid on the Table; and when a Minister of the Crown tells the hon. gentleman that a typographical error exists in the printed document, he ought to accept the statement immediately.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the House can fairly ask that we should have the original contract when there are errors in the printed document which were not discovered until they were pointed out by the members of this House, but which the Minister persisted in stating were correct until he could not longer defend them, when he said they were not in accord with the original contract. He may be speaking in good faith, but he has not the original document before him, and how is he to know when the printed document does or does not correspond with the original? I say, therefore, that in order that we may see that this document conforms to the original, we are quite within our right when we ask that the original signed agreement be brought down and be subjected to the scrutiny of the members of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. At an early part of this discussion I suggested the change of one word to the Minister, and he replied that it could not be changed. If he could not change one word in the first part of the agreement, why does he change a word in the latter part of it?

Mr. BLAIR.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Does the hon. gentleman not see the distinction between changing a contract and changing a typographical error?

Mr. SPROULE. It may not be a typographical error, and I think it is due to this House that we should be in a position to verify the corrections, and see whether the original document contains the same words as the printed document. The hon. Minister must have the original document in his department, and it would not take much time or trouble to have it brought here, so that we could make a comparison of the two.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are three or four typographical errors which it will be necessary to correct, and which I will call attention to later on, and I presume the committee will correct these so that this document will conform to the original agreement which has been executed.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries wants to know if I have ever heard of original documents being brought into this House by Ministers.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I did not say anything of the kind. I asked whether the hon. gentleman ever knew of a case in which when a Minister of Railways laid an agreement before the House, the original was brought down attached to the printed document.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has raised a point which I did not raise. I did not ask that the original document be attached to the printed document.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I did not say you did. I said that no original contract was brought down when a Minister placed a printed duplicate of that document before the House. I challenge the hon. gentleman to name an instance.

Mr. FOSTER. My opinion is certainly the reverse. I myself, when I was a Minister, brought down contract after contract, and had them in my desk, so that when a matter came up the contract was there for any hon. member to inspect it who wanted to do so. This House certainly has as much right to inspect original documents as a committee of this House; and the hon. gentleman knows that the Committee of Public Accounts has had original papers brought before it in stacks for the perusal of any member of that committee. If that is so in that committee, why should it not be so in this House? Besides, if I am not misinformed, in the case of the fast Atlantic contract this very year, the original document as signed by Sir Richard Cartwright on behalf of the Government was brought down to the House. Now, if any member of this House wants to see the original document as signed by the parties to it, I think we have a right to ask that the Minister shall bring it down and give us that opportunity. If this is a constitutional doctrine which the Minister is introducing, it is a new constitutional doctrine, and I protest against it. It is not particularly that the Minister's veracity is in question; but his fallibility may be established, and we are not going to take any Minister as infallible. I ask the leader of the House, who is an old constitutional member, whether or not we have a right to see this original contract?

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that we are in this position. The hon. Minister has acknowledged that there are several typographical errors. How do we know what is correct and what is not correct? He has not drawn attention to these typographical errors as we went along, and we have accepted them all as correct, and passed them. The Minister ought to have drawn the attention of the Chairman to them, at least, and asked him to change them before we passed each section.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are not passing these sections. There is only one section in the resolution, and that section includes both agreements, and it is my purpose to ask the committee to make the necessary corrections in the three or four cases where corrections are necessary, so that the agreements as they are approved by the House shall be positively at one with the agreements as executed. In the fourth clause, for instance, instead of the word "belong" we should have the word "belonging."

Mr. INGRAM. I think we are entitled to that original document. I remember very distinctly the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) drawing the attention of the hon. Minister several times to the word "east," and the hon. gentleman persisted in saying that the word was "east."

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Surely the hon. gentleman is mistaken. My attention was not called to the word "east."

Mr. INGRAM. I am most positive that it was called to the word two or three times, and the hon. gentleman persisted in saying it was "east." But, after the argument, persisted in by my hon. friend to my right that it was not in the interests of the Government to have the word "east" in there instead of "west," we find the hon. gentleman saying it was a typographical error, and that we should accept it as such. For that reason, I hold we ought to see the original contract.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that the Government take the ground that the House has no right, when called upon to ratify a contract, to see the original document.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The position which the Government takes is that we have set forth in printed form the agreement entered into, and which we ask this House to ratify. If there be no such agreement, then the whole legislation on the subject will be absolutely nugatory.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course, all the members of the House are interested in seeing that any legislation we pass is not nugatory. I must say that I thoroughly understood the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) to have directed the attention of the hon. gentleman to this word "east," as printed in section 44. It may be that the hon. Minister did not understand my hon. friend, but I certainly did, and it seems to me that, under the circumstances, as it is apparent that there are several typographical errors in the document as printed and laid before the House, it is not unreasonable that we should insist on having the original laid on the Table for the purposes of comparison.

Mr. BRITTON. Is not this the position fairly stated: An agreement has been entered into between the Government and the Grand Trunk Railway. That agreement is not valid or binding until ratified by the House. The majority of hon. gentlemen opposite do not wish to have it ratified. The hon. Minister of Railways tells us that the change he suggests is intended to make the printed document agree with the original. If that be the case, we know what we are doing, the original agreement will be ratified, and no harm done; but if, on the other hand, the amendments suggested by the hon. Minister, and which he says are intended to make the printed document conform with the original, in reality are at variance with the original document, then the result will be just what hon. gentlemen opposite want. There will be no real valid agreement and all we have done must go to nought, unless the Grand Trunk Railway see fit to accept the agreement as passed by the House. With regard to the difference in date about which so much has been said, all of us who have had anything to do with documents of this kind must know that very often the date is filled in as part of the agreement, although the agreement may not be signed or executed until some time later, and I must confess that I do not see any legal objection to a course of that kind. The agreement is actually signed as bearing the date mentioned in it, although the time of actual signing may be different.

Mr. CLANCY. Does not the hon. gentleman think that the House is entitled to have before it, not what purports to be a copy of the agreement, and which is shown to contain many errors, but the original agreement itself. I would like the hon. gentleman to say to the House, as a lawyer, whether or not this committee is entitled to the original agreement, to every word and line of which we are asked to give our assent? If the copy of a document were produced in court, the hon. gentleman would not accept it, but would insist on having the original. But the hon. gentleman says that we on this side do not want the agreement to pass, and therefore we ought to be the better pleased if the agreement we do ratify should not really be the one passed between the parties. That is a most extraordinary argument, especially coming from an hon. gentleman of the legal standing of the hon. member for Kingston.

Mr. BRITTON. I am not an old parliamentarian, and therefore my opinion as to parliamentary practice perhaps may not be worth very much, but I say that in a case of this kind we ought to accept the word of the Minister when he tells us that the original agreement is in a certain way, and suggests an amendment to the printed copy to make it agree with the original. If I were to answer the question asked me, I certainly would say, whatever my opinion be worth, that I think the original agreement ought to be here.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I have been assisting in this House at the passage of scores of agreements, and very often opposing their passage, and, as a matter of parliamentary procedure, I have never seen the House insist on any occasion on the production of the original. Nevertheless, if hon. gentlemen cannot possibly proceed with the discussion without seeing the original, I have no doubt my hon. friend will produce it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am quite sure that the statement made by the hon. leader of the House will command universal approval. While it is not always regarded as necessary to submit the original agreements to the Government, no one who has been a member of Parliament for any length of time would venture to deny that the Government have constantly brought down original agreements. There never has been an instance in the history of this Parliament when an original agreement of such importance as the one now asked for, was not produced when called for. The House will see the absolute necessity of the hon. Minister doing this when he admits that there are errors in the printed copy. Suppose that through clerical errors, or otherwise, the document we are asked to ratify does not conform to the original, in what position will we be in? The Grand Trunk Railway have not bound themselves to any agreement except the original, and therefore our confirming a document which they have not signed, and which is at variance with the one they have signed, will have no binding effect on them, and this legislation will be useless. I cannot understand the hon. Minister's hesitation in complying with the appeal of his leader, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, to lay the document before the House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am really surprised at the hon. gentleman. In the first place the assumption that it is the usual or ordinary thing to lay original papers on the Table is an extremely violent one, and one which has not heretofore been insisted upon—at all events that is the information I have, and I think it is reliable. Now, I entirely dissent from the proposition that any clerical error, any patent and plain mistake which there might be typographically in the document which was signed, which would not concur with the agreement as confirmed here by Act of Parliament would necessarily or at all invalidate the contract in which Parliament did concur. If there was any substantial difference between the two, if the Act which Parliament passed confirmed a contract which was substantially different from that which is actually entered into, the Grand Trunk might well say: The contract which we entered into with you has not been ratified, and therefore we are not bound by it. I have no objection to produce the agreement. But the committee might go on with the discussion, and if it was found that the agreement which was signed contains the word "east" in place of the word "west," the error is so patent and clear to any one who will read the clause that it could not affect the validity of the agreement between the Grand Trunk and ourselves. I say that it is a clerical error, and while I do not say that it was not in the written draft as it was prepared, as it was agreed upon—in careful reading by the officials of the Government the error would probably have been noticed. I have no doubt that if an error, it slipped in in the course of printing. And it is not expected, I presume, that the Minister of each department shall sit down and read the printer's proof of each document to ascertain whether it conforms strictly to the document as drawn. So I am not able to guarantee that the printed document signed by the company does not contain the word "east." But I am absolutely sure that the agreement as it was entered into was "west" that it could not mean anything but "west," that there is really no sense in the clause unless with that word, because the Grand Trunk has no line east of this point. Now, if hon. gentlemen are prepared to go on and deal with the remaining sections, we can save the final disposition of the matter until the written contract is procured.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am very glad that the hon. Minister has finally given consent which, had he given it an hour ago, would have saved a great deal of time. We do not insist that the document shall be technically laid on the Table, but we ask that it shall be available so that questions asked by hon. members may be answered authoritatively, and thus we may be able to do our business correctly. I think that the suggestion that we should go on and finish this reading of the contract, leaving it open to make such amendments as we find, on comparison with the original, are necessary, is one that we might well accept.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think that if the word "east" is contained in the original, it is clearly an error and it ought to be "west." I would have no hesitation, for one, in advising the committee to make the change in the printed form, because it would then unquestionably be in accordance with what was intended.

Mr. FOSTER. We will leave it then, and the original paper will be here in the evening, say.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Not to be laid on the Table, it will be understood.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, we do not expect that, but it will be before us for purposes of comparison.

Mr. WALLACE. The document need not be laid on the Table, because then it would be the property of the House. There is another serious defect in the copy that is now before us, which purports to be a copy of the agreement. I see that it is signed here at the end "Chas. M. Hays, General Manager," and "Andrew G. Blair, Minister of Railways and Canals." But though this is, I suppose, a sealed document, there are no seals in the copy. Some may think that this is not a very important matter, but I think it is. For instance, we have presented to the House not many days ago a document dated the 14th June, a contract between the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) and Petersen, Tate & Company, ship-builders. If you will look at page 400 of the "Votes and Proceedings," you will find that that is a completed document, that the seal is there, or the "L.S." which stands instead of the seal. In the agreement we are now considering there is no proper completion of the document before us; it is presented to the House in defective form. I think the Minister of Railway's attention should be called to the fact that he has not presented to the House a proper copy of the original document.

On agreement with the Drummond County Railway Company

On paragraph 3,

That the company will, in the construction of the uncompleted portion of its line, construct the same to the satisfaction of the Government Engineer, and with a uniform grade of 52·80 per mile, and in addition on the line already constructed will reduce the grades at Carmel Hill and at the St. Francis River to a maximum grade of 52·80 per mile.

Mr. SPROULE. This seems to assume that the two places mentioned are the only places on the road where this change would be required. If there are other places where the grade is more than 52·80, that should be provided for.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As a matter of fact, there are no other grades than the two mentioned that are greater than 52·80. We know that as an absolute certainty.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the hon. Minister mean that the road shall be completed with a uniform grade of 52·80 per mile or does he mean that that is the maximum grade?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I mean that that shall be the maximum grade. The word "uniform" grade is a clerical error, and the clause should be amended in that respect.

On paragraph 4,

That it is hereby covenanted by the company with Her Majesty, that the company will and does hereby covenant and agree that Her Majesty will be put into possession of the completed railway on or before the date aforesaid free and clear of any existing encumbrance of any kind; that any trust mortgage heretofore executed upon the company's property, or bonds issued, will, before Her Majesty, shall take over and enter into possession of the said line, be wholly cancelled and extinguished, so far as such trust mortgage or issue of bonds shall affect or encumber the railway hereby demised; that any unsettled claims for right of way on the said line or railway or branches thereof shall be fully paid and satisfied; that any conveyance of such right of way upon any portion of the said line of railway or branches thereof not yet executed by the owners thereof and delivered to the company shall, previously to the acceptance of this lease, be duly executed and delivered by the persons having title to said right of way; and any unsettled claims or demands of any kind or description which may prejudice or affect the title which Her Majesty is hereby acquiring to the company's property shall be fully paid, satisfied and discharged, and further, that in the event of any claim for right of way, or in the event of any debt or demand of the company being hereinafter preferred against Her Majesty, which ought to have been paid or satisfied by the company in pursuance of this agreement, if demanded, Her Majesty may, on payment thereof, deduct the amount of such claim out of any rents due and payable under this lease.

Mr. FOSTER. Before this section is read, we might as well ask the Minister for a little information. This relates to the indebtedness, bonded or otherwise, of the company. Will the Minister kindly inform the House what is the present condition of the company in that respect, who are its stockholders, what bonds have been issued, what are the amount of bonds per mile, and as to the interest rate upon these bonds?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am afraid that I am not able to furnish the hon. gentleman with the information that he asks for. It is made a condition of this agreement that the company shall satisfy the Government that their property is absolutely unencumbered at the time the Government takes the road over. We have stipulated that we shall have the right to assign the rental which is payable under this lease as a security for bonds which shall issue subsequent to the execution of the lease, and which shall not take effect, and which shall only be a charge or lien upon the rental itself. The property is to be wholly unencumbered. As to the amount of existing bonds, I am not in a position to say, but I understand they are something in the neighbourhood of a million dollars. They are hypothecated, I think, with some one or more of the banks. But my information has not been very minute upon that point, nor did I think it necessary to make particular inquiry.

Mr. FOSTER. Are any of these bonds in the hands of the public, or are they held as collateral security by banks?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am inclined to the opinion, though I cannot speak with certainty, that the bonds are in such a position that the company can take them and surrender them to the Government or otherwise, if the Government, or the solicitors who may be representing the Government when the matter comes to be arranged, are satisfied that they are absolutely extinguished, and that the property is clear of any encumbrance whatever. I do not know in whose hands they are now held, or whether they are scattered, but I rather judge that they are not scattered.

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend understand that the clause in this section with reference to claims unsettled for right of way, would take in all right of way claims? or is it understood that all claims for right of way have either been paid or preferred? What I want to point out is this. Is the hon. gentleman satisfied that after the arrangement is gone into the Government will not be called upon to satisfy claims for damages which may not have been preferred, but yet may be valid; or is it understood that all the claims have either been settled or have gone so far before the Drummond County Railway that they are covered by this clause?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understand that the claims, in the main, have been settled, but not altogether. I believe there are some which still remain unadjusted. But as to those, whether they have been preferred or not, we propose to take power, as we think we have done, to pay claims when properly presented, and if they should be presented at any period hereafter, we shall have a right to reserve out of the rental which will be payable, an amount sufficient to pay any such claims.

Mr. FOSTER. You have taken that power?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think so, in the latter lines of this clause:

On paragraph 8,

That Her Majesty will purchase the rolling stock and the railway supplies of the company at a valuation to be agreed upon between the company and the Minister.

Mr. SPROULE. We ought to have some information about this rolling stock before we give the right to purchase, because it is an important consideration. What is the amount of the rolling stock on this road, and what is its valuation?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can assure the hon. gentleman that I have not the slightest idea whether the rolling stock is of much or little value. I am told that it is in fairly good condition, but I have no knowledge of it, and would not act upon any such belief. The Crown has no authority to reserve to itself the right to take the rolling stock if it can get it at such a valuation as it believes it could properly take it at.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think my hon. friend will find that he is mistaken. He has no option to take it if he pleases, he is bound to take it, but he is not bound to take it except at a valuation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is another way of stating what I said. I think they are fairly bound to sell to us, and if we can agree upon reasonable terms, we are fairly bound to take their rolling stock, that is, if they are willing to sell it to us at what we believe to be a reasonable price. If they ask too much we are under no compulsion to take the property. We must get it at what we believe to be a fair value, or else we will not take it all.

Mr. SPROULE. In the event of disagreement, who is to determine the value?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no question of determining it in the event of disagreement. It is for the department to take it or not, as they please.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Suppose you do not agree on the valuation as mentioned in the section, is there not some means of determining what shall be done?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, and I will explain why. I felt that in a matter of that kind, which was not an essential condition of the contract, we ought to be under no compulsion to buy, especially at a price which might be demanded of us by some third party. If we could not agree, then I was unwilling for one to bind the Government to submit to a figure which might be fixed by a third party. If we cannot agree upon a price, then we will not take the article at all, we have a free hand. I would only consider that we were under an obligation of treating the parties fairly, and of taking the property from them if they were willing to sell it to us at a price which was fair.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose the Minister wanted to give them a great deal too much for it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then I suppose Parliament would turn us out.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it not a little singular that my hon. friend goes to work and purchases a road, and in purchasing the road is so slow that he does not get an engineer's report upon it and act according to the advice of his engineer until after he has signed the contract? Then he goes to work and binds himself to purchase that rolling stock at a valuation, and he actually tells us that he has no statement from one of his officers as to the amount of rolling stock that is upon the road, or its quality, or anything of the kind.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is a fact.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I am sorry that my hon. friend has to admit that.

On paragraph 9,

That Her Majesty will not be bound to take over the said railway, nor shall the rental hereby reserved begin to accrue to the company until the said line of railway and branches thereof shall be wholly completed to the satisfaction of the Minister or the Engineer of the Department of Railways, and ready for use and occupation for the purposes of the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. FOSTER. That word "or" is not a clerical error, between the Minister and the engineer, is it? Should it be "and"?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, it should be "or." I have a memorandum from the Deputy Minister which shows that the word "east" in clause 44, ought to be "west." I have sent for the agreement. I think the word ought unquestionably to be "west" to make the sense of the clause.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend expressed a doubt as to whether the word was "east" or "west" in the original.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think there is no question about it that the word "east" must be "west" to have any reasonable meaning. As to the sealing of the document I am told that the document bears the seal and that it is only an error on the part of those who made the copies that the letters L.S. were not placed opposite the name. I would suggest that the amendment be now made in both cases. If the hon. gentleman would consent to the committee rising, there can be no final stage taken and I will get the agreement and show it to my hon. friend (Mr. Foster). I suppose that will answer.

Mr. FOSTER. That will answer.

Mr. TISDALE. I would suggest to the Minister that if you are changing the word "east" to "west" we will have to put a substantive clause in.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not if the error is a patent one. Have you any doubt as to its being patent?

Mr. TISDALE. I have no doubt as to its being patent, but it is material. Unless the instrument is re-executed and we confirm it, it might create an awkward question.

Mr. LOUNT. The court would read "west" in there beyond doubt.

Mr. FOSTER. If it read "east" in the document.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Certainly; it is a patent error.

Mr. FOSTER. Which court?

Mr. LOUNT. The court of law.

Mr. FOSTER. That is bad law, I am afraid.

Resolution to be reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to ask the hon. leader of the House (Sir Richard Cartwright) if he proposes to sit on Saturday.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I will be able probably to tell to-night when I see what progress has been made.

Mr. BERGERON. You will have to move to-day.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No, there are two days in which to move.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Whatever is the more convenient will be readily assented to.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The matter is in my hon. friend's own hands. If his thirst for information can be assuaged in short gulps we can get through, but if he desires to have it in long draughts I do not know what will be the result.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

The House again resolved itself into Committee on Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

All sugar above number sixteen Dutch standard in colour, and all refined sugars of whatever kinds, grades or standards, one cent per pound.

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) propose to make any change in this?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). No, we do not propose to make any change.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to ask my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) if he has any information as to the effect of these sugar duties as now arranged on the West India sugar trade at Halifax? There is a very strong feeling there that a very serious injury will be occasioned by that duty.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is somewhat mistaken as to the position of the matter. The item in which the West India trade is more particularly interested is the first item in the schedule. Upon that item we have made no change. The item stands exactly as it was before. I am prepared to say that it is represented by the West Indian trade that the specific or fiat duty of one-half a cent a pound on all grades of sugar does not encourage that trade; and that is well worthy of consideration. We have found some difficulties, however, at the present stage of the session in the way of reopening the question, and we are inclined to think that it is better that the matter should stand for a few months longer, during which we will consider the question of changing the form of the duty when Parliament meets again. The particular product in which the West India trade are interested is raw sugar, and on that we have not made any change.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. But still the alteration made in the duties has struck a severe blow at the West India trade.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, I think that is hardly correct. It is not the alteration of the duty which they object to; but it is the fiat duty, which my hon. friend inserted in his tariff, and which like all specific duties bears somewhat hardly on the lower grades. The sugar question is always a very difficult and complicated one; and after full consideration we have come to the conclusion that it is better to allow the matter to rest for the present than to attempt to make a change now which might meet the views of the West India trade, but might not on the whole satisfy all parties concerned.

Mr. FOSTER. It is quite evident that the hon. gentlemen are literally unable to make up their minds what to do, and they propose to take six or seven months more to consider the question. If that is the case, it is well to move cautiously with regard to a question affecting such an immense industry, and involving not only the labour of our people, but the outside trade to a large degree. As this state of indecision as to what it is best to do ultimately is frankly acknowledged by my hon. friend, does he not think it better to leave the duties as they were before, until they can take plenty of time to look into the matter and come to a final decision as to what will appear to be the wisest course to pursue? My hon. friend is cutting off the real results of his own caution by making the change he has made. Under the old tariff sugar interests were fairly successful, and the business was going along well.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. To leave the duties exactly as they were before would not be regarded as satisfactory to all concerned. It would be no advantage to the West India trade, because the raw sugar, in which they are chiefly interested, is left exactly as it was before. We have made a change in the duty on the refined article, and except as to the relation that always exists between the importer and the purchaser of sugar, there is no connection between the two. The refiner undoubtedly complains of the reduction we have made in the duty on refined sugar; but it is also fair to state that the continuance of the old duty on raw sugar is criticised by the West India trade. They complain of the fiat duty which my hon. friend adopted three years ago; and there is fair reason to doubt that that is the best form of duty. If we left the duties exactly as my hon. friend suggests on both lines, he is mistaken in assuming that that would be satisfactory to the sugar trade. The West India trade would still complain, as they complain now, of the fiat duty.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend seems to think that the West India trade is alone affected by the duty on raw sugar, and that inasmuch as he has not changed that duty, he has not done anything to interfere with the West India trade. The hon. gentleman could wipe out the West India trade completely, and still leave the duty on raw sugar just as it is. What is to be done with the sugar after it is brought in is the question on which the subject turns; and, therefore, it is a mere evasion, in my opinion, to say that the West India trade is not seriously affected because the duty remains on raw sugar as it was before. I do not question the statement of the hon. gentleman that the West India trade may not have been satisfied with matters as they stood. My information is that since the change of tariff made by hon. gentlemen opposite the merchants of Halifax have sent to 140 parties with whom they were trading in the West Indies, directing them not to forward any sugar. In fact, they regard the change made in the sugar duty by the hon. gentleman as having struck not only a severe but a fatal blow at the West India trade; and I do think there is a great deal of force in the suggestion of my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) that, inasmuch as the hon. gentleman admits that after all the consideration they have given to this subject they have not yet made up their minds whether the policy they have adopted is one that it will be wise to continue to maintain, it would be reasonable to leave the question open, as it stood before, for consideration a little longer, and not thus, by a change which they themselves are not at all satisfied will be permanent, disarrange more thoroughly than before so important a trade as that between Canada and the West Indies. I really think that my hon. friend would be consulting the interests of the Government, and I am sure he would be consulting the interests of the country, if, until he is able to give this question such consideration as to leave no doubt in his mind as to what course should be pursued, he leaves matters as they were before. I submit to my hon. friend that it is not too late to adopt that course, and it would be a course perfectly consistent with the statement he has made to-day.

THE MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is slightly mistaken in saying that we have not made up our minds as to the wisdom of the course we are pursuing. We have made up our minds to this extent, that we believe the change we have made is a wise change, though of course we may be mistaken. The only question is whether we might not go further and make a change in the duty on raw sugar, or in the method of levying the duty on raw sugar. That is a point as to which there is room for debate. It is on that point that I expressed some doubt, whether the flat duty or a duty based on the polariscopic test is the better. I think the hon. gentleman is wrong in saying that the West India trade are hostile to the change we have made. All they are complaining of, if they are complaining at all, is that we have not made a greater change, and changed the method of levying the duty on raw sugar. Of course, I understand that there is that connection between the West India trade and the refiner to which the hon. gentleman refers, in that the West India man must have a market for his sugar.

MR. FOSTER. You cannot disjoin these two interests, because if there is no refining done in the country, the West India trade must go to smash, because no one will import raw sugar in if there is no one here to refine it. When my hon. friend has lowered the duty on refined sugar, he has struck a blow at the refining industry of the country which will react directly on the raw sugar trade with the West Indies, as well as on the trade in beet root sugar from Europe. So that my hon. friend may be assured of this, that if he can keep the duties just as they were, there might be some dissatisfaction as to whether the duty should be imposed as a specific duty simply and absolutely on sugar at so much per pound, or whether other tests should be used. My hon. friend, however, would conserve the refining industry in this country and the raw sugar trade as well. If the Government admit that they cannot see their way clear as to what is really the best for the whole business all round, I think the argument is almost irresistible that they should not imperil, even for six months, the great business of refining and the dependent business of importing raw sugar. It would be thoroughly consistent and just what business men ought to do, if they cannot see their way to a betterment which actually satisfies them, to leave the thing just as it was when they are sure that in doing so they will not imperil either the one industry or the other.

MR. SPROULE. Looking over the Trade and Navigation Returns, if the duty affects the British West Indies, it must affect other countries as well. Last year we imported from British Guiana 6,000,000 pounds, from the British West Indies 90,000,000 pounds, from Belgium 16,000,000 pounds, from the East Indies 14,000,000 pounds, from Germany 8,500,000 pounds, and a large quantity from the Phillipine Islands and Spanish West Indies.

Sugar candy, brown and white, and confectionery, including sweetened gums, candied peel and popcorn, one-half of one cent per pound and thirty-five per cent ad valorem.

MR. FOSTER. This is a change from the first tariff as brought down.

THE MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

MR. FOSTER. Consisting in adding the specific duty.

THE MINISTER OF FINANCE. In the tariff of 1894, the duty on sugar candy was 35 per cent. Then in the tariff of 1895, a duty of ½ cent per pound was added on sugar and was also added to the sugar candy. Our first draft of the resolutions made a change in that, but we have concluded to restore the original duty for this reason. The preferential rate will apply to the sugar candy but not to the sugar imported from countries which do not get the benefit of the reciprocal rate. Therefore, the manufacturer of candy will not get his sugar any cheaper except to the extent of the reduction on the refined? We know that England is the largest sugar market in the world and uses large quantities of it in making sugar candy, so that there will be considerable quantities of confectionery brought from the mother country under the reciprocal rate. So that really by leaving this rate, as it stood in the old tariff, we are making, so far as the old country is concerned, a very substantial reduction.

Mr. FOSTER. At what rate will chewing gum come in ?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). 20 per cent.

It being Six o'clock, the committee rose for recess.

After Recess.

Indian corn for purposes of distillation, subject to regulations to be approved by the Governor in Council, seven and one-half cents per bushel.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There will be a discussion on that item.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). Better take the discussion on the free item.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). We understand that the discussion may cover both items, as they are related, and we can take up the free item at once.

Free List—Indian corn, n.e.s.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). I wish to say a few words on this item which affects the whole country, but affects very specially the province from which I come. I regret very much that the Government has seen fit to take the duty off corn. A duty of 7½ cents a bushel has been left on corn for distilling purposes, but corn coming in for other purposes is free. I think the Government will find it a very difficult matter to collect the duty on corn brought in for distilling purposes. There is nothing to prevent a farmer selling his corn to a distiller and replacing it with imported corn. I believe the Controller of Customs will not be able to follow that corn so far as to prevent the farmer from selling the imported corn to the distiller. As the Finance Minister pointed out last night, it is a very difficult matter to collect duty on articles which are free for one purpose and dutiable for another. I am sure it will be found so in the case of Indian corn. A large quantity of the coarse grains are grown in this country, not only enough for home consumption but enough to give us a large quantity to export. So far as Prince Edward Island is concerned, for some years past we have found that the home market was sufficient to consume all our coarse grains except, perhaps, a small percentage, which may have been sent to Newfoundland or to the West Indies. The great bulk of our coarse grains were used by the local markets in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Last year there was a very large crop of oats in every part of the country and especially in the maritime provinces.

Mr. FIELDING.

The result was that we had more than was required to stock the market that we have heretofore had, and the surplus had to be shipped to England. The consequence was that the price went down so that the farmers did not realize what would pay them for growing the article. Prices will be further reduced by the importation of a large quantity of corn when the duty on corn is removed. We find that in 1878 we imported $3,335,619 worth of corn ; in 1894, we imported only $683,877 worth. That means that the place of $2,851,742 worth of corn was supplied by the coarse grains grown in our own country. My contention is that the admission of free corn into this country will have the effect of still further depreciating the price we have had for the large quantity of coarse grains grown in our country. While free corn may be of some advantage to the farmers who are large stock feeders and are able to take advantage of it, the great majority of the poorer farmers of this country cannot afford to grow oats, which they must grow and sell them for 20 cents or 22 cents a bushel and then import corn from the United States, where 2,151,000,000 of bushels of corn is grown. It may be of some small advantage to the large feeders, but the general farmers and the poorer classes of people who really have more need of legislation in their favour than the large and wealthy farmers do, will not be able to take advantage of it in any sense. I know sufficiently of my own country to say that, and I know what I am talking about. Now, Sir, there is much more corn grown in this country, many times over, as I understand it, than would supply what is required by the distillers of this country. As I said before, there is nothing to prevent our farmers selling the corn that they would use for their own feeding purposes, to the distillers, and importing American corn to replace what they sold to the distillers ; so that really, so far as I can see, it will not be possible to collect any duty from the corn that is required for distilling purposes. It was stated here the other night that the farmers do not require free corn. For my part, I do not believe that anything like the majority of the farmers are asking for or require free corn. The hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers), I think it was, said the other night that the farmers "are getting on a little too fast for their own good." Now, I must say I think this item of free corn is going to prevent them from progressing ; I believe myself it will be a retrograde movement rather than otherwise. It is well known that corn is not a good article for making pork. I know that pork made from corn is not as good as pork made from barley, oats and peas ; and the effect of bringing in corn free means the depreciation of the value of the pork that is made in this country. To substantiate that, I will read an extract from a letter written by one of the heads of one of the large pork-packing establishments in Canada, in which he says :

With respect to free corn, we are very much pleased that this matter is receiving the attention of a good many members of Parliament at present. The fact of corn being admitted free is a serious matter to the pork-packing industries of Canada, as, if imported largely into this country and fed liberally to hogs, it will seriously interfere with the quality. We may say, we have not bought any hogs in the counties of Essex and Kent during the past two or three years, the reason being that the quality of the hogs is not suitable to make fancy export bacon, and, therefore, we have refused to buy them, and the quality, as we understand it, is caused by the farmers feeding corn instead of mixed grain, as is followed in all other districts in Canada, and, therefore, if other districts would import corn largely and commence feeding it liberally, the results would be serious, not only to the packers, but to the farmers generally in Canada. In this connection, a large Chicago packing house writes, under date of January 14, 1897, as follows :—

“It has been suggested that the Canadian farmer feed his hogs corn. This is the most fatal step he can take. It would not alone undo the work that has been done during the past ten or fifteen years in educating him how to raise hogs fit for export, but it would reduce the value of the hogs fully one-third. As we understand it, you raise too many hogs now that are unsuitable for export, to supply your own domestic trade. If you introduce corn as the staple article of hog feed, you do not increase your domestic outlet any, but you decrease the percentage of your product which can be exported by putting yourself on the same basis as the States; in other words, you are giving up a good market, where your goods bring a premium, to compete in a market where you have not a ghost of a chance. At present your bacon compares favourably with both the Irish and Danish product, and you have established a reputation for quality which you must maintain at any cost. This cannot be done by substituting corn or other grains. As a citizen of the United States, of course, I should like to see Canada opened up to receive our products, but, looking at it from the standpoint that you must look at it from, I cannot see one feature in it to benefit either the Canadian packer or farmer.”

Now, if this is the case, and I have no reason to doubt it, I think it would be very detrimental to the pork-packing business of Canada, which is, you may say, in its infancy, is only fairly getting under way, but is going to grow to large proportions if it is properly fostered. Our province of Prince Edward Island, although a small one, can grow an immense quantity of pork, and I dare say more, proportionately, than any other part of Canada. We can grow coarse grains necessary to make the best pork that can possibly be made anywhere in the world. Our people are giving their attention largely to the growth of pork and are very successful in it. A large packing establishment is being built there now on the most modern system. I think that it would be a retrograde step if we were to allow the quality of our home-grown pork to be deteriorated by allowing free corn to be imported into this country to feed hogs, and to take the place of the coarser grains that make much better pork than corn would make. I may say further that we have a large local demand in the lower provinces for our pork which, I am sorry to say, has been greatly interfered with by some of the changes that have been made in the tariff. The coal and iron industries have been growing up in the maritime provinces, and these consume large quantities of our pork. The people of New Glasgow, Londonderry, and the surrounding towns are large consumers of the products of our farms, and afford some of the best markets for our pork, beef, and such like products. Now, Sir, I regret indeed to find that, owing to the changes made in the tariff, a circular has been sent to the employees in these different industries notifying them that 10 per cent of their wages is to be deducted in consequence of the reduction in the protection that has hitherto been given to the manufacture of iron, particularly in the county of Pictou. Now, fault has always been found with us that we did not give under the National Policy a home market to our farmers for the stuff they grow on their farms. We did furnish them with a home market, and those who did not believe it before will soon be made painfully aware of it when they find that the home market they had for the past two years and which was steadily growing, is to a large extent taken away from them in consequence of the reduction in the tariff which has already begun to result in the lowering of the wages of the labouring men in the localities that I have mentioned. I regret that the Government has not seen fit to continue the duty on corn. If we did not grow enough of these coarse grains in our own country, I could readily see that there might be a necessity for it, particularly in those portions of Canada where it is used as food. But with us it is not used as food to any extent. Thank goodness, our people can eat something better. But I think it is a great mistake on the part of the Government to have allowed this duty, to be taken off corn. I believe they will be able to raise very little revenue from that imported for distillers, as I have already explained. It will be very difficult indeed for the Government to collect any revenue from that source. Under these circumstances, I must say that I regret very much, in the interest of our people, and in the interest of the whole country, that the Government has seen fit to admit corn free.

Mr. SPROULE. To my mind this is one of the most important items in the tariff, because it affects one of the largest classes of the Dominion, and it affects them in a way that must seriously injure them if it is continued. In the year 1877-78, before the National Policy was introduced, the farmers of Canada knew very well what it meant to have the injurious competition of the United States farmer. In some lines out of which the Canadian farmer was making money, in cattle, grain, meats and all those kinds of produce, the competition from the United States was growing more and more serious, and when the National Policy was introduced they found very soon the benefits of that policy. Let us take the line that is represented by the article now under consideration. As I said, the serious competition from the United States was so great that the farmers of Canada felt it very much, they were driven out of their own market, they were obliged to find a market abroad for the produce of their farms to a greater extent than would have been the case had they not been subjected to competition from the American farmer. In the year 1878, before the National Policy was introduced, we imported into Canada 7,387,507 bushels of corn. I think my hon. friend did not give the figures correctly. Some will say that this is brought in for the distilleries. I find by the Trade and Navigation Returns that during that year there were only 1,677,445 bushels brought in for the distilleries; so that the great bulk of this corn was brought in for feeding cattle and hogs and grinding into food. Now, the farmers felt that seriously. It was injuring the prices of their coarse grains, their pease, their oats, their barley, their buckwheat, and all those grains of that kind. After the National Policy was introduced the beneficial effects of it were felt very rapidly because the next year we find that instead of 7,000,000 bushels of corn being brought into Canada there were only 2,763,999 bushels, so that there were kept out 5,000,000 bushels in round figures by the National Policy. Will any one tell me that the keeping out of Canada of nearly six millions of bushels of corn intended for home consumption would not give the farmers a better market? Will any one contend that the National Policy did not give the farmer better prices for his other grains and for his corn? It seems to me that there is no person who has given any thought to the subject but who will admit that that competition was injurious to the Canadian farmer and detrimental to his best interests. What do we fear in all lines of life? It is competition. What is it that the farmer does not want from abroad? It is competition. He does not want competition from abroad any more than the manufacturer wants it. You have not only reduced the duty upon some of the industries directly interested, but in this one line you have taken the duty off entirely. The duty is of the same importance to the farmer as it is to the manufacturer of cloths, and to the manufacturer of agricultural implements. When you take the duty off the products of their industries you leave them open to the free and injurious competition of United States manufacturers in their lines. So it is with the Canadian farmer. The last census that we have taken tell us that there are 647,000 people engaged in farming in Canada. These 647,000 farmers are quite able to supply the wants of Canadians in this particular line, and yet they have much less of protection on this product than the United States farmers, and when you took this duty off you brought them into direct competition with eight millions of farmers on the other side of the line. In my judgment, they do not want that nor are they asking for it to-day. Is there any person who will contend that it will not affect them injuriously if competition brings down the prices of manufactured lines. It must equally bring down the prices of farmers' products, and the more men there are engaged in farming and the more products there are in the same market, the more it must bring down prices. It is held by some that we require this corn because it will enable us to make more money out of some other pursuits of life. It is held that it will be an advantage to the feeder if he can bring in corn because he can feed his stock cheaper and make more money out of his beef and his hogs. It will be an advantage to some, but only to a very few. To ascertain how far it would or would not affect the farmers if corn were brought in for that purpose we have only to think for a moment that a fair proportion would be about two out of ten of the farmers of Canada who are fattening stock. The percentage in Canada to-day is about two out of ten. While it might benefit those two who, like my hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. McMillan), who fattens 100 head of cattle in a year, to the other eight it would be a disadvantage. There is no doubt about it, because eight out of every ten depend upon the coarse grains that they raise and the coarse grains that they sell largely for their return in the agricultural pursuits of life. They are not prepared to go into the feeding of stock, and there are two reasons for this. The first one is that they are not provided with suitable buildings, and the other is that they cannot lie out of their money long enough while waiting for the return which the feeding of stock would bring them in. As soon as their grain is grown and threshed it must be marketed to get the money required for the various demands of their homes, paying store bills, taxes and notes for agricultural implements. They require this money at the beginning of the winter and they are obliged to sell their grain to obtain it. But if they have to wait for the return from the feeding of stock it means that they must wait till spring and even beyond that till the summer season. Besides which, as I have said, they are not provided with buildings suitable for the feeding of cattle. Therefore, the majority of farmers depend upon another line of life, and that line is the raising of coarse grains that are produced in such plentiful quantities in Canada. It may be said that we require this corn because we need it for feed. That is not the case. With our coarse grains which are quite as good for feed and very nearly as cheap, and of which we raise enough to supply all our wants, there is no reason why we should displace them by bringing in other grain. What was the result when we brought in seven million bushels of corn? The result was to displace the coarse grains of the Canadian farmer. There is only so much consumed and you cannot make the consumption very much more, and if what we raise at home is not consumed, and if what is raised abroad is consumed here a market must be found for the surplus of the production over the consumption. In the Trade and Navigation Returns I find that we have had an importation of corn to the extent of seven million bushels, which displaced the oats, pease and barley of the Canadian farmer. We had the same injurious competition in the line of meat. We found that the Americans were supplying the Canadian consumption of meats. In 1890 over thirty-three million pounds of meat came in. We raised the duty to shut that meat out. We raised it a little over half a cent a pound on fresh meat, and we shut the American product out. Was that any benefit to the Canadian farmer? The Canadian farmer got that market at home; he did not have to send his product abroad, and he had the additional profit which he saved on the transport, and which he would have lost if he had been obliged to send it out of the country to sell. It may be said that we are bringing in this corn for the distilleries, and that they are obliged to pay the duty upon it. But as long as we raise more than will supply the distilleries it is not likely that the distilleries are going to bring in corn and pay 7½ cents per bushel when they can buy it at home. But it is not about the distillers that I am concerned; I am concerned for the Canadian farmer who will be so injuriously affected by bringing in this corn. In the summer season in our part of the country, when freight rates are slack on the lake, steamboat owners will contract to bring corn from Chicago to Owen Sound or Collingwood for 1 cent a bushel. They usually bring it over at from 1 to 2 cents a bushel, but in the fall when freights are slow they will bring it in for 1 cent a bushel. If there is any margin over 1 cent a bushel between the price of corn in Chicago and the price in Canada there is no doubt that it will be brought here in large quantities and sold. If an American holding corn is not finding a ready sale for it in his own country and the price in Canada is 3 cents higher than in the United States, he will bring it into this country and make a profit of 2 cents a bushel on it. It will be dumped down in Collingwood and Owen Sound as it was many years ago. Men who handle it there will run it down the railways, sell it to grain buyers along the line and the grain buyers will sell it to the feeders of stock. Now, when this is done, bushel after bushel of it will displace so many bushels of the Canadian farmer's coarse grains, and it will therefore affect our farmers injuriously to that extent. Of late years the price of coarse grains has been very low. It is said that it does not pay the Canadian farmers to raise such grain, and this condition of things will be greatly accentuated, if you allow thousands of bushels of a commodity that comes in from abroad, which can be utilized instead of our Canadian coarse grain. The consumption of coarse grains in Canada is limited to a certain quantity, and if you import from abroad the home product cannot be consumed. If we had a fair expression of the views of the Canadian farmers, I believe that seven-tenths, yes, eight-tenths of the farmers of Canada would be found not to want free corn. There are a few who do want free corn, but I believe I am perfectly safe in saying that eight-tenths of our farmers do not want it. It is an entirely mistaken idea to say that the farmers of Canada are in favour of this proposal. Let me ask: Who had the ear of the Government in regard to this? It was a few of their friends who are large cattle feeders and large stock feeders to whom it would be an advantage to have free corn, and who have been constantly pressing the matter on the attention of the Government. The great mass of the agricultural community of this country who make their living from raising coarse grains, have not been able to make their wants known to the Government as directly as these stock feeders and the result is, that the interests of the many have been sacrificed to the requirements of the few who will be benefited by this proposal. I am quite sure, that after a few years of free corn, it will be plain to every farmer and to every politician in Canada, that we will suffer from the competition of eight million farmers in the United States, who are direct producers in the line that half a million farmers in Canada are interested in. There are four or five manufacturers in the United States to every one in Canada, and if you abolish the duties on manufactured goods, tell me that it will not injure the manufacturers of this country. There is no one so insane as to deny such a proposition. And, if it will injure the manufacturer to make his products duty free, so it will injure the farmer, because while the one is a manufacturer of cottons and woollens, the other is the manufacturer, in a certain sense, of coarse grain, out of the sale of which he expects to make a livelihood. Now, let me ask, how many lines of products raised by the farmer do you strike by abolishing the duty on corn. You strike at his article of oats, his articles of pease, his article of barley, and his article of corn. You strike him in four different directions, and in each one of these you injure him by allowing corn in duty free. Why should we do that injustice to the most deserving class in this country? I sincerely hope that the Government may reconsider this matter, and see that it would be in their interest, and in the interest of the Canadian farmers, to put the same duty on corn as was on it before. If the Government does not do this, they will find in a short time that the Canadian farmer is very seriously injured.

Mr. CHARLTON. As a representative of one of the ridings in the corn belt of Ontario, I feel called upon to say a few words in reference to the removal of the duty upon corn. There are fifteen ridings, I believe, in the province of Ontario that are interested in this question to a large extent, from the standpoint of being producers of corn, and the farmers of these fifteen ridings are naturally adverse to the admission of American corn free of duty, unless some compensating advantages accrue to them. So far as the question stands upon its own abstract merits, I do not know that I could take very strong ground against the free admission of corn. Of course, if we import large quantities of corn, that corn displaces a corresponding amount of coarse grains, but the corn will not be imported and the coarse grains displaced by the importation of corn, unless there is a profit in the exchange in the shape of the ability of the farmer, or the cattle feeder, to buy the corn at a less rate than he secures for the sale of his coarse grain. There is no question that there is a class of farmers who buy grain for feeding stock and hogs, and who would naturally be benefited by the admission of corn free of duty, from the United States. In my own experience, I bought corn last spring from twelve or fifteen different farmers for the purpose of feeding stock and hogs, and my operations as a farmer would have been benefited by the free admission of corn. I am not prepared, however, to say, that the twelve or fifteen farmers who sold corn to me would be benefited by the removal of the duty, and they would clearly be averse to the removal of that duty. It is a pretty nice question to decide, where the balance of profit and loss, so far as the entire agricultural community is concerned, will come in. The farmers of these fifteen ridings where corn is raised, and who have a surplus of corn to sell, naturally are opposed to the removal of the duty, and it is not in their interest to have that duty removed.

A good many arguments have been advanced here with regard to the use of American corn, which I deem to be quite fallacious. For instance, the argument that it is calculated to deteriorate the quality of our pork is without foundation. Now, in these ridings where corn is produced, the pork is fattened upon corn, and no question is ever raised on the part of the buyers as to the quality of that pork. The great difference between the quality of Canadian and American pork rests, not so much upon the quality of the feed given to hogs, as it does upon the manner in which these hogs are handled, and the way in which these hogs are sold. The western farmer usually keeps his hogs until they are over a year old. His object is to sell to the purchaser, a drove of hogs that will weigh 300 pounds each.

Mr. CLANCY. No.

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes, the object is to raise heavy hogs. The western farmer believes, when he gets his hogs at a certain age, that he can convert his corn into money by putting it into pork more profitably than in any other way. The mode of feeding these hogs is altogether different; they wallow in the prairie mud, and I myself have seen hogs in Iowa and in Illinois, fishing corn out of mud where I wondered how they could discover it at all. Now, the Canadian hogs are sold at a medium weight; they are sold when they are suitable for bacon. That is the prime consideration in the sale of Canadian hogs, and I repeat, that the hogs in these ridings where corn is raised are fed largely upon corn. The farmers there seldom think of feeding anything else except corn to their hogs, when fattening them. Therefore, that objection raised to the use of corn, is an objection which I do not think is of a very serious character.

Although coming from a corn raising riding, I have no special objection to placing corn upon the free list, so far as the interest of the farmers of Canada at large are concerned; and the objection that I do have to placing corn upon the free list, rests upon another basis altogether. I think that we are putting this grain upon the free list at an inopportune time. I think there is a consideration in connection with this matter, aside from the interest of the agriculturist. That matter that connects itself with this question is: The effect that this placing of corn upon the free list may have upon future negotiations between this country and the United States, for the remission or lowering of some of their agricultural restrictions. In giving to the Americans free corn, we are giving them something that is, in their estimation, an important concession, and we are giving them that concession without a quid pro quo. That is the particular objection, and the only objection, I have to the admission of American corn free of duty. In this connection it would not be far-fetched, nor foreign to the subject, to refer very briefly to the condition of our trade relations with the United States, in order to illustrate the point I wish to make, that we ought not to give to those people a single concession which they might deem of value without receiving something in return. We imported from the United States last year, $58,500,000 of products of various kinds; that is to say, 53 per cent of our total import trade. We gave to the Americans last year a free list of $29,500,000, in round numbers. Upon this free list there was $5,000,000 of manufactures. We paid to the United States last year, in addition to our export of coin and bullion, amounting to $4,699,000, the sum of $14,250,000. As a compensation for that free list of $29,500,000 which we gave to them, we had last year free entry into the American market for about $17,500,000 of our products. The Bill now under consideration in Congress strikes from that list forest products, hides, wool, and various other articles, reducing it to about $5,000,000, while we give them a free list of about $30,000,000. In other words, we give them six times the advantage which they give to us. In addition to the $5,000,000 of manufactures which come into Canada from the United States, we buy from them $22,000,000 worth of goods on which we pay duty, or $27,000,000 in all. There is this large balance of trade against us. When we come to ask the Americans to permit us to pay for the products of their labour in the shape of manufactures which we purchase from them, with the products of our labour in the form of natural products which we wish to sell to them, how are we met? We are met by this new tariff, with its schedule of duties upon the products of our labour which we desire to exchange with the United States for the manufactures we purchase from them. We are required to pay on cattle valued at $10 per head and upwards, $6 per head; on hogs, $1.50 per head; on horses and mules valued at $150 or less, $30 per head; on sheep, $1.50 per head; barley, 30 cents a bushel, which is 125 per cent ad valorem on the present value of barley in our markets; on barley malt, 45 cents a bushel; on buckwheat, 15 cents a bushel; on corn, 15 cents a bushel; on corn meal, 20 cents a bushel; on oats, 15 cents a bushel; on rye, 10 cents a bushel; on wheat, 25 cents a bushel; on butter, 6 cents a pound; on beans, 40 cents a bushel; on cabbage, 3 cents a head; on hay, $4 a ton; on potatoes, 25 cents a bushel; and this whole range of duties is calculated to be prohibitory. This refusal on the part of the United States, with our liberal trade arrangements towards them, to receive on terms of neighbourly comity the products of our labour, creates a condition of things in the highest degree unsatisfactory; and in view of these circumstances, I hold that to give the Americans free admission for their corn is granting to them a concession to which they are not entitled. I hold that we ought to retain corn on the dutiable list until we can secure some consideration from the United States in return. That is a position which impresses me as being one of very great importance; and for that reason, while I reaffirm that the duty on corn, so far as the question stands upon its own merits, is not, in my opinion, a serious matter, or even detrimental to the country, yet I would not remove that duty, under the existing trade relations of these two countries, until the United States give us some consideration for the concession. Now, I know by experience that in the western states—in Iowa, Illinois, Wisconsin, and in the other great corn states which are the centre of opposition to reciprocity in agricultural products between these two countries—the free admission of corn into the Canadian market is considered a matter of very great importance; and I know that the hostility of these western farmers to concessions which will admit, free of duty, the products of our soil into the American market, can be very largely reduced and to a great extent removed, by placing before those farmers the important consideration we have to give of permitting their corn to enter our markets free of duty. I know this from experience, from hundreds of instances in which I have discussed this question with American farmers. I know that in the great majority of cases these men say: "We will not object to give you free admission of hay, free admission of potatoes, and free admission of barley, in some cases, if you will give us the free admission of corn." Under these circumstances, it would be the part of thrift for us to hold this concession back until we can secure some quid pro quo for granting it, and I urge these considerations upon the Government. Not that I intend to oppose the policy of removing the duty on corn; but I intend to impress upon them the desirability of waiting before this step is taken until they can secure from that people some consideration. They are not a people who are in the habit of giving something for nothing; they are not specially liberal in their treatment of us; and I am not disposed to do anything which can result to their advantage unless we get something in return. I confess, though it may not be a Christian feeling, that I would rather suffer a little myself than to give them an advantage which they do not pay for. Consequently, I do not believe in putting corn on the free list just now.

Mr. MOORE. Before this clause in the tariff resolutions is disposed of, I wish to give expression to some views which I hold on this important question, and to state some reasons why I think we should not consent to take off the duty upon corn imported into this country from the United States. If I had reason to believe that the farmers of Canada were in favour of free corn I would certainly not oppose it, but would vote for this resolution. I believe, however, that while there are some wealthy farmers who are feeding stock and may find it to their personal advantage to have the duty removed, the large majority are positively opposed to its renewal and to allowing corn to come in free, unless the United States will make an adequate concession for the favour we thus give their farmers. There are those who believe, and I presume they are correct, because they are practical farmers, that corn mixed with other grains would be a better feed, and therefore those who are fattening stock would prefer to have the privilege of importing their corn free of duty. I presume they are correct in holding that a mixed feed is better, but what is there to prevent their using Canadian corn? Why cannot we have corn raised in the Dominion instead of sending for it to the United States and bringing it in free of duty to compete with the home grown corn of the Canadian farmers? They reply that we cannot get sufficient corn in Canada, but it seems to me, with a country as large as ours, with a population of five million people, with a land area of 3,500,000 square miles, with a good climate and a fertile soil, we ought to be able to raise sufficient for our own use, and to hold the contrary is to discredit the intelligence and enterprise of the people of this country. I am convinced that with proper protection, even in Ontario alone, we could raise all the corn required and at moderate prices. I know something about the importations of corn from Ontario into the province of Quebec, where we do not raise as much as we desire to have. Corn has been laid down in the eastern townships of the province of Quebec, and not at competitive railway points either, at 28½ cents per bushel free of freight, and the wealthy farmer who will complain because he has to pay 28½ cents for corn laid down at his door is not the patriotic citizen that a good and wealthy farmer ought to be. It has been said, with greater force of expression than I am capable of, that free corn would interfere very largely with the price of home-grown grain, and I shall not try to lend my force to that argument because it is too apparent to be denied. There is another item in the resolutions applying to the grain which the distillers use, and on which they are called upon to pay a duty of 7½ cents per bushel on corn imported for their use, but they will have every opportunity of evading payment of this duty. What is there to prevent their going round the province of Ontario and buying up all the Canadian corn and then letting the dealers import from the United States. In that way the Government would lose the duty, and the distillers would receive great benefit from a Government which is supposed to be in favour of temperance and prohibition. Another objection to free corn is that it is calculated to strike a fatal blow at the National Policy. It is calculated to strike a heavy blow at the protective system of this country, which has been of such incalculable benefit to the people in building up our various industries and placing us in an advantageous position amongst the peoples of the world. By protection we have been enabled to advance more rapidly than any other nation in the last eighteen years, notwithstanding what hon. gentlemen opposite may say against the National Policy. Previous to 1878 many petitions went into Parliament from the farmers asking for protection upon breadstuffs, including corn. Their prayer was refused by the Government of that day, but the Government which succeeded under the leadership of the late Sir John Macdonald granted their request, and since then breadstuffs have borne a duty. Now, let me give the House a few figures, which will show the effect that the National Policy has had upon the importation of American breadstuffs. In 1878, when these breadstuffs were imported free of duty, barley, oats, pease, beans, corn, cornmeal, wheat, wheat flour rye and rye flour came into this country from the United States to the amount of $13,446,960. In 1894 that amount was reduced to $1,000,862, showing a difference in favour of the Canadian farmer of $12,446,000. At that rate per year, our protective tariff furnished our farmers in the past eighteen years with a market of over $200,000,000. Let me ask if it was not an advantage to our farming community to have a protective tariff on breadstuffs, when that protection gave them a market to the extent of over $200,000,000 during the time it was in force. Take the article of corn alone. We imported into Canada in 1878 $3,535,619 worth of corn. But after the duty was imposed upon American corn, that importation was reduced to $683,677 in one year, leaving $2,851,742 as the value of the market which our farmers supplied instead of foreign producers. At that rate, this market in eighteen years amounted to about $50,000,000. Was that an advantage to this country? Were not our people better off in having this market for their own home-grown grain than if it were controlled and supplied by a foreign country? Then, take for a moment the article of pork. Up to 1890 we had a tariff for revenue on that article, but in that year our farmers asked for protection and the Government increased the duty upon pork, with this result, that while under the tariff of 1890 we imported $1,458,286 worth, in 1891, after the imposition of the protective duty, the imports were reduced to $309,436, being a reduction in one year of $1,148,850, and at the same time our exports of pork were increased by $3,943,000, making a difference of over $5,000,000 in favour of our farmers owing to the increased trade stimulated by a protective tariff as compared with a tariff for revenue.

One word more in regard to these petitions. These petitions are circulated through the country, they were presented to the Government, and, in 1878, they had the desired effect, and the Government granted the prayer of the farmers. And since that time until the present, there has never been a petition presented to Parliament asking that the duties be taken off breadstuffs; and I think it would be the height of impropriety for the people's representatives to remove the duty in the interest of the farmers, who are not asking for it and who did ask for protection and allow the admission of corn grown in the United States free of duty, where it can be grown so cheaply that they use it to burn. They raised last year about 2,100,000,000 bushels of corn, and it is of the greatest importance to them that they should get a market for their surplus. After the people of Canada have been treated as they have been by the Government of the United States we are asked to concede to the United States a privilege which is of the utmost importance to them and that will be injurious to this country. While I am opposed on general grounds and as a practical question to corn being admitted free of duty, because it comes into competition with the home grown grain of the farmers, and discourage them in an industry in which they ought to be encouraged, there are other important considerations that would induce me to vote against corn being admitted free into this country from the United States. That reason is the attitude of the American people and the American Government in connection with the commercial relations that exist between the two countries. They are not entitled to any consideration of this kind after the unfair treatment we have received at their hands. Since 1847 over a score of applications have been made by the leading men of this country to the Government of the United States for reciprocal trade regulations between us, but in no case except one have the natural products of Canadian soil been admitted into the United States free of duty, and in that exceptional case they repealed the duty as soon as they could legally do it. Why did they do this? They can tell their own story. It was not so much because they cared for the favour that they thought they were doing to the people of Canada that they withheld commercial treaties from Canada. But they prevented the people of Canada from sending into that country the produce of their soil, they denied us free access to their markets thinking that they could thereby force us into annexation, thinking that they could thereby compel Canada to renounce its allegiance to the British Crown and become part and parcel of the American union. As proof of this I will take a few moments of the time of this House to read some of the expressions of sentiment by the leading men of the United States. In 1891, James G. Blaine, who was then Secretary of State for the United States, in answer to a letter which was written to him, made this statement:

There are no negotiations whatever on foot for a reciprocity treaty with Canada, and you may be assured that no scheme for reciprocity with the Dominion, confined to natural products, will be entertained by this Government.

Speaking at Calais, Maine, in August, 1888, Mr. Blaine said:

Beyond the frontier, across that river, our neighbours choose another Government, another allegiance. They are subjects of Queen Victoria; they are loyal to Her Majesty. They live under a foreign flag. They do exactly as they have a right to do. I neither dispute their right nor envy their situation. It is their right to choose for themselves, as it is our right to choose for ourselves. But I am opposed, teetotally opposed, to give to the Canadian the sentimental satisfaction of waving the British flag, paying British taxes, and the actual cash remuneration of American markets. They cannot have both at the same time. If they come with us, they can have what we have, but it is an absolute wrong against the rights of American citizens, that millions of men who hold the United States no allegiance, who have no part nor lot with us, who are not of us, but choose to be foreign to us—it is an absolute wrong for a Democratic Congress to say that they shall have exactly the same share in our markets and the same privileges of trade under our flag that we have.

And here is a statement made by President Lane, of the Boston Merchant's Association, a few years ago:

Our Liberal friends, Fielding and Longley, of Nova Scotia; Davies, of Prince Edward Island; Mercier and Laurier, of Quebec; Cartwright, of Ontario, and a host beside, look to us, the people of the United States, for "the sign by which they shall conquer." Can we deny them?

The whole region of Canada will, when this commercial union is established, become as if she were so many vast territories added to our domain, and up and down a continent the world will see the result of an unrestricted trade in all that continent produces, natural or manufactured.

There was an answer given to that by an hon. gentleman who is in this House tonight, who said:

Briefly, Sir, if this project can be carried out, it will mean for you the addition of half a continent for commercial purposes and the creation of a complete new tier of northern states, with an enormous area of unoccupied fertile land, with very great mineral resources, with a present population of some 5,000,000, but with a capacity of maintaining fully 50,000,000 and the certainty (in such a contingency) of a very rapid increase, which population—and I hold this is no small matter—is essentially in character the same as your own, with much the same habits, customs, and prejudices even.

An hon. MEMBER. Who said that?

Mr. MOORE. I think it is set down to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright). I have not much fault to find with the sentiment.

Mr. Blaine said again :

If Canadians want to get the advantage of the American markets, it must be by becoming American citizens.

And General Benjamin F. Butler said :

Canada is blubbering for a reciprocity treaty. Let her blubber until she is willing to join the union.

Senator Carlisle said :

I am in favour of commercial union, because it will bring Canada under our flag.

Senator Depew said :

I am in favour of it because it will advance the stars and stripes from Niagara Falls to the North Pole.

Mr. Bullock, the President of the Chamber of Commerce of Boston, said :

The ready road to reciprocity with our neighbours—to accept Sir Richard Cartwright as senator from the state of Ontario.

But we do not want to spare him from this country. The leader of the present Government, Mr. Laurier, said at the Liberal banquet in Montreal :

The policy of the Liberal party can be expressed in two words—unrestricted reciprocity with the United States.

And he said also “he hoped to be able to conciliate the United States if there was a change of Government.”

Now, it takes all that Canada has to give, if it takes all these concessions to conciliate the United States and make them friendly to this country. I think we had better try to get along without the United States and depend more upon our own resources and upon our own energy. We have the carrying out of that policy in the Alien Labour Bill, and in yesterday's “Witness” I find a despatch from Washington, that Senator Tillman, a man of great prominence in the United States, has given notice of an amendment that he will offer to the tariff Bill providing for a head tax of $100 on all immigrants to the United States. The amendment also makes it a misdemeanour punishable by a fine and imprisonment for a person to enter the United States to labour without intending to become a citizen.

Why, Sir, should such become law, it would take a hundred dollars to get a man from Canada into the United States. I believe that, according to their laws, they admit hogs into the United States very much cheaper than they do one of the citizens of this country. We find that they are not commercially friendly to this country, and I hope the time is past when we shall get down upon our knees and supplicate them for commercial favours that they have refused us for the last fifty years, with only one exception. In passing this Alien Labour Bill which would exclude Canadians from that country, they take them by the shoulders and turn them around and thrust them back across the line unless they will renounce their allegiance to their queen and country. They have forgotten that less than two years ago when they were trying to raise a large amount of gold, they borrowed from this country, from our banking institutions, $25,000,000. They have forgotten more than that, they have forgotten that in the valuation of the United States which amounted to $65,000,000,000 according to the census of 1890, 10 per cent and more of that value was supplied by English capitalists. Notwithstanding that, they will take a subject of the British Crown who wants to enter that country, by the collar and thrust him back across the line, unless he is willing to forswear his allegiance and become a citizen of the United States. More than that, they have forgotten that during their civil war, 40,000 brave Canadian sons enlisted in the American army to help preserve the union, when it was attacked by the enemies of the stars and stripes. They have forgotten that 20,000 of Canada's brave sons perished upon the battlefield or in their hospitals, while in the service of the United States government; and still they will take Canadians by the collar and thrust them back when they attempt to enter that country. I believe, Sir, it is time for us to wake up and to show them that the people of Canada are a self-reliant people. Let us prove to them that though the United States may raise their tariff from nadir to zenith, so high that the birds cannot fly over it, still we can exist, and Canada prosper without any commercial favours from the people of that country. We have, Sir, another reason, we have a country as great as the United States, we have a country whose climate is as good and soil as fertile. We have greater wealth in our forests, we have greater wealth in our fisheries, and when the mines of this country are more developed, I think it will not take very long to convince the people of the United States, aye, and of the whole world, that we have as great a quantity of the precious metals as any country under the sun. But we have more than that, we have five millions of Canadians, an enterprising people, who will compare more than favourably with the same number of inhabitants of the United States. It is time for us to assert our commercial independence and to show the people of the United States that we are made of stuff that cannot be brow-beaten. More than that, we can tell them that we belong to the grandest Empire under the sun, without parallel amongst the nations of the world, an Empire that rules over one-sixth of the earth's surface, and controls one-third of its commerce. More than that, we are soon to celebrate the Diamond Jubilee of a Queen who stands at the head of all earthly sovereigns, and reigns over the greatest and grandest Empire that the world has ever known.

Mr. STENSON. I had not intended to take any part in this discussion, thinking that it should be left to the old and experienced members, and particularly to practical farmers. But since my hon. friend from Stanstead (Mr. Moore) has given us his idea with regard to free corn, I must say that my first feeling was one of immense surprise. I think my hon. friend from Stanstead is the only representative from that section of the country who is against free corn. Now, Mr. Chairman, during my election, the question of free corn was discussed, and the hon. member for Stanstead will perhaps be surprised to hear that it was my adversary, the National Policy man, who brought up the question and declared that he was in favour of free corn. In 1894, I think it was, the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope), who represents a fine farming constituency, was in favour of free corn, and pressed it upon the Conservative Government, and believed that he had some chance of success. But his opinion, and the opinions of all the other members from my section of the country, with the exception of the hon. member for Stanstead, are certainly in favour of free corn, because we are a dairying community, and a dairying community wants free corn. But I can easily understand now why the hon. member from Stanstead is against free corn; he has given us the secret which impels him to oppose anything free. In the first place, it would be a shame to admit that, in our immense country, we cannot raise corn enough.

An hon. MEMBER. We do not raise cotton, either.

Mr. STENSON. Well, I will just mark that down, that if it is a shame not to be able to raise corn, it is perhaps just as big a shame not to be able to raise cotton.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. STENSON. Why not, what is the difference? Is it not the climate that makes the difference? I think that you will admit that it is the climate, and if that is the cause, then it is no shame for us not to have a climate suitable for raising corn, particularly as our friends to the south of us are raising corn for us, and raise it very cheaply, if we only will give up this National Policy and not make it dear by our own fault. More than that, Mr. Chairman, the Government, it is said, will raise less duty if we allow this corn in free, because our farmers will furnish their corn to the distillers. Well, let our farmers furnish corn to the distillers and get all the benefit that they can out of it; but if the Controller of Customs is not clever enough to prevent them from cheating him out of the duty, then we will call upon him to be more attentive to his business the next time. But the great trouble with the member for Stanstead is that it will be a blow at the National Policy. Now, I have no sympathy with him in that feeling, that is no reason why I should be against the admission of free corn. On the contrary, if it proves to be a blow against the National Policy, that is one of the reasons why I should be glad to see corn admitted free. It will be a mortal stroke to the National Policy, which will die in the due course of time. On the other hand, I do not mean to say that we want to kill it outright at present, but the time will come when this protective tariff must be done away with.

Mr. CLANCY. Do you want oats free?

Mr. STENSON. We are on corn just now, we will be satisfied if corn is admitted free. Now, what is the reason of all this patriotic display of eloquence on the part of my hon. friend from Stanstead about the attitude of the Americans? Why, Sir, the hon. gentleman appears to think that it is just to please our friends across the line that we want corn to come in free. We have not the slightest desire to please them at our expense; on the contrary, we want that corn free. Who is it that wants the corn? The farmers want the corn; they want to use the corn; they are the ones who use the corn. I will treat the question in a moment in a more serious manner, after we get through with the patriotic part of it. Not only has this corn brought us into a discussion of annexation and of what all the presidents and all the would-be presidents of the United States said, but we have been reminded that 40,000 of our brave Canadian lads went over there and fought for those Americans. And we have been asked to believe by the hon. member that if these 40,000 had not gone over the stars and stripes would have been swept off the face of the earth. At all events, these 40,000 were brave men. After we get a little more numerous, and after we are allowed to bring in their corn free, we will send them enough to bring them over and annex them to us. We will send 400,000 or 500,000 of our boys to annex them instead of them annexing us. An hon. member made the assertion that there were 7,000,000 bushels of corn imported into Canada in a certain year. If that were so, what became of the statement that only one-fifth of the farmers of Canada wanted this corn? It has been said that only two out of ten farmers wanted corn for fattening purposes. It struck me that this was a most remarkable statement to make that only one-fifth of the farmers wanted free corn. One-fifth out of 7,000 would give us 1,400 farmers for 7,000,000 bushels of corn, or to each farmer 5,000 bushels. This is a little too much and there must be a mistake in the hon. gentleman's calculation. It may be that there are only two out of ten who fatten cattle, but that is no reason for believing that there are not a great many other farmers who use corn, not to fatten cattle but in dairying, and who require that corn to fatten their pork and to raise their young cattle. When we could send our young cattle to England, when there was no embargo on them, it was not so necessary as it is now to have them fattened. But at present we cannot go on with that business, as it is necessary that they should be slaughtered upon their arrival in Great Britain. Therefore, we must fatten them in this country. In my part of the country there is not one farmer out of ten who will not say that he wants free corn as cheap as he can get it to fatten their cattle and raise their young stock. I am going to be brief because I expect that there will be some more experienced and older members to take this question up. But I will just mention this fact that our exports in grain are not increasing, and our exports in beef are increasing. What we want to increase more than this is our exports of butter and cheese and to succeed in dairying we want to be permitted to get that corn in free. Some hon. gentlemen are afraid that this is going to spoil the quality of our pork. For the information of these hon. gentlemen I will say that there is not a farmer in my section who would pretend to fatten his pork wholly upon corn. It is merely an accessory to the mixed feed of the cattle and hogs. There is not one farmer in my section who would pretend to fatten hogs wholly on corn and there is not one out of one hundred who would not be in favour of getting free corn.

Mr. TISDALE. So far I have not found any part of the tariff brought before the House but what has been fully discussed by gentlemen upon both sides of the House to give the House and the country every view that might possibly be expressed. Upon this occasion I apprehend the discussion has been somewhat full, but, at the same time, there are some circumstances connected with this question of free corn that, representing, as I do, an agricultural constituency, I would feel that I was somewhat short in my duty even at this late hour of the session if I did not give expression to the sentiments that I believe affect my constituents. In doing so, and before I enter upon this particular question I desire to say this, that, so far as this Government, composed as it is of gentlemen opposed to me in politics, and opposed to the Government and the party that I have during the time I have been in the House supported, have risen above any question of party or have displayed the courage necessary to a renunciation of principles whatever hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House may have said—whenever they do so for the benefit of this country. I want to congratulate them. It takes a great deal of courage for hon. gentlemen belonging to any party or leading any party, to take a course different, perhaps, on any occasion, to that which they advocated before, and I am one of those though identified with party and though believing that party government in this country is the best government, on the whole, that we can get, commend the courage of those who rise above any question of party when they have responsibility upon their shoulders and when they believe that their course is the best in the interest of the country. Now, I want to say, on this point, that, notwithstanding that I am opposed to them, notwithstanding that I am identified with a party opposed to them; insofar as they do this they shall have my support whether my party agree with me or not. With that short introduction, I will proceed to the question. I might have made it more lengthened if it were not that I do not want, for one moment, to detain the committee or to prolong the session of this House which I think, with opportunities all proper criticism should be closed as soon as possible, in the interest, not only of the members of this House, but of the country. I want to draw attention for a few moments to this important question, and in doing it I want to say that I am against this proposal of free corn, and that I agree with the views expressed by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). I will even go with my hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) in saying, that in return for a proper consideration we should admit corn free of duty from the United States, though I might differ with him as to what would be a proper consideration, and I am entirely in accord with him, that this policy is unjustifiable when we get no reciprocal return for it. In view of the fact that the hon. member for the north riding of Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), in asserting his duty as the representative of the people, joins issue with his party on this question, I would be derelict in my duty, if I, elected as a Conservative, did not express my opinion. I take issue with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Stenson) who has just spoken, and who represents an agricultural constituency, when he says, that 100 to one of the farmers of the country are in favour of free corn, and I tell him that, on the contrary, there is not one in a hundred who approve of this proposal of the Government. Since I have had the honour of a seat in this House, I have always shown that I was prepared to go against the individual interests of my riding, if the interests of South Norfolk were antagonistic to the interests of the Dominion as a whole. In the present instance, Sir, I contend that the interests of my constituents and the interests of the farming population of Canada generally, are identical, and these interests are opposed to free corn. Since these gentlemen opposite got into power I am more hopeful of the future of Canada, than I was before, judging from their tactics when in Opposition. According to our light, and honest convictions, as proved yesterday, nearly all the members of the Conservative party stood up to support a proposition made by the Government, while 20 or 30 of their own supporters opposed them. That, Sir, is a proof that the Conservative party in Opposition are willing to advocate any measures, no matter from what party they come, that we believe to be in the best interests of Canada. I appeal to hon. gentlemen opposite to live up to the spirit evinced by the Conservative members of this House. This policy proposed by the Government does not hit at Indian corn alone, but it means an injury to all the coarse grains grown by the farmers of this Dominion. Our oats, our inferior grades of barley, our pease, and other such grains will be struck at by free corn. In my opinion it means the loss of millions of dollars to the farmers of Canada, and in all sincerity I ask the Government to reconsider their position and to retrace their steps. If this should come to a vote, I appeal to the Liberal members of this House, who represent constituencies more largely interested in this question than the people of North Norfolk; I ask them to emulate the example of my hon. confrère (Mr. Charlton), and to oppose free corn, if they believe it to be for the benefit of Canada they should do so. We see here to-night, the hon. member (Mr. Charlton), who always stands by his party in season, and sometimes, as we on this side of the House think, out of season; we see him fearlessly express his opinions on this question. As far back as 1891 I said, that if the Liberal party could only get over their platform speeches, if they could only agree to endorse the principle of protection to Canadian industries, and protection of Canadian farmers, they would then have a chance to attain power, and to remain in power after they did attain it. I state here to-night with all the responsibility that attaches to the statement, that I am more interested in the progress and development of Canada than I am in the welfare of the Conservative party. I am a protectionist, a moderate protectionist, and representing an agricultural constituency, I have never made any secret of it. I believe that the farmers of Canada should be protected, and I am glad to say that with the exception of the matter of free corn, the present Government are protecting the farmers upon their products. I shall not charge hon. gentlemen opposite with adopting the Conservative policy. I do not care whether it is ours or theirs, so long as it is a policy that will tend to make Canada, in this Jubilee year, the right arm of the British Empire as she undoubtedly is, I will support that policy. I will not charge hon. gentlemen opposite with stealing our clothes, but so long as they protect our farming and manufacturing industries I will support them in that. I tell hon. gentlemen opposite, that if they wish to pursue a policy which will be beneficial to the farmers of this country, they will strike this item out of the tariff and restore the duty on corn to what it was before. I make this appeal to them in very good company, from a Liberal standpoint, when my hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) makes the same appeal. Between the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) and myself many sharp passages have occurred in the past, but I compliment him on the stand he has taken in this matter. I shall express publicly, as I have privately, the opinion that hon. gentlemen opposite are in a position to convince the people of the United States on certain questions which we on this side of the House, probably, could not convince them on. I am not going to say any unpleasant things in regard to what they have done in the past or in regard to what we claim we are doing. They have had the courage to show the American people the position in which we stand. I agree with them that it would be a calamity to have any disturbance with the people of that great republic. As we have always said on this side of the House, and as I have always strongly felt, it is in the best interest of this country and in the best interest of the Empire, that we should live on the best relations we can with our neighbours to the south, but at the same time we should let them understand that they cannot, by unfriendly legislation or unfriendly talk or threats, intimidate a free people like the people of Canada. Hon. gentlemen opposite have had an opportunity—and I congratulate them upon taking advantage of that opportunity—for showing the American people that the people of Canada, Reformers and Conservatives alike, though we are only 5,000,000 to 65,000,000, are a people who, with the blood of two courageous races, the Norman and the Anglo-Saxon, in their veins, will not be intimidated or driven. I congratulate them, and I wish to say to the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) that I am glad to stand side by side with him in this matter, and I will follow in the footsteps of the proposition he makes, which I believe to be for the best interests of this country. I say the time is opportune for letting the American people know that unless we get a good consideration in return, we are not going to open our doors to free corn. This question is a business question; and I wish to say to the hon. member for North Norfolk that as a Conservative I am prepared, against every man on this side of the House if necessary—though I do not think it would be necessary—to join with him in saying that when the American people will give us a fair equivalent, we shall be willing to make concessions to them. I say to hon. gentlemen opposite—and I am giving them this advice against the interests of my party—that the best politics they can adopt for keeping themselves in power is to join in the sentiments the hon. member for North Norfolk has expressed. I know these Americans ; I have had associations with them ; and if they find that you truckle to them, or that you are not alive to your own interests, they will treat you as they think you ought to be treated ; but if you show them that you are ready, in a commercial sense, to deal blows to them if they deal blows to you, they will respect you. I am glad to oppose this motion. In this crisis of our history, I say the Liberal party should join with us, and with the hon. member for North Norfolk in saying to the United States : " We do not wish to get anything from you for which we do not give you a fair equivalent ; if you want your people to come into our country to labour, as all free people should, we want our people to have the same right in your country ; we are a great, broadminded British people, who do not want any compulsion, and if you attempt to put compulsion upon us, you will find that the spirit of the French as well as the English will revolt against it, and that you cannot compel us by that sort of conduct." I say I am very glad to see the hon. member for North Norfolk take the position he has taken to-night, Liberal as he is ; and many of my party have thought him extremely Liberal. But I am glad to see that modern Liberalism, Liberalism in power, Liberalism under the responsibilities which this side of the House had for eighteen years, is prepared to say to the United States : " Unless you consider us, we must in our own self-defence consider ourselves." One word as to the largeness of this issue. I do not want to quote statistics. Hon. members of this House on both sides are well posted on this matter, because I take for granted that they read the various statistics, and understand the importance of the question of Indian corn as well as I do. But in that question is involved the question of all our coarse grains ; and the question is whether we are going to have the cheap corn of the western states, which is almost given away, coming into Canada and driving out not only our Indian corn, but our other coarse grain. Therefore I protest against this motion as against the spirit of the tariff which hon. gentlemen have brought down. I compliment them on the courage which they have shown in protecting the interests of the farmers to the extent to which they have done : and I appeal to them to rise above party feelings, as I have tried to do, and to follow the example set by the hon. member who represents the North Riding of my county. I appeal to them in their own interests, because I would rather see them continue in power than see the best interests of this country suffer even temporarily by a mistaken action on their part on this important question.

Mr. CHRISTIE. I do not intend to detain the House more than a single moment. I simply desire to state that the farmers of my county are almost a unit in favour of free corn. I have not yet met one man in my county who has said a single word in opposition to it. They look upon this feature of the tariff as a great boon. Most of our farmers depend on the raising of stock and in making butter and cheese, and they find it desirable that they should get this cheap corn. They look upon it as a raw material, and they sell their product and make money by the exchange. I feel confident that the farmers of my county would consider it a great boon if this proposal carried. I shall not longer detain this House, but felt it was my duty, on behalf of my constituents, to tell the House that they are in favour of free corn. At a public meeting held in my constituency for the special purpose of discussing this question, there was only one individual, and he was not a farmer, who dissented from the otherwise unanimous expression of opinion in favour of placing corn upon the free list.

Mr. McMILLAN. In rising to take a hand in this important debate, one of the most important that can engage the attention of this House, I wish to say at the outset that the farmers of this country stand pitted against the farmers of the rest of the world, and the farmers who can produce at the cheapest rate are those who will best succeed in the markets of the world. Let me say that I protest against party feeling being introduced into a discussion of this kind, and express my regret that a motion of such magnitude and importance to the people of this country, cannot be discussed except in a party spirit. We, the farmers of Canada, stand at a great disadvantage in having to feed our cattle upon the coarse grains of our own country, and I think before I am through that I shall give such evidence in favour of admitting corn duty free that must convince any impartial member of this House, and that certainly cannot possibly be questioned. As far as Indian corn is concerned, although the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) has stated that Ontario raises a sufficient quantity for her own use, his statement is not borne out by the facts, because when we look into the Trade and Navigation Returns, we find that during the last year of which we have a report over 3,000,000 bushels of Indian corn were imported into this country and only 9,000 bushels exported. It is evident from those figures that Canada does not raise sufficient corn for her own use. The farmers of this country are as intelligent as those of any other country in the civilized world, and know best what is in their own interests. It has been said that we can successfully raise corn in almost every county of Ontario. Such is not the case. In the very county

I represent, one of the largest farming counties in the province of Ontario, and the one which sends the largest amount of cattle to the English market, we cannot successfully raise corn so as to ripen sufficiently to be made into meal, but we can raise ensilage and that very successfully. This talk about free corn displacing our coarse grains and reducing the prices is not at all borne out by the facts. Why, hon. gentlemen opposite could not have taken a better succession of years than they did to show the contrary. They took the years from 1878 to 1881 and they pointed to the fact that in 1878, 8,000,000 bushels of corn were imported into this country for home consumption. Well, what was the condition with respect to coarse grains during that year? They neglected to go to the root of their own argument and show that the prices of our coarse grains were lowered by the large quantities imported of Indian corn. Why, when the largest amount of Indian corn was brought into this country and entered for consumption was the year when our coarse grains brought the highest prices. I can prove that as I have done it already. I am happy to be able to state that there is not a single farmer of standing who has risen in this House and opposed free corn. It is all very well for the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Moore), who is a manufacturer, to tell us how the poor farmer would be benefited and how he would be injured. Why does he not take the same position with regard to cotton that he does with regard to corn? Why does he not oppose the admission of cotton free of duty? He does not because it is the raw material of his manufactures and cannot be raised in Canada. In like manner corn is the raw material of the farmer and cannot be raised to a sufficient amount in Canada. To be consistent, therefore, the hon. member for Stanstead ought to support this motion to allow corn in free of duty. In 1878, when we imported 8,000,000 bushels of corn, what was the result with respect to our coarse grains? There is a report in the library and I know that my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) if he thought that report would have borne out his contention, would have quoted it in this House long ago because he must have read it. But he knows well that it will not bear out the argument he has submitted to this House regarding the reduction in prices of our coarse grain, which, he says, is bound to follow the importation of a large quantity of Indian corn. In 1878 we got 11¼ cents more per bushel for our oats than the price ruling in Chicago. We also got for our barley 15 cents more per bushel than the Chicago price, and in that year, which was two years before the National Policy was introduced, we imported 8,000,000 bushels of corn. Two years later, in 1881, when the duty was put on, and we imported only

2,000,000 bushels, the price of oats in Toronto was only 2 cents per bushel over the price in Chicago, and barley, instead of being 15 cents higher in Canada than in Chicago, as it was in 1878, was 17 cents lower, although in 1881 we imported a much smaller quantity of corn. This shows clearly that the importation of a large quantity of corn did not lower the prices of our coarse grains. But let us take an international view of this question, and we must see that if the American corn does not come to Canada, it will meet our coarse grains in the British markets. In case, however, one year should not be deemed sufficient to prove an argument of that description, let me take the five years before the National Policy was imposed, and when we consumed on an average 5,581,000 bushels of Indian corn per year. What was the result as regards our coarse grains during that period? Why, our oats were selling 2½ cents higher than after the National Policy was imposed and when our consumption of corn was reduced to an average of 1,321,000 bushels per year. Our barley was selling at an average of 75 cents per bushel during the five years before the National Policy was imposed, while it was only 71 cents on an average three years later, showing conclusively that the argument of hon. gentlemen opposite with respect to the effect of the importation of Indian corn free on the prices of our coarse grains is not borne out by the facts. I defy any one of these hon. gentlemen to show that such was the effect, and I point them to this report which I have mentioned, and which was got up for the very purpose of showing the effect the National Policy had upon the agricultural industries of the Dominion. And it showed the very reverse of what those who had the commission appointed expected that it would show. I take a bushel of fall wheat, a bushel of oats, a bushel of barley, a ton of hay, a ton of straw, a pound of wool, and 100 pounds of pork. For all these in October a year before the National Policy, we received $41.28. Three years afterwards for the same articles we received only $31.28. This shows that the National Policy did not benefit the farmers by improving the prices of their products. As a farmer, I state positively that we can produce better and we can do better when we get Indian corn to assist in our feeding. Let me give a statement that was made by one of the largest exporters of cattle in the province of Ontario. The question has often been asked why it is that beef cattle from the United States sell at higher prices in the British market than the Canadian cattle do. Let me give the opinion of one of the best known exporters in Canada:

The abolition of the duty on corn would be one of the greatest blessings to the farmers that I know of. The duty was supposed to protect Canadian oats, but if a farmer here was able to get feeding corn at, say, 40 cents a bushel, there would be no better grains for fattening purposes. The corn-fed American bullock from the west will dress 100 pounds of beef more than on but bullock of the live weight. Because of that, Canadian exporters are greatly handicapped in the English market, since the American exporter practically lands 100 pounds of beef free by the difference in the cattle; he has a start of $6 or $7 on us to commence with.

There is a statement that shows that the American farmer in the west feeding his bullocks entirely upon corn has an advantage over us of $7 per animal—that is, of 100 pounds of dressed beef—in the British market. I dare any gentleman to contradict that statement. I am prepared to show by the results of experiments that corn is one of the very best feeds that can be obtained. The facts that I shall quote are established by experiment, and they are bald official statements of results. Gentlemen may make statements and try to set forth their ideas in a very forcible manner that by withdrawing Indian corn it gives the farmer market for his coarse grains, but it will have the same effect as had the duty on wheat when it fell in Canada 48 cents, while it only fell 24 cents in the United States. I have here the statement of results of a few experiments made with respect to feeding animals with different grains. The first I shall quote are the results of an experiment made at the Guelph Agricultural College in the year 1881-82. It was an experiment of feeding pease, oats and corn. When corn was the principal feed it took 48-10th pounds of feed to increase the weight of the animal a single pound; when pease were the main feed, it took 52-10th pounds of feed to a pound to the weight of the animal, or nearly half a pound more than in the case of corn. In oats it took 58-10th pounds. Estimating them all at 1 cent per pound, corn comes out ahead of all the others. In the case of a single animal the cost of feed was: corn, $20.75; pease, $22.50, and oats, $25.10. Thus you see that in the feeding of an animal during the winter there was a saving of $1.75 in feeding corn as against pease, and $4.35 in feeding pease as against corn. But when you take a hundred of cattle you find that the result shows that $1.75 in favour of corn as against pease, and $4.25 as against oats. Will it not, then, pay any farmer in Canada who intends to feed animals, to sell a portion of his own coarse grains and purchase corn to supplement his feed? Lest I forget it, let me say that no farmer who knows about the feeding will feed hogs with corn and pease alone, but I will show that corn feed is the best staple feed, if the experiments can be depended upon. In 1883-84 an experiment was made at the Ontario Agricultural College with twenty-one head of cattle. With cornmeal as feed it took feed to the value of 8 cents to increase the live weight of the animal one single pound. What pease were used it took 11½ cents worth of feed, and when oats were used it took 10½ cents worth, showing again conclusively that corn is the most profitable and cheapest food that we can use. And, remember, these experiments took place when there was a duty on corn of 7½ cents, and all the other grains were free. This is not a fair statement of what the results would be with corn coming into this country free of duty. Now, we were told that there was not a single county in Ontario in which the farmers were willing to have free corn. We have heard from one or two of them to-night. The statement was made here in the name of the people of Frontenac that only a few butchers and millers would benefit by free corn. But I have a statement from the Farmers' Institute of the county of Frontenac in which the statement was made that the people to be benefited were the lumbermen. And was this motion brought up by a farmer? No; it was brought up by a medical gentleman, but the farmers sat on him by an overwhelming majority, and voted that corn should come in free. Now, I have here the report of an experiment made by Prof. Robertson at the Agricultural College in Guelph in relation to the fattening of hogs. He experimented with feeding on cornmeal and salt, barley-meal, middlings and salt, pease-meal and salt, middlings, middlings and rape ensilage. And how did the experiment come out? I will just give the statement from the official report:

On August 9th, 16 hogs were separated into three pens, containing 6, 5 and 5, respectively. They were divided to be as near alike as possible in age, size and breeding. None of them were pure breed, though most of them showed Berkshire or Chester white points. They were all fed on middlings only, with salt and water, and were allowed as much as they could eat, being fed three times a day. The middlings were mixed with the cold water in the troughs immediately before the time of feeding.

This was to put the animals in an equal condition before the experiment commenced. Now, we have an experiment which was tried from the 30th of September to the 12th of October, with the result that it took 4.74 pounds of cornmeal to increase the weight on an animal a single pound; it took 4.84 pounds of pease-meal to increase the live weight of an animal one pound; and it took 4.57 pounds of barley and middlings to increase the weight of an animal one pound. Now, after these animals had been fattened they were slaughtered. After they were slaughtered they were all examined, and what was the result of that examination? Why, Sir, as far as colour was concerned:

One hog of each lot was cut through in front of the shoulders, behind the shoulders and in front of the ham. It was intended to photograph these sections, had the difference between the proportions of fat and lean from the different kinds of feed been decidedly apparent. The difference would not have been evident to the eye from an exact photograph. A few of the notes made on the spot are transcribed here :

Cornmeal fed.—Lean meat, rather brighter than the others ; equal to the pease-meal fed in firmness and proportion of fat and lean ; lard more chalky in shade than others.

Pease-meal fed.—The colour of the lean meat hardly so bright as the cornmeal fed.

Barley-meal and middlings fed.—Colour of the lean meat rather pale ; larger proportion of lean to fat than in the corn and pease-meal fed ; flesh and fat softer in body than the two other lots.

Now, with respect to the shrinkage. The middlings shrank from the weight of the live animal to dressed weight, 14.3 per cent. The weight of the pease-meal fed animals shrank 17 per cent ; the weight of the corn fed animal shrank 14.1 per cent, showing that corn produced a more solid pork, and that the pork had a better colour, and that it was equal in every respect to corn fed pork. Let me say that I believe that it is not profitable to feed pork upon either pease-meal, or corn, or middlings, alone. I have another experiment, although it does not bear directly upon the question of free corn, but it shows how false an idea it is to feed hogs even upon corn alone. This is an experiment that was made at the farm at Guelph in 1895, and I give this for the benefit of farmers generally to show how much more cheaply hogs can be fed upon a little meal and a large quantity of roots, than upon meal alone, of any description.

Twenty-four hogs were bought in November, 1895, price paid, $31.00 ; cost of food, $99.33 ; total cost of hogs and food, $130.33. When sold they weighed 4,841 pounds, they were sold for $3.85 per hundred, weighing each an average of 200 pounds ; so there was a gain of $35.00. The cost of the peas was $30, the cost of the milk was $4, and the cost of the roots was $59.29. There are 10 pounds of roots fed to these animals for every pound of grain that was fed. That corresponds with my own experience in feeding. The pork was produced at 2.69 cents per pound. I have another experiment that was made at this farm at Ottawa. Dr. Saunders came before us a few weeks ago and gave a statement with respect to hogs fed upon pease-meal and hogs fed upon corn meal alone ; and he shows that when the hogs were fed upon pea meal milk it required 3½ cents per pound to increase the live weight of the animal a single pound, valuing the peas at 30 cents per bushel. Then he comes to hogs fed upon nothing but corn, water and salt, he values the corn at 45 cents a bushel. I hold that is not a fair calculation yet he shows that corn at 45 cents a bushel produced pork at 3½ cents as against 3½ cents with pease-meal and milk. This shows conclusively that corn is one of the very best possible foods that we can have as food for animals. After one of the experiments made at the Experimental Farm at Guelph, there is a statement in the sessional papers made by the individual who gave the report :

There is, possibly, no other form of coarse grain known to the civilized world that holds such an important place for this one for man and animals. It is a pity that Canada cannot grow enough, or even a tenth, for herself. We can produce plenty of its fodder, but proportionally little of its grain, as you know. At the same time, we have been getting it at less price, pound for pound, than our own peas, and, as it is a growing fact that as long as any kind of grain can be got for 1 cent per pound, it will pay to feed cattle upon it.

That is the case with respect to corn in Canada to-day. We cannot grow a sufficient amount for our own use. The farmers of the Dominion of Canada have to come in competition with the farmers of the western states who use free corn, and they have been able to purchase our stock animals. The British farmers were able to purchase our stock animals and take them to the British market, feed them largely upon Indian corn which they had got from the eastern countries and from the United States, and beat Canadians in their own market, on account of buying free corn. The Americans do the same to-day. They have been purchasing our stock steers during the last fall and taking them across and feeding them upon corn, and beating us with our own animals again. We cannot raise a sufficient amount of corn. I have shown that pork could be raised 3 cents per pound cheaper when fed on corn, that beef could be raised 3 cents a pound cheaper, and pork about 1½ cents cheaper ; then why not give the farmers the advantage of that ? Because the farmers of Canada cannot raise a sufficient amount of corn. You may say that the interests of those who take the lead in feeding, are not identical with the interests of the general farmer in Canada. I ask any sensible farmer if it is wise for the Government to encourage the export of coarse grains from the country. I say the farmer that is succeeding best to-day is the one that is using all his coarse grains, and putting them into beef, and mutton, and other products, and sending them into the British market. The farmer can get a bushel of corn at the present time for 27½ cents as against a bushel of oats 25 cents. We know that pound for pound corn is better feed than oats. That ought to be evident enough to any gentleman that will reason upon the subject. Did I not show in this House in 1895 that oats in the United States for thirteen years had brought a higher price than in Canada ? Now, if the coarse grains of the Americans, with all their millions of bushels of corn, as we have been told, are not brought below the value of Canada coarse grain, what harm can it do us to have free corn when we have to compete against the millions of bushels of Indian corn where it is so plentiful that it has been used for fuel? Why should we be afraid? If the farmer has got a hundred bushels of oats, and a hundred bushels of pease for feeding, it would benefit him to sell 50 bushels of his oats or 50 bushels of his pease, and put the money into corn, and he will get an increased quantity, and a great deal better food than he otherwise could. If we are going to keep our own on the British market with our beef and our pork products, we must be placed in a position to get the very cheapest food we can. Then if corn is the cheapest food we can get, I say it is in the interest of the farmer of Canada to have his corn free. I see an hon. gentleman opposite shaking his head. He is not a practical farmer himself, he knows nothing about it, he has never tested it. There has never been a practical farmer in this House who has tested the question, that has raised his voice against free corn. It has been said that my interest is antagonistic to the interest of the farmer. I say it is not. If in no other way I am advancing the interest of the farmer because I am buying the animals that he will not feed, and great value is attached to the home market. If we had cheap feed in the shape of corn and coarse grains I am convinced that many more farmers would go into the feeding of animals. They are not in the business because they found that it did not pay to feed, but if we had large quantities of coarse grain, it could be profitably carried on. Give them free corn and you will find that a large proportion of the farmers of Ontario and of this Dominion will go into the business of feeding. We are told that every bushel of corn sent into this country displaces just so much of the product of the Canadian farmer, but that statement is not borne out in the face of the fact that we are importing over 3,000,000 bushels of corn more than we are growing. Corn is a crop that we cannot successfully grow. I hold that it is the duty of this Government to take into consideration the best means of promoting the agricultural industry and of encouraging production in the dairy line. We know that the farmer now sells his coarse grains as well as the few animals that he has whereas if he could get corn cheaply to mix with his coarse grains he would keep his stockers and he would find feeding a profitable business. If we had free corn it would encourage the enterprise of the farmers of Canada and induce them to go more extensively into the production of butter and cheese. An hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island stated that they could raise corn in their province just as well as in any province in Canada. If they can do that they have nothing to fear, with the long haul that the American corn is subjected to before it can be placed on their island. They have nothing to fear from corn from the United States. To give them free corn would be one of the greatest benefits that the Government could confer upon the farmers of this Dominion. It would be an object lesson to many farmers who now sell their coarse grains and who would be enabled to produce a cheaper and better article to be placed on the British market and derive a mead of prosperity that they cannot hope to get without this benefit being conferred upon them. Every hon. gentleman in this House admits that upon the success of the farmers rests the foundation of the success of this Dominion and that the industry of feeding cattle and hogs and producing butter and cheese is one that must be fostered in this country and one which could not be better fostered than by giving us free corn.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, I shall not detain the House but a very few moments at this very late stage of the session nor shall I enter upon the discussion of this question on the ground that was taken by the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). It is a distinct part of the question of the fiscal policy of Canada whether we shall put a defensive tariff against the United States, or whether a duty should be placed upon corn or removed from corn. I shall therefore not enter upon that branch of the discussion at all, but confine myself to the pure merits of the question. Now, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) who made a very excellent speech, I am afraid, did not make it entirely from the standpoint of the farmer. I am sure that those who have listened to him must have come to the conclusion that the hon. gentleman argued from the simple standpoint of those who are engaged in the feeding of stock in Canada. There are only two classes of persons who are demanding free corn. There may be some people in Canada who say that it is unfair that they should pay higher prices in consequence of the duty being placed on corn, should such a contingency arise as that corn would be higher in consequence of that duty. From that standpoint there may be a very fair objection, and then there is another objection raised by the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) and those who are cattle feeders and those engaged in the production of butter and cheese who claim that they should have corn free.

I appeal especially to the Minister of Agriculture, who is I believe a practical farmer himself, and I ask him, if in placing corn upon the free list, he has considered, and considered alone, the interests of the farmers of this country, the small farmers as well as the extensive ones. I think the hon. Minister could not have been in possession of such definite information as would warrant him in taking the course he did. He no doubt knows that Canada can produce all the corn required for home consumption. Some time ago, I pointed out in the House the rapid increase of the production of corn in Canada, even in the face of considerable discouragement. In 1885, ten years ago, there were only 167,000 acres of corn under cultivation. Five years later, it had increased to 223,836 acres, yielding 14,000,000 bushels of ears, and in 1895 the acreage had increased to 302,927, yielding 24,819,000 bushels of ears, equal to 16,000,000 bushels of shelled corn. In 1895 we imported two and three-quarter million bushels, so that our production is practically abreast of the consumption of Canada. These figures are taken from the report of the Bureau of Industry, and I say that they are conclusive evidence, that we are producing in Canada nearly all the corn that is required. Give corn that protection which is given to other coarse grains, and we shall easily produce at home all that there is a demand for. In view of this fact, let me again ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), why corn was placed on the free list any more than wheat? Why was corn treated differently from barley, or buckwheat, or oats, or rye, or any other grain. I cannot account for it unless it is that the demand has come from consumers in certain parts of Canada where no corn is produced, and also from those who are engaged entirely in feeding stock. I regret that the hon. member for Huron (Mr. McMillan) is not now in his seat, because I wish to show him how little he knows about his own county. Sir, there is not a county in the province of Ontario that does not produce corn. The largest yield is in the county of Essex, and the smallest in the county of Nipissing. In the county from which the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan) comes, we find that the yield in 1895 was 65 bushels of ears to the acre, or equal to forty bushels of shelled corn, and yet, that hon. gentleman tells the House that he represents the views of the farmers on this question. I find that the number of bushels of oats to the acre in the county of Huron, for the same year, was only thirty-four, while the produce was sixty-five bushels of corn to the acre.

I state, Sir, that we can produce corn enough in the province of Ontario alone to supply the whole Dominion, and I am told that corn is also produced in the province of Quebec to some considerable extent. It was believed some years ago that corn growing, like bean growing, was confined to one or two counties in Canada, but it has been found that the farmers can successfully grow corn in every county—some of course with greater advantage than others—in the province of Ontario. I have no doubt that in the province of Quebec, and in some of the other provinces, there are certain kinds of corn that may be produced with reasonable profit. I wish to tell the Government, that there has been no demand from the farmers or the people of Canada generally for free corn, and there is nothing whatever to warrant the course the Government has pursued, except that for years past the Liberal party has advocated free corn. The farmers of this country have reason to complain of the action of the Minister of Agriculture, because as I contend, he did not adopt the necessary means—and it required a great deal of energy and time—to learn the wants of the farmers when he was on the tariff commission. I understand the difficulty between learning the wishes of so large a body as the agriculturist community, and learning the wishes of those engaged in manufacturing or commercial pursuits. The hon. Minister (Mr. Fisher) when the tariff commission was sitting, issued a notice to the farmers which in effect was: Let you farmers meet and pass resolutions, and then send these resolutions to me, and I will give them proper consideration. That was not sufficient for the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) to do. Even though it did take a great deal of time, he should have gone among the farmers from one end of the country to the other, and if he could not afford that time, it was his imperative duty to make no reductions in the agricultural tariff until he was in possession of full and reliable information. Farmers' institutes may be engineered by men who are disposed to serve their party more than their fellow-farmers, and I deny that you can get anything like a fair expression of opinion from them. I am told that the Patrons have sent a petition to the Minister of Agriculture asking that corn be put on the free list, but I say that that is absolutely worthless. If we take as a specimen the hon. gentlemen who are in this House attempting to speak on behalf of the farmers, calling themselves Patrons or masquerading as Patrons, we can see what a bald sham it is for these gentlemen to speak to the Minister of Agriculture, or to the members of this House, in the name of the farmers, and we can see that we should not place the slightest reliance upon what they represent. These gentlemen do not speak for the people; they merely speak for themselves and for their own narrow views. If you take a Patron, and if he is a true Patron, whether he lives in Nova Scotia or western Ontario or the province of Quebec, he would represent the views of the farmers of the entire Dominion, but I venture to say, that those gentlemen merely represent the narrow views that surround them in their own constituencies, and cannot speak for the farmers of the country as a whole. God help the farmers of Canada if these gentlemen are entitled to speak for them in this House or to represent their interests here. I desire to say, that the farmers of this country are of a higher grade of intelligence, of thought, and of breadth of view, than we would believe, judging by the exhibitions we have had in this House. If the Minister of Agriculture takes these gentlemen as representatives of the farming community of Canada, he will find himself not in accord with the great agricultural interests of this country, but he will find himself acting upon the mere whims—and I do not say this disparagingly—of men who are actuated by the most narrow views, and who are seeking re-election in their respective counties rather than seeking for the general welfare of Canada. We heard to-night one gentleman who claimed to be a farmer giving his reasons why corn should be put on the free list. I tell you that that gentleman is more of a manufacturer than a farmer. He buys the stock of his neighbour, who is less fortunate than he is himself, and he buys it for less than he himself can produce it. He wishes to buy the corn product of a foreign soil and of foreign labour to fatten the steer which he has purchased from his less prosperous fellow-farmer. What does he do? He sets up an establishment at the cross-roads for the manufacture of beef. He is no more a farmer than the man who keeps a blacksmith's shop. He is separated from the great body of the farmers of this country. If every farmer of this country could be placed in the same position that he is, his calling would be gone—why? If you took away free corn, if you took away from him the advantage he has of skinning his neighbour by buying his stock cheaper than he could produce it himself, his establishment would go down. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) this afternoon tried to show the advantage of corn as a feed. No one has disputed that. That is not the question. We say that if corn produces the best beef, if it is more desirable than any other grain grown in Canada, why not give the farmers of this country the chance to produce the grain they are able to grow for the making of beef in this country? The hon. gentleman has two things to consider. He may consider the gentlemen who have his ear, who talked the rot which was talked this afternoon about the value of corn for feeding, a question which no one disputes. These gentlemen have his ear because they are close beside him. The great masses of the struggling farmers of this country, who cannot set up establishments of that kind, have not his ear, and if they had, he would be far from doing what he is doing. Is there anything more plain than the proposition that to bring into this country any grain which is the product of a foreign country, displaces just so much of the grain of this country? There cannot be two opinions about that. If we bring in 10,000,000 bushels of American corn, it means that we must take a lower price for our own grain or export it to another country. If we export it to another country, we have to meet the competition of the American corn-grower, as well as the producer of wheat and oats in every foreign country, on the common ground of the common market. What did the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) say? He tried to prove that during the years when corn was free, oats were higher in price than they were when corn was protected. Just to show how much logic there is in a position of that kind, let me point out that the hon. gentlemen opposite have always contended that the prices of our grains were not determined in our own country, but were determined by the export prices. If that be the case—and I do not think hon. gentlemen will shrink from the argument, though they may shrink from the consequences of it—then the prices were not determined by free corn at all, but by the prices that might be obtained in a foreign country, and therefore it had not the slightest bearing on prices in any sense. I was amused at an hon. gentleman, the member for Richmond and Wolfe, who, this evening, said he wanted free corn. Have you heard an agriculturist say that he wanted free wheat, or free oats, or free pease, or free rye, or free buckwheat? No; and why? Because every one of these classes of grain is produced somewhere here in Canada, and no hon. gentleman would dare to go back to his constituents and say that he wanted to have these grains placed on the free list. The question simply resolves itself into this, whether a few counties in the province of Ontario which, more than any others have been engaged in the growth of corn, are to be singled out for no other reason than that corn is not largely produced in all other parts of the province. That seems to me a most extraordinary proposition, for the Government to place corn on the free list, while other grains are allowed to remain, and very properly to remain, with defensive duties, I say it is an unjust discrimination. Now, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that the duties on corn coming into Canada in 1896 amounted to $207,301, whereas the duties collected upon all other grains, including wheat, barley, buckwheat, rye and oats, amounted to only $44,000. Now, why lose the revenue on that grain alone, and compel those who have been made the victims to contribute to that loss without the slightest return or the slightest compensation in any sense, while compelled to meet the products of a foreign country in their own country? I would like to ask on what ground the manufacturer could ask for free corn, when hon. gentlemen have given them a similar measure of protection to what they have had in the past. If they asked that the duty on corn should be removed, the reasonable thing would be for the farmers to ask that the manufacturers be treated in the same way. The workingmen could not ask for free corn as consumers, because the defensive duties imposed necessarily determine whether our workingmen will have work in this country. The commercial classes could not ask for it, because they have a similar measure of protection. Then, there is only the single class who could ask for free corn, and that is the farmers themselves. If you put corn on the free list, you do it for the sake of a certain number of cattle feeders in this country who, I say, are not farmers in the true sense. They may be engaged in other branches of farming, but they have made cattle feeding the principal feature of their business, and they are not farmers in the true sense. Then, free corn means that you are compelling the small farmers of Canada to bear the loss—and the great part of our farmers are small farmers. I venture to say that not one farmer in five hundred in the Dominion of Canada has imported corn for the purpose of feeding cattle. Therefore, you are making five hundred men the slaves of the one in order that that one may better his condition. It is said we shall have the home product consumed by the distillers. What the distillers are consuming is a mere fraction. Out of 16,000,000 bushels consumed annually, they are importing less than three-quarters of a million bushels annually. In the large American elevators there is always old and dry corn, and, at the same period the distillers will take the corn from the American elevators, because their corn must be cured for six or eight months before it is fit for use. Therefore the millers and the consumers of corn will, for the same reason, buy the older and more matured corn, or, in other words, the corn that is perfectly dry in the elevator, rather than buy the farmers' corn. The foreign growing country, with its immense elevators, in which corn is stored, and always accessible, has every advantage over our country where the farmers have their corn in cribs, and sell it out at one time in the year. Beyond doubt, it is true we grow nearly enough for our own wants, and under proper encouragement would produce in the next five years all we require for home consumption and probably some for export. My hon. friend from Huron (Mr. McMillan) pointed out that in one year we only exported 9,000 bushels. Well, that is the first year in which I have known corn to be exported, but we have been catching up with the demand for home consumption, and are nearly abreast with that demand, and ought soon to be in a position to export. I would like to have some good reason from the hon. Minister of Agriculture, leaving aside the question of singling out one particular branch of the agricultural industry, why corn should be placed on the free list rather than coarse grains. I shall not go into a discussion as to the effect which the importation of corn may have on the prices of coarse grains, because that effect seems to me so plain that it is not worth discussing. Nor shall I enter upon a discussion as to the good qualities of corn for feeding purposes, because that is not in question at all, but I would ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture, even at this late day, to reconsider this very rash proposition, and I think I am within the mark when I say that he cannot be in possession of information that will warrant him taking such a step. It is true that the hon. gentleman and his colleagues have been talking free corn throughout the country and they have raised expectations which perhaps they feel bound to carry out. But it seems to me beyond doubt that the farmers in Canada look to having corn put in the same position as other grains, and I therefore beg to move in amendment:

That all the words after "that" to the end of the motion, be left out, and the following substituted therefor:—"In the opinion of this House, it is inexpedient and opposed to the best agricultural interests of Canada to place Indian corn on the free list."

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). The hon. gentleman who has just spoken has appealed to me with regard to several matters relating to this question, and probably it would be uncourteous on my part if I did not answer him. He asked whether I had carefully considered this question from all points of view. Whether I had considered the different classes of farmers, and also whether, in the tariff enquiry, I had visited every section of the country and found out what the people thought on this question. I can tell the hon. gentleman that while I have not been able to visit every constituency in the country, I have gone about the country a good deal since last session, and I was present when the tariff commission met the farmers of the great province of Ontario on two or three different occasions by special invitation sent out by myself. I have studied the question from the stock keepers, the stock feeders, and the farmers' points of view, and from the great mass of information I have obtained, I came to the conclusion that this proposition was in the interest of the country. I found that the expressions of opinion of the leading farmers throughout the length and breadth of the land bore out the conclusion I had reached from my own knowledge of farming, that it was in the interests of the farming community that corn should be put on the free list, and it was only because of that consensus of opinion that I asked that corn should be put on the free list. I did not do it in the interests of any manufacturer of beef or cattle or anything else, but in the interests of the farmers of this country as a whole, and I think I can show in a few words why it is in their interest. In the first place, the hon. gentleman seems to think that farmers are not manufacturers. On the contrary, they are the greatest manufacturers in this country. Nearly all the manufactured products sent out from Canada come from the farmers. The products of the farm constitute by far the largest amount of manufactured products sent out from Canada, and bring the money of the world into Canada to pay the people's bills. He also alluded to the fact that the hon. member for Huron (Mr. McMillan) is a manufacturer of beef. But he omitted to say that my hon. friend is also one of the largest tillers of the soil in this country. He has a farm of 400 acres of the best land and the best tilled land in the great province of Ontario. It is a model to which the farmers of that province and the rest of the country can go to learn lessons in farming, and if my hon. friend from Huron is in the position he occupies to-day, if he is one of our leading farmers, it is due to the fact that he has been able to show his intelligence and knowledge of the industry by producing beef and other products from the feeding of cattle on his farm. And if to-day his farm is far more productive than it was when he began, if it is one of the model farms of this country, it is because he has been keeping stock on that farm and feeding cattle on it and keeping up the fertility of it and showing himself to be a manufacturer of agricultural products. The hon. gentleman seems to think that the man who simply raises grain, who simply converts the raw material of the soil into the crude product of crops and sells that—is the best kind of farmer. The hon. gentleman has a poor opinion of the industry of farming.

Mr. CLANCY. I said no such thing.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman did not say it in so many words, but the whole tone and tenor of his speech was to that effect. The whole tone and tenor of his speech was to discourage the farmers of this country from going into the higher branch of agriculture, to discourage them from keeping stock upon their lands, and encourage them instead to take from their land the whole fertility that is in it and sell it away as a crude product, thereby destroying the fertility of the farm. The hon. gentleman, if he were a farmer instead of a merchant and lumberman, would know perfectly well that that is the poorest and worst style of farming. It is the kind of farming which the people of the country are leaving, and which we desire to encourage them to leave and go into something better and higher and which will give more scope to their intelligence. I am glad to be able to tell the hon. gentleman that the farmers of Canada are leaving that kind of farming and going into a higher and better class of agriculture, and the result is they are doing more to make the country prosperous than any other class in the community. The hon. gentleman has spoken about the farmer who has his sign out on the cross road as a manufacturer. The farmers I am alluding to, the great mass of farmers, are not of that class. I venture to say there are none, except those connected with distilleries who simply feed stock and do not till the land. The feeding of stock is inseparable from the tilling of the soil. All over the length and breadth of the country, we are trying to teach our farmers that stock keeping is their best interest, the best branch of the industry, and that the more they go into it, the better they will succeed. To keep this stock then they should have the best feed for stock keeping purposes, and my hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. McMillan) in speaking here to-night has proven pretty conclusively that corn is one of the best feeds. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) says that we can produce in Canada all the corn that is needed here and that we do not need to buy corn from abroad. The hon. gentleman himself has proved that there is only one section of this country where corn can be produced profitably. It is true that in a great many parts of the country corn can be grown successfully. I can tell the hon. gentleman that in the east as well as in the west we can produce corn. In the part of Quebec from which I come we can produce corn grain, but we find that we can do other things that are more profitable to us than that, and we prefer to do the most profitable things with our lands and to buy the corn which we find it necessary to use in feeding our stock. The hon. gentleman speaks for the western portion of Ontario in which corn can be produced with a fair share of profit. I will only call attention to the words of my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) who has been quoted on the other side with approbation. That hon. gentleman tells us that in his own county, which is distinctly a corn producing county, it was a nice question whether it was better to have the duty on corn or not. If it is a dubious question on one of the best corn producing counties in Ontario, what must it be in the great bulk of the country where corn cannot be produced except with the greatest skill and effort, and to the exclusion of other things than can be done more profitably.

Mr. CLANCY. Is he (Mr. Charlton) speaking as a farmer?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He was speaking from knowledge of his locality and voicing the views of the men he represents. Hon. gentlemen opposite have been quoting him as if they accepted his dictum, showing that they believed he spoke with authority. They must accept this portion of his speech as well as the other. The hon. gentleman seems to forget, and so I will remind him that east of Toronto, or certainly, east of Kingston, there is hardly any corn produced in this country at a profit.

Mr. CLANCY. What about Grenville with 100 bushels to the acre?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I may say that here and there throughout the country you can find a field where 100 bushels of corn to the acre can be raised. I have known in my own section of the Eastern Townships large crops of corn to be raised for grain. I know also that in eastern Canada there are places where 35 and 40 bushels of wheat to the acre can be produced. But we do not pretend to be a wheat-producing country, and as a matter of fact, we buy nearly all our flour. We can raise corn for ensilage, and put it into the silo and make more money out of it in that way than by turning it into grain. The hon. gentleman has spoken entirely and solely for that section of the country from whence he comes. He is asking if in discussing this question I had obtained information from other parts of the country than my own, and he asked if I had spoken to farmers on the question. He warned me against the men who assumed to represent the farmers. I suppose he would not class himself in that category. He asks if my hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) speaks as a farmer, but I have yet to learn that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) himself is a farmer. But I have yet to learn also that men who are not farmers cannot represent the farmers, cannot give expression on the floor of Parliament to the views of the men who sent him here to represent them, the bulk of whom are farmers. But a gentleman who is engaged in the business, as is my hon. friend from South Huron and as are other men around me, are better able to understand the intricacies of this question than an hon. member who happens to be a lumberman, a lawyer, or a doctor. And there are intricacies in this business that cannot be fully explained in a brief statement. The hon. gentleman has spoken about the feeding of stock as though this were simply a question of beef feeding. But he must know perfectly well that, in this country, the vast mass of our farmers are dairymen. He knows that in the province of Ontario an immense number of cows are kept which produce milk for butter and cheese which is exported. He knows that in the province of Quebec there is comparatively little beef produced and that the cattle of the province are used largely for dairying. In the eastern provinces there is no great quantity of beef produced, while a large quantity of stock is kept. In the North-west, which this question does not affect, a large quantity of beef is produced for export and in Ontario also, a large quantity of beef is produced for export. But the great dairy industry in the country is as much interested in this corn question as the beef producer. Let me give the hon. gentleman a few figures as to the dairying interest in this country. In a year Ontario produces 730,000,000 pounds of milk, which is worth about $5,300,000. The production of this milk can be cheapened and facilitated by cheaper corn. The product of the cows is largely exported to the old country and if there is one thing in which Canada shines in the British market, it is in the cheese business. The province of Ontario has, to a large extent, contributed to that prominence, and the province can increase its output if it can get cheaper food for the cows that produce the milk from which the cheese is made. The same thing is true of the province of Quebec. There are in Ontario 2,000,000 cattle, 647,000 horses, 1,295,000 hogs and over 2,000,000 sheep. These are very large figures and they represent enormous capital invested. What is the value of this stock? That depends entirely upon the amount of produce it yields for the people to sell. The more they can do with it, the greater the extent to which they can use the machine—for our cattle, that is our cows, are a machine through which we must get as much production as we can; and the manufacturing farmer in doing that wants to get his raw material, the things with which to conduct his business, as cheaply as possible. One hon. gentleman on the other side said that the farmer was a protectionist and wanted protection. I will refer for a moment without quoting instances, to the illustration of arguments of protection, and to show that, even according to their own theory, they must grant to the farmer free corn. What does the protectionist manufacturer want most of all? He wants his raw material at as cheap a rate as possible. What did we find when the tariff investigation was going on? Every manufacturer who came forward asking that the thing he produced should be protected as highly as possible, at the same moment and at the same breath, asked that the things that he used in his industry should be given to him at as low a rate as possible. So the farmer who has to produce beef in competition with the world, who has to produce butter in competition with the world wants to have the material which he uses in making butter, cheese, and beef, at as low rates as possible. Give him then free corn for use in his business. Hon. gentlemen opposite have said that every bushel of imported corn displaces a bushel of our own grain. They have not considered the question fully. I say emphatically, and I do not fear any attempted proof to the contrary, that every bushel of corn brought into the country does not mean the displacement of a bushel of our own grain, but an increased production of butter, cheese and beef in this country. It means so many hundreds, and thousands, and millions of pounds of exported butter and cheese out of this country. That is what the increased importation of corn into this country means. It does not mean a reduction of the price of coarse grain. We know that the manufacturer who has free materials is able to use our own home materials which he has, to better advantage. In the experience of the friends to the south of us a few years ago, wool was placed upon the free list. The farmers of that country protested against wool being placed upon the free list, they thought it was going to ruin the industry of wool production. But what was the result? In consequence of the fact of having free-wool, the moment that the woollen manufacturers were able to increase their business, they were able immediately afterwards to pay higher prices for the home-made wool produced in the United States. I say therefore that if in consequence of free corn, a consequence which I am sure will come about, we are able to increase our manufacture of butter and cheese in this country, the farmers who are engaged in these manufactures will consume, and be glad to get, more coarse grains to feed in conjunction with their imported corn. Hon. gentlemen say that corn is going to injure our pork in this country. That was the view taken by the hon. member for King's, P.E.I. (Mr. Macdonald), who told us about the establishment of a pork industry in that province that was giving promise of success, and he said it would be disastrous to that industry if free corn came in, because it would injure the quality of Canadian pork. We know that is one of the cries that has been used by hon. gentlemen opposite in order to frighten the farmers and others against free corn.

Mr. CARGILL. Does the hon. gentleman think that corn fed pork is equal in quality to pork fed on mixed grains?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the hon. gentleman will wait till I have finished he will find the answer. Does the hon. gentleman think that our farmers are fools? Hon. gentlemen opposite some times talk as if they thought so. But as a matter of fact I think that the intelligence of the farmers of this country is quite equal to using as much corn as they want to feed their animals, and not using any more. The pork dressers and packers of this country want pork which has been fed on some corn; they do not want pork that has been fed altogether on corn, but pork in the feeding of which some corn has been used. I believe that the pork feeders are quite intelligent enough to know when to stop feeding corn, and that by reason of the fact that corn may be a little cheaper than it was before, they are not going thereby to deteriorate the value of the product that they are producing. On the contrary. I have confidence to believe that the farmers know that feeding corn in conjunction with skimmed milk and with clover pasture, they will be able to produce a higher quality of pork than they could without corn. We have heard the experiments described by the hon. member for South Huron to-night; and I have the dictum of a gentleman who spoke to me a few weeks ago and who is manager of the largest pork exporting company in this country, that he wanted pork in the feeding of which some corn had been used. He told me, it is true, that if corn was used altogether he did not want that pork, that it would be dangerous to the farmers if they attempted to use all corn. But, says he, I want pork in which some corn has been used, and the quality of that pork is better in every respect, as well as cheaper, if corn can be got cheap enough.

Mr. BEATTIE. I know the London Packing Company refuse to take any corn fed pork, and that is one of the best packing companies in Canada.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I grant you that Mr. Flavelle and the Davis Company would refuse to take pork that was fed altogether on corn. But they will not refuse to take pork that is fed on skim milk in conjunction with corn and corn meal or if it is fed on mixed grain and bran, and other things along with corn.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that Mr. Flavelle advocated the free admission of American corn into this market?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, I said that Mr. Flavelle preferred pork in the feeding of which some corn had been used.

Mr. SPROULE. I know that the members of English pork packing firms advised the farmers not to feed their hogs on the whey made from cheese and on corn, because the quality of the pork was inferior.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman does not seem to know the difference between whey and skimmed milk.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman seems to think he is talking to an audience who do not know the difference.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the hon. gentleman had noticed what I said, he would know I spoke of feeding corn in conjunction with skim milk, and not in conjunction with whey.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman did not say whey.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. "Hansard" will show that I said skim milk. I knew better than to say whey, because I knew that in conjunction with whey, corn was not good food; but that whey should be used with bran and other nitrogenous foods which supplement and give the ingredients which are necessary to make up what whey is lacking.

Mr. SPROULE. How much skim milk does the hon. gentleman expect to get from cheese factories?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I spoke about creameries and butter factories. Although the hon. gentleman is not a farmer, he has lived long enough that he ought to know that whey comes from the manufacture of cheese, and skim milk comes from the manufacture of butter.

Mr. SPROULE. I have been carrying on farming steadily for the last fifteen years, and have been connected with it for the most of my life.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Then the hon. gentleman ought to have learned something by this time.

Mr. INGRAM. From the discourteous manner in which the Minister answers questions, he seems to be prepared to stay here a week or two longer.

Mr. CARGILL. I understood the Minister to say that skim milk was a product of butter manufacture; now I always thought it was butter milk.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I said it came from the creameries.

Mr. CARGILL. But you said it was a product of the butter, but I always understood that it was butter milk that came from the butter.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman confuses the lesser with the greater. If the hon. gentleman knew more about it he would not need to be told that there is a smaller quantity of butter milk coming from butter than there is of skim milk coming from the creamery. Now, the hon. gentleman has talked about our efforts to get reciprocity, and the probability that by reason of keeping the duty on corn, we may more easily get concessions from the other side of the line. There is nobody in this House who is more desirous than I am, and the other members of the Government, to extend our trade relations to the United States. I believe in removing the restrictions upon trade. We are not protectionists, as hon. gentlemen opposite are. I would be very glad indeed if we could get a free entry into the United States for our agricultural products; but I believe most emphatically that the experience which hon. gentlemen opposite have had for some years, past would be continued for some years to come. Hon. gentlemen opposite have had the statutory offer upon the statute-books of this country of free corn in return for free barley on the other side of the line. They know just as well as we know that that offer has been ignored, that nothing has come of it, and that in consequence the farmers of this country have not had this boon of free corn. The hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Stenson) said that we were doing this not for the sake of the Americans. We are asking this House to give us free corn for the sake of the farmers and of the people of Canada wholly and solely. Just as we have made a great step towards Imperial trade by reason of that preferential gift which we have given to the Empire at home, so I believe that we can cultivate better relations with the United States, not by demanding for everything that we do a quid pro quo.

Mr. WILSON. Why was that not done in everything—coal as well as corn?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We cannot do everything at once.

Mr. WILSON. The Finance Minister made a distinct statement to this House that unless the Americans would lower their duty on coal to 40 cents a ton we would keep ours up to 60 cents. Why do we not do the same thing in regard to corn?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Because we cannot do everything at once. Hon. gentlemen opposite treated every article, it mattered not what it was, on its own merits, and the result was that in their tariff, as in ours, there were different duties upon different articles, some on the dutiable list and some on the free list.

Mr. FOSTER. And some specific duties.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Last year the United States produced 200,000,000 bushels of corn and exported 100,000,000 bushels. I venture to say that the amount of corn that would come into this country from the United States, even with corn on the free list, would be inappreciable in such a large market and with such a large production as there is in that country, and this would make a small figure in any reciprocity negotiations we might have with them. As my hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. McMillan) said the corn that the American produces comes into competition with our products in the markets of the world. It comes into competition with them in the shape of beef, mutton and dairy products. And, that being the case, we want to be able to get their corn to produce these very products on the same terms and as cheaply as the American producers do and which we cannot do unless we have free corn. It is because we want our farmers to be able to produce their finished products as cheaply and in as good conditions as the farmers of the United States can that we ask for the acceptance of this proposition. It is by reason of the fact that the western corn of the United States is used as feed in that country that their exports of cattle so enormously exceeds ours. If we could get their corn free to feed to our superior animals, because we have always been able to produce animals far superior to what are produced in the United States, and if we could get the feed with which to make the animals fat at a reasonable rate we could do it cheaper and better than they can. But as long as we hamper the farmers and make the conditions of their industry onerous just so much do we injure them in their competition with the farmers of the United States. There is another fact. You speak about the importation of corn, but you forget the importation of meat products. Last year we in Canada imported 11,500,000 pounds of meat from the United States. Give us free corn and we can make that here and our farmers will be able to control their home market. How is it that the farmers of Canada are not able to produce this 11,500,000 pounds in this country? It is because the policy of the hon. gentlemen opposite has prevented them from getting free corn; it is because they have been restricted in other ways and they have not been able to capture the markets of their own country, let alone to secure their proper share of the markets of the world. For these reasons, and for many others, which I have not time to go into, I ask this House to give us free corn so that the great mass of the farmers may be benefited in the industry in which they are engaged and which I am satisfied will bring greater success to them.

Mr. SPROULE. When we had free corn coming in we imported a much larger quantity of wheat than we did when we had no free corn.

Mr. CLANCY. I desire to say just a word or two in reply to the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. The hon. gentleman has done just what I expected he would do; he has taken his seat without answering the question I put to him as to why the hon. gentleman had singled out corn as against all other kinds of grain to be free. The hon. gentleman sat down without saying a single word about it. If he had made any reply it would probably have been, "because they could not do everything at once." Is that not an extraordinary argument? If the hon. gentleman was doing the right thing, why not do the right thing all at once. But he tells me that I am no farmer. I may tell the hon. gentleman that I am not the kind of a farmer that he is. I have not much hair on my head, but what I have I do not part it in the centre. I am not a kid-gloved farmer. I, fortunately or unfortunately, live among the mass of our farmers; I know something of the great farming interest and its wants. The hon. gentleman puts words into my mouth that I did not utter when he says that I said that the growing grain alone is the best class of farming. He must take me to be more stupid than I am in assuming any such principle. We all know that if a farmer can engage in stock-feeding and consume all his grain and export his cattle that he would have reached a state of things that would be most desirable. It is not what we would like to see the farmers do, but what the farmers are able to do that the hon. gentleman seems to know nothing about. What is the condition of the great mass of the farmers? I may say that I am familiar with the farming interest of this country and have as much acquaintance with them as the hon. gentleman. He tells us that free corn is desired by the great dairy interest. I tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) that he has not answered the question in that way.

Mr. FISHER.

and I tell him that he is looking above the present condition of the farmers of this country. He need not read us lessons here in the same position as other grains, and as to what is best for the farmers to do. We all know what is best, if it could be done. He may single out a few gentlemen in this country whom he desires to serve. I fear he spoke from a narrow standpoint himself, for he said that very little wheat was grown in his district. I would like to know what he knows about farming? I have an idea that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) is what they call a fancy farmer, producing high grades of stock.

An hon. MEMBER. A dude.

Mr. CLANCY. A dude, my hon. friend says, and I venture to think he may not be far out. The Minister of Agriculture no doubt raises the higher grades of stock, and gets fancy prices; but let me ask him how many farmers, such as he, are there in his own province? There are very few, and consequently the duty of the hon. gentleman is not to judge all the farmers by those in his condition. He has been heralded from one end of the country to the other as a practical farmer, but I am afraid he is a farmer who is too big for the farmers.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The farmers of Canada are not so small as you think they are.

Mr. CLANCY. No one said the farmers are small. I do think I know something of the condition of the class to which I belong. The hon. Minister (Mr. Fisher) did me the honour to say that I was probably a merchant, or a lumberman, and he suggested that it was possible I might be a professional man. I have not the honour of being any of these, but I do claim that I have an opportunity of knowing the condition of the people. I say that we have yet to have an answer from the Minister of Agriculture as to why he singled out corn to be put on the free list. I now see the hon. member for Huron (Mr. McMillan) in his place, and I want to give him some facts about his own county. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan) told us that no farmer of eminence would oppose free corn, and I suppose that we are to understand that he is a farmer of eminence.

Some hon. MEMBERS. So he is.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman is a member of the advisory board of the Bureau of Industries in the province of Ontario, and very few of the farmers of this country are so eminent. Very few of them get these positions and have their sons in these positions, going about lecturing throughout the province.

Mr. BENNETT. $5 a night.

Mr. CLANCY. Yes, the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan) has been feeding at the public crib, and so have his family, and yet he claims that he is speaking for the farmers of this country. The hon. gentleman told us that he would sell oats and buy corn. Now, according to the report prepared under his own guidance, we find that in his own county they produced in 1895, thirty-four bushels of oats to the acre, while they produced sixty-five bushels of ears of corn, which is equivalent to nearly forty bushels of shelled corn. The hon. gentleman has been asleep in his own county, and yet he claims to speak with authority for the farmers. I repeat that the province of Ontario is perfectly able to grow enough corn for the whole Dominion. In the counties of Essex, Kent, Elgin and North Haldimand they produce 913,423 bushels; in Lambton, Huron and Bruce they produce 430,000 bushels, and in Grey and Simcoe they produce about the same quantity. This is set out in the statistics, and I will send it over to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. GIBSON. Oh, keep it.

Mr. CLANCY. My hon friend (Mr. Gibson) knows more about the Victoria Bridge than he does about corn.

Mr. GIBSON. And am more loyal to Queen Victoria than you are.

Mr. CLANCY. Judging by the hon. gentleman's appearance, he is moved by a very peculiar spirit in his loyalty. I have this to say in conclusion.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, I did not think of concluding

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

THE MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). Do not spoil a good speech by repeating it.

Mr. CLANCY. If my hon. friend (Mr. Davies) thinks I will spoil my speech, I shall sit down.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLANCY. This is too grave a question for hon. gentlemen opposite to treat it so lightly.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You cannot perorate twice.

Mr. CLANCY. Allow me to ask the hon. gentleman from Grey (Mr. Landerkin) his opinion on corn.

An hon. MEMBER. Corn juice.

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Landerkin) could give us a dissertation on corn juice.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You are well qualified to do that.

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps I could tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Landerkin) something about it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You are the best authority in the House on corn juice

Mr. CLANCY. My hon. friend says—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Louder.

Mr. CLANCY. If hon. gentlemen opposite keep quiet I will conclude.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLANCY. I quite understand the impatience of hon. gentlemen to conclude the debate at this late hour, but the House cannot afford to treat a question of this importance so lightly.

An hon. MEMBER. What about your conclusion?

Mr. CLANCY. I still indulge in the hope that the Minister of Agriculture will be able to tell us why he placed corn on the free list.

The hon. gentleman pointed out that the farmer wanted free corn because he wanted free material. I think I quite understood him when he made that proposition. If that is the case, the miller wants free wheat, and to be consistent why does he not make wheat free? I still ask the hon. gentleman to say to the House why he makes corn free, and not other grains? To say that he cannot do it all at once is not an answer. If the hon. gentleman is not able to answer that question satisfactorily, even to his own friends, I say he has singled out corn to put on the free list for no reason that any one can think of except to serve the interests of very few persons in this country. If the hon. gentleman can give any good reason for it, the committee will be glad to hear it; but so far the House must come to the conclusion that he has arrived at that decision without any satisfactory reason.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not think the hon. Minister of Agriculture wished to misrepresent the case or to deceive the House; but by the figures he gave, if I understood him correctly, he has done so. I understood him to say that we imported from the United States last year 11,250,000 pounds of meats, and that he had taken these figures from the report of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. If he did so, he must have taken the figures both for home consumption and export, for I feel by that report that we imported last year: bacon and hams, shoulders and sides, 1,490,000 pounds; canned meats, poultry and game, 966,000 pounds; beef, salted, in barrels, 1,639,000 pounds; mutton, 39,000 pounds; pork, barreled, in brine, 3,809,000 pounds; dried or smoked meats, and meats preserved in any other way than salted or pickled, 128,000 pounds; other meats, fresh, 216,000 pounds; other meats, salted, 99,000 pounds; making a total of 8,386,000 pounds, in place of 11,000,000 pounds. I give these figures as I find them, and I know that the Minister does not want his statement to go to the country and have some schoolboy contradict him.

Mr. McMILLAN. Just a single word. I have often observed that some men, when they feel that they cannot keep up their end of the argument, resort to personalities, one of the meanest things that any man can be guilty of. What right had the hon. gentleman to refer to the way in which the Minister of Agriculture parted his hair? Nature has prevented the hon. gentleman from parting his hair in the middle. I would also ask what my son's getting positions had to do with the importation of free corn into Canada. It shows a mean and envious spirit in an individual when he resorts to personalities of this kind. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that I have never asked for a position either for myself or for my son. I have been in the hon. gentleman's locality, and I can say that he is not one of those distinguished farmers who are fattening cattle of a stamp fit to be sent to the English market. When we find any individual referring to the personal appearance of another person, it shows a low, mean nature.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to suggest to my hon. friend who has made this very strong statement, that I would like him for my part to go to the "Globe" newspaper people and talk to them a little while about the way they have abused me.

Mr. McMILLAN. I have nothing to do with the "Globe" newspaper, but the hon. gentleman has been abusing the "Globe" newspaper and everything connected with it, and he must expect to get something in return.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to—
Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I ask hon. members to keep order.

Mr. DAVIN. I rose, Mr. Chairman, to quote the opinion of the Ingersol Packing Company. This is a letter written to a member of this House:

Mr. A. F. MacLaren, M.P., Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Your favours of the 5th and 7th both to hand. We are very much pleased to see that the members are taking a great interest in feeding corn to hogs,—

I see that the hogs are a little alarmed. They are so alarmed that although they generally fight with their snouts, they are now fighting with their heels.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I ask the members of the committee to keep order.

Mr. DAVIN—

—and we trust that the farmers will be so educated that they will—

Mr. CHARLTON. Commence at the beginning; I have lost the thread of it.

Mr. DAVIN. Who says commence at the beginning?

Mr. CHARLTON. I do.

Mr. TAYLOR.

Mr. DAVIN. The witty and pious member from North Norfolk, the embodiment of religious consistency, the least contemptible member of this House, the member of this House whom any man knows him most honours, the member of this House who, regarded from a political or religious standpoint, can be venerated as a man, a man whom I have known inside and outside of this House—and to know him well is to regard him with scorn.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Say that again.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the members of the committee should not forget that there are some strangers in the gallery, and we are not conducting ourselves now in a proper manner.

Mr. DAVIN. Will you say the members of the committee on the Government side? The members on this side conduct themselves, as they usually do, as gentlemen. The members on the Government side generally have a lot of Hessians to howl, and the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) wishes to direct my attention to him. I have a great liking for that gentleman.

Mr. LANDERKIN. That is my misfortune.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend says it is his misfortune. Well, if it is his misfortune it is one that like others will stick to him, because I shall not cease to like the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Landerkin).

Mr. LANDERKIN. If that be the case, will the hon. gentleman bring his speech to a close.

Mr. DAVIN. I said I liked the hon. member for Grey, but not that I would do what he liked. I shall begin with a quotation:

Your favours of the 5th and 7th both to hand. We are very much pleased to see that the members are taking a great interest of feeding corn to hogs, and we trust that the farmers will be so educated that they will not attempt to feed hogs wholly on corn, as it would seriously affect the hog industry of Canada. The trouble we see from corn being imported here free and sold at a low price is, that the farmers, when they get out of their own feed of mixed grains, will no doubt buy the corn, the trouble being with a great many farmers that as long as they get their hogs fat, it does not seem to matter much to them as to the quality; so that, as far as we are concerned, interested as we are as packers, and we also believe for the good of the country, it would be well to have a duty on corn so as to prevent it being brought in for that purpose. Of course, if it is brought in for the purpose of feeding cattle and horses, and is allowed in free, the farmers will no doubt feed more or less of it to hogs. We do not think it requires any better evidence than the price of hogs in Canada at the present time to prove to the farmers' satisfaction the importance of feeding their hogs properly, that is, on pease and other grains, so as to make the quality of the pork compare favourably with Danish and Irish. If hogs were fed wholly on corn in Canada as they are in the United States. the packers in this country could not even pay the prices that the Chicago packers are paying for hogs, because the outlet in this country for the offal, which consists of tenderloin, kidneys, hearts and sausage of all kinds, and grease, is so limited and the price is so much less that we could not compete with the Chicago packers, and, therefore, it is a very important matter to have our hogs fed on mixed grains, so that their bacon does not come in competition with ours.

We have already given you the views of a Chicago packer on the corn question, which fully covers the ground. Should the Agricultural Committee wish to meet the pork packers of this country, we should be very pleased to have our firm represented at said meeting. We, however, trust that the members will see the great importance of this industry, that they will do everything in their power to have Canada keep up its standard of hogs, both as to breeding the right kind and also in having them fed mixed grains.

In another letter dated June 8th, they say :

We presume that you understand that it is impossible to firm beechnut hog product even in the coldest day in winter, as it is so oily that it will not firm. We trust, therefore, that these matters will be so fully discussed in Parliament that the farmers will see what an important matter it is, and that the majority of them, at all events, will have interest enough in the business to still keep the reputation of our Canadian pork where it now is, and which has taken several years to educate them to that point.

Now, I intend to say a few words on the debate. I have in public and private said what I think about the way the hon. gentleman who is at the head of the Department of Agriculture is managing that department. I think he is managing it well. I think he is showing great zeal, but tonight my hon. friend on my right caught him tripping. I think if he will turn up his speech to-morrow morning he will find that he committed himself to a proposition which he subsequently regarded as untenable. This feature of the policy of the hon. gentleman shows that despite his zeal to manage his department as it should be managed, he has diverged from the sound rule he had set himself of following carefully the lines pointed out by his predecessors and by his opponents at this moment on this side. What I commend in the hon. gentleman was that the moment he came into office he took up with zeal and enthusiasm the policy that I had propounded from my seat in this House again and again, and the policy that had been laid down by the Conservative party and its Ministers. In the one point of free corn, however, he has diverged from the Conservative policy and also from the tariff before the House. I do not see how he can regard this proposition as consistent with his prudent, imitative reverence for the policy of his predecessors. I heard my hon. friend from the Saskatchewan cheering those who contended that it was a good thing to let corn in free. Well, I have never yet met a man in the Territories who thought that was a good thing. I never met a man there who did not think that to bring in corn to compete with our wheat-fed pork, would be a bad thing for the North-west. We can produce in the North-west pork and bacon such as no other country in the world can parallel, and had I supposed that the Minister of Agriculture would have diverged into a heterodoxy such as this, both from the point of view of the farmers and of the tariff policy of his Government, I would have brought down from the North-west Territories specimens of the pork and bacon we can produce and submitted them to this House. We can produce there bacon and pork which cannot be equalled even in eastern Canada. The reason for that is that the animals are fed entirely upon the lighter grain—the coarser grain, as they are called, but from my point of view, the lighter grain—and not upon corn. Experts who have been up there, men like the writer of this letter, have told me that all over the North-west Territories, and more particularly in those parts which abound in streams, in those parts where there is plenty of water for the hog, we can produce such a bacon and pork in abundance to supply the breakfast tables not only of Europe, but of this continent as well. All that is necessary is to get our farmers to go into this business, and we can build up a reputation for special pork and bacon, because of the extraordinary advantages we have. And yet, Sir, when we are upon the threshold of developing this vast west, while that great agricultural empire is opening up before us assuring Canada of the great destiny that awaits her, when we have a new Government in power that seem to be following the traditions of its predecessors, we find that in this one thing the policy is reversed, this thing which strikes at the root of an industry peculiar to Canada and special to the North-west. We have a Minister of Agriculture, who is a specialist in his way, supporting this change in our system. You cannot explain it on the ground of policy nor any other ground than this—that men like the hon. Minister, who are rich farmers, prefer to have free corn. The hon. Minister is of the class of farmers described by my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy). I do not know whether that hon. gentleman meant to be offensive, but I do not mean it to be offensive, when I say that the hon. Minister was born with a silver spoon in his mouth. But the farmer who is born with the pitchfork in his mouth and must make the best of his way, is by no means of the class of farmers to which the hon. Minister belongs. I would not mean to suggest that the hon. Minister is a spoon-fed Minister, because I have put on record before my appreciation of him. I think that up to his lights he is an excellent Minister, but the lights do not shine far enough and they are not far enough advanced. He belongs to a class of farmers who, no doubt, will be assisted by having free corn. The rich farmer who can have a large farm and go into farming such as we see at the Experimental Farm, is benefited by this change. When I was out at the Experimental Farm the other day, praising all I saw there, a man said to me: All this is not one bit neater, not one bit more advanced than you can find on the farm of the Minister of Agriculture. Can that be said of any ordinary farmer? I have often heard my hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. McMillan) speak of that, denouncing the farming at the Experimental Farm. I wish I could adopt his splendid doric; it would be worth hundreds of dollars a year to me. I have heard him at the Experimental Farm declaring that this was not the farming that the farmers of Ontario could be supposed to carry out, and therefore that they could not learn from it as they might be supposed to do. There are farmers even in the North-west, I suppose, large farmers, men of great wealth, who can gain something by corn being allowed to come in free. But I say that an ordinary farmer in the North-west and the ordinary farmer in Ontario have no interest in free corn. I do not wish to obtrude myself upon the House in the discussion of questions of which I have to speak from information obtained at second-hand. I do not profess to be a farmer. I have never farmed an acre in my life. But I have mixed with farmers, I have studied farming; I have been doing my best for the farmers ever since I have taken an interest in politics. And I never did a better stroke for them in my life either in Ontario or in the North-west than in saying that I did not believe that this proposal of free corn was in the interest of the ordinary farmers of the country.

Mr. CLARKE. One of the largest pork-packing industries in Canada is in Toronto—the William Davies Company's establishment. I do not profess to know anything about farming and, unfortunately, I sent away to-day the correspondence and quotations I had in my desk in reference to this question of corn-fed pork. The hon. Minister of Agriculture introduced the name of a gentleman who, I believe, is the Managing Director of the William Davies Company of Toronto—Mr. Flavelle. I propose to vote to-night, if an opportunity is offered me, against the proposal to admit corn free of duty; and I have decided to do so because of the information I have received either by correspondence with or by letters published by the William Davies Company. This company are exporting large quantities of bacon and hams to the old country. The produce of the company is being brought into competition with the best Danish and Irish bacon. They are prepared to meet that competition provided they can get a proper class of hogs from which to make their bacon. The correspondence which I have had with that firm and the communications they have sent to the papers have led me to believe that the superiority of their bacon is due to the fact that the hogs purchased by them had been fed upon the coarse grains of Ontario, and not upon corn, either grown in Ontario or imported from the United States. I believe if I had the documents here I could substantiate the statement that they fear if corn is admitted free, vast quantities of it will be fed to hogs, and the high reputation they have gained for bacon will be seriously injured. They say that the possibilities of this trade are immense, if they can only continue to procure the hogs to manufacture the class of bacon they have been exporting. And I desire, with the greatest possible deference to the Minister of Agriculture, to protest against any statement made by him which would lead this House to believe that the William Davies Company are in any way in favour of having corn admitted free to this country. I think I would be justified in making the statement that I have been informed by members of that firm that they avoid buying hogs grown either in the county of Kent or in the county of Essex owing to the fact that these are large corn-growing counties. I make this statement to justify myself in the vote I propose to give, and to correct any impression that might have been made unintentionally by the Minister, to convey to the House the idea that the William Davies Company desired that corn should be admitted free into Canada.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I want to say in reply to what the hon. gentleman has just said, that I quoted Mr. Flavelle as saying that he preferred pork which had been fed some corn; but I did not wish anybody to have the impression that I advocated feeding large quantities of corn to hogs. I say most emphatically that pork which is fed entirely on corn is not desirable for our market. But that some corn should be fed along with other things to pork, is, I believe, the most economical way of producing a high quality of pork.

Mr. KAULBACH. I am anxious to make my position understood in relation to this question. I am perhaps peculiarly placed, and some may think it strange that I should record my vote in the way I propose to do. In the discussion that has taken place nothing, was said with regard to the protection of the lumbermen. That is an industry that is very largely prosecuted in the county that I have the honour to represent; and it has been struggling for some time in the past in consequence of the imposition of a duty on corn and cornmeal. In the county I represent we raise great numbers of cattle, and the fattening of these is particularly favoured by the article of corn and cornmeal being placed on the free list. Therefore I feel compelled to vote with the Government on this question. I have also another reason for the vote. I would vote in the interests of the farmers of Ontario on the product of corn, were it not that I am convinced of this fact, that we do not grow in Canada corn in quantities sufficient for home consumption; therefore on principle and on that ground alone, if for no other, I would feel compelled to vote with the Government. With regard to corn coming in for the use of distillers, I think if the item remained as it is, that there will be a great deal of nefarious traffic carried on, and that a great deal of the corn will get into the hands of the distillers for the manufacture of whisky by chicanery and fraud, and other means which might be corrected if the Government took the proper means. What I suggest is that the Government increase the excise duty on the distiller's product—whisky and other liquors, and they will avoid by this method all the difficulties that otherwise might ensue were distillers to buy up all Canadian grown corn for whisky, and that for domestic use to be purchased from across the border.

Mr. CARGILL. I must say that this corn question was a very live issue in my election. My opponent was in favour of free corn, and the matter was discussed at every meeting we held. My riding is largely an agricultural constituency, and I have reason to believe that the majority of the farmers there are opposed to the importation of free corn into this country. It is all very well for hon. gentlemen such as the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan), a man who is wealthy and who has accumulated his wealth by dint of industry and perseverance—it is all very well for him to talk of protecting the manufacturers of this country. I do not believe that there is a manufacturer in the county of Huron to-day who has been protected since the introduction of the National Policy, that is as well off financially as the hon. member who represents South Huron. He is one of the poor farmers that the people of this country have been commiserating for the last eighteen years, who have been robbed by the National Policy. I have always contended that the farmers have received at the hands of the previous Government more consideration than any other class of the community. They have been protected exactly on the same lines that the manufacturers of this country have been protected. How do you protect the manufacturers? Why has the present Government retained the existing duties? Is it not for the purpose of enabling the manufacturers to continue their business? Certainly it is. Don't you protect the farmer in the same way? You put a duty on agricultural produce from other countries in order to prevent it from coming into Canada to compete in the home market with the Canadian farmer. In what way do you protect the manufacturer? By putting a duty on the foreign product to keep it from coming into Canada in competition with the Canadian manufacturer. I say that the farmer is and always has been protected exactly in the same way. Some people say the National Policy has made a few rich at the expense of the masses of the people. I deny that assertion. I say that if the National Policy makes one man rich why should not all get rich? It does not discriminate. All the manufacturers of this country have equal advantages. If one man becomes a millionaire and succeeds under the fostering care of the National Policy, why does not his neighbour, producing the same article, equally succeed? We find one manufacturer starting out in this country and acquiring a fortune; his neighbour in the adjoining town, fails, and pays ten cents on the dollar. What has the National Policy got to do with the success of one man and the failure of the others? And so with the merchants. One merchant succeeds and another fails. Take all classes of the community in this country, and we find in each class certain individuals who succeed and who get along in the world while the others fail. Now, has the National Policy anything to do with the failure of one man and the success of another? I say, no. Now, in speaking about this free corn I must say that I am not in favour of it, and I have got very good reason for that. It was discussed in my own riding, and I know that eight out of every ten farmers in the east riding of Bruce are opposed to free corn. If I were speaking in my own interest I would favour free corn. The hon. member for South Huron, during his remarks this evening, tried to make the point that during the years when we imported the most corn into this country, the prices of our own coarse grains were higher. Well, that is naturally the case. When our own coarse grains are high and we can import the foreign articles at a cheaper rate, which will produce our beef and pork, certainly we will take advantage of that. But when our grains are low, that is the time we do not want to import corn, but it is when they are high. I remember distinctly a number of years ago oats were very scarce in Canada, in fact they were not to be had at almost any price. I had occasion to import a number of cars of corn. Previous to the importation of that corn I paid very high prices to the surrounding farmers for oats. They would not sell them at all; they thought they would be worth a high price in the spring. After bringing that corn into the country and supplying myself and a number of the farmers in the neighbourhood with what corn they required for feeding purposes, in the spring I could buy these oats from these farmers at from 15 cents to 20 cents a bushel less than what I offered them previous to importing the corn. This is evidence to me that the importation of corn into this country will affect the prices of coarse grains. I understood the Minister of Agriculture to say that he was specially in favour of importing corn free into this country for the purpose of producing pork and beef, and in his opening remarks I understood him to say that corn-fed pork was quite equal if not superior to pea-fed pork. I may have been mistaken in that; if I am I stand to be corrected, but that is what I understood him to say. Some days ago in the Agricultural Committee I happened to narrate a conversation that I had with a gentleman from the Ingersoll Packing Company, who told me that he did not like to pack corn-fed pork for the reason that they have established in Great Britain a reputation for Canadian bacon equal to that of the Danish bacon and very much superior to that of the American bacon. The fact is, that it is worth about 2 cents a pound more than American bacon, and he was afraid that if corn was imported duty free and fed to the hogs in this country and the product got mixed with Canadian pea-fed pork it would destroy the reputation of the Canadian bacon in the British market. Having noticed in the press that the matter had come up in the Agriculture Committee, this gentleman wired me as follows:—

Ingersoll, Ont., May 29, 1897.

To Cargill, M.P., Ottawa.

McGregor and Featherston's statements before Agricultural Committee misrepresents us. We have no hogs from Essex, positively refusing to buy them, on account of being corn-fed. We have bought some hogs from Bothwell and Thamesville, which are in Kent, but these are fed mixed grains; but we do not buy hogs west of these points, in the counties of Kent or Essex. It does not matter what breed hogs are, if fed wholly on corn, they will not do for export. Writing you fully.

INGERSOLL PACKING CO.

Their letter followed, and I will with the permission of the committee read it. It is as follows:—

Ingersoll Packing Company,
Ingersoll, Ont., May 29, 1897.

To Mr. Cargill, M.P., Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—We were more than surprised this morning to read the report of the statements made before the Agriculture Committee, which misrepresents fact, and, as our name was brought into the matter, we wired you this morning, refuting the statements. The writer of this letter had the pleasure of meeting you on the 10th instant in Ottawa, and remembers well the conversation we had in the lobby over corn-feeding to hogs. He did state to you that we would not buy hogs from the counties of Essex and Kent, and, to show you, we inclose you a copy of a letter written by us on March 24th of this year to J. L. Scott, of Chatham, which shows our position in the matter. We have been getting a few hogs from Bothwell and Thamesville—which the writer did not think of as being in the county of Kent, when speaking to you—but this is as far west as we go for hogs, and even from this district we are more or less afraid of them being fed too much corn; but a statement such as McGregor and Featherston made, that lately 26 cars of hogs had gone from Essex to London and Ingersoll packers, as far as we are concerned, is untrue. We have had no hogs whatever from Essex for a long time back, and we always write people in the same strain as copy of letter inclosed, to J. L. Scott. We do not know where Mr. McGregor got the opinion that he expressed, and we regret very much that he gave publicity that the Ingersoll Packing Company prized corn-fed hogs as much as any other, as people versed in the trade would think that we knew very little about the business. To-day, we are paying $5.25 for Canadian mixed-grain-fed hogs, while our own packing house in Chicago is paying only $3.60 for corn-fed. Now, it is a well-known fact that, if we raised the same kind of hogs that they do in the United States, there is not a packing house in this country that could exist, because they could not compete with United States packers and pay the same money. It is only on account of the quality of the Canadian hogs being so much superior to the United States hogs that allows us to operate. We are only pleased to be able to write you on this matter to explain our position, as we do not like to be classed with certain politicians to which you referred; so that we trust, if you have an opportunity to refute the statement made by Mr. McGregor and Mr. Featherston, that you will do so.

Yours truly,
INGERSOLL PACKING COMPANY.
Per Pro. C. S. Wilson.

P.S.—We are not in the habit of making one statement to one man and different to another, as Alex. McClaren.

I should have read this previous letter addressed to Mr. J. L. Scott. It is as follows:—

Ingersoll, March 24th, 1897.

J. L. Scott, Esq., Chatham, Ont.

Dear Sir,—Your favour of March 23rd to hand, and contents fully noted. When you can satisfy us that the quality of the hogs from your district is all right, we shall be pleased to do a large business with you. Our experience with hogs from your district for the last two or three years has been very unsatisfactory, and only last week we tried a single deck shipped on the Canadian Pacific Railway from Chatham, and there were a good many soft hogs in them. Now, until your farmers realize the importance of the right kind of feeding, the hogs from Essex and Kent will never be suitable for export. They are similar in quality to United States hogs, but hardly as good, and if we had to kill that class of hogs, it would be better for us to make bonding arrangement and buy American hogs, which we can get at a great deal less figure. We very much regret that we cannot get hogs from your section, as we are now killing a large quantity of hogs weekly, all the year round, and it would suit us well to be able to get a supply from your district; but we had better pay a good deal more money for hogs from the north, where we can rely on the quality.

Yours truly,
INGERSOLL PACKING COMPANY.
Per Pro. (Sgd.) C. C. L. Wilson.

This is the opinion of the Ingersoll Packing Company, as extensive a packing company as there is in the country. In corroboration of what the hon. member for London (Mr.

Beattie) said, I will just read you a letter that I have from the London Packing Company, which is as follows:—

London, Ont., 2nd June, 1897.

Henry Cargill, Esq., M.P., Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—We have learned that it was reported before the Agricultural Committee by Messrs. McGregor and Featherston that both the Ingersoll Packing Company and the Canadian Packing Company stated that they would just as soon have corn-fed hogs as any other. We beg to inform you that, if we want corn-fed pork, we would go to the States and buy it, as we can get finished pork there at prices below the present prices which we have to pay for Canadian peafed, live hogs. Of course, we have no objection to corn being imported free, as it is a good feed for cattle, horses and other farm stock, but it should not be fed to hogs.

The Canadian bacon has now a good reputation, and the price paid for live hogs is about 2 cents per pound, live weight, more off cars than the present price, off cars, in Chicago.

We would like to believe that the farmers of this country are so intelligent that, even if corn this year is very cheap, they would not spoil the reputation of Canadian bacon by feeding it. If they do, the consequence will be that the Canadian hogs will drop in price to the same level as the American hogs.

We have taken the liberty of writing to you because we heard that you have been talking against these men. Thanking you for your kindness in championing this cause, we remain,

Yours very truly,

THE CANADIAN PACKING CO.

John H. Ginge.

Notwithstanding the knowledge of the Minister of Agriculture, and with all due deference to his opinion, I have reason to believe, that men who are experts, men who are engaged in any particular calling, have a better knowledge of that particular line of business than men who are not practically concerned in it. I have therefore every reason to believe from the expressed opinion of those two packing houses that it would not be in the interest of the Canadian farmer to feed corn wholly to his hogs, but I do believe that a little corn mixed with other grain is all right. I am quite satisfied that these bacon packers are quite averse to buying corn fed pork. We now have a reputation for our bacon established in Great Britain, and it would be a very serious matter for us in any way to injure the good name which our bacon has on the English market.

Mr. MACKIE. I contend, Mr. Chairman, that it is in the interest of the farmers of Canada to get their corn free of duty. The lumber trade of Canada uses an immense quantity of pork every year, but they are obliged to get thousands of barrels of mess pork from the United States, because it is not produced in this country. I believe that if we had free corn, the farmers of Canada would raise enough pork to supply the very large demand of the lumbermen. Notwithstanding the duty of 2 cents a pound immense quantities of pork are brought into Canada in order to meet our demands. I believe it will be to the advantage of the farmer to be able to obtain their corn free of duty, and I shall therefore support the proposal of the Government.

Mr. KLOEPFER. When the tariff commission sat in Guelph extensive farmers, like the hon. member for Huron (Mr. McMillan) appeared before it, but the small farmers were not represented. Mr. Hobson was the spokesman of the large farmers and he advocated free corn. About a week after the tariff commission sat there, the farmers of the locality who held about 100 acres of land, and are not stock feeders, expressed their dissent from the remarks made by Mr. Hobson, and declared themselves against free corn. The ordinary farmer wants to use his coarse grains, and he is not in a position to keep his cattle until they are fat, but he is obliged to sell them before that, to the butchers at home. It is only farmers who are stock raisers, like the hon. member for Huron (Mr. McMillan), who want corn free for their own use, but their interests and the interests of the ordinary farmer are distinctly different. I state here, and I believe it to be true, that not one farmer out of 20 wants free corn. Free corn will make oats and pease cheaper in this country, and it will also make wheat cheaper, because the middlings will not be used by the stock raisers, if the corn comes in free. I believe also, that another result of free corn will be, that our farmers will be obliged to sell their hay at $2 less per ton than they receive now. We know that the American farmers will not let $1 come into Canada if they can help it, and once our money is sent over to the United States to purchase corn, we can say good-bye to it for ever. The hon. member for Huron (Mr. McMillan) stated some time ago that wheat declined in price 42 cents in the United States as compared with 24 cents in Canada. How is it that they reduced the duty on wheat to 3 cents a bushel? For the next year we will find how much the price of flour will go down in the eastern provinces, while the farmers will get a good deal less for their wheat. A year from now will tell the tale. I believe the farmers should be protected as much as possible. The mechanics of this country are not afraid to pay a little more for their bread; they are willing to give the farmer a little more for everything. If the manufacturers are protected, the workingman is protected, and in the long run the farmer gets the benefit, because in the spring he can get 25 cents a dozen for eggs in the town at home, instead of having to pack the eggs and send them abroad, because before they reached their destination the price would be down. The same is the case with regard to butter and everything else of that kind. I thank the House for the attention with which they have listened to my remarks.

Mr. MCGREGOR. It was not my intention to speak on this matter, and I would not have done so had not the hon. member for East Bruce (Mr. Cargill) spoken so strongly against the pork purchased in Essex and Kent, and I thought it unfair to listen to that challenge without taking it up. This is a pretty large country, and it uses a good deal of pork; and it is astonishing to me to find a gentleman, with two little packing-houses, one at London and the other at Ingersoll, coming into this House and condemning the pork produced in Essex and Kent. Sir, there are no two counties in Canada that produces the quantity of pork which is produced in those two counties; and it is of the very highest quality and commands the very highest price paid in Canada. I have a letter in my possession stating that one dealer alone in the county of Essex sold more than 200 car-loads of pork to the packers in Canada, for which he received the very highest price. We may not produce the kind of pork which is satisfactory to the two packing-houses at London and Ingersoll; but they are not the whole of Canada; they are a very small portion of it. The larger portion of the pork packed in those packing-houses is exported, and they are exporting a kind of pork which was not formerly produced in this country. They require a lean, lanky hog, whereas in Essex we have been growing the fatter kind of hog. But we know that the Essex pork, the Kent pork and the Bothwell pork compares favourably with any pork produced in Canada. It is not all corn-fed pork, any more than all the pork of the east is pea-fed pork. We use mixed feed, which is the best for our purpose. Now, it is said that we ought not to import corn. We have still 7½ cents a bushel of duty on corn brought into Canada. Hon. gentlemen have been talking about the duty on corn increasing the price to the farmers, yet this year in Essex, Kent and Bothwell, fifty-six pounds of good, clean, shelled corn has been sold for 19 cents per bushel on the ear. I have been brought up in this country, and I have never known the price of corn to be so low as it is now. If protection increases the price of our farm products, why should fifty-six pounds of corn bring only 19 cents? It is a most hollow argument. It increases the wealth of the farmer to be enabled to buy corn where he can get it the cheapest for the improvement of his stock. In the county where I live, Walkers use at least 3,000 bushels of shelled corn per day while the distillery is in operation. The farmers of Essex produce the larger portion of that corn, and Walkers pay the farmers of Essex the larger portion of the duty, because they say that the corn costs so much in Chicago, they add the freight, and they pay exactly as much for the corn as they would if it came from Chicago.

Mr. CARGILL. Then you are beating the farmer out of that duty.

Mr. KLOEPFER.

Mr. MCGREGOR. These gentlemen talk about corn coming in free now. Were they not allowing corn to come into this country free for human food? And three-fourths or seven-eighths of that corn was fed for fattening purposes to cattle and hogs. In this way we had free corn in the larger part of the Dominion of Canada under the late Government, under the guise of human food; and they are the gentlemen who talk about free corn. In conclusion, I have only to say that in the counties of Essex, Kent and Bothwell we produce the best pork that is produced in the Dominion of Canada, and we will allow no packing house to run down the quality of our pork.

Mr. MARTIN. At no period in the history of Canada could it have been more injudicious to bring in corn free than it is at the present time. I say that because I do not know any period in the history of Canada when the prices of coarse grains have been so low as they are at present. There might have been a time when it was judicious to introduce corn free, that was, when the farmers of this country could not produce sufficient coarse grains to feed their stock. Every hon. gentleman knows that to-day this country produces much more coarse grains than are required by the farmers for feeding their cattle. My hon. friend from Huron (Mr. McMillan) urged us to rise above party politics in discussing this matter. Well, I should hope that hon. members would rise superior to party politics, not only in discussing this but other questions as well, and I would also suggest to my hon. friend that he should not only rise above party politics but above personal interests, and I throw out the suggestion without design to make any personal or offensive allusions. There was one thing which struck rather forcibly in the remarks of the hon. Minister of Agriculture. He started out with evidently great faith in his ability to prove that it was necessary for our farmers to have free corn, but when a few questions were put to him he found himself obliged to shift his ground, and favoured us with this peculiar argument. He said that since we had given Great Britain preferential trade, we ought to offer something to the United States, and he thought that by admitting their corn free we might conciliate them. Having failed to prove to this House free corn was necessary for our farmers to feed their stock, he had to resort to the plea that this was after all a sop to conciliate the United States. If this be a sample of the free trade which this Government are going to introduce, it is a sample that is going to injure the farmers of this country. The Government evidently suppose that they can do anything to the farmers and the farmers will not resent it. Instead of opening up new markets for the farmers, as they promised, they are about to take from our farmer the market he has.

I shall have much pleasure in voting for the amendment.

Mr. PERRY. I wish to protest to this House against the claim of the hon. gentleman to represent the views and interests of the farmers of Prince Edward Island. He certainly does not represent their opinions on this subject. The hon. gentleman must know that the cheaper our farmers can buy the feed for their stock, especially the poorer class of farmers, the better for them. The hon. gentleman is therefore standing in the light of the welfare of his own constituents. If we look back to the 23rd of June, what do we find was the expressed will of the people? It was that the Government should carry out their policy of a tariff for revenue only, and the people of Prince Edward Island are expecting the Government to carry out that policy to the fullest extent possible, and they look with favour on this proposition to allow corn in free of duty. I should like to see the Government admit many other articles free which are used by our farmers.

Amendment negatived: Nays, 33; Yeas, 76.

Mr. INGRAM. There were hon. gentlemen on the other side who have not voted either way.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not vote because I was paired with the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper).

Mr. CAMPBELL. I was paired with the hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Kendry).

Mr. GIBSON. I was paired with the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Corby).

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I was paired with the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague).

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I propose to divide item 357 which classes a number of the silk articles at 35 per cent and to admit some at 30 per cent and the remainder at 35. I propose that the item should read:

Velvets, velveteens, silk velvets, plush and silk fabrics, thirty per cent.

Ribbons of all kinds and materials and manufactures of silk of which silk is the component part of largest value, n.e.s., thirty-five per cent.

The object is to reduce the duty on certain articles which are used by manufacturers, and, perhaps, I may add that they are not made in Canada, so I suppose there will be no objection.

Amendment agreed to.

Metal glove fasteners, papier-mache shoe buttons, eyelets, eyelet hooks, and shoe-lace wire fasteners.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have been requested to ask the Minister of Finance to add the words, "and sewing machine attachments" and strike out the word "and" after the word "hooks." Sewing machine attachments are not made at all in the country, and the manufacturers of sewing machines have requested that these attachments be admitted free.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. What do you mean by sewing machine attachments?

Mr. KLOEPFER. They are the small attachments that makes the frills, they go on the needle bar. They are not made here.

Mr. QUINN. I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Finance to the wording in section 592:

Wire, of brass, zinc, iron or steel, screwed or twisted, or flattened and corrugated.

I am informed by the shoe manufacturers in Montreal that there is no wire that is flattened and corrugated, but that the wire is either flattened or corrugated. No wire is both flattened and corrugated.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. We will change it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would like the committee to change the wording of items 174 and 175, on coal, not to change them very much in substance, but that the wording might be better. There was a change made at an earlier stage which I explained. The object of the change was that we should place our tariff in such a position that we could avail ourselves of whatever advantage there might be in the American tariff. Accordingly we proposed to fix the duty at the equivalent of 60 cents per long ton, and I placed the figure at 54 cents. That is not strictly accurate, and I propose to fix it at 35 cents, which will bring it clearly within the terms of the American tariff. That duty of 53 cents is subject to the reciprocal tariff. We have also provided what we regard as an inducement to the Americans to take a further step by putting in a proviso that we shall reduce our duty to 40 cents whenever they do likewise. Now, if this is desirable, and of course that is the view which the Government have, it is unreasonable to expect that the Americans will reduce their duty to that point unless we are disposed to make it the same from the United States as from any other place. What we propose therefore is that the reciprocal duty shall apply at present to the 53 cent rate, but if the Americans should accept the offer of a 40 cent rate that would be the minimum from all countries.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a very important point. That is taking up the principle of not only allowing the countries whose tariff on the whole is of such a nature as to make it equal to that of Canada, to receive the reciprocal privileges, but it is actually taking one single article out of the tariff of a country and making it applicable to that article alone.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Quite so.

Mr. FOSTER. That is entirely different from the principle you laid down.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is desirable that we should make our offer in a form that will tempt our neighbours to accept it.

Mr. FOSTER. You are not going to give Great Britain any preferential treatment on that. By the present duty put on coal Great Britain has a preference of one-eighth and later on of one-quarter. To-day you are going to give a preference to the United States whose tariff is way above the Canadian tariff and you are undertaking to break down the whole principle you have put forth. You are giving an equal preference to the United States that you give to Great Britain while Great Britain gives you free trade and the United States prohibition upon that line.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. At this particular moment the United States duty is not away up, but below our own duty.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is there any consistency in the tariff of that kind?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The object we have in view is twofold. First, to lower the rate upon coal in Canada, and second, to lower the rate on coal going into the United States. Both are desirable purposes. We propose to offer the Americans a 40 cent rate and if they accept that offer we shall make that the minimum duty on that class of coal from all countries. We must make this offer attractive to the Americans if we desire that they shall accept it. I shall read the clauses. Items 174 and 175 are as follows:—

Bituminous slack coal, such as will pass through a half-inch screen, subject to regulations to be made by the Controller of Customs, twenty per cent ad valorem, but not to exceed thirteen cents per ton of 2,000 pounds (being the equivalent of fifteen cents per ton of 2,240 pounds): Provided that if the United States Congress shall fix the duty on such slack coal at a rate not exceeding fifteen cents per ton of 2,240 pounds, then the duty on such coal imported into Canada as provided in this item shall be the minimum duty on such coal from all countries, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in section 16 of this Act.

Coal, bituminous, round and run of mine, and coal n.e.s., fifty-three cents per ton of 2,000 pounds (being the equivalent of sixty cents per ton of 2,240 pounds): Provided that if the United States Congress shall fix the duty on such coal at a rate not exceeding forty cents per ton of 2,240 pounds, the Governor in Council may by proclamation reduce the duty mentioned in this item to forty cents per ton of 2,240 pounds, or the equivalent thereof per ton of 2,000 pounds, and the duty declared by such proclamation shall then be the minimum duty on such coal from all countries, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in section 16 of this Act.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know whether my hon. friend proposes to take the discussion on this now. But so far as I am concerned I stand for the preferential treatment of Great Britain rather than of the United States. I am not going to have the Premier of this country going over to Great Britain and declaring to them on all the platforms where he is so well received, that we are giving to Great Britain a preference over every other country in the world, while on this great item of coal which Great Britain produces in abundance and which is carried by her vessels to this country give to the country whose tariff is hostile to us in almost every respect a favour as compared with Great Britain. If there is anything which marks the absurdity of the tariff principle laid down by hon. gentlemen opposite this is one of the things. My hon. friend cannot expect that to be carried without debate.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. It does not give a favour; Great Britain will be in precisely the same position as the Americans.

Mr. FOSTER. But my hon. friend knows that the whole raison d'être of his tariff principle was that Great Britain should have the favoured place.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. There are exceptions to that. There is sugar, and the manufactures of certain articles which are exceptions.

Mr. FOSTER. We have to deal with the hon. gentleman's policy and not with articles of the tariff or with single exceptions taken out. Does my hon. friend the Controller of Customs now propose to take out any items of high tariff countries and to place them in the preferential schedule and still keep the high principle that he started out with? Great Britain gives us the freedom of her market now and is she not to have a preferential tariff on those articles which she can export to our country?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) may remember that the preference is offered to all nations.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not what the Premier of this country has been telling to British audiences. What he has been telling them is that Canada, out of good will and because Great Britain has given us the freedom of her market, is giving her a preference, and yet it is proposed on this article to give the same preference to the highest tariff country in the world.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The result of our declaration was that this country was open to every country willing to avail itself of our offer.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Minister of Trade and Commerce state that on the whole the tariff of the United States is favourable to us and that therefore they should have this favourable treatment in reference to one article.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We are not only desirous that we should have the coal of the United States, but we desire that the coal at the two ends of our Dominion shall have a market in the United States. Our tariff is framed in the interests of Canada. It is in the interest of Canada and of the Canadian consumer; in the interests of the consumer as well as in the interest of the Canadian coal producer who think it desirable to offer these terms to the United States. They get no favour but even terms, and they give us even terms. The only inconsistency is in the hon. gentleman's imagination.

Mr. FOSTER. If it is the consumer my hon. friend is careful for, let the consumer have the benefit of the one-eighth and one-quarter reduction on British coal.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He has it now. We agree that while the duty remains at 53 cents, the preference shall be given, but if we bring it down to 40 cents, that shall be the minimum rate for all countries.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The preference remains. It is only in the event of its coming down to 40 cents. I think the hon. gentleman ought to let that pass.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We are very anxious if we can get through with the whole tariff to-night. I think the hon. gentleman might let that be done. I grant you that the question which the hon. gentleman has raised is worthy of debate.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we have reached our limit now.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The natural way to take it is when the Speaker is in the Chair. If it is not allowed to pass now we will lose the stage.

Mr. HENDERSON. I wish to call the attention of the Controller to the fact that he promised to make an addition to resolution No. 14.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The words we intend to add are these: "or before a notary public or commissioner for taking affidavits."

Mr. HENDERSON. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to appeal once more to the Minister of Finance on behalf of the makers of carriage hardware, who have requested to have their Norway iron and steel for the purpose of making carriage hardware and threshing machinery wheels free. These manufactures have been reduced 2½ per cent on their output; and all the manufacturers of the same line have their material free. It does not hurt the manufacturers of iron or steel in this country, because these goods have to be imported. I am informed by Mr. Gillies, who is one of the manufacturers, that if the tariff is allowed to remain as it is he cannot get on.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have endeavoured to meet as many suggestions as possible from hon. gentlemen opposite, but I do not think we can agree to that one.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I wish to move a resolution, in the same form that my hon. friend opposite had, to prevent confusion arising out of the changing of the resolutions as they passed through the House. It is as follows:—

Provided, that in the case of goods which were imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption and on which duty was paid, on or after the 23rd day of April, 1897, in accordance with the rate of duty set forth as payable on such goods in the resolutions respecting the duties of customs introduced in the House of Commons on the 22nd day of April, 1897, or in any such resolutions subsequently introduced in the said House, the duty so paid shall not be affected, nor shall the person paying it be entitled to any refund or be liable to any further payment of duty, by reason of such rate of duty being altered by any resolution introduced subsequently to that in accordance with which such duty was paid and before the passing of this Act.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved the adjournment of the House.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the House adjourns, I want to call the attention of my hon. friend to the incomplete nature of the return which was brought down in answer to an Order of the House, with reference to the commissioners appointed to try the political partisan cases. I find that it is altogether incomplete. For instance, so far as the province of New Brunswick is concerned, I do not find the name of Mr. William Wilson or the name of Mr. Atkinson, both of whom have been active in judging, particularly on the line of the Intercolonial Railway. I would like to have that return made as complete as possible. There were two or three other returns ordered, neither of which I suppose would take half an hour to prepare, in the Post Office Department: one, correspondence with regard to dismissals at Upper Majorville Post Office; another, correspondence on Mr. King's appointment to the post office at Marsh Hill, and another with regard to the employees dismissed in the counties of King's and York.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 2.15 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 18th June, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock a.m.

PRAYERS.

NOVA SCOTIA SOUTHERN RAILWAY.

Mr. KAULBACH asked :

Is it the intention of the Government to bring down resolutions this session granting the usual subsidy of $2,200 a mile for the extension of the railway known as the Nova Scotia Southern from New Germany to Halifax via New Ross, to connect by branch lines with Chester Basin, Chester and Hubbard's Cove ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). That will be known when the subsidy resolutions are brought down. I am not in a position to give the information before.

BOUNTY TO FISHERMEN.

Mr. KAULBACH asked :

Is it the intention of the Government, in consequence of the depressed condition of the fishing industry in the maritime provinces the past few years, to increase the bounty to fishermen by submitting a resolution to that effect this session ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright.) It is not intended this session to entertain the bounty.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS— ARREARS OF INTEREST.

Mr. PENNY asked :

Are the Quebec Harbour Commissioners indebted to the Government for arrears of interest on cash advanced? If so, what is the present amount of arrears for interest on that account ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Yes; $1,241,327.46.

Mr. FOSTER.

SATURDAY SESSION.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved :

That when this House adjourns to-day it stands adjourned until to-morrow (Saturday) at 11 o'clock a.m.

Mr. SPEAKER. I draw the attention of the hon. Minister to the fact that I shall not be able to leave the Chair to-morrow at Six o'clock under this resolution.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is more convenient that we should adjourn at pleasure without fixing any absolute hour.

Motion agreed to.

BEHRING SEA CONVENTION.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I beg to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Davies) to a matter of very considerable importance which, I see is stated in the London correspondence of the "Globe," "Gazette," and a number of other papers:—

London, June 13.—The Associated Press has reason to believe that in consequence of the representations made by Col. John Hay, the United States Ambassador, to the Foreign Office, the attitude of the British Government with regard to the reopening of the Behring Sea question has undergone some modification, and that whereas some weeks ago it was believed Lord Salisbury was averse to the question being discussed until the date arranged by the Paris award, viz., next year at the present moment there is a disposition to discuss matters now. Inquiry at the Foreign Office fails to elicit what this change exactly is. The greatest reticence is displayed in the matter. At the American Embassy also the officials decline to discuss the matter.

I may say, in a very few words, and if necessary I will conclude with a motion, though I hope it will not be necessary as this matter is one of considerable importance. When the international convention was held at Paris, on the Behring Sea question, and a conclusion arrived at, the parties who represented the United States claimed, on their return to the United States, that they had accomplished completely their object, that in fact Canadian sealing in the Behring Sea was practically extinguished. That view was not exactly held by either Great Britain or Canada, and it was not very long afterwards until an agitation was commenced on the part of the Government of the United States to reopen the question on the ground that instead of having extinguished Canadian sealing, which was undoubtedly the object the United States had in view, and giving the monopoly of the entire business to the very powerful corporation to whom the United States Government had leased the American fisheries in the Behring Sea, the seals were going to be exterminated by the Canadians. It was provided by the Tribunal that at the end of five years the question might be reconsidered, and down to the present, Her Majesty's Government, certainly with the hearty concurrence of Canada, have taken the ground that whatever information might be obtained, either by officials of Great Britain or Canada or the United States, the question would not be re-opened, but should remain as it was until the termination of the five years period. I draw attention to the fact, of which, of course, the hon. gentleman is perfectly well aware, that the Government of the United States have appointed a very able gentleman indeed, Mr. Foster, who represented them at the International Tribunal at Paris, for the purpose of devoting his entire time and energies to getting this Behring Sea question reopened by Her Majesty's Government, and not only to actively use such exertion as he can with Her Majesty's Government but to appeal to Japan and Russia and other countries with a view of forcing Great Britain to depart from the terms arranged at that International convention. Knowing, as I do, that Mr. Foster is an exceedingly able man, and knowing the persistent efforts that both great parties in the United States, and the entire press of that country, have made, from the first, to strike down a Canadian industry on the Pacific, I want to call the hon. gentleman's attention to the necessity of Canada being specially on the alert to do everything possible to prevent the reopening of the question. So far as I am advised, Her Majesty's Government had persistently refused to reopen it, but I am not at all certain that this information sent from the Associated Press has not a good deal of foundation. I happen to know that it was due to the persistent and energetic efforts of the very able Minister of the United States in London, Mr. Phelps, that the Foreign Office were, in the first instance, disposed to permit this question to be dealt with in a manner that no similar international question had ever been dealt with before by any country in the world, so far as I am informed.

Now, as my hon. friend knows, the Imperial Government requested the Government of Canada to name gentlemen to go in conjunction with those named by the Imperial Government for the purpose of investigating facts connected with seal life. Accordingly these gentlemen were sent out, and I noticed that Her Majesty's Government have laid on the Table of the House of Commons the report made by Professor D'Arcy Thompson who was commissioned by Her Majesty's Government to deal with this question, and I think I am right in saying that Mr. Venning and Mr. Macoun were appointed to act in conjunction, in this investigation, for the purpose of acquiring information. The American commissioner having published his report, it becomes absolutely necessary that the report of Professor Thompson should be made public. I will detain the House for a few moments while I read a sentence or two from that report. I quote from page 25 :

I do not propose to explain all the points that an examination of the statistics suggests. But while I believe that there are sufficient discrepancies to indicate the presence of other factors in the case, yet it would, in my opinion, be useless to deny that the figures tend to corroborate the presumption that pelagic sealing is responsible for a large part of this autumnal mortality.

The general result of our investigation, accordingly, is that pelagic sealing, instead of being the one and only cause of the whole mortality of pups upon the islands, is, in fact, responsible for an unknown, but considerable, fraction of a fraction which is somewhat over one-half of the whole.

That is a very important statement and one that I think, from the best information I have, the officials sent out by the Canadian Government with the Imperial commission, would probably tend to modify ; and I draw the attention of my hon. friend to the desirability of laying upon the Table of the House the report of the gentlemen specially commissioned by Canada at the request of Her Majesty's Government to join in this commission of investigation and giving the widest publicity throughout the press to the views contained therein. There is another sentence contained in this report which is very reassuring :

In the foregoing account, I have merely set forth my observation of the herd and its past history, in so far as both together show that the alarming statements to which utterance has been given in recent years, the accounts of the herd's immense decrease, and the prophecies of its approaching extinction are overdrawn and untenable.

It is upon these overdrawn and untenable statements that efforts is being made to induce Her Majesty's Government to do that which, I think, would be a very great misfortune because it would tend to disturb the weight and importance and value of great international arbitrations and investigations such as that held in Paris. I am sure it is not necessary to say more, because my hon. friend fully appreciates the importance of the case. I wish to call the attention of the Government to the active exertions made by the opponents of a great Canadian industry whose avowed object is its extinction, and the necessity of taking every means, through the public press and official communications with Her Majesty's Government, to prevent this insidious design on the part of the United States being carried out.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). It became my duty shortly after assuming the office I now hold to master, as fast as I was able, this subject of pelagic sealing in Behring Sea. I appreciate fully the importance of the matter, and the department has taken note of the recent appointment by the United States Government of General Foster to visit the Court of St. James, and endeavour, if possible, to obtain an alteration of the Paris regulations before the expiry of the five years. After studying up the question as far as I could, I determined to follow on the lines of my predecessors. So far as any action taken by the Canadian Government is concerned, we have invariably followed in the lines taken by the late Government. We have opposed in every possible way with the Imperial Government any change being made in the regulations of the Paris award governing this pelagic sealing until the expiration of the time for which it was originally fixed. Speaking generally—and I think I can say this without any breach of official etiquette—so far I have no reason whatever to fear that the British Government will take any action opposed to the representations of the Canadian Government. I may say to the hon. gentleman that this Government sent Mr. Macoun last year to make a scientific study of this question along with Professor D'Arcy Thompson and Mr. Barrett-Hamilton, who were sent out by England. I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Barrett-Hamilton on his return, and talked the whole matter over with him. And when Professor D'Arcy Thompson and Mr. Barrett-Hamilton returned to England and were making their report, so important did I deem the matter, I sent Mr. Macoun from Canada to England to compare his notes with theirs, so that their report would be on the same line. tally, if possible, that is, that they should compare the data they had collected so that their reports would be on the same line. And I am happy to say that I have received assurances from England that Mr. Macoun gave the most invaluable assistance to Prof. D'Arcy Thompson in preparing his report. In one point I differ from the officers of my department in this matter. When I had read the reports from year to year and had given the matter consideration, I came to the conclusion that we had adopted a foolish policy. The United States were publishing reports of the scientists every year as soon as they were received and the newspapers were publishing excerpts from these reports, and so guiding, influencing and making public opinion in favour of their case. In England the reports were published and laid before Parliament and they proved a most valuable repertoire from which facts could be obtained from time to time. But I found there was a deep-seated aversion on the part of the gentleman who controls that branch of the department's business to publishing reports of our Canadian scientists. I argued with him, and presented the case from my point of view. But the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) knows how reluctant a Minister is in a matter of this kind which has been before the department for years, to override a strong opinion held by the gentleman in charge of the branch. He opposed very strongly the publication of these reports. I have never wavered in my opinion that he is making a great mistake. I am glad that the hon. gentleman has brought this matter up and I shall call Mr. Venning's attention to the fact that the leader of the Opposition agrees in the view that I hold, that the report of Mr. Macoun, which is a most valuable report, should be published. I have read both reports and compared them and I believe that Mr. Macoun's report is even more valuable than that of Prof. D'Arcy Thompson. Mr. Macoun is a man who takes the greatest pains to be accurate, he has been on the ground from year to year and he knows whereof he speaks. The data he has collected and embodied in his report, and the argument are almost irresistible as against any change in the regulations and against the views of the United States Government hold on the subject of pelagic sealing. If I am able to overcome the reluctance of my officer I hope we shall have this report published also. If I had had my way it would have been published before this. But I do not like to go in opposition to an opinion held so very strongly by Mr. Venning, that we would gain in the long run by keeping the report back. I think he has made a mistake and I shall press upon him the importance of publishing the report. I may say that the English Government has again sent Prof. D'Arcy Thompson and Mr. Barrett-Hamilton to the Pribyloff and Commander Islands, and we have sent Mr. Macoun. The Americans have also sent their scientists. I think it would be absurd, in view of the differences of opinion among these gentlemen to make any change in the regulations until the five years have elapsed. I have compared the conclusions reached by Prof. Jordan with those of Prof. D'Arcy Thompson. Though their conclusions do not agree, I am pleased to be able to say that the facts they give with reference to seal life on the Pribyloff Islands do not differ very much; and I think that by comparing the facts that Dr. Jordan gives with those of the other authorities as to the number of seals to be found at different times, the prevailing impression that pelagic sealing is destroying the seal life is entirely unfounded. I thank the hon. gentleman for bringing this matter forward, and I shall take care that the officers of my department have this matter specially drawn to their notice.

JUDGE OF THE DISTRICT OF RIMOUSKI.

Mr. CHOQUETTE asked :

1. Whether Mr. Justice J. E. Larue, who is charged with the administration of justice in the district of Rimouski, was appointed with the condition that he should reside at the chef lieu of the district?
2. If not, why not?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). Mr. Justice Larue was appointed judge of the Superior Court of the province of Quebec on the 12th April, 1886, and then assigned to the judicial district of Bonaventure and Gaspé, and directed to reside at New Carlisle or Percé. Afterwards by Order in Council of 25th February, 1888, he was transferred to the district of Rimouski, but the Order in Council contains no direction as to his place of residence.

DISMISSALS, INVERNESS, 1879.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness) asked :

1. How many dismissals of Dominion officials were effected in the county of Inverness on the 15th September, 1879, at the instance of Dr. Hugh Cameron, then a defeated candidate?

2. The number of appointments effected on the 15th of September, 1879, for the county of Inverness by Dr. Cameron's recommendation to replace those dismissed ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). The answers to the hon. gentleman's questions are as follows :—1. Twelve : Hugh Gillis, Murdoch A. Ross, John Cameron, John Meacher, Michael McDonald, A. McLellan, James McGarry, Kenneth McKenzie, Malcolm McLeod, George Ingraham, John Carroll, Donald McDonald. 2. #### I.C.R.—EXTENSION TO MONTREAL.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). If the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) has no objection, the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) would like to take a pro forma stage of the report of the committee relating to the Intercolonial Railway extension to Montreal and introduce a Bill—that is if there is to be no discussion.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think there will be any discussion.

Resolution read the second time and concurred in.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 142) to confirm certain agreements entered into by Her Majesty with the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada and the Drummond County Railway Company for the purpose of securing the extension of the Intercolonial Railway system to the city of Montreal.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would suggest to my hon. friend that he might state to the House that he was good enough to show me the original contract and found there was the error mentioned.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When the House was in Committee of the Whole I sent for the contract which had been executed between this company and the Government, and put it into the hands of the leader of the Opposition, who had an opportunity of inspecting it, and he handed it back to me. He desires me to say that the agreement as it was printed appeared to have contained the error referred to ; but in looking over the original draft before it was sent to the printer, we found that it was in the form in which the committee finally placed it, that is to say, that the error had occurred in the printed contract passing from the original draft into the present form in which it was finally executed, and in which it was before the committee, that is to say, the word "west" was not changed to "east." That has been since rectified.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Royal Military College of Canada..... $65,000

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. In moving this vote, it is desirable perhaps that I should explain to the committee certain important changes which are about to take place in the organization and general management of the college. As the committee are aware, for a number of years past the attendance upon this college and the number of graduates per annum have been steadily decreasing. To such an extent has this gone that, as the committee probably is also aware, many gentlemen on both sides of the House had come to the opinion, expressed pretty freely on the floor, that it would be better to abolish the college altogether. In that opinion the Government were not able to concur. They thought that the college had in the past rendered considerable services to Canada, and that particularly in view of the relations between ourselves and the British Government, it would be a great pity to destroy an institution which had in no slight degree contributed to inspire abroad a good opinion of the military capacities and abilities of the youth of Canada. But we felt that we could hardly justify to ourselves or to the House, asking for a large sum unless there was a reasonable prospect that a considerable number of our people would avail themselves of the advantages afforded by the institution. The new commandant, Col. Kittson, submitted to the Government a scheme by which he thought it was probable that the utility of the college would be largely increased and the gross expenditure diminished to a considerable extent. The main features of this scheme, which have received the approval of the Government, are these: In the first place, the length of the period of the attendance at college is reduced from four years to three. In the next place, the annual expense inflicted on the parents of the cadets is also considerably reduced, from, I think, $350 or $400 a year to $250 in round numbers. The net result is this, that whereas under the old system it required about $1,400 a year to pass a cadet through the college, under the present system, about $700 or about $750 would suffice. The scheme of instruction proposed for the cadets remains essentially military. One or two subjects have been dropped, but on the whole the college remains as it was originally intended to be, a military college chiefly. I think the staff of professors is to be reduced by five, involving a saving of $5,000 or $6,000, and I will not require to ask the House for a vote of $65,000, but I will ask the committee to reduce the sum to $60,000 per annum. The professors who have been retired are Prof. Harris, Prof. Day, Prof. Wurtele, Prof. Waddell and Prof. Duval. Most of these gentlemen were retired. I may state, in pursuance of the report of the Board of Visitors who inspected the college in 1895, and who had been appointed by the late Government. I may state generally that the main alterations, apart from the reduction of four years to three, are these: The subject of free hand drawing is made optional. The course of military engineering is confined to such subjects as are necessary for a cadet passing into the Imperial service. The course in physics, chemistry and geology is somewhat reduced. The instruction in English is confined to the first and second years, it being considered that no person should be admitted into the college who was not fairly well grounded in all subjects comprised in an ordinary English education. As to mathematics, civil engineering and civil surveying, they remain with the same number of hours allotted to them as under the old system. These are briefly the changes that have been made, and it may interest the committee to know that they have already resulted in an enormous increase in the number of applicants for examination at the college. Whereas in former years the number had fallen, I am informed, to something like nine or ten per annum, I have received information from the commandant that on the present occasion, for the first time, I think, in 12 or 14 years at least, 40 gentlemen have applied to be examined as cadets, a larger number than we can possibly admit. I am inclined to think that the result of the changes that have been made will greatly popularize the college, and throw it open to a much larger number of persons than could formerly have competed for it. I am strongly inclined to believe also that within the space of two or three years, the college will be fully attended. It was intended in the first instance to provide for the instruction of 120 cadets. That number, as I mentioned, had greatly fallen off, and I believe that in the last few years the number was hardly more than 40 or 50 at the outside. Of course under these circumstances it was obvious that the staff was very disproportionate to the needs of the college, and that was one of the reasons which led to the reductions which have been made, under the advice of Col. Kittson. Having only three classes to deal with instead of four, it was quite obvious that a smaller number of professors is required. But I think that from all I have been able to learn as to the results of the proposed changes, they will have the effect in a very short time of restoring the college to the position that it formerly held, and of providing an ample supply of candidates from time to time. With these remarks I move that the sum be reduced from $65,000 to $60,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I must in the first place thank my hon. friend the leader of the House for his courtesy in bringing forward this item at the present moment, compelled as I am by urgent private business to leave for London to-morrow. I need not say to the hon. gentlemen opposite how reluctantly I part from them a day or two before I otherwise would be obliged to do so.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The reluctance is mutual.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I stated frankly to my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) my anxiety to have an opportunity of saying a few words to the House, upon what I regard as an extremely grave question. The grandest and most enduring monument that the late Alexander Mackenzie raised to his memory was the Royal Military College of Kingston. Mr. Mackenzie founded that institution in the face of considerable difficulty. He quite appreciated the unpopularity of asking the Parliament of Canada to spend a large amount of public money for the purpose of founding a military college, but he regarded the position which Canada occupied in connection with its defensive organization to be of such great moment, as to warrant him in asking Parliament for the expenditure of a large sum of public money, not only at the outset, but annually afterwards, for the purpose of giving full and complete instruction to such of the young men of Canada as wished to acquire a military education, and which would stand the country in good stead in the hour of need. The result has justified the sound opinion that Mr. Mackenzie entertained on that occasion. I may say, that from the day of the foundation of that military school down to the unhappy hour when the present Government changed the policy heretofore pursued, the objects of Mr. Mackenzie in founding the Military College have been faithfully carried out by the Conservative Government in Canada. I regard the policy of this Government as a complete departure from the object of Mr. Mackenzie in founding the Military College, and a departure as well from the policy of the Parliament of Canada in sustaining it from year to year up to the present time. Regarding this complete change as an abandonment of all the principles on which Parliament could be asked to spend this money, I regard this measure as the death knell of the Royal Military College, and as a complete effacement of what I have already said, is the noblest monument to the memory of the Hon. A. Mackenzie in this country. I take issue at once with the statement of my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright), that there has been failure in the past management of the College, to maintain it in the high position that was anticipated for it. I contend, Sir, that the Royal Military College of Kingston always maintained the very highest standing in Canada and in the Empire. One of the best authorities in the British Empire, a gentleman who has given great attention to this very question, Major General Sir Andrew Clark, put on record this declaration: That the Royal Military College in Canada was second to no military school in the world. We cannot have much higher praise than that for the Royal Military College at Kingston. Major General Clark stated, that he gave this opinion, not only after a careful consideration of the curriculum of that college, but on what was more valuable still, namely, the high class of men that that college had turned out. Major General Clark was aware that eighty cadets of the Royal Military College were serving in the Imperial Army, and that no men who received their education in any other part of the world surpassed these gentlemen that Canada had sent to the Imperial army. I give that as an evidence, that the objects that were in view when this college was established have been thoroughly realized. The hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) has made disparaging remarks as to the condition in which the present Government found this college, when they came into power, and in reply to that, I shall read a few extracts from the highest authority in this country. I refer to the report of Major General Cameron who had been for many years, and who was at the time this report was made, responsible for the condition of the college. In his annual report for 1896, Major General Cameron, among other things said:

It is the intellectual—it is not the mechanical side of soldiering which has chiefly to be dealt with at a military entrance college.

If our critics could for a moment have realized this point, and allowed honesty guided by intelligence to regulate their remarks, they could not have yielded to the malign influence which led them to disparage the work being worthily done by the instructors and cadets here. They might have learnt that in 1893, the Inspector General of Fortifications of Her Majesty's Forces, on a deputation on military education to the Secretary of State for War, spoke of our graduates in the highest terms, saying: "The officers we get elsewhere than from Woolwich, are far better than those who come from Woolwich, either with regard to science or with regard to general education. The officers which we get from the Military College of Canada are very good men indeed: it is true we get only one or two from there, so perhaps they are the best the college can produce." Again, before a Royal Commission to inquire into the entrance examination, in 1894, they are referred to as having had a higher standard of work, and more knowledge of what was required by Royal Engineers than graduates from Woolwich.

I draw the attention of my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) who is now presiding over the Department of Militia and Defence to that statement, which says, that the cadets from the Royal Military College of Kingston are of much higher standing than the cadets from Woolwich.

Our adverse critics might have learnt too, that within a few weeks preceding the commencement of their attacks, general progress had advanced to a point never before attained in the history of the college, since its foundation in 1876.

We have the statement of the gentleman who had been in charge of that college for years, that instead of having lost ground, the college never stood in a higher position than it does now, or than it did at that period.

Previous to the last four years, the most distinguished gold medallist of the college was Mr. Wm. J. Stewart, who graduated so long ago as 1883, with a record of 54,656 marks.

During the last four years that record has been exceeded in four instances by from 924 to 1,802 marks.

The next highest record made previously to 1892, was by Capt. Lang, D.S.O., R.E., with 53,505 in 1883. Since 1891 his record has been surpassed seven times, by an average of 1,769 marks.

The third highest record up to 1892 was made by Mr. R. W. Leonard, with 53,271 marks this again in 1883. His score has been surpassed, since 1891, eight times, by an average of 2,760 marks.

Only three graduates named—inclusive of but one gold medallist—find place and rank as 5th, 9th and 11th, amongst the following gentlemen, who, with one exception in 1891, all graduated since 1891: Messrs. F. H. Vercoe, R. J. F. Hayter, J. F. Fraser, N. S. Ridout, G. R. Frith, G. F. F. Osborn, G. N. Cory, D. S. McInnes, G. S. Wilkes, V. L. Beer, W. C. Dumble, J. W. Osborne.

So that but for the men of 1883, all those whose names I have read, graduates of the last few years, surpassed all previous records since the foundation of the college in 1876. Moreover, prior to 1892, in only one instance did the marks of a gold medallist exceed the mere average marks of the graduating class of last year.

Ailusion has already been made to the high place accorded in 1893 and 1894 to graduates of the Royal Military College of Canada by leading expert opinion in England. In 1894, and again in 1895, extensive military surveys were made for the Dominion Government.

All the gentlemen who executed the work were cadets within the last three years:—Messrs. F. B. Osler, R. W. Brigstocke, J. E. Beatty, N. S. Ridout, H. L. Gordon, F. N. Gibbs, P. E. Thacker, F. D. Lafferty, R. E. Tyrwhitt, A. T. LeFevre, A. A. Inksetter, F. E. Leach.

In this list there is repeated only one name previously mentioned.

The survey effected gained for these gentlemen the highest encomiums from the Dominion authorities, and the marked appreciation of expert military authorities in England.

Passing to drill:—The Queen's Cup for rifle shooting by teams of eight, is probably the prize which excites most thorough competition throughout Her Majesty's regular forces. The very best marksmen can alone have the honour of representing their respective corps in the contest.

In 1895, the victory in the match for the Queen's Cup was distinguished by success far surpassing any previous record. So great were considered the merits of the victorious team, that not merely were its members personally eulogized in the warmest terms of appreciation by the Viceroy of Ireland, and Field Marshal Lord Roberts on a specially appointed parade, but they were summoned from Ireland to Windsor Castle by Her Majesty, in order that they might receive their reward from the hands of the Queen of the British Empire.

On that team of eight, the Royal Military College of Canada was represented by a graduate of 1894, 2nd Lieutenant R. H. B. Magee, of the Royal Munster Fusiliers.

This year, a graduate of 1893 carried our college colours to victory at Cairo. Winning the grand aggregate in the military contests there, he came within one point of being champion marksman in Egypt, and captured the fencing championship.

Our representative was 2nd Lieutenant J. J. B. Farley, of the Prince of Wales' North Staffordshire Regiment.

This year again, this very month, graduates and cadets have had an opportunity of proving in public competition the excellent results of drill exercises here.

The college was represented at the Toronto military tournament by 14 persons.

The sergeant instructor, three graduates of 1890, 1891 and 1894 respectively, and ten cadets.

In eleven contests they took seven first prizes and five second places.

Lieut. Panet, R.C.A., a graduate of 1891, tied with Lieut. Peters, G.G.B.G., in taking the greatest number of individual prizes.

Eight cadets:—Messrs. D. Weatherbe, J. A. Stairs, H. H. Syer, L. G. Bennett, C. deB. Doucet, F. H. Courtney, C. D. W. Unlacke, H. R. Payzant, took part in winning three first prizes and one second in five events.

The critics to whom reference has been made, and others with political views, are ever ready to associate this very regrettable paucity of attendance with wrongly imputed and undefined mismanagement of the college

SIR CHARLES TUPPER

But the true causes are probably these:—

The inducements to join the college have been diminished, and neither Parliament nor the general public actively evince due appreciation of the essential connection between national safety and higher military education.

The cadets' payments for the college course—at first $650—were increased in 1880 to $1,050, and again in 1888 to $1,450, at which they now stand.

Concurrently, prizes offered to successful graduates have, practically, been an uniformly broken promise of appointment to the permanent militia, and the general staff, with four commissions annually presented by Her Majesty, and most liberally supplemented from time to time, by additional appointments to the regular forces.

Up to 1888, thirty-seven extra commissions were allotted by the Imperial Government.

During the following seven years, up to the present time, only two extra commissions were assigned.

During the period that the payments by cadets stood at $1,050, they had thirty-seven extra Imperial commissions, and were further buoyed up by the expectation that effect would be given to the statutory Order in Council, providing for first appointments to the permanent militia being reserved for them.

I will not trouble the House with reference to that matter further than to say that in response to a motion made by my hon. friend Colonel Tyrwhitt, the papers were laid on the Table of the House; and I certainly think that in a matter of such importance the Government should have anticipated any motion of the kind, by giving this House at the earliest period of this session the evidence that they were going radically and completely to change the organization of the Royal Military College, and to take away every vestige of ground for asking, not $60,000 but one dollar a year for that institution. I will briefly read the changes which have been made, to show the House what has been done:

1. The course of instruction to be reduced from four to three years.

2. The subject of freehand drawing to be eliminated.

3. The course in military engineering to be confined to those subjects which are necessary to a cadet passing into the Imperial service.

This is not the course in engineering which Mr. Mackenzie established, and which was intended to qualify a man not merely for going into the Imperial service, but for remaining in Canada, and in case of necessity giving his services to the country and making some return for the education which he had been provided at the public expense.

4. The subject of strategy to be eliminated.

5. The course in physics, chemistry, geology and mineralogy to be reduced to the requirements of a modern civil engineer, and to be made alternative as far as practicable.

6. Instruction in French to be confined to the first and second years.

7. Instruction in English to be confined to the first and second years.

8. The subjects of mathematics, civil engineering and civil surveying to have, approximately, the same number of hours allotted to them as under the existing four years' system.

9. The distribution of subjects throughout the three years to be :

First year—Mathematics, geometry and engineer drawing, English, French.

Second year—Mathematics, military topography, tactics, artillery, military administration and law, military engineering, English, French.

Third year—Civil engineering, civil surveying, physics, chemistry, geology and mineralogy, artillery, reconnaissance, military engineering.

10. The reduction of the annual fee of cadets from $200 to $100 per annum.

11. The cancellation of the regulation imposing a fine of $100 upon cadets withdrawing before the completion of the full course.

12. The commandant, and such officers of the staff of the Royal Military College as are necessary, are appointed to conduct the matriculation examination of the college, in the place of the existing headquarters' board of examiners.

The regulations for the Royal Military College of Canada to be amended accordingly.

I may say that the adoption of these changes is upon the recommendation of Lieut.-Col. Kittson, at present Commandant of the Royal Military College at Kingston, by a report submitted by the Minister of Militia; and I may further say that Lieut.-Col. Kittson, in making these recommendations, refers to the president of the College, Major General Gascoigne and says: "In accordance with your verbal instructions." Why, Sir, fancy a young gentleman, brought out here from London to take the position of Commandant of the Royal Military College, and receiving from the Major General Commanding the Militia of Canada, and brought into this country and maintained here at a high salary, treating a subject of such profound gravity and importance upon verbal instructions. It did not even involve the necessity of the Government taking the trouble to know what instructions Major General Gascoigne was giving to the Commandant of the Royal Military College in his capacity as president. He only gives verbal instructions. Why, Sir, has anything of the kind ever been heard of, like a radical and complete change in the organization of a great institution of this country, maintained at a great expenditure of public money, being undertaken under mere verbal instructions? Though not possessing the technical knowledge of this subject to the extent which I felt desirable, I understood enough of it to know that a complete and radical change was being made in the view held by Mr. Mackenzie when this important institution was founded. All that any hon. member need do is to refer to the debates of this House, and he will find that what the late Mr. Mackenzie aimed at was the establishment of a high class independent institution. He was not willing to place it under the control of the Major General commanding the forces in Canada, but he wanted a high class Imperial officer to take charge of it, and be placed in an independent position and responsible to the country for its management. Well, Mr. Mackenzie obtained the services of a person of that kind, in the person of Major Hewitt, who for ten years discharged the duties of that office with the greatest ability and success.

This Government, on coming into office, found in that position Major General Cameron. They found that he had been there for several years, and they knew that in Major General Cameron the country had a commandant of the highest education and occupying a distinguished position as a scientist. I need only refer to the fact that the Royal Geographical Society of London, have appointed him to represent it at the meeting to be shortly held in Halifax. I need not say that in Major General Cameron, these gentlemen knew they had, as commandant of the college, a man who had not only gained distinction in the army, but had performed in Canada most important services as Her Majesty's representative on the International boundary question between the United States and Canada. In that distinguished position, he discharged his duties with such ability that upon the recommendation of the late Mr. Mackenzie to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in England, he was given a mark of Her Majesty's approval in the decoration that was accorded to him. I am sure that during his many years of service no Government could, for a single moment, have charged him with having failed in his duty in Canada or to the department under which he served. Hon. gentlemen may say that there was a board of visitors who made a report and a number of recommendations, and who expressed their disapproval of the course which General Cameron had taken. I can dispose of that in a few words by drawing attention to the fact that not one of that board of visitors had the qualifications or experience to warrant him in criticising effectively the administration of such an institution as the Royal Military College, and I do not believe that the hon. gentleman now leading the House will say for a moment that that board was at all qualified to exercise any such function. But what did they do? Why, this board of visitors went to Kingston and adopted a very novel course. They established a star chamber. They called the professors and cadets before them and pledged their honour that any statements made by those cadets and professors would be treated as strictly confidential, and the party affected by such evidence would never know what evidence had been given. Such a course was utterly indefensible, and when the late Government read the report of these gentlemen, they simply put it in a pigeon-hole. They said that an investigation carried out in that way in which it was admitted this investigation was, could not be taken into account at all, and they never even referred the report to Major General Cameron or much less asked him to answer any charge or statement in it.

I have something more to say, and it is this. Major General Gascoigne, after his appointment to the command of the militia of Canada, visited the Royal Military College in his capacity as president of that institution. I shall read to the House the statement which he made, and I think I can show that my remarks touching the board of visitors are amply borne out by his report. There were one or two things that were found to be well-founded, but my hon. friend will find in the archives of the department that Major General Cameron again and again asked the Government to make those changes which he considered necessary for the efficiency of the college, so that he was not open to any criticism on these points.

From the General Officer Commanding the Canadian Militia to the Honourable the Minister of Militia and Defence.

Ottawa, 2nd December, 1895.

Sir,—In accordance with your instructions, I visited the Royal Military College at Kingston on Wednesday, the 27th ultimo. I had previously notified the Commandant of my intention of visiting the college in uniform, and I was received by him with the utmost courtesy, and shown everywhere over the building; and I made a most exhaustive inspection thereof.

I visited all the classes twice during the morning, and thoroughly looked into the course of study pursued. I inspected the cadets on parade, and witnessed their drill, both infantry and afterwards artillery. I saw a large squad practiced in gymnastics, as also in fencing and single-stick practice. I thoroughly inspected the whole of the dormitories and recreation rooms, also the hospital and kitchen, and I dined with the cadets at their dinner hour. I invited any cadet wishing to see me on any subject to come forward, but there were no complaints made to me, and there appeared to be a thoroughly contented spirit among them all. I append herewith a report of certain matters which appeared to me as worthy of notice.

In conclusion, I would earnestly ask, as a personal favour, that, in consideration of this, my first visit to the college, that the Christmas holidays of this year may be extended for one week, viz.: from Monday, the 23rd of December, to Saturday, the 11th of January, instead of the 4th of January, as originally proposed. I asked the Commandant to give his consent to this extension, under the circumstances I have named, and he had no objection. I trust, therefore, that my request may be granted.

I have, &c.,

W. J. GASCOIGNE,

Major General Commanding Canadian Militia.

Major General Gascoigne also sent in a confidential report. He has, I regret to say, a strong penchant for communicating his views either verbally or in confidential reports. Why, in dealing with public matters of grave importance, he should not be willing to be held responsible for his statements, it is for him to explain and not me. He sent in a confidential report, which was also brought down, and is also under my hand. I may say that, in my judgment, no gentleman, no military man, no officer in Her Majesty's service, has put his name to a document more discreditable than that. He put in an official document—and I leave it to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce if it has any bearing on the matter—the statement that more pipe-clay, that smartness of dress was needed, that Major General Cameron's uniform was not up to the exalted standard of General Gascoigne. He put in a statement of that kind, which I say he would not have dared to put his name to, in a document for which he would be held responsible, because it would be a violation of the rules of the service to which he belongs, for which he would at once be called to account. And Major General Cameron has not up to this hour been able to get General Gascoigne to admit that in this statement he had any reference to him. Why? Because such an admission would render him accountable to the Imperial authorities for having censured a superior officer, an officer holding a higher position in the Imperial service, which is not permitted by the rules of the service, without the party affected being furnished with a copy of the statement. But I can quite understand, and I will explain in a very few words, this wide departure from Mr. Alexander Mackenzie's views as to what a commandant of the Royal Military College should be.

From the discussion that took place when this college was founded, the position was taken by the House and had always been continued down to the present, that the head of the college should be a high military officer not under the control of the Major General of the militia. He occupied an independent position under the Department of Militia of Canada, responsible to the Minister and not to the commanding officer. Well, what is the difficulty here? No doubt Major General Gascoigne was very anxious to have removed from Canada and from the service of Canada an officer whose position was superior to his own, and he went so far in violation of the principle on which the college was founded as to propose that a young officer of the militia should be found to take the position that Mr. Mackenzie, in founding the institution, had asked should be given to an officer holding a high position in the Imperial service. Major General Gascoigne wanted a young man, one, I suppose, who would allow him to direct him by verbal instructions to which he is so partial. But when he comes to the gist of his report and puts on record a declaration as to the character, standing and position of the college, he can find nothing, absolutely nothing, to suggest that had not already been brought to the attention of the department by Major General Cameron himself. What does he say:

So far as I was able to judge, the military instructors were all exceedingly keen, energetic and zealous officers, with a great desire for the welfare and good of the college. They set a good example to the cadets, take a great interest in their recreation, as well as their studies, and I was in all respects satisfied with all. I look forward, at no distant date, to all these appointments being held by Canadian officers who have themselves been graduates of the college, are, therefore, well acquainted with the college, and must, therefore, have a great additional interest in its welfare. The terms of appointment of these officers should always be limited, so as to admit of their being always up to date; but, by employing Canadian officers, who had obtained their commissions in the Imperial service, through the college, it would greatly tend to raise the status of the college in the eyes of the people of Canada, and would go far to dispel the idea (erroneous though it be) that the annual gift of four commissions in the Imperial army to the college, was a loss, rather than a gain, to Canada, by taking away four of her best men. If these men returned to Canada as instructors, she would be not only benefiting them, but also would herself derive benefit from them.

I was perfectly satisfied with all the professors, with the one notable exception of the French instructor.

And I may say, so far as that is concerned, that Major General Cameron had already called the attention of the Government to the necessity of having what he considered a more active, energetic, and able French instructor. But he never proposed that French should be taught by an Englishman. The only French gentleman connected with the college has been sent away—

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) may rest assured that Prof. Duval will be replaced by a gentleman of French birth.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I must take the matter as I find it. I find that under the present commandant of the institution the French instructor is an Englishman.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think my hon. friend has in his hands the report of the Council in which it is expressly declared that, as regards the French professor, he is to be replaced by a Frenchman.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am delighted to hear it, but it is news to me. If this point is covered by the report that I have, it has escaped my attention. But I shall come to it if it is in the return. But I say that whoever may be the French instructor, he will not be able to teach the pupils to read or write or speak French during the period of their instruction.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am sure the hon. gentleman does not wish to convey a wrong impression as to the facts. On the 26th April, 1897, the Order in Council was passed, and it reads in part as follows:—

The Minister, accordingly, recommends that, in accordance with the powers conferred by the Royal Military College Act, Your Excellency may be pleased to approve the change proposed, except as to the substitution of an English professor in French, and that they be published in the "Canada Gazette."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It appears, however, that Lieut.-Col. Kittson wanted an Englishman appointed to teach French.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That, however, was not approved by the Government.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That fact has escaped my attention. I am glad to find that this is to be remedied. But I have taken the facts as published in the "Canada Gazette," and I do not think this appears there. I shall come to that by-and-by; but I may say that if the ablest French instructor in the world were sent to the college he would be wasting his time and the time of his pupils, because the French course has been so completely altered as to make it impossible to teach the English students French. Englishmen do not learn French with the facility with which Frenchmen learn English, and our deficiencies must be taken into account in this matter. I will pass over the paragraph respecting the hospital, and come to that headed "The Cadets—their appearance, physique and deportment:"

I was greatly pleased with the physique and general appearance of these young men. Take them all round, they were a body of youths of whom Canada may justly be proud. They were of unusually good physique, well set up, with a healthy appearance and pleasant manners. I noticed that their hair was not kept as closely cut as should be in a military, or indeed in any other college, but, with this trifling exception, to which I directed attention, there was nothing whatever to take exception to, but quite the reverse.

So that, apart from the recommendation, which Major General Cameron had already made, that there should be a more able French teacher, the only possible suggestion that this gentleman, who says that he has examined the college critically and gave not only the general report but this confidential report to the Government, could make, was that the hair of the students was not cut quite as short as, in his judgment, it should have been—not quite short enough, I suppose, to show that they were following the great example of the Major General commanding the militia. Notwithstanding the deplorable fact, which he insinuated, that the dress of the commandant of the Military College was not quite up to the Gascoigne standard, he does not find in the cadets any evidence of want of smartness or want of attention, or anything to indicate a failure on the part of the commandant to maintain the efficiency of the college, except this one matter of the length of the cadets' hair. Doss this bear out the statements of the visitors of the college? No, Sir; it sweeps away every insinuation, every statement they have made. The report proceeds:

I feel confident that every one of these young men, whatever his futuro may be, whether civil or military, will leave the college, greatly benefited by his stay there; will be improved in tone and manner, and will, therefore, be a better citizen of this great Dominion. The country should, therefore, be proud of the college, and do its utmost to improve and help it.

Yet, when he is called upon by the Government to give instructions to a young man who comes out from England to take the place of the experienced officer who has his charge, he gives his instructions verbally and that results in striking down every important military characteristic of this college, as I shall show before I sit down:

I consider that the mixture of civil and military education is a most happy one, the discipline taught by the military element of the college being of the utmost benefit to all alike, whether their destination be civil or military, and, as the number of military openings to young men is exceedingly limited in Canada, it is absolutely necessary that there should be a civil education side by side, and I consider that this is most happily arranged.

It is not necessary for me to say more than that you have there from the hand and over the signature of the gentleman who shows his anxiety to have Major General Cameron removed from the college, a declaration that everything in the college except the length of the hair of the cadets, was everything that could be desired and that the college was in a position of which Canada ought to be proud. I draw the attention of my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) to the fact that, from the time Major General Cameron took the position of commandant of the Royal Military College down to the time when he received less notice than would a domestic in a gentleman's house in England, in not a single case did the Government draw Major General Cameron's attention to anything that he had done of which they disapproved. Now, I ask my hon. friend whether, under these circumstances, he thinks it was just to the Government of this country, that it was just to the Parliament of this country, that it was just to the people themselves, to strike down, and change and remodel completely from top to bottom, a great institution founded for the purpose of promoting the defensive organization of Canada, without taking the advantage of the opinions of those well qualified to give them. The Government were not obliged to follow opinions, they were not obliged to accept any opinions; they were in a position, if they thought, in their judgment, it would be wise, to make a change because they thought it would be desirable to replace Major General Cameron by another officer. I find no fault with that; but I say that here the Government of Canada was treating with an officer of the Imperial Government, with a gentleman who came recommended from the Imperial Government as qualified to take that position; and I may say here that Sir R. Thompson, who had been for a long period Under Secretary of State for War in the War Office of England, told me, when Major General Cameron was ordered to the commandantship of the Royal Military College, of Kingston, that he did not know an officer in the service of Her Majesty that was better fitted to do full justice to that position, or that would be more satisfactory to the Imperial Government. Why, Sir, the answers to the questions given by the hon. gentleman the other day as to the tenure of office on the part of the professors' staff in that college, show that no professor on that staff, much less the commandant, is permitted to resign his position without six months' notice, and then it must apply to the end of the year. Now, I would ask my hon. friend whether, under these circumstances, the Government were not bound to give similar consideration to the commandant of the Royal Military College, one whose predecessor, Major Hewitt, had held the position for ten years and then resigned it because he wished to go back into the Imperial service, not because he was called upon to do so by the Government of Canada; and my hon. friend told me they could not keep him because the Imperial Government refused to loan his services any longer, and therefore he was compelled to leave the position of his own accord, and at the instance of the Imperial Government. But I say that General Cameron, holding that office, having been appointed without any reference to any limit of time, was entitled by law—and I put that to my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, in view of the regulations of the Royal Military College preventing any man on that staff from leaving the service without, practically, a year's notice, because it must be six months' notice, and must be terminable at the end of a year—I put it to my hon. friend whether Major General Cameron was not in a position by a fiat to claim a year's salary, or to receive from the Government six months' notice, or a year's notice, and then if they desired him to vacate his office, that he should be treated as a gentleman and as an officer, as a man holding the high and influential position that he did. And what did he get? Why, he gets a confidential communication from Major General Gascoigne, who is so partial to confidential communications, saying that the Government proposed to make a great change in the Royal Military College, and would be greatly obliged to him if, at fifteen days' notice, he would clear out and vacate his office. I say that in all the history of the Government of this country, disreputable as have been some of the things that have been done, you will find it difficult to parallel such a transaction as that on the part of any Government that has ever been in Canada. Under the circumstances, I say that it is most unjust. I do not, for a moment, say this in support of Major General Cameron. I am proud to know the position he occupied in Canada and in Great Britain, the Imperial Government having again and again borrowed his services from the War Office to enable them to deal with great and complicated questions like the Alaskan boundary, and other important questions in which they required scientific attainments of such a high order that they wanted to get his assistance. Only the other day Her Majesty's Government brought down a volume of a report of Major General Cameron's on the Alaskan boundary, made at the request of Lord Rosebery, who had obtained his services from the War Office for the purpose of dealing with that difficult and complicated question. I say that under these circumstances is there a gentleman in this House who will not say that the Government failed in its duty, in what it owed to itself, much less to General Cameron, in notifying this gentleman through a private communication, which I had the greatest difficulty in extracting from them, and it required weeks before we could get it laid on the Table of the House—a confidential statement that the Government wanted him to resign, and, of course, he did so, but it was a forced resignation. The moment the Government intimated that they wanted his office, he had no other course to pursue but to tender his resignation. But I do not think that the fact of that being a forced resignation, under the circumstances, qualifies the indisputable moral claim that he has to be regarded under the rules and regulations of the college where he was serving. Now, I felt that this is a somewhat technical subject, and one with which the Major General was much better able to deal, and I asked him for his views, and sent him a copy of these regulations which were going to establish such a radical change of the whole basis of the Royal Military College as should make any independent member of this House refuse to support it in the new and changed conditions, for reasons to which I shall call the attention of the House directly. I sent for a report from Major General Cameron, and I will read the brief criticism with which he has favoured me upon this subject, and for which he is willing to be held responsible here and everywhere :

Remarks on the Reorganization of the Royal Military College of Canada.

From the steps which have been taken in the reorganization of the Royal Military College of Canada, it is no longer doubtful that its true relation to the defensive organization of this country has been lost sight of, and that the advantages sought from it and offered by it are about to be sacrificed by inexperienced and reckless attempts to attain some wholly deceptive standard—if, indeed, there be any defined result aimed at.

If regard be had to the relation of the Kingston College to the defensive organization of Canada and to the conditions prevailing in the country, it must be apparent that its proper sphere differs widely from that which limits in England either Sandhurst, the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich, or the Staff College.

I invite the attention of the House to that statement, that those institutions are entirely different from the Royal Military College at Kingston. Those institutions are merely the means of entrance into the Imperial army, and when in the Imperial army, the whole course of instruction is aimed to carry them up and on until they become thoroughly qualified in all those branches that it was the aim and object of the Military College at Kingston to teach.

The aim of Woolwich Academy and of the college at Sandhurst is to give such an elementary military education to the schoolboys entering them as may fit them for passing—it may be at the age of seventeen and eighteen—directly into Imperial service regiments, where the rudimentary knowledge of principles and methods they have received, is continuously developed and applied throughout their service, aided by such additional instruction as is furnished by the Staff College, the schools of gunnery and infantry, the artillery college, the school of military engineering, cavalry school camps of instruction and an almost endless list of opportunities with motives for continuance of military studies while on the active list.

Here every member of the House will see the broad line of distinction between the Royal Military College, of Kingston, and Woolwich, or any other of those preliminary places, which are merely the opening to admit those parties into the position in which they have to become thoroughly educated and qualified for their military duties. The aim of the Military College at Kingston was to give such an education, so complete in itself as to enable these parties, when they went out of it, to discharge these duties in any position to which they might be called in the future.

Consequently, in England no inconvenience is felt in giving the cadets merely such an education as fits them to join regiments—it might almost be said that no more need be done or is done at the military entrance schools in England.

But in Canada, the system of defensive organization requires much more than this to be done, under much less favourable circumstances.

Canadian cadets have no inducement to keep up, on leaving college, the military education they have there received, much less have they any inducement to pursue their military studies at the close of their Kingston course of training.

So, it is absolutely necessary in order to be on that list, that the military training and education should be as complete as possible.

The attainments of the Kingston cadet, especially in mathematics and elementary physics, on joining, are insufficient to enable him to properly appreciate any but rudimentary military instruction; and it is not until his education has made considerable progress in some branches of what have been termed a civil education, that he is in a position to appreciate a large part of what is necessary in his military training.

Moreover, the present condition of the country is such that candidates for entrance into the college cannot be induced to come forward in sufficient numbers for the purpose aimed at, unless those who succeed in qualifying are either assured of public employment in the future, or assured of receiving such a general education in addition to military training, as may give them at least as good a prospect of success in civil life as is offered to them by the civil institutions of the country.

Not only, then, should the military training at Kingston be more advanced than at Woolwich or Sandhurst, but it should embrace all that is included in the Staff College, and much of that embraced in the School of Military Engineering and School of Gunnery, which latter are attended only by officers after they are commissioned.

Unless at least this standard be kept steadily in view, it will be impracticable to develop the college so that it may meet the requirements of this country's defensive organization. It is only by the thorough mastery of subjects, in the absence of continued subsequent practice, cadets can be turned out who will be capable of efficiently discharging military duties when, on an emergency, the public would naturally look to them for assistance. But the thorough mastery is unattainable, if the course of instruction be curtailed and compressed. The college has by no means yet arrived at the required standard of instruction to justify any pause in endeavour to raise it.

The case now presenting itself is this:

The standard of military education at the college sufficient for the education and training required by the defensive organization of Canada; the civil education at the college having hitherto been inadequate; the duration of the course insufficient for the education and training required by circumstances; and the inducements offered to candidates insufficient to attract enough of them, the Government adopts the following measures:—

1. It reduces the military education at the college, by elimination and curtailment of subjects, and by reduction of time for training.

2. It reduces the civil education by elimination and curtailment of subjects and reduction of the staff.

3. Reduces the duration of the course from four to three years.

4. Makes an abatement of $100 a year in charges against the cadets.

5. Makes a vague statement that such of the cadets as shall gain a place in the upper half of their respective graduating classes may receive certain unnamed military appointments; and

6. Places responsibility for conducting entrance examinations upon the Commandant, assisted by such of the staff as may be necessary.

The changes noted in 1, 2 and 3 of the above, are manifestly injurious to the interests of cadets, their college and the country.

No. 4—Reduction of the fees by $100 annually; does not promise permanent effect, if at all. During the four years, 1880-83, when payments by cadets were $250 a year, the average number joining the college was only 15 a year; yet from 1892-95, while the charges against cadets were as high as $362.50 a year, the average number joining annually was over 17; the reduction of $100 a year and of the course from four to three years, now adopted, makes the average annual charge $266.66, or $16.66 higher than the annual payment from 1880-83, when only 15 a year were attracted to the college. The comparatively larger number of cadets (24 a year) who joined during the four years, 1885-88, was synchronous with the allotment of no less than 33 extra commissions in the Imperial service. The effect of no more extra commissions being granted is causing a falling off in the number of cadets in attendance—commenced in 1889 and continued till 1892, when all who had been attracted by the extra commissions, had left the college. Thereafter, the average was over 17 matriculants, and, allowing for casualties, this number would give somewhere between only 50 and 60 in actual attendance at the college.

5. The newly promulgated condition, that a graduate shall be eligible for employment by the Canadian Government only in the case of his passing out in the upper half of this class, is a curtailment of the prospects hitherto in force, all graduates having heretofore been alike eligible. Moreover, in 1885 all members of the graduating class took their diplomas with honours.

I call the attention of the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) to this fact: that those who stand at the bottom of their class, but who are still higher in their attainments, and receive more marks, than those who obtained the highest position in the class in previous years, are under this arrangement to be entirely ineligible:

Why should any individual who has graduated with honours, be at the bottom of his class, be deemed outside the number of those who are eligible for public appointment?

Again, Imperial service commissions are not unfrequently won by Kingston graduates who pass from the lower half of their class. That such as these should have their eligibility for public employment in Canada curtailed, is not consistent with even the contention that this country's military school standard should not be higher than of English military schools.

6. The College Act prescribes how the college entrance examinations are to be conducted. It does not appear how the provisions of the Act, until amended—which in this respect it has not been—can be varied by an Order in Council.

The change, moreover, is an objectionable one. If commandants are to be replaced every five years, they may be assumed to be ignorant of the educational conditions of Canada, and fitness to conduct civil service examinations is not amongst the qualifications to be expected in officers selected to be commandants. The young officer who, it is considered, should occupy the position by the present Government, has passed from an English school into a military one, and thence into his regiment—a history which almost precludes a possibility of such a one being able to adjudicate intelligently as a civil service examiner.

So, that the commandant has been charged with duties that eight out of ten commandants would probably be unable to discharge. The course of his instruction, and the conditions under which this young gentleman who is now the commandant, has been brought up, makes it next to impossible that he should be able to discharge the duties of a civil service examiner. He is called upon by the change in the Act, to discharge duties which in my judgment he will only attempt to discharge with the greatest possible injury to the public service :

A provision in the College Act, as it stood originally, compulsorily ruled that the college course should be one of four years.

Experience brought to light that this rule was unjust and undesirable in several cases. From illness and other causes, the operations of the law had sometimes the effect of quite unnecessarily depriving a cadet not only of his diploma, but of all benefit he had in prospect when joining the college, with the additional serious disadvantage that the special curriculum of the Kingston College put it out of his power to find another institution in the country at which he might pursue his studies uninterruptedly.

Under these circumstances, the mandatory provision of the Act was made discretionary.

Since that amendment, there have arisen demands for the reduction of the length of the college course.

The permissive language of the Acts admits the interpretation that the course may be less than one of four years, but this was not the purpose of the amendment, and scarcely justified the action of the Government in the reduction it has made to three years by Order in Council, without reference to Parliament.

Of Col. Tyrwhitt's questions, only No. 2 was answered. Major Kittson reports revenue from 90 cadets at $100 will be $9,000, nearly as now. Forty-seven times 200, but omits $5,994 direct additional public expense, messing forty-three extra cadets, 46 cents for 300 days, besides other extra charges of college. The two hundred dollar fee includes tuition, board and lodgings, &c. University fees include only tuition. McGill Applied Science fee is $150. Hitherto four years studies at college, each, for mathematics, military engineering, French, English, and freehand drawing, now to be two years without any drawing.

I would draw the attention of my hon. friend to this statement because under these circumstances he will have to leave the $65,000 in his Estimates, owing to the blunder that has been made in the calculation. You are to have two years of French taught there, which I believe to be utterly inadequate for the purpose intended. I intended, Mr. Chairman, to have made some further remarks with reference to the dismissal of Sergeant-Major Morgans, whose only claim to be dismissed, it appears, was that having brought the standard of his department up to the highest possible pitch, he was obliged to return to England, owing to his connection with the Imperial army. The Government of Canada having knowledge of the immense value of the services applied to him to come out again, and the charge that his drill is not up to standard has been absolutely disproved by the communication from the Imperial authorities, who find that his drill instruction was not only up to date, but that he was able to prepare the cadets of the Royal Military College of Kingston, for a successful competition with that gallant Highland regiment of Toronto, a team from which has now defeated a team from a crack regiment in the Imperial service, in the great military exhibition on the other side of the Atlantic. That shows that Sergeant-Major Morgans was one of the last men whose services should have been dispensed with. I believe that the Government will have to reconsider the terms upon which they propose to get rid of a number of these officers.

As a last word, I implore the Government from my seat in Parliament to stay their hand from striking down the Royal Military College at Kingston. The more we examine the proposition of the Government the more we find that there is no excuse for it. Let this policy of the Government be the changed standard of the Royal Military College at Kingston, and you sweep away the only raison d'être for its existence. You will have that military college imperfectly discharging duties that can be better performed by the universities in Toronto, Kingston, Montreal and Quebec. If you make this radical change in the Military College, you will place it in competition with the great educational institutions of this country who can perform that particular work better, and you will make the Military College inefficient and ineffective for the purpose for which it was intended when it was founded. What can justify for a single moment the expenditure of $60,000 of public money per annum to hold this miserable, ineffective competition with institutions which will perform the service much better? There can be no justification; and if my hon. friend will look at this matter impartially, if he will review the foundations of this Royal Military College, as laid deep and strong by the leader of the former Government of which he was a member, and in whose action he no doubt entirely concurred, he will find that the views which the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie entertained and enforced on this House, and upon which he got this Parliament to assent to the establishment of this institution, are not being fulfilled by what is proposed, and will come to the conclusion that he will be doing the grossest injustice to Canada, to the Government, and to all concerned, if he insists on making this complete and radical change in the organization of a Royal Military College which has commanded the admiration of the ablest military authorities, and the declaration from the highest sources that there was no military college in the world superior to that at Kingston. Maintain that college at the high plane at which Mr. Mackenzie placed it, and at which we have endeavoured to maintain it down to this hour, and it will have no more ardent supporter than myself; because, as a defensive measure for Canada, I regard it as of the most vital importance. But persist in this radical change which is now proposed to Parliament, and I will feel it my duty, and I believe hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House will feel it their duty, on a future occasion, when there will be more time to deal with this important question, to take the ground either that the Royal Military College at Kingston shall be maintained in all its integrity, and fitted to perform the great work for which it was founded, or that the public money expended on it shall be saved, and that the work now done under these changed regulations shall be left to be performed, where it will be performed infinitely better, by the existing educational institutions of Canada.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I need hardly observe that I shall have something to say in reply to my hon. friend when the proper time comes; I have not time now, as the hour for adjournment has arrived.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1.05 p.m.

Second Sitting.

FRIDAY, 18th June, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. CLARKE. Before the House proceeds with the Orders of the Day, I would like to draw the attention of the leader of the Government to the 53rd Order in the Public Bills and Orders, for the second reading of Bill (No. 94) an Act to commemorate the reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria by making her birthday a perpetual holiday. This Bill stands in the name—

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I must object to any interference with the Orders of the Day. That matter will be attended to at the proper time, but it is not advisable to interject any extraneous matter into our work.

Mr. CLARKE. I was going to ask if it is the intention to place this Bill on the Government Orders?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We will attend to that at the proper time. The Government are not going to be dictated to as to the way in which they carry on their business.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. CASEY. Before the House passes to the Orders of the Day, I wish to ask the leader of the House a question of which I have given him notice, in connection with Bills Nos. 2 and 3 amongst Public Bills and Orders. These are Bills which have engaged the attention of the House for more than one session already in one shape or another, which have engaged the attention of a committee during this session, and which are now in a form to be pronounced on by the House as a whole. I would say that the difficulties of holding meetings of the Select Committee to which they were referred, on account of the meetings of the larger committees, have delayed the progress of the inquiry into these Bills this year, and also that the normally short time allowed for public Bills during the session has been unusually and unduly curtailed this year, in the hope of getting through business before the Jubilee Day, which hope appears to be a little evasive at the present time. In view of all these facts, I have urged the hon. leader of the House to give us an opportunity of having this Bill discussed before the House this session. We got into committee on it the other night, but the hearing was postponed because the Bill was not reprinted as amended. It is now reprinted, and I beg to urge on the hon. leader of the House, with all the force I can possibly command, the desirability, in the interest of a large and influential class of the community, of letting us have a hearing for this Bill before the whole House.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I must say that I do not think I can hold out any hope to the hon. gentleman at this stage of the session. The Government business is very important and urgent, and it will take all the time the House is likely to feel disposed to give to its consideration. I am not in the slightest degree desirous of depreciating the importance of these measures, but I may remind the hon. gentleman that a great many members of the House have left and many more desire to leave, and they are emphatically measures which should be considered in a full House.

POST OFFICE ACT.

Bill (No. 129) further to amend the Post Office Act was read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

2. Section fifty-five of the said Act is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:—
“55. When, in the opinion of the Postmaster General, the lowest tender received after public advertisement for the performance of a mail contract is excessive, he shall not be compelled to accept the said tender, but may, in his discretion, either readvertise the said contract for further competition, or offer to any person willing to undertake the contract such lesser sum as he deems a reasonable and sufficient price for the said contract, and may enter into a contract with such person as will accept such offer."

Mr. SPROULE. This is really a very bad provision, because it puts it in the hands of the Postmaster General to let these contracts without tender. If the system is followed up of continuing contracts, which seems to have prevailed for several years past, it may lead to great abuse. If the hon. gentleman took the right to re-advertise the contract or give it for a little time, it would not be so objectionable, but to leave it in his hands to give the contract to whom he pleases, and for any amount he likes—it may be a dollar less than the lowest offer he has received—is unreasonable.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). I certainly have no desire to take any power that is not necessary for the proper working of the department. The present law is certainly inapplicable and has to be amended to be of any utility at all. Under it, when the lowest tender is deemed excessive, the Postmaster need not accept the lowest tender, but may offer to the persons from whom tenders have been received, each in his turn, beginning with the lowest, such sum as he deems a reasonable and sufficient price for the contract. He therefore begins by offering it to the lowest tenderer, and if there are twenty tenderers, it may take months to get a contract completed, and this has caused much embarrassment. In the Acts relating to Public Works and Railways there is a provision authorizing the Minister by Order in Council to pass the lowest tender if he deems it expedient, and there is a similar provision in the Railway Act. I do not propose to pass by the lowest tender at all, I do not ask any power to award the contract to any person at a higher price, but I want a practical scheme to place the contract lower than the lowest tender. If the hon. gentleman prefers an Order in Council I have no objection to that.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I would draw the attention of the hon. Minister to the principle upon which this clause is founded in the Post Office Act, and that is that we cannot give a contract without asking for tender. Then the law goes on to carry that to its logical consequence by providing that if the lower tenderer does not accept, then the Postmaster General shall have authority to ask the one above him if he will accept, and if he will not, the one above him again, and so on. If there are 20 tenderers the Postmaster General must begin at the lowest and go up to the last, so as to carry out the principle upon which the whole of the law is founded. Now, the hon. gentleman by this clause destroys that whole fabric.

He seeks to have it provided that after he has called for tenders, if he is not satisfied with the lowest tenderer, he shall, without further notification or calling for tenders, award the contract to whomsoever he pleases without tender. This would be doing away with the cheque provided by the present Post Office Act, a check which, I think, is a very good one. The hon. gentleman has frequently complained of the lowest tender not being accepted. I ask the hon. gentleman if he is not adopting a mode which would permit him to set aside the lowest tenderer and to give the contract virtually without any contract at all. I am very much opposed to this clause as I think it is contrary to the whole theory of our Post Office Act.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not asking to ignore the lowest tenderer; I have always maintained that the contract should not be let at a higher price than that of the lowest tenderer, and that it should go to the lowest tenderer if he were able to give the security that the law requires. But there are cases where the lowest tenderer is not sufficiently known, there are combinations of various kinds, and I have had occasion to encounter these already. I say that if the lowest tender is excessive, we should not be bound by it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Then the contract should be re-advertised.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. But how long time will that take? It takes some weeks to get ready for advertising a contract. Then it is to be advertised for six weeks. At the end of that time, let us say there are 20 tenderers. If the lowest tenderer will not accept, then, under the present law, you must proceed to offer it to the next man. He must have a reasonable time to reply. In Canada, that may mean two or three weeks. And this may have to be done over and over again. In a case in which you had 20 tenderers you might not get a contract made much inside of a year. It is an impracticable scheme. If we let the contract at a lower price than the lowest tender nobody is hurt.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) when in opposition often complained of partisanship in these matters, and I ask him if, under the system that he proposes, where he is not obliged to call for new tenders, he would not have the power to give the contract to whomsoever he pleased. During my occupancy of the position that the hon. gentleman now holds, I had to meet the very difficulty to which he now refers. The way we had to get over it—and there is no other way—was to make a temporary arrangement with the old contractor to continue the work until the new tender was accepted. But the hon.

gentleman will admit that the whole system of contract under the Post Office Act is based upon the principle of calling for tenders. If tenders are to be called for, you should not have a clause in your Act which would permit you to set that principle aside and give the contract to any persons you choose to select without tender.

Mr. BENNETT. The adoption of this clause must, of necessity, do away with all prospect of parties tendering, because, after tenders have been called for, the Postmaster General will be the sole arbiter as to whether or not the lowest tender is too high. If he arrives at the conclusion that it is too high, then recourse will be had to a party friend to suggest or approve the name of some other person. By way of illustration take the following case:—Tenders are called for the carrying of the mail between two points. After three months advertising—I think that that is the length of time usually allowed—it may be that there are half a dozen tenders or there may be twenty. Assume that the lowest tender is for $150. The Postmaster General may, in the most arbitrary way, say that $150 is too high. Then the party "pull" would be used. The candidate of the Government or their representative in the riding would at once appeal to the Postmaster General, and, after finding out that John Jones had a tender in for $150 would submit that John Smith was prepared to do it for $149. Then the party "pull" being used, John Smith would be given the contract at $1 less than a party who has tendered in open competition. The Postmaster General or his officials cannot make any cast-iron rule to guide them in judging whether tenders are at reasonable and fair prices. I have a case in mind where the post office is a mile from the railway station, and another case where the post office is only a hundred yards from the station. Surely the Postmaster General does not know the particulars of every case from one end of the Dominion to the other, and so he cannot judge whether the amount offered is a fair one or not. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that such a law as is here proposed would do away with all belief in the fairness of awarding contracts. Every man will say: There is no use in me tendering; the Postmaster General is an autocrat, and even though my tender may be the lowest, he will award the contract to some party friend at a dollar or two less. Under the present practice tenders are publicly advertised for for three months. Persons in the locality who know the circumstances of the case put in their tenders, but the Postmaster General assumes to judge whether the lowest tender is a fair one or not. The Postmaster General seeks to justify this Bill by saying that there is something of this kind in the Public Works

Sir ADOLPHE CARON.

Department. But there is a marked distinction between certain cases arising in the Public Works Department or the Railways and Canals Department, and the work of the Post Office Department. Suppose there is an accident to some public building or some public work, it may be necessary to make repairs without calling for tender. But in the Post Office Department no such contingency can arise. The time is known when the contract must expire, and three months before that time it is duly advertised. Tenders are sent in, and, under this proposed law, the Postmaster General can award the contract to whom he pleases, satisfying his conscience by giving the contract at $1 less than the lowest tender. The result of the passage of such a clause will put an end to all fair and square dealing in the matter of railway mail contracts.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid that my hon. friend will have to reconsider this clause. It means the abolishment of the system of tender and of contract, and hands over the making of contracts to the Postmaster General, who does not even require to have the approval of the Governor General in Council.

Mr. TISDALE. The hon. gentleman has, no doubt, a desire to lessen the expenditures of his department, but surely he has not fully considered this proposition which, as the leader of the Opposition has said, practically does away with tenders. Why don't he come right down and say, the system of tenders is all wrong, we have got tired of it; the public and my department are better without it. Why do we insist upon tenders? In order that there shall be a fair notice to fair people who understand the matter, and that they should get fair-play; so that if it is conducted, as I believe it will be under the Postmaster General, no one man can know, until it is past change, who is the man that gets it. Why, in the interest of your own department, don't interfere with a principle like that. I am as much interested that the hon. gentleman should conduct this on sound principles, as if a Government I were supporting were in power. In the interest of the Government, and in the interest of the people, we want them to believe that you have got a system where there should be fair-play, where there shall be tenders, and in case of any fraud under the present system the hon. gentleman has full power to remedy it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). If the hon. gentleman will allow me to interrupt him—if there is going to be a long debate on this clause, I would ask that clauses one and three stand for the present, and that we go on with the others. I will just say, speaking to the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), that it did not cross my mind that this proposition interfered in the slightest degree with the soundness of the principle of advertising for tenders, because it implies that the contracts shall not be let at even the price of the lowest tender. I make that remark to prevent any misunderstanding. With the permission of the committee, I would like to have these two clauses stand, and proceed with the next.

Mr. TISDALE. I would ask the hon. gentleman, in view of the strong feeling, to let this clause be eliminated, and bring it on at another session.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Let it stand for the present.

Mr. TISDALE. We know that if it comes up again in a short time, we shall have a small committee.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not going to take advantage of the committee. If any hon. gentleman desires to assist me in framing a clause that will get over the difficulty, I will be happy to let it stand for that purpose.

Sir CHARLES TUFFER. The shortest way would be to withdraw this clause, which is regarded as an objectionable one, and take time during the recess to consider it with care.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Let the two clauses stand for the moment.

On section 4.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the reason of the hon. gentleman's change of policy in this respect?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Promotion examination is an examination of scholarship, and we provide, in lieu of that, a case examination, as it is called, a technical examination in the work of their office.

Mr. FOSTER. Conducted by whom? You take them out from the examination of the Civil Service Commission entirely.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They will be competent to conduct a case examination.

Mr. FOSTER. Up to this time the railway mail clerks have been under the same law and the same system of promotion as all other civil service clerks, that is, they have had to conform to the general rule that when they pass from class to class they have to pass on promotion examination. That promotion examination has been under the civil service law, and has been conducted by the civil service examiners. Now, my hon. friend proposes to take them out from the civil service, so far as promotion examinations are concerned, and to say, with reference to railway mail clerks, that they shall not be obliged to pass a civil service promotion examination. I do not see anything that is provided in place of that in this Bill.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Section 130 provides for it.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend explain a case examination?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The principal work of a railway mail clerk is what is known as sortation, that is, when he receives his mail matter on board train, he has to proceed with this sortation for the purpose of its distribution on the different routes. If he is familiar with the geography and the postal map of the country, he can accomplish his case work rapidly. There may be mistakes; mail matter is misdirected and more clerks are required in order to keep up efficiency, and the case examination is made the test of efficiency. A mail clerk would not be put on board of a car if he were not familiar with the technical work of his office—if he were not nimble and quick-minded.

Mr. FOSTER. I see what the hon. gentleman means. I have not very much objection to that, but there is only one case that might occur. For instance, you have a large number of clerks in the service. The man who is going up to a higher class, say the highest class, ought to be a man who has a considerable amount of education over the rest, over those who have mere technical knowledge so that he might be able to write a good report and do work like that. A man might possess these qualities and yet they might not be taken into account at all, while the man possessing a greater amount of technical knowledge might be promoted in preference to him.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think that this system will be extremely welcome to ambitious mail clerks. My idea is that the prizes of this department should be awarded upon merit and promotion will follow honestly as it ought as the result of case examination. It will only be efficient men who will be promoted. It has already produced a marked benefit, indeed so much so that the Controller of Railway Mail service thought that perhaps his superintendents were not fully reporting errors in the misdirection of letters. They have been numerous in the past, and now they have become so rare that the controller communicated with his superintendents to see whether they were fully reporting the errors. He found that they are reporting in all cases. The mail clerks feel the stimulus of the knowledge that they will be rewarded according to merit.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I fully agree with the object which the Postmaster General has in view, but I do not think this clause is going to carry it out. The hon. gentleman leaves to this new officer the very head of the branch, where all the mail clerks are to be found, the duty of conducting the examination and deciding as to the efficiency of these clerks. I could understand it if the hon. gentleman had, for instance, a board composed of the Deputy Postmaster General, the controller and one more, but it is leaving the ambitions of these young gentlemen that the hon. gentleman has referred to and which he desires to satisfy and whom he desires to promote on the basis of efficiency, too much in the hands of one man. The same objection seems to permeate the whole of this Bill. It is centralizing everything in the hands of the Minister or the controller, or somebody else contrary to the ordinary practice in that department. I know from my experience of the department that the railway mail clerks are a most deserving class. They are efficient, they are intelligent, they are underpaid and they are exposed in the carrying out of their duties to considerable danger. Several of them have lost their lives in the performance of their duty by accidents on railways or upon steamboats, and I am prepared to say that every possible facility should be given to them. I do not want to interfere at all with the benefits that the Postmaster General wishes to confer upon them, but I am of the opinion that he should not leave the examination entirely in the hands of the controller. This feature of the Bill, I think, is open to considerable objection. I would not wish to give my sanction to a proposition of that kind.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not see any great objection to that, but I do not find in this Bill any provision which makes it necessary for a clerk to pass an examination in this class. What method of selection does the Minister propose to follow in making promotions?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The case examination is a test examination.

Mr. IVES. But supposing that the controller finds that a certain mail clerk is not efficient, what follows from that?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I presume he would not get whatever rewards the service holds out. In the past men have been promoted who were not efficient; I do not think the present system may be regarded as by any means perfect.

Mr. IVES. Supposing the controller for any reason desired to get rid of a mail clerk or to favour some mail clerk, after this test examination the controller reports to the Minister that Mr. So-and-So is slow, and that he makes mistakes. Will dismissal follow from that?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have no such improper object as that.

Mr. IVES. I do not mean that it is an improper object; it might be quite proper. What I want to know whether the Bill furnishes authority to dispose of those who are inaccurate or inefficient.

Mr ADOLPHE CARON.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. First of all, the examination whilst it takes place under the direction of the controller must take place in every part of Canada. The system of case examination is conducted by cards. The clerk is put in a room with his case before him as if he were in a mail car and he is given his mail matter to distribute. There is a report made of that and that report shows the percentage of error in this practical case examination. This is a matter of record all over Canada. These records will be taken and will be within the reach of this House. The result will be open to the public through Parliament and the controller and those responsible for the administration of the law will be bound to respect the result of that comparative and competitive examination. As to what would follow if a man became unfit for his work I suppose the same remark would apply to any one else in the civil service; he could only be dismissed by Order in Council as he can only be appointed by Order in Council.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to ask the Minister is there any provision in this Bill providing for an examination in either case or any other kind?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, in section 130.

On section 5,

Mr. FOSTER. The Postmaster General takes great power here. He practically takes power to form a separate and independent branch, and he ought at least to give his views as to how he proposes to work it, and as to whether it is going to entail the appointment of new officers, or whether it is to be formed within the present departmental staff.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is quite right. The creation of this branch does not involve the appointment of new officers. As a matter of fact, the branch is practically in existence to-day. The Bill provides that the controller shall be a gentleman of at least fifteen years' service; the superintendents to be at least of ten years' service.

Mr. FOSTER. In the Post Office Department?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In the Post Office Department. They are rather promotions in the department. The controller will have practically the most responsible office in the service, with the exception of the deputy head. He will have his head office at Ottawa, and whatever clerical assistance is necessary. The superintendents throughout the Dominion will carry out his orders, and communicate directly with him instead of through the cumbersome machinery heretofore in force, namely, the inspectors throughout the country.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I take it that the controller will be like the chief post office inspector in the other branch, and that his jurisdiction will apply merely to the railway mail clerks.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. And the work on railways.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. What salary does the Postmaster General intend giving to the controller.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. $2,500.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That is just about the salary of the inspectors.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The chief inspector gets $2,800.

Mr. SPROULE. The trouble with this Act is that it creates another department. You have a controller and you will have superintendents, and I suppose they will be as numerous as the post office inspectors all over the country. The Bill provides that you may appoint "such other employees as are from time to time necessary." It seems to me as though it must result in creating a lot of new offices to be filled. I imagine that the work which is necessary to be done by the superintendents might be done by the present post office inspectors, who are located in districts and divisions throughout the country: If you appoint inspectors all over Canada you will have, I suppose, to give them a higher salary than an ordinary clerk, and you will have to give them clerical assistance, and thus create extra expense.

Mr. CLARKE. Do I understand that these superintendents will do the work which heretofore has been done by the post office inspectors in the different divisions? Is it the intention of the Postmaster General to retain the post office inspectors?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. As far as the railway mail service is concerned, I propose to wipe out all divisions. The railway mail service is one service for all Canada, and it will be under the control of its head officer, subject of course to the other higher control. The superintendents will receive orders direct from him. Whenever I can utilize those now in the service I intend to do so.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. These duties are now performed by the post office inspectors?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. Will the same number of post office inspectors remain as now?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is a matter I will be able to deal with better when I see what the effect of this Bill is, and to what extent it reduces the work of the inspectors. I have not the least hesitation in saying that there has grown up a system of red tape, which if I had time at my disposal I could explain. I can say without reservation that the adoption of the system will promote efficiency and economy. It will not involve any increase in the staff, but on the contrary, will work the other way.

Mr. SPROULE. If you appoint a controller and superintendents, you will have to give clerical assistance in the different offices and pay rent. It seems to me impossible to work out this system successfully without increasing the staff. If it did not increase the staff, it would not be so objectionable.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is no item in the Estimates asking for an increase, and on the contrary, this will result in a substantial reduction of the staff. Already by its application, beginning with 404 railway mail clerks the number is now reduced by 25 by reason of doing away with these divisions, and the better management under the more businesslike method that is now adopted. If time would permit I could go into the details which I have in my possession.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the very great objection to asking us this afternoon to undertake legislation on so important a matter. In order to legislate with wisdom, we ought to have all these details in reference to which my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) has been informing himself so diligently, and which he knows, but we do not, and which he declares there is no time to give us an opportunity of learning. The objection is in asking us to pass important legislation of this kind at such an hour of the session as this. It is all very well for the Minister to say that this is not going to involve extra expenditure, and that he is going to make out a machinery which will be on the one hand more effective, and on the other hand cost us nothing more. The Minister may do that, but there is nothing within the Act itself to compel him to do so, although there is within the Act unlimited power given to him. He may make a controller, he may make as many superintendents as he chooses, and he may have just as many other employees as are necessary, in his opinion, to carry out the work. The power given is unlimited—I am not going to say that the hon. gentleman will use it, but he may or he may not. He says that if he had time he could give us all the details which would justify this change abundantly. I think it would be a good plan for him to take time to master the details, and at the end of next session he could pound that information into us, and if the information commends itself to the House we will give him the legislation he wants. It does seem to be a very late hour of the session to undertake such important legislation.

Mr. IVES. I would like to know distinctly from the Postmaster General whether his scheme involves the doing away with the services of the present post office inspectors. It looks to me as if it would be in the power of the Minister under this Bill practically to appoint new men, and to dispense with the services of most of the present post office inspectors as being no longer necessary. I think we ought to know whether he intends to discharge the present post office inspectors as being no longer required.

Mr. QUINN. Inasmuch as we have not the details concerning the changes which will be necessary, should this legislation be passed, I think it would hardly be right of the committee to enact such a law as this at this time. Provision is made here for the appointment of a controller of the railway mail service of Canada, together with superintendents, railway mail clerks, transfer agents and other employees as are deemed necessary—that is, I presume, as are deemed necessary by the Postmaster General. The Bill seems to me to be providing for a large number of officers without this committee knowing anything about the offices to be filled, the duties of the officers who are to fill these offices, or the persons who are to be removed from the service in order that those officers may take their places. In other words, it seems as if this committee were asked to provide means by which a large number of officers may be dismissed from the Post Office Department in order to make room for others. Now, I for one do not feel inclined, at this date of the session, to assume the responsibility of allowing this section to pass, providing for the dismissal of officers who have been in the service for a number of years, in order to make room for others who, according to this section, may be taken, either from some other public department, or from the streets—that is, they may be political friends of the Government. While the Government have a perfect right to fill the service with all their friends if they can, I do not think they ought to ask the committee at this particular time, to pass legislation to afford them the means of doing this; and I certainly view with some fear the enactment of a law of this kind, which would give the Postmaster General the right, without any notice at all, to dismiss from the public service a number of worthy employees, and fill their places with others. When the hon. gentleman says that this change does not entail any extra expenditure, that it seems to me, is the keynote to the transaction, and means that the intention is to dismiss officers who are at present in the public service, and to replace them with other persons.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. As this afternoon was set apart for the consideration of another measure, and as the committee seems so interested in this Bill, I will not press it any longer at this moment. I will move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Committee rose and reported progress.

CROW'S NEST PASS RAILWAY.

The House resolved itself into committee to consider a certain proposed resolution (page 3870) declaring it expedient to grant and appropriate for a line of railway from Lethbridge, in the territory of Alberta, through the Crow's Nest Pass, to Nelson, in the province of British Columbia, a sum not exceeding $3,630,000.

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I think I shall ask the committee to allow me to present this resolution without making any very extended remarks on the subject, and I do so for several reasons. In the first place, the resolution has been for some time on the Table, and I think it expresses with a good deal of minuteness the terms of the arrangement under which it is proposed to grant aid to this undertaking from Lethbridge to Nelson; and, in the next place, I understand from the leader of the House that the hon. gentleman leading the Opposition desires to avail himself of the only opportunity which will be afforded him this afternoon to express his views upon the proposal of the Government. For this reason, I very gladly take up the subject, although I have not, I confess, been able to gather the material together which I should like to have gathered, for the purpose of entering somewhat fully into this subject. It is not because I consider this matter an unimportant one by any means that I shall not present at great length the views which I entertain and which are entertained upon it by the Government. I do regard the proposal now submitted to the committee as one of very great importance. I regard it as of great importance from the standpoint of the considerable sum of money involved in it; but I regard it as of still greater importance, because the undertaking which is to be aided to this extent, should Parliament so determine, is, I think, one of the greatest possible value and the greatest possible interest, not only to British Columbia but to the Dominion of Canada as a whole. I am not at all indifferent to the financial side of this proposal. I am fully conscious of the feeling which exists, not only in Parliament but throughout the country, that the utmost care, prudence and economy should be exercised by the Government and by Parliament in the extent to which they grant aid to these undertakings. I am fully conscious of that and I know that there are many who think that to add to the public debt in aid of railway or any of these other undertakings is a course of action that ought to be taken cautiously and after the most mature consideration. I sympathize in that view, and I think I speak the views of the Government, as a whole, in saying that the Government sympathize entirely in it. But, Sir, while that is so, we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that there are circumstances arising in a portion of this country, a country of vast extent and area, which render it imperative that the Government should lend a helping hand to the prosecution of certain works, if the inexhaustible resources which Canada possesses are to be properly and sufficiently developed. Instead of its being economy to stay our hands. I maintain it would be nothing short of waste if, upon careful study and examination of any proposal submitted to us, we are satisfied that the undertaking is one which will open up large resources of great value, the development of which will stimulate all other industries in the country and greatly add to its wealth. Were we to withhold from such deserving enterprises the necessary aid, we would be recreant to the valuable trust which devolves upon the Government of this country, not only in the interest of the present but the future, we would fail in our duty, if we did not grasp the necessity of the situation, if we failed to advise Parliament and to impress upon the country the propriety of giving the reasonable aid required for the prosecution of an enterprise of such importance. That brings us to the question whether this enterprise is one of the character I have described, whether it comes within the category of those which would justify us in adding to the obligations of the country by assisting in their development, and on this question I consider, I am in a position to speak with confidence and some authority for several reasons. In the first place let me say, that I have traversed, if not all the route of the proposed railway, a considerable portion of the country which will be served by this railway, and have had opportunities of forming a judgment as to the nature of the development going on and as to the rapidity with which that development is likely to proceed, if this road be constructed, and whether my judgment has been soundly exercised or not, I have been led to the conclusion, as a result of my visit to that country, that it was necessary the Government should take up the scheme of railway construction through the Crow's Nest Pass. I did not reach any conclusion as to the particular method in which this subject should be dealt with. As a result of my examination of the situation I was not able to conclude either that the Government should take the matter up as a Government undertaking, or aid its construction by a company, but I was convinced that until the Government did the one thing or the other, there would not be for many years to come a railway constructed through that portion of the country, and I have not altered my mind in that regard by anything I have since heard or seen, either in the public press or otherwise. I know that there has been the opinion expressed that possibly the Canadian Pacific Railway would have been able, without assistance at all from the Government, to carry out that undertaking successfully. I know that in the report of a meeting of the shareholders of that company, which was held two months ago, the statement appeared that if the Government did not assist the Canadian Pacific Railway they would take hold of the work themselves without assistance. But I believe that that statement was not so much the declaration of a fact within the knowledge of the company itself as a statement put forward perhaps for the purpose of creating an impression for other ends, it may be upon public opinion or the Government of the country, and not that the company was in a position to take up the very large outlay involved by the construction of the line; because I believe that neither the Canadian Pacific Railway nor any other company at this time is so well situated that it would be able, without our aid, to construct the work. Therefore I think it is not too much to say that unless the Government came to the aid of any company that was in a position to assume the undertaking or unless the Government undertook to build the road itself, many years would have to elapse before the construction of the Crow's Nest Railway would become an accomplished fact.

This is by no means a new question. It has been widely discussed in the public press. It has been more or less the subject of discussion outside the public press. Proposals have been laid on the Table of Parliament with regard to this very question, and our hon. friends opposite, when they were in power, seemed greatly impressed with the importance of coming to the assistance of a company which was willing to carry that work forward, and laid upon the Table certain proposals looking to that end. It is true they were not passed, and I do not know that they were even discussed in Parliament; but they were laid on the Table of the House and public attention was thereby attracted to the subject, in addition to the discussions that have taken place in the public press. But in various ways the construction of a railway into that great mineral country has become a live question, and it is necessary that the Government of the country should deal with it. It was because we were impressed, as a Government, with the importance of this matter that my colleagues thought it prudent that I, as Minister of this department, should take the first opportunity to visit the section of the country to be affected by this railway, for the purpose of gathering all the information I could so as to be able to advise them upon the subject. And this, as I have said, is what I have done. I returned from British Columbia with a strong conviction that, for many reasons, it was necessary that something should be done, that whatever amount was deemed necessary for the Government to expend either to construct or aid the construction of that undertaking—and I think this is the general feeling of the country wherever the subject has been wisely studied—the sooner the work was undertaken the better it would be for Canada, and the sooner would we begin to receive the benefits which we hope will follow from the construction of the road. Now, the question, as I have said a moment ago, as to whether or not Parliament should act, must depend upon the judgment of Parliament as to the importance of this particular railway and as to the value of the country which is to be traversed. Some persons have criticised the proposal—and it is not an unnatural criticism, I am bound to say—upon the ground that this sum of $11,000 a mile for over 300 miles of railway is to be paid for railway construction, while the country which you wish to enter and through which you propose to run your line, is almost entirely a mineral country; in other words, that the advantages that you say the country offers, the inducements which it offers, the wealth which you say lies there, cannot be known except by further development, and upon that further knowledge alone would it be wise for us to undertake this work. It is argued that until we know whether there is this mineral wealth which has been referred to, it is unwise to incur this considerable debt for the purpose of pressing this undertaking forward. When that objection is raised one is naturally led to inquire; Is it not reasonable, when you have examined the ground, when you have had recourse to all the reliable and authoritative sources of information that are available with regard to the character of the country, if the result of this examination leads you to believe that there is that wealth there, is it not imperatively necessary that a railway should be constructed, that transportation facilities should be provided in order that development may take place? You cannot look for development to precede the construction of railways and the providing of transport facilities. One is consequent upon the other, it is true, but the development is consequent upon the providing of these necessary facilities. So that those of us who believe that we should have better knowledge before we move in the direction of providing these railway facilities, who say that we must know whether the resources are there to justify this expenditure before we make it, would practically be raising an insuperable obstacle to the development of the country. We must have the railway if we are determined that we shall have that country developed in respect of the resources which I am led to believe, relying upon authoritative data, are practically inexhaustible, and the development of which must necessarily not only add to the wealth and importance of the country, but greatly increase its population, and in increasing its population, must very much increase the revenues of the country to be derived from customs duties.

Now, I am going to take a few moments, if the committee will indulge me, to refer to some of the official, and I think, reliable information which has been collected in respect to this British Columbia country. I have here the official report of Mr. W. A. Carlyle, provincial mineralogist, a man of unquestioned standing. I presume that hon. gentlemen opposite know him well. I do not know him, but I am informed that he is a very careful, conservative, cautious man. He has got together a great deal of information with regard to British Columbia which, I am sure, is of value, and I believe will be of interest to this committee, for, if we are to take the statements that Mr. Carlyle furnishes us—which appear to be put forward with care and which appear to be the expressions of a moderate, cautious man—if we were to take these statements as approaching anything like the facts with regard to the mineral wealth of British Columbia, there cannot be a lingering doubt in the mind of any man as to the wisdom of the policy of liberally contributing to the immediate construction of this important railway. According to the returns that this gentleman has collated, I see that there has been a gradual and what would seem to me a comparatively rapid increase in the mineral output of the province of British Columbia within the last six or seven years. The products of the mines in British Columbia in 1890 amounted in value to $2,600,000—I am giving the committee the round figures. In 1891 they amounted to $3,500,000; there was a slight falling off in 1892, when they amounted to somewhat over $3,000,000; in 1893, they were $3,588,000; in 1894, $4,225,000; in 1895, $5,655,000; in 1896, $7,146,000. The statement I read professes to show the values of gold, silver, lead and copper that were produced. Now I am warranted, I believe, in pressing this statement on the attention of the committee, not only as an accurate statement, but as one which effectually disposes of the doubts which arise in many minds that the development of British Columbia, up to the present, may have been merely a spasmodic development; that the figures for 1896, showing a gross value of over seven million dollars in the output of these descriptions of metals, may represent merely a spasmodic production, and that it was not a regular development. Well, in confirmation of the statement that such is not the case, but that the development has been so gradual and so regular as to afford convincing evidence that it is certain to grow in the future, I think the figures I have just given are sufficient for that purpose. Now, I find, in referring to the results as between 1895 and 1896 as to districts, that in the Cariboo district, in 1895, there was turned out $282,000 worth; in 1896, the production increased to $384,000. In the West Kootenay the product in 1895 was $2,223,000; in 1896, it had run up to $4,000,000. And so in the various other districts of the province. Because it must not be supposed, and I apprehend there are few hon. gentlemen in this committee who are not aware of the fact, that it is only in one section of British Columbia that this mineral wealth lies. There has been development in Cariboo, there has been development in West Kootenay and in East Kootenay, and in various other sections. If the information which has been furnished us from various sources is to be believed, there is scarcely a portion of the southern part of British Columbia, at all events, where we may not reasonably expect a very considerable development as respects its mineral productions, as soon as proper facilities are afforded for that purpose. Without going into the details as to the particular district, I will content myself with reading a statement of the general results, taken from the pages of the book of Mr. Carlyle. Now, Mr. Carlyle goes at length into the merits of the different districts:

The production of the Kootenay mines, when compared with that of many of the mining centres in other countries, will not appear so very large to a casual reader; but, when all the conditions are understood, that an entirely new country of large territorial extent is being rapidly opened up under difficulties, that the supply of needed capital, until recently, has been meagre, and that in reality not a single mine has had time to do sufficient development to put it on a really proper basis for extraction of ore and further exploratory work, this production will then be seen to indicate a most flourishing and hopeful condition of affairs.

He goes on to refer in similar terms to many other districts in the province. Now, I have in my hand another authoritative statement which I think it proper to put in possession of the committee. A representative of the Imperial German Government took occasion to visit British Columbia, and spent some months in the portions that I have mentioned, including the Boundary district, of which he made a careful study. He himself was a mineralogical expert, and had studied the situation in Australia, in South Africa, and in other mineral countries of the world; and, I suppose it was on account of his ability in that regard that the Imperial German Government charged him with the duty of making to them a careful report of the possibilities and of the outlook of the province of British Columbia, and of the neighbouring state of Washington. He went over both these sections of country. I will only take up the time of the committee by reading an extract from this interesting report. To me it was an exceedingly interesting report, because it was not only a careful and conservative report, the report of a man who apparently was determined not to exaggerate the condition of things at all, but it was a report at the same time of one who had no interest in overstating the case in any way, but who only wished to present the facts for the information of his Government.

Mr. WILSON. What is the name of the gentleman?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. His name is Hans Geise. He went over all the different districts of British Columbia that I have named. He went first through Rossland, then into the West Kootenay section, the East Kootenay section and Boundary Creek, up to Lillooet, and his survey of the situation embraces all these various portions of British Columbia. In referring to Boundary Creek he says:

The third division is the Boundary Creek itself, with its various camps. Here it is not so easy to decide the question of the superiority of any one spot over the other. Midway is here the central point of a wider country, but it is outside the cluster of Boundary Creek camps. There have, therefore, sprung up in the Boundary Creek Valley three little villages, Greenwood City, Anacanda and Boundary Falls, of which each calls itself the most advantageous, and, therefore, the place of the future; but, as they are all close together, and the valley narrow, the supposition seems but natural that the whole valley will be, some time, one continuous line of city life for several miles.

Now, I want the committee to understand the value of this report; there is the information of an independent authority, there is the opinion of a man who had no interest whatever in exaggerating the favourable conditions which exist in that country. He was making a report for the information alone of his own Government; and we find here that he makes a statement, after having looked the ground over, and with the knowledge which he has of the effect of mineral development in other portions of the world, that the supposition is but natural that the whole valley of Boundary Creek will be some time one continuous line of city life. Well, now, what does such an ultimate accomplishment depend upon? Why, it depends solely upon there being transportation facilities afforded, and railway construction, and means by which the people who are willing to go in and develop that country may get in supplies, and fuel, and carry the products of their mines out of the country. It only depends upon that, and it does seem to me a serious question whether it is not the duty of Par-lament to lend every possible aid, without delay, in order that we may come into possession, so far as possible, the exclusive possession, of this valuable territory. Because the committee must not lose sight of the fact that this important section of country lies immediately adjacent to the boundary of the United States, it is not very far from an extensive trunk line of railway. It will not take many miles of railway to be laid down in order to penetrate into that Boundary Creek section. Now, the people on the southern side of the border are liable to do in respect of that Boundary country what they have almost done in respect of the Kootenay district, they are liable, by building a section of railway into that country, to get possession of it from a business and a trade point of view, and they are liable to divert the trade away from our own country, from the east and from the coast, and carry it to the south of the line. To my own personal knowledge, they have been doing this with respect to Kootenay. Why, Mr. Chairman, it is a fact which only requires to be known, I think, to make a grave impression upon the minds of this House and of the public generally, that the people of the United States belonging to the state of Washington, appreciating the advantages of the possession of British Columbia and of the valuable minerals which are there undeveloped, built a railway up into the Kootenay country and got possession of the business and the trade of that country, and have built up the city of Spokane wholly out of the business which has originated in the province of British Columbia. To-day the city of Spokane is a flourishing city of 35,000 people. You go into that city and get into conversation with business men and they will tell you that the business prosperity and growth of that place from a little village of seven or eight thousand inhabitants a few years ago has been due to the development which has taken place in British Columbia. These people were there and they took advantage of that trade. I say that it is a matter of considerable importance for the committee to discuss as to whether we will retain possession of this country from a business point of view or whether we will let the people to the south of us take that trade from under our eyes and become possessed of it in the sense in which the conditions of business will tend to the transfer of that trade in that direction. In a general way this German official concludes his survey of the situation in these words, and I think it will be of interest to the committee if I should read the closing observations of this gentleman upon this subject. He says:

What the result of these rich and seemingly unlimited mineral deposits will be on the country in which they are found to-day, seems beyond conception.

Mr. BLAIR.

I invite the attention of hon. gentlemen of this House to the importance of this statement. There is the testimony of an outside authority; it is not the testimony of a man who is looking for a railway subsidy and who is probably under an impulse to colour the information which he furnishes. There is a competent and independent authority to which we should attach importance. He says:

Experts who have seen the South African and West Australian gold fields, are unanimous in their opinion, that the British Columbia mineral fields rank well with either of them, and, all circumstances considered, it seems superior to both. In South Africa, the gold-bearing rock is the bed of an old lake about 65 miles long and 35 miles wide, and the conglomerative rock in which the gold appears, varies in width from 3 to 100 feet. Only the bodies of smaller and medium width contain enough gold to be worth working. The average value of the ore is only $10. The country is dry and inhospitable, and the lumber for timbering the mines is lacking entirely.

The West Australian mines may be very rich, but the conditions of the country are still more unfavourable; timber and water are lacking absolutely. To-day, they are facing there a proposition to lift water 2,500 feet and to carry it over a desert country 225 miles. Besides this, the ore is said to be low grade. The British Columbia mining district has enormous bodies of high-grade ore, and still farther greater ones of low grade; the ores are said to be most excellent for matting and smelting purposes, as they carry their own flux.

The territory in which the gold-bearing rock is found here, is without doubt far larger than the South African.

All the materials for mining and smelting purposes, as timber, coal, lime, water, &c., are plentiful and close at hand. Power to great amounts can be generated almost everywhere from the swift mountain streams. The climate is, all the year round, mild and agreeable; winter does not set in until late in the year, and, although there is almost continuous snowfall, the winters are not cold, except for a short period in January.

Farming is possible in all the valleys; large agricultural districts in the state of Washington and the Canadian province of Alberta are close at hand to furnish food enough for millions of people who will some time need their products.

The district will soon be traversed by several railroads, and every mining camp that will warrant it, will be tapped by them.

Now, there is an opinion, I think, to which we might well attach importance. It comes from a source independent at all events of the country through which this road is to travel, and these statements answer the questions that I asked at the outset and ought, I think, to remove the doubts, if any exist, as to the wisdom of the Government of the country at once, before it shall have been exploited by others, before it shall have fallen into the possession of any outside power or country, availing ourselves of the trade that will result from the construction of this work.

Mr. LOUNT. May I ask the hon. gentleman what the report is from which he has just quoted?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This report was sent by this gentleman to the German Government. I do not know the circumstances further than I am informed that the gentleman who made the report made it at the instance of his Government. I was first informed in regard to the existence of this report by a gentlemen whom I met in New York, and he was able to procure a copy of it for me. I thought it would be valuable, and I found on reading it that it was of very great value. I have ventured to read these extracts because they put the committee in possession of the opinion, at all events, of an independent authority, and one may fairly conclude, of a competent authority. And if you read the report you will see that this gentleman is careful in stating his opinions. The conclusions which he has been led to are conclusions of the utmost magnitude to the people of this country, conclusions which justify the Government in assuming that there are possibilities of development in British Columbia of which we have not hitherto dreamed. There is a duty resting upon the shoulders of those who are charged with the responsibility of administering the affairs of Canada not to allow the time to slip away, not to unduly delay in putting the country in possession of those necessary facilities—facilities which, before all things, are needed in order that we may take advantage of the great wealth of this country. If we want to keep the people who have come into British Columbia with such rapidity, and to induce others to come, something must be done, and that now, to stimulate the production of the wealth of that country. The resolution asks that Parliament should give aid to the extent of $11,000 a mile towards the construction of this railway. You will observe that the Government in presenting the proposition in this form has decided that it is better that aid should be given to this extent than that the Government should undertake to carry the work through as a Government work. No doubt there are many who thought that it would have been better that the work should have been taken up by the Government, but I apprehend that though to a greater or lesser extent that idea may be sympathized with by members of Parliament, concerted action is necessary in this matter and that we have to rely upon the support of Parliament to carry out the conclusions at which we have arrived. These were not conclusions that we arrived at without as much thought as it has been possible for us to give to the subject and without providing all reasonable, possible, safeguards in the terms which are here embodied.

I know that when the various sub-clauses of this resolution are read, it will occur to those who read them, that possibly better terms should have been secured than have been secured, before the Government decided to give large assistance towards any railway company, or, more particularly, to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, for the carrying out of this undertaking. But, Parliament and the country will have to rest assured that the terms which we have embodied here are the most favourable terms which could have been secured, if we were to carry out this work at all, or if we were to render any assistance to a company in aid of the construction of the railway. At all events, that is the case at the present time. What might be accomplished years hence, no man can say. But, if we were to come to any understanding with the Canadian Pacific Railway for the purpose of pushing this work through now—building the first two hundred odd miles as we expect to before the close of 1898—these terms which are presented to Parliament in this resolution are the best that could be secured. The committee will have noted that we have sought to ensure the country a large measure of relief from the rates which have obtained since the Canadian Pacific Railway was started. We have imposed conditions upon the company which are very largely restrictive of their present powers. We have embraced in one of the sub-clauses of these resolutions a considerable list of articles which go into very large consumption among the people of the western provinces, and we have secured an agreement on the part of the Canadian Pacific Railway that very substantial reductions will be made upon the existing rates. We have also received the consent, on their part, that the rates upon all goods—whether they are shipped in or shipped out, either going into or coming out of any portion of the province which is covered by the route of this railway, or any freight or merchandise which either is shipped into British Columbia over this line, or shipped out of British Columbia over this line—are to be subject to the control and supervision of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council as is the case with other railway companies in Canada. To the extent of the shipment of goods from any part of Canada to British Columbia, and the shipment of goods from any part of British Columbia traversed by this line, to any part of Canada, there has been secured in the contract between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Government, a recision of that existing ten per cent clause. From this day forward, so far as that class of merchandise between the several points is concerned, the tariff of rates shall be under the control of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council so long as that tribunal exercises control in these matters; or under the control of a commission, if a railway commission shall ever be constituted for that purpose.

A great deal has been said—and I am not going to refer to it at much greater length—with regard to the immense land subsidy which the Canadian Pacific Railway will fall heir to under its arrangement with another company incorporated under the laws of British Columbia, and which is to earn a subsidy from the Government of that province if this road is built. I refer to the company known as the British Columbia Southern Railway Company. That company has had promised it, under provincial legislation in the province of British Columbia, a land subsidy of 20,000 acres per mile for the length of this railway, and the land which is in that subsidy and which will pass to the British Columbia Southern Railway Company includes, as is believed, a very large area of valuable coal lands. It is not known as to whether there is much other mineral lands or not, but it is absolutely known that a large portion of the lands in the immediate vicinity of the Crow's Nest Pass are valuable coal lands which will pass over to the British Columbia Southern Railway Company, when this road is constructed. It is known that an understanding has been arrived at between the Canadian Pacific Railway and this British Columbia Southern Railway, under which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company acquire a portion of the coal lands, although not all the lands which are known to be coal bearing. I believe an estimate has been formed that the amount of coal-bearing lands in this 20,000-acre-a-mile belt, aggregates something like 200,000 acres, or 250,000 acres in all. I believe an estimate of that kind has been formed. Of course that whole belt is not bearing coal of equal extent or of equal value. Portions of it are very much more valuable than other portions, but the area is a large one unquestionably. The deposit is a deposit of very great value, and, under the arrangement which has been entered into between the British Columbia Southern Railway Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway a portion of the coal-bearing belt is to become the property of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company: the balance remaining the property of the British Columbia Southern Railway Company.

Mr. FOSTER. How are these proportions?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Well, I am not quite familiar with the details of the arrangement concluded between the British Columbia Southern Railway Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway, but I am well aware, from the information I have received from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, that they will be in a position to carry out the terms of the proposal which we make to them, namely, the condition which we impose upon them before they can get any subsidy for this road, to give us a title in fee of 50,000 acres of these coal lands. They may not have, under their existing arrangement, a right to the possession of the property in that large area. They may not have, under the arrangement they have made, contemplated getting so much of the coal land; but they will have to revise their arrangement so that if they are to get less they must now get more, in order that they will be in a position to carry out the condition which we here impose, and which we make a condition precedent upon their receiving from us any subsidy whatever in respect to this railway.

Mr. FOSTER. As there is an estimated area of 250,000 acres of coal land, and as the Dominion Government now is to come into possession of 50,000 acres, does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) lead the House to suppose that the previous division between the British Columbia Southern Railway Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, is of such a nature as that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will have to revise it in order to get that 50,000 acres for us, even though they get none for themselves?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. We are to come to the conclusion that the British Columbia Southern Railway Company is going to have 200,000 acres of this invaluable coal land for nothing?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As to their getting it for nothing, I must leave the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) to draw inferences from the facts which he may be in possession of, or from such facts as he may gather. I would not like to say that the British Columbia Southern Company are getting the land for nothing.

Mr. FOSTER. They do not have to build the road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would not like to say that the British Columbia Southern Railway are getting the lands for nothing, because I am told—I cannot verify the accuracy of the statement—but I am told that the British Columbia Southern Company has expended something in the neighbourhood of about $100,000 in cash. If they have they are not getting the lands for nothing. They will earn the lands as a condition attached to the construction of this railway. If the railway is built, the lands will go to them; and if the railway is not built, they do not get the lands. There is no doubt a very great value attached in the popular imagination to the coal lands in that district. People sit down and calculate, or, if they cannot calculate themselves, they have some one else to calculate for them, what is likely to be the gross tonnage in coal contained in this large tract of land, and it totals up to millions upon millions of tons. Now, this may be all true. This area may be all that it is supposed to be;

it may possibly be very much less ; because this is, after all, very largely a matter of conjecture. The reports furnished by the officers of the Geological Survey are to the effect that the outlook is very promising for a large development of coal in that district, and that the coal area is an immense one. That is their judgment from the outcrop ; but that is only conjecture after all. The inference we may fairly draw, however, is that there will be an amount of coal found there which will probably supply all the coal which that section of country at all events will require for many hundreds, perhaps thousands of years to come. There is, however, I think I ought to point out, a disposition in some quarters, after figuring out the immense quantity of coal which is deposited there, to put a value on each ton of coal, and on this calculation to conclude that the people who are getting this railway subsidy are getting millions of dollars worth for the building of a few hundred miles of railway. Now, it does seem to me in all reason, if we are to approach the subject from a rational standpoint, that these calculations are all extremely illusory, and extremely exaggerated. You can at any time buy these coal lands of British Columbia from the province for $5 an acre. There is a company which owns some 10,000 acres of lands immediately in the neighbourhood of where this Crow's Nest Pass Railway will be constructed, and which bought them from the British Columbia Government for something less than $5 an acre. That is the value which the British Columbia Government put upon their coal lands. True, after the railway is built the value may be greater. I hope that it will be ; I am confident that it will be. Perhaps the fact that these lands are lying there unreachd by railway communication has had a great deal to do with their remaining fixed in value at this low price. But even after the railway is built, the value of the coal, it appears to me, will be infinitely greater to the country—to the people who want to get it for manufacturing, mining and other purposes—than it will be to the people who own the lands ; because the people will not own the monopoly by any means. There was a danger that they would have a monopoly, because, unhappily, as I think from a public point of view, the people who own these 10,000 acres of coal lands, lying adjacent to this railway, are the same people who are connected with the British Columbia Southern Railway Company ; and there would have been a monopoly if the British Columbia Southern Railway Company had built this railway and had got this land subsidy for the building of the railway ; because I believe that the area they would have got as a land subsidy would have covered nearly all the coal lands found in British Columbia. I may state that I was, myself, very much impressed when I was in British Columbia, with the danger which lay in the creation of such a monopoly, which would ensue if this railway were to be built by the British Columbia Southern Railway Company, and I took occasion upon the platform to call the attention of the people of that province to the danger which lay in this monopoly being built up, which would be a monopoly not only in coal lands, but in timber lands, and in whatever other value there might be in the lands which were to be earned as a subsidy for building this road.

Mr. FOSTER. Did these land grants carry the mineral value ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They carry all but the royal metals. They carry the baser metals, I think ; but it is only fair to say that they are subject to the regulations made by the province of British Columbia. So that under the regulations which relate to prospecting and mining development, the monopoly which the ownership of these lands would give in the direction of ordinary mineral development would not perhaps be very considerable or very alarming. But it struck me that the fact that so stupendous an area of the lands of that province carrying coal and bearing timber, would be a serious drawback to the future development of the province, if the lands were to fall into the hands of any one corporation ; and since the subject has been practically dealt with by the Government, we have taken means by which I think we have secured the future of that country against its being placed at a disadvantage by reason of the existence of monopoly in either of these directions. We think we have absolutely secured the country against the possibility of a monopoly being created which will have any obstructive or injurious effect upon the future development of that province. We have provided, in the first place, that before the Canadian Pacific Railway Company shall earn this subsidy, they will secure the transfer to the Government of Canada, in the interest of the people of Canada, of at least 50,000 acres of these coal lands. Now, when we are getting 50,000 acres of these coal lands, according to the way some people calculate their value, we are getting enough to build this railway forty or fifty times over. But according to the practical view, according to the actual value attached to these lands now, or as it will be after the road is completed, we are not, I think, getting a property of any great pecuniary value. It is not from the standpoint of its actual value in dollars and cents that we have felt an interest in annexing this condition to the giving of the subsidy. I do not put it forward to this committee that in these 50,000 acres we are getting a property worth so many dollars ; that is not a fact which seems to me to be worthy of very much consideration ; but it is that by securing these 50,000 acres we have it in our power to prevent the possibility of the creation in that country of a great coal monopoly which could strangle the mineral development of British Columbia if it had it in its power. That is the value that we attach to this condition. We are not getting these 50,000 acres for the purpose of putting them on the market for sale and finding a purchaser and getting something into the treasury of Canada. That is not our object. Our object is to have them under the control of the Government, so that if ever the time does come when the people who own those coal lands do not use them as they should do, not affording the people a fair opportunity to get the coal at reasonable prices by reason of a combine or monopoly, we have it in our power to create the competition or stimulate the competition which we believe necessary in order to secure to the people what they have a right to expect, the means of purchasing the coal at fair prices. That is our object in getting possession of these 50,000 acres of coal land. Why, when you consider after all, what a vast body of coal is contained in an acre of ground, you can imagine what an immense quantity there is in this area of 50,000 acres, and how idle it is to attempt to put a value upon that coal by the ton or by the acre. It is a fact, I believe, that in any ordinary colliery district, the coal-bearing area does not exceed five or six hundred acres; and if a man who wants to start a colliery, finds that he has five or six hundred acres, he considers that in that area he has enough coal to last him and his children and his children's children, and yet produce a very large output from year to year. So that one is apt to get lost when endeavouring to make any calculation with regard to the quantity of coal which is to be found in such a country as that. All we have desired to do is to put the Government of this country in such a position that it may, for all time to come, control the situation and prevent, for all time to come, any monopoly being created. The same view holds good with regard to the timber lands. A very large portion of the timber is burnt, but there still remain very large timber areas to draw upon, and this timber question is one which is becoming more acute yearly in British Columbia. The people do not like the idea of their timber lands being held by large monopolies, by companies which will dole it out at such prices as they can squeeze out of the people, and will afford no facilities at all for the miners to get this most valuable article at reasonable prices. It is necessary that our miners should have timber if they are to prosecute their mining operations successfully. Our object is to secure the people of British Columbia against what we venture to think has been the somewhat inconsiderate legislation of their own province. Our object is to protect the people of British Columbia, of the mining sections at all events, against the disastrous consequences which will flow from the possession of these valuable timber lands by monopolies. We have, by the conditions of this contract, secured the people of British Columbia against such danger for all time. We do not want these lands for the purposes of speculation, but are endeavouring to subserve higher and better interests than securing immediate pecuniary return by the acquisition of this property by the Government, and I think we have embodied in this convention such conditions as will for ever protect the people of British Columbia against any monopoly either in the production of coal or timber. How have we done that? We require that these lands, when they are earned as a subsidy resulting from the construction of this railway, shall be sold according to such regulations as this Government may see fit to impose from time to time. We shall thereby be enabled to secure that those lands shall be sold at reasonable prices and that the timber or coal shall be sold at reasonable prices if the people do not buy the lands as well. We have surrounded this transaction with every possible safeguard. We have vested in the hands of the Government supreme control, so that these lands and this coal and timber and other valuable assets, which the building of the railway will open to the world, will be held in trust for the people of Canada by their Government for the time being. I do not think it would be possible to give the people any better protection than we are securing to them under this agreement.

An hon. gentleman asks me how we propose to make the selection of these 50,000 acres of coal lands which we are to get. We cannot say just at this moment what we may conclude will be the best method of making that selection. But it is open for us to determine how that selection shall be made. We have reserved to the Governor in Council the right to determine how it shall be made. We are going to make sure, at all events, that we are not going to get the skimmed milk and give them the cream. We are going to make sure that we shall have as good a section as they have or as remains unchosen. If we think it advisable, we may consult the Geological Department and make the selections according to the advice of the experts of that department. Our judgment is not formed on that question, it is a matter we will see to later, but we have so reserved such control to ourselves that there is no possibility of our having forced upon us an inferior quality of coal lands.

I have endeavoured hastily and in a very crude way to run over these propositions in order that the House may have before it the reasons which actuate the Government in presenting this matter for your consideration. I should like to have a strong expression of approval in respect of this proposal. I believe that when the news reached the people on the Pacific coast, and more especially the people in the districts of Sandon, Trail, Rossland and the Slocan country, they received it with feelings of an inspiring character. I believe that the news that the Government had determined to render assistance for the construction of this road was accepted as ensuring a most stimulating and beneficial effect upon the development of British Columbia. I am the more anxious because I attach a great deal of importance to the early development of this country, and I can tell those of you who have not visited British Columbia, that they need to go out to that province in order to form some adequate conception of the value of that territory. No man can visit British Columbia and go into its mining camps and see the life and activity prevailing there, and witness the infectious spirit of hope and confidence that prevails, without feeling prouder and stronger in his confidence in the great future of Canada than he ever could have been before. That is the feeling I brought away with me from the Pacific coast. I never despaired of the future, I never felt any want of confidence in the prospects of Canada; but after I had visited that country and seen it for myself and formed the best judgment of its resources I could, I came away with a greater idea of the future of Canada than I ever possessed before.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am glad to have the opportunity of saying a few words on this subject, which is one of very great importance; and I am glad to be able to say that I have listened not only with interest but with warm approval to a great deal of what has fallen from the lips of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) who has just resumed his seat. There is one point on which we all agree, and that is that it is impossible to overrate the enormous mineral wealth that British Columbia possesses; and we also, I believe, all agree that it is the duty of the Government to take such measures as will open communication between the great North-west and the eastern portion of this Dominion and that great mineral region as promptly as possible. One of the advantages of great mineral wealth is that it induces, perhaps more than anything else, a great and rapid influx of population into a country. And, even when population is brought in for such substantial reason as the enormous mineral wealth that British Columbia is now developing it does not require to be said that the agricultural question becomes one of great importance, and the feeding and providing for such population is a matter of moment. We all agree upon another point, and a most important one, to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) drew the attention of the committee, and that is that we are so situated that that portion of British Columbia which has thus suddenly burst into such activity and which gives such a great and, I have no hesitation in saying, such undoubted promise of a splendid future, is so situated that it was cut off from the eastern portion of Canada as well as from the western portion. It was cut off from the coast and from the cities of Victoria and Vancouver, and it was to a very large extent entirely cut off by the Rocky Mountains from the eastern portion of Canada, except by a circuitous route by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and navigation, when navigation was open. But, in addition to that, it was in such a position to be tapped, as it was tapped by lines of railway communication connecting with the great railways of the United States, the Great Northern and the Northern Pacific Railway, which has already obtained access by Spokane, by the construction of a line of railway into this portion of our country. There can be no doubt that, under these circumstances, it became a matter of vital importance, not only to the province of British Columbia, which has a good future to have so suddenly developed such an enormous portion of mineral wealth, but to the whole of Canada, that this great country into which population is pouring where towns of considerable importance are rapidly being built up, and to which immense capital is being drawn, should not be made tributary to a foreign country. It was under the conviction that it was necessary not to lose an hour in obtaining access from other portions of our own country for that section of British Columbia, that the late Government, after careful examination, came to the conclusion that they would be warranted in asking a very large appropriation from this Parliament for the purpose of providing that railway communication. The committee will remember that the late Government came to a resolution asking authority from this Parliament to vote not less than $20,000 per mile for this railway communication, as a loan to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company at the rate of 3½ per cent interest, for the purpose of enabling them to promptly construct this road, and that in addition to that the late Government were prepared to give a subsidy of $5,000 a mile for these 330 miles to extend the railway from Lethbridge to the Columbia. Under these circumstances, I need not tell the committee that we are prepared—because we hold exactly the same views when on this side of the House that we held when on the other side—we are prepared to give any Government assistance in carrying out the policy to which we had committed ourselves, as necessary for the promotion of great Canadian interests.

Now, this question of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway is one with which the House has been made tolerably familiar by the discussion of it in almost every portion of the press for many months past. So I shall take only a few moments to draw the attention of the committee to what I consider the great salient features of the scheme. I learned with infinite pleasure that the Government had abandoned the idea or intention of building this railway as a Government work. I am quite aware that a portion of the press giving a considerable support to the Opposition has put forward this policy of the construction of the road through the Crow's Nest Pass as a Government work. I confess that I was astounded to find that, with the evidence that we had before us of the result of the construction and operation of Government railways in Canada, a single intelligent man could be found in this House, or out of it, who was prepared to advocate such a policy in this case. Why, Sir, all we have to do is to look at the facts that we have before us. We have already solved, we have set at rest for ever, in my judgment, in the minds of any reasonable or intelligent man the question whether it is better for Canada to construct a railway and operate it as a Government work, or by the aid of a private company. Sir, this country, from the necessity of the case—for it was made part of the compact of confederation, and necessarily so—was obliged to undertake the construction of the Intercolonial Railway as a Government work. It was not a matter of choice at that time, but a matter of necessity. And what is the result? Any person who will take the trouble to look at pages 650 and 651 of the Statistical Year-Book of Canada will find the whole story told. We constructed a railway from the city of Halifax, a large, enterprising city with a great trade, offering the finest harbour on the continent of America as a means of communication for the ocean trade. We carried that railway to St. John, another fine harbour, another large town, and, I may be permitted to say, of still greater energy and enterprise than Halifax, and there were reasons for that. But, Sir, we have then run this line of railway through an open, cultivated country, with all the towns bordering upon the St. Lawrence up to Quebec, and with what result? With the result that to-day we stand face to face with a debt of no less than fifty millions of capital expenditure, and year after year a large deficit to be taken out of the treasury of Canada for the purpose of paying the expenditure over and above the capital expenditure, and over and above all that we can make out of the road. Then I take another thing. Government railways are bad enough in the hands of the Conservative party, but in the hands of the Liberal party they are startling. I do not hesitate to say that this page under my hand, these figures which, it is said, cannot lie, give an evidence of the most striking character as to what you may expect from the construction, and operation, and management of Government railways in the hands of the Liberal party. If you will take the trouble to look over the five years from 1874 to 1879 under the management of my hon. friends opposite, and when they had the advantage of having a very able man, Mr. Alexander Mackenzie, as Minister of Public Works, and with this railway under his control, you will find that no less than $3,010,500 were sunk in constructing and in operating the Intercolonial Railway during those five years, over and above every dollar that could be obtained from it. That includes the Prince Edward Island Railway for the same period. Well, I am glad to be able to present a contrast. Fortunately for Canada, those gentlemen were relieved of the duty and responsibility of administering the Intercolonial Railway, and with a very good result. You will find on the same page the figures which show that during the five years under Conservative management we spent only $490,887 over and above all that we could get out of the Intercolonial Railway, and which increased the debt of the country only to that amount. So I am glad to be able to present a contrast and to be able to show that during our five years of management the deficit over all that could be got out of that road, was reduced from $3,010,500 to $490,887.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. How much out of that fourteen or fifteen millions was added for capital account?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend will find that he will not strengthen his case by that, because if he will look at capital account he will find that that will not give him any satisfaction. I did not make these accounts, these accounts were submitted to the Auditor General, and, therefore, no exception can be taken to them. I am only glancing at these facts as an evidence that whether Liberals or Conservatives were in power, I would deplore in the strongest manner any attempt in this country, by any Government, I care not who they are, or who they are composed of, to construct another government railway, that is the position that I take. And I feel it right at the same time to show that comparing our five years with the five years of Liberal rule, we have a balance of $2,600,621 to be placed to our credit; and I need not tell my hon. friend that that sum stands to the credit of myself as Minister of Railways during that period. Now it is not necessary for me to say more than to express the relief with which I heard the statement of the Minister. I confess that when I learned that the Minister of Railways had come back from British Columbia with his mind made up—and I am not quite sure that he had not a syndicate made up as well as his mind—to take this work up and construct it as a Government work. I confess that I was startled, and I felt that it would be the greatest calamity that could happen to Canada for her to undertake to construct that road from Lethbridge to Nelson, or to the Columbia River, as a Government work. Because, as I said before, Governments cannot construct railways in an economical manner, they are under pressure, they are under influence, they are under embarrassments that do not apply to companies. Suppose a Government undertakes the construction of a railway, what is the position? They ask for tenders, tenders come in. Hon. gentlemen know the howl that is raised by the Opposition, whoever they may be, if the lowest tender is not taken; and yet it is a tender that a company who have got to find the money out of their own pockets, would not look at in their own interest and would set it aside, and they would be consulting their own financial position by taking a much higher tender. So I say that the Government have not the latitude, they have not the means of saving public money as a private company can save theirs. Then when it comes to the operation of the railway, where are you? Why, Sir, every gentleman sitting behind the Minister of Railways wants to get a friend, or a relative of a friend, or some active supporter, put upon the road. He says: You have got a thousand employees, and one more cannot make much difference. He puts the screws upon him, and succeeds in crowding some one on to the railway.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The hon. gentleman knows how it is himself.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I know how I suffered in resisting that pressure. But I point my hon. friend to the evidence showing the extent to which I resisted it when I put that $2,600,000 balance to my credit in five years, over and above all that was sunk. But there is a worse thing than that with reference to a Government railway, and nobody has experienced it more than I have myself. When you have built a road, and when you have over-manned the road, as you are almost compelled to do by the pressure that is put upon you, unless you are more than a man, there is a worse thing still, and that is that every man who has got a ton of freight to carry over the road, brings all the political influence he can upon the Government and the department, to carry that for nothing. Therefore, the Government is not in a position to preserve the interests of the public, nor to manage a railway in the same manner that a private company can manage it. I am glad to say that I need not pursue that question, because my hon. friend who has just sat down, has relieved our minds, and my mind especially, from the fear that the Government would jeopardize the best interests of Canada by an attempt to construct this as a Government railway.

It being Six o'clock, the Committee rose for recess.

After Recess.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. When the committee rose at six o'clock I was concluding my remarks in reference to the impolicy of constructing railways by the Government, and I have only a single word to add to it, which I omitted, and that is that the capital account of the Intercolonial Railway, including the Prince Edward Island Railway, which forms a part of it, now stands at $58,758,504. I find that the amount paid for construction and rolling stock, and which I suppose includes the interest on the money, is stated in the Statistical Year Book, totalled before confederation at $13,881,461. Since that time the amount expended on construction and rolling stock brings the capital account up to $122,750,702. I find that the expenditure for operating the road over and above any receipts from it amounted to $8,251,737, and the small amount we have which occurred in the first few years before we had constructed any material portion of the road is $304,849, which leaves a balance of $7,946,888 to be charged against the road for the amount expended over and above all its earnings. I would not have wasted the time of the committee in speaking of this if it were not that I find from the press of the country, which I have closely followed during the past few months, in the face of these facts, that there are actually to be found people in this country who talk about the advisability of constructing railways by the Government. In addition to the point I made as to the much greater success of the operation of the Government roads by the Conservative Administration, I may draw the attention of the committee to the fact that we find under the present Administration exactly the same state of things that occurred before. We find that the deficit of the Intercolonial Railway, according to the statement of the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) during the present year will be about double that which it was in the previous year under the administration of my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart). Now, I come to the consideration of the further features connected with this matter, and that is as to who should construct this railway. I may say that the late Government were committed, as I have already stated, to the construction of that road by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and I will tell the House frankly that it never occurred to me for a single moment, and I have some little knowledge of the railway question in Canada—it never occurred to me as a possible contingency that anybody else should be asked to construct that road. The fact of the position that they occupy, the interests that they have at stake, the ability that they have shown to secure the rapid construction of railways all indicated to me the advisability of securing the construction of that road, and the Government of which I was a member were pledged to that company to give assistance to the extent to which I have already referred. I have read a great deal of nonsense in the press—I do not hesitate to apply that term—in reference to the arrangement that was made between the Government of Canada and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the purpose of securing the construction of that great work. And some people, assuming that every person has been asleep for the last seventeen years, arrive at the conclusion that the time has come when they could actually talk to the people about the enormity of the contract made by the Conservative Administration of which I was a member at the time I was Minister of Railways and Canals, with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I have no hesitation in saying that if ever a contract vindicated itself in the history of this country, it is the contract made on that occasion. I see my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce seems to be a little incredulous on that point.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am afraid you will have a big contract on hand to convince the public of that.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If the Government of Canada had not had the good fortune in the interest of Canada to secure that contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company there might have been half a dozen changes of Government during the last eighteen years, and we would never have had that road open to-day. That is my judgment, and is an important judgment in view of the difficulties that we encountered. Hon. gentlemen when they talk about the advantages, privileges and franchises that we gave to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company when that contract was made, forget that without these franchises and privileges no such contract would have been made and Canada would have been to-day without that great line of inter-oceanic communication that binds the provinces together from the Atlantic to the Pacific. I am not an advocate of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I am not under any obligation to the Canadian Pacific Railway. I do not hesitate to say so, and I think I may go further and say that I have a good deal of reason to complain of the Canadian Pacific Railway. But I am speaking here to-night as a public man on a public question of what I regard as of vital importance to this country. And it is due to hon. gentlemen opposite and to the House without respect of party that I should frankly state these things as they present themselves to my mind. The committee will naturally infer from what I have said that I am prepared to support this very important proposal that is now submitted. I do not hesitate to say that I am—and

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

I will give the committee briefly my reasons for taking that position. I felt that I was making a wise and judicious arrangement in the interest of Canada when I pledged the support that I did pledge for the purpose of accomplishing that undertaking. In my judgment, the terms that are in the proposal made by the Government are much more onerous than the terms I proposed. I proposed to give $5,000 a mile for 330 miles, which amounts to $1,650,000. That was an absolute subsidy without any consideration whatever except the prompt construction of the road, and I attached the most vital importance to the prompt construction of the road. I will tell the committee frankly why. Every hour, every day, every year that that work was delayed was giving a greater opportunity to the great republic to the south of us and to foreign railways in that republic to lay hold of and utilize the major portion of the advantages that the people of Canada were entitled to have and which I wish to see flow down through Canada and over to the shores of the Pacific instead of passing to the south into a foreign country. That great mining population in British Columbia would be dependent upon our neighbours to the south for all their machinery and all their supplies, if this means of communication were not opened up. I therefore considered the prompt construction of the road, by the parties best able, beyond question, to do it, as an actual necessity. It has been intimated, and the Minister of Railways referred to this afternoon, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company might construct this road without assistance. I have given that subject the best attention in my power, and from my connection with the financial circles in London, I know as much as most men in regard to that question, and I do not believe that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, without large and substantial aid from the Government of Canada, could accomplish the work. I found it necessary to give substantial aid in order to procure the prompt construction of this road. We all know that the Government of British Columbia had given a very large subsidy to the British Columbia Southern Railway Company, and we know that for years that province has endeavoured to tempt capitalists to build a line which would connect the Pacific coast of British Columbia with the coal mines of the Crow's Nest Pass and the great mineral country at Rossland and Kootenay. These coal lands are said to be of enormous value, but, valuable as they are, they did not tempt capitalists to invest, and no substantial progress was made towards the construction of that railway. I arrived at the conclusion, and I have seen nothing since to change my opinion, that to secure the prompt construction of this great work, it was absolutely necessary to give, and to give to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, substantial assistance. In addition to the $1,650,000 of direct subsidy, or $5,000 a mile, we proposed to loan to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, $20,000 per mile for twenty years at 3½ per cent. Well, Sir, that loan would cost the country nothing. On the contrary, looking to the rate at which money could be obtained in London by the Government of Canada, we regarded that as a transaction that would return to the Government one-half per cent per annum. With the credit that Canada then and now has, the money could be borrowed at 3 per cent, and I have had an actuarial calculation made, which shows that the Government of Canada would have made $493,613 out of it, which is the present value of half per cent per annum on the amount of $6,600,000 which was the extent of the loan. That amount deducted from the subsidy would have left the cost to Canada, under the arrangement which we proposed, at $1,156,387. Now, Sir, the proposal of the present Government is to ask Parliament for $3,630,000, or $11,000 a mile. So far as the bald figures are concerned, our proposal was at least more than $2,000,000 less than is now proposed by the Government for this service. But, Sir, I do not hesitate to say that for the prompt construction of this road even the subsidy now proposed is one that I think Parliament might entertain, especially in connection with the statements made by the Minister as to the other conditions that are obtained under this grant. I am not in a position to estimate how much should be taken off the amount asked by these resolutions in consideration of the coal lands we get and in consideration of the reduction in freight rates which, although not immediately inuring to the Government, is a matter of great importance to the country. Perhaps I do not estimate them as highly as hon. gentlemen opposite do. I believe there has been a great deal of misapprehension with regard to freight rates, and I will frankly tell the committee why I think so. When there are complaints of this monopoly, and of the mode in which the freight rates oppress the people of Manitoba, the Territories and British Columbia, it might be well to remind those who complain that but for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway that country would not have been opened up at all. When that contract was signed by myself as representing the Government, and the Canadian Pacific Railway syndicate, there was only one village of a few hundred people from the eastern terminus of Nipissing to the shores of the Pacific Ocean. The House will understand why I was taunted on the floor of this House by gentlemen then in opposition who were not disposed to treat these questions on the broad and just grounds I treated them, the House will understand that I was taunted with the fact that the road never would be constructed, notwithstanding the enormous subsidies we gave. That prophecy was much nearer realization than most people know. I was told that if the road was constructed there was no traffic to support it, and a railway engineer committed himself to the calculation, that it would take $6,000,000 per annum to operate the road over and above its receipts. All these difficulties ought not to be forgotten when the people are talking about railway freight rates. They should remember that they would not have been oppressed, because there would have been no railway to oppress them, but for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which it has now become fashionable to describe as an extravagant contract made by the Government. Large as undoubtedly were the subsidies granted by the Parliament, were it not for the fact that that contract was in the hands of men of great experience in the construction of prairie roads, namely, the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway; had it not been that these men had made a gigantic fortune, and had that fortune in their possession before they undertook the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the syndicate never would have been able to carry that road to completion, notwithstanding all the subsidies we gave them. When people are talking about extravagant railway rates, and the manner in which the road oppresses them, it should not be forgotten, that the shareholders of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are receiving at the present time the munificent return of 2 per cent per annum on their money.

Under these circumstances I do not think there is any ground for the criticisms that have been offered in that direction. I say more: I say that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, committed to such a gigantic enterprise as they have been committed to, opening up and developing the country as they have opened it up and developed it, are as deeply interested in making their rates such as will be attractive of population, and as will induce the settlement of the country, as the Government and the people of Canada themselves. The amount which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company get for an acre of land in Manitoba or the North-west to-day, is utterly insignificant compared with the value to them of having that land settled. It would pay them to give all their lands away. It would be a magnificent financial operation for them if they could give all their lands away for nothing, provided they could get enterprising and industrious settlers to cultivate them and provide freight and traffic for their road. Under the circumstances I am not prepared to say what deduction should be made, because I take it that it would be to the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to reduce their rates to the lowest point that is possible in order to induce traffic and travel and settlement, and in order to induce people to raise the produce to be carried over the road. But these terms are infinitely better, in my judgment, than the construction of the road by the Government; and, apart from the Government of Canada, I know of no means by which this road could be constructed; and why? From Lethbridge to Nelson, along the whole 330 miles that are to be constructed, I do not suppose that to-day there are a thousand people. But the construction of this railway will be the means of access to that country, and will fill it up, and develop these great coal fields, which are now useless to Canada, and will in that way be of enormous advantage to British Columbia and to Canada. I was glad to hear that, in connection with the construction of this Crow's Nest Pass Railway, the Government proposed to secure the prompt extension of the railway from Nelson to Penticton. I do not know what the proposition of the Government was, or who the parties were with whom they were negotiating that transaction; but in my judgment it is a matter of great importance to Canada that that extension, opening up that magnificent boundary region, where there are mines of great value, if it can be secured by any fair and reasonable inducement, I do not care under whose auspices it may be constructed, should be promptly carried through. We want not only the extension from the eastern portion of our railway system at Lethbridge to Nelson—which I have no doubt will be constructed with the great energy and promptitude which have always characterized the Canadian Pacific Railway Company—but we want the great mineral region beyond, which is of great value to Canada, opened up as well. I do not intend to detain the committee in listening to my very rasping voice further than to say that I regard the measure now submitted to the committee as of such great importance that I am not disposed to deal with it too critically, nor have I the means at my disposal to do so. I can only say that if this is the best proposal that can be submitted to secure the prompt construction of the road, I for one am prepared to give it my humble support.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I would be very hard indeed to please if I objected very seriously to the criticism of the hon. leader of the Opposition. The hon. gentleman has appeared in many roles. To-night he appears rather in the part of the prophet Baalam, who would be disposed to curse but is obliged to bless, by reason of the excellence of the measure we have brought down. As I have said, I propose to say but a very few words, not exactly in reply, but by way of commenting on some of the statements made by the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman drew a comparison between the management of the Intercolonial Railway under himself and its management under my esteemed and lamented colleague and leader, Mr. Alexander Mackenzie, and he brought out, by methods of arithmetic best known to himself, a clear credit of $2,600,000 on the right side of the balance sheet. All I can say is that if he was entitled to the credit of that amount, he took it all out of us in the case of the construction of a very well known short line railway, which was to have shortened the distance by forty-seven or forty-five miles for every pound of freight and every passenger that came from the maritime provinces to any other part of the Dominion, but it was whittled down by actual arithmetic to four miles, according to a statement made by Sir John Macdonald in this House. But I call the attention of the House to the utter fallacy of the statement made by the hon. gentleman with respect to the expenditures and the deficits which occurred on the Intercolonial Railway during the period of Mr. Mackenzie's Administration and his own. In the first place, all men who know anything about railway management know very well that when starting a new railway of several hundred miles in length, you cannot in the first two or three years hope to make as good a return as you can afterwards. That we will pass over, however. But I would like to call the attention of the House to this important fact, that under Mr. Mackenzie the annual charge for interest paid out of the public chest was about $1,500,000 a year on the cost price of the Intercolonial Railway, whereas under the hon. gentleman the capital account had swelled to $50,000,000, so that in his time the annual interest charge amounted to $2,000,000, a difference of $500,000 a year, which, multiplied by the five years he speaks of, would wholly absorb his imaginary surplus. However, that is an old story, and I am not going to waste any more time about it. I would merely call the hon. gentleman's attention to this fact. He contracts the terms which he and his Government were willing to offer for the construction of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway with those contained in the proposal brought down by my hon. friend. It is true, I believe the hon. gentleman intended to give only $5,000 a mile as a free gift; but I understand that he was likewise going to lend $20,000 a mile, I suppose on the security of the road alone.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No. I may tell my hon. friend that everything the company had, subject to its present liability, was to be the security.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They would have taken, then, a second mortgage for the $20,000 a mile. I think most business men will agree that our proposition, even if it contained no other advantageous features, was quite as good for the people of Canada as the hon. gentleman's. Candidly, I would about as soon give $10,000 or $11,000 to a railway company as give them $5,000 and lend them $20,000. However, that is a matter of detail and of opinion. But this I may point out to the hon. gentleman. He may estimate the concessions that we have obtained from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company at a small or a large value, as he pleases; but those concessions refer not merely to the right of operating on the Crow's Nest Pass line. Remember the Government of Canada are able to control the rates on everything which goes from any part of the Crow's Nest Pass to any portion of Canada, and on anything which comes from any part of Canada to any section of the Crow's Nest line. The reduction of 3 cents per 100 pounds on all the grains going eastward from Manitoba cannot be computed at less than several hundred thousand dollars per year. Now, the difference between the proposals is practically that we give, if you choose so to call it, some $5,000 or $6,000 per mile to the Canadian Pacific Railway for constructing this line, and we are paying them a further sum of $5,000 or $6,000 in return for valuable privileges to the whole North-west and eastern Canada as well. That is the bargain which we have made and which we respectfully submit to the House, and to say the least, it is quite as valuable and advantageous to the people of Canada as the bargain which the hon. gentleman when Premier (Sir Charles Tupper) was willing to implement, putting entirely on one side, for the moment, the fact that he was ready to lend this corporation $20,000 per mile in addition. Now, I agree with the hon. gentleman (and it was a special reason which weighed very heavily indeed with the Government in advising the House to proceed with this bargain) on two points. I believe he is right in stating that this is a very valuable territory which is to be developed, and which can only be developed by a railway. I believe that the construction of a railway into that country will, in all probability, lead to bringing there a population of many thousands of consumers, who will afford a very valuable market to the inhabitants of the North-west portion of Canada and also to our manufacturers in the east. More than that, I agree with him also that it is a matter of moment to us that the great traffic which certainly will spring up if the representations which have been made to us are confirmed even to only one-tenth or one-twentieth of the extent to which they appear likely to be confirmed, should be preserved to the people of Canada. A great deal of their trade is now being diverted to American channels. I need not say to business men in or out of this House that there is no one thing more certain than that if once that trade be allowed to flow into American channels, we shall find it extremely difficult to recover it. These are two reasons sufficient to induce us to do what otherwise we might hesitate to do, ask the House to proceed with an enterprise which necessarily involves an addition of three or four million dollars to the public debt. I admit that we are taking risks, as hon. gentlemen opposite were willing to take risks last year. But most men who will take the trouble to make themselves acquainted with the enormous mineral resources of British Columbia, particularly in the territory which we are about to open, must know how absolutely indispensable it is for the inhabitants of that region and the promoters of these mining industries to obtain, not merely a supply of the ordinary necessities of life at reasonable rates, but to obtain a cheaper supply of coal, and they will agree in thinking that the risk is well run and that it is, on the whole, in the interest of the people at large that this money should be expended for the purpose of securing new trade and developing the resources of that very valuable region. I am glad to find that the hon. gentleman substantially agrees with us in the grounds and the reasons on which we have ventured to ask the House to support this proposition. I do not deny that, to a certain extent, all these things are experimental, but I do believe, after giving the matter every possible consideration, that if this railway is constructed, from the very nature of the case, you will have ten dividend-paying mines in Rossland and the adjacent country for one under existing circumstances. And no one thing is more likely to aid Canada and bring immigrants to the North-west than the opening up, in various portions of it, in British Columbia and the province of Ontario, not to speak of the other sections of the country, of large and well developed gold fields. Every man who has studied the progress of the Australian colonies knows that it was slow and in many cases attended with great drawbacks until the time of their gold discovery. From that time they advanced with leaps and bounds; and while I am not at all disposed to prophecy as to what may take place in Canada, I do say there is a concurrence of circumstances at present which renders it important that Canada should be ready to take advantage of the extreme attention now being paid to her affairs in the mother country. Sir, it is not in any spirit of greed or self-speaking that we recently made the offer we did to the British people through the medium of our tariff. It was not in any spirit of self-seeking or greed that we exerted ourselves to cause Canada to be well represented at the approaching Jubilee, but I am justified, looking at what has occurred, in saying that whatever may have been the motive, the result has been most gratifying to everybody who has the honour and interest of Canada at heart. I believe that never in the whole course of our history has Canada occupied so high a position or attracted one-hundredth part as much attention in the motherland, and that is another reason, if reason be needed, why we can venture to take this risk in the confident hope that the money we are now expending will be repaid to us a hundred fold before we are many years older.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. I listened with considerable interest this afternoon to the explanations by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) of the resolution which embody the proposals of the Government in connection with the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. I agree with him on one point, and that is that the proposal of the Government may be fairly criticised. At the same time, I hardly agree in the views of my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper). He not only offered his warm approval of the proposals but went a step further and emphasized the point that no Government should construct or operate a railway. Evidently his lot, while he was in control of the Railway Department, was not a happy one, and I presume that he gave expression to his personal opinion based on his personal experience. According to the best information I possess, I understand that the people of this country, especially the people in the western section of Canada, taking their opinions as voiced in public meetings and through the independent press, are almost unanimously of the opinion that this Government would be fully justified in not only constructing but operating this Crow's Nest Railway, which is bound to be a dividend paying enterprise from the start. I am aware that nothing I can say on this question will have the weight which an exact knowledge of the country and its conditions obtained by hon. gentlemen who have visited it and who have already spoken or who may follow me, will have, and I approach this subject with all the diffidence of an eastern tenderfoot on a new trail. But at the same time I must say that I am greatly disappointed with the terms which the Government have made with the Canadian Pacific Railway. I do not think that the bargain is a good one except for the Canadian Pacific Railway and its assistant the British Columbia Southern Railway. What the Canadian Pacific Railway gets is very clear. It gets over $11,000 a mile of cash subsidy for 330 miles of its railway, amounting to a total of $3,630,000. That is what the people contribute in money to the building of the road, the entire cost of which is estimated at $7,000,000. At an outside estimate, the Canadian Pacific Railway will have to raise less than $3,400,000 to pay the entire cost of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. It would be serious indeed, it would be unheard of if the Canadian Pacific Railway had to raise even 40 per cent of the cost to provide itself with a property which will be commercially successful from the start. The Canadian Pacific Railway is saved from that evil by the overwhelming generosity of the Government of British Columbia. The public resources of British Columbia are transferred to the Canadian Pacific Railway to the tune of 20,000 acres per mile, and that is not ordinary land, but coal land, yielding, according to the estimate of Prof. Selwyn, about 30,000,000 tons per square mile. So the Canadian Pacific Railway gets in cash $11,000 from the people of this country, and 20,000 acres of land or 31,000 square acres for every mile of railway it builds. The question is: how much is this land worth? I hold in my hand the report of Mr. Fernie of the Crow's Nest Company, of which he was the superintendent in 1892. Mr. Fernie says of one part of this coal field: "It will average at least 10 miles wide the whole of the 35 miles." This would be 35 square miles of coal land in one block or 224,000 acres. He also declared that the area of the coal fields was 288 square miles or 184,000 acres, or twice the area mentioned by Dr. Selwyn in his report of 1891. I am omitting the value of town site lands from this calculation; but the bare facts are that the Canadian Pacific Railway gets in public money $3,630,000 and in coal lands from British Columbia, 134,000 acres. That is what the Canadian Pacific Railway gets; now the question is, what does the Canadian Pacific Railway give? I have read these resolutions and I must say that the concessions promised by these terms are mighty poor value for so much good land and so much good money. It is all right to turn to mathematics and figure out how much the deduction of 3 cents per 100 pounds will be worth to the farmers of Manitoba. The calculation is that this reduction will be worth $600,000 per annum to the farmers of that province. Well, if we are going to consult calculations of figures, why not pay due regard to the figures of my hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. McInnes). That hon. gentleman figures that at one cent a ton for the coal the Canadian Pacific Railway would get $39,000,000. So, if this House is to be governed not by facts but by calculations, then the calculations show that the Canadian Pacific Railway will get a great deal more out of the country than that the country can ever dream of getting out of the Canadian Pacific Railway. As to the reserve of 50,000 acres of coal lands, some hon. gentleman may talk as if the Canadian Pacific Railway were providing this land at their own expense. Well, if 50,000 acres of coal land retained by the Dominion Government for public purposes is of a great value—and we heard the Minister of Railways on that question—what must be the value of 134,000 acres of coal land taken from the public by the Canadian Pacific Railway under the charter of the British Columbia Southern Railway?

I cannot discuss the technicalities of this arrangement, but I do say that the Canadian Pacific Railway has given nothing which it would not have been forced to concede if the Government had gone the right way about it. I am not an enemy of the Canadian Pacific Railway, but I confess I would think more of that great corporation if it had more friends amongst the people who are at its mercy. Indeed there are ample reasons for believing that in the territory where there are no other roads but the Canadian Pacific Railway, the people believe that they are ill-used, and in that belief I share. Had the Canadian Pacific Railway management known how to run the road the Kootenay district would, to-day, have been far ahead of its present development, for the Canadian Pacific Railway then would have done the work which American small-fry corporations were not afraid to attempt. From all I can learn the Canadian Pacific Railway has no policy—but the Shaughnessy policy with the settler, the miner and the merchant. The only policy that that great corporation knows for those who are subject to its monopoly is to squeeze out of them the last drop of blood they can lose and not die. That line of policy had discouraged and disheartened the people, and that discouragement and disheartenment has tended to keep other people from filling up that country.

No man is blind enough to overlook the work that the Canadian Pacific Railway has done for Canada, but while admitting the work that that road has done for this country, it can be contended that Canada has done a great deal, yes, in the opinion of a great many people, more than it should have done, for that great corporation. Indeed, Canada has done so much for the Canadian Pacific Railway that I think it is about time Canada should have a chance to consider what it can do for itself. Now, I am not hostile to the Canadian Pacific Railway, but I am an enemy to the idea that any great corporation, any such corporation as this, shall be a governing force or factor in the politics of this country.

The proposed arrangement is, in my judgment, both a disappointment and a misfortune to this country. The country is disappointed because it expected from this new Government something better than a few paper guarantees in exchange for millions in land and millions in money. The country has reason to be disappointed, because the Government has missed a chance of settling this question in a way that would have saved the people from oppressive freight rates and also from the cost of building railways in British Columbia. I am trying to approach this question as a Canadian whose ardent desire is to see prosperity in every province of this great confederation, and as an Ontario man who does not want to see his own province burdened for the development of other provinces. I believe that if the Government had dealt in the right way with the British Columbia legislature and the British Columbia Government they could have secured to the people of that province a great many privileges which the older provinces foolishly threw away. As I understand, the situation in British Columbia is altogether different from that in some other parts of the country. The Kootenay country has advanced ahead of the railway, while in parts of older Canada the railway has developed in advance of the country. It seems to be admitted that there is traffic enough in sight to make the Crow's Nest Pass Railway a paying road from the start. It was believed that British Columbia had in its possession or under charters which it could have revoked, lands sufficient to pay for all the railway that that province would use. There was the definite charge made that the British Columbia Southern charter represented the desire of a band of schemers rather than of the people of British Columbia and if this Government had wanted to protect the people they could have found reasons for the disallowance of that Act. The disallowance of that Act would only have been the striking out of legislation which the Government could have replaced. The Government could have helped the people of British Columbia to use their land for the benefit of themselves and of the whole confederation. If the British Columbia legislature had listened to reason, the lands of the province and the credit of Canada could have been united in providing the railways essential to the prosperity of the province. The lands of that province, properly administered, would have paid over and over again for the cost of building these railways. I am not in favour of building the railways of British Columbia at the expense of the Dominion, and, for that reason, I had hope that the Dominion would assist the province to use the provincial resources for the benefit of the province. But if the resources of the province are to be used for the profit of commercial brigands and charter robbers who have British Columbia by the throat, the lands of the province will be frittered away before British Columbia has all her railways built. Then whenever she wants a railway built she will knock at the door of the Dominion treasury and the time is coming when British Columbia will be so strong that she will not knock in vain. The present Government had a great opportunity to work out a proper understanding between the people of British Columbia and the people of older Canada. The real protectors of the Dominion Treasury are the men who would have British Columbia build her own railways with her own means; and the real raiders on the Dominion treasury are those who would have British Columbia give her lands away to private corporations and individuals. All I can say is that this Government has missed a great opportunity. The Dominion of Canada is not indebted to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Although I am not a Liberal, I am somewhat familiar with the views of many of my fellow-countrymen who adhere to the Liberal cause, and I believe that the rank and file of the Liberal party have an idea that the Government owed its success at the polls last June more to the favour of the people than to the influence of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Those Liberals are stupid enough to think that the Canadian Pacific Railway did all it could to defeat their party. I am not suggesting that the Liberal Government should return evil to the Canadian Pacific Railway for all the evils that the Canadian Pacific Railway has dealt in the past to the Liberals at the polls; I am only expressing my regret as a Canadian that this Government has not been strong enough to do right. The present arrangement may be satisfactory enough to partisans who provide campaign funds, and who claim the right to provide a policy for the Government when that party is successful at the polls. But there are others. Every party gets something of its strength from the allegiance of faithful men who are not wealthy, and who serve their party and take their pay in the triumph of its principles. I do not think that the best opinion in the Liberal party will approve of an arrangement by which a railway is to be built with the country's public lands and money, which are to be for ever used for the purpose of the oppression of the people, certainly for the benefit of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It matters not what other Governments might have done. I hold that this Government had greater opportunities and more information than any of its predecessors; and therefore I must protest against this policy, and vote against these resolutions.

Mr. SPROULE. I have a few words to say, first with regard to the time when these resolutions are submitted to the House; secondly, to the nature of the resolutions themselves and their application to the country. I consider it decidedly out of place, in the interest of calm deliberation of this House and in the interest of this country, that these resolutions should be submitted at this late stage of the session. To-night we are within a few days of the end of the session, fully one-third of the members have gone home, or will leave to-night before these resolutions are finally dealt with by the House. The people's representatives who are sent here to do the work of the session, will have gone home, and then those who remain will vote away millions of money belonging to the country and will incur heavy liabilities to be added to the debt, at a time when the anxiety to leave this House is so great that they cannot be fairly considered, nor will they be fairly considered by this House. I say it is most unfair to the country, it is most unfair to the people's representatives that they should not have had these resolutions at an earlier stage during this session. Some may say: Oh, your party when in power did the same thing. Sir, I repeatedly remonstrated with them on account of the large votes they asked for towards the end of the sessions. I thought it wrong in them, and I think it wrong in this Government. I think it unjust to the country and unfair to the House. It does not enable the members of Parliament to do their duty to their constituents or to the country. Now, at the present time, according to the last Public Accounts, I find that the net debt of Canada, on the 31st of June, 1896, was $258,497,432. What have we added to that debt during the present session? The engagements to which we have committed the country during this session are equivalent, in my judgment, to not far from twenty-nine million dollars added to the debt of this country. Before giving details, I want to draw the attention of this House to the professions made by the present Government when they were in Opposition. They told us that one of the great needs of the time was economy, stringent economy in every department in the public service. When the Patrons put that as one of the planks in their platform, the Liberal party said: You and I are just exactly the same; why, we have been fighting on that line for years, and if returned by the people, we will do what we can to exercise stringent economy. There is no necessity for running up a public debt and we can carry on the affairs of the country without adding to it. But what has been the history of the present session? The engagements entered into this session are equivalent to an addition to the debt as follows:—Extension of the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal by the purchase of the Drummond County Railway and by the annual subsidy that is given to the Grand Trunk Railway, will amount to a sum that would pay the interest on seven million dollars, and we are committed to that for 100 years. If we had added seven millions more to our debt, the average rate of interest which we would have to pay on that debt would about equal the yearly sum which we shall have to pay on account of this railway extension. Then take the steamship subsidy that we voted the other night. Now, I am not condemning that vote, because I believe it is one that will do a great deal of good, but I am only drawing attention to it because the Liberal party who are responsible for it, said only two short years ago that the country was piling up a debt beyond its means and beyond its needs. The steamship subvention, according to the calculation of my hon. friend from Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), whom I always regarded as an able man in figures, is equal to an addition to the debt of this country of about eighteen million dollars. Now, we come to Crow's Nest Pass Railway, which we have under consideration; and we propose to vote for that $3,630,000. In addition to all that, we expect some time during the next few days to vote $300,000 to help to enlarge the Victoria Bridge at Montreal. Now, take these transactions together, and what do they mean? They mean that the engagements to which this Government have committed the country during this present session of Parliament are equivalent to an addition to the debt of about $28,970,000—nearly twenty-nine million dollars added to the debt in one year by the Government who said only two short years ago that the country did not require to make any addition to the debt to carry on its affairs, that the country required stringent economy and if the people returned them to power they were going to exercise stringent economy. Is this an evidence of it? I would like to ask the people of the country, I would like to ask the representatives of the people here, if this is an evidence of economy. Add the engagements entered into during the present session to the existing debt, and it all amounts to $287,500,000 instead of $258,000,000. Is that nothing to the people of the country? Do the ratepayers of Canada think nothing of it? Is it a small matter that they should be asked here, in the dying hours of the session, when a large number of the members have gone home, to assume a further debt of over $3,500,000, all inside a few hours, as if it was no consideration, as if the money was just as easy to raise as it is to pass the resolutions through the House? I do not think the ratepayers of this country will be satisfied. I do not think the people will look with unconcern upon the Government who always preached economy when they were in Opposition. Now it may be fairly asked, What does this mean? How will the country be benefited by it? There are two features of it that have attracted my attention. In the first place, the Government have succeeded, by a very liberal expenditure of money, in conciliating for the time being the two great railway corporations of the country. They have given the Grand Trunk Railway Company $300,000 to help them enlarge their bridge that they would have to enlarge themselves to meet the necessity of their own traffic. In the next place, they have committed us to an expenditure of $140,000 for 100 years to have the use of the outlet of the Grand Trunk Railway. Surely that ought to be sufficient to appease them for the time being, and make them friendly to the present Government. Now, as a matter of political policy, this may be good business, I admit, but I am safe in saying that the people will not be inclined to endorse the hon. gentlemen. I am sure that they will not be willing to look upon this transaction in a favourable light. Now, then, we turn from that. We have conciliated the Grand Trunk Railway Company and we have supposedly made them friends of the present Government. But we have that great Canadian Pacific Railway Company, that octopus that is stretching out its claws all over this country and bringing everything into its power. We are conciliating them to the tune of $3,630,000, which is the subsidy for the time being, and in addition to that they are getting 450,000 acres of mineral land which they got from the British Columbia Government through the British Columbia Southern Railway. This is a stroke of business for the present Government. They have done admirably, because they have conciliated both the great railway corporations, made friends of them and they may expect to benefit by that. But who is going to pay for all this? I represent one of the constituencies of Ontario. Where is the expenditure of this money to take place? The portion of it which has been given to the Grand Trunk and the Drummond County Railway will be expended in the province of Quebec, and the rest, which is going to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, will be expended in British Columbia, Manitoba and the Northwest Territories. The people of Ontario, the central part of this Dominion, representing about one-half of the population of the country, must pay about one-half of the whole debt, yet not a dollar is to be spent in that province. What will Ontario think of this expenditure? Will Ontario be satisfied with it? I am quite sure she will not, because she has been committed and she must pay the piper. She must pay her portion of this. That portion comes pretty nearly being the whole of it, and she will get very little in return for it. This expenditure is a great mistake. But the two great railway companies have been appeased. What does this expenditure mean to this country? It further strengthens the hands of what has been regarded and represented by hon. gentlemen opposite on the Treasury benches as one of the greatest monopolies that Canada ever had, to the extent of that large amount of money, and also to the extent of inclosing a large quantity of the finest coal and mineral territory in British Columbia, thereby shutting out anything like competition from other railway companies. It not only does that, but it chains up that great country in the west from having the benefit of competition by railways for a long time to come, if ever. You have given this company the control of one of the passes through the mountains and they will now control another when this road is built, so that there will be no inducement for any other railway to go in there. The great cry from that country has been that there has been no competition. And now they will not have the competitor that they are entitled to from the railway corporations. This arrangement will shut this out of competition for a long time to come, for twenty, thirty, forty or fifty years. It leaves the people at the mercy of that great railway corporation, the corporation which the hon. member for Toronto says has never shown any mercy whenever it was in a position to extract blood or money out of the people. They have given us an arrangement in the way of freight rates, but if you analyse the items, the concessions do not amount to very much. It is true that they seem big in some lines—33 per cent on the line of fruit that is carried there. The amount of fruit will not be large during the next ten years. What does that mean to the people of Canada, the Northwest and British Columbia. It looks a large item, but it does not amount to as much as it would seem. Then there is a cut of half a cent a hundred weight on grain, as far east as Port Arthur. It stops there, apparently for fear that Ontario would get any benefit from this large expenditure. They have reduced their freight rates on a few lines and as far as they go they are certainly in the right direction. But the company give us no equivalent for the consideration that they receive. We have strengthened the hand of a monopoly; we have made it impossible for that western people to hope to get competition from any other railway company at any rate for a long time to come. Railways from the east are working westward all the time, but they will not be able to get through that great mountain stretch and give the people competition. We have given that company a great deal of money. The time ought to come when they should be satisfied and when they would not expect any more from us. I find we have given them over $65,000,000 and over 22,000,000 acres of land, and yet their insatiable maw is not satisfied, and they are as anxious as ever to get more. Has not the time come when we should cry a halt in this? I think the people of Canada have come to the conclusion it has. I am not going to make a comparison between the offer made by the late Government and that made by the present Government. In my opinion, the offer of the late Government was infinitely ahead of that which has been made by the present Government for the country. Have hon. gentlemen considered that this road would have been built without the country being committed to a dollar's expenditure? If we had not given them that money the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would have built that road anyway, because in their last report I find the following statement:—

But even with these important facilities for handling the traffic of the mining districts, your company will continue to be at a disadvantage in competing with the American lines (which have already reached Nelson, Rossland and other important centres in these districts) until it shall have direct railway connections of its own. Until then the greater part of the mining traffic will be beyond its reach, and will continue to be, as at present, carried by the American lines southward.

Your directors are strongly of the opinion, that any delay in securing your interests in that direction will be extremely dangerous—that unless your company occupies the ground, others will, the demand for shipping and travelling facilities being most urgent. The directors feel that they cannot too strongly urge the immediate construction of a line from Lethbridge to a connection with your Columbia and Kootenay Railway at Nelson, a distance of 325 miles, and, anticipating your approval, they have already taken steps towards commencement of the work on the opening of the spring.

The unfavourable conditions which have prevailed for the past three years, have prevented any effective action towards providing for the traffic of the mining country, but the directors feel now that the improved position and prospects of the company, together with the magnitude of the interests at stake, will fully warrant this important step.

Therefore, I say we are justified in believing that the Canadian Pacific Railway would have built that line whether they got a subsidy from the Government or not. But they have never been very dilatory about asking. They have succeeded admirably in the past, and they are always willing to ask. In my opinion, they would have built that road whether they got the subsidy or not, but if they can get a subsidy, it is just so much easier to build it as it costs them just so much less. Now, to my mind, the great problem that is looming up in Canada is the transportation problem. To-day we are under two great railway corporations that appear to have no souls and no consideration for the people when their financial interests are at stake. These two railways are coming closer and closer together; they are arranging traffic over certain portions of their lines, and they are reaching an understanding with regard to the running of the railways. Notwithstanding the millions of money that Canada has voted for these railways, we have practically no railway competition in the country to-day, and the onerous burdens that are being heaped on the people from year to year, make it absolutely compulsory on the Parliament of Canada to exercise control over these great carrying corporations. The time is not far distant when Canada will be obliged to deal with these railway corporations in a very different fashion from what we are doing to-day. Whether that be done by a railway commission, or some other power, I do not know, but if my judgment is worth anything, and if the signs of the times mean anything, public sentiment will be so strong a few years hence, that no Government will be able to withstand it unless they deal energetically with the transportation problem in Canada. It must be dealt with in the interests of the people of this country, and the sooner we tackle it the better. We should not now, year after year, and session after session, be constantly extending their powers and giving them more of the country under their control, so as to make it more and more difficult to control them in the future. I regret exceedingly that the Government, at this very late stage of the session and when the interest in the session is practically over, has submitted to this House resolutions which mean an addition to the debt of this country of $3,630,000. I do not think that the electorate of Canada will look upon this proposition with any great satisfaction, nor do I believe it will raise the Government in the estimation of the people. I believe that the people of Canada will regard this proposition of the Government, as entirely out of harmony with their declarations before they came to power to the effect that if returned, they would exercise the most stringent economy in the management of the financial affairs of this country.

Mr. BOSTOCK. These resolutions show that the Government are prepared to carry out as well as they possibly can, an arrangement to develop the resources of British Columbia. That arrangement will benefit the mining district of West Kootenay, in, that it will settle the question as to what is going to be done about smelters in that country. We have in West Kootenay a large amount of ore ready for smelting, and the great drawback to developing mines up to the present time has been the difficulty of getting in fuel for the smelters. The building of this Crow's Nest Pass line will bring coal to the West Kootenay smelters at a reasonable rate, and will enable them to treat these ores in our country, as of course should be the case. There is a keen discussion at the present time in Rossland, as to whether the smelters should be erected there, or whether they should go to Northport in the United States, and the people of Rossland are anxiously awaiting the announcement that this railway will be constructed. The construction of the line through the Crow's Nest Pass will practically decide that question, and will entail the smelters being built on Canadian soil. It is difficult for people in the east who do not understand that country to realize what an advantage that would mean. We have now in West Kootenay three smelters, one of which I am sorry to say is at present shut down and certainly the fact of being able to get cheaper fuel will materially help to open that smelter again. These smelters employ a large number of men, and help largely to develop the country. It is needless to state, that it is very much better and very much more profitable for us to smelt our ores in Canada, than to send to the United States as has heretofore been the custom. I have a statement from the "Rossland Miner" of the 6th of this month, which shows that a total of 25,705 tons of ore were shipped from that camp alone from the 1st January, 1897, to the 5th of June in this year. This ore was shipped from twelve camps as follows:—

	Tons.
LeRoi.....	17,906
War Eagle.....	4,990
Columbia and Kootenay.....	569
Iron Mask.....	1,514
Jumbo.....	91
Josie.....	203
Cliff.....	141
Red Mountain.....	56
Evening Star.....	21
Giant.....	21
O. K.....	56
IXL.....	12
Total.....	25,705

The House will see that a large quantity of ore is being shipped out of that camp alone at the present time. Then again we find, that in the Slocan country, for the nine months from July, 1896, to March, 1897, the shipments have amounted to 14,434 tons. Very nearly all of that ore has been shipped to smelters out of the country, because the smelter at Nelson which has been working for some time has found that it can get nearly all the ore it required out of its own mine, and therefore it has not been treating much ore from other mines. Then, again, if we look at the customs returns they show very clearly the manner in which business has been developing in that country. The customs returns for the port of Nelson, which covers all the outports of the West Kootenay country, in January, 1896, amounted to $5,982 and in January, 1897, $11,057. The returns for the corresponding month of the ensuing year, therefore, nearly doubled. In February, 1896, the customs returns were $4,580, and in February, 1897, $10,072. In May, 1896, the customs returns for the port of Nelson amounted to $5,688, and in May, 1897, they amounted to $41,572. From these figures, which I believe are as nearly correct as can be obtained—I have been obliged to take them from a newspaper not having any official return—it will be seen the greatly increased revenue which the country is obtaining from that part of Canada. That, of course, is only one section of the country that is going to be benefited, and very largely benefited, by the opening up of this Crow's Nest Railway. We have to the east of the west Kootenay country what is known as East Kootenay, and I notice that my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition stated that he did not think that at the present time there were more than a thousand people between Lethbridge and Nelson. I do not know what the population of the town of Lethbridge or the population of the town of Macleod is at the present time, but I know that the town of Fort Steele in the east Kootenay country, which has at present practically no means of encouraging its development, has increased in population from about 250 on the first of January of this year to something over 1,000 people at the present time.

Mr. FOSTER. How many are there after the prospectors have gone out ?

Mr. BOSTOCK. There are more than 1,000 in the country around, but the town of Fort Steele is increasing very fast indeed. I mention this because there has been nothing special done to open up that part of the country. There has been no new road made, and the steamers on the Kootenay River which run down to Jennings, have had very bad luck ; I am sorry to say that two of them have been wrecked. So that the tendency has been rather to retard that part of the country than to develop it. I only mention this to show how the population of the country is increasing, and, as soon as work is commenced on this railway, and the people know that it is going through, there will be a large development in that country. The other part of the country that is going to be immediately benefited is the country between the Columbia River and Okanagan; because that Boundary Creek country all through is exceedingly rich in ore, as was shown to the House to-day by the hon. Minister of Railways by what he read from the report made by a gentleman for the German Government. That report is in no way exaggerated, because other men of renown in the mining world have given their opinion in very much the same terms. The only difficulty is that the ore is a low-grade ore, and needs transportation facilities for its proper handling. At the present time there are towns springing up in that country. Only the other day a gentleman who was here from Midway told me that at the present time there are two stages running from the town of Grand Forks down to Marcus, on the Spokane and Northern Railway, and that they come in every day crowded with passengers. The danger we are under in that country is the same as we were under in the West Kootenay country with regard to Rossland. The natural tendency is for people to come into the country from the south, and we are very much in danger of all our trade and business being dragged that way. We have really to fight against the natural outline of the country, and try to direct the trade north instead of letting it go south. So that, speaking in the interest of the country itself, I think we have to take hold of this question at once and do the best we can with it. I do not mean to say but that possibly, by waiting, we might have been able to wring better terms out of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I am quite aware that there are a large number of people who think that could be done, and that perhaps delay would have been to the advantage of the country. But I do not myself think it would be altogether a good thing to delay. I think the Government have taken into their careful consideration the position of the whole matter, and have probably done the very best they could under the circumstances. I do not propose to discuss the clauses of this agreement, because it is one of those agreements which we can better judge of by the way it works out than we can by its terms on paper. In an agreement of this kind a great deal more depends on the men who carry it out, and on the way in which it is carried out, than on the actual statements put down on paper. I consider that the arrangement made with regard to the coal lands in the East Kootenay country is going to give the Government a very strong lever for keeping down the price of coal, and for keeping a check on the way those lands are handled. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) raised the question of competition in railways. So far as British Columbia is concerned, it is hopeless for us to expect to obtain competition in railways, because wherever you come to build a railway, you will find that that railway will necessarily have to go through some place where it is almost impossible to get another. Consequently, the idea of competition in railways in British Columbia is an almost hopeless impossibility. The only way we can look forward to dealing with our railroad question in that country, in my opinion, is by having a very strong Government control, ending, eventually, by the Government taking the railroads and operating them itself. Although I have studied this question carefully, and talked to a number of people about it, I am of opinion that this country is at the present time hardly ready to go in for the Government ownership of railways. I do not agree with the objection that is always raised when this question is brought up. We are always told, "Oh, look at your Intercolonial Railway." Well, I think there are other ways in which a Government railroad can be handled than the way in which the Intercolonial Railway has been handled. I think it is not a good thing for a country to have a large business concern like a railway so closely in touch with the political machinery of the country. Other countries have certainly found a solution of the difficulty, and I think that in time the people of Canada will find themselves obliged to take hold of this question and handle the railways in some way themselves, as has been done in other countries. But, from my experience, and from what I have learned in talking to the people of this country, I do not think they are prepared to take hold of this matter at the present time. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to take up the time of the committee any longer. I have made these few remarks because I think this arrangement is a good one for the country and for the constituency I represent, and I hope to see it successfully carried through.

Mr. OLIVER. As representing one of the two constituencies through which the Crow's Nest Pass Railway will run, I must ask the indulgence of the House for a short time. The district of Alberta is doubly interested, in that it not only includes a large part of the proposed line, but it necessarily must be the principal Canadian source of supply of the farm produce consumed in the Kootenay region. Therefore, there is a strong desire on the part of our people, for local reasons, to see the Crow's Nest Pass Railway built, being assured that under any circumstances they will receive a considerable material profit, both by the actual construction of the line and by the increased convenience of access to the mining region which under any conditions it will afford. With us it is not a matter of whether the line should be built or not, or of when it shall be constructed; we in Alberta want the line, and want it now. Therefore, I am bound to support the general proposition to build a line of railway at once through the Crow's Nest Pass.

There is no question to my mind about the desirability of the railway. The only question is as to the desirability of the terms; whether under the present bargain the country gets the worth of its money, gets what it is paying for, and gets the most that could have been got for the money. This, I take for granted, is fair matter for inquiry and criticism. If the country is paying for something, it should know what it is getting for what it is paying.

In so far as the terms announced protect the vested interests of the established town sites in southern Alberta, they are most satisfactory, and a marked and wholesome departure from the policy formerly prevailing, especially as they do not add one cent to the public charges in respect of the railway. They are merely a proper exercise of governmental authority in support of the interests of the people, but for which the Government is not less entitled to credit.

There is no doubt that the early construction of the road will be a measure of improvement, as compared with existing conditions, just as the building of any new line of railway improves conditions as compared with what they were when there was no railway. But when under the new conditions introduced by the existence of the railway the question of competing in putting the products of the farm on the consuming market arises it is not then a question between railroad and no railroad. It becomes a question of getting such a rate that the cost of producing and hauling to market shall together not exceed the market price. Unless the railroad enables this to be done, it fails of its principal purpose. Without this it is not worth its cost to the public, and does not repay the public aid granted. This is a particularly important consideration in connection with this Crow's Nest Pass Railway, the chief hope in regard to which is that it will make possible the profitable development of vast bodies of low grade ore in Kootenay, which development depends more on low freight rates than upon anything else.

Looked upon merely as an ordinary local line, chiefly for the mutual benefit of Alberta and Kootenay, the project would probably not appeal strongly enough to the House to have warranted the Government in asking the large amount of aid indicated. That amount is doubtless based on benefits expected to accrue to interests other than those merely of Alberta and Kootenay. As the aid is admittedly large considering the mileage to be constructed, it is fair to assume that the rate and other concessions contained in the bargain are held to be value to the country in general for a large part of the money to be paid. So, in considering the merits of the bargain, it is proper to consider not only the length of new line that will be built but how far the conditions attached will beneficially affect the interests concerned, and whether the benefits are such as should accrue under all the circumstances.

The building of this road was expected to mark a turning point in the affairs of the west. This was the principal inducement persistently held out by the newspaper advocates of material aid towards its construction.

A great deal has been promised, and therefore a great deal is expected; much more than would be under ordinary circumstances.

In the west, as in all Canada, and there probably more than anywhere else in Canada, the question of transportation is the great question. That question was popularly supposed to be solved when the Canadian Pacific Railway bargain was made for a line from ocean to ocean. Whether it has been solved, every farmer, every producer, every dealer in the Dominion must answer that it has not. The question of transportation is not in this day a question of railway against no railway: it is a question of one railway against other railways more or less favourably circumstanced, more or less ably managed, and handled more or less with an eye to the interests of one or other section of the community, or this or that region or country. There is no question of "railway or no railway" in this country now, wherever the circumstances will justify construction. The question is one solely of rates and management, and it is because the railway rates have been distinctly against the west in particular and in general from the first that Manitoba and the Territories have shown so much less rapid progress than was expected when the Canadian Pacific Railway was first aided. It is for the same reason that the trade of eastern Canada with the west has not increased as was hoped at the same time, partly because the trade is not there to be done, and partly because, owing to the more advantageous railroad situation of the United States manufacturing and commercial cities of Chicago, St. Paul and Spokane, a large proportion of the trade of the west is done from those cities. And as the duties are lowered a proportionately greater share of the trade will be done by them, unless the rates of transportation between eastern and western Canada can be reduced to a level very far below what they have yet been. A general and adequate cheapening of the rates from eastern and throughout western Canada would develop the west, and enable the east to reap the sole outside profit of that development. A failure to bring down the rates to the point of final effective competition with the lines of the United States is to fall short of the mark; is to continue to retard the west, and to divide its trade between eastern Canada and the United States, to the increasing advantage of the latter. It is because of the universal recognition of this fact that the prospect of a radical change in the condition of the western transportation problem was hailed with universal satisfaction throughout the Dominion; and it has simply been taken for granted by all parties that the Crow's Nest Pass line must be built, not because of the line itself, but because of the new railroad policy of which it was to be at once the announcement and the commencement.

Subsections (c), (d), (e) and (f) are the parts of the resolution which are of general interest, as embodying the new western railway policy of the Government, and stating the compensation which the people of Canada receive for the additional aid and privileges granted the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in respect to this line. It is desirable that these sections should be carefully examined to see how far the public receive value in their provisions, and how far they meet circumstances as they exist, or are likely to arise. If we are to be thankful we may as well know as exactly as possible what we have to be thankful for.

Subsection (c) provides for the control by a commission, of railway rates on all freight to and from the Kootenay country, on all Canadian Pacific Railway lines in Canada. This certainly reads well, and as a provision for preventing discrimination against persons or places should be of value, provided the commission acts with a single eye to the interest of the people. But without some further declaration as to considerations which shall or may be the basis of the regulations it cannot be used to effect a general substantial reduction such as the trade and production of the west, or for that matter of the east as well, require and demand. The fact that it cannot be so used is proven by the necessity for subsection (d) which provides for certain specific reductions. If the railway commission were to have power to absolutely reduce rates subsection (d) would not be necessary. The existence of subsection (d) practically restricts and limits subsection (c); and if subsection (c) gives no power to compel an absolute but only a relative reduction of rates, it gives no power that is not already inherent in Parliament without consideration to the railway company, and, therefore, does not represent one cent of the three and a half millions to be paid.

A railway commission, unless so specifically empowered, cannot ignore the right of capital invested in the railway to a return, based upon what such an investment would be likely to receive if placed elsewhere; nor can it ignore the mileage of the railway, or refuse to give a mileage allowance based on what other railways earn.

The mere power to regulate rates, without the power to actually reduce them, does not meet the case in which Alberta, or for that matter all Canada, finds itself regarding the trade of Kootenay.

Our local position is this: At present North Alberta supplies grain, hay and vegetables, and South Alberta cattle, to the mining regions, over the Canadian Pacific Railway main line from Calgary, and its branch lines and steamboat connections. Our competitors who supply by far the largest part of the produce consumed in Kootenay are the farmers of the Palouse district of eastern Washington and northern Idaho, for whom the city of Spokane is the trade centre. Until February last their rate on grain was 25 cents per 100 to Nelson, which is a central point in Kootenay, while our rate was 50 cents per 100. Even with the duty in our favour we were not able to do business. In February last (no doubt in view of possible competition), the Canadian Pacific Railway cut the rate from Edmonton (which is the principal grain shipping point) to Nelson to 35 cents per 100. With the duty in our favour this enabled us to compete with the Spokane 25 cent rate to certain Kootenay points most conveniently situated for us, and less conveniently placed for them. But had it not been for the high duties we evidently could not have competed, except at a very much lower price for produce at the point of production on our side of the line, as compared with the price on their side. When the Crow's Nest Pass Railway is completed the difference in haul will be 150 miles from Spokane to Nelson, against 600 miles from Edmonton to Nelson.

The question for us is: Will control of rates by the railway commission enable us to finally compete over the Crow's Nest Pass line with our rivals in the neighbourhood of Spokane when our competition becomes sufficiently keen to warrant them in cutting their present rates in order to meet it? Either we of Northern Alberta must have the same rate over 600 miles of railway as our rivals get over 150 miles, or we must sell our produce proportionately cheaper than they do; or they must do the trade, and we must do without it. True, we have the duty in our favour; but if we have to depend on the duty to hold for us the markets of our own country we cannot credit the terms of the railway bargain with doing so. This is not the understanding that we would wish to have as to the value of the bargain under consideration. This is not what we are paying three and a half millions of dollars for.

Cheap freights will develop Kootenay, and if Alberta supplies Kootenay with produce the development of Kootenay will mean the growth and prosperity of Alberta; and the growth and prosperity of both Kootenay and Alberta will mean a lightening of the taxes of the people at large by increasing the numbers of those who are able to pay taxes, as well as increasing their ability to pay. Their development will mean an increased demand for the manufactures, and a wider field for the commerce of eastern Canada, so that even eastern Canada is interested in this question of local freight rates from Alberta to Kootenay.

The question is not one merely of a cent higher or lower, but possibly involves, in the last resort, getting down to the bare cost of hauling in order to hold the trade for our own country. Unfortunately this is not only the condition of Alberta in regard to the trade of Kootenay, but it is to an even greater degree the condition of the eastern Canadian merchants and manufacturers regarding the same trade, and, indeed, applies to all the trade of eastern with western Canada. Inasmuch as the haul is much shorter from St. Paul and Chicago than it is from Toronto and Montreal, unless the Canadian cities can get—not a rate that will allow an equal earning on capital represented in the Canadian railways, not that will allow an equal mileage earning with United States railways, but the same rates over the greater distance that their United States competitors get over the shorter distance, they cannot compete, save for the duty.

To overcome this geographical disadvantage, Canada has bonused her railways to the extent of many millions, so that the railway companies would be relieved of the cost of constructing their extra length of line, and would be compensated from the public treasury for extra cost of operation, to the end that Canada should have as low rates between its points of production and distribution as our neighbours. In other words, we have paid out of the national, provincial, or municipal treasuries, from one-half to two-thirds of the proper cost of all the railways of Canada, in the hope that by the companies only having to provide for interest on the balance of cost out of earnings we would have low rates of transport. Instead of this we find that practically every mile of road in Canada is carrying every dollar of bonded debt that could be floated on it, the interest on which has to be met, if at all, out of earnings; and, consequently, while we have aided the railway enterprises of our country more liberally than probably any other country, we are paying the very highest railway rates. Not only so, but the very railways that we have bonused so largely actually carry freight more cheaply for our neighbours and competitors generally than they do for us. There has not been a railway train ever run over the Canadian Pacific Railway between Montreal and Vancouver, either way, that has not given, or been ready to give, United States traffic and travel more favourable terms than Canadian. This is the position in which we find ourselves, and this is a position which a railway commission cannot cure.

This is the general position we were in before the bargain under discussion was negotiated, and this is the position we are in yet; not only so, but the proposed line itself is not exempted from the vast privileges as to issue of bonds, which render substantial reductions of even strictly local freight by a commission impossible, except for a further consideration.

If subsection (c) contained a provision that the railway companies were only to be allowed earnings on the proper cost of their lines, less the amount of bonuses received, then it would be of some effect; but as long as unlimited bonding powers are allowed, and the rights of bondholders are recognized as they must and should be, a railway commission cannot even measurably solve the railway problem of Canada.

The right of Parliament to provide a commission for the equalization of freight rates, irrespective of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway agreement, has never been questioned. That right has not been added to by this arrangement; and, if the arrangement was necessary in order to secure the assent of the Canadian Pacific Railway to such a commission, it is to be feared that after the commission is appointed the further assent of the Canadian Pacific Railway will be required before it will take beneficial action even within its limited sphere.

Subsections (d) and (e) provide for reductions on certain freights, both east and west. It is to be regretted that they do not state in so many words the exact rates at which the commodities affected will be carried; because the value of the reduction can only be measured by comparison with the rates now existing, which are not generally understood, particularly as regards west-bound merchandise. The new rates will depend absolutely upon what the present rate is placed at. But the present rate is left indefinite, so that the ordinary person cannot tell where he is at in making a calculation. No doubt special cut rates, or rates as they stand after rebates being granted, will not be those from which the reductions will be made. It is just possible that in some cases when the calculation comes to be made, the reduction, while substantial on paper, will be very difficult to locate. However, I do not know but that we in Alberta would be glad to exchange the somewhat gauzy provisions regarding control by a railway commission for the application to our Kootenay trade of the definite cut of three cents a hundred on produce. But this cut does not apply to us in our trade with Kootenay, and should we avail ourselves of it on our east-bound freight, I fear that a cut of three cents per hundred pounds from a present rate of 50 cents per hundred would hardly make the Montreal market profitable to us at present prices of wheat and oats.

The fact that a bargain is now being negotiated by the Manitoba Government, under which, for a yearly payment of $100,000 a reduction of 10 cents per hundred pounds on east-bound grain, and a 25 per cent reduction on all west-bound freights is to be made, as against the 3 cents per hundred reduction on east-bound grain, and 10 per cent reduction on some west-bound freight secured under this bargain, shows: First, that the present reduction is not sufficient to meet the requirements of the case, or a further payment of $100,000 a year would not be proposed by the parties chiefly interested in this reduction to secure the further one; second, that if a 10 cent per hundred and a 25 per cent reduction can be secured for a payment of $100,000 a year, in so far as the aid to the Crow's Nest Pass road is repaid by the 3 cent reduction, the money is simply being thrown away. We are absolutely not receiving 1 cent of value for those reductions, for the money has to be paid over again to secure a reduction that will be adequate, and which will cover the one now made. The project to buy relief from high freight rates for Manitoba by a bonus to a railway through the Crow's Nest Pass is far-fetched, and therefore must be dearly bought. It is by control of the only Canadian line from Winnipeg to the lakes that the Canadian Pacific Railway is able to keep its hand on the throat of Manitoba and the west. It is on this section that Canadian Pacific Railway monopoly can be broken most cheaply and completely for the benefit of both eastern and western Canada. That is how less money will do more work there in relief from high rates than in the Crow's Nest Pass.

But I do not wish to minimize the reductions, such as they are or may be. There is plenty of room for them, and they are badly needed, whether big or little. It must be plain, however, that whatever they are, they are not more valuable than the ownership of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, and what that ownership implies, or they would not have been conceded for that ownership. Stripped of unnecessary words, the issue in this matter was not whether Kootenay should be further opened up by Canadian railways, but whether, when Kootenay was opened up, it should mean the strengthening or breaking of the monopoly of the Canadian Pacific Railway in western Canada. It was to break this monopoly that the people of Canada were willing to pay the money necessary to build the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. While this railway is most desirable as a local line, it has not been advocated as such, and that was no reason for the hot newspaper controversy regarding it. The controversy was waged on the question of monopoly; and the freight rate and other concessions is the price which the Canadian Pacific Railway is willing to pay for the continuance and more firm establishment of their monopoly of western Canadian transportation. The feeling throughout the North-west is, that the people are working their farms and conducting their respective businesses on shares with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that that company is getting the lion's share. It costs one bushel of grain to send another to market over the lines of the company. The rates are based simply on what the company are pleased to consider the traffic will bear, and their estimate is generally pitched too high. If people could see any probability of relief from these conditions they would work hopefully; but, under the policy of the late Government, which at first by legislative enactment, and afterwards by differential treatment, actually debarred railway competition, there was no hope, and the natural result has been the slow progress that has been so much complained of.

Taking the reduced rates and other concessions for what they are claimed to be worth, they do not sufficiently meet the case as it exists in the necessity for lower freight rates, while the agreement regarding them makes the new Government a party to the continuance of the monopoly established by their predecessors. The chance of further reductions is shut out, as far as it can be shut out, by the fact that the Government, on the one hand, has decided against a policy of railway competition in the west, either by aiding competing lines or by Government construction, and, on the other hand, having paid three and a half millions of dollars to get certain reductions of freight rates, they will be bound to argue that the reductions secured are sufficient. The Canadian Pacific Railway will use their success in this case as a precedent for demanding further bonuses when the demand for further reduction becomes so pressing that it must be conceded. Under this arrangement, the North-west settler is to be the decoy of the Canadian Pacific Railway; that company is to squeeze him until he squeals loud enough to compel the Government to come to his assistance, and then the Canadian Pacific Railway will demand the price of relaxing the freight-rate screw, either in the purchase of its lands or in aid to additional branches to still further strengthen its monopoly. Is it to be expected that the North-west will prosper under such a policy, or that the trade of eastern Canada will expand by reason of the progress of the west under such circumstances, or is it to be wondered at that a spirit of thankfulness does not diffuse itself, like a broad and happy smile over the face of the North-west because of this bargain? The people of the west will, I believe, when they understand the position, object to being placed in it. They do not wish to stand before the people of Canada, everlastingly clamouring against existing conditions, which require the payment of Government money to relieve them from. When it is only the action of the Government in insisting on the maintenance of monopoly, and in paying Government money to secure that monopoly, that makes the conditions as they are and perpetuates them.

There is no doubt that, had a policy of competition in railway transportation been adopted by the Government, either by the encouragement of the introduction of other railway systems under like or more favourable restrictions than have been agreed to by the Canadian Pacific Railway, or by the construction of the line as a Government work, there would have been a much greater immediate reduction of rates than that now promised, and reasonable grounds to hope that they would be followed by further reductions, as circumstances required, without further cost to the Canadian people. The fact that the Government had thereby announced that it was against monopoly, would have inspired the confidence both of capital and labour throughout and in respect of the North-west, and substantial progress according to the conditions of the country would have followed.

As to the cost of Government ownership and control. The present arrangement will cost the country $3,500,000. Absolute Government ownership would have cost, say, as much more, or $7,000,000 in all. But, will the present arrangement only cost the country $3,500,000? The Canadian Pacific Railway will have to borrow the balance of the money required to build the line; there is no doubt that a bond issue of $30,000 a mile will be allowed, and the bonds will be sold. That is to say, the road will have a bonded debt of nearly $10,000,000 on the 330 miles. Who will pay the interest on this debt? It must be paid, if at all, out of the earnings from the traffic on this or some other part of the Canadian Pacific Railway system. In other words, the people of Canada will have to pay the interest on the $10,000,000 just as surely as they will have to pay it on the $3,500,000. The difference will be perhaps a higher rate of interest will be paid on the $10,000,000 than on the $3,500,000. To put it in another way: Under absolute Government ownership and control, with rates at bare cost of hauling, the people of Canada would have to pay 3 per cent interest on $7,000,000, whereas, under the present arrangement, with no assurance of anything like as low rates, they will have to pay interest on $13,500,000.

The objection to Government control of railways seems only to apply to the region west of Lake Superior. Only the other day the House agreed by a huge majority to provide interest on a capital sum of $7,000,000 to secure merely running rights for the Intercolonial over the lines of other roads to Montreal. Although other lines existed which gave direct connection they were not satisfied. They must have absolute rights for the Government railway, or a profitable business could not be done. No one will pretend that the expenditure of $7,000,000 on the extension of the Intercolonial will be as profitable a business undertaking as would the operation by Government of the railway through the Crow's Nest Pass, and yet the money was voted ungrudgingly. Then why should it be grudged to be used for a purpose universally acknowledged to be of prime necessity, to have an assurance of ten times the profit, and which at the same time would have absolutely relieved a great part, and measurably relieved the whole, of the west from the monopoly which at present enslaves industry and paralyzes enterprise throughout its length and breadth.

Government construction would have secured the active competition of four great trunk lines of railway between eastern Canada and Kootenay; that is: the Canadian Pacific, the Great Northern, the Northern Pacific, and the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, all running in connection with the navigation of the lakes, and the three latter with the Grand Trunk Railway as well. It would have ensured the lowest possible local rates, both between the North-west and Kootenay and between the coal and silver mines of Kootenay; and if it is agreed that the interests of Winnipeg and of Manitoba in the trade of Kootenay would have been ignored by that arrangement, so they are by the present one, as well as they were by the construction of the Soo line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. But a break would have been made in the rule of railway monopoly in the west, which would have been in the interest of Manitoba as well as of British Columbia, and the country would not have to pay interest, directly or indirectly, on nearly as many millions of dollars; and all this without the necessity of operating the road for a single instant. Government ownership does not involve Government operation, but it does involve absolute and unquestioned control of rates down to the bare cost of haul; which is what the whole of this country stands most in need of.

If it is going to be necessary to buy each reduction of freight rates to the west at the price paid for those now secured, before the rates are brought down to the level that the progress of the west and the profit of the east demands, it would be cheaper to parallel the Canadian Pacific Railway from Vancouver to Fort William with a Government line.

But that would not be necessary. A Government line from Winnipeg to Fort William, over the Rainy River route would open up new and valuable country, and would give access at the lowest possible rates from eastern Canada to the North-west, and from the North-west to the ports and markets of the east.

I fervently hope that no deal will be made regarding the opening of the Rainy River district that will close that route against effective competition, as has been done in this case, as far as this agreement shows upon its face. To have a Government railway over that route between Winnipeg and Port Arthur is the only remaining hope of the west of relief from railway monopoly through Canadian territory.

Once the prairies are reached the railway question is nearly solved. It is the cost of construction from the prairies to the lakes on the east and to the ocean on the west that makes monopoly in the North-west possible. The western outlet is now stopped by the bargain under discussion. It is to be hoped for the sake of eastern Canada that the eastern one will not; for it only means that if relief be not granted through Canadian territory and to a Canadian port, it will come through United States territory and to a United States port, for there must be relief.

Subsection (d) provides for running powers being granted other railways over the Crow's Nest Pass line. While this is a desirable provision, it does not appear that it should figure as value for any part of the money paid in respect of the railway; for the concluding sentence of the same section distinctly intimates that the right to grant running powers to other railways already existed. Such a provision has been inserted in all, or nearly all, the railway charters granted this session without consideration. It does not appear that this provision is of much greater value in preventing monopoly than clause (c) is to secure a general reduction of rates. The value of the privilege of using the track through the pass depends upon the terms upon which it can be secured. It must be clear that another company paying for the use of the tracks of the Canadian Pacific Railway must be in a very much less favourable position for giving low freight rates than the Canadian Pacific Railway, which having been presented with a great part of the cost of the road by the Government may levy interest on the balance of the cost from the company intending to compete with them for the trade of the district: if not indeed on the whole cost; and not alone on the whole cost, but on the whole bonded debt, for all the resolution provides to the contrary.

Mr. OLIVER.

The fact that there is no direct connection through to the coast by that line makes competition more difficult, or indeed makes effective competition impossible under the present arrangement; and the proposition to place the 200 miles of road from Robson westward under separate control, and with different arrangements, destroys the possibility of effective competition for all time, as far as it can be destroyed.

Had the Government constructed the road, running powers might have been granted to all railroad companies desiring to compete for the trade at rates absolutely fixed from time to time by the Government; we would then have had what we are now paying for without getting—a guarantee of active competition and an assurance of living rates for the public. Certainly it would not have been as profitable for the Canadian Pacific Railway, but I am not aware that this country owes that company anything. The country has carried out to the full every agreement made with the company; has discharged all its obligations and is entitled to a clear receipt; while the promises made on behalf of the company, whose enlightened self-interest was to be a sufficient guarantee that the interests of the Territories were safe in the railway company's hands, have utterly failed to materialize. Hard facts have proven that the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway and of the country are not identical.

Under sections (h) and (i), regarding control of certain coal and timber lands, the Government stands somewhat in the position of a landlord, one of whose tenants holding a perpetual lease had allowed himself to be swindled out of a large part of his most valuable property, and the landlord, instead of compelling the return of the property, as he was able to do under the rights which he held, compromises with the thieves and accepts a small fraction of the plunder, thereby becoming a party to the steal of what is in a sense his own property. If the absolute government ownership of 50,000 acres of the coal lands of British Columbia is a necessity for the public welfare, it proves the iniquity of the transaction which irrevocably passes hundreds of thousands of acres into the hands of a single corporation. We are indeed at a low stage if we can only compromise on these terms in regard to the ownership of stupendous values of public property and vast areas of the public domain.

If we admit that the monopoly of the Canadian Pacific Railway is an injury to the west, and, therefore, to the east—and certainly the leaders of the party now in power have educated the people for many years to believe that—it is the duty of the Government to fight that monopoly, not to fatten it.

The country gives $3,500,000 and gets the use of 330 miles of railway practically on the company's terms. The company gives certain slight reductions in certain freight rates—greater reductions than which could have been secured from less money in other ways—and gets a further and more complete assurance of monopoly throughout the great Canadian west.

It would pay Canada well to give three millions, or ten millions, to free the west from railway monopoly; but it does not pay Canada to give a fraction of three and a half millions to entrench that monopoly more securely than ever by enabling it to close the only southern gateway through the Rocky Mountains from effective competition for all time.

Mr. MCGREGOR. You do not know what you are talking about.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McGregor) here says that I do not know what I am talking about. I can only reply that I am in a position to know what I am talking about, and if I do not know, it certainly shows very bad judgment on the part of the electors of Alberta who sent me here to oppose railway monopoly. They have had better opportunities of knowing me than the hon. gentleman has had. I will not reply to the hon. gentleman that when he made the remark he did not know what he was talking about, but I think the House will agree that he did not. However, under all the circumstances, Southern Alberta can stand this bargain if the rest of the country can. We get the greater share of the immediate benefit and they do most of the paying and losing.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. I observe that it is customary for hon. gentlemen, upon rising to address the committee, to say that they are not going to take up the time of the committee. I am not going to apologize in that way at all. I have not very much to say, but I am going to say it, and I do not know how long it will take. I do not propose to reply to all the trueisms and to what I might call the platitudes of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down. There is no doubt that the hon. gentleman has given vent to a great many high-flown sentiments in regard to Government control of railways. We have not arrived yet at that Utopian period of handling our railway system in Canada, and if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) bears in mind that the Government which he supports did not build the Canadian Pacific Railway, that they were not responsible for the existence of that road, that they simply had to take things as they found them when they came into office, and made the best of it, I think he will, perhaps, see that there is not quite as much in the remarks which he has been making as he thought. I may say that, coming as I do from the great wheat-growing region of Canada, I am perfectly satisfied with this contract. I consider that it is the best possible contract that the Government could have obtained, and it is very much better than I expected they would be able to obtain. I think that the hon. gentleman who has just sat down must have been neglecting the files of the papers which come here from Manitoba and the North-west, because if he had looked at them he would have found a chorus of congratulation to the Government upon the good contract which they have implemented. I take exception to some remarks made here tonight by the leader of the Opposition.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, don't.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. I do it with all humility. I venture to criticise the sayings of such men as he is and of his leader, but I do it in all humility. I have the right, as a member of this House, to criticise the statements of any member on either side of the House. The terms proposed by the late Government were held up by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) as being vastly superior to the terms of the present contract. And he claims that there would have been a gross profit to the Government which was lending the Canadian Pacific Railway $20,000 a mile, of $493,613.

Taking the present contract, the settlers of Manitoba and the North-west Territories will receive at the least calculation—even though they do, not increase in number and even though they do not produce more wheat in that country during the next twenty years than they now produce—the people of that country will have a gross profit of $15,000,000 in twenty years. There is no doubt that the reduction in the freight rates are going to be the means of saving to the people of Manitoba and the North-west of at least $750,000 a year. I take exception to the statement of the leader of the Opposition, when he said, that that country would never have been settled were it not for the Canadian Pacific Railway. I do not stand up here for one moment as an advocate for the Canadian Pacific Railway; I am no particular friend of the Canadian Pacific Railway. We have heard that statement here, but let me ask, where would the Canadian Pacific Railway be were it not for that country? Every one knows that it is the country lying between Moosomin and Fort William which pays any profit which the Canadian Pacific Railway have on their whole line. If the trade of that country to the Canadian Pacific Railway were taken away, the rest of that line would not pay at all. It is the country up there which is supporting the railway, and not the railway which is supporting the country. Had the policy of the late Hon. Alex. Mackenzie been carried out, and had the railway been built as the country required it, the country would have prospered and would not have this millstone tied around its neck; and the present Government would not have to make the best of a bad bargain, which the hon. gentlemen who went out of office in June, 1896, left behind them. I agree with the leader of the Opposition in some of his remarks, and the ex-Minister of Finance will note that great minds occasionally run in similar channels. I agree with the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) that it would pay the Canadian Pacific Railway to give away their lands, and that the policy they have pursued in regard to their lands, and also in regard to the manner in which they have treated the settlers all through the North-west, has been fatal to their own prosperity. The hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson) spoke in regard to Government construction of this road. There appeared to most people to be only two alternatives, either, the Government had to build this road, or the Canadian Pacific Railway had to build it. I cannot see, nor have I ever been able to see, how anything was to be gained by the Government construction of this railway. If there had been any possibility of getting direct connection to the east or to the west, I would have been in favour of Government construction, but there was not. All those who know the amount of traffic which the Canadian Pacific Railway at the present time has on its western divisions, will see that the building of a line parallel to it would have been the most extreme folly. If these four great corporations up there would have been knocking at the door of the Government and anxious to compete for Government railway freight, what is the reason that the late Government felt, as the present Government feels, the necessity of having the Intercolonial brought into the city of Montreal, when they had two great railway corporations rapping at their doors and competing for their freight from the city of Quebec. We would have exactly the same condition of affairs up there. The people of the country would not have had any benefit from Government construction of the Crow's Nest Pass road, to say nothing of the enormous expense in which it would have involved the country. Again, had the Government built that road, we would have had none of these concessions which we now receive. Had the Canadian Pacific Railway, as one hon. gentleman proposed, been in a financial position to build that road and had it been permitted to do so, we would not have those concessions on freight rates. But, I would call the attention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) to the fact, that his leader stated to-night that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were not in a financial position to construct that road themselves. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) differed from his leader, but even if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) were right, and if the Canadian Pacific Railway had built the road, we would reap none of the benefits which will accrue to the country from the present bargain. The hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson) and the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) both alluded to the fact that they were Ontario men, and that they objected to the expenditure of vast sums of money for the development of the west. I beg to inform these Ontario men, that we admit that Ontario has done nobly by the west, and that the west appreciates what Ontario has done in the past. But, there are men in Ontario so narrow that they do not, and cannot, see that the whole future of the Dominion of Canada depends upon the development, the progress and the growth of the great country to the west. For every dollar that Canada invests in that country in matters of this kind, she will be fully repaid. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) spoke about soulless corporations. Well, we never claimed in the North-west that the Canadian Pacific Railway had any soul. We do not think that it has; I have even heard whispered in the not very distant past, that the Canadian Pacific Railway was so much without a soul, that it was almost on its uppers.

Mr. BENNETT. Make a sketch of that joke.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. That is a joke, yes. Now, we have heard a great deal to-night about the transportation problem. The hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) and the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Bostock) as well as myself, advocate the Government control of railways. I believe we ought to own the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I believe that if the country owned the Canadian Pacific Railway, and if it were controlled—not in the manner in which the Intercolonial Railway was controlled by the late Government—but if it were controlled by a railway commission composed of men entirely apart from politics, and run in the interests of the country, it would have been a much cheaper undertaking, and it would redound very much more to the credit of the people of Canada than it does at the present time.

I wish for a few moments to go into the question of these concessions in this contract. In the first place, I will take the concession in regard to grain rates, and we must not belittle that concession. Even if the people of Manitoba and the North-west do not increase, and even if the productive power of that country does not increase, the saving to the people of Manitoba and the North-west, will amount, on grain alone, to something like $500,000 a year, one year with another. Some years it will be much more and some years a little less, but we are perfectly safe in putting it at this figure. Let us see what that means to the individual. We will say that a man lives on a quarter section, and has 80 acres in wheat, and gets 30 bushels to the acre or 2,400 bushels of wheat altogether. By the reduction in freight rates which is secured by this contract, he will have an increase to his income—because a penny saved is a penny gained, and the best way in the world to make money is to keep it when you have got it—this man will have an annual increase to his income of between forty and fifty dollars. Now, to some of these lordly gentlemen on the Opposition benches, and perhaps to some on the Government benches, that may seem a small sum, but when you bear in mind that the profit of the Manitoba and the North-west farmer on his wheat has been exceedingly small, that the cost of producing that wheat is in the neighbourhood of 30 cents a bushel, and that he has had to sell it at 40 cents a bushel, and in many cases at even less, on account of the drawbacks to which he is subjected in connection with the grading process in the grain trade and in other respects; suppose he sells that wheat at 40 cents, giving him a profit of 10 cents a bushel—or rather, we do not want the 40-cent price continued, and we will go up to 50 cents and suppose he has a profit of 20 cents a bushel, then on 2,400 bushels he will have a profit of $480 with which to pay his store bills and other obligations. Unfortunately, there are too many farmers in the North-west who do not go into mixed farming and keep stock. The consequence is that they have to buy almost all the necessaries of life. It is a great pity; it will be remedied in time; but as matters are, these people purchase their meat and many other articles which the farmers in Ontario produce for themselves. Now, I want to point out to hon. gentlemen that this sum of $45 added to an income of $480 is going to be a very important matter to the North-west farmer. It may not be much to some people who are wealthy or well-to-do, but to the man whose income is small, and who is struggling along with a mortgage and with a family, it is a great deal of money; and, on behalf of the farmers of the North-west, I feel very much pleased that such a concession has been obtained. Mention was made by the hon. gentleman who has just sat down (Mr. Oliver) of the railway which the members of the Manitoba Government have been promoting. That road is still, so to speak, in the air—it is an air line, and we do not know whether it will ever be built or not. Even if we had a competing line from Winnipeg to Duluth, we have not the feeders with which to supply that line. Hon. gentlemen may not know the difficulties under which settlers in Manitoba and the North-west labour. Take, for instance, the town in which I reside, Portage la Prairie. It is an 18-cent point; that is to say, it costs 18 cents per hundred pounds to send wheat from Portage la Prairie to Fort William; it also costs 18 cents per hundred pounds to send wheat from Portage la Prairie to Duluth over the Northern Pacific;

Portage la Prairie being one of the few points where these roads meet. The Manitoba and North-Western Railway runs into Portage la Prairie, and connects with both of those roads; but it has an arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, which was very aptly termed an octopus to-night by an hon. gentleman who was partly responsible for the fastening of that octopus on the people of Canada. By this arrangement, Neepawa, which is sixty-one miles from Portage la Prairie is a 19-cent point; that is to say, you can ship a hundred pounds of wheat from Neepawa to Fort William for 19 cents. But if you want to ship a hundred pounds of wheat from Neepawa to Duluth, it costs you 30 cents. This is because the Manitoba and North-western will not transfer their freight to the Northern Pacific on the same terms that they will transfer it to the Canadian Pacific; and the Manitoba and North-western charges a local rate of 12 cents a hundred pounds for the sixty-one miles between Neepawa and Portage la Prairie. You can see that even if we had a competing line from Winnipeg to Duluth, just as soon as we started to ship wheat over that line, we would be charged the local rate to Winnipeg by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and also, perhaps, by the Northern Pacific. The Northern Pacific Company have a line of their own running to Duluth, and it is not at all likely that they would gratuitously handle wheat and deliver it to the Winnipeg and Duluth Railway. However, that project is in the air, and we do not know whether it will amount to anything or not. In the meantime, we have this arrangement, and it is very much better to take what we can get and be thankful, than it is to refuse a benefit in hand and wait for something that we might never receive. The reduced rates on fruit and other articles coming into the country are also a very great benefit to the settlers in the North-west. An hon. gentleman opposite said that there would be no fruit, or very little, shipped over that road, and that that reduction would not amount to anything. Mr. Chairman, we have in that country very little fruit, as you know. We have only the very small fruits. Our climate is not suitable for growing the larger fruits, and every year we use enormous quantities of apples brought in from Ontario, and we pay large prices for them. But as they are the only fruit that we can get which is within the reach of moderately poor men, and as we have to pay very high prices for them, the reduction of 33½ per cent on them is going to be a very important item to many a farmer and to many a wife and family in Manitoba and the North-west. We have also the reductions on other goods coming into the country. All these things will amount to a very large gross saving per annum. Then, we have the concession in regard to the Government regulations of freights into and out of the Crow's Nest country. Hon. gentlemen talk about the advantage and the powers which have been conferred upon the Canadian Pacific Railway, but this is the first time that any of these powers have been taken away. This is the first time that corporation has agreed to give up anything. It has discovered that it cannot deal with this Government as easily as it dealt with our friends of the Opposition when they were in power. It has found that it must give up something, and, as a consequence, we have the Government control and regulation of freight rates between every point on the Canadian Pacific Railway and every point on the Crow's Nest Railway both coming in and going out, and my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) knows well what that means to the people he represents. That means that the people at Edmonton and Red Deer, the people on the line of the Calgary and Edmonton Railway, and the people on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, can send into that market their produce, which has hitherto been spoiling on their hands. A very fertile country lies between Calgary and Edmonton, but the people of that country have not been able to sell their produce at remunerative rates. The consequence has been that many good settlers who were taken in there by the Canadian Pacific Railway have had to leave for the want of a market. It means that Alberta wheat, mutton, oats, hay, butter, cheese and other products are going into that country, and are going to be consumed. I may say, as one who lives 1,500 miles nearer the mountain country than you do here, that we have every confidence in the future progress and development of the great mining country of the west.

Mr. EARLE. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have not already reduced the rates on these western lines much below their present tariff rates for all farming products going into the Kootenay country?

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Yes, that was simply a foretaste of benefits to come. They wanted to let themselves down easy.

Mr. EARLE. What I want to get at is that their rates there are now reduced from 10 to 20 per cent below their general rates, and that under this arrangement they will not be lowered beyond what they are at present.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. The Government will regulate that matter; I do not have the control of it personally at present. Then, we have the running powers over the new road through the Crow's Nest Pass. That is a very important item. It is a very good thing to have, and I have no doubt that that privilege will be carefully conserved in the interests of the people of Canada by the present Government, which contains among its members some business men who, when they make a contract, make it on business principles and in a business way. The proviso with regard to coal is surely of great value for the North-west. I do not wish to paint prospects in too bright a hue, but it appears to me that one result of the action of the Government with regard to the coal lands, taken in conjunction with their action in reserving the right to regulate freight rates into and out of that country, will have a very good effect in lowering the price of fuel all over the North-west. That coal, which is to be put on the cars at a price of not more than $2 per ton and to be hauled by that road, the freight rates of which are to be controlled by the Government, must actually enter into competition throughout Manitoba and the North-west with the coal from the Galt mines and the anthracite coal on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and we may look for a reduction in the price all along the line. And in that country where wood is scarce and the coal available not of first-class quality, the settlers may congratulate themselves upon the action the Government has taken. We have had some rather strong language from the hon. gentleman who has just sat down with regard to the action of the Dominion Government respecting this coal land. Now, the hon. gentleman knows it to be a fact that the Dominion Government has no control over the lands of British Columbia. He knows also that, as a Liberal, he strongly objected to the principle of disallowance. We all did that. In Manitoba and the North-west we are a unit on that point. In fact, a very large number of converts were made, and the more intelligent and more liberal-minded of the Conservative party in Manitoba came over to our ranks on that very question, and no Liberal can defend, for one moment, a principle which involves interference with provincial autonomy. The Government have not reserved the lands but obtained them by transfer as a guarantee that the coal mines will be operated and worked in such a manner as to secure satisfaction to the general public. With regard to the price of timber lands and other matters, I am also pleased with the terms of the contract. I have not so much interest in these matters as in the other, but I say, on behalf of the people of Manitoba, and more particularly on behalf of the people of Macdonald, whom I have the honour to represent, that the contract gives great satisfaction, and I trust that it will be implemented and carried out and prove to the advantage, not only of the people of the North-west, but of the whole Dominion.

Mr. McINNES. Early in this session I introduced a resolution calling on the federal authorities to disallow a certain Act which had been passed by the local legislature of British Columbia, and which granted to the British Columbia Southern Railway Company an enormous tract of land in the Kootenay country together with mineral rights which we know to be of fabulous value. Incidentally on the discussion of that resolution, I discussed the whole project of building a line through the Crow's Nest Pass, and consequently at this late stage in the session, I do not intend to repeat myself at any great length. But inasmuch as at that time I was dealing with theories rather than actual conditions, and inasmuch as the Government have submitted to us a definite proposition, I deem it only right that I should make a few explanations of the stand I propose to take. The points at issue seem to be these: Is it reasonable for a line to be built there at all, and if so who shall build it? and if a private company should build it, what terms should we exact from them? Now, as to the desirability of railroad construction there can be no serious doubt. If there were any, I think that it has been effectually removed by the speeches we have had this afternoon from the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) and the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper). The leader of the Opposition has intimate relations. I understand, with parties who are thoroughly familiar with the conditions in that country. The Minister of Railways and Canals has had the good fortune to visit that country himself, and it is only what I should expect from one who has had the opportunity of visiting that country, and informing himself of its conditions and prospects, that he should have declared himself so convinced of the necessity of better railway facilities. I shall, therefore, not discuss the question of the advisability of constructing this road, for its advisability seems to be generally conceded. The great question then arises who should build it. I took the stand, in the early part of the session, that the Government should build it, and notwithstanding the strong remarks of the hon. leader of the Opposition this afternoon to the effect that no person of reason or intelligence could take that stand, I persist in it. I have heard nothing to warrant me in departing from my belief in that regard. The hon. leader of the Opposition brought out arguments which are very familiar with regard to the question of a Government building and operating railways, and if the occasion required it, they could be amply answered, but that is not necessary for our purpose to-night. I believe in the Government ownership of railways, and I think that this is a case in which Government ownership could be put into practice with very great advantage. The country is a new one, and if the principle be right that the people should own the railways and operate them in their own interests, then in that new country we should start upon right principles and create conditions which would be advantageous to future generations. Not only have we the fact that the country is a new one and therefore more adapted for the inception of new principles, but we also have the assurance of those who are familiar with this proposed line that when built it will undoubtedly be a paying investment, so that though it might cost twice the amount of cash which the present proposition will entail on the treasury, yet in fact it would cost the ratepayers of the country not one cent if they built it themselves and it was operated absolutely in their interests. There is another reason why the Government should construct that road, and that is the nature of the country. It is a very mountainous country. In a great number of places there are passes through which it is absolutely impossible for two lines to run, and since there can be only one line, the Government should have retained absolute control over it, and the only way in which the people can absolutely control a railway. I submit, is to own and operate it themselves. There is another reason why I was anxious for the Government to build this line. I believe firmly that if the Government were to build it the Canadian Pacific Railway would be so anxious to gain access into the Kootenay country, that the Government could have dictated terms to the Canadian Pacific Railway far more advantageous than the ones we have before us. That may seem strange to hon. gentlemen who have accepted the statement circulated broadcast that this line would begin nowhere in particular and end nowhere in particular. That is another mistake, for if it begins at Lethbridge, it begins at the junction of four transcontinental railways, the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Great Northern, the Northern Pacific and the Quincy and Chicago, and would go through the Pass and terminate in one of the finest mining camps in the world, and what will probably be one of the best markets on this continent. So that it is perfectly absurd to say that it begins and ends nowhere. So important would that little line be and so anxious would the Canadian Pacific Railway directors be to get connection with that large mining centre, which it would open, that I believe the Government, if they were to own that line, and act discreetly and judiciously, and not in too great haste, could exact most valuable concessions from the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Government, however, have not seen fit to take into their consideration the proposition to build that line themselves, but have decided to allow a private company to build it, exacting, of course, certain conditions from the company. Now, of all companies, I submit that it is unfortunate that the right to build this road should have been given to the Canadian Pacific Railway. In that province we wanted an independent line. The Canadian Pacific Railway has great power there, as it has in other parts of the country, and we wanted relief from it. It does seem to me, and I think that most of the people will think that this further assistance to the Canadian Pacific Railway will greatly increase their power for good or evil. So, Sir, I regret very much that since the Government has seen fit to aid a private company, they have not gone a little slower and aided a company which would have been independent and would have given some competition to the line which at present has control of the commercial interests of the province. But they have seen fit to negotiate with the Canadian Pacific Railway and have exacted certain conditions from that company for the assistance they have given. So far as they exacted any conditions or concessions from the Canadian Pacific Railway, so good. But, if you look at the conditions, I think you will agree with me that they are not all that we might have expected. For myself, I may have expected too much, or I may minimize the value of these concessions. But I think we will agree that conditions more favourable to the country might have been demanded. Subsection (c) gives to the Government the right of control of freight going into the Kootenay country. That, if lived up to, would be a tolerably valuable concession. But I submit that the Government will find great difficulty in supervising the rates of all traffic that goes into that section of British Columbia. And even if they did succeed in supervising those rates thoroughly and up to our expectations, what would it amount to? They would merely compel the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to give reasonable rates. They could not deny the company such rates as would allow a profit for transporting goods into that country. So, if they act under this clause as they should, they will simply exact honest conduct on the part of the Canadian Pacific Railway towards the people. It does seem strange to me that it should be regarded as a great concession from the Canadian Pacific Railway that they are prepared to submit to a provision which will simply compel them to act honestly by the people. By sections (d) and (e) you will notice, specific rates are provided with regard to certain goods. These represent deductions, most of them of 10 per cent, but one of 20 per cent and one of 33½ per cent. These are not large reductions and it seems to me that they are such reductions as self-interest would have caused the Canadian Pacific Railway to make later on. As a matter of fact, we in British Columbia know that the Canadian Pacific Railway during the last winter, did, voluntarily and without any pressure from any Governor in Council or commission or committee, reduce their rates into the Kootenay district by 10 per cent. As time goes on and competition becomes keener—and it is becoming keener day by day—they would be compelled, as a matter of self-preservation, to reduce their rates still lower.

Now, there are several provisions relating to the coal and the timber and the disposition of the land which the company acquires by virtue of purchasing the charter of the British Columbian Southern Railway Company. These provisions, I certainly admit, are a great advance on what we have usually received at the hands of the Government when dealing with the Canadian Parliament. They are in the right direction, beyond a doubt. But there is no doubt about the immense value of the timber and the coal there and of the land. Why in the world should the Canadian Pacific Railway Company be favoured to the extent of retaining that enormous wealth? If you go into a calculation of the value of the coal land you will find that it runs into millions of money. And what has the Canadian Pacific Railway done, or what will they have done if they build this line to warrant the people in sanctioning the foolish gift that was made by the British Columbia legislature.

I am very sorry to see with regard to these conditions that they are not in favour of the coast part of British Columbia. I may say at the outset that the people on the coast in British Columbia are not in favour of the building of this Crow's Nest line. You will readily understand that this line will merely give easier access to their country for the merchants of the east, and the result will be that the merchants of the coast, who naturally think that that trade, being within their own province, and they having developed it in the first place, and are entitled to it, will not be satisfied with the building of this line without the building of a similar line into their country from the coast which will enable them to compete with the merchants of the east on equal terms. Not only do they object, therefore, to the building of this line without a similar assistance to a line from the coast into the Kootenay, but you will find, on reading the resolution, that the unequal position in which they are put by the building of the Crow's Nest Pass road has been increased. You will observe that there is a list of articles on which there are certain reductions. But the reductions only apply when these goods come from a point east of Port Arthur to points west of Port Arthur. Now, there is no reason, I submit, why that same position should not apply in favour of the merchants of the Pacific coast; and so strongly do I feel upon that point that when these clauses are taken up seriatim, I intend to move that the same provision be extended so that the merchants of the coast may have the benefit of the same reduction when they send goods east on the line, and I hope that, out of a spirit of fairness, the committee will support resolutions having that in view.

Now, the concessions, I submit, are not what we might have expected. But even if they were of enormous nominal value, you will admit that they are, so far, mere paper concessions, and that the real value of them will depend on their administration. Now, I do not say this in any offensive way or to reflect on any member of the late Government or of the present Government; but we do know that it is very difficult to get members of the Government or appointees of a Government to act in an absolutely impartial way when dealing with large and powerful corporations. I think it is not too much to say that if the Railway Committee of the Privy Council has the carrying out of these provisions, hon. gentlemen of a different political faith from the Government will not be entirely satisfied that that Railway Committee of the Privy Council are acting in the straightest manner possible. I have no doubt at all that if the Conservative party were in power, and were called upon to administer these resolutions, hon. gentlemen on this side of the House would have practically no faith at all that they were being administered in the interest of the people and not in the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway. So I say, that these concessions, while they might be of value in themselves, although I do not concede that, yet their real value depends upon their administration; and when it is remembered that a political body, or, at all events, the nominee of a political body in this country, will have the administration of them, I submit that, if they were strong, their strength is seriously weakened. Now, admitting that these concessions are of some value—and there is no doubt that they might be, if properly carried out in the interest of the people—we have got to consider what we are paying for them. We are paying a very large sum; we are paying from this Parliament $3,600,000, and they are receiving from the province of British Columbia a land grant of six million acres. If you value that at $1 per acre, the lowest valuation any financier will put upon land in this country, it makes another grant to them of six million dollars. Then, if you consider the value of the coal which they require, their subsidies simply run up into many millions. The Minister of Railways rather belittles the idea of making an exact calculation of the value of these coal lands. Well, I cannot altogether agree with his way of looking at it. I think the stand he took with regard to that matter was untenable. I come from what I think is probably the largest coal-producing district in this Dominion, and I know it is a common thing for coal mines there, with coal seams only 7 feet thick, and with coal 700 or 800 feet down in the earth, to be sold for $200 or $300 an acre. Now, the hon. gentleman said that the valuation the British Columbia Government put upon these coal lands was $5 an acre, because that was the rate they could be leased for from the provincial government. That is rather a fallacious argument, it appears to me. I have known a great number of people to go out in my district and get a lease of coal lands, or what they presumed were coal lands; they put down a diamond drill, and the moment that they discovered they were coal lands, they did not think of selling them for $5 or $10 an acre, but they began to figure out closely, according to the thickness of the seam of coal, just how many tons there were, and they put a valuation on that coal at the mouth of the pit, so much per ton, and they valued them properly accordingly. Now, the argument that because the local government merely charged $5 an acre for a lease, and that, therefore, that is the valuation they put upon the land, is exploded in another way. A miner pays $5 for a free miner's license, and he can go out and take up a hundred mining claims, if he wishes. If one of those mining claims proves to have mineral wealth worth millions, according to the Minister of Railway's contention, the valuation the government would put upon that claim would really be the value upon the miner's license, namely, $5—a conclusion which is rather weak. Now, I have dealt with the concessions and with the value which the province of British Columbia and this Government is paying for them, and I submit there is a terrible gulf between the value of the concessions, even estimating them in the largest way that they have been presented to the House—there is a large gulf between the value of those concessions and the value of subsidies in mineral land and in mineral wealth which the people, represented by this Government and by the Government of British Columbia, are extending to the company.

Again, as a member from the west, I wish to point out to this Committee, that there is no restriction in these resolutions with regard to the class of labour which is to be employed upon that road. I have heard—I do not know how true it is—that the contract has been let to an Irish-American for the building of this road. I think that if there is a possibility of such a thing happening, members who are older and more experienced in these matters ought to have some provision inserted in these resolutions which would prevent such a thing taking place. But I do know, that if these resolutions are allowed to go through in their present shape, the road will be built entirely by Asiatic labour. The Canadian Pacific Railway has built a line in our province before, and they built that line altogether with Chinese labour. They imported coolie slave labour from China in great ship loads, to the extent of between 5,000 and 10,000. Those coolies have remained with us, and have been a curse to the development of that country ever since. Now, at the present time there is, unfortunately, an overstocking of the labour market in British Columbia; white labour has to go begging for work. In my district alone I know that there are hundreds of able-bodied men who cannot find manual labour, and who have to live by manual labour. Now, if this work goes on, it will be a very fortunate and timely relief to that class in the province. There are plenty of hands in the province to take hold of this work and build it. That being so, I submit that this Committee should support any resolution which is offered, when these resolutions are considered in detail, which will have the effect of preventing the Canadian Pacific Railway from employing Chinese or Japanese upon the construction of this work.

Mr. Chairman, I advocated, in the early part of the session, as the proper policy with regard to this whole subject, that the federal authorities should disallow the grant of land and mineral wealth to the British Columbia Southern Railway, which was subsequently acquired by the Canadian Pacific Railway. The result of that would have been that all that enormous wealth would have gone back into the hands of the people and could have been dealt with to their advantage. I think, if that Act were disallowed, and if the Government here, not upon their own responsibility, but in conjunction with the Government of British Columbia, undertook the building of this road, the advantages to the people would be far greater than they are likely to enjoy in any other way. I certainly adhere to that position to-night as strongly as I did when I first ventured to suggest it to the House. I have only this to say in conclusion, that, consistently with the position I then took and as I believe, in the undoubted interest of the country at large, I cannot endorse the present resolutions submitted to the House. But if they do pass, I hope they will pass with amendments which will prevent Chinese and Japanese labour being employed, and which will also give western merchants the same advantages as the eastern merchants in trading in that country, and that the results of the line in operation will be far more advantageous than I can bring myself to believe they will be.

Mr. BENNETT. I think after the startling expenditures that have been announced in this House in the last few days that the country will hail with delight the close of this session. It is something horrible to contemplate what might follow if the session were prolonged for another fortnight. With the public debt standing at $260,000,000, and now expenditures of nearly $40,000,000 more, with these startling figures I think I am entitled to make the complaint that the

Mr. McINNES.

Government have not treated their own supporters and more particularly the country fairly in bringing down these expenditures at such a late period of the session. There has, I have no doubt, been a considerable amount of method in their madness, if it can be characterized as madness, because I think the major part of the community and more especially the province of Ontario will regard these vast expenditures as madness, in postponing these expenditures until this late day. However, we all do know this that when wolves are in pursuit of prey they never quarrel until they have run their prey down, and that seems to be the spirit by which hon. gentlemen opposite are actuated. In this case the prey has been the expenditure of public money, and now that the hon. gentlemen from Quebec have got their Drummond County Railway under way, and those hon. gentlemen from the west have their Crow's Nest Pass they are engaged in saying how much of the pelf, pillage or plunder whichever you may call it, will be distributed amongst themselves. I say that it is particularly unfair that the Government after three months of the session have brought down this resolution at this late day. I do not propose to go into the details of this resolution, as that has been done by a number of hon. gentlemen who have preceded me, but as a representative of Ontario I do complain that the Government have not treated the people of that province fairly in postponing the bringing down of these large expenditures to the dying hours of the session without opportunities for that fair measure of discussion that would have been afforded to the matter that it deserves. I shall make no complaints on the score that the hon. gentlemen opposite have broken their promises in increasing the debt, and as they have done that I have not been disappointed because after the pledges that these hon. gentlemen have made in the past and after their performances I am not disappointed in their not carrying out the promises which they have made. But there is this consoling reflection that while hon. gentlemen are piling up millions upon millions one of them, the Postmaster General, has to announce to the House that by the exercise of prudence and sagacity he has been able to save $15 or $17 on a mail contract. I suppose that may be taken as a guide of the calibre of hon. gentlemen opposite. I must compliment the Minister of Railways and Canals that he is a master of large projects and it must be to us a matter of regret that we have not as a Minister representing Ontario the Minister of Railways and Canals, because then we might have some prospect in store, but as it is we will have to make as much as possible out of the honour and glory which attaches to the achievements of the Postmaster General in his savings upon mail contracts. In the meantime unlimited public money is to be spent and the province of Ontario is coming out at the small end of the hunt.

Mr. ROGERS. I do not intend to say very much in regard to this matter to-night, but I could not let it pass without saying a few words. I feel that it has been a very important subject to this country; the bonusing of railways has been a live question among the farmers during the past few years. On the platform it has been spoken very strongly of not only by supporters of the Government but by members opposite. When farmers take a position adverse to the practice of bonusing railways it is generally said that they are not progressive and that they are stick in the muds. I wish to deny that. There is no class in the community that is so loyal to every scheme which has for its object the advancement of the public interest as the farmers. I care not what Government has projected it, they are willing to bear the burden and they are ready to do it in a manly and patriotic spirit and say nothing about it. But now in view of what has been going on during the last few years they feel obliged to cry halt. We know that the farmers are divided somewhat on the subject of bonusing railways. Some of my Patron friends in Manitoba and the North-west Territories do not share the view which I have referred to. That is a new country; it requires railways and they are therefore not in accordance with the other view. It leaves me in a rather peculiar position in regard to this matter. In this case we feel that there are reasons which will warrant us in favouring this scheme, but not in the way it is proposed at present. We feel that it could be done in a different manner as my resolution mentions. We have expended many millions of dollars for railroads in the past. If our population had increased in accordance with our hopes it would have been very well, but in consequence of circumstances which it is not necessary for me to mention, it has not increased so that the burden falls heavily upon the population that we have. It is an evident fact that there is no country in the world which has as many miles of railway in comparison to its population. In Canada 16,000 miles of railway are kept in operation at the expense of 5,000,000 people. An hon. gentleman told me that among the last statements made by the late Sir John Macdonald was that we must cry halt, and that is the feeling we have in this country. I think today it would have been wise if the Government had held their hand and not gone so fast. The country as a whole feels this very strongly. It may be that they can see further than we can on this question, but I cannot see the wisdom of the proposition myself. Speaking about granting this enormous amount of money to the Canadian Pacific Railway I cannot see on what ground they can ask for it. Judging from their own reports their earnings last year were over $8,000,000. On this railway and on many other railways public money has been improperly expended in their construction and the burden has fallen upon the country. It is said that they must protect their investments and get dividends out of their roads. If those men in the old country or wherever they may be, allow their money to be extravagantly expended and recklessly wasted I cannot see why future generations should be called upon to recoup them for their carelessness. When the Grand Trunk Railway was built two dollars were spent where one would have done, and in the management the same practice was followed. It is the same way with the Canadian Pacific Railway. Every day we have evidence of the extravagant manner in which these lines have been built, and this extravagance has been running on up to the present time. I will say, that of the three great transportation schemes projected by the present Government, to my mind the extension of the Intercolonial Railway is the only one that will bring direct benefit to the farmers as a whole, and particularly to the farmers of Ontario who are the great burden bearers of this Dominion. Some have argued that the extension of the Intercolonial Railway was an extravagant arrangement, but it is evident that something was needed to bring that line to Montreal. I do not know whether the Government could have made a better bargain or not, but it was inevitable that they should make some bargain, and I feel myself that in the long run it will result in good. Even the late Government felt that it was necessary to do something in this direction. If I were travelling along a road and some accident occurred, and I wanted to get to the end of my journey, I would pay an extra price for a horse or wagon in order to get there. I feel it may be the same with the Intercolonial Railway. In the long run I believe that the Intercolonial Railway extension proposal will be good for the country. In this belief I supported it, and the more I look into it the better I am satisfied with it. If the western country is so rich in mineral wealth as is claimed for it, I cannot see on what ground the Government could not have made another bargain. I am not against the scheme itself, because I feel that something in that direction should be done.

Mr. CASGRAIN. For the Government every time.

Mr. ROGERS. I am for this Government or any other Government that will do right. I think the country should in some way be recouped for the enormous amount of money we are going to spend on this railway. Although the scheme of the old Government was extravagant in its way, I think there is something in it, but on the other hand it is contended that if that scheme were carried out we would not get these concessions which the farmers of Manitoba and the North-west have under the present contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway. The history of great mining countries in the past does not warrant us in spending much money for their development. It is true that great fortunes have been made in mining regions, but it cannot be said that these fortunes ever conferred much benefit on the country, because when these men make wealth they start off to a foreign clime to spend it. It is my desire and, that is why I moved the resolution, that this money should be paid back to us in some way.

An hon. MEMBER. Carried.

Mr. ROGERS. I do not take up the time of the House to any very great extent, and it occurs to me that the important business of the session would not have been left to this late hour if there had not been so much time wasted in long hours of oratory. It would be better for this country as a whole, if we had not so many orators in the House. Judging from my little experience here, I can say to my constituents, that it would be much better if the people of the different ridings throughout Canada, did not go hunting around to get orators to represent them in this House, as has been the custom heretofore. As regards the resolution of which I have given notice, I have waited until the very last moment to find if I could get some support for it, but I have failed to do so. I am not discouraged, because even though I should be the only one in the House to support it, I feel that it is right. I did have a little support from the hon. member from Toronto, but I find that he has slinked out, and left me alone, and under these circumstances I cannot put the resolution to the House. I believe the feeling of the country is very strong against extravagant expenditure, and I give a word of warning to the representatives of the people here, that their constituents will hold them responsible for it. Our Railway Committee has been besieged for railway charters—many of which in my humble opinion are no more sensible than if a charter were asked for a railway to the moon; and we know that the granting of these charters is followed up by requests for Government bonuses. I really do not know where all the money is going to come from; and I warn the representatives of the people here, that they should be more prudent in expending the public money. If I could have obtained any kind of support for my resolution, I would have divided the House on it; but under present circumstances it would be useless to do so. I will let it go now, believing that in the future there will be some sterling farmers here, whether they be called patrons or independents, who will support such a proposition as that I have laid down in the resolution.

Mr. ROGERS.

Mr. FOSTER. I am very much disappointed that my hon. friend (Mr. Rogers) who leads the patron hosts in this House, has not seen fit to enlighten us as to what his resolution is.

Mr. ROGERS. I will read it if you wish.
An hon. MEMBER. Dispense.

Mr. FOSTER. I am very sorry for my hon. friend (Mr. Rogers). His first impulse was good; he was going to read it, but just as soon as one of the members of the Government told him to sit down, he came to the conclusion not to.

Mr. ROGERS. You told me that before, but it is not true.

Mr. FOSTER. I am much disappointed—

Mr. ROGERS. I will send the resolution over to you and you can read it.

Mr. FOSTER. It is a very good resolution, indeed. I find that it says:

That the said grant is wrong in principle, unjust to the rest of the country, and contrary to the pledges of retrenchment in public expenditure made by the Liberal party.

The sentiment is good, but I do not see that my hon. friend (Mr. Rogers) is going to take any action on it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I propose to say a word or two with reference to the resolution which we are asked to vote. Along with others who have spoken on this side of the House, I wish to enter my protest, that legislation of this kind has been kept from the House until one or two days of its prorogation. A matter of more than $3,000,000 is to be expended, and the Government has put this Parliament in the position of attempting to discuss the subject, when two-thirds of its members are away, or are so very anxious to get away that they will give no mind effort, and no presence of theirs towards the discussion of the question. The hon. gentlemen have treated this House as no Liberal Government, looking at the professions of Liberal statesmen, would ever be supposed to have treated a Parliament. More than that, Sir, when the resolutions are ultimately brought down, in the dying days of the session, when the members are scattering or have scattered, there is not the least information laid before the House as to the route, as to the cost of building, as to what the Canadian Pacific Railway Company get as compensation from other sources to be accounted against the cost of building; all of which one would think would be a necessary element if the House were going to be asked to consider whether $11,000 per mile was a fair contribution, or whether some lesser sum per mile might not be a fair contribution. The Minister of Railways, Sir, never intended that this House should consider the question at all. He never intended that a single man on his side of the House should raise an independent voice against the propriety of $11,000 being just the amount that ought be granted—nothing less, and nothing more. Does not any man see that, when we are voting the people's money for a public project which we approve of, we ought to look upon the people's money as a trust, and that it should be voted only in the amount that is actually necessary? Ought it not to strike a responsible Minister, when he asks Parliament for such a vote, that he ought at least to give us some information as to the character and condition of the country through which the road is to be built, and as to its probable cost? He is the Minister of Railways; he has his staff of officers; and it is his business, before he asks this House to vote a dollar of subsidy to any road, to give this House that information. But he has not given us one single iota of information on those points. The road which is to be built may pass through a country in a large portion of which it may not cost $10,000 a mile to build. For all we know it may pass through a country in nine-tenths of which it may not cost $10,000 per mile.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Would you like to give $5,000 per mile and loan $20,000 per mile more on a railway that was going to cost only $10,000 per mile?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend tries to excuse himself for the lack of information he is giving to the House by putting a question to me. I would say that if I were selling—if my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Gibson)—

Mr. GIBSON. He is too old to be sold.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, I think so. He would not be bought; but he would sit in this House and vote money out of which it is said contractors' pay is to come, and it is said that my hon. friend is the fortunate contractor. But yet he is too old to be bought. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways interjects a question to screen himself from what he knows is a fair criticism, namely, that he has not given to this House one iota of information as to the quality and character of the country through which this road is to be built, and its probable cost. He has his officers; that road had been surveyed: the information is at his hand; and, when my hon. friend feels the force of that criticism, he tries to break it by asking whether we would give $5,000 as a subsidy, and make a loan upon that road if we had no information on the subject. No, Sir; the late Government had information upon the subject, and placed its proposal before the House in the shape of a resolution on the Order paper; and if the late Government had been able to press that proposal to a conclusion, the Minister of Railways at that time would have given the information to the House—such information as we ask—which would be necessary to enable the House to make up its mind whether that contribution was or was not a just one. And so my hon. friend's question had no point at all, because the late Government's resolution simply was put on the Order paper, and the House was not, owing to the pressure of business, asked to vote upon it, and consequently the information was not given. But again I press the point, which every gentleman who hears me will acknowledge is a fair point, that we are asked to give a subsidy of $11,000 a mile for 330 miles of railway, and we have not from the Minister of Railways' lips, or in any paper put before the House, the least information as to the character of the country through which it is to be built, or as to the estimated cost of the railway per mile. So that the House is asked in total ignorance, to re-echo what the Minister has proposed.

Mr. LISTER. You had all that, and you were going to lend the railway $20,000 a mile.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly the Government which preceded the present Government had the information upon which it made up its mind what to ask the House to give; and the Government of that day would never have thought of coming to the House and asking for that vote without first laying the information before the House as a basis on which it thought that would be a sufficient contribution. There is not a man sitting on either side of this House who would do private business in this way. I see men of business capacity before me who do large business of their own. Is there one of them who would invest $11,000 or any sum of money on the information which is before this House to-night with reference to that road? No business man would do his own business in that way. Ought we not do the business of the country on as good and solid a basis as a business man would do his own business? This House has given $3,200 a mile to some railways, $6,400 to some, other subventions to others, always according to the difficulties of the road to be built and the financial considerations affecting it. There is another point. The amount of contribution that this Government should take out of the people's money to build the road should be affected by the other subsidies given for the same purpose from other sources. We learn from the newspapers that the $11,000 a mile we are asked to give is not the only contribution that that road gets. We have heard from the hon. Minister of Railways himself of the 250,000 acres of land which he said were given to the British Columbia company, and which have since transferred their charter to the Canadian Pacific Railway. What information has this House from the Minister of Railways with reference to that? He has told us that these lands are invaluable, and there is not a man in British Columbia who will declare that they are not of immense value; and it may be that these lands, which have been transferred from the British Columbia Company into the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway are as much or more than the Canadian Pacific Railway ought to get for its construction of this line. To the extent that they are valuable, they should be taken into consideration by this House when asked to decide whether or not we should give $11,000 per mile. Is that unreasonable? There is no man in this House who will say that it is, and yet we are asked to vote $11,000 without one scintilla of information being given us by the responsible Minister as to how much the value of these lands which the Canadian Pacific Railway has had transferred to it from the old chartered company. What more? The Government which preceded this one could have got that road built for $5,000 subsidy per mile and a loan of $20,000 a mile at 3½ per cent for twenty years. What does that mean? Now, I agree in what has been said here to-night more than once—and it is from my personal knowledge and belief that I speak—that I would as soon have that road running from Lethbridge into the Kootenay and thence to the Columbia as any similar one on the continent of America, so far as paying traffic is concerned. And I say that because of the value of the resources which lie along the track of that road, and which will depend absolutely and entirely on it for transport. The two elements of coal and ore will of themselves make a large traffic. I say then that from the point of view of traffic that road will compare favourably with any other similar line that you may take in the Dominion. Yet we are asked to give it $11,000 per mile without being vouchsafed the least information as to whether in view of the possible traffic transferred to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the franchises and land grant of the British Columbia Southern, is not in itself a sufficient contribution. But apart from that you have the fact that the late Government could have got that road built at $5,000 per mile and a loan for twenty years. You may say: Would not that loan be a gift. It would not by any means. It would have been a loan secured on the road itself, in the first place, and guaranteed by the Canadian Pacific Railway as a whole, in the second place. That fact, taken in connection with the character of the traffic which would develop on that road, would make that security as undoubted as any that could be given, and would make it a certainty that the loan would be repaid at the end of the twenty years. What then would be the cost? The cost to the Dominion treasury, under that arrangement, would be just a shade over $1,000,000 instead of $3,630,000 that we are asked to vote to-night. Now, I enter my protest against two things—against the bringing of such legislation as this down to this Parliament at the dying days of the session and against the insult to the common sense and intelligence of the members of the House, by asking us to vote without a scintilla of information being vouchsafed to this House upon which they could make up their minds and judgment, if the courtesy were extended to them by the Minister of thinking that they had any judgment or minds to make up.

Now, then, with reference to the whole question, outside of these criticisms. As one member of the Liberal-Conservative party, I have been in favour, and am to-day just as strongly in favour of that road being built and the country opened up. It is a necessity for the country, in the first place, and it will be a benefit to the Dominion as a whole to open up that country. For that reason, I am in favour of the policy, but we criticise the terms and the way in which it has been presented to us. I believe that $2,000,000, at least, more is being paid than the road would have cost this country if built according to the plan of the late Government. At the same time, the Government take the responsibility. It has a majority in this House, and with this protest against the exorbitant character of the terms and the way this legislation has been forced upon this House at this late hour, I do not propose to vote against the resolution, because I believe it to be of the utmost importance that that country should be opened up. The bargain is an extravagant one, in my belief. It will cost $2,000,000 more to the country than the scheme proposed by the late Government. Only, it is fair to state that this Government claim that they have got certain reductions in freights in the North-west which we did not make a condition in the scheme we had. Whatever comes out of that is to be offset by the subsidy, but it will be found not to be by any means a sufficient offset, considered in the light of the much larger subsidy which has been given to that road.

Mr. TAYLOR. Just one word before the resolution is carried. I want to refer for a moment to the observations made by my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Rogers) the leader of the Patron combination. The hon. gentleman, as I understand, is the leader of the Patron party in this House, and he, I understand, with other members of that party attended the caucus called by the Government to discuss this question. I do not know whether they were with the majority that agreed to carry this resolution or not. But the hon. gentleman was bold enough to give notice of a motion that he would move when this question came up. He made a speech to-night but he did not read, nor did he move, the motion of which he had given notice. He intends to go home and point out to the Patrons in his constituency and perhaps to those in my constituency and elsewhere where he may take the platform, that he made a certain speech and gave notice of a certain motion, and to tell his hearers that he did not move that motion because the rest of the Patrons had quietly taken their pay and gone home, and there was no one to second it.

Mr. COCHRANE. I will second it.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend from East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) says that he will second it, but the member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers) had not the manliness to move it.

Mr. CASGRAIN. You are getting out of order.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, I will not get out of order. The hon. member for Frontenac did not move his resolution. He said he was willing to trust the Government. But the Patrons, wherever they spoke in the last election announced, as they did in their platform, that they would oppose any more subsidies being granted to railways. But the hon. gentleman from Frontenac goes it blind and thinks that the subsidy to the Drummond County road is a splendid scheme. He also goes in for the fast steamship line subsidy, and he thinks that the Crow's Nest Pass Railway is a good thing and will support it. Yet he will talk to his constituents of the motion which he intended to move. But he had not the manliness to move it.

Now, when the Canadian Government acquired the North-west country and inaugurated the National Policy, the inducement was held out to Ontario, Quebec and the maritime provinces, that this new country would rapidly fill up with a farming population and would assist to build up the industries of the eastern provinces. And ever since I entered this House fifteen years ago, the representatives of the eastern provinces have voted cheerfully for any grant to any enterprise that was asked for for the benefit of Manitoba and the North-west Territories and British Columbia. And I say, as an Ontario man, that I think the representatives from those provinces are treating us with ingratitude. They come forward to-day with a scheme asking the eastern provinces to contribute towards millions of money to help them to open up and develop their country. And yet what do we find these representatives from these provinces doing? We find them fighting against every industry in existence in the eastern provinces. They look to the eastern provinces for money to build their railways and develop their country, but they want their own money to flow over into the United States.

They want agricultural implements placed on the free list, so that they may buy them in the United States. Barbed wire, binder twine, coal oil—they wish to have the right to purchase everything in the United States and close up the industries in Ontario, Quebec and the maritime provinces. Now I wish to say that, for myself, I am in favour yet, notwithstanding the ingratitude I have seen shown by the representatives of British Columbia, Manitoba and the North-west Territories toward eastern industries—

Mr. EARLE. Leave out British Columbia; it has not opposed eastern industries.

Mr. TAYLOR. Some of the representatives of British Columbia have done so. For instance, our friend from Burrard (Mr. Maxwell).

Mr. EARLE. He does not count.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am pleased to know that my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Earle) approves of what I say, and I believe that Ontario, Quebec and the maritime provinces have dealt fairly with British Columbia, and that it is the duty of the representatives of that province to see to it that the industries of Ontario are not sacrificed even if they have to pay a little more for their goods, on the ground that they would rather buy them in Canada and keep the money in the country than send to the United States for them, seeing that they have to look to us to assist enterprises like the building of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) has placed in my hand a pamphlet entitled "Principles, Policy and Platform of the Liberal party." In that I find the following:—

Prohibition of the bonusing of railways by Government grants, as contrary to the public interest.

The policy of bonusing railways by cash and land grants from the Dominion Government has become a fruitful source of jobbery, speculation and corruption. Under its operation, favourites of the Government have been enriched. Appropriations have been made for the sole purpose of purchasing the support of constituencies, and vast sums of public money have been voted without regard to the public interest, while millions of acres of land that should have been held in trust by the Government for the future homes of hardy and deserving settlers, have been handed over, without consideration or justification, to charter-hawkers, whose intervention actually retards the construction of lines whose franchises they control, for the purpose of extorting money from the ultimate builders of the roads. The policy of granting these subsidies has repeatedly been condemned in Parliament by the Liberal party, and this resolution is in harmony with the attitude of the Liberal party upon this question. (See resolutions 3 and 6, Liberal platform.)

The Patron platform on this subject is in accordance with this declaration. Yet these gentlemen, both Liberals and Patrons, approve of subsidizing this line of railway and of every other project of the kind. I suppose that there are railway subsidies to be brought down by the Government yet—after three-fourths of the members have left for home. My hon. friend from Frontenac, will say that he cannot see through it, but he will trust this Government, as he does on the Drummond County and fast line schemes. I would like to see the hon. gentleman when he had the courage to write out, or had some one write out for him, a notice of motion and had it printed in the Votes and Proceedings so that he might put it in his pocket and keep it to show to his friends with the remark: There is a notice of motion I gave, but I could not get a seconder.

Mr. ROGERS. Will you second it?

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend from East Northumberland will second it or the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) will second it.

An hon. MEMBER. Will you second it?

Mr. TAYLOR. No, I will not second it; because I will not be a party to a humbug. He said he could not get a seconder, but my hon. friend from East Northumberland offered to second it, and the hon. gentleman did not even read it, and he says: I have confidence in the Government that there is something good in this scheme, so I will support the Government and see the road carried through.

Mr. POUPORE. I have not troubled this House very often so far in making speeches, nor do I now propose to dwell at any length upon this subject. I would like, however, to say a word or two upon it, on general principles. A great deal has been said about this Crow's Nest Pass Railway within the last year. I did have an opinion that the building of this road was a necessity to develop the region of country in which it is intended to be built. I have learned also from time to time that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were making extensive surveys of that country to ascertain the feasibility of building a road through it. I came to the conclusion myself that if there was any institution, or any combination of men, or any company on the continent of America who could put that scheme through with advantage to Canada, it was the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I came to that conclusion judging by the past achievements of that company in building a railway running, you may say, from the Atlantic to the Pacific ocean. In that gigantic enterprise they constructed a railway overcoming very great barriers, a railway which is to-day an ornament to Canada. I then felt that no small company, no other company perhaps in Canada, was so well suited, was so well able to construct this important Crow's Nest Pass Railway, as was the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. It is stated by some hon.

Mr. TAYLOR.

gentlemen on this side of the House that it is unfortunate more information has not been placed upon the Table of the House so as to enable the members to form their opinions upon this subject with greater knowledge of the facts. I think myself that it is unfortunate. It would have been better perhaps if fuller information had been given to the House. But it is possible that the Government have information themselves to warrant the bargain in which they have entered with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The Government have made extensive surveys in that country, they must have informed themselves of the cost of building a railway there, and judging from the slight information which I have received from time to time, I think myself it will be a very expensive road to build. I have heard the statement made time and again that the construction of that road would not cost more than \$8,000 to \$10,000 per mile. But I have been told on the other hand on the very best authority that the road cannot be constructed for less than \$25,000 or \$30,000 per mile. Now, if that be the case, there are few companies who would undertake that project, few companies in fact able to undertake that project of constructing a road of that length, costing so much money, unless they received considerable assistance from some source or sources. If I understand the question correctly, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company secured a charter from the British Columbia Southern Company, which was obtained from the British Columbia Government. This Government it seems granted 25,000 acres of land per mile to that company to construct this road. The British Columbia Government must have known the particular features of the country through which that road has to pass, and I suppose that was the reason which induced them to grant 25,000 acres per mile to help that company build it. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company having made surveys, discovered that that subsidy would not be sufficient inducement to them to build the road and, they naturally come here and say to the Government this road is going to be of vast benefit to Canada, it is going to develop the dormant resources and the very great wealth of that section of Canada. Now, here is what the road is going to cost, here are the advantages that will flow to the people of the west by the road being built. Now, I presume the Government is composed of business men. I do not know what arguments were used which induced the Government to grant \$11,000 per mile; but to my mind \$11,000 is not an exorbitant grant to that company for undertaking that important road. I speak not from any definite or positive knowledge of my own, but from information that I have gleaned from one quarter and another. I have got this information quite recently, and it shows how the building of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway will benefit all that portion of the country west of Port Arthur. It seems that one of the conditions of the bargain is that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will reduce their freight rates 3 cents per hundred pounds commencing next year. I think the reduction is to be  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cents next year, and  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cents the year following, and thereafter the rate per hundred pounds upon all freight west of Port Arthur, will be reduced 3 cents per 100 pounds. Now, let us apply that 3 cents per 100 pounds on freight that is coming from the west. I have in my hand a statement that is authentic, which shows the volume of freight that has passed over the Canadian Pacific Railway west of Port Arthur since 1891, and with your permission, Mr. Chairman, I will read it. In 1891 there were 15,822,990 bushels of wheat carried from points west of Port Arthur; in 1892 the quantity was 18 millions, in round numbers; in 1893 the volume of wheat was 15 millions; in 1894, 17 millions; in 1895, 20 millions, and in 1896, 24 million bushels. Now, apply 3 cents per bushel reduction upon 24 million bushels of wheat. The reduction will be equivalent to 18 million pounds, and you will find a benefit accruing to those who ship from points west of Port Arthur, to the extent of \$540,000, to say nothing of flour; I am speaking now of wheat alone. We find, then, that all those who ship grain or other freight from points west of Port Arthur will derive a benefit of at least \$540,000 per annum, providing trade does not increase in future. But let us assume, and I think with safety that we can assume, that the increase will continue in the future as it has in the past, and it will be seen that this volume of trade must grow very materially year after year; therefore all those who ship from points west of Port Arthur will derive vast advantages from the Canadian Pacific Railway by that reduction in rates. I do not mention this for the purpose of supporting the Government. I feel, however, that the gentlemen who occupy the Treasury benches must at least have some consideration for the interest of Canada, and although I am not in political accord with those hon. gentlemen, I do not for a moment believe that they would sit down and enter into a bargain that is wholly one-sided for the benefit of a private company like the Canadian Pacific Railway, without taking into serious account the interest of Canada. If we are to believe all we hear on this subject, why, we must characterize the gentlemen who preside over the destinies of Canada to-day as a set of traitors to the interest of this country. Well, I do not feel so ungenerous as to accuse them of that. Nobody has asked me to make a speech in their praise, and it is not my purpose to do so; but I do feel as an independent Liberal-Conservative, which I claim to be, that I ought at least to give credit where credit is due. Now, looking at the question on the whole, and considering it on general terms, I feel convinced that the Government should not of itself undertake to build railways. We have an example of the result of the Government building railways, in the Intercolonial Railway, a railway that has been piling up deficits for years since its construction, and the Government of Canada cannot get out of that obligation for the simple reason that it was part and parcel of the compact of confederation. The road was built as a political obligation, and it is an asset of Canada which has to be maintained. Whether it pays or not, this country has to keep that road in operation.

While on this subject, I may mention this, if I am permitted to do so: The other evening when the question was under debate and the vote taken I recorded my vote in favour of bringing the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. My reasons for doing so are these: As a business man, I thought that the stopping of the Intercolonial Railway at Point Lévis without facilities for connecting with the other railway systems of Canada was one of the causes that led to the deficits of that road in the past. I felt that it was the duty of any Government to undertake the task of bringing the Intercolonial Railway in touch with the American system of railways in Montreal. The means employed by the present Government to accomplish that end rest entirely with themselves. I assume none of the responsibility for them. Different views have been expressed in regard to it. We have been told that it was a bargain; some people call it a huge steal. I do not believe so myself, and as I am only speaking now for myself, I shall express myself as I feel. I do not believe that it was a big steal, and I believe that the route adopted was the best available one by which to get into Montreal. It has been said that a great deal too much has been paid for the Drummond County road. It is contended on the one hand that a certain amount has been paid for the line, and on the other hand we find, on fairly good authority, that it cost very much more. The Government is utilizing a road known as the Drummond County road, a road passing through a fertile portion of Quebec, a road that is developing the latent resources of that part of the country, which are unlimited. The Government, in using the Drummond County Railway as a portion of their scheme, adopted the best method within their reach. I say this without expressing an opinion as to whether or not the country is paying too much for it. The Government must be held responsible by the people of Canada for the details. I approve of the principle of buying the Intercolonial Railway west to Montreal only. I do not want any of my hon. friends on this side of the House, nor do I wish to assure my hon. friends on the other side of the House that my vote the other evening was an indication of my wavering in my political convictions. I am just as firmly convinced and just as firmly satisfied with my political convictions to-day as I was when I first became a Liberal-Conservative in 1878. My reasons then for becoming a Liberal-Conservative were, I think, very well founded. I was very strongly in favour of any Government or of any party which would introduce a system to protect our native industries and develop our latent resources. When the National Policy was introduced in 1879 I felt that we were starting in the right direction. I have never had any reason to change my opinion in that regard; I am still a believer in that policy of protection to our native industries. I feel complimented as a Liberal-Conservative, and I am flattered to know that the party which had combated us for eighteen years, upon coming into power discovered that we were right and that they were wrong. I am glad to know that, but I will add, that any measure emanating from the Government side of the House, henceforth, which conserves the principle of protection to the native industries of Canada shall have an independent and fair support from me in this House. I do not want that to be interpreted wrongly. I want it to be understood that I shall vote for every measure upon its merits, regardless of what one party or another may think of it. In that I am expressing simply the views which I hold. I perhaps may not be considered a very good party man; I would be sorry if some of my friends think I am not. But it is very gratifying to me to know I shall always claim the right of acting and judging of measures for myself. I simply ask my friends on this side of the House to understand that it is not a case of my deserting them, but a case of my exercising my own judgment on the merits of any question before the House. I do not think I have much more to say, except this, that I believe the policy of the Government building and operating railways is a mistaken one. I believe that if the late Government had remained in power they would not have put that principle in force. I believe if they had remained in power and had been called upon to build the Crow's Nest Pass Railway they would have done it by the same plan which has been adopted by the present Government. Whether they would have given $11,000 or $5,000 a mile is another matter, but I will add that it takes two to make a bargain, and I presume that the present Government, in view of the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway is operating so many lines of railway already, reasonably felt justified in coming to the conclusion that that company was best able to carry out the construction of this road. If a vote should be demanded upon it I shall vote for the measure.

Mr. HENDERSON. I shall only detain the committee for a few minutes, as in all probability there will be no other opportunity in the House for the discussion of this question. I am one of those who believe that a railroad should be constructed through the Crow's Nest Pass. The question, by whom it should be constructed, may be an open question. Some may think that the Government should undertake it, while others believe that it should be given to some independent company. I must say that I am not at any time very favourably impressed with Government undertakings of this kind. They are gigantic; a large amount of money is to be expended, and I think there is very great danger, perhaps, of something improper being done in such an undertaking on account of the pressure which may be brought on the Government in connection with a work of this kind. I desire to say, however, that if this road is to be built by a company I do not think we have in this country at the present time any company better able and better equipped to undertake that road than the Canadian Pacific Railway. They have large means; they have men of ability in matters appertaining to the construction and operation of railways, and in every respect I think they are better fitted to undertake a matter of this kind than any other company we could get. However, I am not enamoured with the plan upon which this road is to be constructed. It seems to me to savour a good deal of the preferential trade policy of the Government. It is a policy of all giving and very little getting. The Canadian Pacific Railway seems to have a long way the best of the deal. We are giving them, as I understand, a bonus to the extent of $3,630,000.

We have almost no information with respect to what is to come out of the British Columbia subsidy; but in order that we may be induced to give that money for the construction of the road, we are informed that we are to obtain certain reductions in freight rates. These reductions, in my mind, are very small indeed. Out of all the items named—and they are only a few of the articles of merchandise that will be carried—only two of them exceed 10 per cent of a cut in the rates. The large bulk of the articles enumerated are only to be reduced to the extent of 10 per cent, and that is comparatively insignificant. The pressure of public opinion would, in the near future, have compelled the Canadian Pacific Railway to concede this to the people of the western country. The reduction of 1 cent per bushel on the rate for oats is very trifling indeed, and the reduction of one and four-fifths cents per bushel on wheat is not a very large reduction on an article whereon the freight has been so high. This, however, may not be altogether a fair way of looking at the matter. British Columbia is the province that will be most benefited by the road, and British Columbia will certainly be a great gainer. We are told that British Columbia has the coal and the mineral wealth, and that the development of these mineral resources will bring to that province a large amount of gain. Then, if British Columbia is going to be such a large gainer by this undertaking I think we can fairly look to British Columbia to do what the other provinces have done in the past, viz.: use their natural wealth to construct their own railway, or, at any rate, to do that before applying to the central Government to build it for them. I have no doubt that this scheme will be adopted by the House. I regret very much that it should have come down almost at the closing hour of the session, and that such short time should have been given the hon. members of this House to investigate it. I feel that when the members go home, they will not be able to convey to their constituents any clear idea of what this scheme is. The matter will have to be left largely with the Government. While that is the case, as there likely will be no division on this question at the present time, I simply wish to state my views with regard to it. Anxious as I am to see that road constructed, and preferring instead of as a Government road to see it constructed by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I am forced, by reason of the circumstances, to cast my vote against the resolution.

Mr. POWELL. I wish to call the attention of the Government to a point which occurs to me. In section (e) the resolution says :

There shall be a reduction in the company's present rates and tolls on grain and flour from all points on its main line, &c.

The particular point is this : The Government, under statutory power, have approved by Order in Council of a tariff schedule of rates for the Canadian Pacific Railway. Is the reduction contemplated by that section a reduction from the tariff rates or is it a reduction from the rates and tolls that are at the present time actually charged by the company ? I understand there is a difference between the two.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is a reduction from the rates and tolls actually charged by the company, which are, in most cases, very considerably below the tariff schedule.

Mr. POWELL. I do not intend to discuss the matter, but I submit, as a proposition of law, that such is not the true construction of that section. Where there are two subject matters, one recognized by statute and the other outside of the statute, in the construction of that statute the former must be taken to be within the meaning of the legislature. Here, under powers of a statute, a tariff having been prescribed, that must be the tariff taken in construing the section.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Look at section (d).

Mr. POWELL. I intend to call attention to section (d), as strengthening my argument. It says :

A reduction shall be made in the general rates and tolls of the company, as now charged.

There is a difference in the language used, and that difference in the language used means that there is a difference in the sense; the first being the rates that are actually now charged, and the other language being general. I throw the point out to the Government, and I submit it to the lawyers of the House to look closely into it, and see if, as a matter of legal construction, the construction which I put upon the clause is not the correct one. I am not going to prolong the discussion upon this matter. My own opinion is, that we have already invested enough money in the western country, and in any other portion of the country for that matter, unless there is some very strong reason why we should make further grants. The people of the country generally believe that the period of large expenditure, and accretions to the public debt should be at an end. For that reason, I am opposed to the present scheme.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I have taken note of the hon. gentleman's objection. As to the intention of the agreement I have no doubt, and in the formal bargain with the company, pains will be taken to make that beyond any possibility of doubt.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to ask if in the agreement there is any provision made for the time this road is to be finished ? The resolution says :

The company shall construct, or cause to be constructed, the said railway by such route and according to such descriptions and specifications and within such time or times as may be provided for in the said agreement.

What provision is there in the agreement with regard to time ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The bulk of this road is to be completed, as I understand, at the end of next year ; that is within about eighteen months.

Mr. SPROULE. If that is so, the time is reasonably short, but it would be well to know for a certainty what the provision of the agreement in that respect is.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) will understand that this resolution which we are now considering embodies the salient portions, no doubt. But, of course, he will see that it would be necessary to extend and expand these in the usual way in which these matters are done by legal gentlemen. These points to which he has alluded will be specifically defined in the agreement.

Mr. FOSTER. Can my hon. friend tell me whether or not the Government have any estimate as to the probable cost of the road ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. With regard to the question, when the railway will be built, the expectation is that the agreement to be entered into under the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will undertake to build a considerable portion of the line between Lethbridge and the Kootenay Lake by the first of the coming year. They think that there may perhaps be a hundred miles completed by that time. They propose to complete the road to Kootenay Lake, a distance of a little over 200 miles, at the end of the following year, that is, by the first of January, 1899. As to the balance of the road, we have not yet come to any definite understanding with the company. The probability is that immediately upon the completion of the road to Kootenay Lake there will be put on a car ferry, which will give direct car accommodation with the line to Nelson. That mode of connection will be continued during the following year, under a lease, while the company are constructing the railway along the shore of Kootenay Lake and making the connection with the line at Nelson. These are our present expectations as to the time for the completion of the road. Of course, there may possibly be some little modification one way or the other in respect to this question of time, when we come to complete our arrangements more definitely. As to the probable cost of the road, I may say that, so far as I can learn, as I am informed by the officers of my department, there has been at no time any Governmental surveys of the route which this railway is likely to traverse. The only information in the possession of the late Government, and the only information in our possession, has been obtained from the officers and engineers of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, or rather has been obtained through the company as the result of surveys which have been made by their officers. We have a very careful statement made by them as to the cost of the different sections of the road, and that statement shows that it is expected that, outside of the equipment the road will cost between $25,000 and $26,000 per mile. Not that every mile or every section will cost that. Some sections will of course be easier of construction than others, and will of course be built at a somewhat smaller rate. There will be a good deal of heavy outlay getting out of Lethbridge. A very large amount of trestle-work will be required there, and perhaps, in making the connection at or near Macleod. From that point to the Foot Hills the work will probably not be so expensive ; but, after getting into and beyond the Pass, there will be a great deal of very heavy work. Taking it altogether, the information we have is that the cost of the road, taking one mile with an other over the 330 miles, will be in the neighbourhood of $25,000 or $26,000 per mile.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend tell us what point the 330 mile extension will reach ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That point will be Nelson. The distance may not be quite 330 miles ; that will depend on the surveys and the location of the road. It may be possible to get the connection within the 330 miles, but it is not expected that the mileage will fall short of that to any great extent.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it fairly well ascertained what point on the Kootenay the road will strike ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, it is not. The line which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have been contemplating will not, I think, pass far from Fort Steele, perhaps five or six miles distant. However, the question of route is one which we reserve to ourselves the right to approve and control, and I think it not unlikely that we shall find it necessary to procure some independent information on that point before the question of route is finally settled.

Mr. IVES. I understand that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, under the arrangement, are to have the coal lands excepting those alternate sections which are to be under the control of the Government. I would like to know whether, in the contract to be made with the company, it is the intention of the Government to fix a price for coal or coke delivered at Rossland and other mining centres. The main object of this railway is to serve the mining district, to take in manufactured and other goods from the east, and coal and coke from the Canadian Pacific Railway coal lands, which are being acquired from the British Columbia Government. To make the road a real and substantial benefit to that country, it seems to me there should be some agreement as to the price of coal delivered in Rossland or to the smelters in that district ; and I would like to know whether that is to be provided for by the arrangement between the Government and the company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is right in the main in his statement of facts, but not entirely so. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company, I believe, under the arrangement which they have entered into with the British Columbia Southern, will not become entitled to any coal lands at all, except those which they have engaged to secure and to transfer to the Government. All the coal area which does not pass to the Government will remain the property of the British Columbia Southern Company. That is, I understand, the nature of the agreement between that company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The latter company will not be the owners of an area of coal lands. Under their agreement with the British Columbia Southern Company they secure to themselves only 5,000 acres out of the whole coal bearing area. We have insisted upon that body of coal lands being increased to 50,000 acres. They secure that quantity, and make it over to us; but, as I understand the arrangement, they get no other portion of the coal lands. Now, we have, I think, taken a great deal of care, and have made arrangements which will secure to the consumers of coal that coal shall be obtainable at a low price. Every one who is familiar with the conditions existing in British Columbia knows that at present coal brings a very high price, and that coke which is suitable for the purposes of smelting costs in the neighbourhood of from $14 to $16 a ton. We have made arrangements under which the owners of the coal area not transferred to us will be obliged to put coal from their mines free on board the cars at a price not exceeding $2 per ton, and even that price is subject to the regulation and control of the Governor in Council. If we are satisfied, from inquiry, that the coal miners are getting at this rate, a larger profit than they ought reasonably to exact, we can reduce the price. Two dollars is the maximum price. And I may add that we have this lever by which we can control the owners of the coal lands. The moment they exact any higher price or fail to produce a sufficient supply, we have it in our power to throw upon the market open to public competition the coal property we possess and thus make it possible for other parties to go into business.

Mr. IVES. That involves a contract between the Government and the British Columbia Southern Railway as well.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think it does. We have not found up to this moment that it has. We make our contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway and they must make theirs with the Southern Eastern. If the Canadian Pacific Railway fail to make such a contract with the Southern Railway people, or if the latter fail to manage their coal property in such a way as to carry out our agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway, we can put our properties in the market, and give opportunity to others to come in and compete. The hon. gentleman spoke of coke. We have not mentioned coke, because we consider that the price of coal will govern the price of coke. But if coke is not reduced as required, I apprehend that by putting our coal properties on the market, competitors will go into the business, not only of mining but of manufacturing as well.

Mr. HAGGART. Has the hon. gentleman any information as to the area in which seams are exposed and workable? Would it cover an area of more than 5,000 acres?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Very much more than that. A large portion of the coal area is very close to the railway in several places, and I do not think there is any room for doubt as to the quantity and quality of the coal.

Mr. IVES. I would like to know how the hon. gentleman can compel the British Columbia Southern to sell coal free on board the cars at $2 per ton unless he has some arrangement with them. His contract, which is wholly with the Canadian Pacific Railway, cannot affect coal lands belonging to the British Columbia Southern Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I concluded that when we became the owners of 50,000 acres of coal-bearing land we have got in our hands all the guarantee which we could have desired against the coal lands being tied up and the prices increased.

Mr. IVES. There is a general impression that the leading directors of the Canadian Pacific Railway have practically become the proprietors of the British Columbia Southern and its coal lands. In that case, we are paying them indirectly a still further subsidy for the construction of this railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am assured by the gentlemen representing the Canadian Pacific Railway, the president and the vice-president, that they have no interest at all in the company which will hold the residue of these lands after they are earned and acquired. I could not state with any certainty who compose the British Columbia Southern. I believe that Colonel Baker is one. Messrs. Hanson Brothers, of Montreal, are concerned and represent a number of other persons interested.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman for some information. I see that this section provides for a reduction of rates or tolls for the carriage of grain or flour "from all points on its main line, branches or connections," west of Fort William to Fort William and Port Arthur points east of 3 cents per hundred pounds." As I interpret that it means a reduction of the rates of grain from points west of Fort William and Port Arthur to Fort William and Port Arthur and not to points east.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think that the arrangement in reference to transportation provided that if grain was carried by way of the north shore of Lake Superior to points east, the reduction would apply to that also.

Mr. SPROULE. The resolution does not say so.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I know, as a matter of fact, there is very little, if any, grain carried in that way. If it is carried in that way, it is carried during the winter season and at much lower rates than it would be carried during the season of open water.

Mr. SPROULE. It is in the winter time that it would be most important, because then you must use the railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In the winter season, I am informed, the rates are lower.

Mr. SPROULE. But if I understand this correctly, their lowest rate would be reduced, whether winter or summer. It is not usual for winter rates to be lower than summer rates, they are generally much higher. This is a matter of considerable importance especially to the people of Ontario, who bring down a lot of grain over that road. If the reduction were made only to Port Arthur it would be an unfortunate thing for people in Ontario, and also a bad arrangement for the people of Manitoba and the North-west from whom the grain is received.

Mr. HAGGART. Is not something left out here? Surely it is intended to cover all points east.

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems to me that it is not important. It is intended to benefit the shipper, and he gets the reduction. It does not matter to him whether that reduction is made west or east of Port Arthur.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think that on reading the subsection it will appear clear that what I stated is correct.

Mr. FOSTER. Surely it should read "to Fort William and Port Arthur and points east." As it is now it does not mean anything.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There does seem to be a slight anomaly there. I think the word "and" should be inserted as suggested. In the discussions between the officers of the company and ourselves, the subject of the carriage around lake Superior during the winter season was mentioned, and it was agreed to give a reduction to points east, so that Fort William and Port Arthur should not be the extreme points to which they would agree to carry grain and to which the reductions would apply. When the arrangements as settled and agreed upon is consulted, I think it will be found that there has been an error in the printing. The word "and" should be inserted certainly. I now move that the word "and" be inserted,

Mr. SPROULE.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) tell me what points were covered by the British Columbia Southern charter?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If my memory serves me well, the British Columbia Southern Railway Company's charter covered a line from the Pacific coast through to the eastern boundary of the province.

Mr. McINNES. If it is proposed to carry the resolutions in entirety, I have a couple of amendments to propose. Under section (d), it is provided that reductions should be made on certain goods going westward. Now, in all fairness, merchants on the Pacific coast should have an equal advantage with those in the east. There should be no discrimination in this regard in favour of one as against the other. With equal privileges, the merchants in British Columbia can cater to that important country's trade, especially since the preferential tariff with Great Britain. Goods can come around the Horn, and land at a price that will enable merchants to sell them profitably in competition with merchants from the east. I would move that in section (d), after the word "company," the following be inserted:—

And from all points west of the Cascade Range in British Columbia, on the company's railway, to all points east of the said Cascade Range, on the company's main line or on any line throughout Canada owned, leased or operated by the company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not mean to say that the amendment as proposed here had better be incorporated in the clause to-night; I think perhaps it would be well that it should stand until to-morrow, and we could put ourselves in communication with the officers of the Canadian Pacific Railway to see whether this amendment would be likely to disturb the arrangement which has been made. I would be very glad to confer with them upon the subject, and there is no particular object in concluding the matter to-night. It could be moved, and the sense of the committee taken upon it. If we ascertained that it would be a serious block to the conclusion of the arrangement, then the committee had better determine whether these words should be inserted.

Mr. FOSTER. Are we ratifying an agreement here or are we passing a simple resolution proposed by the Government?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not suggesting that the committee should express any opinion upon it to-night, but I am willing that the matter should stand until to-morrow. I think it is only fair to the hon. gentleman that the suggestion he makes should be considered; and if it cannot be favourably considered, then of course the statement can be made to the committee when it resumes consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HAGGART. Surely the hon. gentleman must see that if the committee passed this agreement, he cannot possibly alter it afterwards. It is to be submitted afterwards to the Canadian Pacific Railway to see whether they consent to it or not.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is not my proposal.

Mr. HAGGART. Your proposal is to submit it to the committee, and if the committee agree to it, there is an end of it. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company have either to accept or reject it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is doing himself very little justice by stating the proposition in that way. I say that the consideration of this resolution should stand until to-morrow, and in the meantime I can have communication with those who are representing the Canadian Pacific Railway in order to ascertain whether they would favourably consider the proposal which the hon. gentleman has made. I think it is entitled to consideration, and if they are willing to consider it, it can then without detriment to anybody be inserted as an amendment to the resolution. If they are unwilling to accept it, then of course the resolution must stand as it is. If the committee, when we resume, upon the amendment being proposed, are prepared to accept it, then the arrangement is at an end. That means that the committee have defeated the resolution.

Mr. HAGGART. I may have misunderstood the Minister, for I certainly understood him to say that we should take the sense of the committee upon it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not to-night.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the hon. gentleman is the only one who understood that I suggested that we take the sense of the committee upon it to-night. The committee must understand that this is not an agreement, it is nothing that has been signed, sealed and executed between the parties. These are the conditions which we have imposed upon the Canadian Pacific Railway, and which they have accepted. There has not been any writing at all passed between us. If this committee should reject the terms of the arrangement, or if they should add anything to it which would not be acceptable to the Canadian Pacific Railway, then the whole transaction is at an end. We are bound to nothing, they are bound to nothing.

Mr. FOSTER. Then does my hon. friend want that to be a consummation of his labours?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the Government gone into the matter with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and made a hard and fast arrangement, after long negotiations, and come to the conclusion that this is an instrument that we are both agreed to? Then is the hon. gentleman from British Columbia to interject new matter and imperil the whole thing. Does my hon. friend want this to pass or does he not?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think there is any possibility of its being imperilled unless the committee should reject the resolution as we finally ask the committee to pass it. But if, on consultation with the other party to this understanding, they are willing that there should be another amendment made, if they are willing that the suggestion of the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. McInnes) should be added, we would be only too glad to add it. Then I come to the committee and say that it is agreeable to the other party that such an addition should be made. If, on the other hand, they say that the arrangement will be at an end, then we will say to the hon. gentleman that we cannot accept his proposition.

Mr. GIBSON. It is a business proposition.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think so. Everything possibly may be said against the proposal. I think the only thing that is involved is the matter of delay.

Mr. IVES. I understand then from the Minister of Railways that the whole subject is an open question, and that amendments may be considered by the committee in modification of this arrangement. Now, if such is the case, I certainly think it will be a great improvement to have the whole of these coal lands vested in the Government of Canada. I do not see for myself anything that the British Columbia Southern Railway Company has done in connection with this project which entitles them to a property which is supposed to be worth millions of dollars. They got a charter, they have built no railway, they have done nothing. The Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway have had to come forward and fill the breach, the Government with a subsidy, the Canadian Pacific Railway with their skill, ability and energy, and the railway is to be built. Why should the British Columbia Southern Railway Company retain coal lands of incalculable value? What have they done? And if this railway arrangement is open to amendment I certainly should move at a later stage that it be amended in the direction that the Government of Canada shall retain possession of the whole of these lands if they are to give this subsidy.

Mr. McINNES. I might as well read the other amendment that I have prepared, so that it may be considered between now and to-morrow:

That the said company shall not become entitled to any assistance specified in this resolution until it has satisfied the Governor General in Council that no Chinese or Japanese have been or are employed on the construction of said railway.

Mr. FOSTER. Is my hon. friend the Minister of Railways accepting that in the same manner. It seems to me that if this were done it would destroy the whole arrangement and might prevent the Crow's Nest Pass from being built at all.

Mr. McINNES. I am not introducing this with the object of in any way embarrassing the Government in carrying out the arrangement, but what I am doing I am compelled to do on account of my stand in the past and my conviction at present in reference to this railway. I think these are resolutions that we could fairly pass and insist upon the Canadian Pacific Railway accepting. If the Canadian Pacific Railway, in view of all the concessions that we are prepared to give them, will not accept these small modifications, then I will be prepared to cast the whole thing out, and I think the House would be justified in doing so.

Mr. FOSTER. After days and months of negotiation between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway, they have come to this agreement. The hon. member (Mr. McInnes) asks that the Government leave something out or put something in. If he insists upon this and the Minister is facile enough to say that an agreement which has been come to by the Government and the company can be opened up by my hon. friend instead of being firm and saying "This is the agreement that we have come to; it must be accepted or taken," if my hon. friends take this course upon them proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver, they will be responsible for not having that invaluable country opened up.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not understand, Mr. Chairman, that these resolutions were to be considered to-night. There are others which might be considered as well. Why cannot we consider one as well as the other. Where is there any situation that prevents us from considering one any more than the other. If the Government can leave it open for this session, all the better I say for the country. If they had a little time to consult with the parties, some of these propositions might be accepted. It would be a safer plan to allow them time to consult and see if they would not be accepted.

Resolution to be reported.

I.C.R.—EXTENSION TO MONTREAL.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved second reading of Bill (No. 142) to confirm an agreement entered into with the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada and the Drummond County Railway Company and Her Majesty for the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to the city of Montreal.

Mr. FOSTER. I appeal to my hon. friend the leader of the House. It is now half-past one. We will be utterly unfitted for any business to-morrow.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is a matter of very grave moment in the general interest to send this Bill on to the Senate. It has been fully discussed, unless the hon. gentleman wants further discussion upon it; and there has been a division.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not understand that this Bill has been discussed at all. There was not even an explanation of the provisions of it.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I cannot conceive what objection hon. gentlemen can have to this. They have divided upon it, and they know very well that the thing must go through now.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the Bill even printed?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We want to give the Senate an opportunity of discussing it.

Mr. IVES. You will not take the last stage.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Not if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ives) objects to it.

Mr. IVES. I object to the last stage going through to-night.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We will not take the last stage if it is objected to.

Bill read the second time, considered in committee, and reported.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY— SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message as follows:—

ABERDEEN.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ending on the 30th June, 1898, and in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867," the Governor General recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons. Government House, Ottawa, 18th June, 1897.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Now I think after we have done such excellent work, that we will be ready to take a couple of hours more. I suggest that we proceed with the final stages of the tariff. There are a few matters held over. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of Ways and Means. The only remaining resolutions are those relating to the export duties, and while the subject is important I think perhaps it is not necessary that we should discuss it. I propose to read the resolutions, and if there be no objection they may be adopted. The first resolution deals with the export duties on logs and is substantially the resolution of the last tariff; inserting, however, some words with regard to pulp wood. It is:

That it is expedient to enact that, if any country imposes a duty upon the articles enumerated in item 577 in Schedule B to this Act, or upon any of such articles when imported into such country from Canada, the Governor in Council may, by proclamation published in the "Canada Gazette," declare the following export duties, or any of them, chargeable upon logs and pulp wood exported from Canada to such country, that is to say: on pine, Douglas fir, spruce, fir balsam, cedar, elm and hemlock logs, and pulp wood, an export duty not exceeding three dollars per thousand feet, board measure; and in case of the export of any of the above mentioned logs or pulp wood in shorter lengths than nine feet, then a rate per cord may be levied in the same way, not greater than the equivalent of the above mentioned rate per thousand feet, board measure; and such export duty shall be chargeable accordingly after the publication of such proclamation: Provided that the Governor in Council may by proclamation published in like manner, from time to time remove and reimpose such export duty.

Mr. FOSTER. I would suggest to my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) that in a matter of this importance, and which will not I hope involve much, if any, discussion, it would be better if these resolutions should appear on to-morrow's paper, and that we should then take them up. I think it would be far better that these export duty resolutions should be passed in a separate Bill.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. And take the stages of the tariff apart from that.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what I would suggest.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Very well.

Mr. CLANCY. I desire to call the attention of the Finance Minister to the question of elm logs, which I see are included in the proposal with regard to export duties. These logs, as exported from Canada, are taken exclusively from lands belonging to individuals, and not from the public domain. Therefore I would like him to consider the advisability of not including elm logs with those to be subject to an export duty, as otherwise a hardship will be entailed on a good many farmers.

Motion agreed to, and the House again resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FOSTER. In regard to item 279 and 280, I want to make to my hon. friend an appeal for an industry, to wit, the making of wood axes. I want to suggest that they be taken from 280, and put in to 297. The effect of that will be to make them subject to 30 per cent instead of 25 per cent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid it is too late now for us to take that up. I know that the suggestion would give rise to considerable discussion, and therefore I think it better to let the duty stand as it is.

The following resolutions were adopted:—

1. Resolved, That it is expedient to revise and consolidate the Acts and parts of Acts now in force respecting the duties of customs, and that for this purpose it is expedient to repeal the following Acts or parts thereof not heretofore repealed, viz:—

57-58 Victoria, Chapter 33, intituled: "An Act to consolidate and amend the Acts respecting the Duties of Customs."

53-59 Victoria, Chapter 23, intituled: "An Act to amend the Customs Tariff, 1894."

And to provide otherwise by enacting that the following be substituted in lieu thereof:—

1. That unless the context otherwise requires,

(d) The expression "ton" means two thousand pounds avoirdupois;

(e) The expression "proof" or "proof spirits," when applied to wines or spirits of any kind, means spirits of a strength equal to that of pure ethyl alcohol compounded with distilled water in such proportions that the resultant mixture shall at a temperature of sixty degrees Fahrenheit have a specific gravity of 0.9198 as compared with that of distilled water at the same temperature;

2. That the expressions mentioned in section two of "The Customs Act," as amended by section two of "The Customs Amendment Act, 1888," whenever they occur herein, or in any Act relating to the customs, unless the context otherwise requires, have the meaning assigned to them respectively by the said section two and any power conferred upon the Governor in Council by "The Customs Act" to transfer dutiable goods to the list of goods which may be imported free of duty is not hereby abrogated or impaired.

3. That subject to the foregoing provisions and to the requirements of "The Customs Act," Chapter thirty-two of the Revised Statutes, as amended, there shall be levied, collected and paid upon all goods enumerated, or referred to as not enumerated, in Schedule "A" hereto appended,—the several rates of duties of customs set forth and described in the said schedule and set opposite to each item respectively or charged thereon as not enumerated, when such goods are imported into Canada or are taken out of warehouse for consumption therein.

4. That subject to the same provisions and to the further conditions contained in Schedule "B" hereto appended, all goods enumerated in the said Schedule "B" may be imported into Canada or may be taken out of warehouse for consumption therein, without the payment of any duties of customs thereon.

5. That the importation into Canada of any goods enumerated, described or referred to in Schedule "C" hereto appended, is prohibited ; and that any such goods if imported shall thereby become forfeited to the Crown and may be destroyed, and that any person importing any such prohibited goods, or causing or permitting them to be imported, shall for each offence incur a penalty of two hundred dollars.

6. The whole or part of the duties hereby imposed upon fish and other products of the fisheries may be remitted as respects either the United States or Newfoundland, or both, upon proclamation of the Governor in Council, which may be issued whenever it appears to his satisfaction that the Governments of the United States and Newfoundland, or either of them, have made changes in their tariffs of duties imposed upon articles imported from Canada, in reduction or repeal of the duties in force in the said countries respectively.

7. That the export of deer, wild turkeys, quail, partridge, prairie fowl and woodcock, in the carcase or parts thereof, is hereby declared unlawful and prohibited ; and any person exporting or attempting to export any such article shall for each such offence incur a penalty of one hundred dollars, and the article so attempted to be exported shall be forfeited, and may, on reasonable cause of suspicion of intention to export, be seized by any officer of the customs, and, if such intention is proved, shall be dealt with as for breach of the customs laws ; Provided, that this section shall not apply to the export, under such regulations as are made by the Governor in Council, of any carcase or part thereof of any deer raised or bred by any person, company or association of persons upon his or their own lands.

Mr. FIELDING.

8. That regulations respecting the manner in which molasses and syrups shall be sampled and tested for the purpose of determining the classes to which they belong with reference to the duty chargeable thereon shall be made by the Controller of Customs ; and the instruments and appliances necessary for such determination shall be designated by him and supplied to such officers as are by him charged with the duty of sampling and testing such molasses and syrups ; and the decision of any officer (to whom is so assigned the testing of such articles) as to the duties to which they are subject under the tariff shall be final and conclusive, unless upon appeal to the Commissioner of Customs within thirty days from the rendering of such decision, such decision is, with the approval of the Controller, changed ; and the decision of the Commissioner with such approval shall be final.

9. That in the case of all wines, spirits, or alcoholic liquors subject to duty according to their relative strength of proof, such strength shall be ascertained either by means of Sykes's hydrometer or of the specific gravity bottle, as the Controller of Customs directs ; and in case such relative strength cannot be correctly ascertained by the direct use of the hydrometer or gravity bottle, it shall be ascertained by the distillation of a sample and the subsequent test in like manner of the distillate.

10. That all medicinal or toilet preparations imported for completing the manufacture thereof, or for the manufacture of any other article by the addition of any ingredient or ingredients, or by mixing such preparations, or by putting up or labelling the same, alone or with other articles or compounds, under any proprietary or special name or trade mark, shall be valued for duty purposes under the provisions of subsection two of section sixty-five of the Customs Act.

11. That all medicinal preparations, whether chemical or other, usually imported with the name of the manufacturer, shall have the true name of such manufacturer and the place where they are prepared, and the word "alcoholic" or "non-alcoholic" permanently and legibly affixed to each parcel by stamp, label or otherwise ; and all medicinal preparations imported without such names so affixed may be forfeited.

12. That packages when imported shall be subject to the payment of the following duties, viz.:

(a) All bottles, flasks, jars, demijohns, carboys, casks, hogsheads, pipes, barrels, and all other vessels or packages, manufactured of tin, iron, lead, zinc, glass or any other material capable of holding liquids—and all packages in which goods are commonly placed for home consumption, including cases, not otherwise provided for, in which bottled spirits, wines, or malt liquors or other liquids are contained—and every package being the first receptacle or covering inclosing goods for purpose of sale—shall in all cases, not otherwise provided for, in which they contain goods subject to an ad valorem duty or a specific and ad valorem duty, be charged with the same rate of ad valorem duty as is to be levied and collected on the goods they contain, and the value of the packages may be included in the value of such goods ;

(b) Provided that all such packages as aforesaid containing goods subject to a specific duty only, and not otherwise provided for, shall be charged with a duty of twenty per cent ad valorem ;

(c) That packages not hereinbefore specified, and not herein specially charged with or declared liable to duty, and being the usual and ordinary packages in which goods are packed for exportation, according to the general usage and custom of trade, shall be free of duty ;

(d) Provided further, that all such special packages or coverings as are of use, or apparently designed for use other than in the importation of the goods they contain, shall be subject to the same rate of duty as would thereon be levied if imported empty or separate from their contents.

(e) Provided also, that packages (inside or outside) containing free goods shall be exempt from duty when the packages are of such a nature that their destruction becomes necessary in order to release the goods.

13. That any person who, without lawful excuse, the proof of which shall be on the person accused, sends or brings into Canada, or who, being in Canada, has in his possession, any bill-heading or other paper appearing to be a heading or blank capable of being filled up and used as an invoice, and bearing any certificate purporting to show, or which may be used to show, that the invoice which may be made from such bill-heading or blank is correct or authentic, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a penalty of five hundred dollars, and to imprisonment for a term not exceeding twelve months, in the discretion of the court, and the goods entered under any invoice made from any such bill-heading or blank shall be forfeited.

14. That with respect to goods imported for manufacturing purposes that are admissible under schedule "A" hereto appended for any specific purposes, at a lower rate of duty than would otherwise be chargeable, or exempt from duty under schedule "B" hereto appended, the importer claiming such exemption from duty, or proportionate exemption from duty, shall make and subscribe to the following affidavit or affirmation before the collector of customs at the port of entry, or before a notary public or commissioner for taking affidavits :—

I, (name of importer), the undersigned, importer of the (names of the goods or articles) mentioned in this entry, do solemnly (swear or affirm) that such (names of the goods or articles) are imported by me for the manufacture of (names of the goods to be manufactured) in my own factory, situated at (name of the place, county and province), and that no portion of the same will be used for any other purpose or disposed of until so manufactured.

15. That nothing contained in the foregoing provisions shall affect the "French Treaty Act, 1894," or Chapter three of Fifty-eight-Fifty-nine Victoria, being "An Act respecting Commercial Treaties affecting Canada."

16. That when the customs tariff of any country admits the products of Canada on terms which, on the whole, are as favourable to Canada as the terms of the Reciprocal Tariff herein referred to, are to the countries to which it may apply, articles which are the growth, produce or manufacture of such country, when imported direct therefrom, may then be entered for duty, or taken out of warehouse for consumption in Canada at the reduced rates of duty provided in the Reciprocal Tariff set forth in Schedule "D."

(a) That any question that may arise as to the countries entitled to the benefits of the Reciprocal Tariff, shall be decided by the Controller of Customs, subject to the authority of the Governor in Council.

(b) That the Governor in Council may extend the benefits of such Reciprocal Tariff to any country which may be entitled thereto by virtue of any treaty with Her Majesty.

(c) That the Controller of Customs may make such regulations as are necessary for carrying out the intention of this section.

17. That whenever the Governor in Council has reason to believe that as respects any article of commerce there exists any trust, combination, association or agreement of any kind among the manufacturers of such article, or the dealers therein, or any number of them, to unduly enhance the price of such article, or in any way to unduly promote the advantage of such manufacturers or dealers at the expense of the consumers, the Governor in Council may commission or empower any Judge of the Supreme Court or Exchequer Court of Canada, or of any Supreme Court or High Court in any province of Canada, to inquire in a summary way into and report to the Governor in Council whether such trust, combination, association or agreement exists ; with power to such judge to compel the attendance or witnesses and examine the same under oath, to require the production of books and papers, and with such other necessary powers as may be conferred upon him by the Governor in Council for the purposes of such inquiry, and if such judge reports that such trust, combination, association or agreement exists, and if it appears to the Governor in Council that such disadvantage to the consumers is facilitated by the customs duty imposed on a like article when imported, then the Governor in Council may place such article on the free list, or so reduce the duty upon it, as to give to the public the benefit of reasonable competition in such article.

The Governor in Council may make such regulations as may be deemed advisable for the effectual conduct of such inquiry.

2. Resolved, That it is expedient to cancel all Orders in Council and all departmental regulations contrary to or inconsistent with any of the provisions of the foregoing resolution or of the schedule thereto.

3. Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that the foregoing resolutions and the alterations thereby made in the rate of duties of customs payable on goods imported into Canada shall take effect on and after the 23rd day of April last.

Provided that in the case of goods which were imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption and on which duty was paid, on or after the 23rd day of April, 1897, in accordance with the rate of duty set forth as payable on such goods in the resolutions respecting the duties of Customs introduced in the House of Commons on the 22nd day of April, 1897, or in any such resolution subsequently introduced in the said House, the duty so paid shall not be affected, nor shall the person paying it be entitled to any refund or be liable to any further payment of duty, by reason of such rate of duty being altered by any resolution introduced subsequently to that in accordance with which such duty was paid and before the passing of this Act.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1.45 a.m. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, 19th June, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock, a.m.

PRAYERS.

RETURN OF FEES.

Mr. BOSTOCK moved:—

That the fees paid on Bill (No. 93) to incorporate the Columbia and Western Railway Company, and on Bill (No. 100) to incorporate the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern Railway and Navigation Company, be refunded, less the cost of printing and translation, inasmuch as the

Mr. FIELDING.

Select Standing Committee on Railways and Canals and Telegraph Lines, to whom the said Bills were referred, has not reported on the same.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me a strange proceeding to introduce such a resolution without it being reported or recommended by the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines. There was no such report; it was not before the committee. I think it a very bad precedent to establish in this House to allow such a motion to pass without any recommendation of the committee.

An hon. MEMBER. Carried.

Mr. FOSTER. No. I think we should understand this. We have got into the habit of rushing things through. Something was rushed through yesterday which never should have been passed by this House.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). What was that?

Mr. FOSTER. The report of the Printing Committee, recommending the payment of money that should never have been paid—a gross scandal, as it looks to me. I am going to bring the matter up. If we pass this motion in this fashion we go aside from the precedents. There is no recommendation of the committee, but it is proposed to rush this resolution through. Let the Railway Committee do its duty as it has done in the past, and, if it recommends that these fees be returned, the House will have the case before it in the regular way.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. While I entirely agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) that this matter should have been done in the way he suggests, still, he knows as well as I do, that there is scarcely a case in which when a Bill is withdrawn or thrown out, a motion of this kind does not follow as a matter of course. I hardly ever have known a case, in fact my recollection does not extend to a single case, in which it was refused, and I think that the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), who was for many years prominently connected with the Railway Committee, will bear me out in saying that the return of these fees was never refused.

Mr. HAGGART. It was never refused, but it was generally granted on the recommendation of the committee.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am not disputing the point, but this is really, in its nature, a formal motion, and in favour of a thing that has been done a great many times. I do not mean to say that it ought to be done, but there is no doubt that the custom has grown up. I will not press the point, of course, but I think the objection might be waived on the understanding that this is not to be drawn into a precedent.

Mr. FOSTER. All right.

BOUNTIES ON IRON AND STEEL.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House, at this sitting, resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolution :—

That it is expedient to repeal chapter 9 of 57-58 Victoria, being "An Act to provide for the payment of bounties on iron and steel manufactured from Canadian ore," and all regulations thereunder made by order of the Governor in Council.

That it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may authorize the payment of the following bounties on steel ingots, puddled iron bars and pig iron made in Canada, that is to say :—

On steel ingots manufactured from ingredients of which not less than fifty per cent of the weight thereof consists of pig iron made in Canada, a bounty of three dollars per ton ;

On puddled iron bars manufactured from pig iron made in Canada, a bounty of three dollars per ton ;

On pig iron manufactured from ore, a bounty of three dollars per ton on the proportion produced from Canadian ore, and two dollars per ton on the proportion produced from foreign ore.

That it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may make regulations in relation to the bounties hereinbefore mentioned in order to carry out the intention of these resolutions.

That it is expedient to provide that the said bounties shall only be applicable to steel ingots, puddle iron bars and pig iron made in Canada prior to the 23rd day of April, 1902.

That it is expedient to provide that the foregoing bounties shall be payable only on iron and steel for consumption in Canada, and that the Governor in Council may at any time by proclamation impose export duties on such iron and steel if the same shall be exported from Canada ; such duties to be not greater than the amount of the bounty payable on such iron and steel.

Motion agreed to.

EXPORT DUTIES.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved that the House, at this sitting, resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolution :—

That it is expedient to enact that if any country imposes a duty upon the articles enumerated in item 577 in Schedule "B" to this Act, or upon any of such articles when imported into such country from Canada, the Governor in Council may, by proclamation published in the "Canada Gazette," declare the following export duties, or any of them, chargeable upon logs and pulp-wood exported from Canada to such country, that is to say : On pine, Douglas fir, spruce, fir balsam, cedar, elm and hemlock logs, and pulp-wood, an export duty not exceeding three dollars per thousand feet, board measure ; and in case of the export of any of the above mentioned logs or pulp-wood in shorter lengths than nine feet, then a rate per cord may be levied in the same way, not greater than the equivalent of the above mentioned rate per thousand feet, board measure ; and such export duty shall be chargeable accordingly after the publication of such proclamation : Provided that the Governor in Council may, by proclamation published in like manner, from time to time remove and reimpose such export duty.

That it is expedient to enact that the Governor in Council may, by proclamation published in the "Canada Gazette," impose export duties as under upon the following ores and metals, and each such duty shall be chargeable accordingly after the publication of such proclamation.

Provided always that the Governor in Council may, by proclamation published in like manner, from time to time remove and re-impose such export duties :—

(a) On nickle contained in matte, or in the ore, or in any crude or partially manufactured state, and upon copper contained in any matte or ore which also contains nickel—when exported from Canada—upon such nickel an export duty not exceeding ten cents per pound ; and upon such copper an export duty not exceeding two cents per pound.

(b) On ores which contain copper, or any metal other than nickel or lead, when exported from Canada, an export duty not exceeding fifteen per cent on the value of the said ores.

(c) On lead ores, and on lead and silver ores, when exported from Canada to a country which imposes an import duty on lead in bars or in the form of pig lead in excess of the import duty on lead contained in lead ores or in lead and silver ores—an export duty on the lead contained in the ores so exported from Canada to an amount per pound equivalent to such excess.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. MILLS. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to call attention to the order of the House passed some weeks ago for a return of the papers in the case of the mail contracts between Annapolis and Liverpool. I put the question on the Order Paper early in the session, but, at the request of the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), it was allowed to stand as a notice of motion, and I moved for the papers. But the return is not yet down.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). I will call the matter to the attention of the Postmaster General the moment he comes in.

I. C. R.—EXTENSION TO MONTREAL.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair) moved third reading of Bill (No. 142) to confirm certain agreements entered into by Her Majesty with the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada and the Drummond County Railway for the purpose of securing the extension of the Intercolonial Railway system to the city of Montreal.

Mr. SPROULE. Have we the Bill before the House yet ? We had not a copy of it last night ; it was not even on the Order paper. Is it printed and distributed now ?

Mr. FOSTER. The Bill is only a copy of the resolutions.

Mr. SPROULE. But a copy of the resolutions is not the Bill. It seems a strange proceeding to pass a Bill that is not even printed and distributed. This Bill commits the country to a very large expenditure, yet we have not even an opportunity of knowing its provisions.

Mr. HAGGART. Before we pass this Bill which, I suppose, is in accordance with the resolutions presented to the House, I beg to enter my protest, for one, against any such deal—for I can call it nothing else than a deal—as that intended to be perpetrated by this measure. If the Government thought it was necessary in the interests of the country that the Intercolonial Railway should be extended from Point Lévis to Montreal, there was a means of obtaining that object without any such large expenditure of money the country is committed to by this Bill. It would have been very easy for the Government to make arrangements with the Drummond County Railway for the purpose of securing that line. I think that every hon. gentleman in this House must know that the owners of the securities in reference to this road, do not consider them very valuable, and they would have been perfectly willing to part with those securities for the face value of the cash which they expended upon it. I have no doubt of this, because I had some negotiations on that subject with that railway, for the purpose of securing this entrance into Montreal; and I have not the slightest doubt that I could have secured from the possessors of those securities the control of the Drummond County Railway for the actual cash owing to the Eastern Townships Bank, and the cash which that company at present owes.

Mr. HALE. How much?

Mr. HAGGART. I think it would be in the neighbourhood of $400,000 or $500,000. Now, what is the condition of that railway company? How has it been constructed, and what is the amount of its indebtedness? I took a good deal of trouble to look into the affairs of this company, and according to the railway statistics of June 30th, 1896, the actual cash invested by the company, procured from various sources, was $141,686.61; there is a floating debt of $221,692.99, or a total of $363,379.60. As security for part of that amount the Eastern Townships Bank have assigned to them one million dollars of bonds which have been issued by the company, of which not a single dollar has been sold; they are still in the possession of the bank. Now, that is the total amount of cash liabilities of that concern, $363,379.60. I venture to say that any person going to the railway company and offering them the cash for the purpose of paying the amount due to the bank, and all the other debts owing by this company, could have secured control of the road, and the company would have been glad to make the bargain. To that you may add the ordinary stock alleged to be subscribed and alleged to be paid, $400,000, and I venture to say that not one dollar of that stock has been paid in cash in the form of stock. Then the actual cash expended by this concern for the purpose of building this road, was $363,379.60. Add the $400,000 stock which is alleged to have been paid up, and you have $763,379.60. Add to that the amount paid by the Dominion Government, which is $287,936, and the provincial subsidies, which I think amount to about $340,000. But so far as I could get returns from the Quebec blue books, the amount paid was $300,170, which represented a payment, or a capitalization, or a conversion of the land grant to a cash subsidy, at the rate of 35 cents on the dollar. Subsequently an Act was passed by the Legislature of Quebec, in 1897, which added a further sum of 15 cents on the dollar to that amount, which would make it in the neighbourhood of $340,170. Then the municipal bonus was $15,000, making the total cost of the railway and rolling stock in the neighbourhood of about $1,400,000. That includes, of course, the $400,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then you have got 43 miles to build.

Mr. HAGGART. I will deal with that part of it. The estimated amount of cash invested by the company when the road was completed, on 30th of June, 1896, is $363,379.60. The hon. Minister of Railways stated that there were 33 miles to complete the road. I find upon looking it over that it is about 42 miles.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. 43 miles, I said.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman stated again and again in his speech that it was from 31 to 35 miles. Upon looking over the maps, wondering in myself that the road was so short, I found he was mistaken, and that the actual distance, according to the report of the chief engineer of his department, is 42 miles. Add $14,000 per mile for 42 miles, and you have an amount of about $570,000 for the purpose of completing the road. Then there is a portion of the road which has to be graded up to a certain standard near where the bridge crosses, which will cost about $50,000. So you have altogether in the neighbourhood of one million dollars as the estimated cost of the road when completed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You mean two millions.

Mr. HAGGART. No, I mean actual cash. I mean that the actual cash invested in the road is $363,379; and a rough estimate of the cost of building that 42 miles and bringing that portion of it where the bridge crosses up to the gradient, would make a sum as nearly as possible of one million dollars in round numbers.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You have given up $1,770,000. How do you get that back?

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman is not following me closely. I am deducting the municipal grant, I am deducting the cash which the Dominion Government gave, I am deducting the provincial assistance given to it; and I am showing that of the $400,000, not a single dollar was expended in cash. I am deducting the actual cash expenditure and the liabilities of the road, and adding the amount it will cost to put the road in complete order, and this will leave the amount that it has cost these gentlemen who own the road, one million dollars. Does the Minister of Railways ask this House to repay to the gentlemen who have built the road, all that it has cost them in its construction, including the provincial bonuses, the municipal bonuses, and the Dominion bonuses. And when you have bought the concern, it is notoriously not worth the amount of cash value of its debts? Does he ask us, when buying it, to pay over to these gentlemen again the amount of Dominion bonuses that we have given, and the provincial and municipal bonuses that they have received? I am endeavouring to show what a beautiful transaction this is. I want to show the amount of money that these gentlemen will make out of the transaction after receiving all these bonuses. They actually owe in cash on that railway $363,379, and the balance between that and a million dollars would complete the road, and then they will have the rolling stock to sell with which they will make another bargain with the Minister of Railways. With that $1,000,000, having the rolling stock, they will be able to complete that portion of their contract with the Minister of Railways and be able to hand over the road. This $64,000 a year for 99 years is equal to $2,000,000 virtually in cash which these gentlemen are receiving for a road which cost them in cash, and for which they would be glad to take, $363,379, thus receiving a profit of $1,000,000 to put in their pockets. Has the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals looked into this transaction? It cannot be possible for the people of this country to give their consent to a transaction of this kind. If he has not looked into this transaction, if he has not inquired into it fully, he has not done his duty to the people of this country. If he has inquired into it, and if his department has looked into this transaction, which, to say the least of it, is a most questionable one, he is consenting to give to parties who are willing to take $363,000 in cash and would have been glad to get it, $1,000,000.

Mr. LAVERGNE. How can you prove that that company would have accepted $363,000 in cash for the road?

Mr. HAGGART. The Eastern Townships Bank have been trying to negotiate the claim which they have against that railway and for which they have security to the amount of $1,000,000 in bonds. That claim is for $221,592.99, and there are floating liabilities of $141,686.61 more. The Eastern Townships Bank would be perfectly willing to get cash for the amount which they have advanced. Surely when a bank has been pressing for a sum of money which was due for a number of years, which was looked upon as not being a valuable asset, which the bank has been now claiming for the last four or five years, an asset which amounts to $263,000 which the bank has been keen to get—surely the parties that own the road would have been willing to have parted with the corporate rights if we had offered a small sum over and above the liability to the bank and the floating debt. I will venture to say that this road had been offered for a less sum than the cash amount that was due to the bank and the floating liabilities, to the different large corporations in Canada, to the Grand Trunk or the Canadian Pacific Railway, for a less sum than $363,000. In the face of these facts known to every business man in Montreal, known to every railway corporation in the country, the Minister of Railways coolly proposes to this House to pay to them the amount of cash which is at present due to this corporation, and to supplement that by an addition of $1,000,000 at least. At the same time they have power to make an arrangement with the Minister for the purpose of giving over the rolling stock of the road. This is a bad enough transaction, but a worse one still is the arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway Company to which they propose to give $150,000 a year, for rights and franchises upon their road. I was mistaken when I thought that we were getting an undivided interest in the road not only from Chaudière to Lévis, but an undivided interest from the bridge to the terminus in Montreal. I find that we are only acquiring a user of it, that we only have the right of it for whatever trains of the Intercolonial Railway may use that station, and that the absolute control and the absolute ownership outside of that user is the Grand Trunk Railway Company. Our user on that portion of the road will not be one to twenty of that of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and for one-twentieth of the right of user of the terminal of the Grand Trunk Railway Company in Montreal we are to pay the Grand Trunk Railway Company $140,000 a year, or to calculate it upon the amount of user at twenty times $140,000 it gives a sum of $2,800,000, which is the calculated annual value of the terminals of the Grand Trunk Railway in Montreal. I will venture to say that I could have made an arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway which would have been much more advantageous.

I proposed entering into an arrangement for getting the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal. I had casual conversations with the manager of the Grand Trunk Railway, and I found that I would have had no difficulty whatever in arranging for the use of the terminals, the bridge and the line for a sum proportionate to the extent to which we used them.

Mr. GIBSON. Why did you not do it then ?

Mr. HAGGART. I did not do it because I had not fully considered it and because I had not fully determined that it was in the interest of the country then to make any arrangement of that kind. I will venture to say that an arrangement of that kind could have been made by the Grand Trunk Railway Company for from $20,000 to $25,000 a year for the use of the terminals in Montreal to the extent to which the Intercolonial Railway would require them. The Railway Committee of the Privy Council had the power to determine upon and to take the user of this line if it were necessary. They had a perfect right to do it. The hon. gentleman says "Oh, what value is that to the Grand Trunk Railway Company. Those who lend the money in the old country would not advance a single cent on a scheme such as that. We have to consider what the holders of the mortgage bonds and securities would have said in regard to it. I will venture to say that the Grand Trunk Railway Company would have found it impossible to have borrowed any sum of money for the purpose of extending any of its terminals over the bridge. The only reason that they are able to extend the bridge and the terminals is that they have entered into an arrangement with the Government of Canada which they show the capitalists in the old country and raise the money upon. Does the hon. gentleman not know, and does the House not know, what the company have to make out of this transaction and how easy it would be to get the securities that rank on the company to consent to this being a prior lien upon it. They will say to the mortgage holders, "The bridge requires to be extended; the earning powers of the company will be increased and the only way we can do it is by means of this arrangement with the Government of Canada." Will they not borrow the money on that ?

Will the Minister of Railways tell me, how it was possible that they could raise money for the purpose of extending that undertaking unless under an arrangement of this kind. There was no other way to do it. Every one knows the condition of the Grand Trunk Railway. They could not take the necessary expenditure out of the annual earnings. They could not borrow it on the security of the company, unless we give them some security which is precedent to a lot of the security that ranks above the common stock of the company. The Grand Trunk Railway Company would have to give a first class security, and that first class security would be the endorsement of the people of this country to the scheme, and promising to pay them $140,000 a year. Then, with the consent of the bondholders and the preference shareholders—which it is their interest to give—they would give a preference to these securities and the money could be raised in the old country. I do not intend to debate this question long, because I suppose it is the intention of the House to pass the Bill and send it to the Senate. The time is too short to discuss such an important measure, but I may say that the arguments of the Minister (Mr. Blair) as to the increased traffic which would accrue to the Intercolonial on account of the building of this road, are perfectly ridiculous. Fancy the Minister of Railways stating to this House that there are 10,000 cars waiting for transportation on this road which we are to take over. Does he know the enormous amount of traffic that 10,000 cars entail ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do you know it is not true.

Mr. HAGGART. I know it is absolutely ridiculous on the face of it and know that no sane man and no intelligent man in the House would believe it. Fancy on a railroad 73 miles long, the Minister of Railways gravely states to this House and to the railway men of this country that there are 10,000 cars of freight waiting to be transported upon it. Why, Sir, the statement is ridiculous and absurd.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I said that I was assured that there were now waiting on that railway from 8,000 to 10,000 cars of freight. That is what I think I said if my memory serves me, and my statement was more than corroborated by a gentleman who sits behind the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart).

Mr. HAGGART. Would the Minister look and see the amount of freight that is carried on the Intercolonial Railway ; would he look and see how many car loads are carried on the Grand Trunk Railway ; would he look and see how many cars are carried on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and would he look and see what the total amount of traffic on that road has been last year ? Some hon. gentleman has been telling the Minister that in the shape of standing trees and everything else there will be available in the next thousand years to come for freight upon the road, 10,000 cars to be transported ; but no person should be able to impose on the hon. gentleman to that extent, nor should he attempt to impose on the House the statement that there were 10,000 cars of material waiting to be transported on that road. The statement is so absolutely absurd that it is not worth while discussing it. Such are the arguments used by the hon. gentleman in order to support this scheme.

The hon. Minister could have made arrangements with the Drummond County Railway, if that was the best way of getting into Montreal, for a sum of money which would equal to the cash indebtedness of that company. He would have got that willingly from the House. If this scheme were in the interests of the country he could have got power from this House to make a running arrangement over the Grand Trunk Railway for the purpose of using their line and their bridge and their terminals in Montreal. This House would, I believe, have no objection to such a scheme, but the proposition of giving to a bankrupt railway company the sum of one million dollars over and above the actual cash assets of the company is not one that should be entertained. We can afford to be generous to the Grand Trunk Railway and the Minister should have given a generous amount to the Grand Trunk Railway, because it is a railway which has greatly benefited this country. We are assisting them to build a bridge by giving them $300,000, and the hon. gentleman might have made a liberal arrangement for the user of it, but to give the sum of money he did for the purpose of acquiring an extension to the Intercolonial Railway, and gravely telling this House that the extension will not cost the country one cent because the extra profit earned, according to the reports from his engineer-in-chief will more than compensate the amount which the country has to pay for it; such a statement will not be borne out by the facts. When the returns come down next year I venture to say that instead of any amount being received on account of the money which we are to give to the Drummond Railway Company and the Grand Trunk Railway Company there will be a larger deficit than there is at present on the Intercolonial Railway. The hon. Minister says that we will take the road over equal to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway, but I venture to say that there will be a repetition of our experience on the Intercolonial Railway line between Point Lévis and Rivière du Loup on that piece of road of 121.5 miles we expended $1,500,000, and it was stated to this House at the time that it was in every way equal to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway. Afterwards the Minister was obliged to say to this House that in order to make it really up to that standard there was a further expenditure necessary of $2,400,000. I will venture to say that that experience will be repeated upon the Drummond County Railway. I will venture to say that before the officers of the Intercolonial Railway can run it and get it up to the standard there will be an expenditure of over one and a half million dollars in addition to the purchase money, on that road from Point Lévis to the connection with the Grand Trunk Railway. Here then is an expenditure capitalized at seven million dollars, a further expenditure for rolling stock for use on that section of the road, and a further expenditure which will be required for the purpose of getting it up to the standard of the Intercolonial. Sir, we are entering upon an undertaking which will cost this country, if the amount be capitalized, nearly nine million dollars a year.

Mr. GIBSON. Nine million dollars a year.

Mr. HAGGART. Nine million dollars capitalized.

Mr. GIBSON. You said nine million dollars a year.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Gibson) must have seen that was a lapsus linguæ—the amount altogether would be equal to a capital expenditure of nine million dollars for the purpose of having the extension of the Intercolonial to Montreal. As I have said before this extension may be in the interests of the country. I hold the same views as a good many gentlemen from the North-west and contrary to the views of my leader, that a Government railway may be worked as economically as a private railway. That is the experience of a great many countries in the world where the management of a Government railway is efficient, and where everything connected with the railway is bought cheaper than a private corporation possibly could buy it. In Germany, in Belgium and in France the Governments work railways cheaper than it is possible for corporations to do it. They work them in the interests of the community. I have long been of the opinion that a railway should be like a public highway, under the control of the people. The original idea was that it should be so, and that every one who owned a locomotive should have the right to travel on a railway. I am of the opinion as some of those gentlemen from the North-west, that it is quite possible that a railway could be operated by a department of the Government as economically and more in the interests of the country than by a private corporation. I think the day will come when all railways as well as telegraphs in this country, as well as in most countries, will be owned by the people and be under the direct control of the Government; but that is a question which is not under consideration at this time. What I complain of is not the extension of the Intercolonial to Montreal; I complain of the manner in which the hon. Minister of Railways has entered into this monstrous bargain with the Drummond County Railway Company, which, to say the least of it, savours of wrong and corruption, and I complain of the extravagant bargain he has made with the Grand Trunk Railway Company, at a time when the finances of the country should be husbanded with the greatest possible care. It is an expenditure which is unjustifiable, and I must enter my protest against the third reading of the Bill and against any such arrangement as the hon. gentleman has made.

Mr. McMULLEN. I desire to say a few words in reply to the hon. ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart). I have sat in this House for some fifteen or sixteen years, and I have never before heard any member of Parliament make such a preposterous proposition as that hon. gentleman has made here to-day. He virtually declares that if the Government of this country want to become proprietors of a railway or anything else, they should find out the mortgage indebtedness on the property, and what the holders of the mortgage will take for it, and then close out the owner by taking the property for the mortgage debt. I would like to ask my hon. friend if his conscientious convictions, if he has any, would permit him to buy a mortgage on his neighbour's property, simply because he wanted the property, and to secure it in that way—finding out who was the holder of the mortgage, securing an assignment of it to himself, and then closing out the owner and taking over the property at the mortgage debt?

Mr. BENNETT. You know how it is done.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is that the way the Government of Canada should acquire property?

Mr. HAGGART. I never had a mortgage on any man's property in my life.

Mr. McMULLEN. No, the hon. gentleman has not had very much experience. But still he finds fault with the Government for giving the owners of this property what they consider a fair value for it, and says that instead of that they should have gone to the Eastern Townships Bank, which holds $1,000,000 of bonds against the property, and which would have been glad to get the money it invested $367,000 for those bonds, that they should have bought those bonds, and then they could close out the owners of the railway and take possession of it and make it part of the Dominion line. That is what the hon. gentleman claims the Government should have done, instead of allowing the owner a fair compensation for the value of the property. I would like to ask hon. gentlemen opposite if when they had the management of the finances of this country, they ever in their whole political life acquired a piece of property in that way. When they built the Langevin Block, did they go to the registry office in this city, and find out how much mortgage debt was registered against the land, and find out who were the owners of the mortgages, and then buy the mortgages, and close out the owners of the property? Not at all. They appointed commissioners, and sent them to negotiate with the original owners, and bought the property at what they considered its fair value, though we thought at the time that the price was in excess of the value of the property. I am amazed at a Minister of the Crown, with the extended experience of the hon. gentleman, daring to get up before this House and propose that a Government of this country should wrench out of the company's hands their property by buying up the mortgages on it and closing them out. In regard to the value of the property, I have no doubt the Minister of Railways took care to make an investigation. If he did not, it is a proper subject of criticism whether the value in that property is sufficient for the return we are giving for it. When the hon. gentleman, as Minister of Railways, bought a property in St. John for some $200,000, which we considered an exorbitant price, I would like to know whether he went and inquired how much mortgage indebtedness stood against that company, and whether by buying up the mortgage he tried to freeze out the owner and get possession of the property in that way. I am amazed that the hon. gentleman would make such a proposition to this House as he has done to-day. In regard to the bonuses that were granted in aid of the construction of that railway, would it be right or fair or honest to say to the company: You shall deduct from the purchase value of the property the money that was granted to you in these bonuses? Can the hon. gentleman give an instance in the history of this country in which that was done? I defy him to point out one single instance in which, when a road has been purchased, the amount of subsidy granted by the Government to aid in its construction has been deducted, and the balance paid over as the purchase price. He cannot give one single instance. We know that the Canada Central Railway became part of the Canadian Pacific Railway during the time hon. gentlemen opposite occupied the Treasury benches. That railway was granted a very large subvention towards its construction, and when Duncan McIntyre transferred that property to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, was it declared that the assistance given to it by the municipalities, the provinces and the Dominion should be deducted from the amount of the purchase money? No such monstrous proposition was ever made or suggested, and it has never been suggested in this country until the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) has suggested it to-day. I am amazed that he would try to wrench from the owners their property on any such terms. No, Sir; the Government of this country is too honourable, the Crown is too honourable towards her subjects, to take her property in such a way. I would be ashamed to occupy a seat in Parliament and be the follower of a man who would dare to make such an absurd proposition. I give the hon. gentlemen opposite credit for desiring an honest investigation, but let them not resort to the contemptible tactics which has been suggested by the hon. ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart). Let us deal honestly and honourably with one another as Canadians, and do not attempt to perpetrate such a piece of rank injustice as the hon. gentleman has proposed. I am not prepared to say what the value of the property is. It is a duty of the Opposition to investigate and I do not deprive them of any right, but let them act as honourable in such a work that they can claim credit from the people for their conduct and not advocate such contemptible sharp practice as the foreclosing of the mortgage in order that the Government may thus become owners of the property. Such procedure would not be tolerated by fair thinking individuals on the part of the Government, and except in some very exceptional circumstances is looked upon as sharp practice on the part of individuals.

Mr. LAVERGNE. I wish to say a few words in reply to my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart). I am very much surprised to hear from a gentleman of his experience and standing, the statements he has made. According to him, the value of the road is the amount of its liabilities, and because its liabilities are $363,000 that amount must be taken as its value. According to that reasoning the Dominion of Canada, which owes about $350,000,000, would be only worth that amount.

The hon. gentleman, however, afterwards took another line of argument. He said that the company owned about $400,000 of stock which has not been transferred to the Eastern Townships bank, and the whole debt is $363,000. As federal subsidy, they have received $287,000, and as provincial subsidy $340,000. Adding these figures together, the total amount is $1,390,000, to which he adds $15,000 municipal assistance, making $1,405,000. Then, he says, to finish the 43 miles, which are not made, will cost about $570,000, and to finish the grading will take some $50,000 more. This will bring the total to $2,025,000, according to the figures of the hon. gentleman. In the face of these figures, he then tells us that this railway is only worth $363,000. Taking the hon. gentleman's figures as correct that this road, when completed, will actually cost $2,025,000, let us see what the Government is paying. It is paying $64,000 per year for 99 years, at the end of which time payments will cease and the road will be completely ours. Well, $64,000, at the rate of 4 per cent—which is a fair rate of interest to apply to a corporation—represent a capital of $1,600,000, and that is the amount we pay for this railway, which, according to the hon. gentleman's calculations, will cost, when completed, $2,025,000, so that the Government are paying interest at 4 per cent on an amount which is $425,000 less than the cost of the road, taking the figures of the hon. gentleman.

Hon. gentlemen opposite talk about an interest of 3 per cent, but we know the corporations cannot secure money at such a rate. Even the Dominion Government, in order to borrow at 3 per cent, has to sell its obligations at a discount. Their obligations at 3 per cent will sell perhaps at 90; but even taking the interest at 3 per cent, the capital represented by an annual interest of $64,000 would amount to $2,100,000, or pretty near the amount which the hon. gentleman gave us as the estimated cost of the road. Yet the hon. gentleman says that this is a scandalous transaction, and that it is a notorious fact that this road is worth nothing. Such a statement, is however, a simple statement, not borne out by the facts.

The hon. gentleman says further that the acquisition of this road, instead of diminishing the deficit which we have to meet every year on the Intercolonial Railway, will increase it, because it will have to compete with the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway. The other day the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) told us that the Intercolonial Railway extended to Montreal would not be in a position to compete with the Grand Trunk Railway, which has its terminal at Portland, because the distance from Montreal to Portland by the Grand Trunk Railway is 400 miles less than the distance from Montreal to Halifax by the Intercolonial Railway. But he did not put the case as fairly as he should. He forgot to tell the House that the distance from Portland to Liverpool is about 500 miles longer than the distance from Halifax to Liverpool. This he never took into account. I believe that the route from Montreal to Halifax by the Intercolonial Railway is just as advantageous and can compete very fairly with the Grand Trunk Railway via Portland.

As to the Canadian Pacific Railway, I repeat what I have said and what the ex-Minister of Finance thought very ridiculous. I repeat that a difference of 76 miles in a route of 1,200 or 1,400 miles is not worth mentioning, and I go further, and say that even with that difference in the route, if you make the comparison at St. Johns, another terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway, a difference of about 240 miles on a route of 1,200 or 1,400 miles does not prevent the Intercolonial Railway from making a profitable business, if they can secure the traffic. It has been said that the idea that 8,000 or 10,000 car loads of lumber are ready for shipment on the line of the Drummond County Railway is absurd. Well, while I am not sufficiently posted to speak with absolute knowledge, I am prepared to state from my own experience in connection with the mills which are running day and night at Forrestdale, Mitchell and Moose Park, that half that quantity is ready for shipment, including sawn lumber, pulp wood and all other sorts of lumber. I do not wish to detain the House on this matter; but I may say, in conclusion, that the assertions of the hon. gentleman are based simply on slander. He cannot prove his statements; he has no evidence whatever that the bank would be ready to foreclose that railroad if the money due to the bank were handed to it.

Mr. SPROULE. I desire to direct the attention of the House to the irregular way in which this Bill is being discussed, and also to discuss the Bill itself. Now, according to the rules, Bills must be printed in both English and French before they are read the second time; but this Bill is not printed at all. It is not even on the Order paper. It cannot fairly be said to be before the House according to our own rule. I think this is a very bad precedent, and even though it were done by general consent, the measure is of such importance that the fact of its being dealt with in this irregular way will often be referred to in the future to justify other irregularities of a similar nature. Again, at this late stage of the session it is impossible to give this Bill the attention that its importance deserves. This Bill commits the country to a very large expenditure of money, and it commits it to the endorsement of a transaction which, so far as we can get information about it, appears to be shady in the extreme. I am surprised at the warmth with which the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) defended the transaction, because in the past his voice was raised against extravagance more frequently than that of any other member of the House. He was constantly calling out for economy. But there is no economy in this measure, yet he does not say a word against it, he does not even ask for any information which will enable him to judge whether the transaction is good or bad. The hon. gentleman seemed to think that there was some impropriety in our criticising this Bill. But we have a right to inquire to what we are being committed by the Bill, and what we are getting from the Grand Trunk for what we give. For ninety-nine years we must pay them $140,000 a year. That would represent a capital sum, calculating interest at 4 per cent, of $3,500,000. The expenditure of this annual sum will go on many years after the youngest member of this House has passed from the stage of action. We are committing the country to this expenditure for one hundred years, with the understanding that it shall be renewed in perpetuity. Now, what do we get for that? We get what is supposed to be a half interest in a plant. We get a user's right over the track of the Grand Trunk from which they will earn $8 for every two dollars that we earn from it. We are paying what is supposed to be equivalent to half the price while our use of it will bring only $2 for every $8 that they get. Is that fair to the country? I put a case the other day, and I repeat it now: If the Minister of Railways and I, as private individuals were going in for a partnership to buy a plant out of which we expected to get a return, he $8 and I $2, would it be fair to ask me to pay one-half the cost of the plant. In reason I ought to pay only about one-fifth of the amount that he should pay. But the country is paying one-half of the cost and receiving a return of only about one-fifth. I contend that this is a bad bargain, and one that the hon. gentleman will find it very hard to defend in the country.

Now, what more do we give away? We give $300,000 for the improvement of the Victoria Bridge. We are told that the Grand Trunk Railway in their own interest, must have made that expenditure if they intended to carry the traffic they hope to carry in the near future, and that not only must they make this expenditure, but they were prepared to make it. We hear hon. gentlemen decry discussion of the matter in this House. We have several times during this debate been subjected to interruptions by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson). It is the right of hon. members to discuss the wisdom of this contract. And it comes with bad grace from the hon. member for Lincoln—above all men—a contractor who intends and expects to get a share of this money which he is helping to vote. How far does the fact of his connection with this contract affect his independence as a member of this House? When we vote this $300,000, as we are going to vote it, in a short time, he has a contract that will bring a share of that money into his own pocket. He should be silent; he should hang his head in shame rather than try to interrupt members who seek to do their duty in this House. It is very unfair, it is very indelicate, and something that his constituents will call him to account for. He above all men, should hold his tongue when this subject is being discussed.

During the present session we have put a clause in every railway Bill that we have passed providing that other companies shall have the right to use the road of the company we charter on paying a fair remuneration to that company, in proportion to the number of cars run and quantity of freight carried. Why do we do that? Because the country has given large subsidies to these roads and we should not divest ourselves of our rights in them. This country has rights in the Grand Trunk; it has paid millions of dollars to that company for which it will never get a dollar in return. If we require the right for the Intercolonial Railway to go over a few miles of their road, we should be able to get it without paying such an exorbitant consideration, a consideration which is equal to $5,540,000. The country will not approve of any such bargain and when hon. gentlemen opposite go back to the people, in my opinion, they will be sternly called to account for this transaction.

An hon. MEMBER. Carried.

Mr. SPROULE. An hon. member says "carried." He is in a hurry to carry this measure. If he would carry more brains in his head or if he would carry more consideration for the interests of his constituents, it would be a great deal better.

Then we come to the arrangement with the Drummond County Railway. What is it? We have very little information about it. The hon. member for Drummond and Arthabaska (Mr. Lavergne), who spoke before me, got up and defended this transaction with a warmth that is not usual to him. Well, I am told that it is a current rumour which is generally believed, that the hon. gentleman is about to leave the precincts of Parliament and go upon the bench, and that he has the promise of a judgeship in his pocket, or at least, that in a few days he will be appointed a judge. Now, what right has he, with this expectation, with this promise—if it be a fact—what right has he to lecture the members of this House who are doing their duty in looking after the interests of this country?

Mr. LAVERGNE. I represent more people than you do on this question.

Mr. FOSTER. How long will the hon. gentleman represent them when he gets his seat?

Mr. SPROULE. It may be that he represents more now, but how does he represent them? If this rumour be correct, he has ceased to represent them, he is misrepresenting them, he is not representing the interests of his people, but he is representing the interests of his own pocket. When he gets on that bench, will he raise his voice—

Mr. TALBOT. Question.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this not a very important question? The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot), as well as other members, will find ere long that this is an important question. What does this deal involve? Why, this payment represents a capital of $1,750,000, which we would have to pay if we borrowed that money to-morrow, and that for a railway that might have been sold any day at sheriff's sale for less than $400,000. I was told by a gentleman a few days ago that the railway was offered for sale within the last few months, for $400,000, with everything belonging to it, and that the owners of it would gladly have jumped at the chance of getting that amount of money. Yet we are asked here to pay what is the equivalent to $1,750,000.

to say nothing about rolling stock the value of which we do not know, and that may cost us $75,000, or $100,000, or $200,000—it is all in the hands of the Minister of Railways, who can make a private deal with these parties who are interested. They may bring political considerations to bear upon him, they may bring him some support in the province of Quebec. It may put a large amount of money in the pockets of the private individuals who are concerned, but it will not satisfy the people. We want to know more about it, and yet we are not allowed time to make inquiry, we have not the information that we should have to enable us intelligently to judge what this means to the country. It does savour very much of the transaction that we had a few years ago connected with the Baie des Chaleurs Railway. I may say that if the Upper Chamber went into an inquiry into this matter, I think it would lay bare more of these things than we can do, as there are some transactions connected with it which, if I am well informed, will not bear the light of day, and that are not to the credit of the hon. gentlemen who are making that deal. Now, what is the country going to get in return for this? We are going to get the right to run the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal, the right to run over a few miles of railway belonging to the Grand Trunk, that we have subsidized to the tune of millions, the right to carry the freight of the western provinces over the Intercolonial Railway from the city of Montreal. We are told that this is going to result in making this Government railway a paying railway. But I think, if we credit the statements about the amount of freight that is waiting to be moved on the Drummond County Railway, and the amount the Canadian Pacific Railway is moving, according to their own report of what it moved last year, there is nothing to justify the belief that there will be one-tenth the amount of freight to be moved on the Intercolonial Railway that has been represented to this House. Now, in my judgment, we are making a very bad deal, we are committing the country to a heavy expenditure which cannot be justified. In my opinion, the hon. gentleman will fail to justify this transaction when they go before the people again. And what is this right we are getting? We are getting the right to take this Government railway into Montreal where there are already three or four railways competing for the traffic of western Canada into the city of Montreal. Can we develop the traffic much more by that means? It is not likely. It is not likely to be a much better paying road than it is at the present time. Will the interests of the great ship-owners be benefited by it? I say it is not very likely, because they will do in the future as they have done in the past, they will always take the shortest route, because it costs less to handle freight.

They are not likely to use the Intercolonial Railway if they can use the Canadian Pacific and reach the sea-board by running a fewer number of miles. What we should have done, if we required this extension, was to build a bridge across the river at the city of Quebec, and we could have done it for one-fourth of the money this is going to cost us. Then we could have asked the Canadian Pacific Railway to give us running powers over their road, because we have given them running powers over some of our road. We have a right to ask that, and then we would not have another line competing for the trade, we would have had a better return at a smaller cost, and we would have had a bridge across the river at Quebec, which is one of the important requirements at the present time. But that bridge must be built yet. We are told it will be built, but if it is built the country will pay for it. Then we could have had all the advantages which would accrue from the deal that we are making now, at one-fourth of the cost, and with much greater benefit to the country. Then, are we justified in allowing this Bill to go through in such a hurry? Why, it is not even printed, and is not before the House for consideration. We are at the end of the session, with only a few members present, one-half of the members have gone home, having ceased to take any interest in the business. I say this conduct on the part of the Government is the most unseemly that I have ever seen in this Parliament, and I have been here for nineteen years. It is in complete disregard of the interests of the country. I say we should move that this Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be read this day six months hence, for that is the only way in which it can be properly dealt with in the interest of the country.

Mr. GIBSON. I do not think I would have said anything in regard to this matter, which has already been so ably dealt with by the Minister of Railways and other speakers on this side of the House, were it not that insinuations have been thrown at me across the floor, led by that virtuous man, the ex-Minister of Finance.

Mr. SPROULE. It is not an insinuation. It is a direct statement. Everybody knows that it is correct.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish the hon. gentleman to understand that as a public contractor, not getting tips from the Government, either in counting up or in counting down, I got a contract in public competition by public contractors. Men of ability were asked to tender for this work long before I knew anything about the purchase of the Drummond County Railway, or the use of the Grand Trunk Railway by the Dominion of Canada. The ex-Minister of Finance, with all the vim which he possesses, wishes to leave an impression against my personal character in connection with this matter. Now, Mr. Speaker, in 1891, I occupied somewhat a similar position in this House when I was building the work in connection with the St. Clair Tunnel, connecting the province of Ontario with the state of Michigan. I built that work for the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and a good Tory Government was in power at that date. I was then a member of this House, when the Government, as I understand it, gave to the St. Clair Tunnel Company, $375,000 of public money for the purposes of building that tunnel. When that was done I am bound to say that neither the ex-Minister of Finance, nor any of the other members who sit behind him, accused me of violating the spirit of the Independence of Parliament Act.

Mr. SPROULE. The case is different now.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I must ask your protection from this vulnerable member. I cannot call him vulgar, according to the rules of the House, although he deserves the epithet. As I said before, I wish to put myself right before this House. There is no kind of warfare that is meaner than insinuations, and there is no other hon. gentleman in this House that is more capable of making insinuations of the meanest kind, than the ex-Minister of Finance.

Mr. SPROULE. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Gibson) must not accuse an hon. member of making mean insinuations.

Mr. GIBSON. Well, I will withdraw the word mean and say that he is in the habit of making many insinuations. In fact he never gets on his feet to address the House without making insinuations against the members on the Liberal side of the House. Now, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has been very kind to make comparisons in respect to the bargain that is now before the House. I may say before I conclude my personal explanations that no hon. gentleman on this side of the House or on the other side of the House can stand up and say that my contract with the Grand Trunk Railway Company has anything whatever to do with the Government. So that so far as I am personally concerned, if the Grand Trunk were to steal the money, it would not be my business one way or the other. If they did not get anything at all from the Government I would occupy the same position that I do now. I am a public contractor and I do not think that my character should come under discussion because, forsooth, the Government has entered into an agreement with the Grand Trunk Railway Company. I have nothing to do with that any more than a man who supplies a wheelbarrow, or a man who supplies rails or ties to the company. I would not accuse the hon. member for East Bruce (Mr. Cargill) with having improper motives towards the Grand Trunk Railway Company if he were to vote for this proposition because he supplies that company with ties. Having put myself right before the House on this question. I now wish to say that the Minister of Finance—

An hon. MEMBER. Ex.

Mr. GIBSON. Yes, very much ex-Minister of Finance; I hope he will be a long time ex, double-ex. I wish to refer to some statements made by the ex-Minister of Finance in reference to this matter. I shall not take any notice of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), because it does not matter what he says in any case. In reference to this bargain no hon. gentleman on this side of the House will admit that the Canadian Pacific Railway do not know their business. There is no abler railway management than the men who control the Canadian Pacific Railway. I want to point out that the Canadian Pacific Railway have got running powers over the Grand Trunk Railway Company's line, 39½ or 40 miles from Hamilton to Toronto, and that they pay for that privilege $1,000 a mile per annum, and wheelage besides, in addition to its proportion of the maintenance. In this connection I may say that this lease is for fifty years, and there is to be no proprietary interest at the end of that time. The Grand Trunk Railway Company will still hold the property. What is the difference between this bargain and the bargain which has been the subject of so much discussion in this House? No hon. gentleman will dispute the right of the Canadian Pacific Railway to make a bargain with the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and there is no man but will admit the advantage of bringing two rival companies to use the one road. This is subject to a rental of something like 4 or 5 per cent. The Grand Trunk Railway Company lease their road to the Canadian Pacific Railway upon terms which I have stated. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company have simply running powers over the line. They cannot take up or set down a passenger between Toronto or Hamilton, and when they sell tickets from outside points to points between the two cities 85 per cent of this local traffic goes to the Grand Trunk Railway Company. What is the difference between this and the bargain before us? In consequence of the foresight of the Minister of Railways and Canals the Intercolonial Railway may, under the terms of this contract, take up and put down passengers upon the line used jointly with the Grand Trunk, showing you most clearly that this bargain with the Grand Trunk Railway is based upon much better terms than the bargain with the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk so far as the traffic between the city of Hamilton and the city of Toronto is concerned. The hon. gentlemen the ex-Minister of Finance particularly, and the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) laid great stress upon the large sum of money that the Dominion was called upon to pay in respect to this bargain. The ex-Minister of Finance loomed it away up over $7,000,000. I would ask the hon. gentleman if any business man occupying a building on a back street at a rental of $1,000 a year, were to remove to a front street and pay a rental of $3,000 a year, would Bradstreet write him down next morning as having assumed a debt of $100,000. Yet, such is the proposition that the ex-Minister of Finance laid down, when he said that we had assumed a debt of $7,000,000. The hon. gentleman is opposed to this proposal because he shall not have the disposal of the $7,000,000. The whole trouble with the present leader of the Opposition and the party behind him, is that this Government had the business capacity to grapple with this question. We have been told by the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals that he had considered the matter. I hope that he has considered a matter for once because when he was Minister of Railways and Canals he was in the habit of saying: "I do not know anything about this contract; I leave that to my deputy and to the officers of my department." When he was coralled about the expenditure on the Curran Bridge he said he did not know anything about it. Strange to say, he seems to know very much about this contract now, so far as the Grand Trunk and the Intercolonial Railways are concerned. He had not the business capacity to deal with this subject. He told us the other day that the Department of Railways and Canals had been carried on differently in his time from what it was carried on now. Yes, thank Heaven, it is carried on in a different manner now. People who come to Ottawa to interview the Government all testify to the manly, straightforward, businesslike way in which they are received. I may say a word with respect to the railway extension from Lévis to Montreal. No railway man would ever admit that a railway stopping short of a great city like Montreal by 176 miles would succeed very well. We know it would not be a success. We know very well that for years the Intercolonial Railway was never heard of at the meetings of the general passenger agents and general freight associations of North America. When this extension is made into the city of Montreal the Intercolonial Railway will be in a position to go to these conventions and to dictate terms to other railways as to rates and to get their proportion of the business of the country.

Mr. FOSTER. Why any more now than before?

Mr. GIBSON. Because when the road is extended to Montreal they are in a position to make a freight rate with other lines.

Mr. FOSTER. What freight rate can they make now that they could not make then?

Mr. GIBSON. Then they could not make any rate at all except over the Grand Trunk. They had only one railway. Now they can make a rate either between the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk and they have competition in consequence on business west of Montreal. They did not share in that business when they stopped at Point Lévis. Now, with respect to the condition of the road—

Mr. FOSTER. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gibson) allow me on that point to ask him a question. The question is as to whether before this agreement was brought about, the Intercolonial Railway, on the freight starting on the Intercolonial Railway had not the right, and did not exercise it, of making a rate through to Toronto from any point on the Grand Trunk Railway?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Sometimes we could and sometimes we could not.

Mr. FOSTER. Have you not the right to do it, and did not you do it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, we did not have the right.

Mr. FOSTER. Can you do anything more now?

Mr. GIBSON. The ex-Minister of Finance has been prompted to ask me a question, and of course I do not know anything about—

Mr. FOSTER. Then why are you talking about it?

Mr. GIBSON. Wait a minute, and you can laugh when I get through. The ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) has been prompted by the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) to ask me as to the freight rates, and as to whether the Intercolonial Railway could make through freight rates on the Grand Trunk Railway west of Lévis. They could, as the Minister of Railways has said, but they were entirely at the mercy of such a rate as the Grand Trunk Railway might see fit to charge them. Now, when the Intercolonial reaches the city of Montreal, it will be in the power of the Intercolonial Railway agent to say to the Grand Trunk Railway: if you will not carry our freight to Toronto by your line at such a rate, the Canadian Pacific Railway will do it, or it can be sent by water. I was very glad to hear the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) give the Drummond County road such a high character. He knows the road and he has gone over it; but, I was astonished to hear the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) criticise Mr. Ridout the Government engineer for his hurried inspection of the Drummond County Railway. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) not know, that every railway he and his Government approved of, was reported on by Mr. Ridout, who stated that he had examined the condition of such road and found it satisfactory, and does the ex-Minister (Mr. Haggart) pretend to say that Mr. Ridout walked over every tie on these railways before making his report? Not a bit of it, but for the purpose of slighting this road the hon. gentleman says, that Mr. Ridout went down one day and came back the next. Well, suppose Mr. Ridout did, is it not a proper way to examine a railroad either by riding on the front of the train on the engine or on the last car and go over the road in that way? I think it was very unfair for the ex-Minister of Railways to cast any slur on the report of Mr. Ridout, which was made under similar conditions to his reports on every other railway which was approved of by the late Government. The hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) said, that he would have built a bridge at Quebec and brought the line into Montreal by another road. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) know, that it is estimated to cost from five to six million dollars to build a bridge at Quebec.

Mr. CASGRAIN. No.

Mr. GIBSON. Well, how much?

Mr. CASGRAIN. The deputation that came here the other day to interview the Premier, came up with a calculation showing that the bridge would cost about three million dollars.

Mr. SPROULE. And that a company would raise the most of that.

Mr. GIBSON. Then I would like to ask the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) if that money could be borrowed for less than 5 per cent interest?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

Mr. GIBSON. No; you would at once have to pay $150,000 interest on the money required for the building of that bridge, and you would still be 176 miles from Montreal. To say nothing at all about the building of that 176 miles of railway, just let us take into consideration the facilities the Grand Trunk Railway give the Intercolonial Railway, and the advantage of their terminals in Montreal. Why, if the Government were obliged to-day to purchase the right of way to a central point in the city of Montreal, it would cost at least five million dollars for the right of way alone. That is the way the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) would bring the Intercolonial Railway into the city of Montreal. I am sure that if it had been left to the business management of the ex-Minister of Railways, considering his exploits in the line of Curran Bridges, it would cost about seventeen million dollars to bring the Intercolonial into the city of Montreal.

I give the Government of the day credit for the ability they have shown in this matter, credit for the record they have made in the interest of the country in safeguarding the rights of the people, and credit for the admirable manner in which they have effected this arrangement.

Mr. POWELL. I have a very few words to say before this motion is put to the House. A few figures have suggested themselves to my mind in looking carefully into the transaction, and the question presents itself in two phases. First, the desirability of the extension to Montreal, and second, the nature of the bargain that was made by the Government with the Grand Trunk Railway and the Drummond County Railway Company. With regard to the desirability of getting into the city of Montreal, I must confess I have always sympathized with the desire that the Intercolonial Railway should reach such a large commercial centre as Montreal. However, after looking carefully into the matter, I must say that that sympathy has been considerably weakened, if not, I fear destroyed. The traffic over this line will have to be looked at from three standpoints. First, the standpoint of local traffic, second, the standpoint of through traffic beginning and ending at Montreal, and beginning and ending at points on the present Intercolonial Railway, and third, the traffic in connection with the points along the Intercolonial Railway to and from points west of Montreal. We may immediately dismiss consideration of the local traffic as being a paying feature in connection with the matter. The running of the railroad by the Government will be so expensive, according to the experience of the past, that all the revenue derived from the local traffic will be consumed in expenses. I may say under present close management the net revenue is only $29,000 as respects the traffic that is going to end and begin at points west of Montreal, if it is the intention of the Government—and it seems to be admitted that such is their intention—to assist in the building of a railway bridge across the St. Lawrence at Quebec, then I claim that there is no call at all for the extension of this railway to Montreal, so far at least as through traffic to and from points beyond Montreal is concerned. I say there is no call for it, because there is nothing to be gained by having a terminus at Montreal which is not gained by having the terminus at Lévis. Reaching Montreal, the Intercolonial Railway will have the competition from freight west of that city, between the Grand Trunk Railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the waterways. These are the only competitors, and those same three competing facilities will be at Quebec. Given a bridge at Quebec, we have competition between the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific, and the water facilities for transportation to points in Canada west of Montreal. So far as the through traffic beyond Montreal, therefore, is concerned, there is no strategic value whatever in having the terminus of the Intercolonial Railway at the city of Montreal. In respect to the through traffic over the Intercolonial Railway which will end at Montreal, and the through traffic which will originate at Montreal for the maritime provinces and the eastern portion of Quebec, I admit that there is a favourable aspect, but let us look carefully into it. What does it amount to? The city of Moncton, in the province of New Brunswick, is a critical point. For all traffic originating between that point and the city of St. John, this extension is of no conceivable use. The Intercolonial Railway will have to compete against a shorter mileage from 75 to 250 miles. For traffic between Moncton and Halifax it might almost be said also that this extension is of no use. The Intercolonial Railway will also have to compete against the Canadian Pacific Railway with a shorter mileage of 75 miles. I do not know why it is that those of us who live at points east of Moncton know that when coming to Montreal we always travel by the Canadian Pacific Railway, although the Intercolonial Railway is the safer road, unless it is the desire that is instinctive in us all to reach our destination by the shortest possible route. Freight and passengers, other things being equal, take the shortest route. Geography is against the Intercolonial Railway in respect to these two sources of traffic. With respect to that portion of the line extending from Rivière du Loup to Lévis, the Grand Trunk Railway Company, with their terminus at Montreal, found their portion of it to be so poor a property that they were willing to accept for 125 miles, which were in very good condition, the sum of $1,500,000, or $12,000 a mile. Some through traffic will come to and go from this portion but very little. There is not much in the traffic to and from those portions of the line between Moncton and Rivière du Loup. The trade is small; the country is poor and the prospects are uninviting. I was talking the other day to some leading merchants in Montreal, who deal in heavy wares, and they told me that a great proportion of their goods are shipped, not by railway to the maritime provinces, but that they take advantage of the water communication afforded by the River St. Lawrence and the Gulf of St. Lawrence. For the carriage of those goods the extension will enable the Intercolonial Railway to compete but at the most unprofitable rates. The Minister of Railways the other day, when this matter was under discussion, based his policy on the assumption that the extension to Montreal was going to help to pay the deficit on the Intercolonial, which under its present management has become large again, and transform that deficit into a surplus. This was the only reason he advanced. He rested the whole scheme on this assumption and this assumption alone. Apart from the desire which I share, and which I think every gentleman in the maritime province shares, that a terminus at Montreal should be got for the Intercolonial Railway, if it is a legitimate business venture and imposes no additional burdens on the country, the only thing the Minister of Railways has put forward in support of his proposition is the statement that the increased traffic on the road will transform the deficit on the Intercolonial into a surplus. To buttress this assumption what facts did he show? In the first place, he said there would be an increase in the passenger traffic amounting to 630,000 passengers a year, and an increase in the freight traffic of over 200,000 tons a year. Let us look for a moment at these figures. First of all, we must bear in mind that this railway is not going to originate any traffic; it must prey for its patronage exclusively upon the traffic of other lines. Because of this extension, there will not be one more through passenger coming from the maritime provinces on any point east of Lévis to Montreal or the west. We can only get an increase of through traffic on it to Montreal, by taking from the Canadian Pacific Railway a share of the passenger traffic which that railway now has. I have travelled dozens of times between the maritime provinces and Montreal—dozens of gentlemen in this House have done likewise—and I affirm that there are not twenty through passengers a day on the average going from the maritime provinces to Montreal; and the through passenger traffic on the Intercolonial can only be got by taking a portion of that small traffic. Are we going to get it? The largest part of this traffic is from St. John to Montreal. We shall have a mere bagatelle, if anything, of it. The Minister of Railways laid on the Table of the House a certificate from the Deputy Minister of Railways estimating that the number of additional passengers to be carried on the Intercolonial Railway would, as a result of this extension, be 630,000 a year. I do not know how the Deputy Minister of Railways ever came to give such a certificate. There must be a mistake. The Minister of Railways must have asked him how many additional passengers there would be in the whole ninety-nine years instead of one year; for taking it for the whole ninety-nine years, his estimate would probably be correct; on the basis of the present traffic. With the great respect I have for the Deputy Minister, I say it is absolutely absurd. Six hundred additional passengers per day! We will suppose that a fair percentage of the passengers travelling on this extension will be allotted to the class of local passengers. On that class we will take one hundred thousand as an outside number. The present number of passengers as appears by the second report is 23,000. The balance, then, or 530,000, must be through passengers. If so, they must travel from Lévis or points east to Montreal, or from Montreal to Lévis or points east. Allowing for them $3 per head, the return ticket rate, over the extension alone, what is the result? There will be an average of 1,700 a day through passengers between Quebec and Montreal, or thirty completed loaded passenger cars. I do not wonder the House laughed at the absurdity of the figures of the Minister of Railways. Is not the Canadian Pacific Railway going to have its full share of the through passengers from and to the maritime provinces? Certainly it will. So with the traffic to and from Quebec and Montreal, because it is the more advantageous route, owing to the fact that passengers by other routes have to cross the ferry at Quebec. Let us look further into this calculation, and see how it comes out. According to the hon. gentleman's calculation, there will be nearly 1,800 through passengers a day over this extension. A passenger car will afford room for about sixty passengers, so that means, as I have said, that we are to have thirty passenger cars filled to their utmost limit, passing, fifteen one way and fifteen the other way, between the city of Montreal and Lévis every day of every year. Why, Sir, it is nothing but an absurdity. So far from there being 2,000 passengers a day travelling backwards and forwards, I leave to any hon. gentleman who knows that route whether on the average there will be more than thirty through passengers every day of the year on the two railroads, the extension and the Grand Trunk, combined. Then, the Minister of Railways is simply out in his estimate of 1,800 passengers a day, 1,770 for every day of the year. The hon. gentleman said that they were going to transform a deficit into a surplus of $500,000 a year. Why, he has adduced data in his calculations of the increase of freight and passenger traffic to reduce his phantom surplus of $500,000 to a deficit of between $750,000 and $1,000,000, and, when the road is in operation the logic of facts and experience will show him the enormity of his prophecies and the greivous burdens that he has imposed upon the country.

It is undesirable for another reason. Why, we have already subsidized a line to be built along the southern shore of the St. Lawrence between Quebec and Montreal—a third line parallel to this line. We are bound by law to pay $3,200 per mile for every mile of that road built along the south shore; and yet we are asked, at the same time, to purchase at an enormous cost this line which will compete with the one we are subsidizing, and to place ourselves in the absurd position of aiding and destroying the same undertaking at the same time.

But leaving that aspect of the case, because I do not wish to take up the time of the House, let me proceed to deal with the contract itself. A more absurd contract never was submitted to an assemblage of sane men or men presumably wise for their approval and ratification. This is a strong statement, but I will lay my grounds for that statement before the House. The road will have cost, when the balance of it is built, the sum of $851,379.60 to the company and we are giving for it the sum of $2,000,000. When that road is completed, it will cost the company $850,000 and we are planking down to them $1,150,000 clear profit on that outlay. Whoever heard of such an absurd proposition in connection with an unprofitable local railway? The hon. Minister of Railways may say that is not the case. Well, I propose to work out the calculation, and leave it to the judgment of every hon. gentleman who will follow me whether the result is not what I have stated. In the first place, what are we paying them? We are paying them $64,000 per year. What does that mean? I asked the hon. Minister, during the debate yesterday with reference to the proposal to pay interest to the Grand Trunk at 5 per cent, if the Government could not borrow the money at 3 per cent and pay it over to the Grand Trunk. He gave a very satisfactory reply indeed. He said we could not borrow at 3 and loan to the Grand Trunk Railway, for the simple reason that the security we would obtain from the Grand Trunk for advance is already hypothecated to a very large amount, and the Government would have no security, therefore, for the loan. But in respect of this road, there is no such to answer. We enter into a lease for 99 years at $64,000 per year. In other words, we promise them an annuity of $64,000 per year for 99 years, and the credit of Canada is pledged to that as much as it is to any bond issued by the Finance Minister. What is the significance of this annuity as a consideration for this railway? My hon. friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) said the Grand Trunk Railway Company could not take their lease and raise money upon it, it was so hedged round with conditions which rendered it valueless as a security. That may be so, but in this case the annuity is free from these depreciating conditions. The company can take that annuity and raise money on it as well as on an issue of Government bonds. I leave it to the judgment of this House if they could not take that annuity of $64,000 into the financial market of London or Paris or Berlin and get the money at 3 per cent on the credit of Canada as it stands at present. The computation of the value of this annuity has not been exactly right as made by some hon. gentlemen on this side. It is not exactly correct to see what principal that annuity is the interest upon, and regard that amount as the payment. We must estimate the value of that annuity as limited to 99 years, when making our computation. I acknowledge that it does not represent a capital of $2,133,333, but what does it represent? I have not the tables showing the commuted present worth of an annuity for 99 years, but I have a table given in Whittaker's Almanac for 1897, on page 420, which I have compared with other tables, and I can vouch for its correctness. By that table, an annuity of $100 for 99 years at 3 per cent is worth $3,160. In that case, the net value of the annuity which we are giving this company will be $2,022,400. The table does not give a commutation of a 99 years annuity. Now, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) are both expert financiers and mathematicians, and they will bear me out in saying that, and when I throw off $22,400 for the 100th year, that I am making a generous reduction, one six or seven times more than the real one, and making that allowance, the annuity of $64,000 for 99 years is worth $2,000,000. They can take our lease to-morrow, if signed, and go into the English market, and there on the credit of Canada, as it stands to-day, raise $2,000,000 on that lease. Now, what has this undertaking cost the company? They have only paid out of their own pockets $263,379.60 as yet, but of course they have to complete the road and complete it up to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway. The ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) estimated the cost of completing that road per mile at $14,000. I say that that is a liberal estimate, based upon the facts before the House regarding the portion constructed. This is a fair basis as it does not appear that the construction of the balance will be more expensive than the construction of the portion already constructed. What has the road cost already? Taking the sworn statement given in the Railway Report, in the sheet just immediately before the appendices at the close of the report, we find that the total cost is $1,366,485.60. What deductions have to be met out of that? In the first place, $400,000 of that amount represents the paid up stock given to the promoters of the railway for having promoted it. It is a little solatium to the promoters. Then the rolling stock, which we are not purchasing under this contract, has to be subtracted. What does the rolling stock consist of? Five engines and one passenger car and about twenty-five others. Am I putting its value too high when I say that it cost $50,000? Anybody who knows the cost of engines and cars will agree that that is a very low estimate.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. How many miles are they operating?

Mr. POWELL. Ninety. There is the branch down to Nicolet which we must include. We have, as I have said, $1,366,485.60 as the cost, according to the sworn statement of the company in the railway reports. From that you have to deduct the $400,000 paid up stock given to the promoters and the $50,000 value of rolling stock, or $450,000, which leaves $916,000 as the net balance. That is what the road cost. But who paid that cost? The company got the following subsidies:—

From the Dominion Government..... $287,936
From the Quebec Government—Cash subsidy ..... 300,170

And since that there has been a valuation of the land grant which the Quebec Government gave the company, but which they have bought back, and which amounts to $50,000. Then the municipalities along the line contribute $15,000, so that the total contributions given in aid of the construction of this line amount to $653,106. Out of a total cost of $916,000, they have received subsidies amounting to $653,000. So that the net amount paid by the company for the road is $263,379.

Mr. LAVERGNE. These are stuffed figures.

Mr. POWELL. I would reply to my hon. friend from Drummond, for whom I have very great respect personally and politically, that he must have sufficient keenness of intellect to see that if these figures in that report which the company have sworn to are stuffed, so much the worse showing for the Government in this transaction. There is no stuffing about the subsidies that were given to this company by the municipalities, there is no stuffing about the subsidies given by the province of Quebec and the Dominion, and if the figures respecting the cost of the road are stuffed, that means that the road cost less than is shown by the statement I have given and makes the case very much worse. But, Sir, I have somewhat digressed from the point that I had immediately in view and that in regard to the cost of the construction of the balance of the road. The cost of the railway that has been constructed, I have shown you, was $916,000, and the length of road constructed is 90 miles. So the road costs an average of about $10,000 per mile. Now, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals intimated to this House that this road was in such magnificent condition that it was going to take very little to bring it up to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway. I differ from him, and I will give him the advantage of my calculation, which is a great deal more in his favour. I will say that the road is not nearly up to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway, but that it will cost $4,000—yes, $5,000—per mile, or thereabouts, to bring it up to the standard, and that is equivalent to supposing that to construct the remaining 42 miles of road of the same character will cost $14,000 per mile or $588,000, irrespective of the levelling of the grades which the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals referred to a few days ago, which is too trifling a matter to take into consideration. This amount of $588,000 to complete the road together with the $263,379.60, makes a total expenditure on the part of the company of $851,375, when the road is finally passed over to the Government. Is the case not proved conclusively, that for this road that cost them $851,000, the company is getting $2,000,000, or in other words, over and above the amount expended upon the road we are to give them a present of no less than $1,150,000.

Mr. POWELL.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. What does my hon. friend (Mr. Powell) think it would cost the people of Canada to build an equally long road?

Mr. POWELL. The answer I have to make to the Minister of Trade and Commerce is this: While they might think it a desirable thing to extend the Intercolonial Railway to the city of Montreal, as business men and as a business Government, they must count the cost, and if they find the cost would involve an unjustifiable expenditure, they have no business to construct it at all. But I do not leave the question put by the hon. gentleman there. I will satisfy the hon. gentleman fully and give a complete answer, not an evasive answer. Let us take the total cost of the road. When completed, the total expenditure on the road will have amounted to $1,504,485. The Minister will see that only $916,485.60 from all sources has already been expended, and $588,000 must be expended to complete the road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How do you make out $916,000? You cannot verify that.

Mr. POWELL. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) had followed me he would have heard me verify these figures as I went along. If $916,000 had been spent, and it requires $588,000 to complete the road, the total cost will be $1,504,000. That is what it would cost the Government to build the road, and to avoid the trouble of building a road, you are going to give an annuity representing a capital expenditure of $2,000,000, in other words, you are going to make the company a clean donation of $500,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN. "Clean"?

Mr. POWELL. Well, it may not be clean; but I am not going into the moral features of the transaction. Now, I say that, in the face of these figures, before the third reading of the Bill is passed, we should have facts before us which will justify this measure. We should refuse to pass the third reading, until the hon. Minister shows facts and figures that are not fiction, until he shows really what traffic we may expect, what the figures are of traffic on the Canadian Pacific Railway and how much he anticipates he is going to take away from the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. GIBSON. Who can give that? Who can imagine what traffic one railway will take from another?

Mr. POWELL. Just so. Who can prophesy that? But if this cannot be done, if this is not a legitimate subject for the human mind to attempt to forecast, then this whole scheme is visionary and problematical. So the Minister of Railways and Canals has been attempting to inform us by means of figures, which, according to his own supporter (Mr. Gibson), who is a railway man and should know what he is talking about, is about a matter which no one can forecast. I am going to vote against the third reading of this Bill. That goes without saying expressly. I am not going to vote against it because the road could have been bought for an amount that business considerations would justify, and this contract is a perversion of every business principle that is involved in it. If the Government were anxious to conduct this transaction on a business basis, if they had said to these gentlemen: We propose to extend our line to the city of Montreal and we will build the line as a Government work, but if you choose to give us your road at a fair percentage over and above what it cost you, or for its fair valuation, we will take your line, they would have been able to purchase the road on terms fair and honourable. The owners of this road have no right to anything more than a return of their money and a handsome percentage—and I am willing that they should have that, there should be nothing small about such an arrangement as this—upon what the undertaking cost them, no more, because this road is not a financial success. But when it is proposed to pay $1,150,000 over and above the expenditure upon the road, that is a transaction that cannot be justified and concerning which the wholesome sentiment of this country will be very suspicious indeed as to the motives that prompted the Government to enter into it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Powell) has been discussing this question, I think, from an unobjectionable point of view, and I am willing to assume that he has convinced himself, from the calculations he has presented to the House that this proposal is not a proposal which can be justified or defended in its details. He has pressed his argument upon the assumption that it is a desirable thing, if it can be accomplished, upon fair terms, to continue to extend the Intercolonial Railway into the city of Montreal and make the terminus in that city. But he has set himself to establish to the satisfaction of the House that we have made an improvident arrangement, that we have paid more than we ought to have paid, even accepting the principle of extension into Montreal. As I say, I have no fault to find with the manner in which he has approached the question, but I have every fault to find with the calculations he has presented to the committee, and I think I can show the House how utterly fallacious, how entirely futile are the arguments he has advanced. He has put forward a claim, he has seriously and solemnly put forward a claim, that it was not for us to ascertain what this railway was worth, not what was its actual value, not what it would cost the Government of the country to duplicate it, but that the proper subject for inquiry with us was what money came out of the pockets of the builders in order to construct the work. According to the hon. gentleman we should have entered into an inquiry to find out what bonuses were paid by municipalities, we should ask the provincial governments how much subsidies they gave to the builders of the railways, and we should look into the accounts here to see what was given by way of subsidy by the Government of Canada, and having ascertained these facts, we should add these amounts together and deduct the sum from the total cost of the undertaking.

Now, I want to know if any one ever heard of such a proposition as that being seriously propounded by a responsible individual, and adopted by a responsible government? Is not this the first time within the knowledge of any gentleman present when a government was called upon to do it, and, because it did not do it, was denounced for not having deducted the aid previously given, from the value of the property which, in the public interest, it deemed it proper to acquire, before paying the price to the owner of that property? I say, it is an entirely novel proposition; I say more, it is an indefensible proposition; I say further, that the hon. gentleman will have to find somebody else to administer the Department of Railways and Canals in this Government, at all events, if, in case of a company whose property they think the Government ought to possess, they wish me to call upon that company to hand over to the Government the gifts which it has received by the bounty of municipalities and by governments, or to ask this Government, after it had generously expended a sum out of the treasury of this country for the purpose of assisting that company in promoting the undertaking, to require them to refund that money—I say, they will have to find somebody else to do it.

Mr. POWELL. The hon. gentleman is misrepresenting what I said. I never put forward the argument the hon. gentleman has put into my mouth. What I meant was this, that when the Government of Quebec and the Government of Canada granted subsidies to this line, it was because the undertaking, from a business standpoint, would not pay its way, and it was necessary to aid it, and when the Government is buying it back on a business basis, the subsidies have no right to form a part of the contract price.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is apparent that the hon. gentleman was not correct in saying that I was misrepresenting his statements. But he is seeking to fortify a position which he has taken in this House, along with other hon. gentlemen opposite, in respect to this proposal, a position which is, in my judgment, taken for the first time in the history of this country. Take up the Subsidy Acts which have been passed from the time when subsidies were first given by Parliament, and you will not find, either directly or by implication, any declaration to the effect, that if the Government desired to resume or obtain possession of a property which it had subsidized, the Government should demand that the price should be reduced by the amount of the subsidy which the company had received. I say therefore that on principle, entirely distinct from precedents, of which there are none, the proposition is indefensible and cannot be sustained. No kind of logic-chopping, in which hon. gentlemen opposite are fond of indulging, can justify this proposition. Now, if it is not the first time in which such an idea has been put forward, I apprehend that there must have been previous cases in which it could have been put forward. I apprehend the Statute-book of this country and the Appropriation Acts of Parliament must have been full of instances, for if it were a proper thing, and these gentlemen insist that it is a proper thing, and they condemn us because we do not do it—if it was a proper thing, I apprehend that there must have been, in the lifetime of the Government of which the ex-Finance Minister was a leading member, cases when they could have applied this proper and necessary principle, and when, if there was any justification for it, they would have applied it to the cases that they were dealing with.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the hon. gentleman name an instance?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will name a striking instance. I will name an instance which the hon. member can take home to his friends and ex-colleagues, and which the leader of his party will recognize as having a strong application to the present case. I will not go outside the dealings of the Government with the Grand Trunk Railway Company. I will carry my hon. friend back to the railway between Rivière du Loup and Lévis which was acquired by the Government, and what do we find? I find there that a railway was bought by hon. gentlemen opposite and they paid for it a million and a half of money, they paid $12,000 a mile for every mile of that railway which they acquired.

Mr. POWELL.

And what kind of a railway was it? I am not going to speak from any personal knowledge of my own, but I am going to tell the House what kind of a railway it was and the condition it was in, according to a statement made by the hon. gentleman who now leads the Opposition and who, when he was asking Parliament to authorize the purchase of that road, said in effect: "There are 125 miles, and we propose to give \$1,500,000 for that railway. But I am buying simply an embankment. I am simply buying a track, I am simply buying a roadbed, I am buying it from the company because they have allowed it to run down, and it is now in an inferior condition. I am not even getting the rails, I am handing the rails over to the company from which I am buying this road. I am simply getting the roadbed, but in a demoralized condition, in an inferior condition, because it has become depreciated by reason of the fact that the Grand Trunk Railway Company have not kept it up to the proper standard. I am taking it from them and I am giving them \$12,000 a mile for it." Now, let me give my hon. friend the benefit of the application. When they were paying \$1,500,000 for a railway which was in this inferior condition, which was only an embankment, did they propose to take back from the Grand Trunk Railway Company the \$10,000 a mile which the company had received as a bonus from the Government of Canada? Not a bit of it. You never heard a whisper of it, no man on the other side of the House ever suggested that we should exact from the Grand Trunk Railway company a refund of the aid which they had received from the Government. It was not a paltry sum, it was not this smaller sum of \$287,000 they had received from the Government that was in question, but it was one and a quarter million dollars which had been given to the Grand Trunk Railway Company on that 125 miles; and the Government were buying that back again without a hint or a suggestion that the money should be returned to them by that company. Why cannot they discuss a question of this kind in a fair way? Why can't they present us with facts instead of fancy? Why can't they deal with the conduct of the Government in this transaction in the same way that they would deal with an individual in a similar action? Why is it necessary for these gentlemen, for their political purposes, to asperse the integrity and character of the men who have made this transaction, and whose character stands infinitely higher than the character of some of their aspersers? Now, so much on this question of the refund of the amount which was given to this company. The basis of this whole question is "What was the value of this piece of property?—not who got the money, not who was benefited by the gift, not who were the benficiaries of somebody's generosity, not even who stole the money, if you wish, but, What is the value of that property? I can understand these gentlemen saying that in the position of the railway it is not wise to seek a terminus in the city of Montreal. I can understand them taking a position of that kind, and in saying that there was no reason founded on the public interest why the Intercolonial should be extended to that city. But once that principle is conceded, once the argument passes away from the question of policy and we come down to details, I take my stand on the ground that the question we have to consider is the value of the property that we are acquiring, and what means we ought to take to ascertain the value of that property. I do not know what it cost to build the railway. I do not know what the value of a private railway is, and that is not a matter for the members of the Government to inquire into. I do not know what the value of a mile of railway is and nobody expects me or the other members of this Government to know. What they do expect is that we shall look to the men who are employed by the Government who have large experience, who know what it costs for railways and who are there for the purpose of advising us in that particular. I take it that these gentlemen, who have for all these years been filling responsible positions in the service of the Government, are trustworthy and reliable men. I take it that they are men who are competent to advise us. And the Government, so far as I and my colleagues are concerned, relied upon their judgment that that road was worth \$1,600,000. If the country and hon. gentlemen opposite are going to condemn the Government for doing this it will be impossible for men in the responsible places that we occupy to discharge their duty. We have got to rely upon this information and this judgment upon questions which are of technical character and upon questions which we could not possibly be expected to have technical knowledge. Upon the assumption that the property is worth \$1,600,000 did we pay an unreasonable price? When we agreed to give them \$64,000 a year did we make an improvident arrangement? I think we did not. I think that in agreeing to pay this company \$64,000 a year we did not do any more than agree to pay them a sum which would enable them in the years to come to wipe out the principal of the debt or to extinguish the amount corresponding with the value of the property. We were not simply paying a rental in the ordinary sense; we were buying it, year by year making a payment on account of the purchase of the property which will ultimately be our own. This is not a lease under which at the end of 99 years we will have to go on paying a rental upon the property, but when the last hour of the last day of the last year of that 99 years comes the property is the absolute, free and unencumbered property of the people of Canada. How much is it fair to take out of the \$64,000 a year towards the purchase money as payment for the property which we are buying. The hon. gentleman for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) knows how the money market would respond to the demand of the Drummond County Railway Company in case they applied to them as they would have to do. The hon. gentleman who is thoroughly informed upon that tells us that they could without difficulty have gone to the London market with this arrangement and have obtained \$2,000,000 at 3 per cent a year. That is the assurance of the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman may perhaps have conducted large transactions in the money market. He may be thoroughly familiar with all the pros and cons, the possibilities and conditions, but there is the possibility that he may not, and, Mr. Speaker, if we were to have insisted upon this transaction being based on the assumption and calculations of the hon. gentleman, the railway could not have been purchased or acquired at all. These people told us that they could not go into the English market and with this rental guarantee for these years finance at the rate of 3 per cent per annum. I agreed, and my colleagues agreed, that it was absurd to expect that they could finance the property of the company upon the basis of the assumed rental even though the guarantor of that rental were no less a responsible party than the Government of Canada. We assumed that the cost would be 3½ per cent at the least, taking one thing with another the charges, &c., to enable them to recover the value of their property. If they are right—and who can show us that they are not right—upon what ground can you denounce this proposition. This 3½ per cent would be a reasonable interest. Who will contend that the Government has a right to negotiate with parties whose property they are seeking to acquire on a basis which leaves all the doubt in favour of the Government and against the other party to the contract. I do not think the ex-Minister of Finance during his Government experience found himself dealing in that manner in the transactions in which his Government were concerned. I do not think that has been a trait of the late Government and I do not know that I would complain if they had not done it. You have to deal in a spirit of fair-play with those with whom you are negotiating. They said "it will cost us 3½ per cent taking everything into account if we are to get the value of our property out of the transaction. If this is to be cut down we cannot do it. We cannot consent to any less rate than 3½ per cent upon the value of that property." Then if you take 3½ per cent which is guaranteed to produce \$1,600,000 you have only  $\frac{1}{2}$  per cent remaining out of which to pay the \$1,600,000 at the expiration of the 99 year term. I say if the hon. gentlemen were actuaries or went into a calculation with the utmost minuteness they would find that \$8,000 a year would not be more than sufficient to pay \$1,600,000 in 99 years. That is not all. Mr. Speaker, Hon. gentlemen have criticised this transaction upon a further ground. They say we pay too much rental to the Grand Trunk Railway Company for the use of the privileges that we get. They say it is absurd that we should pay \$40,000 a year fixed rental, for instance for the privilege upon the bridge. What I have to say to the House in respect to that transaction will have general application to all the rest. What is the situation in regard to acquiring the right over this bridge? There are two ways in which we could have acquired this right. We could have agreed to pay a fixed rental, which we did, or we could have decided to pay so much per car for every car hauled over the bridge. Hon. gentlemen will agree with me that it was a more prudent business arrangement to agree upon a fixed rental as we have done. A charge is made for all traffic crossing the Grand Trunk bridge, varying from an ordinary freight car up to a locomotive. The charge for a locomotive is something like \$10 every time it crosses the bridge. This is the amount paid by the Central Vermont Railway for that privilege. The charges made for a first-class car, vary from \$5 to \$3 which is the lowest rate paid by any company who are allowed to use the Grand Trunk Railway bridge, so that the range is from \$3 to \$10. We found that if we only ran one train into Montreal in the morning and one in the evening, as we are now running into Lévis, and the same going out, the fixed rental for a year would amount to \$30,000. I do not carry the figures in my mind, but it is something in the neighbourhood of from \$25,000 to \$30,000 a year. Will anybody say that it is not a more prudent arrangement to have a fixed rental which cannot be exceeded no matter how many cars run over the road, than to feel that it was a question for consideration every time you picked up a passenger or had freight carried on your train, whether or not you were going to pay for the use of the bridge, and to pay the other charges incidental to carrying over the road and into the terminus. We concluded that this fixed arrangement was best, and we considered that if our expectations were anything like realized, we would be in a large amount of money within a short time, by having a well understood and permanent arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway. That was the conclusion we arrived at. We arrived at it bona fide; we arrived at it in the exercise of our best judgment, and I am convinced that we came to a prudent business conclusion in the matter. The hon. gentleman from Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) seems to be startled by the figures which have been presented to me by the Deputy Minister of Railways and the general manager of the Intercolonial at Moncton. To a person who does not understand the details, these figures look to be very considerable, but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Powell) is quite in error if he assumes that when Mr. Schreiber gave me that statement, he did so professing to give a statement, or even an estimate, of the number of persons who were going to travel over the whole railway from Halifax to Montreal. I did not understand it to mean any such thing.

Mr. POWELL. Neither did I.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If I heard the Grand Trunk state (as I believe they do) that they carried out of Montreal down to Ste. Hyacinthe in the neighbourhood of three-quarters of a million people in the year, I would not understand it to mean that they carried those three-quarters of a million all that distance there and back. I would understand them to mean that they pick up and drop down along that line that many people. Now, with the Grand Trunk Railway Company carrying three-quarters of a million people on this section of their railway, and we are running our trains in and out on that railway, we ought to be able to pick up a portion of that traffic. I think it will not be an unreasonable conclusion to come to, that we may perhaps get one-quarter or one-third of the whole number; perhaps not so many, but that is a matter of estimate. But when you get 250,000 people that you are taking out for a part of the way, or the whole of the way, over that section from Ste. Rosalie to Montreal, you are disposing of a very large percentage of the estimated increased passenger traffic which my deputy put in my hand. Then, you have got all the other portion of the road to take into account. Now, whether it is right or whether it is wrong, and whether these calculations have been exaggerated or not, I cannot say. They are the calculations which the responsible officers have given to me, and I am not influenced by any desire to misstate, misrepresent or exaggerate the probabilities with regard to it. They have been put in the possession of the House, exactly as I received them, and I think they are entitled to some weight, coming from the quarter whence they do. At all events, they are entitled to greater weight than would attach to the statement of my hon. friend (Mr. Powell) who does not himself pretend to have had any very great railway experience. So much for that.

We have heard a great deal throughout this discussion about the subject of adding to the public debt, and we are told that the addition aggregates seven or eight millions. I have emphasized my condemnation of that argument as strongly as I could. Perhaps I am unable to see the force of the view which the hon. gentleman presents, but I confess at once that I cannot see how a gentleman who professed to give a business criticism to a proposition which is laid before Parliament, can indulge in such a class of comment as that which those gentlemen have indulged in. It is surely intended for some other atmosphere than the atmosphere of an intelligent Parliament. It is surely designed to reach the understanding of some people who are infinitely less capable of judging the weight of argument than are the members who sit around these boards. I take it, Mr. Speaker, that no one better understands than the two hon. gentlemen who have presented this argument to the House, that it is a perfect perversion of terms, and that it is an idle argument to say that we are adding to the public debt. If we are adding to the public debt, where is the evidence of it? We must owe the seven or eight millions, and if we owe it, when are we going to pay it? I would like some one to tell me when this debt of seven or eight millions which it is said we are now assuming, is going to mature? When are you going to have the bills presented? Will some one kindly tell me that? I concede it would be fair, if these gentlemen should say: You are adding to the annual charges. That is a fair way of stating the proposition, and I would at once yield to it. Let us approach the discussion of these things with some fair and reasonable idea. I tell my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) that he will gain nothing by these frivolous means which he sometimes resorts to of clouding and confusing public questions. There is nothing gained by that in the long run. He does not elevate the estimation in which he is held in this House, nor does he improve the opinion of him generally entertained in the country by such tactics. The people know that it is idle to say, that because the Government came to the conclusion that it would augment a property which cost us over 50 million dollars, to extend it to the great metropolis of Montreal, and when to do that we concluded that we would pay the rental which was necessary; the people of the country, I say, know that we are not adding to the public debt. They know that it is a business transaction. We are taking a business risk in this. You cannot, by any mathematical demonstration, establish that this undertaking is going to pay, but you can judge of the probabilities. That we have done, and we think we will be able to more than pay back the rental which we assume, and we believe that in assuming this responsibility, we are only assuming an annual charge which will be absolutely covered by the results of the transaction when it gets into full operation. We will not add to the public debt. It is a perversion of language, it is an unfair and an unwarranted attempt to mislead the people who do not understand the question, and who will perhaps be willing to accept the wild statements of their political leaders and friends. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think I have about covered all the observations which have been addressed to the House, at all events this morning, on this question. I make no reference whatever to what has been said by the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart). I sympathize with the indignant terms in which my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) referred to his conduct.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, you do.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do, and I say further, that I would be ashamed of being guilty of the conduct which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) said it was my duty as a responsible Minister of the Crown to have pursued in this matter.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, no.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. The hon. gentleman may not appreciate it, but as some one has suggested, the course which that gentleman (Mr. Haggart) insisted I should have taken, would have been more worthy of a card sharper than it would be of a Minister of the Crown. If the Government of this country never make any greater mistake than they have made in avoiding such a line of conduct as the hon. gentleman has advocated, I think we shall for a long time occupy the Treasury benches.

Mr. FOSTER. I am very averse to prolonging this discussion. I did intend to reply to my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) who has just taken his seat. I watched very closely from the moment he rose until he sat down to see how he would manage the argument of my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Powell). I am quite willing to leave that argument, which was presented so clearly and lucidly by my hon. friend, alongside the reply of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, and let the two go to the country together. I had intended to make a brief résumé of the question as a reply to the hon. Minister; but I do not think it is necessary. I merely wish to speak of one point. The hon. gentleman has been good enough to say that it was deception and worse to leave the people of Canada to think that when a fixed charge of $210,000 per year was saddled on the country for ninety-nine years, it was equivalent to an addition to the public debt of $7,000,000 at the rate of 3 per cent. I am willing to leave that. I do not think any person on this side of the House ever said it was an addition to the public debt of $7,000,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, you said $8,000,000.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend can point out where I said $8,000,000—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You spoke of that side of the House. I do not know that the hon. gentleman himself said it.

Mr. FOSTER. Does it matter whether any one said it? Whether it was $7,000,000 or $8,000,000, I understand that the argument of the hon. Minister was that it was deceiving the people to say that it was equivalent to an addition to the public debt of that amount. My hon. friend has added $210,000 to the annual fixed charges of this country for ninety-nine years. My hon. friend knows that that money has to be paid. Is there any doubt about that? It is a fixed charge. It is not a charge which he may pay this year and get out of paying another year; it is a charge which he has to pay just as inevitably as the year comes round. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman tries to justify himself on this ground, that there is a possibility that more than that will come to the Government as a return from the operation of the railway. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) told him to his face that that was simply in the region of prophecy, and that no man could say whether it would be realized or not. While the fixed charge of $210,000 is as certain as the year rolls round, the question whether you will get an equivalent in business profits, over and above maintenance and the cost of operating, is entirely experimental and unknown. So I say that by adding $210,000 to the annual fixed charges of the country, you have done what is equivalent to going into the market and adding $7,000,000 to the debt of the country at 3 per cent. The hon. gentleman wants to know when the bill will be presented. I will tell him when: every year in his lifetime, to the expiration of the ninety-nine years, and then probably on and on again. The bill is presented in the form of an annual demand for interest, demanded by the letter of the agreement, and is irrevocably to be paid, whether there is a dollar of revenue or a deficit upon the operating and maintenance expenses. So much with reference to that. Now, the virtuous indignation of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) this morning did me good; it was as good as a tonic. The hon. gentleman wanted to know if the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) had any conscientious convictions. Nobody will hereafter ask the hon. member for North Wellington that question, when they contrast the position he took on this side of the House, when he was always for the country, with the position he takes on that side of the House, when he is always for the company or the corporation. My hon. friend had better not raise the question of conscientious convictions. But I will tell you what the Minister of Railways and Canals had no business to do. He had no business to engage the credit of this country in order to pay for a railway anything more at the most than a fair profit to the gentlemen who are interested in it, over and above its actual cost of construction.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have not done so.

Mr. FOSTER. The sworn statement of that railway company is that the whole cost of that road, made up on their basis, was $1,500,000 or thereabouts.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. And that was before the building of the 43 miles, which were to cost $600,000 more.

Mr. FOSTER. I say the sworn statement of that company was that the cost, made up on their basis, was $1,500,000. The Minister's statement here was that the road could be built for $1,600,000. I say that it is as plain as can be, and my hon. friend cannot deny it, that in the making up of that cost there went not only the subsidies from the Dominion and local Governments and the municipalities, but also the promoter's stock of $400,000, which everybody knows cost the company not one cent. I challenge my hon. friend to deny this by investigation if he can—that the three gentlemen who own the interest in that road to-day—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will tell the hon. gentleman what I will deny. I will deny that the hon. gentleman is now stating a fact which appears in any record of the Department of Railways and Canals.

Mr. FOSTER. What statement?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The statement that the outlay on the road includes the stock of the promoters, which is a gift of stock to the promoters. The returns do not show anything of the kind.

Mr. FOSTER. The return includes the stock.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The cost of the road is stated in the returns, which give the various items of cost—the money paid for the construction of the road; and under such circumstances it is remarkable to me how the hon. gentleman can imagine that the question of stock could be introduced into that side of the account at all.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend give the items of the $1,500,000?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can, I presume. I have not studied them; but I venture to affirm that from one end of the account to the other, which profess to show what was laid out on this railway, there is no reference to the stock as a contribution. That would go on the credit side of their accounts if they were presenting them to the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the admission of my hon. friend is quite sufficient without my carrying it any further. I will challenge my hon. friend to make an investigation before any committee he chooses, and find out whether that company, consisting at present of three influential persons, owning I think the whole of it, put one single dollar of their own money into this railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not care if they stole it.

Mr. FOSTER. Or whether anything went into it except the subsidies which they got, or the proceeds of their stock measured by the amount of the advances they got upon it. My hon. friend may rest assured that if he has the mind to face an investigation with reference to this matter, it can be shown that he has paid, over and above everything they have put into the railway, a sum pretty close to $750,000, which will be divided among these gentlemen. Now, my hon. friend tried to justify his assumption that 630,000 more passengers would be carried. If that was given to this committee for any purpose at all, it was intended to prove that by the extension of the road into Montreal that extra number of passengers would be carried, and not simply that in the course of the gradual increase of the traffic between Sussex and St. John and Moncton and St. John and Halifax and the way stations all through, there would be an increase of 630,000 passengers. It is intended to mean that that increase would be due to the road getting into Montreal, and due to that alone. The same remark applies to his expected increase of traffic. The hon. gentleman did not attempt to meet the argument of my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Powell) on those points, and I leave his assertions and my hon. friend's argument to go side by side to the country, and let time test which of the two is sound. My hon. friend's argument is based upon the actual trade, but the hon. gentleman's assertions are simply given out as a prophecy which he himself has no ground to believe will ever be realized. As I have said, I am adverse to discussing the thing further, and I therefore move in amendment :

That this Bill be, not now read the third time, but that it be read the third time this day six months.

Amendment negatived on division.

Bill read third time and passed.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

The Tariff resolutions adopted in Committee of Ways and Means on the 18th inst., were reported, and read the second time.

CUSTOMS ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No.

143) to consolidate and amend the Act respecting the duties of customs.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first and second time, considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

WAYS AND MEANS—INLAND REVENUE.

The House resolved itself into Committee on certain resolutions respecting the Inland Revenue.

(In the Committee.)

The following resolutions were adopted :—

1. Resolved,—That it is expedient to amend section 130, of chap. 34, of the Act 49 Victoria (the Inland Revenue Act), as amended by section 1, of chap. 25, of the Act 59 Victoria, by repealing such section and substituting in lieu thereof as follows :—

There shall be imposed, levied and collected on all spirits distilled the following duties of excise, which shall be paid to the collector of inland revenue as herein provided, that is to say :—

(a.) When the material used in the manufacture thereof consists of not less than ninety per cent, by weight, of raw or unmalted grain—on every gallon of the strength of proof by Sykes's hydrometer, and so in proportion for any greater or less strength than the strength of proof, and for any less quantity than a gallon, one dollar and ninety cents.

(b.) When manufactured exclusively from malted barley, taken to the distillery in bond and on which no duty of customs or excise has been paid, or when manufactured from raw or unmalted grain, used in combination, in such proportions as the Department of Inland Revenue prescribe, with malted barley taken to the distillery in bond and on which no duty of customs or of excise has been paid—on every gallon of the strength of proof by Sykes's hydrometer, and so in proportion for any greater or less strength, and for any less quantity than a gallon, one dollar and ninety-two cents.

(c.) When manufactured exclusively from molasses, syrup, sugar, or other saccharine matter, taken to the distillery in bond, and on which no duty of customs has been paid—on every gallon of the strength of proof by Sykes's hydrometer, and so in proportion for any greater or less strength, and for any less quantity than a gallon, one dollar and ninety-three cents.

2. Resolved,—That it is expedient to repeal so much of the Inland Revenue Act and amending Acts as determine the excise duty on vinegar, and to provide that the excise duties thereon and upon acetic acid, shall be as follows :—

Vinegar, manufactured in whole or in part from spirits in bond, four cents per proof gallon.

Acetic acid, produced by the destructive distillation of wood, four cents per proof gallon.

Provided, that the Governor General in Council may establish regulations exempting acetic acid from excise duty in whole or in part, when used in the mechanical arts.

3. Resolved,—That it is expedient that a license fee of $50 be collected in each fiscal year from every manufacturer of acetic acid.

4. Resolved,—That it is expedient to so amend the said Act and the Acts in amendment thereto as to provide that the excise duty to be levied upon cigarettes shall be as follows :—

On cigarettes, made solely from domestic leaf tobacco, weighing not more than three pounds per thousand, one dollar and fifty cents per thousand.

On cigarettes, the product solely of foreign leaf tobacco, weighing not more than three pounds per thousand, three dollars per thousand.

On cigarettes, whether the product of foreign or of domestic leaf tobacco, weighing more than three pounds per thousand, eight dollars per thousand.

5. Resolved,—That it is expedient to provide that in addition to the excise duty at present levied on manufactured tobacco, cigars, and as herein determined in respect of cigarettes, there shall be levied and collected the following excise duties, that is to say:—

(a.) On all foreign raw leaf tobacco, unstemmed, taken out of warehouse for manufacture in any cigar or tobacco manufactory, ten cents per pound.

(b.) On all foreign raw leaf tobacco, stemmed, taken out of warehouse for manufacture in any cigar or tobacco manufactory, fourteen cents per pound.

The above duties on foreign raw leaf tobacco shall be exigible in respect of all such tobacco in excise warehouse on the 23rd day of April, 1897, or transferred thereto, free of customs duty prior to 1st July, 1897.

Tobacco removed from warehouse prior to the said 23rd of April, contrary to the regulations of the Inland Revenue Department, shall be subject to duty under this section.

6. Resolved,—That it is expedient to provide that a license fee of $65.00 be collected in each fiscal year from every manufacturer of tobacco, cigars or cigarettes, licensed to use foreign and domestic leaf tobacco in combination.

7. Resolved,—That it is expedient to so amend the Inland Revenue Act, and the Acts in amendment thereof, as to empower the Governor in Council to make regulations:

(a.) For the manufacture of tobacco, cigars and cigarettes, from foreign and domestic leaf in combination,—and for determining the proportion of each that shall be used and the duty that shall be payable thereon, having regard as nearly as possible to the proportion of foreign and domestic leaf used,—and for determining what proportion of such duties shall be levied upon the foreign leaf taken for use, and what proportion upon the resultant finished product provided that the aggregate duties of excise so imposed shall not exceed those fixed from time to time with respect to tobacco, cigars and cigarettes, and

(b.) To determine the time and manner of payment of the duties on foreign leaf taken for use in any tobacco or cigar manufactories.

8. Resolved,—That it is expedient to provide that the excise duties hereby fixed and determined shall be held to have come into force and effect on and after the 23rd day of April, 1897.

Resolutions reported, and read the second time.

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 144) to amend the Inland Revenue Act.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first and second time, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 8,

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I wish to make an amendment to this clause. We have discovered that a frequent source of fraud on the revenue is the abuse of the privilege which people have to make ale for their own use or for the use of their families, which the law allows them to do. But in order to begin the manufacture of ale and beer, you follow for a certain time the same process that you do in distilling spirits, that is to say, you must cook the grain and make the mash. It is only after this mash is produced that these two proceedings, that of brewing it into ale and that of converting it into spirits, begin to branch off the one from the other. Now, we find that people abuse the permission that is given them by law in making beer for themselves to convert it into spirits. At first it was proposed to abolish the privilege of malting beer for private use. As the law is now before you it would actually have deprived any one of the privilege of malting beer for himself and his family. We thought it would cause too much of a hardship to do that, and so we endeavour to provide as much as possible against any attempt to defraud the revenue. I would therefore ask that clause 8 be replaced by the following clause, which I will read. It is exactly the same clause as the one that has always existed up to this time, and which allowed the manufacture of beer for private use, but, in order to keep track of that operation we want to add the following words:—
 Sir HENRI JOLY DE LOTBINIERE.

Provided, that due notice of the possession thereof, and of his intention of using them for the above mentioned purpose, be given to the nearest collector of inland revenue, or to the Department of Inland Revenue at Ottawa.

We want to be able to keep track of this; and, under the increased taxes on the manufacture of spirits, we think the temptation of defrauding the revenue will increase, and we do not want to leave any loophole to people who, under pretense of manufacturing ale for private use, may manufacture spirits. We want to watch them in case there should be any attempt to do so, and we want them to report their names and their intention, either to the nearest collector of inland revenue or to the department.

Mr. HAGGART. Do you allow a private individual to malt grain for the purpose of manufacturing ale?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. The law allows people to brew their own ale. We thought, at first, of abolishing it completely, because it gives rise to abuses; but we could not help thinking that there were many people who, in imitation of what they have been doing in the old country, like to brew their own beer. We thought that to abolish that privilege completely would be considered a hardship, and so we still allow them that privilege, but we surround it with precautions that have not been taken heretofore.

Mr. HAGGART. I can understand the hon. gentleman allowing people to brew beer, but not to make malt. We do not allow any private individual to make malt. In the old country, special legislation is required to malt grain to feed the cattle.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. We do not allow them to make malt; we merely allow them to make the mash, under the law that has existed for many years. They are allowed to cook their grain and make their mash, but we have found that it gives rise to great abuse, as it is the beginning of the two operations of brewing and distilling. So, instead of abolishing the privilege, we surround it with such restrictions as will allow us to watch over the exercise of the right that has been enjoyed for many years. And to follow out the sequence of what we have done, I ask that section 9 be struck off and that the following be substituted therefor:—

Every person who, without having a license under this Act then in force brews any beer or other fermented liquor, except for the use of himself or family, as by this Act provided, is guilty of a misdemeanour, and should, for the first offence, incur a penalty of fifty dollars, and for each subsequent offence, a penalty of two hundred dollars.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

EXPORT DUTY ON LOGS.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on the following resolutions:—

1. Resolved,—That it is expedient to enact that if any country imposes now or hereafter a duty upon the articles enumerated in item 577 in Schedule "B" to an Act of the present session, intituled: "An Act to consolidate and amend the Acts respecting the Duties of Customs," or upon any of such articles when imported into such country from Canada, the Governor in Council may, by proclamation published in the "Canada Gazette," declare the following export duties, or any of them, chargeable upon logs and pulp-wood exported from Canada to such country, that is to say: On pine, Douglas fir, spruce, fir, balsam, cedar, and hemlock logs, and pulp-wood, an export duty not exceeding three dollars per thousand feet, board measure; and in case of the export of any of the above mentioned logs or pulp-wood in shorter lengths than nine feet, then a rate per cord may be levied in the same way, not greater than the equivalent of the above mentioned rate per thousand feet, board measure; and such export duty shall be chargeable accordingly after the publication of such proclamation: Provided that the Governor in Council may, by proclamation published in like manner, from time to time remove and reimpose such export duty.

2. Resolved,—That it is expedient to enact that the Governor in Council may, by proclamation published in the "Canada Gazette," impose export duties as under upon the following ores and metals, and each such duty shall be chargeable accordingly after the publication of such proclamation.

Provided always that the Governor in Council may, by proclamation published in like manner, from time to time remove and re-impose such export duties:—

(a.) On nickel contained in matte, or in the ore, or in any crude or partially manufactured state, and upon copper contained in any matte or ore which also contains nickel—when exported from Canada—upon such nickel an export duty not exceeding ten cents per pound; and upon such copper an export duty not exceeding two cents per pound.

(b.) On ores which contain copper, or any metal other than nickel or lead, when exported from Canada, an export duty not exceeding fifteen per cent on the value of the said ores.

(c.) On lead ores, and on lead and silver ores, when exported from Canada to a country which imposes an import duty on lead in bars or in the form of pig lead in excess of the import duty on lead contained in lead ores or in lead and silver ores—an export duty on the lead contained in the ores so exported from Canada to an amount per pound equivalent to such excess.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask whether it would be possible for the House to take up the Crow's Nest Pass and put it through. My idea would be to get that matter before the Senate as quickly as possible. The matter of export duties is likely to be more of a routine one, but the Crow's Nest question may cause some discussion.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). The export duties will not take very long, and therefore we will take up that question.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the House into committee on certain resolutions respecting export duties.

Mr. SPROULE. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on this question, which has been before the House for a long time. Some eight or ten years ago I endeavoured as much as I was able, to induce the Government to put an export duty on logs. The injury that was being done to our forests in the province of Ontario who ought to have the employment which the raw material of the country afforded them, was so great, and the destruction of timber so extensive that we thought there should be an export duty on logs. I brought the subject to the attention of the Government of the day. A few members from our province supported the proposition, and one or two from the maritime provinces, but our efforts were ineffective so far as we were able to induce the Government to do anything to meet the situation. There are two ways by which we might accomplish the object sought by the imposition of export duties. One was by regulations made by the provincial government when they come to sell the timber limits of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. I have always thought that the proper means to take for the protection of the labourers of our country and the protection of our forests was to impose such a condition upon the purchasers of our forests as would necessitate their cutting the lumber in the country or manufacturing it, as far as possible, so as to give employment to the labour of our country and to preserve its assets. That could be done by the provincial government of Quebec and Ontario in neither of which provinces it was done. We were unable to press this with sufficient strength upon the Ontario Government to induce them to do it, and year by year, as the financial necessities of the Government required it, large areas of our timber were put up for sale and in almost every instance they were bought by Americans. They brought in their own labour and supplies to the disadvantage of our people. This has been going on year by year, and it is estimated that they have taken out enough logs to make 250,000,000 feet of lumber a year for several years past. A few years ago it seemed as if we were about to succeed in convincing the Government of the wisdom of reimposing the export duty, but just at that time the Wilson Bill was introduced and by the efforts of some parties we succeeded in getting the duty taken off Canadian lumber going into the United States which, before that time, was $2 a thousand. In my opinion, although we got that duty taken off, the interest of this country in its timber demanded that an export duty should have been put on logs. We could not succeed in getting the provincial government to make such provisions in the regulations as would compel the purchasers of our timber to cut it in the country.

Mr. CASGRAIN. They did it in Quebec, and it was held to be unconstitutional.

Mr. SPROULE. If that be the case, it seems to me that it shows a greater necessity for this House availing itself of the power that it undoubtedly has to put an export duty on logs. It has gone on up to the present time, and we secured the very doubtful advantage for a few years of sending our pine lumber into the United States free of duty. There is now a new Administration in the United States, and they have framed a new tariff Bill, which reimposes the two dollars a thousand upon our white pine. I hope I will not do any injustice to any hon. member of this House when I say that it has always been the opinion of a great many people in this country that the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) was instrumental in inducing the members of the United States Senate to put a provision in their Tariff Bill which would bring in force a large duty on lumber imported from Canada, in the event of Canada imposing an export duty on logs. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton), almost as much as admitted it on the floor of this House, when he said he was entitled to credit if he could influence them so far as to get a reduction of duties on Canadian lumber. But in getting that reduction he had it accompanied with provisions that in the event of the Government of any country imposing an export duty on logs, the import duty on lumber would be raised to a high figure. That provision is accentuated in the present United States Tariff Bill, and I do not know how far the hon. member (Mr. Charlton) has been instrumental in accomplishing it. Even in consideration of that threat from the United States, we should not be deterred from doing our duty here. We are looking after the interests of the Canadian people, and it is our duty in the best interests of the country, to conserve our forest wealth for our own people. I am glad that the day has come, even though it should be under the present Government, that the members of this House are sufficiently convinced that it is in the interests of the country that the export duties should be reimposed on logs. I congratulate the present Government upon the wisdom which they are displaying in this matter. I congratulate them that in this respect they are working in the interests of Canada, and especially in the interests of the province of Ontario, one of whose representatives I am. Year after year I have regretted that I was not able to convince our own Government when in power that it was in the interests of Canada to take this course. So far as my influence goes, I shall support the present Government as strongly as I know how in the effort they are making, and the course they are taking with regard to these export duties on logs. Now, in my judgment elm logs should not be included.

Mr. SPROULE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We intend to ask that the clause be amended in that respect.

Mr. SPROULE. That being the case, I need not refer to it further than to say that there is a great deal of difference between the two classes of timber. I am pleased to find that the Government seriously contemplate putting an export duty on logs and pulp-wood. I believe it will do a great deal of good to the country, and that it will conserve the forests which nature has bestowed on us, and which under existing circumstances must in a short time be destroyed. The imposition of this export duty will give employment to our people at home, furnish a large home market for the consumption of the products of the farmers, and in every way be in the interests of Canada, and especially in the interests of Ontario.

Mr. FOSTER. So far as the export duty on logs is concerned, I shall support the proposals of the Government. The circumstances of the lumber trade and the effect of the United States duties on it are within the knowledge of this House. With reference to that export duty I have no criticism to make, but simply to say, that under the circumstances as they exist to-day, I believe it is our duty to take such a step.

But when we come to the question of ores, we approach a subject which this House ought to be very careful in dealing with, even to the extent of putting it in the power of the Government, and thereby holding out a threat if you may so call it, or a menace, or even an intimation, that at any time this Government may bring these export duties into play. I am now speaking less with reference to nickel ores. They lie here close to us, and we are pretty well acquainted with that phase of the question, and there are certain facts with reference to nickel at the present time which makes the Canadian position a pretty strong and well assured one. What I do want to call the attention of the Government to is, what they propose to do with reference to ores containing copper and silver and gold and lead. It is proposed to take power to put an export duty on all of these precious metals in the ore condition. I want to ask the House and the Government whether they have made themselves thoroughly familiar with the conditions of that matter, or whether they have not? Have they personally visited that section of the country and talked not only with the men who invest their money in smelters, but talked with the men who invest their money in mines. For one man who invests his money in a smelter, there will be 10,000 men who will invest their money in mines; and for one labourer who will be engaged in smelters there are thousands of labourers who will be engaged in mines. This is a question which must be looked at in that dual condition. I have visited that country. When I went there, I had, as naturally a Canadian should, only one idea, which was that we should do the smelting within our own country; just the same as we should do the sawing and manufacturing of this lumber within our own country. But I was not long in talking with men who knew a thousand times more about that matter than I did, until I found there was another side to that question, and that side is a very serious one. In the first place, do we know what we are doing, when we say we are going to put an export duty of 15 per cent upon all ores carrying gold and silver. Take what you call the dry ore belt, or the dry ore in that belt which covers a large extent of territory in the Slocan district, and which runs all through eastern Kootenay as well as other quarters; and what do you find? You have in the ingredients of these ores copper, gold and silver; a smaller or a larger percentage of copper, a smaller or a larger percentage of gold, and generally a pretty large percentage of silver. You have ores in the dry belt which run anywhere from $40 or $50 up to $100 or $130 in value. There is actually but one or two places in Canada where these ores can be smelted, and these about exhaust the number. They may be smelted at the

Heinze smelter, and I have heard that later they are smelting these, for custom work, at the Hall mines smelter at Nelson. But outside of this, these are the only places in the whole district where you can get this smelting done. To-day the miner, when he gets his ore out, has the range of the whole smelter market in the United States and Canada. He can have the benefits that come from competition in that which is altogether a technical business, and which requires very large capital in the first place, and in the second place is fraught with great possibilities of loss or gain to the miner, who is dependent on the smelter returns for his profits. The moment you put on this export duty, that moment you place a burden on that ore of from $6 to $20 or $30 a ton. Now, I say that that $6 or $30 per ton, and the whole range between these figures, taking into account the transport facilities of much of that country and the cost of mining and getting to the transport depots, marks, in many cases, the profit which is to be made, and is simply the debatable ground which will make it possible for the miner to carry on his work or not. The moment you put on this export duty, you impose it upon any man who proposes to invest money in these mines for development; and I take it there is where the great gain is—not in the investing of money in smelters, but in the great mining operations of the country. I say candidly that if I were going to-day to negotiate for the purchase of a property in the dry ore belt and I had an intimation that this export duty was possibly going to be put on, it would be the one thing that would in many cases make me decide that I would not invest, or that if I did it would just take away my margin of profit and make the property unprofitable to work. Probably in the case of high-grade ores, running up to $100 or $150 to the ton, you could still pay the export duties and work your mine profitably. But these are ores that are extraordinary. You may find them here and there in pay streaks, but the general run of ores do not carry that value at all. I know a shipping mine, where the whole profit is founded on about $20 a ton, and where, if you put on this export duty, you would render it almost impossible to carry on operations. So much with reference to that. But when you come to the lead ores, what do you find? You find in some cases in what is called low grade ore, the percentage of silver is small, while the percentage of lead is very large, running up sometimes to 75 or 80 per cent. Take the extreme case of a low silver value and a high lead value of say 70 per cent. That means that every ton of ore has 1,400 pounds of lead. This duty, added to the cost of mining and transport and import duties, may be just the thing that renders it impossible for you to develop your property, and you would have to shut it down, and who would get any benefit? There is more than that. Granted that it is desirable to have as much of the smelting as well of the mining done in this country as possible. There is this difficulty. Perhaps not a single man would understand it unless it were technically explained to him. I myself did not know it, but came to the knowledge of it after talking with a man who understood the business technically. When you ask a man of that kind: Can you not establish smelters in this country, and do all this lead smelting here? Unquestionably, he would say. Can you not do it profitably? On one condition, and one condition only. What is that? On those ores which have a large percentage of lead, the thing which makes it possible is that you shall get a market for your lead. If you cannot get a market for your lead, the industry is knocked out. Where can you get the market? Is not the whole world open to you? The answer is that in the United States the price of lead is uniformly from 1 cent to 1½ cents a pound higher than it is in any other market in the world. Is it not possible to manufacture the lead into sheets and the like of that, and export it to where it is used? They say it is impossible, and for very good reason. In the first place, we could not manufacture the lead in Canada owing to the greater cost of coal and labour, and compete in England, where the cost of coal and labour is less. More than that, you could not manufacture it and send it to China and Japan, and compete in cheapness of cost there. Men who have looked into this question more than I expect to do, say that the only way to make this a successful industry is this. If you can induce Canadian capital, in connection with lead smelting in this country, to go to China and Japan and establish and carry out that industry with the cheap labour there, you may possibly export your pig lead to those countries, manufacture it there, and sell the manufactured article in competition with the lead export from England and other lead manufacturing countries. The gentleman with whom I was speaking said that he and his partners were looking into that question for two years, and the practical difficulties made it impossible to persuade capitalists to embark in that enterprise. Put on that export duty to-morrow, and compel smelting in Canada, and you make it impossible for Canadians to find a market for the heavy lead-bearing and light silver-bearing ores, simply because the lead, when marketed, would command an extremely small price in comparison with what it bears in the United States.

Mr. CHARLTON. Will my hon. friend allow me to ask him whether it is not a fact that the United States tariff provides for a duty on lead in the ore equal to the amount on the lead itself?

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. FOSTER. No, there is a difference between the two.

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes, I think that is the case.

Mr. FOSTER. When you take the lead ore there you have to meet that duty, and it always enters into the computation of your returns. You would not only have to pay that import duty, but the export duty as well, which is equal to the difference between the duty on the lead in the ores and the duty on the pure lead.

Mr. CHARLTON. The duty is the same in both cases.

Mr. FOSTER. I will ask the hon. Finance Minister if that is the case?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My impression is that there is a difference.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that the duty on lead is to be increased from 1½ to 2 cents a pound.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The duty on lead is ½ a cent higher than the duty on lead ore. In the Dingley tariff the duty proposed is 1½ cents upon the lead in ore, and the duty upon the matte, and upon lead in bullion or bars an additional ½ cent or 2 cents a pound.

Mr. FOSTER. I see that the duty on lead-bearing ore is 1 cent a pound. On the lead itself my recollection is that the duty was 1½ cents in the Dingley Bill, and that the Senate propose to raise it to 2 cents. Anyway, there is the position. Now, who will benefit by this? The man who has a smelter already built will benefit by it because, in the first place, ore will be compelled to go there, and a large source of the miner's profit which was formerly obtained will be taken away. The competition will be taken away and the whole industry of mining ores put at a disadvantage. Now, I know quite well that general sentiment here and in British Columbia as well, is that the time has come when we ought to smelt our own ores, but we have to be very careful at this stage in attempting anything which will hamper in the least degree what is the prime industry, not smelting but the developing of the mines themselves. Under present conditions, the smelters will naturally grow more numerous, and under the conditions years hence will increase all the more when coal is brought closer, as it will be by the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. Smelters in that country will have great advantages naturally for transport and the like, and the smelting industry will grow inevitably, but it will grow naturally. Otherwise, if you attempt to force it in this way, you do it at the risk of impeding the more important industry.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The hon. gentleman is of course aware that this is not a proposition to put on the duty, but simply to take the power to put it on.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, but the difficulty is this that when you have that power, the very fact of your having it will paralyze investments to the amount of the burden you are at liberty to impose.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The hon. gentleman will understand that I am entirely in accord with him in this, that beyond doubt it would be the duty of the Government before coming to any decision on the point to consider the case very carefully. I am far from saying that there is not a great deal of force in the argument he has advanced, but but I would like to know what is his proposition? Does he propose to withdraw the power altogether?

Mr. FOSTER. What I say is that the sentiment of a great number in favour of our doing our own smelting is hardly to be weighed against the technical, practical knowledge of men who have looked into the question whether this can be really done or not under present conditions. The majority may be sentimentally anxious to have it done. But if that sentiment were submitted to men of practical, technical knowledge, they might reply: Yes, we would like to have it done, but we will have to go a little slow and see our way clear before taking that step. My suggestion would be this. Let the Government leave over this part with reference to the silver, lead and copper ores. Let them, in the meantime, during the recess, have an investigation into the matter if they think it worth while. Let them take the best means to have it investigated by men of scientific and technical knowledge, and await their report before coming to any decision. My own personal opinion is this, that it would be better if the Government would drop that portion entirely and leave the future to take care of itself. I would urge on the Government as strongly as possible to be very cautious as to how they move in the matter of these ores at present, although I know that in so doing I am placing myself possibly against the sentiment of a great many. And I do it with a great deal of modesty, not pretending to any technical knowledge on the subject.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The argument of the hon. gentleman would apply equally to the nickel ore proposition and probably to the case of lumber.

Mr. FOSTER. With reference to nickel, I am not in a position to speak with any authority, because it is a matter which I have not at all looked into. The other I have investigated to a certain extent.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not profess to have any knowledge at all on the subject of nickel but I do think I have some knowledge of the other ores, the lead and copper ores referred to. There is no doubt very much in what the hon. gentleman has said, and the Government will have to consider before deciding to exercise the power it is asking from Parliament, and I do not think there need be any doubt in the mind of Parliament that the Government will take every possible means to convince itself of the wisdom and necessity of exercising the power before doing so. I cannot agree with my hon. friend that the mere fact of our having secured this power to Parliament is likely to operate in any prejudicial manner upon those who are either now interested or would be likely to become interested in mining enterprise in that country. I cannot see why it should have any such effect. We know very well that there is in that country—I have met it when visiting the different mining towns in southern British Columbia—a strong feeling among owners of mines and producers of ore that we ought to do our own smelting in our own country. When I was out there, a proposition was made by some gentlemen interested in the Nelson and Fort Shepherd Railway to locate a smelter at Northport, five or six miles at the outside to the south of the Canadian boundary line; and that scheme was proposed simply because they could not locate a smelter in British Columbia which could smelt to equal advantage. Their idea was to escape the payment of the import duties, which, under the United States tariff, are imposed on imports of ores smelted in British Columbia. On that account, they proposed to locate their smelter in the town of Northport, and as hon. gentlemen know the establishment of a large smelting industry in any town has the effect of largely increasing the population. Hon. gentlemen who have been in British Columbia know how the town of Trail has been built up by the establishment of the smelting industry by the Heinze Company, and how the town of Nelson has prospered by the smelting industry of the Hall Company. I think it is the general feeling among the people of British Columbia, and I do not think it is confined to those who are mineral producers, that we should take the power to prevent the locating of smelters to the south of the Canadian boundary. It is one thing, of course, to take the power and another to exercise it, but I do not think it would be wise for Parliament to cast doubt upon the probability of that power being exercised. The effect of that would be to defeat the very object we have in view. I think, therefore, it would be right to allow the power to be conferred on the Government and rely on the Government making the necessary inquiry before exercising it. It would be likely to have a most prejudicial effect upon the smelting industry of British Columbia if it were to be known that the Government had brought in a proposition of this kind and then withdrawn it owing to the objections made. I believe that inside of three months you would find a smelter established south of the Canadian boundary in the town of Northport, as it would be generally accepted as a recognized fact that there would be no export duty placed on the ore. I entirely dissent from the opinion of the hon. gentleman that we cannot smelt in British Columbia as profitably as they can in the United States.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say so. What I said is that we in Canada have not a market for the lead. We have all the facilities, but the business must be tested by the consideration whether we could get a remunerative market.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot agree in that proposition. I do not admit that there is a difference of a cent and a half between the price of lead in the English market and its price in New York. I do not think the difference exceeds three-quarters of a cent. There is a difference unquestionably because the people of the United States do not produce as much lead as they consume. They are great consumers of lead, and have to import it from the outside, and the duty they put upon the importation raises the price. I believe that the increase in price in the New York market over that in the English market is very little more than the duty. When the hon. gentleman tells us that we cannot find a market for lead in England—

Mr. FOSTER. I must again correct the hon. gentleman. I did not make any such statement. I said that you should find a market in England, but that the English market was invariably lower than the United States.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have conceded that. I admit that it is somewhat lower, but it is the smallest possible fraction lower, if you deduct the duty which you have to pay when you send your ore into the United States. I believe that if we had smelting carried on to a great extent in Canada, a market would be found in England and a profitable market. It is not very long ago when the Government was bombarded with telegrams from the different parts of British Columbia urging us to take the power to impose a duty upon these ores. Why? Because there was at that very moment a movement on foot to locate the smelter I have spoken of. The scheme had been revived to establish a smelter at Northport for the smelting of our ores. That subject had been revived and they were on the eve of establishing a smelter at Northport for the purpose of smelting our ore, and securing to the people of that side of the line all the advantages that the United States tariff gave them. As proposed under the Dingley tariff, the intention was to put a duty of 1½ cents per pound on the lead in the ore.

Mr. FOSTER. That is worse than 1 cent.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That was the proposal when I last saw it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is the way it stands now.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not followed the matter closely, but I know that was the way it was at one period of the procedure in Congress. In addition to that, they say: If you venture to smelt your ore and produce your lead in bullion or in bars, we will require of you that you shall pay one-half cent per pound more; that is, you shall pay 2 cents for every pound you bring into our country. The effect of that is too transparent. It is done for the express purpose of giving to the people across the line the full benefit of the smelting industry. Now, why should not that industry belong to us, why should we not get the benefit of it? But we cannot get the benefit of it, and will not, unless we take power from Parliament to put such a duty upon lead in the ore which is exported as will correct the difference and restore the balance that there would be if things were in their natural position. I do feel that if there is one industry in Canada which has been referred to in this resolution for which a case is made which would justify Parliament in conferring this power upon the Government, it is the case of this smelting industry to which the hon. gentleman has particularly referred. All talk about sending the ores to England and smelting them is idle and beside the question.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) say whether he intimates to the House by that remark that I suggested that we should send the ores to England to be smelted? I never dreamed of such a thing, let alone saying it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman said we could not smelt the lead ores to compete with the English smelter.

Mr. FOSTER. I made use of no such expression. I would have been unutterably foolish to say such a thing. That we could take the ore, with all its coarse ingredients, with our methods of transport, and send it to be smelted in England, I could not say such a thing.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman made a statement which I took down immediately, and which—

Mr. FOSTER. There was one statement I did make—that in the manufacture of lead, for instance tea lead, we could not produce that in this country for the Chinese and Japanese market as cheaply as it could be reduced in England and sent to China or Japan.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Of course, I accept the hon. gentleman's statement. There is nothing gained by misunderstanding each other intentionally. What the hon. gentleman says, I do not quarrel with. There is an extent, however, to which we can, in British Columbia reduce these ores. We can reduce them into the bullion form—into bar lead or pig lead as it may be called—and we can export it in that form. It may require to be further refined, and there may be other metals contained in it, or by-products that, in England, can be taken out and realized upon, but that we cannot take out here. But we can reduce it to bars advantageously, and we ought to do the work here.

As I have already said, the House must bear in mind that we are not telling Parliament that we are determined to use this power. I concede that I, for one, am not sufficiently informed upon it to say that I would take the responsibility of exercising this power; but I am unable, for the life of me, to see how the conferring of this power upon the Government by Parliament is likely to affect, prejudicially, the industry in any shape or form. The people who are engaged in mining are not likely to take alarm and the people who are not engaged in mining are not likely to be precluded from going into the industry. Parliament may rest assured that this matter will be fully considered, that the interest of all branches of the industry will be taken into account, and, as the leader of the House (Sir Richard Cartwright) said, the Government will feel it its duty to hear from all quarters before exercising this power. But I would not wish it to be supposed that we do not intend to exercise this power no matter what may transpire, that we are merely putting this as a formal matter on the Statute-book—that people may locate their smelters where they please and carry on business where they please, quite confident that this power will never be exercised.

Mr. FOSTER. If the House will allow me, I have two things to say. My hon. friend (Mr. Blair) asks what prejudicial effect there can be through taking this power. I will explain to him the prejudicial effect, particularly if the question is considered in the spirit of the speech of the hon. gentleman himself. The mining development of our country depends on the introduction of foreign capital. There is a certain amount of capital which you can gather in this country, but what everybody who is studying the interests of mining in this country seeks, is to get British capital interested. The British market for gold, silver and lead stocks is a sensitive market. There is money there, but the moneyed men have been bitten over and over again on mining transactions. At this very moment we are at the turning point as to whether British capital shall begin to flow into this country or not. When British capital takes up a matter of this kind it goes into it very thoroughly, and every element of cost and profit is thoroughly and conscientiously looked into. The very fact that there is on the Statute-book an Act that will impose upon the margin of the profit a deduction of from $4 to $20 per ton will have a great deal to do in deciding the prospective British investor whether he shall go into the business or not. I had to laugh to myself to see how the relative positions of my hon. friend and myself were changed in this short debate—I, a protectionist, thinking that an import duty in the United States of 1½ cents on every pound of lead in the ore ought to be a pretty good protection for the smelter in our own country, and my hon. friend wanting to add to that another half cent in the shape of an export duty in order to make the protection doubly sure. Now, I say there is more than 1½ cents per pound protection. Take the Everett smelter, take the Kansas or Omaha smelter, very far distant from British Columbia. Our smelters can get in ore from the East Kootenay, round Fort Steel, in Slocan country, and the Lardeau district. You cannot compare the cost in transport for a smelter within fifty or a hundred miles, and the cost of transport to a smelter 1,000 or 1,200 miles away. The difference in this item of smelting cost will be still greater in a year's time when we have means to bring coal, coke and ore together. You cannot take these things into consideration without seeing that the protection of 1½ cents which the import duty gives to the home smelter is enough. You take into account the distance to the United States smelter, and you will agree with me, I think, that the conservative and careful course to take at the present time is to let this matter go for the present.

My hon. friend talks about Northport. I can tell him what the mining men are thinking about to-day. Why is the War Eagle Company not paying dividends? Well, the stockholders of that company came to this conclusion: The smelting charges generally are too high at Trail. We propose to mine our ore and to put it on the dump and keep it until—when? Until an export duty is put on ore? No, but until we see what is the policy of the Government with respect to the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. And if that is assured, and we are assured that within a year's time or so, we will have access to the immense coal resources of the eastern Kootenay that will come to our smelters. It is not as to whether there is to be an export duty or not. My hon. friend says there is a move to put a Northport smelter on. Why? Now, we cannot get rid of certain advantages in nature. The Rossland people want a smelter there, any other locality would like to have a smelter. But you take the geographical situation of Northport and its proximity to ores, dry and wet, of all kinds, silver, gold, copper and lead, both in the United States and in British Columbia, and you get a central point. There is at that point the greatest possible accretion of ore of different kinds. That is the consideration that rules. But even that consideration is not precluding the gentlemen who are looking after a smelting site, from considering smelter sites in our own territory as well. The great trouble was because of the transport of coal and of ore, but with these facilities that we are now putting into operation, that trouble will be largely taken away. My belief is that with the one and a half cents protection, and the natural proximity of the coal and the ore, the protection is all that the smelters need ask for in that country.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman has spoken of the intention of the War Eagle people in the matter of the erection of smelters. Now, my information, obtained from one of the War Eagle people who was here in Ottawa a few days ago, is directly the reverse of that which has been furnished by the hon. gentleman. I understand from the gentleman that I refer to, that the War Eagle people are looking around to see where it would be best in their interest to locate a smelter. If there was an export duty placed on lead and ore to the amount we propose, they would place their smelters at Robson, I believe, which is a point upon the line running out of Rossland and within convenient distance. If, on the other hand, they were assured that there would be no export duty placed on ore, they would go unquestionably into the United States, and probably to Northport.

Mr. FOSTER. Why?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is a very suitable place there for a town. They would locate there, as they would expect a city would grow up there, and they could locate there to advantage. It was not easy to find a place within easy reach of Rossland, which is large enough and well enough situated for a town. I talked that matter over with this gentleman a few days ago, and I said to him: Why are you selecting Northport, rather than any other place on the boundary line? "Well," he said, "it is the most convenient to our ores; we would depend upon British Columbia ores altogether for our natural product, and we would want to get as near as we could, on the United States side of the line, to the base of supply. Therefore, we would go to Northport, as being the most convenient and suitable locality."

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend tell us where the War Eagle's properties are?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The War Eagle's properties are in the neighbourhood of Rossland. I suppose the hon. gentleman has been there. I had the pleasure of visiting the War Eagle mines.

Mr. FOSTER. Is Northport nearer to their ores than Rossland?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I do not think it is.

Mr. FOSTER. And they are finding a place for a smelter as far as possible away from the ore?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is what this gentleman, Mr. Blackstock, told me. There is no place in Rossland for it. They would have to go away from Rossland on one of the lines of railway, either on the line leading up to Robson, which is about the first place convenient to Rossland in that direction, or go down the River by the Red Mountain road, and they would finally locate at Northport for the reason that I have stated.

Mr. LAVERGNE. I wish to say one word on this matter of export duty on pulp wood. I trust entirely in the wisdom of the Government in using the power they take, and I am not going to oppose it. At the same time, I must say that the imposition of this duty would seriously affect my constituency. I need not say that, under certain circumstances I might deem it expedient to favour the imposition of that duty; but as a matter of protection in the ordinary sense, I would certainly oppose it with all my power. I do not wish to go into details, but I may tell the House that the quantity of pulp wood that is exported to the United States amounts to 200,000 cords, and of this immense quantity more than one-tenth comes out of the counties of Drummond and Arthabaska. Such an export duty on pulp wood would perhaps destroy the largest industry except agriculture in that constituency to-day. I may say that our position in certain sections of the country is similar to that of the ex-Finance Minister in another section. He thinks it would be more advantageous for him to send the raw material of the mines to the other side of the line, than to keep it and smelt it within our own country, and he wishes the Government to make an exception for this special article. I would have asked for the same thing in relation to pulp-wood, because I know if that duty was imposed, it would certainly result in serious loss to my constituency. From the little study I have made of this question I am convinced that it is only the manufacturers of pulp wood who are asking for that duty, but their interest is a very small one compared with the interest of the labour which is engaged in this industry, both the labour of workingmen and of farmers. I repeat this is the most valuable industry in my county, and it furnishes one-tenth of the whole quantity which is exported to the United States. For this reason I would have been obliged, if the question had come before the House to impose that duty at once, to oppose it. But I trust that the Government, in their wisdom, will use that power with great discretion, and I hope they will not find it necessary to impose the duty.

Mr. DYMENT. I am opposed to this export duty on logs and pulp wood, and I intended to oppose it and criticise it at some length. I interviewed a great many members on both sides of the House to see what support I would have, and I found an almost unanimous feeling on both sides in favour of an export duty. Therefore, I consider that any remarks of mine would not affect the vote at all, and would only be wasting the valuable time of this House if I went into it any further than to enter my protest. As most of you know, I am in the lumber business, but I am willing to forego my own feelings and personal interest with regard to an export duty on logs, and to say, Put it on. But I represent a constituency that is probably more interested than any other county in Canada in the pulp wood industry, and I feel that I would be remiss in my duty if I did not warn the Government of the great injustice they would be doing to thousands of settlers throughout the newer districts of Ontario, if they were to put an export duty on pulp wood. It is not like white pine lumber. White pine is the king of all soft woods, and will always take its place at the head. But spruce pulp wood is a thing that has only come into use within the past fifteen or twenty years. We have untold millions of cords of it, I believe, and I think we ought to get the benefit of it while we may. It might come to pass that something else would take its place before we would get it used up, even if the export of it increased considerably. But I will not say anything further on that point, as I know that I stand almost alone in this matter. But I will just ask the Government, before they impose a duty on pulp wood and do this injustice to thousands of settlers in my constituency, to consider the matter fully and ascertain whether it would be right to help the few manufacturers in this country engaged in the pulp wood industry, at the cost of injuring thousands of settlers in my own constituency and in other newer parts of Ontario.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I beg to move that the word "elm" in the 6th line of the first resolution be omitted.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. HAGGART. Is the hon. gentleman perfectly sure that this resolution will enable him to impose an export duty? The section reads:

That it is expedient to enact that if any country imposes a duty upon the articles enumerated, &c.

Would the courts in interpreting this clause not hold that it would apply to countries hereafter imposing duties upon the articles mentioned. Why do you not impose the duty now. I am afraid that in a legal interpretation it might be held that you would not have power to impose a duty where foreign duties at present exist and that it would only apply in the case of duties imposed by a foreign country in the future.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood you were to take this power by Act of Parliament. This Act will give you the power.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The point is that we may only be able to deal with the countries which hereafter impose a duty, that it would not enable us to deal with any country which has now such a duty.

Mr. FOSTER. It would make it clear if you said "any country which has imposed or hereafter imposed."

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no objection to that. I beg to move that the section be amended to read "if any country now or hereafter imposes a duty." etc.

Mr. FOSTER. Then suppose they abolish it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You have power here to repeal the duties.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose I may conclude that the Government will retain the last section.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am very much impressed with the views expressed by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster). I think it would be desirable to have a provision of this character, but I would like to assure the hon. gentleman and others who share his views on that matter that before any action is taken on this provision

It will receive the most careful consideration of the Government. I hope the hon. gentleman will allow the resolution to pass.

Mr. FOSTER. I would rather that the Government would not put it in force until the next session of Parliament.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think that the purpose of the provision might be defeated by accepting that suggestion. It may be necessary to impose these duties before the next session of Parliament, but as I have already said, no step will be taken without the fullest consideration, of what the hon. gentleman and others have said.

Resolution reported and read the second time.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 145) respecting export duties.—
(Mr. Fielding.)

THIRD READING.

Bill (No 131) respecting the Supreme Court of Ontario and the judges thereof.—
(Mr. Davies.)

PETROLEUM INSPECTION ACT.

Bill (No. 139) further to amend the Petroleum Inspection Act, was read the second time and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. FOSTER. What is the effect of that ?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. We have considered that the test was higher than we required, and so we reduced it by 20 ; the present test is 290 and we have reduced it to 270. The ordinary illuminating petroleum stands a test as low as 85, but this applies to signal petroleum which is used in lighthouses, and high test petroleum generally.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is certain from the information given by his officers, that he is not reducing it near to the danger point.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I have been told positively that 290 was an extravagant requirement and that 270 would be enough.

On section 2,

Mr. LISTER. I propose to move that the following be added to this section :—

Provided always that the right of entry into any harbour of a tank-ship laden with petroleum, shall at all times be subject to such requirements and orders respecting such tank-ships, which shall be applicable to such steamer, as may from time to time be prescribed by the Harbour Commissioners or other authorities having power to pass such regulations.

Mr. FIELDING.

This was to have been moved by one of the members from Montreal, but he was obliged to leave by the afternoon train, and he asked me to move it for him. Under the present section, oil may be imported in tank ships into Canada at the various harbours, and the Governor in Council are empowered to make regulations which may or may not cover the proviso contained in the words which I propose to add to this section. It is well known that petroleum is at all times inflammable, and when in tank ships in enormous quantities it is much more dangerous than at other times. An accident may happen, and the result would be the burning of all the ships in the harbour. It is not only inflammable but it is explosive in the hot weather, as a gas forms, and a match or the spark from a man's pipe might cause an explosion that would destroy all the shipping in Toronto or Montreal harbours. I wish to protect by Act of Parliament these harbours, placing the regulations under which oil tank steamers shall be admitted under the control of the Harbour Commissioners who in many instances are the owners of the harbour.

Mr. FOSTER. Would it not help my hon. friend (Mr. Lister) more and give the maximum of protection to the harbour, if he would prohibit the ingress of these inflammable tank steamers. If he will do that, I will join him in it.

Mr. LISTER. I doubt the wisdom of admitting these tank ships at all.

Mr. FOSTER. So do I.

Mr. LISTER. I think it is a very doubtful Act, but it is the Act of the Government who believe that this will give cheaper transportation. If these steamers are admitted they should be surrounded by all safeguards.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. According to the present section these tank ships can only enter under such regulations as are passed by the Governor in Council, on the joint recommendation of the Ministers of Customs and Inland Revenue. We would be guilty of the greatest dereliction of duty if we did not recommend the framing of such regulations as would really protect the harbour. I do not see why the Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the two Ministers named, should not be entrusted with the task of preparing such regulations as will give as much safety as possible. We know very well that tank ships loaded with coal oil are as dangerous, if not more so, than ships loaded with gunpowder. We appreciate the danger, and I think the matter of framing regulations may very well be left to us.

Mr. SPROULE. The proposal in the section is much better than the amendment, and the amendment would only apply to certain harbours where they have commissioners, and would not apply to other places where those tank steamers might be brought in. Besides, the oil is more likely to be brought in by tank cars than tank steamers.

Mr. FOSTER. That seems to be an inclusive power.

Mr. LISTER. I think it is.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to ask what is the policy of the Government as to the places they designate where oil can be brought in in tank ships; because it will be difficult, if you admit the principle, to prevent any harbour from availing itself of the privilege by complying with the regulations. I do not think you can say that you would let it come into some harbours and not into others.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I should imagine that there are only comparatively few places from which application will be made. You cannot take a tank ship into all the small harbours of the country; the business will not warrant it. I think the thing will work out very well. When the applications are made, each application will be considered on its merits; but it is well, in view of the inflammable character of the oil, that you should not make the privilege too broad, at the same time giving the Government power to meet every case that may arise.

Mr. FOSTER. The modus operandi will be this. The tank vessel will start from Boston and run into every considerable or inconsiderable port and become a regular travelling supply. I think you will find that the tank vessel will be like the tank wagon in the city, that it will visit every available port, so that the great supply of oil will be from the tank vessels of the Standard Oil Company.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. At present oil can only be delivered from tank cars at such places as are designated by the Governor in Council, and necessarily we must do the same thing with regard to oil delivered from tank ships. Moreover, we cannot allow the oil to be delivered from tank ships any more than from tank cars to enter into consumption before it is inspected, and it is impossible to have an inspector at every little fishing harbour along the coast.

Mr. FOSTER. That is just what my hon. friend wants an excuse for. Do you not see how nice it would be to multiply the officers?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I think my hon. friend will do me the justice to say that I am doing everything I can to diminish the officers.

Mr. LISTER. While the Government have adopted the policy of allowing oil to be carried in tank ships, and therefore I suppose it must become law, it is certainly unfair to the oil producers throughout the country. There could be no objection at all to allowing oil to be carried in tank ships if proper precautions were taken for safety, and if it were open to every oil merchant throughout the country to ship from one point to another. That is to say, if the tank ships were put on an equality with other means of transportation, and it were open to every person to use them who wished to hire them and was willing to pay the usual tolls, there would be no objection. But the difficulty is that these tank ships are in the hands of one vast corporation, who will use them to compel the railway companies to carry their oil at a lower rate than they give to the other oil refiners of the country, and in that way get an advantage over the trade, which I venture to predict will compel the trade to yield to that corporation, so that the oil interests of this country will be in the hands of one great monopoly in a short time.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to ask at what points in the North-west Territories oil is allowed to be delivered in tank cars.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. So far, the places are Brandon, Calgary, Lethbridge, Regina and Winnipeg. We want to avoid increasing the number of places to such a degree as not to increase the cost of oil to the people of the North-west; but I think that under the next session the Governor in Council will be able to make such regulations as will possibly relieve the difficulties under which the people of the North-west are now labouring with regard to their supply of oil.

Mr. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). I would like the Minister to explain the meaning of the 6th line, which says that all oil, before being removed for consumption, shall be put into packages. What I want to know is, can the oil be taken in tank cars to a station and put into a stationary tank and be barrelled out of that tank, or is it necessary to barrel it out of the tank cars? Because, if placed in a stationary tank and barrelled out of that, I think it can be handled far more cheaply.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Under the regulations of the department the oil from the tank cars may be transferred to cisterns. Samuel Rogers & Co., of Toronto, have cisterns which contain 50,000 or 60,000 gallons of oil, and which are underground. The tank car arrives and the oil is pumped into these cisterns; but it cannot be delivered for consumption until after it is barrelled and inspected.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to ask the hon. Controller to put Edmonton and Macleod on the list of places which are entitled to receive oil in tank cars. There are revenue officers at these places, and they are important trading points.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. In studying this question, I am given to understand that one of the difficulties under which the people of the North-west laboured was this, that when their oil came from the point of production to Winnipeg and was barrelled there, and again carried to Moosejaw or Medicine Hat or some other place, the freight was nearly double what it would have been if the oil had been sent direct to the place. Under the next clause we propose to appoint as many places as possible where the tank cars can deliver the oil and where the oil may be inspected, so as to save as much as possible the heavy charges for freight under which our friends in the North-west are labouring.

On section 3,

Mr. CLANCY. There is a class of oil made of petroleum which is used in the manufacture of binder twine. The manufacturers prefer to import it because of the greater quantity of acid in the Canadian oil. Would that oil come in free as entering into the manufacture of cordage which has been put on the free list. The hon. Minister of Finance made a statement in the early part of the session that while binder twine would come in free, all articles entering into its manufacture would be also made free.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The matter has not been dealt with since my hon. friend mentioned it, but I should think that all articles used in the manufacture of binder twine would come in free. While not expressing this as a governmental decision, I think that would be the case.

Mr. LISTER. Does the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) want oil used in the manufacture of binder twine to come in free?

Mr. CLANCY. Yes, it is only a small matter.

Mr. LISTER. We provide the same oil and there is a considerable quantity of it used in the manufacture of cordage.

Mr. FRASER (East Lambton). I am surprised to hear my hon. friend raise any question as to the quality of Canadian oil. I am advised by binder-twine manufacturers, with two of whom I discussed the point two or three days ago, that the Canadian cordage oil is just as good as that imported from the United States, and therefore the cordage men would be at no disadvantage if they continue to use the Canadian product.

Mr. CLANCY. I am glad the hon. gentleman has given us this assurance, and I would ask him to press upon the Minister of Finance the necessity of not admitting the American oil free. The hon. Minister says he believes it comes in free? I should gladly support my hon. friend if he will urge upon the Minister of Finance to have the American oil made dutiable.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 141) respecting cold storage on steamships from Canada to the United Kingdom and in certain cities in Canada (Mr. Fisher.)

JUDGES OF THE PROVINCIAL COURTS

Bill (No. 140) further to amend the Act respecting judges of the provincial courts was read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

2. The section substituted for section twelve of said Act by chapter twenty-seven of the statutes of 1891, is hereby amended by striking out the third and fourth lines and substituting the following therefor:

The local judge of the district of Quebec, $1,000 per annum.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the change proposed here?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). It was $2,000, but under this new Act the salary is to be $1,000.

Mr. BERGERON. That is, Judge Irvine received $2,000 and Judge Routhier is to receive $1,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). It was especially provided by Sir John Thompson, that at the death of Judge Irvine, the salary was to be reduced to $1,000.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

TRIAL BY JURY—NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies) moved second reading of Bill (No. 137) respecting Trials by Jury in certain cases in the North-west Territories. He said: This is a permissive Bill to authorize an ordinance of the North-west Assembly. There was some doubts as to their power to pass it.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported and read the third time and passed.

CROW'S NEST PASS RAILWAY.

The resolution adopted in Committee of the Whole on the 18th June instant, respecting the construction of a line of railway from Lethbridge, in the territory of Alberta, through the Crow's Nest Pass to Nelson, in the province of British Columbia, was reported and read the second time.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE moved first reading of Bill (No. 146) respecting the construction of a line of railway from Lethbridge, in the Territory of Alberta, through the Crow's Nest Pass to Nelson, in the province of British Columbia.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend wishes to hurry business through for the other House, I think it would be well that we should give this measure its stages this afternoon. For my part I would make no objection.

Mr. LISTER. I would make objection.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I understand that some hon. gentlemen wish to say something on this subject, and, probably, we should make no headway.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose we shall take that up on Monday morning early.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT.

The House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 129) further to amend the Post Office Act.

(In the Committee).

On section 2.

Mr. FOSTER. I understood yesterday that this Bill was to be allowed to stand until next year. Surely the Government does not expect to pass through a contentious Bill such as this at this stage of the session. I can assure him that it will be very thoroughly debated.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). Better have it debated.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well. If the Government have no wish to hurry on the end of the session, nor wish to get through the legitimate business, we can bring this matter up and debate it; but I should certainly think it would be much better if a Bill such as this, which proposes to make such a very drastic change in the Post Office Department, should not be discussed with three-quarters of the members of the House away. Surely my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) will see that he should get an opinion from a House of Parliament that is a House of Parliament and not a mere remnant. There are generic changes proposed here, and certainly I think we ought to have a Parliament that is in a position to discuss these matters.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Bill has been before the House for some time. Very important legislation is now going through this House, and I am not aware that the point has been taken that the House is not competent to discharge its duties, even though some hon. gentlemen may have withdrawn. The Bill is necessary, it is in the public interest, and if it requires discussion, I think it had better be discussed. I, at all events, think there is no valid reason why the Bill should not be passed, or I would not have suggested it. It is in the public interest in every respect, and I hope the hon. gentleman will so vote.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I think this is not only very important legislation, but it is very radical legislation. If the hon. gentleman takes up the Post Office Act as it exists, I do not see how he can introduce a clause in this new Act which is absolutely destroying the whole principle upon which the Post Office Act is based. I refer to the clause which states that:

If in the opinion of the Postmaster General the lowest tender received, after publicly advertising for the performance of a mail contract, is excessive, he should not be compelled to accept such tender, and may in his discretion either re-advertise the said contract for further competition, or offer to any person willing to undertake the contract such lesser sum as he deems a reasonable and sufficient price for the said contract, and may enter into the contract with such person willing to accept such offer.

Sir, the principle upon which the law regulating the post office contracts is founded, is the principle of calling for tenders. Now, can any gentleman having any knowledge of the Post Office Act deny that this is the most ingenious way that could be invented to destroy the whole system of asking for tenders for contracts as provided for in the old law. The Postmaster General states that if out of 20 tenders he considers the lowest tender is too high, he can, without any appeal again to the public for a new tender, ipso motu give the contract to whomsoever he pleases, provided it be under the lowest tender.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. To a lower tenderer at a lower price.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. But that destroys completely every theory calling for tenders. I can understand the hon. gentleman, believing that the lowest tender is too high, wishing to set it aside, and without calling for any new tenders, giving all the contracts to partisans or to friends of his.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That power can only be exercised after the tenders have been called for in the first instance, and where they are excessive.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I know that. But why should the right of the Postmaster General be extended beyond the point which is provided by law, that no contract should be given without tender? Here the hon. gentleman decides in his wisdom that the lowest tender is too high, that he can go out and give this contract away without any new tenders. Why, Sir, this is upsetting the whole system upon which the Post Office Act is based. I protest against it; I think it is destructive of the whole system. The hon. gentleman has said a great deal about partisanship. Well, this is the most complete system that could be devised to hand over these contracts to partisans without any tenders, or any new appeal to the public to allow honest competitors to come into the field and, in the interest of the public, to make tenders which would be according to the law which exists at the present moment. I do not see how it is possible to introduce such a revolutionary measure as this one at this period of the session, or how the hon. gentleman can expect that we should allow a Bill of this kind to be passed within a few hours of prorogation. I for one protest against it.

Mr. SPROULE. We have always regarded as one of the virtues of the Act the provision compelling the Postmaster General to let all contracts by tender, and the one incentive to the tenderer is that he is likely to get the contract at his offer provided it is the lowest. Now, while that might lead to abuse by sometimes compelling the department to pay more for a contract than it is worth, the Postmaster General still has in his hands the right to cancel a tender at the expiration of three months, and re-advertise for another. In my opinion that ought to be done here. If this becomes law there will be no inducement for people to tender, because there is no certainty of their getting the contract. Time after time we have been applied to by parties who tender for mail contracts, to write on their behalf, and we have always assured them that the law compels the Postmaster General to give the contract to the lowest tenderer unless, in his opinion, he is paying too much for it, then he can re-advertise for it. That has shut off the disposition of people to ask their member to intercede in their behalf. Now, that was the principal virtue of the Act, and it relieved us of a great deal of trouble and worry. I have always thought the Act a fair one, and I do not see why it should be amended in this direction. While there may be isolated cases where the Postmaster General could use it to good advantage, there is no denying the fact that it might lead to great abuses by the Postmaster General. I am far from saying the present Postmaster General would exercise that right to the detriment of the country, because I am inclined to think that he would not. But I think it is a right that no Postmaster General should have, it should not be embodied in the law. As to other provisions of the Bill, I think their aim is good. I think that which provides for the establishment of a branch to be called a railway mail branch, is a very good idea; although it would lead to the creation of some new offices, and possibly might be taken advantage of to make appointments that were not in the public interest. But I think the clause that we are considering is a very bad one, and the Postmaster General ought to let it drop, and see if he cannot, between now and another session, devise some other means of overcoming the present trouble.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON.

Mr. CLANCY. I am sure the committee is willing to assist the Postmaster General in every way to protect the service, but before this House should assent to legislation of the kind that the hon. gentleman proposes, he should be able to point out a great public abuse; he should be able to say that people tendering for mail contracts are generally in collusion, and that it is necessary for him to take means to overcome it.

Mr. MILLS. This Act will lead to collusion.

Mr. CLANCY. I think so myself. I venture to say that not in one case out of a hundred is there any collusion in regard to these mail contracts, most of them very small, ranging from $25 up to $1,000. I think it may be said by every hon. gentleman in this House too much money is not being paid for this service. I know that to be the case by mere observation. I know that mail contracts are being performed in some of the western districts for infinitely less money than the persons engaged in the service can afford to do it for. They would be far better off working at 50 cents per day than engaged in carrying the mails. I am sure the hon. Postmaster General would not aim such legislation at a particular case, and if the prices are not too high as a rule, there can be no necessity for this Bill. What will follow is this: The hon. gentleman has not shown that there is collusion or that, as a rule, the prices are too high, and if that is the case he has no ground upon which to ask this committee to assent to this Bill. But let me suppose that there has been some collusion. What would follow? It is perfectly obvious that if the Postmaster General takes this matter into his own hands, and refuse every tender, as he will have a right to do, everybody will know that it will be a mere idle sham to tender. I am not going to accuse the hon. gentleman of wrong-doing in advance, but I say that he exposes himself to pressure from behind.

Whatever he may think himself, he will have all sorts of pressure applied to him from behind. Everybody seeking a mail contract in the different counties will go to the defeated candidate or to the member representing the riding, who will endeavour to secure contracts for his own friends. That will degenerate into a party squabble, and it will be a sham for anybody not in sympathy with the political party in power to put in a tender. Before the hon. gentleman asks the committee to assent to this Bill he ought to be able to show that, as a rule, there is collusion which involves a large sum of public money.

Mr. QUINN. I think we will all understand the object of the amendment which is now suggested. I do not profess the modesty of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy), and I think there is no room at all to doubt as to the meaning of this Bill. Section 55 of the Post Office Act provides :

When, in the opinion of the Postmaster General, the lowest tender received, after public advertisement for the performance of a mail contract is excessive, he shall not be compelled to accept the said tender, but may, in his discretion, either re-advertise the said contract for further competition, or offer to the persons from whom tenders have been received, each in his turn, beginning with the lowest, such sum as he deems a reasonable and sufficient price for the said contract, and may enter into a contract with such of the said persons as will accept such offer.

I look upon that law certainly as a fair one and one which the Postmaster General might have retained. But the object of this proposal before the committee is to enable him to reject the tenders which he has received and to award the contract to any person who will do the work for such a sum as he deems reasonable. The Bill provides that he may "offer to any person willing to undertake the contract such lesser sum as he deems a reasonable and sufficient price for the said contract, and may enter into a contract with such person as will accept such offer." It seems to me that the intention of this amendment is to make tendering a mere farce. The object is to obtain as many contracts as possible for the friends of the political party that happens for the time being to control the destinies of the country and to distribute them as largely as possible through the country. If it were not for this, if it were intended to administer this fairly, to give the contract to the lowest tenderer, if it were intended to obtain this work for the lowest price the Act, as it stands, is amply sufficient. If the Minister wishes to act unfairly, but I shall not attribute to the Minister a desire to give all contracts to the friends of the party—even if he wished to act fairly the pressure from behind might be so great as to overcome his wishes. If the pressure from behind is sufficient, the Minister may refuse to recognize any of the tenderers and award the contract to whomever he pleases at a lower price. He is not limited as to the amount which must be tendered lower. Another person may undertake to do the work for one dollar less than the lowest tenderer, and the Minister would be perfectly justified, under this Bill, in giving him the contract. What will be the effect? The Postmaster General would advertise for a service in some county. The tenders would be received from different men who could perform the service properly. The lowest tender would be known to the Minister and, in the course of time, the member for the county who, being a supporter of the Minister will say : "Do not give the work to this man." All the time he has some friends of his behind. He would say : "Do not accept this tender : I have a man who will do this work for $5 or $1 lower." The Minister would be perfectly justified under this Bill in giving the contract to him. We should preserve before the country the distinction of not making our laws for the purpose of serving political parties. We should preserve the appearance, at any rate, before the world that we are exercising our functions, not in the interest of a political party, but for the good of the country. Suppose a combination were entered into to prevent competitive tendering. Suppose that persons who tendered for this service combined with the object of exaggerating the price to be paid by the country, the Minister, under the present Act would say to the next lowest tender, "We will not accept the lowest tender that has been received ; but if you will perform this work for so much less you may have it." And so on through to the end. If he can find no one amongst the tenderers ready to carry out the work for the price which he considered reasonable, then he might re-advertise the contract and call for new tenders. I think that the Minister will see that it is not at all necessary in the interest of the country, or in the interest of the proper administration of public affairs that this change should be made.

Mr. MILLS. I am somewhat amazed that such legislation as this—if it is not vicious legislation, at least it has vicious tendencies—should be presented at this late time of the session, and should be put over, as it were, for a more convenient season. It was up at the last sitting of the House, and was then withdrawn, a great many thinking that it was withdrawn for the session, but as soon as some members have gone away it is brought up again. I look upon this Bill as one of the most vicious amendments that could possibly have been proposed. I will not go so far as to say that the Postmaster General is vicious in his inclinations in this regard. He may be pure and incorrupt and may have no idea of catering to the wishes of parties who are behind him in these matters, but the tendencies are in that direction. The Act we had was a good Act. I have had some experience with reference to these contracts. Parties have been desirous in my constituency to get contracts for mail service, and when they have come to me I have always said to them: That is one of the things with reference to which I have no political influence, the man who puts in the lowest tender gets the contract, no matter whether he be white or black, or whether he is Liberal or Conservative. If this amendment should become law, the representative of the county cannot say that to his constituent. He will say to those who seek his influence: Let them put in as many tenders as they like, I will use my influence with the Postmaster General and I will say to him, that under this amendment we have the power not to accept any of these tenders, and so and so (mentioning the name of a supporter in the county) will do it for so much. Although the Postmaster General may be a perfectly honourable and high-minded man he will be influenced to a considerable extent by his supporters, and he will say to the member: Let your man have it. This Act puts these contracts entirely under political influence, and therefore I say it is one of these pieces of legislation which have the vicious tendency of bringing such matters under political influence. Not long ago, when the Prime Minister was advocating the institution of a commission in order to take the political influence out of the sphere of his Ministers, he looked around and he said: My Ministers are only men, they may be tempted to do things which they should not: and in order that they may not be placed in temptation, I will ask this commission to be instituted. Now, the Postmaster General is putting himself right in the way of temptation, and he is acting contrary to what the Premier advocated in the earlier days of this session. I say that the Liberal Conservatives in this House are not doing their duty, if they do not stop here and battle against this vicious Act until Christmas if necessary. I will be one to help them to do it.

Mr. TISDALE. I expressed my opposition to this Bill on a previous occasion, and I wish now to point out the inconsistency between the action of the Postmaster General when he was out of power and his action when in power. A clause in this Act empowers the Postmaster General to renew contracts under the terms previously arranged after advertisement, provided the inspector reported in favour of it, and that the price was not too high. Now, as soon as the Postmaster General got into office he cancelled every contract which had been renewed, and had not been advertised at the second letting. He is now going in a directly opposite direction from his action on that occasion. I have knowledge of three or four of these renewed contracts, and I say that in the public interest and in consideration of the lowness in the price of these contracts, it was well to renew them. But the Postmaster General objected to certain contracts because they had not been re-advertised. He did not claim that the previous Postmaster General had exceeded his powers, and as far as I am concerned I would be willing to trust the present Postmaster General with the same powers as were exercised by the Postmaster Generals before him. But, the present Postmaster General is not content with that. Last session he announced that he was going to advertise all contracts, but this session he seeks to have a principle inserted in this statute that I venture to say was never thought of by any previous Postmaster General. In the Department of Public Works, where repairs have sometimes to be made immediately, there is a reason why the Minister should have a discretion without advertising, but there is no necessity for it in the Post Office Department, and I am surprised that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) should ask for the power, and I am disappointed in the hon. gentleman because while he was in opposition, no man contended more sturdily against Ministers having power which would leave them at the mercy of political pressure. I oppose this provision in the Bill, not because I think the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) would not act fairly, but because I believe it is in the public interest that a Minister should not have this power. Judging by the hon. gentleman's action when in opposition, I am more than surprised that he should submit this proposition to the House.

This objectionable principle of letting public contracts without tender is one against which both political parties, in Ontario especially, have protested, and public opinion has been aroused against the practice to such an extent that it has been curtailed. Under these circumstances, I hope the hon. gentleman will reconsider this matter. I regret very much that at this late stage of the session I should feel it my duty to object so strongly to any measure presented by the Government; but where a public principle is involved, I feel it my duty, no matter what inconvenience it may cause, to oppose not only strongly, but at length, legislation of this kind. With regard to those clauses of the Bill referring to the management of the department, I do not feel as competent to judge of them as men like the hon. Minister himself and some of my hon. friends who have been in charge of that department. But the principle I refer to lies at the basis of proper, I was going to say decent, management. I appeal to hon. gentlemen whether they want, by legislation, to be placed in a position where they will be subject to political pressure, which will undoubtedly be brought to bear upon them, to set aside a contract which has been awarded, after having been properly advertised and tendered for. I have found no fault with the hon. Postmaster General for cancelling certain contracts on the ground, as he informed me in a letter addressed to myself, that they had not been re-advertised and thrown open to public competition. That may be a principle well worth considering, and I would have been satisfied if he had brought in a Bill to repeal the power of the Postmaster General to renew contracts in that way. But what does he propose here? He proposes to take power, in the case of hundreds and I suppose thousands of contracts, which have been duly advertised, to make offers to tenderers, to set aside every tender and privately allot the contract as he pleases.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not as he pleases.

Mr. TISDALE. What is the limitation?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It must be lower.

Mr. TISDALE. Precisely; and what is lower? If it is a $1,000 contract, he could let it to another person at $999.99.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Will the hon. gentleman allow me a remark? The clause says that where the lowest tender is regarded as excessive, the power may be exercised. Would any Minister be able, as an honourable man, to justify passing by a contract for which the lowest tender is $1,000 on the ground that it is excessive, and awarding it another party at one cent less?

Mr. TISDALE. I am not dealing with the case of a high official who is allowed to act without political pressure. I am supposing the state of affairs which exists in all democratic countries, and particularly in this country, where party feeling runs high. I would oppose this Bill just as strongly if it were introduced by a Government whom I supported. I am not on record, and, please God, I never shall be on record, as favouring the placing of powers in the hands of a Government whom I support that I would not place in the hands of my opponents. I ask hon. gentlemen opposite if they would have allowed us, at such a late period of the session, to pass any such measure as this. It is a matter of principle with me, and one of those things which I never allow, if I can help it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). The hon. gentleman has made a declaration, and we are bound to accept it. I do not charge him with obstructing the Bill; but I appeal to him on the higher ground that he has taken. The Postmaster General is a trustee of the public, and as such is bound to administer the property of the public in the public interest. Suppose he were the trustee of a private person, and called for tenders for a private trust, and suppose he received ten tenders, and found that to accept any one of them would not be dealing fairly with the estate, what would he do? He would go into the Court of Chancery and ask for power to dispose of the property to some one else, and he would get it, though he is not bound to call again necessarily. What I want to call the hon. gentleman's attention to is that the only objection he can take to the section is based on the supposition that there will be a Postmaster General who will deliberately violate its spirit. If the spirit of the section is carried out, nothing but good can come to the country.

Mr. TISDALE. I do not think the Postmaster General would do any such thing, but it is a vicious principle in legislation.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. If the hon. gentleman particularly wishes to call it six o'clock, well and good; but if he does not, I would suggest that my hon. friend move that the committee rise and report progress, and we will adjourn the House. I do not wish to inflict too much on hon. gentlemen opposite, who have certainly not subjected us to needless opposition to-day.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 6.05 p.m.

HENRY MUMA, OFFICIAL REFEREE.

Mr. SOMERVILLE asked.

Is Henry Muma, of Drumbo, Official Referee, now in the employ of the Government? If not, has he been dismissed? Has the office been abolished? Has he been superannuated? If so, what is the amount of his superannuation allowance?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). The party here mentioned is not now in the employ of the Government. He has not been dismissed, but the office has been abolished. As to the superannuation, that is a matter that is now under the consideration of the Governor in Council.

WHALERS, MACKENZIE RIVER.

Mr. OLIVER asked:

1. Is the Government aware that a considerable trade is done by United States whalers at the mouth of the Mackenzie River without duty being paid? 2. Is it the intention of the Government to protect Canadian trade revenue by establishing a customs office here?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). 1. The Department of Customs has been informed that illegal trading is being carried on at the mouth of the Mackenzie River by United States whalers. 2. The question of establishing a customs office there will receive consideration.

LOAN OF $15,000,000.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved that the House, at its next sitting, resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolutions:—

1. That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to raise by way of loan, in addition to the sums now remaining unborrowed and negotiable of the loans authorized by Parliament by any Act heretofore passed, such sum or sums of money, not to exceed in the whole the sum of fifteen million dollars, as may be required for the purpose of paying the floating indebtedness of the Dominion of Canada and for the carrying on of the public works authorized by the Parliament of Canada. 2. That the sums of money hereby authorized to be raised by way of loan shall be so raised in accordance with and under the provisions of that portion of chapter twenty-nine of the Revised Statutes of Canada relating to the public debt and the raising of loans authorized by Parliament; and the sums so raised shall form part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada: Provided always, that the rate of interest to be paid on any loan to be raised hereunder shall not exceed four per cent per annum.

Motion agreed to.

2. Resolved, That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to grant the subsidies hereinafter mentioned to the Railway Companies, and towards the construction of the railways also hereinafter mentioned, that is to say:—

To the Great Northern Railway Company, for 67 miles of their railway between Montcalm and its junction with the Lower Laurentian Railway near St. Tite in the vicinity of the St. Maurice River. (Revote.) The balance remaining unpaid of the subsidies granted by the Act 56 Victoria, chapter 2, and 57-58 Victoria, chapter 4, between these points, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $182,400.

To the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway Company, for 84 miles of their railway from Aylmer to Pembroke, also for bridging the Ottawa River. (Revote.) The balance of the subsidy remaining unpaid granted by the Act 47 Victoria, chapter 8, and 57-58 Victoria, chapter 4, not exceeding $114,272.

3. That the subsidies hereinbefore mentioned as to be granted to companies named for that purpose shall, if granted by the Governor in Coun-all be granted to such companies respectively ; the other subsidies may be granted to such companies as shall be approved by the Governor in Council as having established to his satisfaction their ability to construct and complete the said railways respectively ; all the lines for the construction of which subsidies are granted, unless they are already commenced shall be commenced within two years from the first day of August next, and completed within a reasonable time, not to exceed four years, to be fixed by Order in Council, and shall also be constructed according to descriptions and specifications and upon conditions to be approved by the Governor in Council, on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and specified in an agreement to be made in each case by the company with the Government, which agreement the Government is hereby empowered to make ; the location also of every such line of railway shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council.

4. That the granting of such subsidies respectively shall be subject to such conditions for securing such running powers or traffic arrangements and other rights as will afford all reasonable facilities and equal mileage rates to all railways connecting with those so subsidized, as the Governor in Council determines.

5. That the said subsidies respectively shall be payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, by instalments, on the completion of each section of the railway of not less than ten miles, proportionate to the value of the portion so completed in comparison with that of the whole work undertaken, to be established by the report of the said Minister, or upon the completion of the work subsidized—except as to subsidies with respect to which it is hereinbefore otherwise provided.

6. Any company receiving a subsidy as aforesaid, in excess of $3,200 per mile, shall be bound to carry Her Majesty's mails for a term of ten years free of charge over the portion of railway subsidized.

Mr. FOSTER. I may suggest to my hon. friend that it would be a great convenience to the committee if the officers of the Department of Railways and Canals would inform the House, in each case, as to how much money we are expected to vote. They seem to be disposed to make us do our own calculations. It would save us a great deal of trouble, those of us who are not adepts at calculating.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. If my hon. friend will look at the terms of the resolution he will see that in each of those cases it is a simple multiplication of the number of miles by $3,200.

Mr. FOSTER. Then if my hon. friend will have the minimum and maximum sum placed there, it would be some guide.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That would be impossible, under the terms.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

(In the Committee.)

Kingston Penitentiary .....$97,500

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the Government would make a statement as to what they intend to take on the report.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. If my hon. friend will examine the report, and that portion of it which refers to recommendations, I will be happy to answer any questions he may ask in regard to them.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Take the recommendations towards the end, page 33, you will find recommendations there in reference to discipline. I have prepared answers which refer to each paragraph. Paragraphs 1 to 6, are as follows :—

1. That in order to command the services of a man fully qualified to discharge the duties of warden of the penitentiary the remuneration of that officer should not be less than $3,000 per annum, with the official residence unfurnished, heating, lighting and water, and such portion of the prison ground and such convict labour as may be assigned to him by the department.

2. No time should be lost in revising the present prison regulations (sanctioned in 1838) and adapting them to the altered condition of things in the penitentiary.

3. The duties of every officer should be clearly and distinctly defined in the regulations, so as to prevent any possible clashing in their work.

4. Every officer of the prison should be supplied with a copy of the regulations, and required to make himself familiar with them, especially with those relating to his own duties.

5. Before any permanent rules respecting the prison of isolation and the dungeon cells are sanctioned, full information should be obtained, either by personal visit or by correspondence, from the authorities at the head of the leading prisons either in the United States or Belgium, where the cellular system has been for years in successful operation.

The answer to paragraph one is : There is no present intention of increasing the salary of the warden.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the salary now ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. $2,500 a year.

Mr. BERGERON. And he has a house free, heated, lighted and everything.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No. 2. The present regulations will be revised, and the carrying out of them will be insisted upon.

Mr. SPROULE. In regard to No. 1, you say it is not the intention to increase the salary of the warden, but the recommendation is that a man who is fully qualified should be secured to discharge the duties, and presumably the present man is not qualified.

Mr. FOSTER. The Government is of the opinion that a man fully qualified can be got for the salary and perquisites now paid ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is our opinion at the present time.

Mr. FOSTER. I think so, too.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We have taken the trouble to read the evidence upon which the report is based, and we do not consider ourselves bound to any great extent to accept the findings of the commissioners. We find, ourselves on the evidence independently of the commissioners, and we give the findings of the department to the committee. It is intended that the present regulations shall be revised. The regulations we have now were established in 1884. Since that time new officers have been added and new industries created, for instance, the binder twine industry, and in consequence it is necessary that new regulations shall be made. As to these regulations I have consulted with the inspector and the intention is that the inspector shall prepare a set of rules after a full examination into the penitentiary at Kingston and the penitentiaries elsewhere. When these regulations are adopted it is the intention to see that they are properly enforced. That disposes of paragraphs 1 to 5. As to paragraphs 6 to 13 the same thing will apply. They are as follows :—

6. No officer of the prison should be allowed to purchase any articles from the prison stores, or to have any work done for him in the prison shops.

7. No officer should be allowed to keep any animals, or feed for the same, on the prison premises.

8. Married officers should not be permitted to reside within the walls of the prison.

9. Officers closely related or connected with each other by blood or marriage should not be employed in the prison at the same time.

10. In no case should firearms be used in dealing with a convict in his cell. Should it be necessary to remove from his cell a violent or refractory convict armed with a dangerous weapon, no attempt should be made to enter his cell against his will until he has been made to give up his dangerous weapon. This could be done in a short time by putting him on bread and water diet, or in a few minutes (if necessary) by turning the hose on him.

11. With a view to economy and the other advantages stated in their report, the three classes or grades of convicts should henceforth be distinguished, not by different suits of clothing, but simply by stripes upon the sleeves of their coats, in the military way, the same cloth being used for all the grades.

12. It should be a strong incentive to industry and good conduct if special privileges were secured by the convicts in the higher grades, and especially if a system were introduced, such as is now in force in the central prison, by which a convict might by good conduct and special industry earn money, to be given to him under certain conditions when leaving the prison.

13. The officers who give the convicts marks for good conduct and industry, should be most careful in performing this duty, so that the convicts should feel that their promotion from one grade to another, and the amount of remission of sertence which they can earn thereby, depends entirely on themselves.

14. The organization of a Prisoners' Aid Association at Kingston, on the same lines as the Prisoners' Aid Association at Toronto, with the object, among others, of assisting by advice and otherwise convicts at the critical time when they are leaving the prison, and the appointment of a special officer at the prison for this purpose, would be the means of saving many a poor creature and preventing him from returning to his evil courses.

As to paragraph 14 we approve generally of its terms, but as to the appointment of a special officer for the purpose mentioned that will not be done until we have had an opportunity of reducing the number of employees in the penitentiary.

15. Every communication addressed to the inspector of penitentiaries on matters relating to the prison, whether from the officers of the prison or convicts, should be forwarded to that officer through the warden, who shall transmit it to the inspector with any remarks he may see fit to make.

16. The lunatics now confined in the building within the walls of the penitentiary, which is utterly unsuited for the purpose of an asylum, should be removed either to the public asylums of the different provinces, if satisfactory arrangements for that purpose can be made between the federal and provincial governments, or failing that, they should be transferred to an asylum erected outside the prison walls.

17. The female convicts now within the walls of the penitentiary (a building in nearly every way most unsuited for the purpose) should be removed to the Mercer Reformatory, at Toronto, if satisfactory arrangements for that purpose can be made between the Federal Government and the Government of Ontario.

18. The general admission of the public to the prison is objectionable and should be discouraged. It is thought that two or three hours on a fixed day in each week would be ample for the purpose. All visitors should be in charge of one of the guards, and no guard should have charge of more than six visitors at one time. The guard should take care that the visitors in his charge do not communicate with any of the prisoners.

19. For the reasons fully set forth in the foregoing report, the commissioners recommend that the services of James H. Metcalfe, warden; William Sullivan, deputy warden; Patrick O'Donnell, storekeeper, and N. P. Wood, assistant storekeeper, be dispensed with; and that James Devlin, the engineer, and James C. Weir, the steward, be summarily dismissed.

We approve of paragraph 15 in its entirety. As to 16, correspondence is now being exchanged with the provincial governments for the purpose of having criminal lunatics removed to the provincial asylums. Seventeen; there is also correspondence as to that. Paragraph 18 is approved of. Paragraph 19, that more particularly concerns hon. gentlemen on the other side, refers to retirements and dismissals. In substance this paragraph is approved of except as to the warden. I may say that we have no present intention of removing the warden, Mr. Metcalfe.

Mr. BERGERON. No present intention?

Mr. HENDERSON. When is it intended to remove him ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is not intended to remove him at the present time.

Mr. HENDERSON. I suppose his removal depends on when the Ontario elections come off.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am quite sure that that was not the intention, but that is a valuable suggestion. We are dealing with this matter very seriously, and there is no reason at the present time to justify Mr. Metcalfe's removal.

Mr. BERGERON. What about Mr. Sullivan ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. As to Sullivan he must go ; O'Donnell must go ; Wood must also go ; Weir also. Devlin undoubtedly must go ; he has already gone.

Mr. FOSTER. How much farther are you going to send him ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is an inquiry which I think is quite pertinent. I may say that it is quite possible that he may have to go back.

Mr. FOSTER. On salary ?

Mr. BERGERON. That is a great recommendation for a man if he wants to get work elsewhere.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think it is proper to say, that that requires explanation. But it is a fact that so far as Devlin is concerned the charges contained in the report are of such a serious character that we would not be justified in allowing him to remain. We give him an opportunity to explain, and we must give him that opportunity either by way of evidence to be given by him in answer to charges to be formulated or by way of a trial. It has not been decided yet, but he will have one or the other.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the Solicitor General if the committee is to understand, that so far as the evidence contained in the report of the commissioners is concerned, the Government see no reason why Mr. Metcalfe should be dismissed.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In so far as the report is concerned, I will state, now, again, that there is no intention at the present time of removing Warden Metcalfe. We will not adopt that conclusion of the report.

Mr. COCHRANE. What is the explanation as to paragraphs 20 and 21 ?

20. In view of the advanced age of Dr. Strange, the present prison surgeon, the commissioners think that his retirement would be in the interest of the prison.

21. While the commissioners have reason to believe that the present chief keeper, William S. Hughes, is a zealous, active and intelligent off-

cer, and a good disciplinarian, they think (in view of the friction which has for some time existed between him and some of the other officers of the penitentiary), that it would be in the interest of the penitentiary that he should be transferred to another prison, or to some other branch of the public service.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Twenty refers to Dr. Strange. A change may become necessary, but there is no intention at present to make the change.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the age of Dr. Strange ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. He is a very old man.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. member for Kingston, Mr. Britton, ought to know how old he is.

Mr. BRITTON. He is about 72, I think.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think he is in the vicinity of 70 years of age.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose the Solicitor General would be stopped from disposing of any man's services on account of age until he reaches that fixed maximum established in the case of Mr. Gunn who has been appointed to an office at Kingston. Officials may attain to that age in the service, but does not the hon. gentleman think it a good experiment to appoint non-officials who are of advanced age ?

Mr. BRITTON. Whatever may be done in the case of Dr. Strange by the present Government, I have not the slightest doubt that had the late Government remained in power the recommendation in regard to his superannuation would have been carried out.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. As to 21, in reference to the transfer of Hughes, it is not probable that he will be transferred. The evidence goes to show that he is a faithful and good officer, and that he may be of great use in the penitentiary.

22. The commissioners are of opinion that the number of keepers and guards (56) now employed in the prison is unnecessarily large, being more than one to every eleven prisoners ; and they believe, for the reasons given in their separate report, that with judicious arrangements, the number might safely be reduced (even while the farm is retained) to forty-eight, or one guard to twelve prisoners, and if the farm be not retained, to one guard for fourteen prisoners.

Number 22 refers to the reduction in the officers. That certainly will be carried out as soon as it is possible to properly reorganize the penitentiary. The recommendation in paragraph 23, will, as far as possible, be carried out.

Mr. CLANCY. At what price was the binder twine sold to Mr. Hobbs ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I cannot give the figures now, but I have them in my office and will give them later on. I may say that tenders were called for in the regular course, and that one-half cent was obtained from Mr. Hobbs better than the best other tender put in.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it the intention of the Government to continue the manufacture of binder twine in the Kingston Penitentiary?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The whole question of the employment of prisoners is being considered with a view of ascertaining the most profitable employment they can be put to. As the binder twine plant has cost the country something in the vicinity of $50,000, it would be very hard to expect that without very careful consideration we should set that industry aside.

Mr. SPROULE. In this report I find the following:—

28. All the prison industries and all branches of trade conducted by the prison should be placed under the supervision of a thoroughly competent chief trade instructor, one if possible, who has had experience in manufacturing and as a successful man of business, who should be given authority, under proper regulations, to purchase all manufacturing and engineering supplies, and to sell all prison products.

29. The storekeeper should purchase all maintenance supplies not used in the trades or industries or engineering departments; and should be selected for his established character as a competent and upright business man, having had experience in dealing in the class of goods required for prison maintenance.

Is it the intention of the Government to carry out that recommendation?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. These are parts of the general scheme of reform which we are now considering. It is intended to carry out the recommendation as regards a thoroughly competent trade instructor, but there will be no unnecessary increase in the staff so far as the balance of that recommendation is concerned.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it the intention to invest that man with power to buy all supplies and sell all products as recommended here?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is no such intention at the present time. This recommendation would necessitate that for the present system of tender we should allow a man to buy in the open market at the time the goods are required. That is the system that exists at the Central Prison at Toronto, and if we consider the results obtained, that system has certainly very great advantages; but, on the other hand, it is undoubted that it has very serious disadvantages also.

Mr. CLANCY. The Solicitor General will bear in mind that one of the commissioners who make these recommendations is connected with the Central Prison, and his recommendation cannot be without strong feeling of defending the system which prevails in this institution. It seems to me, the Government should go very slowly in endorsing the conclusions of that gentleman.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I quite appreciate that. My hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) must bear in mind that the comparison between the Kingston Penitentiary and the Central Prison, in this respect, is based upon the actual figures of results obtained, and not upon what this gentleman may have said.

Mr. CLANCY. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) depends upon the printed reports with regard to the maintenance of the Central Prison he will find himself very far afield. The same services are not taken into consideration at all in making the comparison.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) cannot apply so far as the purchase of supplies are concerned.

Mr. SPROULE. Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that these goods would be purchased on the open market?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is the recommendation, but there is no present intention to do that. I may state that we have at the present time asked for tenders for supplies for the coming year.

Mr. BRITTON. The Solicitor General has stated in reference to some of these matters, that there is to be an inquiry by the Inspector. I call his attention to page 21 of the report, which refers to the present inspector, and in view of that, some care might be taken as to whether the inspection is to be under the present officer or not. Certainly, according to the report of the persons who investigated the matter, the system of inspection as it has been carried on of late years—I am not referring to particular persons—seems to be manifestly insufficient and entirely ineffectual as to preventing things that the commissioners complain of.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Naturally, all these matters are directly under the control of the Minister of Justice (Sir Oliver Mowat), and especially penitentiaries, are under his exclusive control. Therefore, before I came here to answer the questions that might be put to me, I had a conference with the Minister of Justice, and which conference resulted in reducing to writing what I should say here as representing him. Dealing with the inspector of penitentiaries, there are some portions of this report that rather reflect on him, but I have also to draw the attention of the committee to this fact; the inspector has only been an officer for a year or two, and within that time it was impossible for him to bring about the reforms which really he has recommended from time to time to the department. I must say on his behalf that since he has been in office the annual expenditure has decreased from $468,000 in 1894-95, to $389,000 last year. We have almost saved $100,000 in the last two or three years so far as penitentiaries are concerned. I may say, speaking on behalf of the Minister of Justice, that the intention is, in so far as the prison regulations are concerned, to confer with the inspector of penitentiaries, and I further desire to say that if we had no confidence in the inspector of penitentiaries, of course he should not be in the position he occupies. But, we have confidence in him at the present time, and we mean to consult him and take him into our confidence for the purposes of discussing these regulations.

Mr. QUINN. Before the item passes I would like to draw the attention of the committee to the manner in which this commission has been conducted. I do not think that the officers complained of, and against whom findings have been made by the commissioners, have been given anything like a fair show or British justice in this matter at all. The commissioners, as I am informed and have reason to believe, and in fact as I know, to a certain extent conducted their investigation in a manner that outrages our ideas of justice or of investigations conducted by commissioners appointed by a Government or by a department such as the Department of Justice. Not only did they not set about their work regularly, that is, in a manner that a judge or a proper commissioner would; but they seemed to take the position rather of detectives or spies. They seemed to be there for the purpose of finding out something that was wrong, according to their idea, whether in reality it was wrong or not. They went to persons who they thought could furnish information, and who they perhaps thought could furnish this information without having any ground for believing they could; asserted that these persons were in a position to furnish the information; asserted that they had been guilty themselves of certain offences, and that the best thing for them to do would be to make a clean breast of the whole matter; and thereby save themselves and other persons implicated from prosecution or other consequences. Not only was this done, but I have reason to believe that the Department of Justice was placed in possession of certain facts concerning different members of the committee, the secretary, (I think, in particular. I think the Solicitor General will bear me out in that. Letters written by the secretary were placed in the Department of Justice, in which letters the secretary asked certain individuals to help him out in bringing home charges to different individuals in the penitentiary, who were then accused. But, stranger than all, when the parties who had been accused asked to be allowed to hear the evidence which was given against them, to have counsel to represent them at the investigation, to give any explanation, or to examine witnesses on their own behalf, not only were their requests refused, but they were kept in perfect ignorance of any charge that had been made against them until the report had been sent in, and until the fact of the existence of such a report had been brought out in this House. Now, it is not my intention to attempt to apologize either for the misconduct of officials or the misconduct of the commissioners. Nor is it my purpose or my duty to make any charges against these commissioners or against this secretary. I think it is sufficient simply to draw the attention of the Solicitor General to the facts which I have stated in order to have justice done to these men. The hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Tupper) has examined this report very carefully, and I think it was his intention to say something on this subject, had he been present. Unfortunately, he is not able to be here; but I think that in this case the same system should have been followed that had been followed in the case of commissions in other departments—for example, the system that had been followed in the case of the commission of investigation into the affairs of the penitentiary at Kingston in 1848. In that case the commissioners reported:

After the most mature deliberation, we resolved that the fairest and most satisfactory mode was to conduct the investigation in the first place in private, and, after maturing our inquiries, to draw up from the evidence formal charges against any officer who might appear to be implicated, and furnish him with a copy of such charges and the testimony to sustain them; and should such officer deny the allegations made to his prejudice, we determined that he should have the opportunity of recalling the witness for re-examination, or summoning such additional witnesses as he might think proper, for his defence.

I think that will strike any member of this committee as not only the reasonable thing to do, but as the proper and just mode of procedure. Further on, they say:

We conceived this mode of proceeding was highly advantageous to the accused; for though the preliminary evidence would thus be taken in his absence, the benefit for having the testimony in writing, with time to scan every line of it, instead of cross-examining on the moment, greatly overbalanced any slight disadvantage which might attend it. The main objection to this mode of proceeding, however, was the length of time it would occupy, and to this consideration we gave full weight; but we felt that in dealing with such an institution, it was most desirable that there should be no room for complaint that injustice was done to any one, and that the fullest opportunity for explanation should be afforded to all.

These extracts are from the report of the commissioners appointed to inquire in the affairs of the provincial penitentiary at Kingston on June 23rd, 1848. In this case the commissioners, instead of following that procedure, sat, one might say, with closed doors. It was a star chamber investigation. One witness at a time was brought in, and was examined privately. The person whom he accused knew nothing of the evidence which was adduced against him. Incompetent stenographers were employed, I am informed, and only portions of the evidence suitable to the views or ideas of the commissioners were taken down by the stenographers, and under the direct instruction of the commissioners. That is, it was not the exact words of the witness that were taken down; but, after a statement had been made by the witness, the commissioners would instruct the stenographer to take down such and such a statement as having been made by the witness. The deposition was not read over to the witness, and the witness was given no chance to correct any mistakes or misunderstandings taken down in the course of the statement he had made. Extracts were taken from these supposed depositions and made up to form the report on which the commissioners based their report—that is, not made up by the stenographers, not made up by the witnesses, but made up by the commissioners themselves. Another thing: the persons who were accused were not allowed to be present during the examination of any of these witnesses, nor were they allowed to cross-examine any witness. Nor were they allowed to have counsel to represent them at the examination of any of these witnesses, nor even to know that there were any complaints against them. When they asked, after having been themselves examined as witnesses, if any complaint had been made against them, the commissioners replied: "You are not charged with anything, consequently we cannot allow you to be represented or have counsel to cross-examine any witnesses." So that these men found themselves in this position, that until the report of the commission was brought before this House, they actually did not know, except through public rumour in the public press, communicated no doubt by the commissioners themselves or their friends, that there was any charge against them. Not only this, but the sources of information of the commissioners were such as to condemn their course in the eyes of any unprejudiced judge. During this commission, the members of it, particularly the secretary,—and I base this statement, not upon mere casual information, but on the sworn testimony of those who have been examined and whose depositions are now in the hands of the Minister of Justice—were in constant communication with one of the convicts, a man of undeniably bad character, who had been punished by this very officer against whom complaints were made. On the evidence of this bad character, these men are about to be or have been dismissed. With this man, the secretary of the commission was in constant communication and frequently closeted. This prisoner was the confidant of the secretary of the commission, and as a reward for the services which he rendered in that capacity, I am informed, he has since been pardoned. If I am incorrect in that statement, the Solicitor General will probably set me right. He will probably tell us if this man named Mathewson, who figures very prominently as witness in this place has since been pardoned, and in that connection, I would ask my hon. friend also to give us the prison record of Mathewson. Not only was this convict a man notably of bad character in the penitentiary, the principal informant and agitator, but other means were adopted to obtain information which, I think, will not meet with the approval of the Minister of Justice or the Solicitor General. Here, for example, is a letter written by the secretary of this commission in order to obtain evidence, and I read it to show that the object was not to obtain evidence in the public interest, but to ferret out, by fair or foul means, evidence which would support the charge which, in the secretary's own mind, had already been substantiated against the accused. The letter is paper J of the record and is headed "private":

Kingston, January 29th, 1897.

Dear Dave,—Some years ago, when you were traveller for our oil company, you told me it was absolutely necessary to pay the engineer in the penitentiary a commission in order to be able to do business with him. You can help me out by telling me how much commission, and how to go about it. If so, put me on the way. Are you doing anything in British Columbia mines?

Yours truly,

R. J. EILBECK,
British North American Hotel.

Hon. gentlemen will remark this phrase: "You can help me out by telling me how much commission and how to go about it." Help him out. This is the secretary of the commission appointed by the Department of Justice to investigate the affairs of the Kingston penitentiary regarding its administration. Why should he ask anybody to help him out? He occupied a judicial position, and why should he ask any one to help him to convict a criminal. Is it the duty of a person occupying a judicial position to convict the prisoner brought before him? How is this man to help him out? You can help me out, he says, by telling me how much commission you paid and how you went about it.

Mr. BRITTON. Eilbeck was not one of the commissioners.

Mr. QUINN. He was the secretary of the commission, and that makes the case infinitely worse, that he should, while secretary, occupy the position of detective as well. What confidence can be placed upon the report or the minutes he will make of any of the meetings or the report he may make of the evidence taken if we find him making a matter of personal interest to himself that this man to whom he wrote should furnish the means of convicting the accused of accepting bribes or commission.

Mr. HAGGART. Who was this man?

Mr. QUINN. His name is Eilbeck and I will tell you in a moment who he was. The point I want to make in this connection is that no reliance can be placed on his action either as secretary or reporter of that commission, because by that letter he shows he had a personal interest in obtaining information in every possible way for the purpose of ruining this man whom he intended afterwards to judge. What happened afterwards? The gentleman to whom this letter was addressed came before the commission and made the following declaration:—

I, David John Roy, in the city of Toronto, county of York, do solemnly declare, that the only business I ever did with the penitentiary was the sale of two barrels of lubricating oil, and one barrel of seal oil, some years ago, and that the order for the same was given me by the warden, no other person being mentioned, nor do I remember having mentioned to Mr. Eilbeck, that to do any business with the penitentiary, some one had to be paid.

And I make this declaration, solemnly believing the same to be true, by virtue of the Act respecting Judicial Oaths.

Here is the man to whom the letter was addressed, swearing that he never gave Mr. Eilbeck to understand that he had to pay any bribe or commission to any employee of the penitentiary before he could do business with them. We do not know how many of these letters were sent out by this industrious secretary, but we find this letter and we have every reason to believe it was not the only one. An hon. gentleman has asked who that Mr. Eilbeck is. I do not know the gentleman personally, but I have a little information concerning him here. I will read a statement about Mr. Eilbeck, which, I think, will interest the committee and may give hon. members some idea of who he is. This is taken from the "Catholic Record," of February 13th, 1897, in which they speak with approval of the appointment of Mr. Fraser as one of the commissioners—

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Who are "they;" who speaks of Mr. Fraser in that way?

Mr. QUINN. He is spoken of in that way in the "Catholic Record."

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Give the signature of the letter you are going to read from.

Mr. QUINN. I am going to give all—

Mr. QUINN.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Before you read the statement from the newspaper give the authority on which it makes that statement.

Mr. QUINN. I will give all the authority in proper form.

Mr. BRITTON. That is not on the authority of the "Record" but of—

Mr. QUINN. The Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) and the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) are deeply interested in defending the character of Mr. Eilbeck. I can understand that in the case of the hon. member for Kingston, but why the Solicitor General should display such anxiety to defend Mr. Eilbeck, I do not know. I shall give my authority; I shall give everything in connection with the matter. It is not my desire to hide or cover up this matter in any way. What I want is a proper investigation and the truth. I have no desire to vilify Mr. Eilbeck before this committee. I do not know him; and, if what I hear about him is true, I shall take very good care not to know him unless I have a chance to prosecute him in a court of justice. Now, I say I will read from the "Catholic Record" of February 13th, 1897, an article in which, while the appointment of Mr. Fraser is commended, the following expressions occur:—

The presence of Mr. Fraser would, very probably, have had the effect of preventing one, at least, of the commissioners from acting the role of a detective and resorting to means which no man of honour or fine feeling would stoop to in order to gratify his own anti-Catholic feeling and that of the Kingston bigots by whom he is influenced. Mr. Fraser would have, however, been a check upon Mr. "Bob" Eilbeck, the secretary of the commission, whose conduct during the prolonged absence of Messrs. Noxon and Meredith, at Toronto, has been as unprecedented as it was unwarrantable and illegal. This person, from his bucket-shop experience, is an adept in all those low tricks and expedients so familiar to "smart" men of his type. Eilbeck played a mean part for his masters by collecting, inside and outside the prison walls, for their information, all manner of falsehoods, slanders and exaggerations from the most questionable sources. His chief confidant, companion and informant was a convict named Mathewson, who has served at least three terms in Kingston, the Central Prison and St. Vincent de Paul, and who was recently released from the former place. Eilbeck violated the law by taking this convict from his allotted work without the warden's knowledge or consent, and by being closeted with him for hours together. Never before, in the history or traditions of the Kingston or any other penitentiary in Canada, have proceedings so flagrantly disgraceful been tolerated. A convict betimes had been accepted as a sworn witness to corroborate the evidence of an officer; but it has been a standing rule, observed by all concerned in penitentiary administration, not to interview convicts in private, or receive their very questionable and unsupported statements against any member of the staff. In fact, "Bob"—

This is this Mr. Eilbeck, I understand.

—has been exercising plenipotentiary powers far greater, indeed, than the commissioners could lawfully relegate to him. He is the tool—so far as they can use him—of the extreme bigots of both political parties in Kingston. While "Bob" has proved himself a thoroughbred sleuth-hound in hunting down Catholic employees, it is rather a singular fact that he has failed to bring to light the peccadilloes of any of the oath-bound "brethren" who have been levying a little blackmail; and there are such! Is this the result of mere oversight, or sympathy, or what?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). Is that an editorial of the "Catholic Record"?

Mr. QUINN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) must not allow his anxiety to overleap itself. I will tell him in a moment.

It can be hardly possible that the Minister of Justice—if cognizant of the mode of acting carried out by the commissioners and their clerk—would or could approve of such exceptional proceedings. No character, however pure and clean, could escape being smirched and injured by means of the dark, underhand and star-chamber machinations and plots which have, thus far, characterized the inquiry. By the way, the commissioners are bent on making the best of their opportunity to do a little quiet business on their own behalf. They are about three months ostensibly engaged in searching for "mares' nests" at Kingston, being paid at the rate of $10 a day each, and expenses. This is a nice little bon-bon to dally with and hold in grasp. Our octogenarian friend, "E. A."—

I think that refers to Mr. Meredith.

Mr. BRITTON. Who is a good Conservative.

Mr. QUINN. But surely, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Britton) does not think this is a matter of politics. Surely he does not think that I am speaking of this case as a matter of politics.

Mr. BRITTON. By no means, but the hon. gentleman's friends on the other side are.

Mr. QUINN. I do not care whether he is a Conservative or a Liberal, whether he has any politics or whether he has not. I want to know whether he is an honest man and whether he has conducted this investigation honestly and disinterestedly. I do not say that there could not be such a thing as a dishonest commissioner a Conservative, but if he be dishonest as a commissioner, I am glad to have an opportunity of saying what I have to say about his conduct.

—is fond of such precious windfalls, and will not soon or readily abandon the crib so well supplied with golden pap. It is quite likely Mr. Noxon has no squeamish qualms about following the example of a senior colleague, and enjoys "a good thing," when it "falls in his fish." Two things may be safely said of the commissioners: first, that they have not performed a fair month's work since the inquiry opened; secondly, that the result of their very trying and "pecoliar" task will go a short way in reimbursing the treasury for their pay and pickings.

Now, this article is dated February 6th, 1897, and is a communication addressed to the "Huron Expositor" the 29th January. It seems.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. And signed by—?

Mr. QUINN. Signed by "An onlooker."

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, an "onlooker." I do not know who the gentleman is. Probably the hon. gentleman for Kingston is acquainted with "Onlooker."

Mr. BRITTON. No, and I do not know anybody who is acquainted with him.

Mr. QUINN. At any rate, two respectable newspapers in Ontario have taken the responsibility of publishing this, the "Huron Expositor" and the "Catholic Record," and I have not heard of any proceedings having been taken against either of them. Both these newspapers published this. The hon. member for Kingston evidently knew about this before, and my hon. friend the Solicitor General knew that they were not editorial notices, and knew that they were published by "Onlooker." I do not know that he has displayed his knowledge or his interest in the matter by taking warning from what has been said there, or investigating to see if these things are true. For example, there is one statement made there which I think is very important, and which might have been inquired into by the Solicitor General and the truth ascertained as to whether this man Eilbeck violated the law by taking this convict from his allotted work without the warden's knowledge or consent, and by being closeted with this man for hours together.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I did not verify that, but it was done. He had the consent of the warden.

Mr. QUINN. It was only true, then, in so far as his having been closeted with him for hours together?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is quite true.

Mr. QUINN. Now, I may say here, by way of parenthesis, that my only acquaintance with Mr. Noxon was derived from an interview that I had with a client of mine concerning this investigation, at the time that Mr. Noxon was interested in finding out evidence about this penitentiary; and I am informed by this gentleman, a gentleman of standing in Montreal, that in course of conversation with Mr. Noxon, the latter asked him if it was not a fact that he had been paying commissions to different officers of the penitentiaries. This man said: Well, Mr. Noxon, from what you tell me, you are the official connected with the department of prisons, I think, one of the inspectors in Ontario, and you know how these things are done. Now, you purchase large quantities of stuff for the penitentiaries yourself? Yes. Well, you understand how it is with people who buy these large quantities. Of course, if you came down here to buy from me you know I would be glad to treat you personally very well, and I think if you are in good company here you will find it to your advantage, I will treat you personally very well. Mr. Noxon did not resent it, but he said, "Very well, I will see about it, I think I will be able to buy from you." This, Sir, is the man who was sent to investigate the honesty of other people. Now, without reading any more extracts from these papers many of which would be very interesting, let us take the report as it stands, and let me say one or two things in connection with it. In the first place, Mr. Chairman, we find the commission was appointed for—what purpose? We find in the first sentence of their report that the object was "to investigate and inquire into the affairs of the Kingston penitentiary with special reference to matters relating or pertaining to economy in the management thereof." Now, that is the first object of the commission—"and into all such other matters and questions as may from time to time be authorized or directed by the order of His Excellency the Governor General in Council or by the Minister of Justice, and to report the result of their investigation to the Minister of Justice, at his office at Ottawa." Now, this would not indicate a judicial position at all. My hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) reminded me that this commission did not occupy the position of judges, that it was simply what would have been called, and what has been called in Great Britain, a smelling commission. They were there for the purpose of ferreting out anything that might be wrong. They were not endowed, possibly, with the powers or with the dignity of judges. They were there for the work they had to do, and were selected from the population for their fitness, possibly, in smelling things out, and in acting as detectives in their investigation that was to be conducted by them. But they were appointed for the purpose of inquiring into the affairs of the Kingston penitentiary, with special reference to matter relating or pertaining to economy in the management of the penitentiary. Now, what is the first thing they do? The first thing they do is to send in six or seven reports, not concerning the economical management of the affairs of the penitentiary, or anything of that kind; but evidently on questions which were subsequently submitted to them by the Department of Justice, after they had received this general commission. Now, in this report what do they do? They arrogate to themselves, as I maintain, the position of judges. They do not take the position of investigators, because we do not find in this report the evidence upon which they based their conclusions. They arro-gate to themselves the position of judges, and virtually decide as to the official life or death of several of the officials of the penitentiary. They do not give any grounds for it. They do not say, Here is the evidence, and such and such a thing is sworn to; they do not send to the Department of Justice a copy of the depositions which have been taken and sworn to by these men, and say, We ask you now to render judgment. But they take upon themselves the responsibility of judges, putting aside altogether the evidence that had been taken by them, as I am informed and have reason to believe—because I have sworn testimony to prove that they did not take all the evidence that had been given, but took such portions of it as they deemed proper and right for their own purposes; and on that they based a judgment which they, as judges, afterwards rendered. Now, is this a proper position for these men to occupy before this House? Let me here ask the Solicitor General if it would not be well to let this committee have the benefit of the other reports which have been sent in by these men. There are very important matters that were submitted to this commission to inquire into. For example, the Solicitor General, and probably the member for Kingston might think it of greater importance to find out whether a particular article was bought at one shop or another, they might consider it of greater importance to find that out, and might not think it of any importance, for example, to know anything about the shooting of Convict Hewell by Chief Hughes, on the 9th of October, 1896. Evidently the Solicitor General did not think much about it, because there is no report of the kind before the House. We have reports against other individuals, but none concerning the shooting of the prisoner Hewell. But other things have been inquired into by these gentlemen, for example the escape of the convicts, Morris and Macdonald from the penitentiary, but no report concerning them is brought down. But we have this report here, which, I presume, is the great work of the commission, the work for which they were appointed, to find out some individuals against whom they could establish something upon which to hang a charge, in order that the official lives of these men might be sacrificed to make way for some of their own friends.

Mr. BRITTON. I can assure the hon. gentleman that I had no such desire.

Mr. QUINN. I would not charge my hon. friend with that, certainly; but it is evidently the intention of the commission. Now, let us see what they say. They are very anxious to get little jobs for themselves, and, of course, they do not lose an opportunity of any kind in order to find out. They recommend certain improvements in the penitentiary; they recommend that certain things be done, but I cannot lay my hands upon the clause at the moment. I remember it so well ; it struck me as peculiar at the time. It struck me that this course would not have been advised if it had not given an opportunity for an inspector, or somebody else appointed by the Government, to visit the penitentiaries of the United States, Germany, and possibly Russia, to find out what was the custom in the institutions in these countries. The object, of course, was to provide an occupation extending over a year or two for somebody who is possibly very much in need of it. The commissioners in their report state :

At the present time there are a number of officers who are closely connected by family ties, and, as might be expected, the members of this family compact are naturally regarded with suspicion and dislike by the other officers. That a number of relations or connections should hold office simultaneously in any prison seems, on general grounds, most objectionable.

I have nothing to say about that, but the commissioners, after having smelt out this fact, ought to have put the Minister of Justice in a position to show to the satisfaction of the committee that this statement is so. I mention it as a general principle that these gentlemen ought to have put before this committee, and ought to have put in the hands of the Minister of Justice the evidence upon which they have arrived at the conclusions they have arrived at in the report, and if such evidence was put in the hands of the Minister of Justice it ought to have been brought down and placed before this committee. It is not my desire to defend any persons who have done wrong in the penitentiary ; I have no desire to shield those who have robbed the public and the Government by receiving commissions from persons selling articles to the penitentiary, but I have a desire to see justice done in matters of this kind. I have a desire to see fair, British justice meted out to everybody whether he be a public official or whether he occupies the humblest position in society when his conduct is being investigated by the Department of Justice. What do I find ? The engineer, against whom charges have been made, has, I understand from the Solicitor General, either been dismissed or is about to be dismissed, and he is going to be brought before the courts, I understand. I am very glad to hear this, because I think it will furnish an opportunity of having the truth proven in this case. The engineer put before the Department of Justice a statement of what he believed to be the truth, of what he believed to be the conditions and circumstances connected with his administration of his department, and this statement was supported not only by his own affidavit, but by the affidavits of many officers of the penitentiary. These are on record in the Department of Justice. I only ask the Department of Justice, before any action is taken, to remember that to these men, although occupying humble positions in the community, and to their children, their reputations are as dear to them as the reputation of the Solicitor General is to him. They are entitled to an investigation. It is not a right or proper condition that they should be condemned until they have been condemned on legal evidence. Such a thing would not be tolerated before any court in this country ; why, then, should it be tolerated before the highest court in the country, by the Parliament of Canada. I ask then, Mr. Chairman, that the Solicitor General shall take no step in this matter until he has been furnished and can furnish this committee with evidence of such a conclusive character as will leave no doubt of the guilt of these men who are charged by these commissioners. I ask him to give his personal attention to this matter and that he will act fairly and justly by these men. I ask him to do justice in this case in the interests of justice, in the interest of the House, in the interest of the public officials of this country, and in the interest of the Department of Justice.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The hon. gentleman has thought it necessary, for what possible purpose I cannot say, to make an attack upon the personal character of the commissioners appointed to investigate the affairs of all the penitentiaries of Canada with the exception of the one at Dorchester. He has called them spies and detectives, and he has said that they were a smelling commission. He has applied these words to men of the reputation of Mr. E. A. Meredith and Mr. G. K. Fraser, not to say anything about Mr. Noxon, who is known to the majority of those present. He has thought proper to employ these expressions upon what evidence it has not pleased him to make known to this committee. I shall not say anything in answer to that, but the hon. gentleman referred the committee to a letter of Mr. Eilbeck, which he read a moment ago. This letter purports to have been written by him to a gentleman in Toronto, and refers to a previous conversation he had had with this gentleman, and asking him whether he correctly remembered that previous conversation, and whether he remembered what he then stated was true. Mr. Eilbeck was appointed secretary of the commission and, in the course of the investigation, he was reminded of a conversation which he had had, and which, in my opinion, would go far to justify a charge against one of the employees. Upon such evidence as this, the charge we have listened to for the last half hour has been made. It is not necessary at all for me to characterize such action or such conduct as that. Every right-minded man in this House will know how to appreciate such a charge as that. As to the system which was followed in this investigation, I may say that we have in the penitentiaries of Canada some 1,373 inmates each year. There is expended the sum of $400,000 for the maintenance of these inmates. We have discovered that within the last year or two the expenditure connected with our penitentiaries was reduced by $100,000. We put to ourselves this question: Is it not possible by an investigation to ascertain how this decrease was made so as to come to a conclusion whether or not a further reduction may be possible. That investigation was held by three commissioners. We not only have their reports, but every bit of evidence that was produced before them. We have also every document upon the subject, and these are filed in the Department of Justice. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Quinn) took the position that this evidence should have been before this committee. This committee asked for the production of the report, and it asked for nothing else. A request was made that the report be produced and it was printed at the request of the House. That was the course that was followed, and if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Quinn) desired to get further information he should have asked to have the evidence produced. He never asked for it, and now he seeks to make an argument on such a ground as that. We have the evidence of the commissioners in this matter. They filed their report, and if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Quinn) before getting up and attacking it and the commissioners, had condescended to come into the House and hear what took place he would have heard what I previously stated, that the report of the commissioners was considered by the Department of Justice and that we only adopted the conclusions as far as we thought they were tenable and based on the evidence. In regard to the persons against whom charges have been made by the commissioners we have to adopt either one of two courses, either formulate charges against the parties incriminated where they are of such a character as to necessitate an explanation, so as to give the man opportunity of explaining, or else prosecute them on a criminal charge. I am going to do one or the other in reference to one man who has been attacked. As to the employees of the department that we simply intend to remove without depriving them of any advantages to which they would be fairly entitled, in the way of a retiring allowance; that is a matter over which we must exercise our own control. If we think, in the interests of the public, and in the interests of the administration of the penitentiaries, one man should be removed, and we simply remove him, that is our business and we take the responsibility for it. But, if we dismiss a man, charging him with dishonesty, then we are in duty bound to do one of two things: either to give him an opportunity of explaining the charges made against him before the commissioners or before the Department of Justice, and give him an opportunity to explain so that the House may be informed of the explanation; or it is our duty to prosecute him as a criminal, and we will, as I have said, do one of the two things.

What was the condition of things existing in the Kingston penitentiary? And here it is proper to say that these charges made against the commissioners, based upon the statement that they have meted one measure of justice to a Protestant and another measure of justice to a Catholic; these charges should not have been made upon the authority of the anonymous scribbler in the paper to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Quinn) refers. I do not wish to make any trade of my religion, I do not wish to make any trade of my nationality; I do not wish to use either one or the other as a stepping-stone on which to reach power; but no matter what the position of a man may be, if he does not do honest and faithful service to the state, he must pay the penalty, no matter what religion he belongs to. Let us see how the management of the Kingston penitentiary was conducted from the point of view of economy. Take, for instance, the purchases that were made for the last seven or eight years. We find that the purchases for the Kingston penitentiary were made at a figure varying from 16 to 205 per cent above the market value. We find that to have been the general result in so far as purchases were concerned.

Mr. CLANCY. Can the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) find, from one end of the evidence to the other, anything to substantiate that charge, beyond the bald statement contained in that report?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, I will give you that. Take the invoices. They were submitted to a witness that was examined before the commissioners, a gentleman from Kingston named McKelvey.

Mr. CLANCY. A good Liberal.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. None the less truthful for that.

Mr. FOSTER. An exception to the general rule.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) must decide for himself. This gentleman was examined as a witness, the invoices were submitted to him—

Mr. CLANCY. What invoices?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Invoices of purchases made from Garth & Co., of Montreal, Clendenning & Sons, James Markum, Chanteloupe, Parker & Evans, James Wilson & Co., the Hamilton Packing Company, and Frank Gormley.

Mr. CLANCY. Do I understand that these are invoices of his own, compared with the same class of goods precisely, purchased for the penitentiary?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I state it and I repeat it now, he took the invoices, he took the market prices at the time; the invoices of purchases that were made, and comparing them with the market prices this is the result.

Mr. CLANCY. Has he compared two sets of invoices, one of his own as the purchaser, with the invoice of a similar class of goods that were purchased for the penitentiary? Is that the kind of invoice now before the committee?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am not discussing the question of invoices before the committee.

Mr. CLANCY. The Solicitor General will see that it is important to do so.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I stated that he took the market prices at the time, and it is indifferent to me what the market prices were.

Mr. QUINN. He has a competitor in business with these men. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) has no evidence of the market prices at all. They were simply in this gentleman's head, and he took up the invoices and looked at them.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. He took, for instance, the price lists of the very establishments that furnished these goods, and what more do we want than that? The hon. gentleman shakes his head, but I will take the invoices if he likes that were supplied to the customs upon which the entry was made of these goods, and in one case an invoice was supplied to customs for $908, and these same goods were sold to the penitentiary for $2,100.

Mr. QUINN. Does the hon. gentleman now refer to the purchase of the pump?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. When you are quite done I will go on with my speech.

Mr. QUINN. I now wish to state before this committee, to show the ignorance of these commissioners, that in estimating the cost of that pump, they took only one portion of the pump that is charged for, and they only took the customs entry on that, amounting to $908. As a matter of fact, the actual cost of the pump that was supplied was over $1,600.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Why do they charge $2,000?

Mr. QUINN. It was sold for $2,000, and I suppose people must make a profit on what they sell. This man actually paid nearly $1,700 for the pump, and sold it to the penitentiary for $2,000. $1,700 was the wholesale price of the pump, and that shows how the Solicitor General is mistaken.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Oh, yes, it will show very much how I was mistaken. That invoice that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Quinn) now refers to was for goods purchased from Frank Gormley.

Mr. QUINN. Yes.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Then how does it come to pass that that invoice was made out in the name of John A Rafter & Company?

Mr. QUINN. What has that to do with it?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Where is the fraud there?

Mr. QUINN. My hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) will probably tell us where the fraud is.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. At Kingston, inside of three months we will hear where the fraud is.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Let me explain that a little. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Quinn), in answer to this charge, says, that the invoice having reference to this pump does not include the whole of the invoiced article that was sold to the penitentiary. I have in my possession here, accessible to the committee, the invoice on which these goods were entered at the custom-house, and I have the invoice which was made out to the penitentiary. It is easy to make a comparison and to establish before this committee immediately the question of veracity. At the time these goods were entered at the custom-house it was found that they were undervalued. There was then a report made to the Controller of Customs—not the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), but his predecessor—that the goods were undervalued to the extent of $100. The goods were seized for undervaluation, an examination was made of them, and they were assessed with $100 added to the valuation. They were valued at the custom-house at $908, and the same goods were turned over to the penitentiary at $2,100.

Mr. WALLACE. The statement made by the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Quinn) was that the whole of the goods were not included in that invoice.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. My answer is that they are included.

Mr. QUINN. The point I make is that the item of one pump was not all that was supplied by Mr. Gormley to the penitentiary, but that there were several other articles supplied, the names of which I do not remember. I am informed, however, that this pump, which was invoiced simply as one pump, had with it several valuable attachments the cost of which amounted in the aggregate to nearly $1,700, while the invoice which was furnished to the penitentiary simply mentioned one pump; and, of course, when the investigators asked the price of this particular pump, they were given the list price, $908, but not the prices of the attachments. I would ask the Solicitor General to say whether there are not attached to this pump several valuable attachments, which would bring the price up to $1,600 or $1,700. This is not a matter of trying to shield any one; it is simply a matter of getting at the truth.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. My answer to the hon. gentleman is this. According to the invoice in our possession, the actual cost of pump, condenser, governor, and revolution counter, is, per invoice, $908; duty at 27½ per cent, $249; freight, $42.30; in all, $1,200. The invoice to the penitentiary is: bought of John A. Rafter, the same things, $2,260.

Mr. BERGERON. Are they the same articles?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I was not there at the time. The description agrees.

Mr. QUINN. I would ask the Solicitor General to let us see the invoices.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No, I will not.

Mr. QUINN. Is the hon. gentleman afraid to let us see the invoices?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am naturally very much afraid of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. That will not do. The hon. gentleman comes down as a Minister of the Crown with evidence which he has not given to the House, but which he uses to destroy an argument made by an hon. member of this House; and when an hon. member asks for that evidence, it must be given to this House, and given immediately.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have not the slightest objection to communicate it to the hon. member. In fact, I intended to hand it to him.

Mr. QUINN. Then, what was the object of the hon. gentleman's remark?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Of course, the hon. leader of the Opposition will understand that it is impossible for me to proceed if I am constantly interrupted.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has a right to object to interruptions, but having used that pump invoice as evidence, he has a right to send it to my hon. friend.

Mr. QUINN. I would like to know what the hon. member means when he says he would be naturally afraid to send it to me?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I did not say I would naturally be afraid to send it to the hon. gentleman. He asked what I would be afraid of, and I said that naturally I would be afraid of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. QUINN.

Mr. QUINN. I asked the hon. gentleman to send me the invoice, and he said: "I am naturally afraid to send it to the hon. gentleman." I would like to know why he is afraid. I think we can proceed in this matter without a show of such strong personal feeling on the part of the Solicitor General. I am asking for a proper investigation, and that justice should be done to the men who are accused; and in that it is the duty of the Solicitor General to assist me. If the hon. gentleman wishes to make this prosecution a personal matter, he is welcome to do so; but for all the glory he will get out of it or all the benefit he will do to the country, it will be very little indeed.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not know that I am after glory; I am endeavouring to satisfy the committee. The hon. leader of the Opposition says he would like to see the papers. I am willing to hand them to him. Of course, I would like to have them all returned.

Mr. FOSTER. I will not put any in my pocket.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Let us look at another item—the transactions in Montreal. For instance, it was intended to substitute six-inch pipe for eight-inch pipe, and the engineer of the penitentiary thought he would notify his friends, Messrs. Garth & Company, of the intention to make the substitution. He asked what would be allowed in the exchange for the pipe he was handing over, and what charge would be made for the six-inch pipe that was to be substituted. Messrs. Garth & Company wrote a letter in which they said that they would furnish to the penitentiary six-inch pipe at 66 cents a foot. They sent in an estimate, and undertook to supply it at that price. This is but a small matter, but only one of a dozen. Mr. Devlin wrote to them in reply, saying that the department would give 69 cents a foot. The invoice was furnished at that rate by Messrs. Garth & Company and was certified to by Mr. Devlin, and the Government were made to pay 3 cents a foot more for this particular item.

Mr. BERGERON. That is a fair case.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is clear, no question about it, and there are others equally clear. We have worse than that. I have in my possession a letter written by Mr. Devlin to Mr. Garth & Co., telling them of the intention of the Government to adopt the electric system of lighting for the penitentiary in substitution for the gas, and in which he tells them what the amount of the estimate is to meet the cost of this scheme. In the concluding paragraph of this letter he says:

I may be of some assistance to help the profits, if you get the work, and shall most willingly do so.

Mr. FOSTER. Who signs the letter?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Devlin.

Mr. QUINN. To whom is that letter written?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. T. Garth & Co., and it is written to them by a man who was supposed to look after our interest, who was supposed to watch the contractors and see that we got the best value for our money. There are other charges, and I may say this to the committee. The condition of things there, not only from the standpoint of public interest, but of what is absolutely fair and honest, requires a thorough investigation. Let me give another instance of what has occurred. The plant for lighting the penitentiary with gas was purchased in 1887, at a cost of $34,346. Of that amount we paid $21,552 for material. Mind you, this was in 1888, and in 1894 that gas plant was disposed of for $675. It cost $21,000, and six years later was sold for $675. It seems to me that when I state, one fact of that sort, I have said all that is required to justify the investigation. And more—there is the pump I mentioned which was paid for at a cost of $2,100, which was bought at the time I mentioned, and is still lying unused in the yard of the penitentiary—not even taken out of its case.

An hon. MEMBER. How long ago was that?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. 1894-95. Those things show clearly that an investigation was required and that something has to be done. It is with the greatest reluctance that I make these statements before the House, because I know they must go to the country, without this man being given the opportunity of replying to them. I never said a word of these things when first questioned; but in self-defence, in defence of the department, in defence of the commissioners, I think I am bound to mention them, though I had intended keeping them in reserve until an investigation was held and an opportunity given this officer to defend himself.

There is one item contained in that report which, I think, I ought to explain, and that is the charge made, in connection with the purchase from Messrs. Chanteloup & Co., that a post office order was sent to Mr. Devlin which was not accounted for and of which it was supposed he got the benefit. I made a thorough investigation, and so far as that particular charge is concerned, I must withdraw it unqualifiedly, because I traced the order in the Post Office Department and I found that Messrs. Chanteloup & Co. got it back and I now absolve Mr. Devlin from the charge of having appropriated it to his own use.

I do not want to go into details. I have taken all the care possible to have a thorough investigation. I did not want to accuse this man, and kept him where he was, although we have had the report over two months, I kept him in the employ of the Government in the penitentiary until Saturday when he was suspended but not dismissed, so that every opportunity might be given him to explain those charges. I do not think, under the circumstances, that the Minister of Justice (Sir Oliver Mowat) or myself ought to be blamed for harsh or precipitated action. I think we have dealt very leniently with this man, but we had a duty to perform, and it must be performed, let the consequences be what they may.

The committee rose and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1 p.m.

SUPPLY—MANITOBA AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the House to the fact that a number of revotes of railway subsidies are proposed, but I notice that the subsidy granted in 1894 to the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company has not been put in the Estimates this year. Now, this is a railway of great importance to the people in my constituency. In 1882, this company secured a charter from this House to build and operate a road from Portage la Prairie to Prince Albert, in Saskatchewan, and received a land grant of 6,200 acres a mile. Under this charter the company was bound to build fifty miles of the road each year. In 1893 the company came back to Parliament and received a new charter. The fifty-mile-a-year clause was not re-enacted, but a clause was inserted in the charter providing that the company shall build 20 miles a year, and they were to have nine years to complete the road. In 1896 they had not built any more of the road, and I am not aware that they have commenced, so far, in 1897.

Now, I said before that this was a very important question to the people of Saskatchewan. Hundreds of families went into that country and settled there, on the strength of the fifty-mile clause of the previous charter, believing that the road would be built through and that they would be settled on a line of railway. But the company has received a new charter under which they are compelled to build 20 miles a year, but they are not building even at that rate. The people are anxiously waiting for the Government to do something in reference to this matter so that they may have railway communication. This projected road runs through one of the most fertile portions of the North-west Territories—from Portage la Prairie to the Saskatchewan River is the garden of the North-west Territories; no question about that. I may say that out of 15,000 head of cattle shipped out of the province of Manitoba 8,000 came from that short line of railway only 230 miles long. That goes to show that the country is very fertile. There is everything there required for an agricultural community—good land, plenty of timber, plenty of hay and any amount of water. There are from 600 to 700 families settled along that extension. The road is built to Yorkton, but the country is settled 50 miles ahead of the road. It is also settled from Prince Albert for 100 miles in this direction, so that there is only a small district in the centre where there is no settlement. This line follows the original survey of the Canadian Pacific Railway as adopted by the Mackenzie Administration. A great many people went in at that time on the strength of the announcement that the Canadian Pacific Railway was to be built into that country, and they have been there ever since—for about 20 years. They are anxious now to have the benefit of railway communication in order to get their produce to market. If something is not done for these people, unquestionably a great many of them will leave the country. The Government is expending large sums to get immigrants into this country, and I think it is only reasonable that they should do something to keep the people that we already have, especially those who have been with us and settled in that country for from five to twenty years. It would be a deplorable thing if these people were to leave the country. In 1894 the Government granted the sum of $3,200 a mile for 100 miles to carry the road into the Stony Creek country, this being in place of 3,200 acres of land a mile, which was to revert to the Government. I am sorry to say that the Government have left that out this year. The Manitoba and North-western Railway Company have come to this House this session and secured a charter to build a line of railway from Langenburg into the Lake Dauphin country, 170 miles. If, in place of getting this charter, these people were obliged to continue the road for which they already have a charter, I think it would be a proper thing; the Government should not give them concessions under a new charter until they have fulfilled the conditions of the old one. It is a very serious matter when a company gets a charter to build a line in a certain direction, with a provision that 50 miles a year is to be built, and are not compelled to carry out their agreement, as a number of people flock into the country on the strength of the agreement being carried out. This company got a charter to build from Portage la Prairie to Prince Albert; they built from Portage la Prairie to Yorkton, which is as far as the line was thickly settled where it was likely to be a paying institution, and they dropped it there. I think that all the Government can do is to cancel the balance of their charter but that would not be wise as nobody else would be likely to take up the enterprise, because the present company have got the best part of the road, and no other company could get an outlet—it would not be likely to take up the balance because it might not be a good paying concern for some time, especially as they would have no outlet to the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway or Northern Pacific. Now I think that the Government in granting concessions to these people in 1893 and also this year in giving the new charter, have not taken into consideration the rights of the settlers along that road. These people settled there on the strength of the fifty-mile-a-year clause, which was allowed to remain in the charter for six or seven years. They think that they were entitled to some consideration when this charter was given from Langenburg to the Dauphin country, and also when the question was up of revoting this subsidy of $3,200 a mile. I might say in connection with this matter that there is no difference of opinion, I think, in Manitoba and the North-west Territories about the Manitoba and the North-western Railway. At a meeting of the business men of Manitoba and the North-west Territories, held in Winnipeg last winter, a resolution was passed favouring the extension of that road. These business men came from all portions of Manitoba and the North-west Territories, they knew all about the matter, and they would not have passed a resolution of this kind did they not think that it was in the interest of the country. I may say also that I think all the North-west members are a unit on this question. I would therefore ask the Minister of Railways to take this matter into his consideration and see if this bonus cannot be restored, and some assistance be given to this company to build at least 100 miles into the Stony Creek country, and to give these settlers relief.

CLOSE SEASON FOR LOBSTERS.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I wish to say a word or two with regard to a matter that was brought before the House some weeks ago, namely, the urgency of extending the open season for the fishing of lobsters around the Island of Cape Breton. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries is aware that there is a regulation providing for two weeks difference in the open season between the Atlantic border of the province of Nova Scotia and the coast of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, owing to the fact that the drift ice lingers so much longer around the coast of Cape Breton and on the shore of the Northumberland Straits. It may be asked, Why make a special difference between the Island of Cape Breton and the balance of the coast along the Northumberland Straits? This question I will answer in this way:

The geographical position of the island, lying as it does in the mouth of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, accounts for this, by the fact of the north-eastwardly drifting ice in spring coming direct against the coast of that island, remaining until late into the spring, and has frequently been known to float in fields around the whole island, destroying any fishing gear lying in its way—this, together with the consequent icy coldness of the water, preventing the fish moving around, as in more favourable conditions, cause the great drawbacks to our fishermen to which I have referred. The fishermen on the west coast are undoubtedly the most handicapped in this connection.

This matter has been brought to the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in preceding Governments, by the officers of that department; and the Minister considered it necessary from year to year, in order to meet this disparity in the conditions existing in the fisheries, to order his officials to give an extension of at least ten days to the lobster fishers to pursue their avocations around the Island of Cape Breton, as compared with the great portion the balance of the coast of the maritime provinces. Now, I say that these circumstances have not changed, they are exactly the same now as when they were reported in past years by the officials in that department. Therefore, I would ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to give the matter his most serious consideration; and I do so for the reasons given, and on the present occasion in view of the fact that the open season for fishing lobsters is about to expire. I may say that while this industry is not a very extensive one it is a very important one. During the past year no less amount than $2,500,000 worth of lobsters has been exported from this country, outside of home consumption. There are 70 packing establishments around the Island of Cape Breton which, in round numbers, furnish employment to about 2,500 fishermen; so there is a population depending upon this fishery of something between 11,000 and 12,000; and to deprive these people of a fair measure of time within which to pursue this industry, would be to them indeed a hardship. I may remark that two or three weeks ago mention was made of a petition very largely signed that was presented by the people of Cape Breton, asking the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to give an extension of time to the people pursuing this industry around that island. While the fishermen of the county I have the honour to represent have not been able to send a petition or a delegation here, as other industries have done, directly to interview the Minister, they feel that, having a representative here, they should rely upon him to bring their case before the Government. I therefore most respectfully urge upon the Minister of Marine and Fisheries the justice and the necessity of acceding to the most modest and reasonable request of these people. While acknowledging that it is most commendable in the Minister to wish to protect that fishery and to preserve it against undue and illegal fishing, I say that the fact of the lobsters being more plentiful around that island this season than for many seasons past, would go to show that the usual extension has not at all diminished the amount of fish that is usually caught around these shores. I may say also that when other industries called for assistance from the Government, these people never grumbled in paying their share of such assistance. I need not make any apology then for calling attention to the modest request of these people in view of the fact that they ask nothing at the hands of this Government except that they be let alone for a period of seven or eight weeks while they provide a means of subsistence for themselves and their families during the balance of the year. When this matter was last brought to the attention of the Minister he declared that he would call to his assistance in considering it, the gentleman who was at the head of that department with the late Government. While I know that this gentleman is well posted in the habits of and theories regarding the various tribes of fish, yet I must submit that when last fall he made a tour of inspection to those fishing grounds, the people I represent regret that he did not see fit to visit our coast at all. Therefore, while he may be versed as to certain theories, I regret to say that he has not taken the trouble to investigate what the conditions really are to found a theory on. I can only hope that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will give his favourable consideration to this matter, and give these people the opportunity in this particular that they desire.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) While this matter is before the House, I might be allowed, coming from a province in which this industry has been carried on so long, to add a few words to what the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. McLennan) has said with respect to an extension of the season for lobster fishing. This industry has been carried on along the coast of the province which I represent for a longer period than upon any part of the coast of Nova Scotia. While the hon. gentleman is to be commended for saying a word in favour of the large number of people who are interested in the undertaking in his county, I may tell him that from my experience of our coast, which is similarly situated to that of the hon. gentleman with respect to the ice on the coast, that if they continue to fish their coast as we have been fishing ours, in a very few years there will be very few fish to catch. I am aware that, time and again, several Ministers who have preceded the hon. gentleman in the position of Minister of Marine and Fisheries have been asked to extend the fishing season since it was cut down to its present limit. I may state in the interest of the industry, if it is to be continued and in the interest of the people who are engaged in it, that not only will the season not have to be lengthened, but that it will require to be shortened. I know myself that our coast is similarly situated to that of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. The ice floes around our coast remain so long in the season as to prevent the early prosecution of the industry, but the lobster packers who are most interested, realize that if the business is to be kept up at all, the season must be shortened or else the supply will be entirely exhausted. Each year has added to the number of factories, and to the thousands of traps that surround our coast, with the result that the lobsters are yearly becoming smaller and smaller, so small indeed that in many instances they are scarcely fit to can. The impression in my part of the province is that it would be a great mistake in the interest of the industry if means were taken to put pressure upon the Minister to extend the season in any manner whatever. I trust, for my part, that pressure will not be brought to bear on the Minister such as will lead him to extend the season, because the result would be that the industry would in a short time be wiped out.

Mr. YEO. Whilst it is quite true, as the hon. member for King's (Mr. Macdonald) has said, that in many parts of Prince Edward Island they do not wish for an extension of the season, still there is a small portion where it is absolutely necessary. It has been found necessary to do so in former years, and it applies with greater force this year. It has been a very unfavourable season on the west part of Prince Edward Island, and it is almost imperatively necessary that an extension should be given this year. Up to the present time they have done absolutely nothing, and it will be simply ruinous to these people if something is not done in their behalf. I hope the Minister will consider this matter and will grant some extension in the interest of these people. On the north side of the island they commence fishing early and they are quite prepared to close at the proper time, but it is quite different on this other portion of the island. I hope the Minister will give this matter his attention.

IMPEDIMENTS IN BEAR RIVER.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to call the attention of the Government again to a matter I spoke about at an earlier period of the session, and that is in reference to the impediments to navigation in the stream of Bear River. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries at that time said there were some doubts as to the responsibility of the parties concerned. Now, I would press upon the Government emphatically, that I approach this matter by no means in a partisan way, but entirely as representing the public. There are in the stream of Bear River impediments which are dangerous not only to property but to life. They have been there for these last two or three years. One vessel was partly wrecked upon them, and the Ministry are unable to find out who the parties are who are responsible. The Government is directly responsible to see that these impediments are removed; they can settle who shall pay for the removal afterwards. I press strongly and firmly upon the minds of the Government the necessity of seeing that life and property are not endangered. These impediments are the remains of the old piers of the bridge that was rebuilt by the local government. It may be in doubt, but I have no doubt whatever, and have looked into the matter very closely, that the local government are responsible for the cost of the removal of these piers. But the Dominion Government is charged by the British North America Act with all the navigable waters in Canada, and having charge of all the navigable waters in Canada, it is for them to see that these navigable waters are free from obstruction. They should not wait to see who is directly responsible, but should pay for the removal and then settle afterwards who is to bear the cost. Therefore, I press very strongly and emphatically upon the Government to see that this matter is attended to now, and find out afterwards who is responsible. It is a matter of detail entirely as to who finally pays. I have been called upon, not by the Liberal-Conservatives, but by prominent Liberals in the town of Bear River to present this matter, and the town of Bear River is not by any means a Liberal-Conservative town. It gives a majority against me every time. I shall not approach this in a partisan way, and I emphatically urge upon the Government to see that these impediments are removed at once.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). I have not lost sight of the question of that bridge which was put at an earlier period of the session. There is a dispute as to whether the municipality, the local government or the Dominion Government should remove this obstruction. It does seem, at first sight, extraordinary that the local government should abandon an existing bridge, build a new one, and then call upon us to remove the old bridge. I do not believe that I should be disposed to incur that expense until I am satisfied in regard to the point in dispute. I acknowledge what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mills) says, that we have charge of navigable waters, and that it is our duty to remove obstructions. I have communicated with the local government and pointed out what my opinion is as to the duty in this regard. I am in hopes that before long I shall have their reply.

CLOSE SEASON FOR LOBSTERS.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. When we speak of the larger and more important question which was brought to the attention of the Government by my hon. friend from Inverness (Mr. McLennan) and commented upon by my hon. friend from King's (Mr. Macdonald) and my hon. friend from Prince (Mr. Yeo); I may say that the matter has given me a very great deal of thought. The interest of the lobster fishery is very large, and my present inclination is very strongly against any further extension. I am convinced in my own mind, that if these extensions are continued from year to year the entire lobster fishery will be destroyed. I quite see the force of the remarks of my hon. friend from Prince (Mr. Yeo), that you cannot lay down a general rule to which there may not be some seeming exception, and there are parts of the province possibly that have stronger reasons to give for the extension than others. But the difficulty arises here: if you give an extension in one place where are you going to stop? The department is inundated with applications for extension, and as I am at present advised—both by the inspector of fisheries and by the commissioner of fisheries in the department—it would not be in the general interest of the industry itself; although it might be in the interest of one or two individuals to grant the extension.

I think the time has come when we must put down our foot on these extensions. Having already determined that the 15th of July is the date for the open season, we should either alter that by statute and keep to the altered date, or determine that the 15th of July is the proper date and have the moral courage to enforce it. I regret much to have to say to my friends, that so far as I see at present, I am not inclined to extend the existing season, although I know from personal knowledge that it will be a very great loss indeed to a large number of individuals. But, the national loss, the loss of the industry itself, the danger of the destruction of the entire industry if these extensions are granted, control my mind, and induce me very strongly to come to the conclusion which I have almost reached: that in the public interest no extension ought to be granted this year.

Mr. MARTIN. There is very great objection to these hard and fast rules which extend the same season to every part of the lower provinces. It is well known to the Minister of Marine, that the season which will suit one section will not suit another, and to make a universal rule will inflict a great deal of injury on certain sections of Prince Edward Island. I refer especially to the southern section of my province. The season for lobster fishing now in force is entirely unsuitable to that section, from St. Peter's Island eastwards towards High Bank, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Prince (Mr. Yeo), if I heard him aright. I can say to the Minister that he will have to adopt such regulations as will suit the different localities. That may entail a little more trouble on the department, but he has his officers all over the province, and it is my opinion that the different sections should be partitioned off and rules and regulations made for such sections as are found suitable for the fishing season there. The close season on the north side of the island is not at all suitable to the south side. If the Minister adopts this hard and fast rule, he will do a great deal of injury to people in Prince Edward Island. While a longer season on the whole, may not be judicious, yet certain regulations should be made to provide for different seasons in different sections as the circumstances may require.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). Did I understand the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to say that he will not further consider this question?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I did not say that. I said the question in my mind was strongly against the extension at the present time. I have taken very careful note of what my hon. friend (Mr. McLennan) has said, and I will see whether it is possible, in the general interest of this industry, to give an extension in the locality he asks for. I am dealing frankly with the hon. gentleman (Mr. McLennan) when I say, that at present the inclination in my mind is strongly against it.

Motion agreed to, and the House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Kingston Penitentiary ..... $167,300 00

Mr. QUINN. I have just a few words to say in answer to the hon. the Solicitor

General, and I can assure the committee that it is a matter of sincere regret to me, that the Solicitor General should consider this a personal question at all. My interest in this is neither to represent any of the accused, nor to criticise from a political standpoint what has been done in this matter, nor in any way to impede strict justice in dealing with men who have done wrong in any public department. My desire is simply to preserve in the country that respect for justice which is the only security we have for the proper administration of our laws. I say, Sir, that if the course of justice is perverted, either by a Minister of the Crown or by one occupying an official position under him; if a commissioner prostitutes his office for any purpose whatever, he does a most serious wrong, inasmuch as he degrades public justice, and belittles it in the eye of the people. This is my only object in criticising the report of the penitentiary commissioners, which is now in the hands of the House.

The Solicitor General has said, that the letter which was written by Secretary Eilbeck was written to this gentleman asking him to reassure Eilbeck, whether or not his recollection of a certain conversation was correct. I have taken the trouble to read that letter to the committee. It appears in "Hansard" and I am prepared to leave my interpretation of that letter to the consideration of the committee, who will decide if it bears in any way the construction that the hon. the Solicitor General has put upon it. I shall say nothing more on that point. The Solicitor General has also told us, that he has every bit of evidence and every exhibit that was obtained by the commissioners. I believe he has, but it is most unfortunate that he did not think fit to put that before the House when this report was brought down, so that members might be better able to discuss this matter. He has given us but one portion of the record, a portion relating to this pump of which he has made such a lot, but I believe we will discover on referring to the record, how valuable it would be, if we had had all the papers before us. The Solicitor General told the committee that this pump was sold for $2,260, and that it actually cost the vender $908. If I am not correctly stating what the hon. gentleman said, I would like him to put me right now, because it is on the assumption that he stated that, that I am going to read the documents which appear in the record. The Solicitor General told this committee that this pump cost $908, and that it was charged to the department at $2,260. Now, what do we find in this record?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In order to avoid mistake, and as my hon. friend evidently did not understand what I said, I will state that the pump cost $650, and the receiver $170. All the goods furnished to the penitentiary cost $908, and the amount paid was $2,260.

Mr. QUINN. I wish to show, by the documents which the hon. gentleman has submitted, that there was not one pump only, but that there were two pumps, and that the price given by the manufacturers of those pumps to the customs authorities was $1,600 on board at Dayton, Ohio. The Solicitor General knows, and the record he has presented proves, that the duty on these pumps is 25 per cent, and 27½ per cent on certain parts. If you add the duty at these rates, the freight charges from Dayton, Ohio, to Montreal and Kingston, and a reasonable profit on the machines, how far are you short of $2,260? Does anybody doubt that these machines were delivered? Here are the records which the hon. gentleman has produced, showing that the two pumps were asked for, that they were supplied, that they were valued at $1,600, and that duty was paid on that value, bringing the amount up to over $2,000. This is the great charge made against one of the officers of the penitentiary, and what are the facts in connection with it? The facts, as I find them here, are these, and I do not know them from any other source than the documents handed to me by the Solicitor General. I find that a report has been made by the engineer recommending that two pumps be purchased; this report is made to the warden of the penitentiary; in turn it is forwarded by the warden to the Department of Justice; it is approved by the inspector of penitentiaries; under instructions received from the Department of Justice, the order is given by the warden for these two pumps; permission is given to the engineer to examine different pumps which are in working order in different parts of the country, notably one at Ingersoll, Ont.; he goes there; he reports on the pump; an order is given by the warden of the penitentiary; and the two pumps are purchased for $2,260. A letter is here from the people who made the pumps. A seizure is made by the Customs Department at Kingston, and it is withdrawn by the letter of the appraiser, Mr. Driver, which analyses the charge made against the importer. The explanation was considered satisfactory, and the goods were delivered to the warden of the penitentiary without any further trouble. But Mr. Driver had made an investigation as to the price of these pumps, and what does he say in his letter of September 22nd, 1894, when he makes his complaint about the pump? In that portion which forms the basis of his complaint, he says that "the list price of the large pump is $1,600." This was long before any charge was made to the Department of Customs and before any investigation occurred. We have in the telegrams, letters and invoices of the manufacturers statements showing the prices charged by them and actually paid for these pumps in Dayton, Ohio, and establishing beyond any question of doubt that the two pumps actually cost in Dayton, Ohio, $1,600, to which must be added the freight charges and the duty charges. So that, so far as this charge is concerned, a little care on the part of the commissioners, that care which I think an investigation ought to take before it assumes the responsibility of charging any respectable citizen with fraud, would have shown them that instead of there having been a gigantic fraud in this pump business, only a reasonable profit had been charged. I am not here to defend these pump manufacturers. I do not know the Stillwell-Bierce Co., I do know the firm of John A. Rafter & Co., and I know Mr. Gormley. But the question is not whether these men have been guilty of fraud or not whether they charged exorbitant prices. The question is the liability of an officer of the Government in connection with these alleged frauds—whether he is or has been connected with them. The Solicitor General has ventured to say from his place in the House of Commons that officers of the penitentiary have participated in these frauds, and he gives this as the principal foundation for the charges of the commissioners against them. If all the charges of the commissioners have as poor a basis as this charge in connection with the pump, we are obliged to attach the same importance to them—for example, to the serious charge they made in connection with Chanteloup's $40. The Solicitor General says he himself has investigated each one of these charges, notably the charge of Chanteloup. If you will turn to the report of the commissioners, you will see it stated there that there is ample proof to satisfy these commissioners that an officer of the penitentiary received from Chanteloup $40. They do not hesitate to say so, and yet the hon. Solicitor General stands up and tells us that he has investigated that charge and finds it untrue. If this charge, which the commissioners are so positive about, be untrue, what reliance can we put on their reports in any particular? These gentlemen do not hesitate to say that the proof is ample that one of the officers of the penitentiary received from Chanteloup & Co. $40, but the Solicitor General has investigated the matter and he feels bound to acquit him of having received anything at all.

My hon. friend the Solicitor General seems to take it as a personal matter that I should have interested myself in this question at all, and some of his supporters, with that small wit peculiar to some of them at any rate, wish to put me in the position of acting as counsel for the defence after having so long acted as Crown Prosecutor. I am not acting as counsel for the defence. I do not think I could occupy in this House a more honourable position than I did when I represented the Crown as public prosecutor, but my duty as public prosecutor never led me to be unfair to a man charged with a crime, and I would consider myself unworthy of a seat in this House if I did not occupy here the same position as I did there and stand between the prisoner and injustice, if I did not stand simply for justice and seek only that justice be done, even if the accused were charged with a most serious crime. That position I took then, and I am proud to take it now. The hon. gentleman says he does not make his religion or his nationality a stepping-stone to power. What does he mean by that? Does he mean to insinuate that I have tried to do so? Why, no better example of his very words could be found than the hon. gentleman himself, who sits in this House by virtue of a pledge which he gave affecting his religion and nationality, and which, he says, was never carried out by either party. Yet he stands up, when not attacked at all on the ground of religion or nationality, and makes an insinuation against myself who am simply pleading for justice. It would be better that these things should be kept out of this House altogether; and when I exercise the privilege to which I am entitled of criticising the conduct of any public officer I do so, not because I happen to belong to a particular religion or nationality, but because I want to see justice done, and I do not think that my conduct justifies the insinuation of the hon. gentleman that I am using either my religion or nationality for the purpose of either political or other advancement.

Now, the hon. gentleman compared the prices of a Mr. McElvey of Kingston with those of the price list, but he forgot to tell the committee that Mr. McElvey is a competitor of these gentlemen who have been supplying goods to the penitentiary, that he has been trying to obtain contracts from the penitentiary for many years, and has not in that respect been a signal success, and of course is all the more glad of an opportunity of criticising more successful competitors. I am informed that Mr. McElvey has had the good luck to furnish supplies to some of the local institutions, for example, the lunatic asylum, and I am perfectly satisfied that if his accounts for supplies to that institution were put alongside the accounts for supplies to the Kingston penitentiary, we would see a vast difference between the two, largely in favour of the latter. There is another item which struck me in going over that report, and that is the charge made in connection with a man named Markum. It is charged that a man named Markum paid $50 to one of the officers of the penitentiary, and the only proof in support of that charge is a cash book, as I understand it, in which an item appears with the name of the official and $50 at the end of it. If I am correctly informed, there is no date to this.

but it appears within a period covered by three months. Now, Mr. Markum did not hesitate to say, under oath, that at the time this entry appears to have been made in his books, he was not altogether responsible for what he did. He did not keep a regular set of books, he did not keep a book-keeper, he was addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors, and when questioned on his affidavit, he said he did not remember ever having paid this $50, that he had no recollection of doing any business with the official implicated which would warrant him in paying this $50, that he did not believe he ever did, and did not know how that entry came there. This is the statement he made in the portion of the defence which, I understand, was submitted to the Minister of Justice after this report appeared. But these commissioners, basing their statements solely upon this entry in the book, and possibly upon some ex parte statements on examination of Mr. Markum, of which examination they put down what they liked and left out what they liked, say it was clearly proven that this official had received the sum of $50 in payment of some orders for goods which the official had given this man. Now, it will be found that this particular official did not have the power of ordering anything, did not have the power even to initial the accounts acknowledging the receipt of any of the articles, but it appears that these accounts were initialed by the storekeeper, who received them, and the orders were given by the warden over his own signature, after the matter had been previously submitted to the Department of Justice. So that, so far as Markum was concerned, he received these orders without having had any assistance at all from the official in question and without this official having been instrumental at all in obtaining them.

It is not my intention to criticise this matter from a political standpoint at all. I would be sorry to think that in this country party politics should be so prostituted as to be made a political engine for the purpose of maligning and destroying a man's character in order to obtain a paltry position in the public service. I hope I can rise above any such consideration, and I simply make a plea to the House and the Solicitor General for justice. This is not a political question. It happens to be the case of some Conservative officials to-day. To-morrow it may be the case of some Liberal officials. If injustice be done to-day to these men who occupy these positions, what guarantee have we that similar injustice may not be perpetrated later on when it comes to the turn of a Liberal official to stand his trial before a commission. But whether the commission be Conservative or Liberal, I hold it is the duty of every honest man in this House to see that the investigation is conducted in the proper manner. I hold that no member of Parliament can fulfil his duty more honourably or creditably to himself and his country than by insisting on a most rigorous investigation being given in these cases and the accused being given a fair chance of defending himself as he would before the criminal courts. When such a course of action is not followed, injustice must necessarily result, but when it is, then the ends of justice are best served and the interests of the Dominion and public departments best protected. I do not think it is necessary, Mr. Chairman, to continue the discussion any further. I simply wish to emphasize once more the remarks with which I started. I only ask that this investigation be made a proper investigation. It is not my intention or my desire in any way to shield from punishment any man who has done wrong; it is my desire that all who have done wrong should be punished, it is my desire that all who have done wrong should have visited upon them the severest condemnation of this House and of the law. It is not my desire, I say, to protect any wrong-doer, but simply to see that we do not fall into the error of condemning any man before he has had a proper chance of defence before the country.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Perhaps the committee would like to hear a few facts now.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought that was what you were at the last time.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Let me first deal with the Chanteloup matter. The facts are these: It appears by a letter, which was produced and filed, that Chanteloup sent Devlin a post office order for $40 at the time that Devlin had given an order to Chanteloup. When Devlin was questioned about this, he said he did not receive the amount of the order. He was asked to go to the post office and find some proof of the fact that he had never received it, and he said he would. This statement that he would go and inquire into this matter was repeated for several days, but he never went. On these facts, the report of the commissioners is based. That is the whole story. As to the Markum case, it appears that Markum had a contract with the Kingston penitentiary. The whole amount of this business annually amounted to $1,600. One portion of this was an order of $750 worth of goods, said to have been supplied to the penitentiary. At the time he made this sale of $750, $50 was said to have been paid to Devlin. The commissioners went into the matter, and Markum gave his affidavit that he had paid this amount; and he produced his book, and in the book the item is entered as having been paid to Devlin. After that, Devlin goes to Markum and gets him to make an affidavit that he has been drunk—that is practically his statement—for ten years, and cannot recollect whether he made the payment or not; he was too drunk to know whether he made the payment or whether he had entered it in the book. That is the defence. Now, I would like to be done with this Donnybrook Fair business as soon as possible, but I must deal with the question of pumps. According to my information, there were not two pumps. The order for the pump in question was dated 9th June, 1894. A telegram was sent Mr. Gormley by the Stillwell-Bierce Company in reply to a letter from him of the 6th June. The Stillwell-Bierce Company said they would furnish a pump 12 by 18 by 12 for $650, and that they would add to that a receiver, which would cost $170. The list price of the same pump is $1,600. I submitted the paper to the collector of customs Mr. Wallace. He took the papers up and examined them. I cannot say that I know very much about these matters myself, but I know it will be a satisfaction to the hon. member for St. Ann's (Mr. Quinn) to know that we paid $2,600 for a thing which, as it went through the customs, appeared to be worth $900, and which this Stillwell Company offered to deliver at $650. And when the hon. member referred to the evidence of Driver, one thing he forgot to mention, if he read it, was that when Driver went to ask information from Devlin, Devlin said: There is the list price, but we will get a large discount. And there was such a large discount that the collector of customs at Kingston was ordered to increase the price stated in the invoice by $100. The list price was $1,600, but duty was paid on it at $908.

Mr. QUINN. I know the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) does not wish to misrepresent this matter; I would not accuse him of that.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This is not a question of misrepresentation, the facts are there.

Mr. QUINN. I would ask him to refer to the first paper which appears in the record which he sent me, in which he will find a quotation for two pumps. I will ask him also to refer to the report of the engineer, in which he asks that two pumps be ordered. Then take the report of the warden, in which he asks that two pumps be ordered. Then, take the note of Mr. Moylan, in which he consents that two pumps shall be ordered. Then take the report of Driver, in which he says that two pumps had come in.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The committee will remember that mention has been made of a pump and receiver. The invoice to which the hon. gentleman has referred reads:

One duplex pumping-engine and one automatic pumping receiver.

The hon. gentleman calls this two pumps.

Mr. QUINN. I took your official papers as authority.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) asked me for some information about the binder twine. If he will repeat his question—I have forgotten what it was—I have now the information before me which, I think, will enable me to answer.

Mr. CLANCY. The question I asked was: At what price was the binder twine sold to Mr. Hobbs, of London, and what quantity was sold him?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I inquired in the department as to the usual practice in giving figures of this sort, and I am told that it is not considered quite fair to Mr. Hobbs that the price should be given until he has put his twine on the market, but I may say that it is better than we got from Coll Brothers, which was  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cents for beaver.

Mr. CLANCY. What was the quantity?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. One thousand tons.

Mr. BRITTON. I do not think I do my hon. friend (Mr. Quinn) any injustice when I suggest that I do not think the object of his address, or addresses, this afternoon, was so much to vindicate one particular official in reference to a charge that has been found against him, as it is to discredit the work of the commissioners, to discredit all the work they have done in investigating penitentiary matters and as to what they have discovered. I think it will be admitted by all who have thought about this matter and have looked into it that an investigation was perfectly proper, that it was required, not only because of the importance of our penitentiary administration, but because of the suspicion attached to it, because of the feeling of insecurity that was in the public mind in reference to it. I say there was that feeling, not in Kingston alone, but all over the country, in reference to penitentiary matters. Now, we have the report of these commissioners, and can any one say, on reading it, that the investigation was not fully justified? Here is a report covering a great many pages, and dealing in part with this one officer, against whom charges were made, and who is now under suspension. A very great deal is said about him, and my hon. friend (Mr. Quinn) takes two or three of these items that are mentioned, and he says that there is, in regard to these items, a perfect defence so far as Mr. Devlin is concerned. Now, I do not say whether there is a defence in regard to these items or not; I do not know; I have not seen the papers that the Solicitor General handed over to the hon. member for St. Ann's (Mr. Quinn). It may be that in regard to these items there is another side to the question; but these, after all, are only two or three of the charges that are made against him. Now, at the bottom of page 27 the commissioners say this in regard to him :

Attention has been drawn elsewhere to the enormous prices paid for the ordinary staple goods used in connection with his department ; and it is not surprising that this state of affairs existed, when we find the engineer boldly declaring on his examination that he did not know, and did not care, what prices were charged, that it was no part of his business to see that the affairs of his department were managed economically, that he never attempted to get lower prices ; but in fact did what he could in favour of the seller, being of opinion, as he said, that every one dealing with the Government was justified in getting the highest price they could.

That is the statement he makes before the commissioners as his own statement. He says that never but once did he object to the prison paying too high a price for an article, and on that occasion he asserts that the then Minister of Public Works threatened him with dismissal if the offence was repeated. This is the statement of the gentleman who is being defended here, and who has been suspended, and blame is sought to be put upon the Government because of his suspension. He says that never but once was he guilty of that offence after he had been threatened, and he was careful afterwards so to act that no similar accusation should be made against him. That is the starting point in reference to Mr. Devlin. Then follows the four pages dealing with specific matters about which nothing has been said, and any one of which, if true, would be in the minds of the commissioners, or of any other disinterested persons who were making that inquiry, sufficient cause for Mr. Devlin's dismissal. Now the character of the commissioners ought to be sufficient to justify the belief, at all events, that they made the inquiry in a careful and an honourable way. I cannot say much as to one particular instance that was alluded to, showing the manner of these commissioners getting evidence, but I take it for granted that men of the standing and character of these commissioners, would without doubt go about the inquiry in a way that ought to satisfy reasonable persons, even if, in some particular instance, a mistake was made. It seems that the Government, in selecting the commissioners, had regard to the knowledge they would naturally have in reference to the inquiry they were entering into. Mr. Meredith was once inspector of this penitentiary under a former Government. He has been out of office for some time, but he is a Conservative in politics, and a man against whose record nothing can be said. Mr. Noxon is inspector of prisons in the province of Ontario, and I have never heard anybody say that he did not know his business. I never heard any one say that he was not honourable, except a charge may have been made against him on political grounds. As for Mr. O. K. Fraser, I do not know what can be said against him beyond that he was a clever and painstaking lawyer who would be supposed to give everybody fair-play in the investigation, and who would know the rules of law and evidence applicable to the case he had to investigate. So far as to the character of the commissioners themselves. Then as to the secretary. Now my hon. friend from Montreal hardly did himself justice, it would seem to me, in attacking Mr. Eilbeck on the ground of some anonymous letter that was first published in a paper in Huron, and which was afterwards copied into the "Catholic Record." But what does this letter say, after all ? What is the particular thing said against Mr. Eilbeck ? Well, it is said that he is called "Bob." That is one charge made against him.

Mr. FOSTER. That is enough to condemn him.

Mr. BRITTON. Perhaps so. In that case I am afraid a good many hon. members of this House would come under the ban, because while this discussion was going on I heard an hon. gentleman who sits in front of the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Quinn) call across to this side of the House "Jim" ; and if to be called "Bob" is something derogatory to a man, then "Jim," and "George," and "Tom," whom we have here, would perhaps come into the same list. Now, I do not think that that is sufficient to make out a case against even the fairness or the judgment of Mr. Eilbeck.

Mr. QUINN. The hon. member will recollect that one of the papers says that he keeps a bucket shop.

Mr. BRITTON. My hon. friend perhaps knows that there is something particularly wrong about bucket shops ; I do not know.

Mr. QUINN. I only know it is against the law ; it is a criminal offence.

Mr. BRITTON. I beg to say that he does not keep a bucket shop, possibly he may have done so. Possibly he may once have been connected with a bucket shop and perhaps then it was not against the law. Perhaps the term bucket shop may have been applied at one time in a way that my hon. friend would not apply it now, and no one who understood what a bucket shop was, would apply it to Mr. Eilbeck now. We know that a charge of that kind, or something like it may be made against a man who is not really either keeping a bucket shop now, or doing anything connected with it. Mr. Eilbeck is a respectable man.

Mr. QUINN. If my hon. friend will permit me—it is a peculiarity of his friends not to allow matters of this kind derogatory to their character to appear in public prints without taking out a public prosecution for it, even if they do not push it in the courts.

Mr. BRITTON. I think there are persons just as good as those of us who are in this House, who are quite willing to live down anything that a newspaper may say about them, instead of attempting to punish the author of every little slander that gets currency in the prints of the day. Men who have a character that they are able to vindicate by their lives, are not so anxious to rush into court to prosecute a libellous statement; although there are occasions when, of course, a man owes it to himself, or to the position he occupies in the community in whose interest perhaps he is working, to vindicate himself by a prosecution of that kind. But it is not everybody who can afford, from a money point of view, to go into the courts and to enjoy the luxury of a libel suit. Mr. Eilbeck, so far as I know, is a respectable man, and he is the last man—and that is what I rose to say in reference to him—and those who know him know that at all events he is the last man to act as a sleuth hound, or as a person who would ferret out information to the injury of any one, because that person was of an opposite religious belief to his own. He is the very last man who would do anything of that kind, it is not in him. His friends know that whatever else there may be against him, he would not attempt to be unfair to any one else on the ground of religion. Now, these are the only charges that are made against him in connection with that commission. Even if, as secretary of the commission, he wrote a letter for the purpose of getting information, I do not think everybody will agree that there is anything particularly wrong in his doing so; I do not think the commissioners are responsible for it, if it was perhaps a little outside of the kind of a letter that ought to have been written. Then the only other thing that is said against this gentleman is that, without the consent of the warden, he had a prisoner under examination for some time. Well, now this commission was not a commission sitting for fun; it was a commission for taking evidence and for obtaining the facts in reference to the management of this penitentiary. They could only gain those facts from the persons who knew them, and some of the persons who knew them were convicts in the penitentiary. The result of this commission is the bringing to light of transactions which though some of them may not be fully justified by the evidence, at all events justifies the statement that the affairs of the penitentiary during many years prior to the incoming of the present Government were managed in such a way as to be characterized by no other word than disgraceful. If you leave out every case where there is any doubt, if you remove every case where it is only suspicion, if you cast aside these charges that are not strictly proved there are enough of undisputed facts to warrant the work and the expense of the commission. Now,

I have only one other word to say in reference to the political aspect of this matter. My hon. friend the member from Montreal, St. Ann's (Mr. Quinn) may disclaim all desire to make political capital out of this investigation, but the very fact that he was prompted by an hon. gentleman sitting behind him to mention the name of Mr. McKelvey as one man who does work for the provincial government and the fact of bringing his name in, in the way which he did and casting a slur upon the name of a person who has a record for being competent, reliable and honest in his business transactions, so far as anybody ever heard, because he gave prices and information in regard to the affairs that were made the subject of investigation, shows that there is a desire to introduce politics into this matter. Further it was said by the member for Halton (Mr. Henderson), and it was not said by him alone because it was said in the papers—we have seen it mentioned three or four times in the Ottawa papers—that the Government intended to retain the present warden until after the provincial elections when he would get his dismissal. There is an attempt to make political capital out of a matter of this kind. I ought to have some knowledge of the political feeling in the city of Kingston which I represent—and of the feeling towards the warden of the penitentiary and I say that there is no fear of Mr. Metcalfe, and that politics do not influence the Government in my opinion one iota in reference to the course that they either have taken or intend to take in regard to his dismissal. They have no reason to fear for him, and I do know this further fact that when the commissioners commenced their investigation the present warden had only been in his position a comparatively short time. According to the evidence produced before the commissioners he was surrounded by men who were at daggers drawn with each other. His environment was not favourable to his doing the best that the warden ought to do or could be expected to do in that position, and some said: "It is hardly fair to judge of a man for the short time which he has been there." I do not pretend to know what influenced the Government in disregarding that part of the commissioners report, if they have disregarded it, by allowing the present warden to continue for a short time or a longer time as the case may be in his present position, but I do know that this question of a political consideration in his remaining is absolutely without foundation in fact and absolutely unreliable. I know that they were influenced in no way by politics, first in the matter of this investigation; secondly, that the report urging the dismissal or retention of any officers and of the warden were from first to last discussed as a matter affecting the public interest. A large amount of money has been spent every year in the maintenance of this institution, and it is of the greatest possible interest to every member of this House and to the community that its affairs should be administered as economically as possible and as much in the interest of the community as possible, that, for that purpose all the facts should be ascertained, and that upon the facts the Government should act with that impartiality which they have adopted.

Mr. QUINN. The cool presumption with which the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) assumes that nobody on this side of the House can discuss a question except from a political standpoint compels me to answer some of the remarks he has made. He says it is quite evident from the manner in which I have discussed this matter that politics are at the bottom of it, notwithstanding, I think, that my public record will show that in matters of this kind I would rather that a political party or a political individual should sink, that public justice should prevail, notwithstanding this the hon. member does not hesitate to say that it is impossible for us to discuss this question except from a political standpoint. The hon. gentleman has overlooked altogether what has been said about Mr. Eilbeck, the secretary, to which I am obliged to refer because of the blind political prejudice in the minds of hon. gentlemen, which prevents them from seeing a case of this kind in its proper light. I will read some of the affidavits that have been sent to the Minister of Justice, and ask them whether this is a man who should occupy the position of secretary of a commission of this kind. Here is the affidavit of Neil McNeill, assistant blacksmith instructor in the penitentiary, which is as follows:—

I, Neil McNeil, of the city of Kingston, assistant blacksmith instructor in the penitentiary, do solemnly declare, that in the month of December last I was summoned by Mr. Eilbeck, secretary of the commission, and examined as to certain work on a large tank for new water-works being constructed, which was under the engineer's supervision. During said examination, convict Mathewson, a convict in the penitentiary, was present, sitting at the same table with Secretary Eilbeck, and when I was about to leave, after answering the secretary's questions, I was stopped by Mathewson and submitted to the humiliation of being interrogated by the convict.

That is the discipline in the penitentiary. One of the officers is subjected to the humiliation of being examined in the presence of the secretary of the commission by a convict.

In the month of March, Mr. G. L. Foster, acting for secretary of commission, came to me and presented a statement of stoppages of steam. I found said entries were made by a convict, and I refused to sign said statement. In fact, I know that for about fifteen months I was in the blacksmith and machine shop, there were no stoppages of steam which caused any delay of the work, or which would not have reasonably occurred in a similar shop outside.

Mr. BRITTON.

Well, this is one of the charges made against the engineer on information given by a convict which was sought to be supported by the instructor in the blacksmith shop. He refused to certify, yet this is reported to be a fact by this secretary of this commission. Here is an affidavit by Thomas Reid:

I, Thos. Reid, guard at Kingston Penitentiary, do solemnly declare, that on or about the 7th December, 1896, Mr. Eilbeck, secretary to the commission, sent for me from my post of duty and asked me (himself alone being seated in the office) with convict Mathewson, "Have you been speaking to Devlin, the engineer?" I answered, "Yes." He asked me what was the conversation about, and I replied, "About the work." He (Eilbeck) asked did he (Devlin) make any remark about me? and I replied, "He did not."

Here was this man pursuing an inquiry, and because it was reported to him that this officer was speaking with the engineer in the ordinary course of duty, he immediately summons the officer from his post of duty to know if Devlin dared to make a remark about Eilbeck. There he was seated in his office, with his guide, philosopher and friend, the convict Mathewson, and summoning those officials before him. Here is another:

I, Wm. Coffey, stoker in the penitentiary, solemnly declare, that I have never had any serious trouble with Mr. Devlin, engineer. Any trouble we may have had was trifling, and was about the work. I know that Mr. Devlin effected very important improvements to the plant, and I have no reason whatever to complain of his conduct towards me. I further declare, that, during recent investigation, I was called before the secretary, who was alone with convict Mathewson in the office, and examined respecting boilers, &c.

And still another:

I, Thomas Moore, of the village of Portsmouth, guard, Kingston Penitentiary, do solemnly declare, that on or about the 7th December, 1896, Mr. Eilbeck, secretary to commission, sent for me from my post of duty and asked me (himself alone being seated in the office with convict Mathewson), "Have you been speaking to Devlin, the engineer?" I answered, "Yes." He asked, "What about?" I told him, "About my work of laying water-pipes." He (Eilbeck) replied, "Did he say anything about me?" I answered, "He did not." Eilbeck said, "It is well for him he did not," or words to that effect. He (Eilbeck) then told me to send to him Guard Reid, which I did.

"It is well for him he didn't." That is the remark of the man who was sent as secretary of a commission to investigate into the conduct of these officers, and that is the man who spies on the officer to know if the officer had dared to mention his name. Is Eilbeck a man to occupy the position of judge, which he has assumed to himself? Is he a man that should be placed in that position?

Mr. BRITTON. Had the secretary anything to do with judging?

Mr. QUINN. Yes.

Mr. BRITTON. No.

Mr. QUINN. My hon. friend (Mr. Britton) says no, but here we have Eilbeck doing the investigating in company with his friend the convict Mathewson. It was on Eilbeck's report of the evidence he collected that the commissioners made this report; that is the sort of evidence they rendered judgment on. I say that Eilbeck's conduct in this matter of the letter shows that he is not worthy of occupying a position of this kind. I do not say that his motives were political, or that they were even personally inimical to any of the officers, but I do say that his conduct stamps him as a man who has been actuated by some other motives than that of rendering justice to these officials. My hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) says that probably Eilbeck should not have written this letter. Because we are members of Parliament is no reason why we should not have ordinary common sense or intelligence, and if as men of intelligence we read this letter, we must come to the conclusion that this man Eilbeck was trying to ferret out and to bolster up in some way a charge against these officials. The writing of that letter was not only a mistake; it was a crime for a man occupying such a position. Now, I will again read this letter for the benefit of the hon. gentleman; the letter which was sent by Eilbeck to this man. He writes:

Dear Dave,—Some years ago, when you were travelling for our oil company, you told me it was absolutely necessary to pay the engineer in the penitentiary a commission in order to do any business with him.

There is a clear misstatement of fact. He continues:

You can help me out by telling me how much commission, and how to get about it.

Here is a man who is about to occupy the position of judge, or what he assumed to be the position of judge, a man who was the collector of the evidence. Here he is writing these words, "you can help me out." Help him out of what? Help him out in his design of making a charge against this official; help him out in trying to remove this man from his position; help him out in trying to ruin this man's reputation. What do these words mean:

You can help me out by telling me how much commission, and how to get about it. I presume the same gentleman is approachable on other matters than oil. If so, put me on the way.

What was the object of this man Eilbeck if it were not to get some other person to approach this official in order to offer him a commission, and furnish thereby the evidence of a crime against him. Sir, such conduct should not be tolerated. I need not refer to the opinion of one of the most learned judges in the province of Ontario as to the methods that should be adopted by persons who are investigating matters of this kind. In the famous investigation held in the province of Ontario into a charge of corruption against certain members of the legislature, one of the judges spoke about the manner in which persons occupying responsible positions should conduct the investigation, and he said in effect: There are some men who will descend to the commission of crime even to convict another person of crime, but if they do so they must suffer the consequence of not being believed upon oath when they come before the courts. Here we have this man Eilbeck showing by his letter that he is prepared to descend to the commission of crime even in order to convict Devlin. We find him ready to descend to the commission of a crime in order to dismiss this man from office, and to ruin the reputation of himself and his family throughout the whole Dominion.

I cannot conclude without referring to another matter. My hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) refers to the remark of Devlin: That it was none of his business what prices were paid. Devlin may have said that, but I doubt that he has ever said so in the words of the report of the commission. In fact, I do not believe any of the statements made in this report. I think the attack made upon it by the Solicitor General himself disproves this statement of the commissioners, as set forth in their report:

An examination of Chanteloup's books and papers showed, that even while Devlin was engineer at St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, he received goods for which he did not pay; and that after he came to Kingston he received a post office order from Chanteloup for $40, of which he can give no satisfactory account.

Here is a clear and bald statement of crime against Devlin, made by these commissioners who were sworn to do their duty, and yet the Solicitor General, from his place in the House says that their statement is not true. How can we place any confidence in a report which contains such a misstatement of fact, and which carries with it, if it were true, such terrible consequences in regard to the one against whom it is made. The Solicitor General has declared that there is no intention of removing Mr. Metcalfe from the penitentiary. It would be most regrettable if the report of this commission should be taken for the purpose of removing an officer like Mr. Metcalfe; but in refusing to remove him, the hon. gentleman casts aside, and discredits altogether the report, because that report recommends Mr. Metcalfe's dismissal or his removal to another penitentiary. It shows that the hon. gentleman has not any confidence in the report. Now, it is of course useless for the Solicitor General and myself to discuss whether there is one pump or two pumps. But I ask the Solicitor General, deliberately and calmly, and at the same time with all the fervor which it is possible for one man who desires to see justice done to ask it from another man from whom he has a right to expect justice, to investigate this matter; and at the next session of this Parliament, if I appear here, I will ask him to state whether two pumps have been furnished or only one. I am so confident that two pumps have been furnished, it is so clear to me from the report which the Solicitor General has submitted, that I will ask him the question next session after he has made the investigation of which I speak. One word more. It is regrettable that members on the other side of the House, when any objection is taken by members on this side always see in it some deep political scheme, some grand purpose to defeat the ideas of the present superlatively clever Government. But, Mr. Chairman, I challenge the members on the other side of the House who are not interested in this matter, to say on whose side the political bitterness has appeared in this discussion. What have we called for on this side but a fair rendering of justice in the premises? What has been called for on the other side but the heads of the Conservative officers? My hon. friend talks about Mr. Meredith. I have not the honour of Mr. Meredith's acquaintance, but I understand from public rumour that he is an octogenarian. I know that he was engaged in 1848 in an investigation into the same institution, half a century ago; so that I think his term of usefulness is pretty nearly exhausted, at any rate. But I would call attention to one of the peculiarities of the old gentleman in clinging to a representation which he made many years ago, when he was inspector of penitentiaries, regarding the classifying and grading of convicts. This will give an idea of the way in which the investigation has been carried on. It has been carried on for the purpose of bolstering up the peculiar ideas of each member of the commission, particularly those of the worthy secretary. But in this case it appears to be Mr. Meredith's back which is to be scratched:

The system of classifying and grading the convicts was introduced into the penitentiary in 1860, by the board of inspectors, of which Mr. Commissioner Meredith was a member. It was borrowed from the system of progressive classification with badges and gratuities then recently adopted by Sir Walter Crofton in the Irish convict prisons, and which has ever since worked there successfully. The different grades, when first established, were distinguished by the simple and easily understood method of fixing coloured stripes on the sleeves of the convicts' jackets. This answered the purpose admirably. But for some reason which the commissioners have not been able to learn, after Mr. Meredith had ceased to be an inspector, this method of marking the different grades of prisoners was abandoned, and the grades were distinguished by giving each a special suit of clothing. The necessary consequence has been that there are now kept in stock on an average nearly three suits of clothing for every convict, whereas under the former plan not half that quantity was required. Besides the extra cost incurred in the present system, there is also the trouble and risk involved in storing away such a mass of clothing and preserving it from moths; and from this cause serious losses have already been incurred. The commissioners would, therefore, recommend that henceforward the same kind of cloth should be used for all the convicts and that the three grades should be distinguished by stripes upon the sleeves of the coat or jacket, as formerly. There is good reason to believe that the proposed system would not only be much more economical than the present one, but also much more appreciated by the convicts. The suits now worn by the three grades are so much alike that no stranger going into the prison would be likely to distinguish one from the other, and certainly could not possibly know which was the lowest and which the highest grade. Whereas the stripes on the arm would be a mark which every one could understand, and one which from its semi-military character would be particularly appreciated by the convicts themselves. Under a recent arrangement in the state prison of New York the convicts are divided into four different groups or classes. Those classes or groups are kept quite apart and are each under special regulations, but the groups are not as yet distinguished by any difference of dress or distinctive badge; though this matter is now under consideration there.

So that, thirty-seven years after this system was first suggested by Mr. Meredith, the commissioner, and twenty-five years after it has been discarded by the authorities in the prison, the reverend commissioner or the revered commissioner, or the superannuated or ought-to-be superannuated commissioner, returns to the attack, and wishes to have stripes instead of suits. This is simply a sample page which I take out of the whole report, in order to show you that it is not so much an investigation to find out whether the penitentiary has been economically or honestly administered as it is an investigation to carry out the particular ideas of each one of the commissioners. I presume that Mr. Meredith, for his little scratch on the back in this case, was pledged to some other portion of the report in which Mr. Noxon was interested, and that Mr. Noxon, for his little scratch on the back, whitewashed Mr. Eilbeck's conduct in the whole investigation. This is what we complain of. It is not for the purpose of defending any particular person or persons who have been accused, but it is for the purpose of establishing either the truth or the falsity of this report, that I ask the Government to institute a proper inquiry, and, if necessary to do that, to prosecute some of the persons charged in order that the truth may come out, and that justice may be done in the premises.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not want to prolong the discussion in regard to the Kingston Penitentiary, because I think we have heard enough to be convinced that the Solicitor General and the hon. member for Montreal Centre will not agree, they are so far apart. I rise for the purpose of asking the Solicitor General how far the investigation into the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary has gone, how many witnesses have been examined and how long the investigation is expected to last. I will tell him why I put this question. The other day, when I was in Montreal, I heard that the commissioners were taking their time, that they were doing the work at a very convenient rate, and that, to the great scandal of the people of St. Vincent, they were promenading with the vehicles of the penitentiary. A gentleman asked one of them, I believe Mr. LaFortune, how long the investigation was going to last, and Mr. LaFortune said that it would last all summer and part of the fall. I believe that the system followed in our penitentiaries is entirely bad. We take too much care of the prisoners. They are better fed and better taken care of than 75 per cent of the population who toil in the Dominion. I have been told by some of the officers of the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary that there is not a farmer in that district who has on his table every day as much good food as is supplied to the prisoners, and no doubt the same remark will apply to the other penitentiaries. Until this year we have been paying nearly half a million dollars annually for the support of the prisoners, and I am very glad to see that the Government have reduced that item by some $64,000. I hope the reduction will not impair the efficiency of the service. There is no doubt that the majority of the prisoners released from our penitentiaries desire to go back. You will find that ten out of twelve of those released commit again some crime which subjects them to imprisonment, because they are attracted back by the lazy life they lead there. All that they are deprived of is liberty, which they do not appear to value very much, and in every other respect they are better off than the majority of the working people outside. We might take a lesson from some of the countries of Europe. In this country, I believe, we have the worst roads to be found anywhere, and in that respect the province of Quebec carries off the palm. It seems to me that it would be a very desirable reform to make our convicts work upon the roads in the different provinces. That is done in France and Belgium, and I do not see why it should not be done in Canada. We have in our penitentiaries strong able-bodied men who are doing nothing. A few of them work in the making of binder twine, but I do not think that we ought to bring prison labour in competition with that of free men.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What would you do with them?

Mr. BERGERON. I would have them out macadamizing our roads. Let them go in gangs, chained, if you like, and in that way they would be doing very valuable work, and not interfering with the free labour of the country, and at the end of twenty years our roads would be simply perfect. I throw this simply out as a broad suggestion, without attempting to go into any of the working details. Any one who has seen any of these men, as they are freed from their prison term, must acknowledge that they have been excellently treated. They are all fleshy, in good health, and have all the appearance of having led a life of ease. And then see what must inevitably follow the lazy habits inculcated in them. A man leaves the penitentiary where he has been for five years doing scarcely anything, and living on the fat of the land, and when he gets out he finds himself unfit for the hard work of life. He is given a small amount of money which is supposed to last him until he can find some means of earning an honest living, but he has been so long doing nothing except eating and sleeping that he is actually unfit to work, and is driven to commit some other crime which lands him back into the penitentiary again. This result would be avoided if we had these men employed on our roads. At the beginning of the session I moved for a return of the convicts' pardons. I find that sixty-one were set free before their term expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Whom do you blame?

Mr. BERGERON. I do not blame anybody. I do not know why they were set free, but the Government should bear in mind that a pardon should not be granted except after a great deal of inquiry and care. The granting of pardons has a bad effect on public opinion. The public are apt to think that interested motives, or weak sentimentality were at the bottom of such release. Of four men who were condemned to be hanged for murder, after a fair trial, the sentences were commuted to imprisonment for life. I do not say that these sentences should not have been commuted, but I would again call attention to a case which I brought up during the last Parliament, the case of Shortis, which bears out the view which I am now presenting to the House. I expressed the opinion then that in commuting the sentence of Shortis the Government had not acted wisely; and the fact that such commutations are apt to have a bad influence on public opinion is shown by the discussion which took place among the public over this particular case and the public feeling that was aroused. It was even discussed on the hustings, and we had even the First Minister (Mr. Laurier) declaring that an Englishman from the other side could come out and kill French Canadians in this country without running any danger of being hanged. We can all understand the effect of such language as that. Well, we have the cases of four other men, Canadians, who committed murder deliberately in this country, who were as guilty of murder as Shortis was, and instead of these men being hanged, we find their sentences commuted to imprisonment for life, and we have besides sixty-one others who were sentenced for certain terms and who have been set free before the expiry of their terms. It seems to me that this is carrying the quality of mercy altogether too far.

I would ask my hon. friend the Solicitor General to give me the information I asked for with reference to the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary commission—how long they have sat, how long they are to sit, and if they had made any report?

Mr. TALBOT. Does the hon. gentleman say that the hon. First Minister stated somewhere that an Englishman could come out to this country and kill people and get free?

Mr. BERGERON. Yes.

Mr. TALBOT. Where?

Mr. BERGERON. At Valleyfield.

Mr. TALBOT. Did the hon. gentleman hear him?

Mr. BERGERON. I did not, but it was published in the newspapers, and was freely spoken of by every one in Valleyfield.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. If my hon. friend will look into the matter he will find that the proportion of releases has not been greater under the existing regime than it was before. There has been a good deal of comment on the release of a man from Toronto who had been convicted of throwing vitrol, and the charge has been freely made that his release was, to say the least, a very injudicious exercise of the clemency of the Crown. I explained the case a few days ago, but, nevertheless, the charge has been persisted in, and as to some extent it is apt to be detrimental to the reputation of the hon. Minister of Justice, I think it but right that I should again explain the circumstances under which the release was granted, and it seems to me that when I state the fact that that man has been detained illegally for ten years, and that at any time, had an application been made for a writ of habeas corpus, he would have been released, I think I have said everything, and that this should set the matter at rest, once for all.

Mr. BERGERON. Would my hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) allow me one word. It seems to me I have seen it stated in the papers that Sir John Thompson, when Minister of Justice, had refused to release this man.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is perfectly true; Sir John Thompson did refuse to release him. I presume—and I am quite willing to make the statement—I presume that in the hurry, the same order would have been given to the last application had not the fact of the unlawful detention been brought to the attention of the Minister by one of the gentlemen who acted for the defence, who discovered it at this late period. But the Minister referred the matter to the magistrate by whom the man had been sentenced, and all concerned perceived that it was a mistake, and that the man ought to be discharged.

Mr. WALLACE. What was the mistake?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The mistake was that the magistrate who sentenced him had no jurisdiction over the case. Sir John Thompson's attention was not drawn to that fact.

Mr. WALLACE. Would that mean another trial?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It would mean that if a writ of habeas corpus had been applied for, the man would have been discharged at any time.

Mr. WALLACE. But could he be tried again?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. He was never tried at all, so if he were tried, he would not be tried "again." I have been asked a question as to when the commissioners sat. They began to sit at the beginning of May. They have made no interim report, but I may say that, so far as St. Vincent de Paul is concerned, there is absolutely no ground of complaint worth speaking of as to the discipline, but there is serious ground of complaint as to the expenditure. That may be the result of the high feeding that my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) speaks of, and good treatment meted out to the prisoners.

Mr. BERGERON. How long will the St. Vincent de Paul commission sit?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not know; but I do not think they should sit beyond the coming month, because the Kingston penitentiary investigation, which should have taken equally long, took eighty-three days.

Now, as to the employment of prisoners that is a very serious matter, and a matter that has been engaging the attention of the department for some time past. I do not think I could do my hon. friend a greater service than to refer him to the inspector's report, which is included in the report of the Minister of Justice and in which this matter is exhaustively dealt with. The inspector suggests that the prisoners might be employed in manufacturing articles used in the different departments. That is regarded as a kind of employment that would minimize, at all events, the interference with the ordinary labour of the country. As to the question of employing convicts on the public roads, if my hon. friend will permit me, I would draw his attention to an article published in the "North American Review," the current (June) number, in which this question is very exhaustively discussed by the inspector of penitentiaries for the state of New York, I think. The author deals especially with the question of employment of convicts on the roads, and my hon. friend will find that there are very serious disadvantages in that system pointed out in the article I have referred to. However, that is a question that ought to be considered, and I may say that it is engaging the attention of the inspector and, possibly, next session we may be in a position to make some suggestions.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would like to know why Mr. Ouimet, the warden of the St. Vincent de Paul was suspended.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. He has not been suspended, according to the sense in which we ordinarily use that term. It is thought proper, in order to enable us thoroughly to investigate the penitentiary, in order that the employees may speak with the utmost freedom, we thought rather than suspend him, to give him leave of absence. But I may say that, while he has been relieved, temporarily, of his functions, he is in receipt of his salary.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Has any report been made against him so far?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is an interim report—I was mistaken a moment ago in saying that there was not. It is not a report against the warden, but a recommendation that he should be dealt with in the manner I have indicated.

Mr. WALLACE. I wish to say that, whether or not the course of the commissioners was a correct one in their investigation, and whether or not they have given those gentlemen against whom charges were made an opportunity to prove their innocence, I think that the country generally will rejoice that an investigation has been held, and will feel regret that it has disclosed a state of corruption and dishonesty among the officials of the Kingston penitentiary which, however, it is well should have been discovered and which, I hope, will put an end to. There is no doubt, from the report of the commissioners, that dishonesty existed throughout the departments in the Kingston penitentiary, and that the officials did not seem to have an idea that the money of the people of Canada should be carefully husbanded and judiciously spent; but it appears by the evidence that some of the prominent, leading officials of the penitentiary plainly stated that they would be open to censure if they did not spend all the money that had been appropriated for certain services. This state of affairs was one that could not be stopped too soon. I think that the Government having decided to dispense with the service of this man—and very properly so, in my opinion—will see to it that men having the confidence of the country be placed in these responsible positions, and that persons who are discharging their duty honestly and faithfully as well as economically will be commended. For the money expended in the penitentiaries is money that the people do not give willingly. It is given grudgingly, and very properly so, and when it is given, I think that the greatest care should be taken that there is no extravagance, no corruption, no misappropriation of the funds.

Penitentiaries--Penitentiaries Commission.
Payments may be made from this vote, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act..... $10,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is that for? I want to ask my hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick), in the first place, what is the necessity there of the clause with regard to the Civil Service Act.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We have employed, at the present time, as assistant to the commissioners, an accountant connected with the penitentiaries branch of the Department of Justice.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is the accountant?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Mr. G. L. Foster. He has rendered good service.

Mr. FOSTER. How much was voted this year for the commissioners?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Three thousand dollars.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the hon. gentleman any recollection of telling the House last year that he thought that $3,000 was all that would be necessary to pay for the cost of this commission.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. It might be a little more, but he thought he was well within the mark in saying that it would be very closely in the region of $3,000. Does not my hon. friend think that he owes a very explicit explanation as to why he was so far out as to think $3,000 would do this work when now we are on the road to at least $13,000?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It will certainly reach $13,000, because the intention of the Government now is, in consequence of the revelations in Kingston, to make a thorough investigation into all the penitentiaries. I may say that so far as the Kingston investigation is concerned, we had no anticipation at the time that it would take so long, nor of the revelations that would be made.

Mr. FOSTER. How many men were on that commission?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There were three men on the commission at the Kingston penitentiary. Messrs. Meredith, Noxon and Fraser, with Mr. Ellbeck as secretary. The commissioners, during the Kingston penitentiary investigation, were drawing $10 a day and expenses, and the secretary

$6.50 per day without expenses. At St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary they are drawing $10 and expenses. The commissioners are the same with the exception of Mr. Meredith, who is replaced by Mr. Lafortune; and the secretary there also gets $6.50 per day without expenses. It is the same secretary.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the reason why, if you have three business men, they cannot go through that penitentiary in Kingston from top to bottom, from cellar to garret, from the outside limit to the inside, in less than 83 days?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think I can give a fair explanation of that. Even up to the present time it has been impossible for us to get invoices for the goods furnished. There are absolutely no books kept at the Kingston penitentiary. I may say. It was necessary for the commission to go to places where the purchases were made, to Montreal and to Toronto, and to come to Ottawa for the purpose of examining the accounts in the Public Works Department. I think in order to get some information they had to come to the Department of Justice; in fact they had to travel all about the country in their endeavours to get information. I think my hon. friend will understand in some measure the reason of this enormous expense when I tell him that there was absolutely no books kept at the penitentiary, nothing but the very imperfect statement kept by the accountant.

Mr. FOSTER. These three commissioners, old Mr. Meredith and the others, don't run around looking up these accounts when they have a secretary.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am speaking now of what was done last year, I cannot say much of what has been done at St. Vincent de Paul. Take, for instance, some of the hardware firms in Montreal, Garth & Company, Chanteloup, Gormley, Clendenning & Sons, and Markum, who furnished goods to the penitentiary. When they went there for the purpose of getting access to the books of these manufacturers they found some valuable letters in their hands that we may use as evidence hereafter. Further than that, for instance, I may mention that letter-books were supposed to be kept in the penitentiary, but when the commissioners came to examine them they found them mutilated, some of the pages had been torn out from the time after the commissioners first came there, and during the time they were absent for a fortnight or three weeks. These things show that the commissioners were absolutely handicapped.

Mr. FOSTER. It would seem that under these circumstances there is a great waste of time on the part of the majority of the commission while some of the subordinate officials are looking up these questions, and all the time the pay of these commissioners is going on. Does not my hon. friend think that it would be to the public interest if he were to send some of his own officers? Surely he has officers that he can trust, responsible officers. You have no better officer in your department than G. L. Foster.

An hon. MEMBER. A good name.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, but no relation of mine, I am sorry to say. You have officers that you can trust that are honest as the day, and just as capable as any man you can import from anywhere. What is the reason, then, that officers in the department might not travel round and get these reports, and when they have got them they could lay them before the commissioners instead of allowing these latter gentlemen to go around at $10 a day and all expenses? You have had these men on pay all the time. You could take one of your departmental officers and send him down to Garth's to look up these accounts, and during this time the pay of the commissioners would be stopped. It surely did not take, under any proper business management, four men all this time under pay, to carry these things out. Now, if my hon. friend is going to carry out this investigation through all the penitentiaries I do not say that he may not be right. If there is anything wrong in these penitentiaries, bring it out, and if some of these men have been mutilating accounts and all that sort of thing, they ought to be put in a solitary cell themselves, and if it is found to be a fact, I hope they will be. But can't you find out some method by which you can keep expenses down? Put on your technical men, accountants, men who are clerks in a way, and let them get all these facts and accounts and ferret them out themselves. Then when you come to your investigation and the taking of evidence where you must have all your commissioners, these things will be ready for them. This looks like a very long job and a very fat job for a number of these gentlemen, $13,000 already, and he is not able to tell us that he can keep it within that limit. I see they are at St. Vincent de Paul having a fine old time, taking it easy. Commissioners never will work any faster than they are expected to work. The best of them will take their time. It is only now and then that you get people who work any faster than they can help.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. You are judging by the experience of the temperance commission.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, and the other. I think one commission is very much the same as another. But I just make this suggestion in order that you may avoid what is really an extraordinary expenditure on the part of these commissioners. I am sorry my hon. friend did not give a more satisfactory explanation.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I quite agree with what the hon. gentleman has said, and I am endeavouring to cut down the expense as much as possible. When I got an estimate of what all these investigations would cost, it rather startled me.

Mr. FOSTER. What is my hon. friend's opinion of what it will take to do it?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It will take about $14,000. I certainly realize it to be an enormous sum I shall be called upon to expend, and I shall endeavour, so far as it lies in my power, to bring this within reasonable limits.

Mr. FOSTER. Are these commissioners under pay from the time of their appointment?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No, only the time they are actually employed.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you count a day's employment only when they are within the precincts of the penitentiary?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think men of the standing of these commissioners can be trusted to make an honest charge for their services.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand this investigation commenced at St. Vincent de Paul on the 1st of May?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Some time before the beginning of May.

Mr. BERGERON. At that time I suppose they were at work at St. Vincent de Paul?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I could not say.

Mr. BERGERON. I ask that, because Mr. Lafortune was working very hard during the local election at St. Vincent de Paul, and threatening the guards right and left that if they did not vote Liberal they would be kicked out, because he was one of the commissioners, and he was there for that purpose.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The hon. gentleman is aware that the ex-Attorney General of the province of Quebec passed a law that would put Mr. Lafortune in jail if it was found that he had been doing that kind of thing.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What special qualification has Mr. Lafortune to act on this commission? I understand he is a lawyer of a few years standing. He cannot be much of a lawyer if he works at $10 a day. I would like to know what other qualification he has.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. My hon. friend ought not to make that suggestion, or they will all be asking $20.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would like to get an answer to my question—what other qualification has he?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have not the pleasure of a personal acquaintance with Mr. Lafortune, but I understand he is a very able lawyer in Montreal. I think it is a good thing for us to have men of that sort in making the investigation, to see that the rules of evidence are properly observed.

Mr. QUINN. I am very glad to see that Mr. Lafortune and Mr. Fraser are on this St. Vincent de Paul commission, because I do not think that we will be treated to the same kind of evidence in this case, at least I hope not, that we had in the Kingston investigation, which was conducted almost wholly by Mr. Meredith and Mr. Noxon. At the same time I would like the Solicitor General to take into consideration the statements which have been made in regard to this report in the discussion we have had to-day, so that the St. Vincent de Paul investigation will not be disgraced by such conduct as that which has disgraced the Kingston investigation. I do not think there is much danger of it with Mr. Lafortune and Mr. Fraser on the commission, but I think that a little more care should be taken, and I hope that the hon. gentleman will not overlook it.

Royal Military College of Canada..... $65,000

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am sorry that circumstances have compelled the hon. leader of the Opposition to be absent from his place because if he were here I would like to have said a word or two to him on the subject of his remarks in reference to the Royal Military College. Unfortunately I will have to address them to his deputy to whom I cannot speak with the same freedom.

Mr. FOSTER. I suggest that the hon. gentleman defer his remarks until next session when my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) will be here to reply to them.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. In other words that the hon. gentleman's remarks should be unanswered; I am not disposed to agree to that. In respect to the Royal Military College at Kingston those hon. gentlemen who have paid any attention to the subject are perfectly well aware that I have always from my place on the Opposition side of the House pointed out that it was an extremely serious mistake ever to have placed an officer in charge of the college who was on the retired list. There is no doubt whatever that if you desire to keep this college up to a proper and efficient standard you must have an officer in active service who is not only known to military men but who is known to the students themselves and those of them who have graduated from the college and entered the military service. A first-class mistake therefore was committed when Major General Cameron, after he had left the active service, was placed in the position of commandant of the college. I do not in the least desire to say anything harsh of that gentleman, but I am bound to say, and it was the opinion of all with whom I ever came in contact who were acquainted with the working of that institution that Major General Cameron was not a person who was qualified to command the respect of the cadets under his charge. As everybody knows it is not by any manner of means an easy thing to find a gentleman who is able to govern properly a body of that description, and it is quite notorious that Major General Cameron did not have these qualities. He may have been a good officer in the service but he had no experience to fit him for the task that he was assigned, and in his hands the college went gradually down until it had no more than eight students per annum. It was perfectly obvious that that state of things must be put a stop to or else the college must be abolished. As regards the present commandant Col. Kittson, he was recommended to us by the Imperial Military authorities. He is a soldier in the prime of life; he is in possession of those qualities which Major General Cameron did not have, and he is likely to obtain the confidence, respect and admiration of the students under his charge. As to the changes which have been made on the recommendation of that officer we believe that they are likely to eventuate successfully. We have made an experiment and we must trust to time to see whether it will justify our expectations or not, but this I may say that whereas a year ago the total number of applicants for examination for entrance into the college, was, I am informed, scarcely more than eight or ten, on this present occasion something like forty have applied, and I believe some more have been refused on the ground that there are more applying than we have vacancies for. This is a very important matter because, as everybody knows, when you have fewer vacancies the candidates examination becomes a competitive one of necessity and the standard of matriculation is likely to be considerably raised. That particularly when you are reducing the term from four to three years is an important matter. I may add that while it is perfectly true that our graduates have sustained a high reputation in England, within the last two or three years, the reports from the horse guards were not so satisfactory as they had been before, and there was even a thought of considerably reducing the number of commissions granted by the English Government from time to time. I would be loathe to make any reflection on him on my own authority, but it is well that the House should understand, that as far as Major General Cameron's efficiency is concerned he was condemned by three separate parties all more or less qualified to pass judgment upon him. In the first place the commissioners appointed by the late Government to examine into the affairs of this college, reported very adversely to the discipline of the college and reported very strongly against allowing an officer in Major General Cameron's position to be appointed or to continue to manage the college for more than a limited terms of years. It is perfectly well known that Major General Gascoigne, the officer commanding our forces, shared and endorsed that opinion expressly reporting that in his judgment it was extremely desirable that the commandant should be an officer in the active service. The commission appointed by the late Government reported:

The drill is not up to date, and, according to evidence brought before the board, there is a slackness in discipline. With a view to correcting these defects, the board is of opinion that the college should be brought more than at present under the supervision of higher military authority.

This board considers that the education of the cadets who attend the Military College, should be continuous, be thorough, so far as the means within reach will permit, and of a modern type, and that, in order to secure this desirable result, the commandant should be changed at short intervals of, say, five or seven years, as may be found expedient or necessary; also, that as long as it is necessary to employ the services of a military officer from Great Britain as commandant, he be required to be an officer of not higher rank than Lieutenant-colonel on the active list of the Imperial regular army. By following such a plan, new blood, so to speak, will be constantly infused, and the system will be prevented from running into a groove, by carrying with it instruction in respect of those changes in army administration that experience may suggest as conducive to the public good.

Now, it is not necessary to refer again to the opinion expressed by Major General Gascoigne, but I will add that in addition to that there were the views of graduates of the Royal Military College several of whom are men holding positions in the English service as well as in our own. We had a report to the late Government, in which it was expressly declared that with regard to the points noticed by the board as being unsatisfactory, as also with regard to the recommendations made by the board, and most particularly with regard to the recommendations having reference to the rank and appointment of commandants, the meeting desired to express its fullest concurrence. That is not a matter of small importance, because these men, very many of them turned of thirty years old and in active employment themselves, would not put themselves on record as they have done in the report to which I have alluded, unless they felt that the interests of the college imperatively required that they should speak out. I had an opportunity myself of conversing on the subject with three or four of these gentlemen who had entered the Imperial service, and who are at present of considerable rank in the corps to which they are attached; and the universal opinion of these gentlemen was this: that while a matter of ten years ago or thereabouts, the college was fully abreast the military requirements of that day, yet, when they returned after an absence of ten years they found the college just exactly where they had left it; in other words, the college was ten years behind the present requirements. Under these circumstances, I think there can be no doubt whatever—in spite of the opinion naturally held by the hon. the leader of the Opposition—that the Government did well in insisting upon General Cameron's retirement; and I think there can be no doubt whatever that they have done well also in placing the college under the command of a soldier in active service and a man with a career and a future before him. There is no doubt whatever that such an officer is far more likely to inspire the cadets with a military spirit, and far more likely to command their respect and ready obedience than any gentleman, no matter how distinguished his past service may have been, who is known to have no longer a future career. I do not desire at this time, and in view of the fact that the hon. leader of the Opposition is not here, to say more than this: That I am bound to say that his stricture of General Gascoigne was entirely unfair and uncalled for. General Gascoigne, in the discharge of his duty, forwarded a confidential report, as he was bound to do, and it was part of his duty to express plainly his opinion with respect to the commandant. In all other regards General Gascoigne's conduct was in no way open to censure. He did nothing that he was not required to do, nor did he display at any time the slightest animus in dealing with General Cameron. As to the interesting point raised by the leader of the Opposition, whether the rank of Major General Cameron was higher than that of Major General Gascoigne, I do not pretend to be in a position to speak, but this I do know, that General Gascoigne was president ex-officio of the Royal Military College, and therefore a superior officer to General Cameron as regards his position in that college. I am perfectly certain that, in what General Gascoigne reported, he had only an eye to the benefit of the Kingston Military College, and I think that if the House will wait, they will find that in all respects the college is likely to benefit by the change. In one respect, which is of vital importance to the best interests of the College in the future, that of attracting a large number of young men to it, the plan has been an unqualified success, and I think that all that is required to make it perfect will be to raise somewhat the standard of matriculation, which will be done with very little trouble to ourselves, by reason of the fact that there will be now, I hope, an active competition for places in the Royal Military College.

Mr. TISDALE. I do not intend to offer but one criticism and, very shortly, in regard to the change in the Royal Military College. I have before me the explanation of the Minister of Militia in Mr. Mackenzie's Government when this college was founded. The intention of the college as regards the education to be given is very plainly pointed out, and that education was to cover two things. First, to turn out young men up to the military standard, so that they would do credit to Canada in any army they might enter, and second—and I think in this country, the most important of the two—to give a scientific education of a high standard which would fit young men to occupy high positions such as engineers and like scientific professions. We have not sufficient military employment in Canada for these young men, nor are the commissions opened in the Imperial army of sufficient number to anything like absorb the graduates from that college. I am afraid that these changes now made, which reduce the course from four years to three years, and as the Orders in Council set forth reduce the number and the time to be devoted to the different scientific subjects: I am afraid that these changes will work injury to the college. It seems to me strange that the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) should contend that the college had not improved in ten years, in view of the fact that the changes now proposed to lower the standard. It is needless to say that no young man can acquire in three years as much scientific knowledge as he could in four years, and I am afraid that even under a capable commandant the standard of our graduates under such a system can hardly be maintained. The leader of the Opposition dealt very fully with the question of the commandant of the college, and the hon. gentleman opposite (Sir Richard Cartwright) very fairly and temperately showed the other side of the question, so that it is unnecessary for me to refer to that phase. I repeat that I believe it will be impossible to keep up the standard under the present regulations, even with a first-class man at the head. I strongly endorse every word that was said in this House at the time the Mackenzie Government established this college, and I believe that it is of the utmost importance that the standard shall be upheld, or else the usefulness of the college will be gone. If we cannot afford to go to the necessary expense to maintain the very highest standard, and if these young gentlemen cannot afford the time and expenditure necessary for that, then by all means let us do away with the Military College. I want that college second to none in the world, and I want the graduates turned out qualified to take the highest rank in either the military or civil employment. In engineering pursuits and especially in the development of our mining resources, we know that the graduates of the Kingston College have taken and can take high places. I regret that this new Government in the commencement of its administration should run the risk of reducing the standard of that college. As one member of Parliament, I am prepared to take the responsibility of voting whatever money is needed to have the standard of the Kingston College as high as that of West Point in the United States, or any military college in England. The great point to be borne in mind is that according to the new regulations of the Order in Council, the standard shall only be such as shall enable the graduates to enter the Imperial service. I want to see a higher standard, for this reason. We know that young men who receive a military education in England all go into the military service, and there they get the additional scientific training necessary for their profession. This opportunity is open to the graduates of our military school who go to England. If my memory serves me, the Imperial Government have allowed us five commissions per year. According to the hon. gentleman's statement, there are forty students. Then, the other thirty-five will not, in my opinion, have the scientific education to enable them to do anything but enter the Imperial army. In making this criticism, I have no desire to disparage the institution in any way. On the contrary, I am prepared to support an increase in the expenditure on the college rather than to take any chance of depreciating the standard of education either in a civil or a military respect. With regard to the gentleman now at the head of the college, I am quite content to accept the representation of the hon. gentleman, the responsible Minister and the Major General, that they have a good and proper commandant. I hope he will turn out well, and I have every reason to believe he will. It is well enough to have the expenditure on the college reduced, provided efficiency is maintained; but, if necessary, to encourage the young men of the class who attend the college, I would rather increase the number by increasing the expenditure in order to keep up the standard. So that the qualifications of the college maintained by the party who inaugurated it, and continued by the party who succeeded them, shall still hold good by the party who inaugurated the institution doing nothing to lower its standard of efficiency.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. My hon. friend did not appreciate the point I made. The college had run down to an extremely low ebb. Last year, I believe, there were only eight in the graduates class, and scarcely any more matriculants. What I say is that you are more likely to get five distinguished graduates out of a class of thirty or forty than you are out of a class of eight. While I do not lay too much stress upon it, the fact is that the English authorities were complaining of the class of graduates sent over to them in the last few years. I am sorry to have to make that statement, but, nevertheless, it is so. This question depends largely on the standard of matriculation. If you have a high class of matriculants, you can do as much with them in three years as you can with a lower grade of matriculants in four years; and it is upon that principle that the commandant believes that he can afford to reduce the term from four years to three years. I do not think we could hope to get a large class if we maintained the former standard of expense. When this college was originally instituted by Mr. Mackenzie and his Government, the expenses to the parents and cadets was vastly less than it afterwards became. I think the annual expenditure of a student for the first few years was scarcely more than $100 or $150 a year. Subsequently, it swelled to $350 or $400. The hon. gentleman can easily see that in a country like ours the effect of that increased expenditure was to lessen enormously the number of persons from whom the cadets could be drawn. Many of the best of our cadets were drawn from the farm and, in some cases, from the workshop, and they have distinguished themselves. I am glad to say, in the English service since. But that class was completely eliminated by the great increase in the annual expense. I know something of Colonel Kittson's career, and he is most desirous of making the college a success. In fact, he regards his whole future career as being largely bound in its success.

Mr. TISDALE. I did not understand that it was proposed to raise the standard of matriculation.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is not proposed to raise it, but it will be raised ipso facto. Where there are forty competitors, the annual number of places being thirty, it stands to reason that there will be a much higher standard attained than where you have only eight. That is one reason why that change was made to which the hon. leader of the Opposition objected. Colonel Kittson thought it better that the examination should be conducted by the gentlemen who are to educate the men afterwards than by examiners who do not care particularly whether the matriculants come up to a particular standard or not.

Mr. SPROULE. I have always entertained the opinion that this is one of the institutions which we could do very well without. Some years ago I opposed the vote for this college, and my opinion has certainly not changed in regard to it, and I have watched its course since that time.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend is just starting with his criticism, I think we had better call it six o'clock.

It being Six o'clock, the committee rose for recess.

After Recess.

Mr. SPROULE. Before you left the Chair, Mr. Chairman, I was about to make some reference to the Royal Military College. It has been my opinion for a long time that this is a supererogatory, and comparatively useless and yet expensive institution of this country—an institution which costs us a great deal and gives us very little in return. The expenditure on it amounts to $65,000, and the revenue only to $19,881, thus leaving a very considerable deficit. It has lost its hold of public favour since the number of pupils is growing less and less every year. Whether the standard of education is getting higher or not does not appear in the report, but what certainly is evident is that it is becoming more and more unpopular, and what the reasons for this unpopularity are we have yet to discover. The education given there appears to be of two characters. There is first the general education, and then the military education. Now, the general education is inferior to what is given at any of the universities or colleges in this country. In our universities and colleges the staffs of teachers are, in my opinion, composed of much abler men, much better fitted for their work than the staff of the Military College, so that that branch of education in the Military College is not necessary. The other branch is the military education. I have always held the opinion that our military schools can give all, or nearly all, the military education which the pupils acquire at the Military College, so that I fail to see the necessity for the continued existence of this very expensive institution. As I have said, it is undoubtedly becoming more and more unpopular every year, and one of the reasons must certainly be that after we have educated these young men at such great expense, they are thrust on the country, and cannot find employment. Every year applications are made to this House on their behalf, for positions in the Government, and several hon. members, with a penchant for military display, have animadverted very strongly on the Government for not giving positions in the civil service to all these graduates of the Military College. These hon. gentlemen claim that the civil service is the natural place for them. What does that mean? It means that after we have educated these young men at great expense to the country, we must then go further still and find positions for them. In other words, they must take precedence over the large class of young men who, through industry and economy, have educated themselves in our colleges and schools. It seems to me that that it is a serious reflection on the large number of graduates from the other colleges and universities of our country, and I for my part do not see why the Military College graduates should be entitled to more consideration in the battle of life than these young men for whose education the country has not paid anything. It is stated that if we do not provide positions in the civil service for these military graduates, they will drift away from the country, and as a matter of fact a great many of them do. If we trace back records after they leave the Military College, we will find that almost without exception they have emigrated to a foreign country. It is true that we provide appointments for two of them every year in the militia, but in practice even that number do not find places in our militia, because we bring out men from the old country to fill the positions which, in the opinion of some, these young men ought to fill. There are a few in the civil service who, no doubt, are very valuable in these positions, but I do not believe that they are one whit more valuable than would be the graduates of our other colleges and universities. A few of them have gone to the mother country. We are told, from time to time, that the Imperial Government provides commissions for our Military College graduates. Well, I have here the report, and it shows that in 1888 thirty-seven military commissions were provided for those graduates by the Imperial Government, but that was only during one year. Since then only two Imperial commissions have fallen to them every year. These two commissions in the Imperial army are the only ones that are provided per year for those graduates, and the balance of them drift off to the United States and elsewhere, so that just when we have educated them to the point when they might become of some use to this country, they are obliged to seek employment in other countries. That being the case, I do not see what justification there is for our expending this large amount of money on this college. It is said by the acting Minister of Militia (Sir Richard Cartwright) that the Government have reduced the expenses to the young men who join that institution from about $1,400 to $700 each year, and that they have reduced the term from four years to three years, and he has expressed the opinion that the reduction in the length of the term and the reduction in the cost will create a larger competition for entrance to the college and give us a better grade of men. I do not think that can be fairly demonstrated. It seems to me you must have some standard for matriculation, and we will have to choose amongst those who come up to that standard.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The men who get the highest marks go in, and those who get the lowest stay out. It is a competitive examination.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose you have seventy-five above the average?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The highest thirty will go in.

Mr. SPROULE. But your standard is not raised any higher.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is of necessity. When you have a great many competing that necessarily makes the standard higher. My hon. friend will see that if we have a larger number of men competing for entrance than there are places for, of course those who pass the best examinations only are admitted, and the ordinary pass standard is completely lost sight of. That has happened before in cases where there were a number competing. The men who get in were far and away above the pass standard, and that probably will happen again.

Mr. SPROULE. That may be to a limited extent, but I am inclined to the opinion that while a great number may come up to the standard, you will have to make a selection out of that greater number. It is not reasonable to suppose that you can turn out a higher grade of men in three years' tuition than in four, and I do not think that the high standard at which they may come in will make up for the loss of that year. Therefore, I do not think that the class of men turned out by the college will be any better than those turned out formerly. Then, if you reduce the cost to these young men, you must increase the cost to the country, because the income of the college consists of the fees paid by the pupils and money paid by the country. If the fees paid in the past were $1,400 and you reduce them to $700, you will require twice as many pupils to obtain the same return. I understand there is accommodation for about forty.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. More than that, there is accommodation for 100, I think. The college was planned to accommodate 120, but I am not prepared to say it can accommodate that number. I know, however, that it can accommodate about 100.

Mr. SPROULE. How many had it last year?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The number was much reduced. The total number had gone down from eight to twelve per class, and there are four classes, which makes a reduction of about forty-eight.

Mr. SPROULE. By increasing the number that way, no doubt the return would be very much the same, unless you increase the expense and that would not necessarily follow. But it seems to me that we are paying too much for what we get. These men, if they remained in the country, would be of some value to us; but they do not remain, unless we find places for them. Therefore, I think we are scarcely justified in spending the large amount we do for the purpose of keeping up this institution. There is no doubt that it may, in case it need, give us some military experts who would be valuable to the country, and, so far as that goes, the institution would result in good. But if we could retain the services of these young men so as to have them in time of need, there would be a stronger argument in favour of keeping up this expense.

Mr. KAULBACH. I do not propose to enter into a discussion on the subject of dismissals of certain members of the staff of professors from the Royal Military College of Canada, after the statement so replete with information on the subject as that given to this House by the hon. leader of the Opposition, and other hon. members who followed him, but I cannot refrain from expressing my disapproval of the action the Government have taken in dismissing these gentlemen without assigning a reason, or giving them some opportunity or chance of placing themselves properly before the public in order to avoid wrong interpretations that might arise as to incompetency or otherwise.

I may say that Captain Wurtele, professor of mathematics in the college, and one of the decapitated, was the first young man as an applicant for admission as a cadet to the Royal Military College, and that as early as the latter part of 1874, or the early part of 1875, or immediately after the Act establishing the college was passed. In the beginning of 1876 he (Captain Wurtele) passed the first entrance examination that was held, and entered the college in June 1st of the same year—the day it was first opened. In the entrance examination he stood first in a class of eighteen by such a large proportion of marks that the circumstances was referred to in Parliament. This leading position he maintained for the first year and a half, taking Lord Dufferin's prize medal at the end of the first year. This gentleman continued in college till 1880, and shortly after that he took the rank of captain preferring to follow the wishes of his father, rather than his own inclination and accepted the position in the college as one of the staff of professors, rather than enter the regular service of Her Majesty's army, believing at the time that his position on the staff would be a permanency during good behaviour.

I will stop just here, and allow this House to judge, and the country to judge, of the action of the Government toward this gentleman, after his spending the best part of his life in the service of the institution, as to whether he has been dealt with fairly, and in such a manner as would be creditable to the college and those having the supervision of it.

I have a nephew there now as a cadet who has made excellent marks in his studies for the short time he has been there; a young man of promise, but I would be sorry to see him after completing his studies accept a situation at any time on the staff of professors of that institution, to be subject to summary treatment such as has been dealt out to the staff referred to. I hope the Government will reconsider their action and under the circumstances thus briefly detailed continue the services of Professor Wurtele.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not wish to detain the committee for more than a few moments in the discussion of this subject. The technical side of the question was gone into so thoroughly by the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) before he left this House to sail for England, that I think it would be useless to take up the time of the House in going over the same ground. I think we must all agree upon one point, and that is that in the establishment of the Royal Military College the late Hon. Alex. Mackenzie who was then Prime Minister of Canada, built a monument for himself which, to use an expression of the leader of the Opposition, is an evidence of his patriotic feeling towards Canada, and also of the interest which he took in Imperial matters. Sir, it must be remembered that the Royal Military College regulations and curriculum were prepared by one of the greatest experts in military educational matters in the whole British army, the late General—then Lt.-Col. Hewitt. He presided over the destinies of that college long enough to see it achieve a brilliant success. It is not very long ago that he died, having attained the rank of general, and holding a very important command in the Imperial service. Now, it must be remembered that under the regulations as laid down by Col. Hewitt, the Royal Military College of Canada has been an unqualified success. The cadets of that institution have left Canada and have taken their position side by side with the most eminently qualified of those they had to meet in the Imperial service. I must say that I agree with what was stated by the leader of the Opposition, that we must not compare or judge of the usefulness of the Royal Military College from the standard of Imperial institutions which are organized with a different object in view. Woolwich and Sandhurst are institutions in which men carry on preliminary studies to permit them to go into the Imperial service; and those who have taken an interest in military matters in England will know, that after these men who enter the service are qualified in

Sandhurst or Woolwich they must go through the staff college so as to be able to qualify for the promotions which are open to those who go through these examinations. As I understand it, the idea which presided over the foundation of this Royal Military College was that we were preparing men who in an emergency might be called out fully qualified after that four years' course to take a prominent and most important part in the defence of their country. Otherwise, if that were not the idea which presided over the foundation of that college, it would not have been necessary to have established a college merely for educational purposes, because the large universities of the province of Ontario, the universities of the province of Quebec, the universities in Nova Scotia and elsewhere, were quite sufficient to meet that requirement. But we wished to qualify men who, with a thorough military education, if their services were not required for the defence of the country, could occupy positions in civil life; but if required for the defence of the country, would be properly qualified to do so. That is a distinction which I think is of considerable importance. That whereas in England, in Woolwich, and in Sandhurst, and the other military institutions, a man may be qualified to take up a military life in the regiment, or the battery, or the troop of cavalry, if he wishes to qualify for a higher position, he has got to go through a different training in a higher institution, which is the staff college. Now, it has been said here that we qualify men who leave Canada to take positions in the Imperial Service, or to serve in the engineering profession on railways and elsewhere. Let me recall to the memory of hon. members of this House that in 1885 when we had the unfortunate trouble which is now part of the history of this country, cadets who were dispersed all over the United States, and some who were abroad, immediately they heard that their services could be of any use to Canada, applied to the then Minister of Militia—I happened to occupy that position at the time—for service in Canada. Now, I do not consider it was any disadvantage at all for these gentlemen, or for Canada, after the training which they had received in the Royal Military College, that after acquiring new experience in other countries, and in the Imperial service of England, they were fit to come back with their military training fully qualified to take the position which Canada expected them to take, when there was an occasion for them to take part in her defence. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman has reduced the course from four to three years. Is that an advantage? I fail to see it. That curriculum was laid down by Colonel Hewitt who has qualified for service men who have distinguished themselves in the Imperial service, in Africa, in the Soudan, among them being at this moment the son of Judge Girouard, who is in charge of the construction of a railway on the route to Khartoum, and other cadets from the Royal Military College who have been entrusted with most important positions of responsibility, and have shown that the Imperial service considers that from their training in the Royal Military College they were qualified, young men as they were, to occupy these positions of trust and of responsibility. Sir, I do not believe it will be an advantage to the college. England knows the cadets from the qualification which they have received under the old regime. The Imperial service has known that these men, coming fresh from the Royal Military College were thoroughly qualified, where they had gained the highest possible attainments in military education which could be expected from any man, serving in the Imperial service. Sir, if you want a test of that you can see it from the number of points which, in competitive examinations with men in England who had gone through the various colleges and institutions of Great Britain, the cadets of the Royal Military College have obtained. It is quite evident from that test alone that the education was as good as it could possibly be. Now, the course is reduced from four to three years, and I fear very much that the effect will not be good. According to my experience when I was Minister of Militia it is quite impossible to put in any more hours of training and study in the Royal Military College than what existed at the time when Colonel Hewett and General Cameron presided over that college. If it be so, it is impossible to suppose that the same amount of educational training can be got through in three years instead of four. I see also that the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce who is looking after the Department of Militia at the present time, has reduced the number of professors, and I see that Professor Duval, who taught the French language in the Military College is being dismissed. I was quite certain that the hon. gentleman would not overlook the necessity of placing the French educational part of the training in the Royal Military College, in the hands of a French-Canadian professor or a French professor. I was quite certain the hon. gentleman would not commit that mistake. But, Sir, I think a great mistake has been committed, if I may say so in the fact that not only the number of years' training should be reduced from four to three years, but moreover you have reduced the training in the French language and French literature as it existed when I was Minister of Militia, from three to two years. Now, let me say that in Canada we are better qualified to understand the importance of French and English, probably, than any other people on the face of the earth. Those who have travelled, who have had an opportunity of visiting the old country and the continent of Europe, will admit that one knowing French and English can travel all over the world. Possibly there may be difficulties in acquiring the French language which the hon. gentleman referred to when the discussion first took place. He stated that Englishmen were not quite as quick at picking up French as Frenchmen could speak English who had been trained in that language from early youth. But I admit there are difficulties in the French language which possibly do not occur in the English language.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think yours is much easier, perhaps not to speak, but certainly much easier to learn to read.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The French language?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not think so.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. But it is much more difficult to write it. Our grammar, even to a Frenchman, offers some little difficulties occasionally which make us ponder why they should exist. But I am quite prepared to admit what the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce says, that one can read it more easily. It is very pretty to read and has so many attractions that every one is anxious to get over the grammatical difficulties just to find out what the literature is. If there are difficulties in the French language it should be considered more especially in a country like ours.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is just fair to Col. Kittson to say that he has given me to understand that he proposes to exact a higher standard in French than has been exacted before. The majority of the students in the college knew no French when they went in and very little when they were in.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. He is perhaps undertaking more than he can carry out. He says that he will teach more French in two years to the cadets than we have been able to teach in four years.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They taught no French at all.

Mr. BERGERON: I do not know whether they taught any or not, but they did not learn any.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I had several opportunities of being at the examinations, and I heard very good French being spoken.

Mr. BERGERON. By French Canadians?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Some French was spoken very well in the Royal Military College when I was Minister. Any attempt to reduce the number of years, any attempt to teach in two years at the Royal Military College the amount of French which we previously taught in four years I am afraid will not be a success. From an economical standpoint the whole thing only means the saving of $5,000 a year. While the Government can only say that they have saved $5,000 a year there are reasons why it is possible that the changes which have been made in the institution, in the regulation and in the curriculum, will destroy the confidence which up to the present has existed in the college. The Royal Military College men have been selected during the troubles that England had in the Soudan, over and above the four commissions which were granted by Her Majesty to Royal Military College cadets, they gave to Canada several additional commissions and they stipulated that these commissions should be given to Royal Military College cadets because they knew from their training, the military education which they received that without any long training in England they could be entrusted with the important commission which would be confided to them and which they fulfilled to the credit of Canada and to the credit of the institution established by the late Alexander Mackenzie when Premier of Canada. I say more. I say that that college has done very much indeed to make Canada better known and more appreciated in England. There was a time, I remember well, when Canada did not stand in the proud position which she occupies to-day in Great Britain. Our present position is due to the fact that our Royal Military College cadets were able to take their places side by side with the men who had been trained in the military service. It was also due to the fact that some of our men belonging to the teams which were sent to England showed not only that loyalty existed in Canada but that Great Britain in her Canadian subjects found men whose physique prepared to take their share in fighting her battles and who were able to fight these battles side by side with the best men that England could send to the front. I believe that Canada has been going ahead step by step, from one progress to another, and I am sorry to see her taking a retrograde step in regard to one of the best institutions we have ever had in Canada. As to the changes in the educational programme which have been made, it would be taking up the time of the committee if I were to go into them, but I believe in leaving well alone. I believe that the Royal Military College as it existed before the changes took place was as perfect as it could be made. The training took the whole of the four years. I must say that we have had the advantage in that institution of having the best men that we could borrow from the Imperial service to look after the education of the cadets. General Hewitt, who died not long ago, was an expert in military educational matters. Major General Cameron was a man distinguished not only as a military expert, but also as a great scholar, and he has been entrusted with some of the most important duties that could be assigned to any man, and which required not only military training, but great mathematical knowledge. I think the leader of the Government should have thought twice before he made any changes. I know what a deep interest he has taken in the institution, and I am sure that if he had been fully in charge of the department, if unfortunately the Minister of Militia had not been taken away from his duties by the accident which we all deplore—I am quite certain if the leader of the Government had gone into the matter himself that these changes would not have taken place. Although I do believe and assert that these changes will not do any good to the institution, let us hope that it will not destroy its usefulness.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I only wish to call the hon. gentleman's attention to one matter. I entirely agree as to the importance of these cadets being instructed in French. Here is the confidential report made last year by the Major General commanding the forces, and I will just call the hon. gentleman's attention to this :

I attended the class under instruction in French, every member of which had been over two years at the college, and the ignorance displayed was astounding, especially in Canada, where French is so much spoken, and where, I should say, it is of so much importance. In any English college, civil or military, a far higher proficiency would be found.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Might I ask if the Major General is familiar with the dual language ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. My hon. friend is a better judge of that than I am. I will send for the Major General and you may have a conversation, if the hon. gentleman wishes.

Mr. BRITTON. I must crave the indulgence of the committee to make a few remarks on this, as it seems to me, most important subject. I am aware that the dying hour of the session is not the most opportune time for any lengthened remarks, and so, at another session, if I am here, I shall take an early opportunity of calling the attention of this House, not only to the work this Royal Military College was intended to do, but to the work it is doing. My anxiety during this debate has been that a prejudice may be excited against the Royal Military College, which may do it harm. We know how these words of disapproval spoken in the House do have that effect, and unless the discussion is full and exhaustive, unless all the facts are presented, sometimes harm is done. I am glad to be relieved from any serious apprehension on that point, in view of what has been said by the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), by the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Adolphe Caron) and by the Acting Minister of Militia (Sir Richard Cartwright) in defence of this college. The hon.

gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron) said it was as good an institution as it possibly could be made, and that was true at one time; but from whatever cause, we must admit that up to last year the college was running down, and we have only to look at the last report of the late commandant to be satisfied of that. I am not blaming Major General Cameron. I said last session what I had to say in reference to his dismissal. I am not putting all the blame on him, because I think he had to work against operating causes over which he had no control, and which militated against the college, but even taking his last report, a change was absolutely necessary and the Government have been fortunate enough, as it seems to me, to secure the services of the gentleman who is now at the head of that institution. Colonel Kittson comes to us in the prime of life, and I have taken the liberty of ascertaining what his record is. In 1884-85 he was Aide-de-Camp to the Brigadier General at Aldershot. 1885-86, Aide-de-Camp to the general commanding the western district. In 1890, district staff officer of Bengal. In 1891, he was in India and served in the Manipur campaign as Deputy Assistant Adjutant General to the force. He was mentioned in despatches, and is entitled to wear the Manipur medal, "with clasp." It will be seen that Colonel Kittson, the new commandant, has a good deal of staff, and some war experience. He comes to us as a scholarly man, with a clean record, and with a desire to make this institution as perfect as it possibly can be made. And, being in the prime of life, and with a love for the profession he has chosen, and with his ability, I am satisfied that the institution can now be made what all hon. gentlemen who have spoken in this House desire it should be, in the interest of Canada. The leader of the Opposition intimated that Major General Gascoigne wanted to get rid of an officer superior to him, but, as the Acting Minister of Militia said, whatever may be General Cameron's standing in the army, as to the military college, he was under Major General Gascoigne. The remarks of the leader of the Opposition are hardly borne out by what we see in the last report of Major General Gascoigne. I find on page 18 of that report a word or two which I will read:

A new commandant having been appointed, I do not propose to hamper him with any recommendations of mine. Suffice it to say, that, from conversation with him, I am satisfied that all his views are in the right direction for the general improvement of the college.

All that shows that the Major General desires to give the new commandant an opportunity of dealing with the college. Satisfied of his ability he is not desirous to interfere by any directions of his own. I find that Major General Cameron was not satisfied with the results of the college. In his report on the 12th March, 1896, after giving pretty full statistics in reference to the Canadian militia, he says this:

From these considerations, I conclude that the college, in order to meet the defensive requirements of Canada, should pass out not less than 40 cadets a year. This would involve, at the very least, 160 students, to deal with which number the existing instructional equipment, &c., and staff is approximately fitted.

He admits that with the present equipment of the college they were prepared to turn out 160 cadets in the four years, or forty cadets in the year, while, as a matter of fact, the number was reduced far below that. That is something that had to be remedied, or otherwise we would ruin the military college altogether. As I have said, I am not prepared to lay all the blame upon Major General Cameron, but I do say that we should have had better results from the Royal Military College. There is a difference of opinion as to whether the course ought to be reduced to three years, and as to the course of instruction to be followed. On that point, it will be remembered that the visitors to the college made a majority and a minority report. Mr. Sanford Fleming presented his minority report, and although that perhaps recommends a much greater reduction than the present commandant would be willing to have take place, it is in the line, to some extent, of what is now proposed. There is no intention whatever of having the Royal Military College give merely what knowledge can be obtained in the ordinary colleges, but it is intended, so far as I can understand the Order in Council, to be what it was originally intended to be; and as we have the minority report of the visitors together with Major General Cameron's own statement, it will be seen that a trial must be given on some other lines than that which has been pursued. The objection made to the Royal Military College, is that its usefulness is gone, and that it costs a great deal too much to maintain it. What is the fact in regard to that? If we admit that an expenditure of $2,647,000 was necessary for all the purposes of militia and defence in 1896-97, as we have admitted by passing the Estimates, or that $1,887,056 is necessary for the same purposes for 1897-98, then what, I ask, in comparison is $65,000, if the whole amount were asked—but the Minister of Militia is reducing it to some extent—for the maintenance of this Royal Military College? The Government have the buildings there, and a situation that cannot be surpassed; and, in order to make the militia system complete, by maintaining this college for the training of officers, this expenditure is a mere bagatelle, considering the advantage such an institution is to Canada. If in no other particular than that mentioned by the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Adolphe Caron), the advertising it gives to Canada, and to have trained men, who if the emergency arises will come here and do their part in the defence of the country. It is well worth the money it costs to maintain it. When we are ready, as we always are, to spend money cheerfully on such occasions as the present, and when we spend so much money as we do every year for immigration agents in all parts of the world, when we are doing so much to advertise the country, no one who considers the matter properly would for one moment object to an expenditure of $60,000 or $65,000 for such an institution as the Royal Military College. There are men in all parts of the world today who have graduated from the Military College, and wherever they are they stand as firm friends of Canada, advocating it within the sphere of their influence. We can hardly limit the value of this to Canada; and while they are doing this, they are ready and willing at any time to come to Canada if Canada should need their services.

Mr. TISDALE. I want to ask a couple of questions of the acting Minister of Militia. I understood the hon. gentleman to say the other day, in reply to a question of the hon. member for Toronto West, in connection with the item of $30,800 for gratuities to officers to be retired, that Lieut.-Col. John Gray, lately inspector of stores, was not to get a gratuity because the office was to be abolished. I wish to call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that though Colonel Gray had only been a short time in that position, he had previously been director of stores, previously to that of Brigade Major, and previously to that in some other position; so that he has been actually fifteen or twenty years in the service in different positions. Therefore I cannot understand his case not being favourably considered when these gratuities were being considered. I would ask the Minister to look into the matter.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. These facts certainly were not brought to my attention. Prima facie it would appear somewhat hard if under the circumstances stated Colonel Gray got nothing. I will cause inquiry to be made. Of course, as the hon. gentleman is aware, these arrangements were made under the supervision of Dr. Borden, who is unfortunately detained from being present here. I am quite sure that when the matter is brought to his attention, he will consider it with a desire to do full justice to the officer in question.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I had opportunity as Minister of Militia to know the services which Colonel Gray rendered to the force. He was one of the most efficient officers we had in the service. He took part in the troubles of 1885. In any position he was entrusted with, he fulfilled his duties in a manner perfectly satisfactory to the department. It is not a question of the length of time he has been in the position he now occupies. He has been prominently connected with the organization of battalions, he commanded an artillery battery, and was one of its most prominent officers; he has also been Brigade Major, as my hon. friend has stated; and, since I left the department, I know that he has continued to fulfil the duties of the office entrusted to him in a manner perfectly satisfactory to the department. It was because of his efficiency that he was selected for the position he occupied up to the time he was removed. If these pensions are to be distributed among the members of the force who are to be retired, I think it would not be doing justice to a faithful servant of the public and to one who has filled his various positions always with credit to himself and with satisfaction to the department, if he were to be left out; and when the hon. Minister who is now in charge of the department looks into the case, I think he will agree with me that Colonel Gray should not be overlooked.

Mr. TISDALE. I have one more question to ask the hon. Minister. It is about the Oliver equipment. Last year I brought the matter up. The Minister then had it under his consideration. I do not know whether my hon. friend as acting Minister of Militia has had it brought to his attention, so that he can come to a decision with regard to it; but it is getting somewhat stale, and if we are going to adopt it, it should be done soon. I understood from the Minister of Militia last year that he desired to have some test made before he finally decided. Could my hon. friend tell me anything about it? I notice it is not in the Estimates. It is a matter of $5,000. An Order in Council was passed by the late Government for a patent right over the whole Dominion.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The hon. gentleman will understand that in matters of that kind, owing to the unfortunate illness of Dr. Borden, things have necessarily been left over. I believe a number of sets had been provided and sent up here to trial, and a number of the sets are now being actually distributed to the permanent corps.

Mr. WALLACE. On behalf of Colonel Gray, who was one of the volunteers in 1866, the time of the Fenian raid, and who has been an active member of the force ever since, I ask that some recognition of his services be made by the Government. For many years he was the commanding officer of the Toronto Field Battery and was a very faithful and efficient officer. He brought that battery up to the highest standard, and I certainly think that the Government ought to recognize his services by allowing him fair and reasonable recognition and compensation.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I shall bear this matter in mind. It has been brought to my attention for the first time, and I am afraid the gratuities on hand will not go for enough to enable us to pay Colonel Gray at present, but I shall not lose sight of the matter.

Mr. TISDALE. If there are no other supplementaries this year, I would ask that if it be found that Colonel Gray is entitled to compensation, that his case will stand as well as if it had been brought up this year.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I shall draw Mr. Borden's special attention to the case.

Resolution agreed to.

Lachine Canal Enlargement..... $216,000

Mr. FOSTER. Before this item is disposed of, I wish to ask about certain returns which have been pending for a long while, but have not yet been brought down. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals promised to give us, when we were last on these Estimates, a list of the dismissals on the different canals and the persons appointed in the places of those dismissed. Apart from that, I also asked for a return with reference to the commissioners appointed for trying these offensive partisans. I have had a great deal of trouble getting anywhere near that return, and when it was brought down I found that it was incomplete, and that the information I specially needed with reference to the commissioners who were conducting investigations along the Intercolonial Railway was not contained in it. I gave notice in due time, it was ordered by the House and was over and over again promised by the hon. First Minister, yet we are still without it, and I propose at this stage to object to the present estimates going through until I have a satisfactory answer why it is that this return, which was ordered by the House a month ago and which was promised over and over again by the First Minister, is not brought down. If the delay be due to deliberate intent or to carelessness, neither is a sufficient excuse.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I can only tell the hon. gentleman that, so far as the return connected with my department is concerned I have not once but repeatedly called on the officers in the department to hurry up with the preparation of these returns. I have had the officers of the different canals written to, and some of the returns have not yet come to hand. The return ordered with reference to the examinations on the Intercolonial Railway is very voluminous indeed. There is a very great mass of documents and evidence, and I could not undertake to do more than get in the report with the staff at my disposition. It will be impossible for me to have the returns laid on the table this session with the staff available. I regret that as much as the hon. gentleman, but there is a limit to the capabilities of the department, and that limit has been reached. There is not the slightest disposition on the part of the officers to delay, they have no encouragement from me to delay, and I cannot do better than I have done in this regard. I am sorry the hon. gentleman is dissatisfied with the delay, but it is quite inevitable I can assure him.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think that is satisfactory in the least. Mr. Williams, to my knowledge, was appointed commissioner to travel up and down the Intercolonial Railway and has been holding investigations for the last three months. I have not even yet got Mr. Williams's commission, and not one word of testimony, which has been for the last three months before him. If the Minister of the department cannot get a return from his officers in three or four days, there must be some reason for it outside the capabilities of the department. I have no disposition to refuse to take any reasonable excuse, but I leave it to the House and the present leader of the Government if the excuse given by the hon. gentleman is one which can be accepted. Any one knows that these returns could be got in in 24 hours if they were wanted.

Mr. HAGGART. I understand that the information is in the hands of the hon. Minister at present. He says the pay-rolls of all the canals coming to the office with the reports of the dismissals and of the new appointments, and the department has to pass on these pay-rolls and reports before paying the men, and I am certain that if the hon. gentleman were to ask a return from Mr. Pottinger of the dismissals on that road he could get it in at least five days.

Mr. SPROULE. I also asked some questions about the dismissals on the Sault Ste. Marie Canal when the estimates last were before the House, but the hon. gentleman did not seem to know anything about them. That does suggest that there is something wrong with the hon. Minister or his employees, because there is no reason why this information might not be got inside of a few hours, and we are naturally led to the conclusion that there is not an urgent disposition to give the information to the House. This reluctance is very unfair to the House, because we have now very little time to discuss these questions. The hon. gentleman cannot plead ignorance, because his attention was drawn to these matters several times. Now, if I understood him correctly, he says he is not prepared to give that. Surely he could have asked his officers to furnish that information, or if he did, and they have not furnished it, he has dismissed men for more trifling causes than disobedience. I think he ought to have the information for the House. It seems to me very unreasonable that any information we have is so reluctantly given and so little given not even enough to enable us to judge intelligently whether we should or should not vote these estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. I make a suggestion which I think will help business; and that is that we should let all items connected with railways and canals stand and go on with the others. For I assure the House, without any wish to be obstinate or anything of that kind, that we must have that information before these Estimates are passed. Time will be saved, certainly, by allowing us to go on with the other items and let the Minister exercise his ingenuity and power to get that information for us.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I have not the slightest objection to the item standing, and I can remain here as long as the hon. gentleman can. I am willing that the discussion of the item should continue as long as it is deemed necessary.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well. Take the challenge then, and we will remain.

Trent Valley Canal ..... $650,000

Mr. BENNETT. I would like to ask in respect of what contracts it is proposed to send the $650,000 that stands in the Main Estimates on the Trent Valley Canal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There have been no new contracts entered into on the Trent Valley Canal. The contracts in respect to which these sums are to be paid were running during the last session of Parliament. I can give the hon. gentleman the items if he so desires.

Mr. BENNETT. In connection with the Trent Valley Canal, I wish to make a few remarks. I do not propose to go into details of the work or to speak about the greatness of the enterprise either locally or from a national point of view, because, that has been dealt with on previous occasions. But I do propose to say a word on the breach of faith committed by the Ministers in respect to this great work. There has been spent on this canal system a large amount of money, and the Estimates show that this year it is proposed to appropriate $650,000 in respect of the uncompleted contracts. The Minister of Railways and Canals last year did a very creditable thing in going over the route of the canal, and inspecting it personally; and, though I am free to admit that, at a banquet in his honour in Peterborough, he said he was not prepared to say he would advise his colleagues to go on with the work, still, he held out fair hopes and to those who heard him that he was fairly impressed with the enterprise. But

I do not see anything on the Main Estimates to show that supporters of the Government representing constituencies along the route of this canal have interested themselves to secure further appropriations for the work. The Supplementary Estimates are down and the hon. members for North Ontario (Mr. Graham), South Victoria (Mr. McHugh), East Peterborough (Mr. Lang), East Hastings (Mr. Hurley), North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), and last, but not least, the hon. member for North York, the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), have evidently not been able to prevail upon the Government to expend a dollar beyond what had already been before decided upon. Against the Postmaster General we have special cause of complaint in this regard. The hon. gentleman came into the riding of East Simcoe in February last, conducting, on behalf of the Government, a campaign against my humble self as the Opposition candidate; and if there was one thing above another that the Postmaster General was enthusiastic about, it was in depicting the greatness of the Trent Valley Canal. He pointed out that for years and years this great national undertaking, despite the protests of the Liberal party had remained in abeyance; but now that the Liberal party were in power and now that he held the responsible position of a Crown Minister, the people could rest assured that the work would be proceeded with with most commendable vigour and would be proceeded with even more commendable vigour if the Government candidate was elected in East Simcoe. I cannot help thinking that it is the defeat of the Government candidate in that riding that has caused the Government to neglect the work as they have done on this occasion. I can only say as I have said before, that this is a work that deserves the attention of the Government. I regret that the supporters of the Government are so deaf to the entreaties of the electors they represent and so lukewarm to the interests of the work that none of the members appear in their places to say a word in its support. This failure to make further appropriations must be due to one of two things—either these gentlemen have appealed to the Minister and failed, or else that they have not appealed at all. I hope, for their own sake, that they have not appealed to the Minister at all, because, if they have appealed and failed, if the Minister has turned a deaf ear to them, these gentlemen must be driven to the painful conclusion that they have no influence at all with the Ministry. This is the only public work of general interest and great importance now being carried on in the province of Ontario. While millions are going into the province of British Columbia and the province of Quebec, surely the great milch cow, Ontario, should have some little regard paid to it in respect of public works. I can only express the hope that the supporters of the Government along the route of the canal have not asked the support of the Government at all, rather than that they have appealed to the Government in vain. If there is a constituency that is particularly interested in this work equal to that of the riding of East Simcoe, which I have the honour to represent, it is the riding of North York which is represented by the Postmaster General, and I cannot help thinking that when the Postmaster General is doing such a great work in attempting to fill up the depleted exchequer by saving small sums on mail contracts while immense sums are being spent in other provinces, the hon. gentleman should have been rewarded by his colleagues by having some appropriations made for this great work which is of such great interest to the province of Ontario and the riding which he represents. I presume that at this late hour of the session it would be useless for me to address any remarks to the hon. Minister or his colleagues to ask them to make any further grant in this regard, and I can only express my regret that the Government has disregarded the wishes of the people along the route of the canal and have not undertaken substantial contracts this year. If the Government supporters along the route of the canal are satisfied with the Government turning a deaf ear to them, they are not expressing the wishes of their constituencies. More particularly is the word of the Postmaster General pledged to the people of East Simcoe that this work would be undertaken and pushed on with more commendable vigour than was shown by the Conservative Government and that it would not be kept as a bait for electioneering purposes, but that it would be carried on with despatch.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like, if possible, to have an answer from the Government as to whether they think it is well to refuse information to the House, information which this House has every right to ask, information which every member of the House has a right to have given to him. Every one who knows what constitutional government means, every one who knows how it has been carried on in this country, knows that the meanest member in this House has the right to stand in front of the Ministers and ask each one of them, every reasonable question, and have from each of them all reasonable information in respect to his department.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) said he would allow this item to stand.

Mr. FOSTER. If the item stands, of course it will save time.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Minister said just now that it would stand.

Mr. BENNETT.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I cannot make the good constitutional speech I was about to make.

Amount required for salaries of examiners and other expenses under the Civil Service Act, including $250 for the secretary and $100 for a clerk, which sums may be paid to members of the civil service, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act..... $2,450

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is an increase of $150 owing to the fact of an inequality existing between the salaries paid to the civil examiners. They are to receive $400 each, but for some reason which I have not been able to ascertain, one of the examiners has only been paid $250; and this puts them all on an equal footing.

Department of Indian Affairs—

To provide for payment of allowance to private secretary of the hon. the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, from 1st January to 30th June, 1897.....	$100 00
To provide for payment of amount due to Edward R. McNeill for services rendered as stenographer and typewriter, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary.....	25 00
To provide a further amount for clerical and other assistance.....	504 74

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. For the first item, no provision was made to pay the salary of the private secretary during the current year, and as in previous years it has been customary, the money is now asked for to remunerate Mr. McKenna for services rendered by him in that capacity. For the item of $504.74 the explanation is this: The amount voted for this service in the main Estimates for the current year was $1,300. That was found insufficient owing to the necessity of employing additional typewriters; and two clerks being absent on sick leave, necessitated a larger expenditure for extra clerical service than would have been the case had the services of these clerks been available. After the 30th of June the expenditure in this branch will be considerably reduced. Mr. Edward R. McNeill, owing to a pressure of work, was engaged for a month on the authority of the Deputy Superintendent General.

Mr. SPROULE. How much salary does he get in his regular position?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I cannot tell. He gets this extra.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is the Minister of the Interior? Is the school question not settled yet?

Mr. SPROULE. We have had no explanation of this. This man may be getting $1,000 or $2,000, and we have no explanation but the fact that he is employed and paid in one department, and we vote him an extra sum of money in another. Perhaps he is being paid a sufficient amount in the other department to which he belongs.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will read the hon. gentleman the explanation given by the department. Mr. McNeill's services were engaged for a month on the authority of the Deputy Superintendent General. The funds provided by Parliament for extra services became exhausted. He would have been paid out of that in the ordinary way, and when funds became available he was refused, because he had not passed the preliminary examination required by the Civil Service Act until after he had performed the services for which he claimed payment.

Mr. SPROULE. He could not legally claim a dollar.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Therefore, Parliament is asked to vote it.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the Minister to say that because the funds were exhausted he could not be paid, and had the funds not been exhausted he could not have been paid, or if he had been paid, he would have been paid illegally.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman sees the explanation—he was employed by the late Deputy Superintendent General, by whom he was paid out of the funds voted for this service generally, without coming to Parliament. Then an Act was passed providing that nobody should be employed unless he passed the preliminary examination. Then the Auditor General, of course, could not pay this gentleman who had been employed and had done work as stenographer and type-writer.

Mr. SPROULE. Before the Act passed.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, and he was paid before the Act passed, out of the general vote. Then when he performed a month's work after the Act passed, the Auditor General would not pay him, and therefore we ask Parliament to vote him the sum of money we owe him.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the use of these words, "notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary"?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Because the Civil Service Act prohibits the payment of an account of that kind, and we have to come here and get a special vote from Parliament for it.

Mr. BERGERON. I know it is not in the department of my hon. friend. It shows once more that if that school question had been settled properly, we would have had the Minister of the Interior here.

Privy Council—To provide for salary of extra messenger, other than those who have passed the civil service examination, anything in the Civil Service Act notwithstanding..... $303

Mr. FOSTER. This seems to be becoming a regular abuse to provide for the salary of an extra messenger over those who have passed the civil service examination.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is for one of your old friends who has been there all along.

Mr. FOSTER. How many thousands have passed the civil service examination?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not know.

Mr. FOSTER. Is he a good messenger?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He has been there all along.

Department of Railways and Canals—
Contingencies..... $ 800
To pay arrears of subscriptions for newspapers and other publications..... 1,000

Mr. FOSTER. What are these contingencies?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They are all Tory newspapers that you ordered.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was represented to me by the deputy head of the department that $1,000 would be required to pay arrears in respect to a number of newspapers.

Mr. BERGERON. Have you stopped all these Tory papers?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. These are arrears to subscriptions for newspapers which have been running from three to ten years. It has been ascertained that these papers have been coming to the department, and I suppose it was difficult to stop them. At all events the bills have been received in the department, and they are unpaid.

Mr. SPROULE. Would it be too much to ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to give a list of the papers.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can get you a list if you give me time.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister says that he has stopped all these papers; will he now say whether or not he is going to have others put in their places?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have started a few others.

Department of Printing and Stationery—
To provide for the payment of G. S. Hutchison for three months from 31st March, 1897, and M. P. Mungovan for two months from 12th April, 1897, each at the rate of $400 per annum, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act..... $106 66

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. These two men employed by the Queen's Printer who have not passed the preliminary examination, and we have to vote them the money.

Mr. FOSTER. Why do you not go to the list?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. These are men with technical knowledge.

Department of Militia and Defence—

To pay G. S. Maunsell, 3rd class clerk, allowance while filling the position of the chief architect, from 1st October, 1896, to 31st March, 1897, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act..... $ 200

To provide for the salary of P. Weatherbe, appointed architect, Department of Militia and Defence, O.C., 22nd February, 1897—Salary as a 1st class clerk from 1st April to 30th June, 1897, at $1,400..... 350

To provide for departmental contingencies, 1st April to 30th June, 1897—

Clerical and other assistance.... $ 600
Printing and stationery..... 1,200
Sundries ..... 750

2,550

Mr. SPROULE. How much does G. S. Maunsell get and where is he employed?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. He was a third class clerk, but a man who has, I am informed, very much more capacity than the average third class clerk, and on the retirement of Mr. White who was the architect in the department this gentleman did the work that had formerly been discharged by him for a period of six months. This allowance is made to compensate him for the work that he did. His salary was very small, only $400 or $500 a year, and he received a gratuity of $200 for the extra work. The others explain themselves. Mr. Weatherbe was appointed to the vacant position and his salary begins on the 1st of April.

Mr. BERGERON. Is Mr. White entirely out of the service?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am informed that he has been dismissed.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the Minister of Trade and Commerce intend to recognize the principle that any clerk who for a temporary period in the absence of a higher class clerk, performs the duties of the higher class clerk shall have to be paid the difference in salary?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am not giving him the difference in salary. The salary in one case was $1,400, and in the other $400. The difference in salary would have amounted to $500 and I am allowing him $200 only.

Mr. FOSTER. But it is acknowledging the principle that if for the time being a third class clerk chances to do the work of a clerk higher than himself he is entitled to the salary. That used to be pretty generally allowed, but in the last eight or ten years the circumstances have been very exceptional where it has been allowed. We followed out the rule laid down by Sir John Macdonald that it was not a healthy practice that any clerk in that position should get the difference between the salaries or even an allowance. It is regarded as a proof of confidence and adds to the prospects of a clerk for promotion when he is singled out to do the work.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This gentleman had been brought in at an extremely low rate. He was not one of our appointments I think.

Mr. FOSTER. No, he was one of our appointments.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. He was brought in at a very low salary, I think far below his proper qualities, and Dr. Borden promoted him to a second class clerkship.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not saying anything about his efficiency.

Department of Agriculture—

Salary omitted in main Estimates..... $ 175
Further amount required to pay for contingencies to 30th June, 1897..... 2,150

Mr. FOSTER. What are these amounts for?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The first item is in consequence of a change. When we were arranging the Estimates it was expected that one of the clerks would have been promoted to be a first class clerk, but there was no room for him in consequence of my predecessor not having superannuated one of the clerks whose superannuation he had intended to provide for, and I had to keep him in the list of second class clerks. In doing this my deputy had made out the minimum rate of second class clerks, but in consequence of the statutory increase in former years, the salary was $175 more than the amount which my deputy at that time thought it to be.

Mr. FOSTER. This is only a readjustment.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes. The second item is owing to the fact that last year I asked for $7,500 to pay for extra clerical assistance. I did so coming into the department as I did at the end of the last fiscal year, and expecting that the ordinary estimates, as prepared by my predecessors would do for the ensuing year. When I came to investigate I found that there had always been Supplementary Estimates, sometimes to the extent of $3,000, and that those supplementaries would make a much larger sum than $7,500. We found that the sum was insufficient. Out of this $2,100, $600 is to give to my secretary as an allowance over and above the usual provision of $600. In some departments this paid out of the extraordinary ordinary vote, but in my department perhaps by error, my department paid out of the ordinary contingencies. Therefore, this amount would not have been more than $1,500 had this not been the case. When I took charge of the department that amount was necessary to pay some extra clerks there. I have reduced the number very considerably, but have not been able to get them down below that point.

Department of Justice—

To pay F. H. Gisborne for extra service rendered during first session of 1896, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act..... $150

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I am not going to find fault with giving this money to Mr. Gisborne for extra services, because he is a very good lawyer and a very good officer; but I wish to call the attention of the Government to the injustice done in this department to the French lawyers and to the province of Quebec. I may say that the present Government is not responsible for that; I had occasion to draw the attention of the late Government to it, and without success. I must ask my hon. friends to do justice to the French element, and to the Quebec lawyers, and to the Quebec people at large in this department. We do not find in the department one employee who can write or read French sufficiently well to read a letter sent there, and you do not find in the department an employee who knows the civil law of Quebec. That state of things should not be allowed to continue. I ask this Government to remedy this injustice which was done by the late Government, and I ask them to remedy it at once. I will add this further, to show the injustice there was done to the province of Quebec; last year there was a French assistant law clerk, Mr. Mignault, who served under Mr. McCord.

An hon. MEMBER Who knew no law

Mr CHOQUETTE He knew the law, though he was a Tory. He resigned, and he was replaced by a man from Ontario named Mr. O'Brien; he may be a very good man, but I think it was an injustice to Quebec to appoint him. I mention this to show that we are not treated as we ought to be, and I ask this Government to remedy this injustice. I say that we must have in the Department of Justice a French Canadian lawyer who can read and write French, and we all know that the French Canadian lawyers can read and write English too. I say that we should have an officer in the Justice Department who knows the civil law of Quebec.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Choquette) mean to say that the Solicitor General does not know any French law, and that he cannot read and write French.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I was referring to the officials and not to the Ministers. Mr. Newcombe and Mr. Gisborne are good men, but they cannot read and write French, and they do not know the law of Quebec. We have a right to have a French Canadian lawyer there and we must have him.

Mr. QUINN. Does not Mr. Power understand the Quebec law.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon member (Mr. Choquette) has referred to the late assistant law clerk of the House. I may say that Mr. O'Brien was appointed by my predecessor.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I know.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that Mr. McCord is as perfectly familiar with French as he is with English, so that the remark of Mr Choquette would not apply in his case.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I say that when a French Canadian lawyer resigned he ought to have been replaced by another French lawyer from Quebec. I know the present Speaker is not responsible, but I say the late Government was responsible.

Mr. BERGERON. Mr. Mignault was appointed at a salary of $1,800, with the understanding that his work would be during the session, as the work of the law clerk finishes at the end of the session or a few days afterwards. He was here during one session and did his work to the satisfaction of everybody. Mr. Mignault is a very good lawyer, well up in both civil and constitutional law. He is one of our most clever young men in Quebec. The late Speaker issued an order that Mr. Mignault should stay here all the year round, and as he practised law in Quebec and was secretary of the law reports, he resigned. I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Choquette) that he should have been replaced by a lawyer from Quebec, but the late Speaker replaced him by a gentleman of the name of O'Brien from Ontario.

Mr. SPROULE. It is not a sound principle to lay down that because a Frenchman or an Englishman occupied a position which became vacant, it ought to be filled by one of the same nationality. It is only the fitness of the man that should be taken into consideration and not whether he is French or English. There are some positions in the service where it is necessary to employ an official familiar with the French language, but this is not one of them, and there is no urgent need for demanding that a French Canadian should be appointed. The Government should only take into consideration the qualifications of the man for the office.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I cannot agree with the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule). I agree with him that it should not be laid down as a rule that one nationality should be perpetually represented in a certain position within the gift of the House of Commons or the Government, but as we have two systems of law in this country, it is very important that the civil law of Lower Canada should be represented in the officers of this House. I know, as every lawyer in Montreal and Quebec knows that Mr. Mignault occupies a prominent position, and is one of the rising men at the bar of Quebec. He is not only a civil lawyer, but he is of high standing, as a constitutional lawyer, and has published works on that subject. I have not a word to say against Mr. O'Brien, who replaced him, but the fact that Mr. Mignault was here representing the civil law of Quebec should be considered when one was appointed to his place. His successor should have been replaced by a man who had the same requirements and qualifications which he possessed.

Mr. MILLS. Is not Mr. McCord a Quebec lawyer?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. And he wanted an Ontario lawyer as an assistant?

Mr. SPROULE. Evidently the hon. gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron) has misunderstood me. I do not contend for a moment that there were not positions around this House where a French lawyer or a Frenchman was necessary, because there are many of them; but I objected to the principle that because a Frenchman was in a position which might be as well filled by an Englishman, or vice versa, the same nationality should always be represented in that position.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I was very glad to hear the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Adolphe Caron) speaking as he has done, but I am very sorry he did not make that nice little speech to the ex-Speaker, and try to prevent that injustice.

Mr. WALLACE. When these gentlemen are laying down this principle, it is just as well that we should know whom Mr. Mignault succeeded. He succeeded Dr. Wicksteed, an Englishman. I know that Mr. McCord, the law clerk, is a Quebec lawyer. I do not know whether he is a French Canadian or not, as there are many French Canadians with Scotch or Irish names. But he is a Quebec lawyer, and he fulfils the requirements which these gentlemen say are essential to the proper performance of the duties of that office. I know further that there were a number of applications for the position which Mr. O'Brien occupies. Among the essentials in the applicant was an accurate and exact knowledge of the French language, and I know that Mr. O'Brien fulfils that requirement. If the rule was to apply that a Frenchman was to succeed a Frenchman, and an English-speaking man an English-speaking man, Mr. Mignault would not have been in that position at all.

Mr. BERGERON. Does Mr. O'Brien stay here all the year round? I suppose, Mr. Speaker would know.

Mr. SPEAKER. The Clerk informs me that he does. The reason Mr. Mignault retired was that he was not willing to do so.

Mr. QUINN. If the facts were in favour of the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Choquette), there would be a good deal to be said on this side of the case, considering the necessity of having some one in our legal departments here who understands our Quebec law thoroughly. But I think the facts are not in favour of the position taken by the hon. gentleman, because we have in the Department of Justice a Quebec barrister in the person of Mr. Power, who is probably better versed in the civil law of Lower Canada and in constitutional practice than any other man of my acquaintance in the province of Quebec. Besides, he speaks French fluently and writes it perfectly.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. He is only for the criminal cases.

Mr. QUINN. Oh, no. Any business that I have had to do with the Department of Justice in the last fifteen years I have always transacted it with Mr. Power, in both civil and criminal matters.
