Mr. BRITTON. I would like to ask what Mr. Gisborne's salary is. It seems to me that if a man is paid a reasonably good salary, there is no necessity for the Government paying him an additional sum.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We are in this position, that these services were rendered, and the understanding was made to pay him before we came into office.

Mr. FOSTER. What about the contingencies?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In nearly all the departments arrangements had to be made to get the bills paid for these newspapers, which had been running for years. Some of these newspapers had been discontinued years ago, but their publishers continued to send them, despite the orders of the department, and claimed that the law was on their side.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It seems to me that the proposition laid down by my hon. friend is not correct. If the papers were refused, surely their publishers have no claim against the department.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My hon. friend is right as a matter of law, but the papers were continued to be sent, and I believe they were continued to be received.

Department of the Interior—

Amount required to pay salary of T. W. Hodgins from 1st January, 1897, to 30th June, 1897, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act.....	$197 50
Amount required to pay Beresford H. Scott, salary from 13th July, 1896, to 11th November, 1896, inclusive, at $400 per annum, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act.....	132 75
Amount required to provide for the salary of Mrs. Theresa A. Richardson from 1st March to 30th June, 1897, at $400 per annum, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act.....	133 33

Mr. SPROULE. I think we ought to have an explanation of this.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The first vote of $197.50 to Mr. Hodgins arises in this way. The Civil Service Act of 1895, which came into operation on the first of January, 1896, provided for the continuous employment of the clerks in the Service at the time, but by some hiatus did not provide for the continued employment of the messengers who were in the Service. This person has been employed as a temporary messenger in the department since 1887, but, not having passed the preliminary examination, his case was not covered by the Act, and consequently the House has to vote the special amount. Mr. Scott came into the department on the 13th of July, and worked till November, 1896, but could not be paid owing to the fact that he had not passed the Civil Service examination. This is to ask the House to pay him for the work he has done.

Mr. SPROULE. Why did you employ him if he had not passed the examination? You did it in violation of the Act.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He passed the necessary examination afterwards. The examinations take place only at certain periods of the year. This gentleman worked a little before he passed. He has passed since.

Mr. SPROULE. We have been repeatedly refused employment for young men in the past on the ground that it was an imperative necessity to pass the examination.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is quite right. He came into the department at that period and was paid his monthly pay, and this is asked to cover it. I agree with the hon. gentleman, and I know that in my department it cannot be done. It was done in this case, and he went up for examination and passed, and is now regularly in the department.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish we could have the assurance that that sort of thing is not going to continue.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am with the hon. gentleman perfectly, and I think all my colleagues are. This happened before the Act was well understood by the incoming Government.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it was well understood. It is a short act, and I am sure my hon. friend, whom I am happy to congratulate on the new honour which has been so deservedly given him, is familiar with it. If my hon. friend, who wears so worthily the honour he has so well deserved, would only now signalize this new honour by giving us a promise to have no more of this irregular business done, we will be well pleased.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think I can give that assurance.

Mr. BERGERON. It is but a continuation of what we have had in the past. For the past eighteen years the Supplementary Estimates have been filled up with additional salaries to employees. My hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) used to spend all his time ventilating these matters and I am sorry we do not see him here to-night, but the vigilance of hon. gentlemen opposite seems to have departed with their change of sides.

Mr. SPROULE. We might just as well repeal the Act altogether. For if you look at the remaining items, you will find that they are nearly all parallel with this. The exception is where we find the Act properly applied, and the rule is to violate it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will explain the case of Mrs. Richardson. She had passed the preliminary but not the qualifying examination, and it was thought that inasmuch as she had passed the preliminary examination she was entitled to go on and get paid. On closer inspection, it was found that that was not the case, and that she had to pass the qualifying examination as well. She has been in the service many years. She was employed in the post office at Montreal from 1893 to 1896.

Department of Inland Revenue—Amount required for contingencies to meet expenditure for the remainder of the year. $1,000

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). $200 of this is for the clerical help, and the remainder is to pay accounts of the late Government due in 1896 for stationery, printing and parliamentary publications.

Mr. QUINN. I would like to ask the Controller for further information with regard to the dismissal of Mr. Doheny.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I told my hon. friend the other day that Mr. Doheny had not been dismissed, but that we were under the necessity of dispensing with his services along with the services of several others who were temporarily employed because we had not funds to pay them. We had to dispense with a certain number of temporary employees, and we dismissed those who had given the least satisfaction. There were three in the department at Montreal whom I decided to dispense with because their record was not of such a nature as to entitle them to be kept on, and Mr. Doheny was one of them. If the hon. gentleman insists on my going further into this case, I hope it will not interfere in any way with Mr. Doheny's future prospects, but I must say that while he bore an excellent character for sobriety and integrity he had the lowest marks possible for industry, reliability and efficiency.

Mr. QUINN. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman what he means by reliability and efficiency as distinguished from integrity.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. You can understand that a man may be perfectly sober and honest and at the same time so neglectful of his duty and so wanting in energy as to be utterly unreliable. The late Government had to suspend him for neglect of duty on the 18th of February, 1896.

Mr. QUINN. I do not wish to charge the hon. gentleman, whose goodness of heart we all know, with having dismissed this man without being forced really to do so. I fully appreciate the pressure which is brought upon him from the back benches to dismiss this man and fill up his position by somebody else.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I have not filled up his position.

Mr. QUINN. I am glad to know it has not been filled although that is not much consolation to Mr. Doheny, but I find that he has the highest marks for sobriety and integrity. And I cannot distinguish between integrity as distinguished from industry. I must confess it requires close reasoning to which I am not equal at the first bluff, to distinguish between reliability and integrity as explained by the hon. Minister and between integrity and industry as explained by him. I am afraid I would not like to make a charge against the officer who is so efficient as to make this report, but I am afraid also that there has been some hot firing on the part of the gentlemen who has made the report to the hon. Minister, for which the Minister is responsible, and that these words have been used merely for the purpose of finding an excuse for making away with some officers who were not as popular with the superior officers as they might have been. How can a man be called a man of integrity who neglects his duty? How can he be called efficient in the service? Yet this man has the very highest mark for integrity, while, at the same time it is charged that he is unreliable and inefficient. Now, I must confess again that I do not see how the two conditions could exist—first class character for integrity, and the very lowest possible class of character for reliability and efficiency.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I think it most comical that we should have to defend arrangements made by hon. gentlemen opposite when in power, and that have remained for so many years. This is the way the report is made up, with classifications under five heads—industry, sobriety, reliability, integrity, and efficiency. It is not my fault if that was the classification; this report is prepared for me by the officer who is at the head of that branch of the department at Montreal, who was appointed years ago by hon. gentlemen opposite and whom I consider an efficient officer. As to pressure from the back benches, of which the hon. gentleman speaks, I may say that no hon. member has spoken to me in any way about the suspension I have been obliged to make. I kept these officers as long as possible. It might have been wiser for me to not keep them a day longer after I took charge of the department; but I thought I would keep them as long as possible, and, ultimately, when I was obliged to choose, I chose three officers whom the reports shows not to be satisfactory servants.

Mr. QUINN. I notice some of the ex-Conservatives in the House; probably they could give us some idea what this classification means.

Mr. WALLACE. The Department of Customs, under my administration, knew nothing of that classification.

Department of Marine and Fisheries—

To provide for deficiency in salary for J. F. Fraser, technical officer, as authorized by Order in Council..... $ 18 75

To provide further amount required for civil government contingencies—

Clerical and other assistance..$ 800
Sundries..... 1,500

2,300 00
$2,318 75

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This is covered by the explanation I gave before. The item of sundries is to pay a balance due on account of newspapers. The item of clerical and other assistance includes $200 for a type-writer for Mr. Venning, the clerk who has charge of the Behring Sea matter, the remainder $600 being to pay for the private secretary of the Minister, the regular allowance. The item of $18.75 for Mr. Fraser is to be voted because Mr. Fraser was allowed an increase, which was only 25 was voted. The balance is to make it up.

Administration of Justice—

Amount required for the travelling expenses for the Right Honourable the Chief Justice of Canada, appointed a member of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.....	$1,000
Expenses of Judge Forin in travelling to Vancouver to be sworn in.....	117
Further amount required for judges' circuit allowance, British Columbia.....	1,000
Further amount required for expenditure in connection with the administration of justice.....	7,000
	$9,117

Mr. FOSTER. With reference to this first item is it to be understood that the Right Hon. Chief Justice of Canada is to have this allowance yearly for travelling expenses.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. FOSTER. How does it come to be given this year?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Right Hon. Chief Justice was appointed to the Privy Council and was going home for the first time to take his place, and it was thought fitting and proper that he should be paid a reasonable sum for travelling expenses. He is to be sworn in and we thought it proper to make him this allowance for this occasion.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the Chief Justice to attend the Privy Council or is the appointment simply honorary?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. By no means. He intends to be sworn in and take his seat at the Privy Council and hear cases.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Will he go over in other years?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. He may not go. But there may be occasions when he will go, but not so as to interfere with his duties as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. He will go over, no doubt, when his services are sought or are deemed desirable.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Are his expenses to be paid?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is no understanding that we should pay them, but it was thought fitting to allow him a reasonable sum on this occasion.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I do not see how he can sit in the Privy Council without interfering with his duties as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, and then he can hardly hear cases that have been heard in the Supreme Court—he can hardly hear appeals from the decisions of his own court.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The same point struck me. But my hon. friend will see that the Privy Council sits in the months of July and August, I believe, and during those months the Supreme Court does not sit, that being the time for vacation. He can sit in the Privy Council in July and August without interfering with his duties here.

Mr. CASGRAIN. But he can hardly try an appeal in a case which he has tried as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court here.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He will be in the same position as the Chief Justice from Australia.

Mr. CASGRAIN. He can only sit in other cases than those coming from Canada and that may not be of much service to us.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You have many cases going from Quebec, do you not?

Mr. CASGRAIN. Yes, from the court of review.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not understand that there would be any technical objection to the Right Hon. Chief Justice sitting in the Privy Council in appeal upon cases he had heard in the Supreme Court.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not aware what the practice is.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There would be no practice to the contrary unless there were some special rule or regulation. Of course the expediency of such a course would be one consideration and the right to sit in such cases would be another. I do not know whether the Government have taken the matter into their consideration—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, the matter was canvassed a good deal.

Mr. SPROULE. What additional salary does the Chief Justice get for these duties?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. None.

Mr. SPROULE. There surely can be no objection to his travelling expenses being paid.

Mr. BERGERON. What is that item of $7,000 required for expenditure in connection with the administration of justice ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is what it says. We cannot give the details of that.

Mr. BERGERON. I think we are entitled to have some explanation about this.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We will give you the information on concurrence.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is one omission in this vote, Colonel Boulton's name, of the Senate, should be in there. It is a pure omission, which will, of course, be corrected.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly Colonel Boulton should have his as well as the others, if they be paid at all. But I would like to have a full explanation of the item to pay E. St. O. Chapleau $1,000 for his patented poll-book.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). The present Clerk of the Crown in Chancery invented a patent for a poll-book to be used by deputy returning officers in polls at the general elections.

Mr. SPROULE.

That poll-book was used in the elections of 1891 and 1896, all through the country, by the Government. I believe and know of my own personal knowledge, that it contributed very largely to the accuracy of the returns, and to the convenience with which returns could be made up of the reports of the polls. The Government made use of this without any definite arrangement with Mr. Chapleau. But in the Patent Act there is a clause by which the Government may use a patent obtained from the Commissioner of Patents, by paying a proper return for it. Mr. Chapleau's claim had been before the Government for some little time. We investigated it, and believed that it was just and fair, and that some payment should be made to him ; and after considerable discussion, the amount of $1,000 was agreed upon. I may say that in the payment of this claim all further claims with regard to the use of this poll-book are done away with, and the Government is to have free use of it in future.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Has my hon. friend investigated this himself ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Would my hon. friend be surprised to learn that it was not used at all in the election of 1891 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not got the papers under my hand but, speaking from memory, I certainly understood that it was used in the elections of 1891. I may say that I was personally present in the polls in the election of 1891 where it was used in my county.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend tell me what is the device ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The device is that instead of as heretofore has been the case, all sheets, returns, and everything that is used in the polls being loose and free, they are bound together in the shape of a book and they are put in the order in which they are used, so that there can be no mistake ; and the returning officers have to make their returns and file them up page by page as they go through the books.

Mr. FOSTER. Is my hon. friend aware that that was reported against both by the Minister of Agriculture and the Acting Minister of Agriculture ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am aware that there is a report from three members of the last Government, who investigated the matter and who recommended that payment should be made.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I fully agree with the Government in placing that item in the estimates. I was one of the commission who investigated that matter. We called in the Auditor General and it was really upon his evidence that the commission decided that the claim should be paid. I think it should have been paid long before the present moment. The Auditor General stated before the commission that the book in question, however simple the device may be, saved $5,000 to the Government in every general election which took place. Upon the evidence which the Auditor General gave before the commission, a report was made, as the Minister of Agriculture has said. That report was or should have been passed. When the matter had been submitted to the committee for investigation, I think the report having been made, should have been adopted. However, for some reason or other it was not. I think that the evidence upon which the commission based their conclusion was the evidence of the Auditor General, who is better able to judge than probably anybody else as to the saving which this invention made to the Government. I think the item is a small amount compared to the saving which the invention has effected, and which simplifies considerably the work of the returning officers all over the Dominion.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend bring down the whole papers, and the poll-book, and all the data, so to speak?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If my hon. friend wishes to have it all, I can do so.

Mr. TAYLOR. In reference to the first item in this vote, I do not presume that there is a member on this side of the House or the other that objects to it. We all regret very sincerely the accident which befel the Minister of Militia, but there are two cases of injustice that have been done to members of this House to which I wish to draw attention. I refer to the cases of the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Corby) and the hon. member for South Waterloo (Mr. Livingstone). I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Finance to this matter. The hon. member for West Hastings, in the session of 1895, was taken ill, and after being at Bermuda, returned to the House within four days of the close of the session. Had he been here for the four days at the beginning of the session and then gone away, he would have been entitled to his full sessional indemnity, but on account of only being here four days at the end of the session he only got paid for four days. I think that is a case that should be considered, and that he should be granted his indemnity. The session that year was seventy days in length. There were twelve days' allowance which reduces it to 58, and he was present four days, which will leave 54 days at $8 a day reduction, making $641 that he ought to be paid at least. The hon. member for South Waterloo (Mr. Livingstone) broke his leg and could not come to the House until the end of the session. I mentioned these cases last year and thought there would be a supplementary vote for them this year. I am satisfied that the Minister will put them in the Estimates for next year.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I quite agree with what the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has said. I remember bringing up the case of the member for South Waterloo (Mr. Livingstone). I am also aware that the hon. member for West Hastings was ill and was obliged to leave the House, and if other members are paid I do not see why these gentlemen should not be paid. At the same time that the hon. member for South Waterloo had broken his leg another member was absent for a whole session and was paid in full. Why should we have these cases of discrimination?

Mr. CASGRAIN. Go for the Government.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I go for what is right in this matter and as I support the Government I generally go for what is right. I hope the Government will consider this matter and see that these two hon. members are treated in the ordinary manner. I think there is time enough yet to see that these hon. gentlemen are paid. The Government will find in the Auditor General's Report the number of days that they were absent by reason of their illness, and it can be put in the Estimates this year. Of course it is a debt that belongs to hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, but after a few years we will have them all wiped out.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to ask the hon. leader of the Government what state of health the Minister of Militia is in now, and whether we may expect to see him back soon?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I had very great hopes that the Minister of Militia would have been able to join us before the end of the session, but he has been obliged to return to the sanitarium in New Jersey, and, although, of course, he is making satisfactory progress, he will require a considerable period of rest before he can return to his duties.

Mr. BERGERON. In reference to this item "French translators during the session of 1897, $1,568," I would like to ask the hon. gentleman to give me the names of these translators.

Mr. SPEAKER. In reference to these general items for legislation a general remark may be made. We have had two sessions during the fiscal year 1896-97. During the last session a vote for legislation was taken which would cover an ordinary session of about 100 days. It was a shorter session than the session of the ordinary length, and what is being done now is to put in to the Supplementary Estimates the amount that is required additional to what was voted last session to cover the two sessions, and it has been calculated very closely indeed. That is what these Supplementary Estimates really include. These, together with the large vote of last year cover the two sessions. The hon. gentleman, Mr. Bergeron, asked me the names of the four translators. They are Mr. Gelinas, Mr. Moffet, Mr. McMahon, Mr. Prieur.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the amount of $1,400: "Additional amount required to cover expenditures during recess for French translation"? Cannot the ordinary translators do the work after recess?

Mr. SPEAKER. This is the ordinary translation that always has to be done during recess, and this year it amounted to $1,400. In 1894-95 it amounted to $1,830, and in 1895-96 to $2,240. So that it is considerably less this year than during the two years before.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if there has been a large accession to the number of sessional messengers?

Mr. SPEAKER. No, there has not.

Mr. FOSTER. Or sessional clerks?

Mr. SPEAKER. No, there has not.

Mr. FOSTER. They stand as before?

Mr. SPEAKER. The sessional clerks stand as before.

Mr. WALLACE. Then why do you want $6,300 for sessional messengers? I think there used to be 25 messengers.

Mr. SPEAKER. No, there used to be 45; now there are 49. There are 25 sessional clerks now. Taking the item of sessional messengers we assume that this session will last 98 days, and the amount required to pay the sessional messengers this session would be $12,005, but we have an unexpended balance on hand from last session of $5,717, and that leaves the difference of $6,288 that we ask for.

Mr. BERGERON. Then I understand that this is for salaries?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes, they are paid $2.50 a day.

Mr. BERGERON. I want to congratulate Mr. Speaker on the uniforms which have been given the messengers around here. I think it is an improvement. I would like to know how much this clothing costs, and whether the messengers are expected to pay a part of it themselves.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is paid out of the Sergeant-at-Arme's contingencies. The suits cost $18 each. They are worn only by the door-keepers and those who appear in public.

Mr. FOSTER. How long has a suit to last?

Mr. SPEAKER.

Mr. SPEAKER. The whole Parliament.

Mr. POWELL. What are the duties of these sessional clerks? There is great doubt prevailing among new members respecting what the duties of these officials are. As to myself, I have been here three sessions and I do not know what rights I have in them.

Mr. SPEAKER. There are 25 sessional clerks. That is the number established, and the number which has been kept, and they are practically permanent clerks. No dismissals have been made except for cause, and very few of these. That question we have discussed before. The duty of these sessional clerks is to do all the writing that may be required during the session of the House, by the officers of the House, or special work concerning the House from the members. I feel in the same position as the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell). I was in the House a good many sessions and I never got the slightest assistance, or asked it, from any of these clerks. I never asked them even to direct an envelope or anything of that kind, but I learn this session, that while the clerks have not been busy in the earlier part of the session, in doing the regular official work and the work directed by the Clerk of the House, some members have occasionally asked their assistance.

Mr. FOSTER. How?

Mr. SPEAKER. In making up voters' lists, I think, and directing envelopes.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am not at all sure that this is quite right for members to do; but I would not have said anything about it had not the question been asked in the House. I do not want to mention any names, but several hon. members have done it, and no harm came of it because it was only done while the sessional clerks were not doing the public business of the House. We perhaps ought to come to an understanding that these clerks are not for the use of members, and any how, there are not enough of them for all the members to use.

Mr. POWELL. I was very credibly informed that one of those gentlemen acts as private secretary for one of my confreres from the province of New Brunswick. Is that the case?

Mr. SPEAKER. No clerk is permitted to act as private secretary for any member.

Mr. POWELL. But it is done as a matter of fact, whether it is legally allowable or not.

Mr. SPEAKER. As a matter of fact, I think an attempt has been made to have that done, but it was at once stopped. I may say that there are seven or eight sessional clerks in the post office doing the work there.

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid that some of these old and experienced members who have been around for so long have really got a cinch on these clerks, and younger members like myself have not caught on to it. Seriously speaking, I think it ought not to be allowed.

Mr. POWELL. It is a trivial matter, but I would like to understand it. I have no objection at all, but during the last two years I have employed a stenographer and type-writer at my own expense. I much prefer to do so and feel more independent. But one does not feel exactly right, when some hon. gentlemen have the advantage of getting this work done by officials of the House, as I know to be the case during the present session. I never saw these clerks nor do I know anything about them, but would it not be better that members should pay for their own private secretaries, and if all these extra clerks are not necessary to transact the public business, let some of them be dispensed with.

Mr. SPEAKER. I entirely agree with the hon. member (Mr. Powell). If it is found that some of the 25 sessional clerks have leisure enough to do private service for hon. members, the number should be reduced down to what is really necessary for the business of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask, Mr. Speaker, what rule does he follow in apportioning the rooms in this House. I have noticed that during the last two sessions, nearly all the rooms seems to have been gobbled up by the supporters of the Government, and that very few are left for the members of the Opposition. Even the old locks have been taken off and new ones put on for fear any one would get in. A number of these hon. gentlemen seem to forget that any member of Parliament has a right to go into any room in this House, and if not open to kick it open.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Where do you get that law?

Mr. SPROULE. It has been done before. The allotment of rooms between members on one side of the House, and members on the other is entirely out of proportion.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am glad the hon. gentleman has mentioned that. When I was chosen to occupy the Speaker's Chair, I found that some new disposition of these rooms should be made and I had to take some responsibility about it. I got a list of all the rooms that had been used both by Ministers and by members on both sides. I found that a certain set of rooms had been used by the Ministers and their supporters, and that another set of rooms had been used by the Opposition. I thought that the fairest possible thing to do was to reverse that order, as the country had reversed the places of the Government and the Opposition.

Mr. SPROULE. You should have carried out the same principle that the Government did with regard to their pledges.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not know whether the former arrangement was strictly fair or not, but I followed that arrangement. The Ministers of to-day have the rooms that the Ministers of former days occupied, and the Opposition of to-day have the rooms that the former Opposition occupied. I think there were a few trifling changes made to suit individual cases. I asked the leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Adolphe Caron) to arrange the rooms allotted to the Opposition, and I asked some gentlemen on this side of the House to do the same with regard to rooms allotted to Government supporters. There are many hon. members of this House who undoubtedly would like to have some private rooms, but I cannot make the room.

Mr. BRITTON. I suppose the leader of the third party continues to occupy the same room as he did under the late Government. We have obtained some information to-night about these sessional clerks that we did not know before, and so far as I am concerned, I have neither had a typewriter nor a secretary from the employees of the House. If the Opposition, when on the Government side did wrong, we have followed their example, and we have done right. That is about the size of it. I do not think they were justified in taking all the rooms, if they did so. When our friends were in power, I do not think they took all the rooms, because I understand that they were then better divided than they are to-day.

Mr. SPEAKER. They were divided in exactly the same way.

Mr. SPROULE. If that is the case, I would like the Speaker to make a more equitable division of them, according to the numbers on both sides of the House. If the present condition of things continues, I think some of us will be inclined to assert our rights before many sessions pass, because there is not a place about this House where we have a room, small or large, in which we can write a letter or do business, with the exception of room No. 6 in the corner, which is very small.

Mr. LANDERKIN. And that is a very comfortable room, and I hope you will enjoy it a long time.

Mr. SPEAKER. I made a suggestion to the Minister of Public Works a few days ago. He came to look over the matter with me, with the view of speaking to the architects, and seeing whether it was possible to provide a little more accommodation. It struck me that in the tower above the tower room, and between that and the clock, there is a space for three or four large committee rooms. A stair might be put up or an elevator put in from the ground floor to the top. I hope that if the Minister of Public Works recommends an expenditure for some such improvement, the House will approve of it, so that we may get some more accommodation for the members and the officers of the House.

Mr. BERGERON. We have some very nice rooms down stairs, and since we have all become prohibitionists, and do not see any more of those spirits which were distributed down there under the late Government, I do not see why those rooms should not be divided into offices for the use of members.

Mr. SPEAKER. Perhaps the hon. gentleman has not been down there since the change has been made, but I am assured that those rooms are used.

Mr. BERGERON. I have passed there, and seen them empty.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I would like, as chairman of the Debates Committee, to draw the attention of the Speaker to the fact that I have received several complaints from the "Hansard" reporters, which I think are quite justified, to the effect that their quarters are not such as they should be expected to occupy any longer. I had occasion to call on the Speaker in regard to the matter, and I hope that during the recess he will be able to provide better quarters for these gentlemen, who work very hard, and are not accommodated as they ought to be.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would move to insert the name of Colonel Boulton in this resolution, and to change the words, "House of Commons" to the words "Houses of Parliament."

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax.) With regard to this question of rooms, I am in entire ignorance how many rooms are available for the use of members other than members of the Cabinet; and perhaps it might be desirable, in the interest of young members of the House, that some information should be afforded on that point. Last session it struck me to a certain extent that as there were then from the province of Nova Scotia ten Conservative members and ten Liberal members, it did not seem quite right, although possibly it might have been unavoidable, that the ten gentlemen belonging to the Liberal party, or some of them at least, should be accommodated with a room, while those of us on this side of the House had no such accommodation whatever. I recognize what the Speaker has said in regard to that; but at the same time I do not know that the number of members from Nova Scotia representing each party in the previous Parliaments would justify a reversal of the arrangement during the present Parliament, because, I think, that the numbers formerly stood about sixteen to five or seventeen to four, whereas during last session, they stood exactly equal, and now they stand, I think, eleven to nine. I understand that the Speaker is doing the very best he possibly can under the circumstances, with the rooms at his disposal. I am not making these observations in any spirit of finding fault, but merely to direct his attention to that particular incident, and to say that I am sure the Conservative members from the province of Nova Scotia would be very glad if they could have some limited accommodation of that kind.

Mr. WALLACE. I have heard it stated that the members have been paid their full sessional allowance, and have been permitted to go home on condition that they secured pairs. If that is so, it is unusual so long before the end of the session. Ministers tell us that their estimate is for ninety-eight days; I think this is the eighty-ninth day, so that there are ten days more that the session is to last, according to the Ministerial estimate. Two or three days ago pairs were made, and members were paid in full and were permitted to go away. That would be two weeks before the end of the session.

Mr. SPEAKER. No members have been paid in full.

Mr. WALLACE. I had this statement from the accountant to-day.

Mr. SPEAKER. He made quite a different statement to me to-day. He had deducted two weeks allowance, and I told him to hold back in future three weeks.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Speaker tells us that to-day he told the accountant to hold back three weeks when more than half the members have been settled with. The arrangement was that a member could have a pair, and if he had not lost any time he could then be paid in full.

Mr. SPEAKER. I hope the hon. gentleman will not repeat that. No member has been paid in full. The leader of the Opposition and the leader of the Government informed me on Friday last that they expected the session to be prorogued this week. That being the case, I followed the practice that has been in vogue the last eight or ten years of allowing members, when pairs had been arranged for, to draw to a certain amount, leaving an ample margin for the days to come, and that margin was fixed at two weeks. To-day it looked as if the session were to last a little longer than the middle of this week. I spoke to the leaders on both sides and they could not give me any assurance that the session would finish this week, so that I refused to sanction any more payments unless the accountant held back enough to cover three weeks ahead.

Mr. WALLACE. The arrangement which Mr. Speaker mentions is something which I never heard of before. The practice, as I understood it, has been to allow members to be paid off a day before business was concluded. A different state of affairs appears to prevail now, and a majority of the members have left and apparently will not return this session. That could only have been done because the pairs were recorded in the accountant's room, a thing I never heard of before, and I should like to know by what authority the Speaker allowed this. To my knowledge that has never been done before.

Mr. SPEAKER. Hon. members on both sides are here who know what practice was followed in former years.

Mr. WALLACE. If this has been done before, it has been done without my knowledge. I have been here quite a number of years and have never known of any such arrangement in any previous Parliament. I do not think that the Whips have any right to make any such arrangement. The effect of it is that members who ought to be in attendance while the House is sitting have been practically invited to go away, and a very generous invitation like that having been given by the Government or the Speaker, many of the members have availed themselves of the privilege, and more than half are absent when most important business has yet to come before it. We have votes of millions of dollars for scores of railways throughout this country and liberal votes for other purposes yet to pass, and there are besides important measures on the Order paper which the Government may endeavour to push through, and all these matters have to come before us after the members have been invited to take their departure.

Mr. TAYLOR. I might state what has been the practice for many years. When the Government thought they saw the end of the session and came to an agreement with the leader of the Opposition, and the Speaker gave his consent, the rule has been to allow members to pair, particularly the members from a distance. These were generally given the first consideration and allowed to start two or three days in advance of the others, but always on condition that they secured pairs and that the pairs were signed by the Whips and approved of by the Speaker. They then were paid by the accountant and allowed to go. This rule has been in vogue several years.

Mr. SPROULE. I never knew such a rule to obtain except during two days before the close. Two days is the longest time I have known the privilege granted to members to leave. This is the first time that the privilege has been given them so early, and it is an abuse that should be stopped. There is no denying the fact that a number of the members went home before the Supplementary Estimates came down, and there are yet some millions of dollars to be voted before the work of the session is through. I think I am safe in saying that half the members have gone home. I cannot understand why the Whips should have authority jointly with the Speaker to break the law. They are just as amenable to law as other members of the House. Law makers should never be law breakers. The hon. gentleman has not replied to my question about the Senate.

Mr. INGRAM. It seems to me there is considerable misunderstanding in this matter. Last Friday and Saturday there was an impression among many members that the session was about to close, and when they applied for their pay they were told by the accountant that if they had lost only five or six days they would be entitled to their full indemnity. I applied for a pair, and was told by the accountant that when the Speaker certified to it, I could draw my indemnity. I applied to the Speaker and he refused to certify, having changed his opinion about the length of the session. He has been charged in an indirect way with inviting members to leave the House. I must say he did not invite me.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Having been called on, I wish to endorse what has been said by my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor). The Whips have assumed no authority and have no desire to violate any law. During the eleven sessions I have been a member of this Parliament, the practice mentioned by my hon. friend has prevailed, and it is very strange that hon. gentleman occupying the position of the ex-Controller should not be aware of it. When the Government were satisfied they saw the end of the session an arrangement was made, after consultation with the leader of the Opposition, by which members, especially those living for a long distance or who for some particular reason were anxious to leave, were paired, the pair was initialed by the Speaker, and in many cases they were paid off. That has not been the case, I understand, this time, and the same procedure has been allowed on this occasion. The Government thought that the session was to close in a few days and many members were anxious to go. It was not only as a matter of accommodation and convenience to the members that the pairs were made on both sides. After consultation with the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), who personally spoke with the Speaker and whips, it was agreed that pairs would be made. So far as drawing money they were not entitled to is concerned, no such thing took place. It was merely a convenience to members on both sides who wish to leave. Probably in this case it may be, the leaders of the House on both sides were somewhat mistaken as to the number of days the House would be still in session. But as to any irregularity or breach of the law, I understand—I do not know of my own knowledge—that the accountant calculated as near as he could the number of days that the House would probably be in session and deducted enough to cover that. I think it was somewhat unfortunate, probably, that through the press and through members themselves, the conclusion should be come to that business of the House should be closed earlier than it will be found possible to close it. There seems to be a consensus of opinion on the both sides that the House would prorogue on Saturday last or to-day. That feeling became unanimous and many of the members made business appointments which made it necessary for them to leave Ottawa. It became a great convenience, I understand, for members on both sides to carry this out. If one was mistaken, all were mistaken in regard to this matter, but so far as custom can guide us, it has been the custom in the past to do as they have done. And not only that, but in the past when the day was fixed, members were paid without any deduction, because it was assumed that the business of the House was practically over; and if the convenience of the members made it desirable that that arrangement should be carried out they would pay them in full. I do not think there is any irregularity or difference this year as compared with previous years, except that members have been generally mistaken as to the time of closing.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not agree with that. I have been too long a member of the House to accept it. I have seen application made year after year for members to go home a few days before the session ended, and it was refused. What was the situation here? The hon. member (Mr. Sutherland) says that the business was over. But this commenced last Thursday, I think—

Mr. TAYLOR. Friday.

Mr. SPROULE. Thursday or Friday. And since then we have had Supplementary Estimates for $1,200,000. And laid on the Table on Saturday night, only in fact, in time to be before hon. members to-day, we had railway resolutions for $3,863,000.

Mr. LANDERKIN. They are revotes principally.

Mr. SPROULE. But they have all got to be voted, and the propriety or otherwise of voting each subsidies must be considered by the House. In these two items alone we have an amount of nearly $5,000,000. And nearly half the members of the House have gone home thinking that the session was nearly ended. It must have been very bad judgment that led them to the conclusion that the session was coming to an end two or three days before the railway subsidies were brought down and before the Supplementary Estimates were laid on the Table.

Mr. SUTHERLAND.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am very glad that this discussion has taken place and that two old and experienced members of the House, the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) and the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) object to anything of this kind. I shall certainly not put myself out of the way to do what they seem to consider this an irregularity. I am sure I do not want to miss the faces of hon. members on either side until the end of the session, and if it is supposed by hon. members to be in the public interest that this arrangement should not be arrived at, I shall certainly not be a party to it.

Mr. WALLACE. I understood from the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) that some one had made the statement that members were drawing money that they were not entitled to. I did not hear any hon. gentleman make that statement.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Some members stated that they would be paid in full; and if so, they would receive money that they would have to refund.

Mr. WALLACE. Not at all. If a member has attended here during the session and has lost no time and goes away two weeks before the end of the session, he has not to refund the money, because he would be only 12 days away, the resolution passed by the House authorizes that. So he would not have to refund any money. The hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) has told us that the same procedure was followed this year as has been followed in previous years. Does he mean to tell us that in any of the eighteen sessions he has been in Parliament, the House was asked to vote sums of money such as have been brought before us at this late stage of the session—$3,600,000 for the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, about $7,000,000 of railway subsidies, and over $1,000,000 of Supplementary Estimates, every one of these Bills presented to the House after these hon. gentlemen had been authorized to leave? And the hon. gentleman for North Oxford tells us that the business of the House is practically over.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. WALLACE. Why, "Hansard" will record that he used these words, almost the last words that he did use.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I never said anything of the kind. I said that this course was followed on previous occasions when the leaders of the House thought the business practically over. I did not say it was over this session.

Mr. WALLACE. The words I took down were to the effect that this arrangement was arrived at because the business was practically over.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the hon. member understood me to say that, he misunderstood me.

Mr. WALLACE. I understand him to say that he used the words that the business was practically over, but that he used them in the sense that when the business is practically over, that is the custom followed. I accept his explanation. But the question remains the same. The arrangement was made, and the members have their pairs and had arranged to leave and draw their money, as they could properly draw it if the session ends two weeks from last Friday. The business practically over? Why, the business of the House is, apparently, practically commencing. We have been marking time for a good portion of the last three months. We have been discussing abstract questions and practical question, but the Government have withdrawn the practical questions from the consideration of the House altogether, or at any rate, for the session of Parliament. And we still have to vote the Supplementary Estimates of $1,000,000 and over, railway resolutions amounting to $3,600,000, which, by the terms of the resolution, may be multiplied by two, making about $7,250,000. We have in addition to that the Crow's Nest Pass Railway; we have some absurd Bills by the Postmaster General to give him unlimited power in letting contracts. Those members who went away were told—surely they would not have gone away unless they were told that the business was practically over, and that they might return to their homes. The leader of the Opposition, it is true, has gone away, but that does not dissolve the House. If the leader of the Opposition had made such an arrangement as that, I for one am not bound by such an understanding, more particularly as the important business of the House is still up for consideration. I am surprised that such an arrangement should have been made. Of course, I do not want to censure the Speaker, because I know that he is speaking with perfect candour when he says that he will be delighted to see us all remain here while the session of Parliament lasts. But they have already left, many of them, and these important matters are now coming up, they are being rushed in and rushed through in the last days of the session. I repeat that I think that the course of the Government is censurable in leaving over until the end of the session these important measures, involving the expenditure of millions of dollars, measures that they should have announced at the beginning of the session, in order that they should have been maturely considered.

Mr. LISTER. That is the way you used to do.

Mr. WALLACE. I never had any responsibility in these matters; if I had, I would not have done that way. But I don't think the hon. gentleman can even make out a case against the preceding Governments, because whatever might have been their fault in that respect, there never was in the history of the Parliament of Canada such a disregard of the necessities of the situation as we have before us to-day. I know it has been claimed in the past that the Government brought down important measures during the last hours of the session, and I know that sometimes that was the case. But can any hon. gentleman on the Government side point out in the history of the past an instance to be compared with this where all these important matters, matters which should have the fullest explanation and time for consideration were crowded into what was considered to be the last few hours of the session. I think the hon. member for Lambton himself realized the importance of that when he got up on Saturday and objected to a further reading, because the rules of the House did not permit of two stages to be gone through in one day. Now, if that be the case with regard to one of these questions, it is the case with regard to the whole of them. Perhaps the Government will find it their duty to summon back all those members who have gone away expecting that the business was concluded.

Mr. LISTER. For fifteen sessions the practice that has been pursued this session has been always followed. When members could get pairs the accountant paid and let them go.

Mr. WALLACE. That was an arrangement made within only twenty-four or twenty-six hours of the close of the session.

Mr. LISTER. Not at all, my hon. friend is entirely mistaken. The facts are as stated by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) and the whip of the Liberal party. I have no doubt that if he took the trouble to look up "Hansard" he will find that it was when the House was nearly empty that hon. gentlemen opposite brought down their railway resolutions and passed them.

Mr. FOSTER. Let us get on.

Mr. FLINT. It strikes me that the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) is scolding the wrong people; he is scolding the congregation for being small when those who are deserving of censure are not here to hear him. The absence of hon. members is a matter between their own consciences and their constituents. We have no right to censure hon. gentlemen who are absent, and who are best qualified to judge of their own circumstances.

Mr. HENDERSON. It appears to me in looking over the Government benches that possibly a good many of those who are now absent and have gone home were kickers anyway. It may be just as well for the Government that that arrangement was made.

To pay William Stoker for statistical services rendered..... $281 11

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is a claim ten or eleven years old, standing down in Halifax. There were some vital statistics required, of which a Protestant obtained the Protestant statistics and a Catholic obtained the Catholic statistics. There was some dispute in regard to the payment and one individual was paid after the case had been carried into court. The other gentleman whose name is here mentioned has not been paid, but in due justice to him as the other similar claim was paid, I thought he ought to be paid, and so we ask for this item.

Stockholm Exhibition..... $1,300

Mr. FOSTER. Is that all the expense you have incurred?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. BRITTON. Is that an exhibition that has taken place?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is an exhibition that is taking place this summer. We had intended exhibiting there, but lately it was found that very few foreign countries had prepared exhibits. We have not sent forward our exhibit yet. The exhibit is prepared, and a gentleman has gone over to see whether we should send it forward or not.

Mr. FOSTER. This gentleman will cost more than the exhibit.

Mr. SPROULE. Who is the gentleman?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is one of the immigration agents who has gone.

Mr. BERGERON. What is his name?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. His name is Jones.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this the celebrated Jones who used to be around the Parliament buildings here?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I never saw him until I saw him this summer.

N.W.T. Exhibition of 1894—To pay unsettled accounts for labour, materials and supplies ordered by officials under authority of Lt.-Gov. Mackintosh.... $13,537 63

Mr. WALLACE. Before the item is passed, I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture as to when it is intended when accounts shall be in. A gentleman wrote to me to-day from the North-west stating that Parliament was going to vote an amount and that he desired to send in an account. I do not know whether that account has been presented or not. If accounts have not been presented will they be paid out of this fund?

Mr. HENDERSON.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not asking Parliament to give me any money to pay accounts I do not know anything about. It is some three years since that exhibition was held, and I presume that all the accounts have been submitted.

Mr. WALLACE. The accounts were presented no doubt to Governor Mackintosh, and the people did not know that it was intended that they should present them to the Minister.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. These are the accounts which Governor Mackintosh has supplied to the department. I have personally made an examination into all these accounts.

Mr. WALLACE. The accounts were sent to the one who incurred the indebtedness, Governor Mackintosh, and they did not know that they were going to be sent to the Minister.

Mr. BERGERON. How are they going to be paid, by cheque personally?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. By the department.

Mr. BERGERON. Will the whole amount be sent to Governor Mackintosh to pay it himself?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Cattle Quarantine—To cover Governor General's warrant..... $10,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is that for?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is to cover the Governor General's warrant which was issued last fall in consequence of an epidemic of swine plague which occurred in Ontario.

Miscellaneous—To pay the widow of the late Dr. H. B. Macpherson, gratuity equal to two month's salary..... $166 66

Mr. LANDERKIN. In reference to this matter there was the case of the late Serjeant-at-Arms. He was for forty years in the service of the House. He was superannuated and at the end of a year he died. If a gratuity is to be granted in the case under consideration, I do not see why it should not be granted in the case of the widow of the late Serjeant-at-Arms. He had been a contributor to the superannuation fund, and had paid in a large amount of money to that fund, and it was only for one or two years that he received superannuation allowance. In view of the amount which he had paid in, it would not occasion the country any loss to pay a gratuity to his widow. I think she is entitled to it by reason of the eminent services which he rendered to his country.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you think that we dare work on Jubilee Day? I am afraid we will get into an unseemly wrangle.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We will see what you have to say.

Monuments—Battlefields of Canada..... $1,000

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. This vote, as I understand it, is for the building of a monument. One has already been erected.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is for a monument at Lundy's Lane.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I think one has been erected as far as I can understand.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am informed that both have been erected.

Her Majesty the Queen's Jubilee—Further amount required to provide for the pay and allowances, transport and general expenses of the militia contingent to be sent to England to represent Canada in June, 1897 (O.C., 15th April, 1897)..... $4,000

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). Before that item is carried, I want to know when the Queen's Jubilee commences.

The FINANCE MINISTER. Now.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). Well, then, let us observe it.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we had better adjourn.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. If the hon. gentleman's loyal feelings will not allow him to give to Her Majesty a little money I suppose we cannot proceed. We are doing a most loyal act when we vote this money to Her Majesty, when she asks for it.

Mr. FOSTER. There is too much filthy lucre about this.

Amount required to recoup the Department of the Interior for expenditure incurred in connection with the repatriation of distressed Canadians from Brazil, and paid from the immigration appropriation..... $3,776 37

Mr. BERGERON. I stated the other night that I had heard that some of this money was used to bring back persons who are not really Canadians; but who had come out to Canada, and gone on right to Brazil, and whose expenses back were paid by the Canadian Government. I am sorry the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) is not here, because he promised to give me some information on the subject.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am authorized by the Minister of the Interior to state, that the money was all used for bringing back Canadians.

Mr. TAYLOR. In connection with this matter I wish to read a letter which I received to-day. I am sorry the Minister of the Interior is not in his place, but I will send the letter over to the hon. the leader of the House. The letter is as follows:—

Kenton Station, Ohio, June 14th, 1897.

Geo. Taylor, Esq., M.P.,
Gananoque, Leeds County, Ont.

Dear Sir,—What inducements will Dominion Government give a loyal, thrifty class of Canadians to return to their native country? I notice a very liberal offer extended to Canadian French in New England States. There are thousands of a better class who would gladly return, who have for years proved truly loyal to their country. Shall be glad to hear from you.

Yours respectfully,

E. EMERY,
Agent Erie Ry., Kenton, Ohio.

Mr. BERGERON. That fellow is too good to come back.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Better keep him away, or he will make trouble if he comes over here.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will give the hon. gentleman the information he asks for. It is all contained in a report to Council made by the Minister of the Interior on the 28th of April last:

The undersigned has the honour to bring to Your Excellency's recollection, that, in the month of August, 1896, information reached this Government of the operations of certain agents from Brazil, who were endeavouring to entice Canadians to emigrate to that country, and that about the same time a communication was received from the British Consul General at Rio de Janeiro, inclosing a copy of a letter of inquiry which he had received from a resident of Montreal, and taking occasion to warn the Government of Canada of the entire unsuitability of the climate and general condition prevailing in Brazil to people from more northerly regions. Copies of the Consul General's letter, and of its inclosure, were printed in both the French and English languages and were widely circulated by the officials of the Department of the Interior in those parts of the province of Quebec where the Brazilian agents were at work, chiefly in the city of Montreal. Although it was found that about 700 persons had been influenced by the Brazil agents to such an extent that they had determined on going, the note of warning thus sounded had the effect of deterring over 300, some of whom left the ship after having gone on board with their families and effects; but about 400 persons actually embarked on the expedition, with the deplorable results foreseen by the Consul General, and which have since become matter of public notoriety.

The people concerned were soon reduced to a very pitiable condition, and it became evident that, in the interests of humanity, a great many of them would have to be assisted to return to Canada.

On being convinced of this, Your Excellency's advisers authorized Her Majesty's diplomatic and consular authorities in Brazil to take such action as the circumstances required, and to draw upon this Government for any expense incurred thereby.

Your Excellency in Council has already authorized the expenditure in this connection of $720.60, in addition to which it has been found necessary to make the following payments:—

1. Draft, paid by immigration cheque, dated 22nd January 1897, for.....	$ 670 57
2. Draft, paid by immigration cheque, dated 16th February, 1897, for.....	72 11
3. Immigration cheque, dated 29th March, 1897, in favour of H. & A. Allan, for.....	31 94
4. Immigration cheque, dated 15th March, 1897, in favour of the Canadian Pacific Railway, for.....	61 99
5. Draft, paid by cheque, dated 14th April, 1897, for.....	1,737 30
6. Immigration cheque, in favour of Beaver Steamship Line, dated 20th April, 1897, for.....	283 48
7. Draft, paid by cheque, dated 14th April, 1897, for.....	184 21
8. A. W. Reynolds, cheque 12,835, dated 25th January, 1897.....	4 87
9. Royal Mail Steamship Co., cheque No. 12,886, dated 5th February, 1897, for.....	9 30

Total not covered by Order in Council..... $3,055 77

These payments, as well as those made under Order in Council referred to above, have been made by cheque drawn upon the immigration appropriation. As, however, it would not be proper that the expenditure in question should remain a permanent charge upon the immigration appropriation, the undersigned recommends that an item under the heading "Miscellaneous" be placed in the Supplementary Estimates to be laid before Parliament at its present session, to cover the whole of this expenditure, namely $3,776.37, and that, when the item is voted, the whole expenditure paid out of the immigration appropriation be transferred to this special vote.

Mr. BERGERON. What was the number brought back?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not know the number. Instructions were sent to the Consul General in Rio Janeiro to do the best he could to get the 400 who went, and were in pitifully reduced circumstances, to pay their passage back, and to draw on us. We had to trust the Consul General in that matter. They were shipped back to us, and the drafts were sent to us and duly honoured. It is impossible for us to give any more information than that.

Mr. WALLACE. Were these people all returned to Canada, or were their passages paid to other countries?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Only to Canada.

Mr. WALLACE. Where is the proof of that?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have talked the matter over time and again with the Minister of the Interior, and he told me the fact.

Mr. BERGERON. The information I have had in Montreal from the Canadians themselves is that most of those who have come back have paid their own passages out of money sent to them by their friends, while most of the money paid by the Government went to pay the passage of foreigners.

Mr. DAVIES.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. No. Some in my neighbourhood came back and their passages were paid by the Government. There was a man named Tremblay, with a family of thirteen.

Mr. BERGERON. That does not prove that the information given to me is not correct.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not deny that there may have been a few foreigners among them, but there was nothing for us to do but to place confidence in the Consul General, whom we had advised, and pay the drafts.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not want to be understood as casting any blame on the Government or on the department. My object was to have the Government see that in the future the money was paid properly.

Customs—Further amount required for preventive service..... $5,000

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. This is for a new cruiser which is necessary in the preventive service for the lower St. Lawrence.

Mr. FOSTER. Are you going to have two vessels in the St. Lawrence?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The "Constance" is there as well, further up.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What is the name of this new cruiser, and where has it been built?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I do not remember the name. I think it was built at Shelburne, N.S.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It is well known that the "Constance," which was built somewhere in Ontario, is not at all suitable for the service.

Culling Timber—To enable the department to increase James Patton's salary from $1,800 to $2,100, from 1st July, 1896..... $300

Mr. FOSTER. What is this salary increased for?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. He has been supervisor of cullers, and his salary was $2,400. A couple of years ago, without any cause that could be ascertained, his salary was reduced to $1,800 without an Order in Council or anything of the kind. That was when the great reduction was made in the culler's offices. The whole amount is not returned, but only half the amount.

Resolutions to be reported.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 12.30 a.m. (Thursday).

(In the Committee.)

Public Works—River St. Lawrence—Improvement of Ship Channel between Quebec and Montreal..... $35,000
River St. Lawrence Ship Channel—To pay estate of late D. J. McCarthy, balance due for rent of ship yard and buildings, at St. Joseph de Sorel, for period from August 4th to December 31st, 1892, inclusive..... $653 15

Mr. FOSTER. I would ask the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) to give us an explanation of what he proposes to do with this $35,000, and how much is to be voted in the Estimates for this current year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). Last year we had an amount of $78,000, which is quite inadequate. It is out of the question to try to employ our dredges all the time for such an amount, and it has been found necessary, after a careful study of the question by the chief engineer, to have an additional amount of money.

Mr. FOSTER. What work is being done ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The work of dredging the St. Lawrence, which has been going on for some years.

Mr. FOSTER. There was an understanding that when we brought down the St. Lawrence to a 27½-foot channel our large expenses would cease. Does my hon. friend mean that any of this money voted for the current year is for dredging the 27½ foot channel, or is that work finished ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is not yet completed.

Mr. FOSTER. That portion remains to be completed ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I may give the hon. gentleman the points where the St. Lawrence is not yet 27½ feet deep. As my hon. friend knows the work has been going on for years, and we have to-day reached the stage where the channel is 27½ feet deep as a rule. The channel is 500 feet wide where there are curves, and 300 feet wide in a straight line. Now, there are a few points where we want to deepen the river so as to give 27½ feet at low tide. One of these points is Ste. Croix, where we now have 22 feet, and another is St. Augustin, where it is 22 feet at low tide. At Lotbinière and Cap Santé the work is being completed. It will take some additional money to complete the channel to make it safe for high speed navigation, but if that item of $35,000 had not been spent we would have been obliged to stop the work of our dredges this year, which would have caused a great loss. I think both sides of this House will agree that we should go on as quickly as possible with the work.

Mr. FOSTER. When this $35,000 is expended, what will remain to be done ; what is the estimated cost of making the channel 27½ feet straight through ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend will remember that this House adopted a vote in the main Estimates of $200,000. I suppose about $80,000 will go for dredging work, while the balance will go for dredging plant. The chief engineer tells me, and I may say he has had a long and large experience on that work, that to obtain a channel of 27½ feet with a sufficient width will require an additional amount of $500,000. Personally, I do not know anything about it. I have given the figures of the amount which has been spent. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster), I am sure, knows that this work is of a very difficult character indeed. We have to dredge in the solid rock, which is a very expensive undertaking. My hon. friend will understand in view of the fact that we are going to have a fast line of steamships, that the duty of Canada is to complete that work which was begun long ago. Five dredges are now employed continuing the work which was begun years ago.

Mr. FOSTER. There is not, unfortunately, time to go into this subject, but it ought to be gone into. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works surprised me, and I think he surprised the House, when he said half a million of dollars was necessary in order to complete the 27½ foot channel. My impression was, when I was a member of the Government, that we had pretty nearly completed the 27½ foot navigation, and I would like to have further detailed information to know that that was not so.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not mean to say that my engineers tell me that $500,000 more than we have asked for is going to be employed. I say that with the amount that has already been voted, that is, the $200,000, an additional amount of $300,000 is required.

Mr. FOSTER. Does that include the $250,000 for dredging ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to say to my hon. friend that he is getting through his estimate with the very minimum of information, but next year, if it takes all summer, we are bound to have good information, and plenty of it, on these large and extraordinary expenditures. The hon. gentleman owes that to himself, to his party and to the country; and I hope that during the interim he will have his officers, who are well able to do it, prepare a report with reference to the St. Lawrence, showing what has been done, and what remains to be done, so that next year we may face the final expenditure on what you may call the capital undertaking, that is, the getting of the channel down to the required depth and width. After that I quite understand that maintenance must go on. I was much surprised to learn that $500,000 more had to be spent to get the depth of 27½ feet.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I thought I had given all the information asked of me. I quite understand what my hon. friend says. I was myself surprised when my engineer told me that such an amount would be required, and I shall be very glad to bring down every possible information.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister must also remember that about two years ago the Minister then at the head of the department stated in this House, and I think he was only voicing the opinion of the Chamber itself, that the expenditure for the deepening of the St. Lawrence was about completed, and that we would have at our disposal for work in other parts of the Dominion the dredges that were being used in that work. The Minister had better give us an explanation of that. It seems extraordinary that after such a statement as that we should be called upon to build a new dredge at a cost of over $100,000, and to incur a further expenditure, beyond what was estimated of $500,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN. How much has the deepening of this channel cost up to date?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About $3,500,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Is that exclusive of the loan to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, excluding that.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What is the amount of that loan?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $2,000,000, out of which $1,000,000 was given to them last year before I took office to pay floating debts. When I came into office there was due $100,000 for work on the Montreal harbour, which I paid, and since then an additional amount of about $90,000 has been called for and has been granted by me for the same work—the Windmill Basin in the Montreal harbour itself.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). There is one thing which we must bear in mind—that the water level of the St. Lawrence within the last two years have been lower, judging by the records of the upper lakes, than it has ever been known to be before.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Is it not a fact that in places where the channel has been dredged to a depth of 27 or 27½ feet, re-dredging has had to be done again, because as the dredging went on the level of the river went down? Is it not a fact that the more you dug out, the lower the water got all the time?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think the dredging we are doing now can have any influence at all upon the upper waters. But my engineers, and the engineers of the Marine and Fisheries Department, as a matter of fact all the engineers, agree that it is quite an easy thing to have a depth of 27½ feet of water. The work has never been completed, and my chief engineer tells me that it will take about three years to complete that work and have a straight channel of 27½ feet. More than that I cannot say. The work was begun before I took office, and I suppose we are bound to complete it. It is a very necessary work; nobody will deny that, I am sure.

Mr. COCHRANE. I have been led to believe that the engineers of the department believed that it was a very easy thing to get 23 or 25 feet of channel; but it appears now that when you have that depth you have not the amount of water you anticipated, owing to the fact that when you deepen the channel it drains off the river, you lower the level of the water in the river, and you have lower water in the channel. The question in my mind is whether that will continue. Is it not a fact that in the opinion of scientific men the waters of the great lakes lower for a number of years and then rise for a number of years? I would like to ask the Minister if he anticipates that this lowering of the waters of the great lakes will continue?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot, of course, give any guarantee of that; but the dredging we are doing cannot have any influence on the general depth of water in the St. Lawrence, because we are only working at local points, just removing obstacles.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I do not think that is in accord with what the hon. gentleman said just now. In answer to a question which I put, whether certain parts of the river that had been dredged would be dredged again, he answered, yes. This would go to show that as he goes on dredging, the river does not get any deeper, because the flow of water is always the same. I would like to call his attention to the fact that in his report, at page 128, he says that at Pointe aux Trembles they are deepening the channel 28 feet 6 inches. What is the use of deepening the channel there if the uniform depth is not maintained all along?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The datum was that we should have a uniform depth of water of 27½ feet. The datum has been changed, and we have simply said 28½ feet, which would give in fact a depth of 27½ feet.

Mr. CASGRAIN. My hon. friend says that he could not give a guarantee that the river would remain at the same level. The department has not succeeded in giving more depth to the river, that is clear. They dredged to a depth of 27½ feet and found that this would not give enough water, and now they are going to 28½ feet. But who is to tell us that the river may not drop so that when they get through, they may have only 25 or 26 feet of water?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is still in the future.

Mr. CASGRAIN. But it is a question which should be gone into before this enormous expenditure is continued. I understand perfectly that it is of national importance that the ship channel between Quebec and Montreal should be deepened—everybody recognizes that, even the Quebecers. But it is our business to see that the country in general shall get advantages commensurate with the expenditure that we have made together with those we are called upon to vote. If this work is going to cost the country as much as a canal from Quebec to Montreal, it would be better to build a canal; or, if there are any points at which you cannot get the necessary depth of water by dredging the channel, build a canal at those points. But it seems to me that the results obtained on the deepening of the channel are not in proportion to the amount of money spent for what some people call a "mud channel." Let me call the hon. Minister's attention to this fact—and if I am not well informed, my hon. friend from Quebec West (Mr. Dobell), who is well versed in these matters and who has had a great deal of experience, can correct me—it is not only because the channel is not deep enough that large ships like the "Canada" cannot go from Quebec to Montreal, but principally on account of the curves in the river, that is, because the channel is not wide enough. I do not know whether I am right in saying this, but I am informed that the "Canada" of the Dominion Line was constructed for the purpose of the trade from Liverpool to Montreal, that she was sent here on purpose to do that trade; she came over here, and, if my information is correct, notwithstanding that this channel is, almost all through, 27½ feet deep, and at high water the same depth is maintained at Ste. Croix and St. Augustin, she was never brought back to the St. Lawrence because her owners were afraid to send her; and she was taken off that route and put on the route between Boston and London—

Mr. DOBELL. Perhaps I may be allowed to interrupt the hon. gentleman (Mr. Casgrain) to say that that was not the reason the "Canada" did not return to the St. Lawrence. The reason was simply this—that the owners made an offer to the Government to let her become a regular steamer on this line to Montreal, but they wanted so much a year extra subsidy for the service, and we would not extend the subsidy we were then granting, nor would we promise to renew the subsidy after the first twelve months.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I am glad to have this statement from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Dobell), because he knows, as other hon. members from Quebec know, that it has been stated freely this season, and ever since the last trip the "Canada" made to Montreal, that her owners would take her off that line because they would not trust her in the channel between Montreal and Quebec. But not only is this said about the "Canada," which was built for the purpose of this trade, but the same is said about all the large vessels that go from Quebec to Montreal. Among shipping men the impression prevails that no ship of the size of the "Canada" could go from Quebec to Montreal with perfect safety under existing circumstances. I say that if that is true, that the channel is only 27½ feet deep even at high water, at the points where it is not dredged up to that depth, as it is at Ste. Croix and St. Augustin, we shall be obliged—and I call the attention of the House to this point—to expend a much larger sum even than the hon. Minister intimates, not only for deepening the channel but for widening it, making it 500 feet wide possibly, so that large ships can come in from Quebec to Montreal and not touch bottom or get wrecked on the rocks on the side of the channel. I want it to be understood that I am not advocating the claims of Quebec as against those of Montreal; I am not saying that the ship channel should not be deepened or that the work done upon it is not useful to the Dominion of Canada at large, but I may call attention to the fact that a much larger sum than already estimated will have to be spent on this channel to render it practicable to the large ships coming up the St. Lawrence and the still larger ships we shall have in a short time coming to the port of Quebec.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the depth of water between the Island of Montreal and the point on the St. Lawrence opposite Three Rivers, which, I believe, is the limit of the tide?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am very sorry that my officers are not in a position to give me that information at this moment. Of course I will be ready to answer the hon. gentleman's question this afternoon. No careful survey, I am sorry to say, has been made so far. I have instructed my officers to make a complete survey, and that is now being done. While I am on my feet I may say I am sorry that my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) has thought fit to speak as he has done. There should be no rivalry between Quebec and Montreal. The trade that will not come through the St. Lawrence will go through American channels, and so, it seems to me, the work of deepening the channel from Quebec to Montreal is of national importance. I am free to admit that the work should be conducted as carefully and economically as possible; but, at the same time, I think the House will agree with me when I say that, Montreal being the most important distributing centre in the Dominion, we should not be too sparing in our expenditure in this work. I am quite prepared to listen to all advice that may be given to me with a view to having the work effected with all possible economy, I wish the House would assist me in completing the work. It is not fair to assume that the channel between Montreal and Quebec is not a safe channel. Of the whole distance of 160 miles, 30 miles covers the distance where dredging has now been completed, and except for the 30 miles, the channel is 27½ feet deep all the way. When we have the dredging over this comparatively short distance completed, we shall have a channel of 27½ feet deep at least from Quebec to Montreal.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I do not think that it is right for the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) to impute to me the motives he has imputed. I say there is no rivalry between Quebec and Montreal in regard to this channel. I speak here as a member of the Parliament of the Dominion, and representing a Canadian constituency, and not merely as the representative of a constituency near Quebec, or as a resident of that city.

This is my proposition, and I think it cannot be controverted, that although this work is of national importance, the first question this House must ask itself is: are corresponding advantages given to the country for the enormous outlay of money which is being made upon this ship channel? Before we go any further, it seems to me that the Minister should answer the question as to whether or not, even when he dredges 27½ feet, there will be any more water than there is now. There is evidence in the report of the hon. gentleman that opposite Pointe aux Trembles he had to dredge 28½ feet to get 27½ feet of water. There is nothing to show that when he gets the 27½ feet all over, he will have more than 26 feet. The hon. gentleman from Quebec West (Mr. Dobell) has taken a great interest in this matter, and I am sure he could enlighten the House on this very important subject. My hon. friend (Mr. Dobell) is a member of the commission upon the great waterways, and as he has given the matter attention and attended several conferences, he could probably tell us whether it is not a fact that the level of the water is all the time decreasing in the River St. Lawrence, and whether or not this constant deepening of the channel will give in certain points more water than actually is there now.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Perhaps the House would like to have some more information, as this is a very important question. Out of the 160 miles between Montreal and Quebec, the channel for about thirty miles has a depth of 27½ feet. For 110 miles the channel has thirty feet or more. The minimum width of the channel is 300 feet in straight portions, and 450 feet in the curves. There are 110 miles where we have thirty feet of water and more, and there are thirty miles where we have 27½ feet. What I am asking for is to complete the depth of water to 27½ feet and to straighten out the curves.

Mr. COCHRANE. Do you expect that you will have 27½ feet all over when the work is completed?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Of course, and otherwise Parliament would not have been asked by the late Government to go on with the work.

Mr. HAGGART. I did not see any items in the Estimates with reference to the harbour at Montreal. Have you done anything with reference to it?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am very glad my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) asked that question. A request has been strongly urged upon me and the Government for an additional amount of money. The position of affairs is this: In 1896, Parliament voted $2,000,000 to be loaned to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal to complete their works and pay the floating indebtedness. These works have to be approved in future by the Department of Public Works. The work at the Windmill Basin has been commenced. Whatever may be the usefulness of these works, they have now been begun, and I have made up my mind that they are to be completed. Then I found myself face to face with the great problem, as to what we are to do for future action. I gave every possible attention to that grave question, and I may say that I have made up my mind that the plans which were approved in the past are not altogether what is necessary now. On different occasions, and especially in 1894, strong representations were made to the late Government to the effect that additional work had to be done, and that the work known as plan No. 6 was not sufficient. After consultation with the representatives of the Board of Trade in Montreal and with the Harbour Commissioners, we have practically agreed to a plan by which three additional wharfs will be built in the centre of the harbour, but not of the same length as those approved in the past. When I say "approved," I want to be well understood. When, for the first time, in 1889, the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal came to the Government for the approval of their plans, the Harbour Commissioners were their own masters. The Government was not then giving them any money, and their plans were approved as a matter of course, although I might say a commission of engineers from both the Marine Department and the Public Works Department did not approve of the plans even then. I do not know how it occurred, but at all events, Mr. Perley, the chief engineer of the Public Works Department at that time, approved of the plan. I am sorry I have not the plans here because a study of them would be very interesting. If these plans were carried out to-day, they would simply block the port of Montreal. The wharfs there were going to be 1,500 feet long; the channel is only 450 feet wide, and outside of that you have banks of mud and you would simply block the harbour. I made up my mind that it was not a proper thing to do, and having consulted with the interested parties in Montreal, the members of the Board of Trade and the representatives of the navigation companies, we agreed that some other plans had to be decided upon. I am just going to give my approval to plans by which three additional wharfs, supplied with every possible accommodation for railways will be erected. Even this will not be sufficient.

Mr. WALLACE. Where are these wharfs?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Those wharfs are going to be built in the centre of the harbour. They will start opposite Bonsecours Market and run west towards Lachine Canal. We will start from the east, and the reason is because the city of Montreal has voted one million dollars to build a revetment wall, and in order to allow the city of Montreal to go on with that work we must begin at the eastern end. We must take first from the St. Lawrence an additional width of forty feet for the wharfs, because if we had simply complied with the provisions of that famous plan No. 6, you would have had 14,000 feet of wharfs on a street less than forty feet wide. That would have been out of the question, and we could not at all have accommodated the trade.

Mr. POUPORE. Do I understand the hon. Minister to say that the wharf is to start from Bonsecours Market and run west?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Quite so.

Mr. QUINN. There will be three wharfs?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, three wharfs to be built and the revetment wall which is to be built by the city itself, and that will give to the centre of the city all the accommodation it can hope for. As to the larger plan, it has attracted the attention of men more experienced than I, but I have read a good deal and have seen a good many harbours and ports, and in my opinion the harbour of Montreal is one of the worst equipped of any I know of. The cattle trade cannot be accommodated and the bulky trade cannot be accommodated—

Mr. CASGRAIN. Send them to Quebec.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Quebec will have its share. When the St. Lawrence route is given all the improvement it requires to accommodate trade, Quebec will have its share. As to the other plan, if I were to reveal the secrets of Council, I would say that I have urged, as all those who know the harbour have urged, that an additional sum be placed in the Estimates so that we might complete that great port. But hon. gentlemen know our financial position, we have spent a good deal of money, and it is thought that a few months delay would not endanger the future of that big enterprise, and I shall tell why. We are going to build first the three wharfs we have mentioned. Montreal city will go on with the work of building the revetment wall, and then I have no doubt whatever that the strong recommendations of the commercial community, not only of Montreal, but of Canada, will be taken into serious consideration. We have been asked to extend the harbour of Montreal east because the centre is already congested.

Mr. WALLACE. Make a basin in the east.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I see that my hon. friend is laughing. The basin is not a thing of my invention. Under the late Government, strong representations were made by the Boards of Trade and the Harbour Commission.

Mr. WALLACE. No.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, a strong deputation from the Harbour Commissioners themselves, headed by Messrs. Bulmer and Ogilvy and Richard White, came to Ottawa and urged the great importance of those basins. I have the minutes of the meeting, and there can be no doubt about it, but, as I have said, my intention is to go to England and France and Belgium and examine, while on other business, into the great modern improvements that have taken place in the principal harbours of the world.

Mr. FOSTER. I think you had better send a good engineer.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My intention was to have a good engineer with me. My intention is to avail myself of the advice of the best engineering talent that can be had. The House will agree with me that the completion of the harbour of Montreal is a most important matter and that I should take every possible means to improve it as quickly as possible.

Mr. FOSTER. Under the circumstances, can the hon. gentleman state that nothing will be done with the eastern harbour scheme until after we meet again?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I can give the hon. gentleman that assurance.

Mr. HAGGART. I agree with the hon. gentleman to a great extent. I think it is possible that sufficient harbour accommodation can be accomplished by utilizing the plan proposed by the commissioners; but to have a complete harbour you will have to adopt an entirely different scheme. The plans came before the department, and I hope the hon. gentleman will see that Montreal will have the accommodation to which it is entitled and which it is impossible for it to have with the plans prepared.

Mr. QUINN. It is a matter of gratification to me, indeed, to find the hon. member is in such good humour and expressing himself the way he does this morning.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am always in good humour.

Mr. QUINN. I do not mean to cast any reflection on the hon. gentleman in that respect because he usually is, but he is particularly bright and appreciative of the interest of Montreal this morning. Whatever may be said either for or against plan No. 6, there is no doubt that the idea is the best that can be suggested if the harbour of Montreal is to become what it should be. I do not mean to say that an exact adherence to that plan is absolutely necessary, but that the improvements suggested by the officers of the department—which I have had through the courtesy of the hon. Ministers the pleasure of seeing—will afford sufficient accommodation for the present. I understand it is the intention to construct three wharfs in front of the city.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Quite so.

Mr. QUINN. At a point between the custom-house on the one hand, and Bonsecours Market on the other.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. QUINN. From the information I have had from different representative bodies and business men in Montreal—and I have had the pleasure of waiting on the hon. Minister several times in connection with these deputations—they seem thoroughly satisfied with that work but want to see it done at once.

Mr. TARTE.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The work will start immediately.

Mr. QUINN. A loan for that purpose is to be made by the Harbour Commissioners. I would like to draw the attention of the hon. gentleman and the committee to this fact, that a loan made in that way will have the effect of compelling the commissioners to exact from the ships coming into the port of Montreal a toll, in some way or other, to meet the interest. The hon. member says that the money has been loaned by the Government to the commissioners. I think it is only fair to have it definitely understood throughout the country that every cent of interest on the money loaned has been paid by the Harbour Board. In other words, it has been paid by the shippers of Montreal, and I desire to emphasize that fact and see if some means cannot be adopted to relieve the port of Montreal from the necessity of taxing shipping for the purpose of meeting interest and other charges which are imposed upon it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Hear, hear.

Mr. QUINN. It has been very well said by the hon. Minister that the port of Montreal is a national port. There is no reason why the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) and myself—and I do not think that it is the intention of my hon. friend—should join issue on the question of improving that port. I do not think it is the intention of my hon. friend to discuss adversely or criticise in any way the expenditure on the port of Montreal. Any money expended to increase its facilities, any money expended to enable vessels of large tonnage to reach that port is money expended for the benefit of Canada.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Hear, hear.

Mr. QUINN. It is an expenditure which will not only benefit the port of Montreal but the port of Quebec and other ports.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). You draw the line at granting Montreal railway facilities.

Mr. QUINN. The Minister is not quite accurate in saying that; and as that is not under discussion at the moment, it would probably be just as well not to refer to it. I wish to confine myself for the moment to the money that is to be expended on the improvements of the harbour of Montreal and on the improvements in the River St. Lawrence between Montreal and Quebec; and I heartily endorse what the Minister has said when he expressed the opinion that if the River St. Lawrence, between Montreal and Quebec, is placed in such a condition that it will attract the attention of shippers the world over and to the St. Lawrence route, it will not be necessary for either the harbour of Montreal or the harbour of Quebec to come to this House for assistance; they will be well known throughout the world, and will have all the traffic that they can manage in those two ports. Not only that, but it will attract shipping to the River St. Lawrence, which will benefit the two ports of Montreal and Quebec; and I would not be surprised to see rival ports starting up at points on the river between Montreal and Quebec which will be to the general advantage of Canada. Now that I have received the assurance of the Minister that this work will be carried on immediately, I would ask him to see if some means cannot be adopted by which the port of Montreal will be relieved of the heavy charge that is now imposed upon it by being obliged to pay interest on what is known as the harbour commissioners' bonds, for the improvements in Montreal and in Lake St. Peter. Bonds have been floated by the harbour commissioners, which are, to a certain extent, endorsed by the Government, but the port of Montreal is obliged to pay that interest.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
We take their bonds.

Mr. QUINN. With the understanding that they will pay interest. Now, this is a very heavy tax on the city of Montreal.

Mr. HAGGART. On the shipping of Montreal and of the country.

Mr. DOBELL. Did the hon. gentleman say that Montreal was paying interest on the expenditure of the deepening of Lake St. Peter? If so, I rise to correct him.

Mr. QUINN. I did not say that. If I did say that, it was simply, of course, a lapsus linguae.

Mr. DOBELL. You stated the Harbour Commission was paying interest on the expenditure of deepening Lake St. Peter.

Mr. QUINN. If I did, I made a mistake; or if I stated that the city of Montreal was paying this interest. I intended to say that the interest on these bonds was a tax upon the shipping of Montreal, as the ex-Minister of Railways says, and a tax upon the shipping of the country; and a tax which affects the most important port in the Dominion of Canada, naturally affects the whole shipping interest of the Dominion. Now, following out that line of argument, I say that anything that will relieve us of that tax, anything that will make Montreal a free port, will benefit the shipping interests of the whole Dominion of Canada; and I would ask the Minister once more to interest himself in such a way as to devise some means by which that port and the shipping of the country will be relieved of that tax.

Mr. DOBELL. I would like to say a few words to strengthen the hands of my colleague in reference to deepening Lake St. Peter. I have no hesitation in stating that Lake St. Peter can be deepened to 27½ feet from Quebec to Montreal and kept at that depth, without any difficulty whatever. I believe that it would promote the best interests of the country to make that channel at such a depth, because we are about undertaking a work that I believe of greater importance to this country than any other works we have undertaken for many years. I refer to the deepening of the St. Lawrence canals. For years our western canals have been deepened to a depth of fourteen feet, and we lately constructed a canal at Sault Ste. Marie to a depth of twenty-two feet, and for what purpose? We brought through that canal, I believe, during the last twelve months, four million tons of American shipping free of charge, and I believe that not more than 7 per cent of the whole of that western trade has ever found its way down the St. Lawrence. Now, I believe that the deepening of our St. Lawrence canals is going to make a change, and instead of our only getting 7 per cent, we shall be able, by striving for it, to get something nearer 50 per cent of that trade, and that will make the St. Lawrence the route that it ought to have been years ago. When I had the honour of entering this Cabinet, I was aware that the promise had been made from time to time that these canals would be finished within two years. When I had the privilege of examining more closely into the matter, I was told that at the then rate of progress possibly these canals might be completed in ten years, possibly it would be twenty years before they would be completed. We then decided, at a considerable increase in cost, to go to work and complete them in two years, and I believe that in two years that work will be finished; therefore, it is desirable to have not only the harbour of Montreal prepared to receive the trade. But I go further than my hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Quinn) and I say that it is desirable not only to relieve Montreal of the burden, but Quebec, Sorel and Three Rivers. I may say further that I do not see why Montreal, Sorel and Three Rivers should be made free, and not extend the same freedom to Halifax and to St. John. I claim that exactly the same argument applies to the maritime ports. The member for Montreal asks us to lighten the burdens upon that city. Well, what will be the consequence? It naturally follows that if you make Montreal a free harbour, and you put the burden of the improvements on Quebec, your ships will leave Quebec and go up to Montreal. We must have freedom of trade in Quebec as well as in Montreal, and also in every other port.

Mr. QUINN. I understand that the ports of Halifax and St. John are practically free; or, if not free, at any rate they do not bear anything like the same burden of taxation that the port of Montreal has to bear. Owing to the very costly works that have been carried on in Montreal in order to put that port in anything like proper condition, the burden is very much heavier in Montreal.

Mr. DOBELL. If the hon. gentleman will refer to the proceedings of the Dominion Boards of Trade in 1872, 1873 and 1874 to 1878, he will find mention made of this work of deepening the canals, and a resolution was offered that the Government should consider whether, at much less cost, the harbour of Quebec could not be made suitable for the transshipment of products to and from Europe than the deepening of Lake St. Peter. The representatives from Montreal, and I mention particularly the name of Mr. Hugh McLennan, than whom Montreal has no more able or representative man, stated distinctly that Quebec should go on with the improvements in her harbour, they in Montreal intended to improve their own and they also intended deepening Lake St. Peter without asking the Government for a dollar. Since then the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal have petitioned the Government to relieve them of this outlay. It has been granted, and they now ask for back interest on the money expended, the capital of which has been repaid to them. I am not complaining, but I do state that I think there might be more consideration on the part of the representatives of our great sister city, which is regarded to-day as the great commercial metropolis of this Dominion and upon which the Government have expended five million of dollars in making a channel way up to reach it, and towards which Quebec has contributed something in common with other portions of this country. And when the Government is petitioned to make Montreal a free port and to assume the obligation of improving her harbour, there should be more generosity extended to Quebec by the representative of Montreal (Mr. Quinn) and they should not forget Quebec, Sorel and Three Rivers. At least give them the crumbs that may fall from Montreal's table. The port of Quebec has advantages, and for a small outlay she can be made the great transshipping port of North America to the advantage of the whole of this Dominion.

Mr. QUINN. If I omitted saying anything at all in favour of Quebec it was simply because I thought that Quebec had such able advocates of her own here that it did not require my poor voice and assistance for her at all.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the reason of this old bill of $653.15, due the estate of C. J. McCarthy in 1892, being left until this time.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Because you did not pay it.

Mr. QUINN.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When this bill was presented I did not know what it was at all. My officers told me that there was a lease for a term of three years commencing August 4th, 1889, at the rate of $600 per annum. The payments were made every February and August. The last of such payments on record being one of $800 on August 18th, 1892, to cover the rent due to August, 1892. This account has been running on since without being paid. My officers have testified to the fact that it was due and I thought it was proper to pay it.

Mr. FOSTER. Was the claim not made before?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Oh, yes, it has been a long time in the department.

Mr. FOSTER. What were the departmental reasons for not paying it?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not in a position to give my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) that. My officers told me that there was no reason why it should not be paid. The account was due and it was not paid.

Mr. COCHRANE. I was listening to my hon. friend the member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell) who says that he only expects the crumbs that fall from the master's table for the city of Quebec. I would say to the hon. gentleman that it is the impression that he sacrifices a good deal for the crumbs.

Public Buildings, Ottawa—Western Departmental Block—To cover expenditure in connection with disastrous conflagration of 11th February, 1897. (Governor General's Warrant, $25,000)... .. $37,000

Mr. FOSTER. We want an explanation of this $37,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Every one knows what has taken place. A disastrous fire destroyed the building, and we had to repair it. I first applied for a special warrant for $25,000, my officers having estimated that that amount would be sufficient. It was found quite inadequate, and I was obliged to spend more.

Mr. FOSTER. The officers of the department not having taken the political exigencies into account in their estimate, believed that $25,000 would be sufficient, but the Minister found that he needed $12,000 more for the work; this was the time of the Hull election. How did he spend that $37,000?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As to the Hull election, my hon. friend does not like the result of it, but it was not my fault. I did not do anything; what I did was this—

Mr. FOSTER. Never mind. Tell us how you spent the $37,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think my hon. friend is altogether mistaken about that. I know he thinks that we employed men that should not have been employed. As to the roof then, this was one of the items of expenditure. We could not ask for tenders for the roof, as it had to be put on immediately and was of a temporary character.

Mr. FOSTER. What was it made of ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Boards.

Mr. FOSTER. So many feet of boards to cover the top.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not the exact figures under my hand, but I will be able to give them to my hon. friend.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend should have them under his hand. He has had all session to get them under his hand.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, I have them. The total area of the roof covers 29,000 square feet. I made the following arrangement : I called in the chief architect of my department and asked him to make an estimate of the cost of a temporary roof. He estimated the cost at $4,500. Then I called in Mr. Bourque, the well known contractor. It is not a crime for him to live in Hull. I asked him if he would do the work for the amount that my chief architect had estimated, for the 29,000 feet, I gave him the work for that amount, and not one dollar extra. The work was satisfactorily done as anybody can see. As to the other items they are very easily explained. The whole building was gutted. I engaged as superintendent of the work, a man who had already been employed in the department, Mr. Sutherland. I gave him supervision of the work because he was recommended to me by my officers as being a capable man.

Mr. FOSTER. $4,500 for boards for the roof. What is the rest ?

Mr. POWELL. How many thousands ?

Mr. FOSTER. 29,000 square feet.

Mr. POWELL. It would take more boards than that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The total expenditure incurred as found necessary under the direction of the officers of the department was as per detailed statement—

Mr. FOSTER. It takes the Minister of Public Works all the time to tell us that he is going to give us the expenditure, but he does not do it. Go on and do it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Here is a detailed statement of the $25,000 for which a special warrant was issued :

Pay-list of workmen, certified by the clerk of works, $20,047.72.

Mr. FOSTER. How much were the workmen paid a day ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Labourers from $1 to $1.25 ; carpenters, $2 ; painters, $2.

Mr. QUINN. Did the Minister say "labourers" or "Liberals."

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not rewarded as I should be, because I employed a lot of the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite. The superintendent of the work, Mr. Sutherland, has been a Conservative all his lifetime.

Mr. TALBOT. That is where you did wrong.

Mr. FOSTER. Put him out.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will not put him out.

Mr. WALLACE. I know Mr. Sutherland well and I know him to be a Liberal all his life, and a very strong one too.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Is he, indeed? Upon my word I thought he was a Conservative, because I never thought the late Government would employ a Liberal.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, was he in the employ of the late Government ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, I made a mistake about that.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister's defence has then slipped away from him. In the first place, he contended that he had a strong Conservative as a foreman, and in the second place that this man had been employed by the late Government. Now we find that Mr. Sutherland is a Grit, and that he never was employed by the late Government.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I hope my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) will allow me to make a better case. Mr. Sutherland was represented to me as being an able man, and I employed him, and I really thought he belonged to the other side of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Able men generally do.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I find that Mr. Sutherland belongs to our side. The three men who have most to do with the employment of men are Sutherland, Breton, who has been twenty years in the employ of the Public Works Department, and Adams, who has also been a long time in their employment. I did not engage the men myself ; these three men did. Then the other items are : removal of furniture and carpets, $697 ; furniture, $429 ; removal of books, cartage, $102.25 ; lumber, $572.06 ; stone, $46 ; glass, &c., $8 ; hardware, $12.98 ; asbestos for plaster and cartage, $934 ; electric wiring, $35 ; chemicals, $6.60 ; insurance on furniture, $56.55 ; sundries, $225.39 ; stationery, $882.80, which makes a total expenditure of $25,468.41. Outside of that, we have placed iron laths all over the building, and built to a large extent on the fire-proof system.

Mr. HAGGART. Is the style of architecture of the building to be the same as before ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. After having carefully considered that question, and especially consulted Mr. Fuller, who although not able to work has the same bright eye as ever, and after consulting other architects, I came to the conclusion to rebuild on the same plan as before. I believe that otherwise it would have disfigured the whole block. The plans are not quite ready but tenders will be asked for in a week or two.

Mr. FOSTER. Where does the balance of the $12,000 come in ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is for wages from the 26th April to 28th May, $868.55. For services, not yet paid, $1,500 ; materials and supplies, $2,715.18 ; other small supplies, $201.11. The agreement with Mr. Bourque, $4,562.75 ; iron laths, $1,683 ; making up the total of $37,000.

Mr. FOSTER. There was a wonderful amount of work done. The wages were $1.25 and $2 a day and it is fair to say that there were more ordinary labourers than skilled labourers. It was really a wonderful sight. I remember on one or two occasions passing along there about the hour of 12 o'clock, and I never saw such a sight in my life.

Mr. LISTER. Was that when you were attending to the lawns in front and taking the flowers ?

Mr. FOSTER. It was in Mr. Mackenzie's time that was done, and not in ours. It was a wonderful sight around that building. It was like the outpouring of, what shall I say ?

Mr. TALBOT. Beehives.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, no.

Mr. TALBOT. Ant-hills.

Mr. FOSTER. That might do a little better. There was not that amount of buzz in it, that there would be in a beehive. It was really like the outpouring of a certain great mass of people as Vergil sang of in olden times, which I read a long time ago, and have an indistinct memory of now. Suppose the whole of this labour averaged $1.50 a day, 13,000 days labour were put in on that building.

Mr. TARTE.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is no use saying that the men have been paid only $1.50 a day ; for we had to import plasterers at high rates from Montreal, there not being enough in Ottawa. Of course, I could not supervise the work myself the whole time, but I may say that I have gone to the building as often as I have been able to do ; I do not say that there has not been some time lost, but really I do not think there has been much time wasted. The chief architect of my department is a capable man, and he superintended the work himself. If I cannot have confidence in him, in whom can I have confidence ? I instructed him to go on with the work with all possible speed and economy, and more than that I could not do.

Mr. POUPORE. It is well known that work of that kind, when it has to be forced, costs more than it does under ordinary circumstances.

Mr. FOSTER. If it only had been forced, we would have nothing to say against it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. When this matter came up under the ordinary Estimates, I asked the hon. gentlemen whether, in making the repairs which were necessary in consequence of the fire, he had considered the advisability of using wood which has been rendered incombustible, and which is being used in the high buildings of Chicago and New York instead of iron. I am told that this incombustible lumber is just as good for all purposes as iron and in some cases preferable, not being so much affected by heat. I am told that it is today accepted by the Government of the United States for all public buildings, and I am also informed that the most prominent firms of architects in the city of New York have made it a condition in all their contracts that it shall be used in buildings constructed under their direction. Unless there is some objection to it which I am not aware of, I consider that it is a matter of importance.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am quite aware of what my hon. friend refers to. I will have a careful test made of the wood, and if it is found as good as I think it is, I will certainly employ it, because I think the desire of the House is that we should endeavour to make the buildings as fireproof as possible.

Mr. TAYLOR. Has the Minister made an estimate of the total loss to the country caused by this fire—that is, the cost of the work already done, the rents which the Government have had to pay, and the probable cost of putting the building in as good a state of repair as it was before ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief architect of my department thinks that the part of the building for which we are going to ask tenders will cost about $140,000. My hon. friend sees what we have spent already on repairs. More than that I cannot say.

Mr. TAYLOR. That does not include the item for rent for the premises we have been occupying. I want to inquire of the Minister whether he has ever had an investigation as to the cause of the fire?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes. I instructed the officers of my department to make a careful inquiry. The Government also charged the chief of police, Mr. Sherwood, to investigate the matter. As I have already stated, the fire was discovered in a room over the Department of Railways and Canals. The origin of the fire has not been discovered, and nobody can say what was the cause of it. The general consensus of opinion seems to be that it was caused by the heating apparatus.

Public Buildings, Ottawa—Moving public departments into new or renovated permanent quarters in departmental buildings, inclusive of fitting up of offices, &c., in model room, Langevin Block, in Eastern Block and in Slater Block, and repairs, furniture and other supplies found to be necessary in connection with said transfers..... $22,500

Mr. FOSTER. What part of this is for repairs, furniture and supplies?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I may say that after the fire took place, several departments made changes. The Department of the Interior, which was located in the Eastern Block, was removed to the Langevin Block. That involved a pretty large expenditure. Repairs to furniture and fittings cost $9,500. New furniture and fittings cost $5,500.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, the balance, $7,500, goes to the moving?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The items are: Fitting up offices in model room, Langevin Block, for Interior Department: to cover payments for workmen employed, $415.30; to cover salaries of Foreman Maguire from 16th February to 5th May, 1897, $284; to pay J. Parr for lumber supplies, putting up partitions, &c., $1,350; G. C. Howe, painting, $240.15; W. J. Murphy, painting, $134.90; to provide for settlement of accounts for materials and telephones not yet paid, $1,700; putting up iron and asbestos partitions, $250.

Rideau Hall, including grounds—Repairs, renewals, improvements, furniture and maintenance, $4,107.80 having been paid out of appropriation for 1896-97 to pay for linen, &c., purchased in 1895-96 (Nov., 1895, to Jan., 1896)..... $9,000

Mr. TAYLOR. When the main Estimates were brought down, they called for an expenditure of $18,000 on Rideau Hall, I then ventured the prophesy that when the supple-mentaries came down there would be an additional amount of $8,000 or $9,000 required to pay for the building of the dancing hall. The vote asked for in the preceding year was $14,000, and that was the estimate prepared by the late Government, as the hon. gentleman told us. When the hon. gentleman was asking for $18,000, he said that he would require the increased amount to meet a debt not paid by the late Government for linen, and so forth. He said this, as will appear by reference to the report of the debate. He is now asking $27,000, when the late Government only asked for $14,000; and allowing the claim made by the hon. Minister, $4,000 for linen ordered by the late Government, we have still an increase in the expenditure of a considerable amount which is a fit subject for criticism by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) and the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers). These gentlemen ought to be here to denounce this increased extravagance by the present Government in a matter with respect to which they were always denouncing the extravagance of the late Government. The hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers) surely ought to be here, for this was one of the planks in the Patrons platform during the late election.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend is not fair. He should remember that I did not ask for the $18,000 in my estimates for this year but for the year from July, 1897, to July, 1898. Now, I am asking $9,000 to cover expenditure during this year. Out of that $9,000, there is an amount of $4,107.88 which was really spent when I took office. The bill was due and I was bound to pay it. I frankly admit that I spent $5,000 in repairs on Rideau Hall, but I never said that that money would be taken out of the appropriation for next year. In answer to the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart), I stated distinctly that this $18,000 was for the coming year and that I would have to ask for an additional sum to pay for past expenditure. I frankly admit having spent $5,000 on repairs. After going over the buildings with my hon. friend from Quebec West (Mr. Dobell), we found that the buildings and the house itself were in a very bad condition, and I thought that this country had the means of giving decent treatment to the occupants of Rideau Hall.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the Postmaster General in entire accord with the Minister of Public Works on that point?

Mr. COCHRANE. I have been here many years listening to the Opposition year after year, condemning the extravagance of the Government I was supporting in connection with the expenditure of Rideau Hall. A good many hon. gentlemen opposite owe their elections to-day to the charge that the Conservative party were extravagant, and now we have the Minister of Public Works telling us that although the late Government spent more money on Rideau Hall than they should have done, he and his colleagues went over the Hall and found it in a most dilapidated condition, and he spent $4,000 or $5,000 on it without even going through the formality of asking the House to vote the money. When we challenge hon. gentlemen opposite, they invariably reply: You are another. No sooner did they get into office than all their previous professions of economy and prudence were forgotten; and we are witnessing the results every day.

Mr. HAGGART. I think the hon. Minister is entirely mistaken as to the conversation we had across the House when this item came up before. I had called the attention of the hon. Minister to the large expenditure and he replied that a portion of it had been incurred by the late Government in the preceding year. I drew his attention to the fact that the proper way was to bring down an item in the Supplementary Estimates. Now, I find that the whole expenditure of $18,000 is for next year and does not include the amount that was spent last year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Quite true.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman is mistaken then in his statement of the conversation?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If my hon. friend will allow me, I do not think that I will be bound to spend more than is necessary.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not accuse the hon. gentleman of that.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the amount of the bill for linen?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Just $4,107.80. It was bought before I took office.

Mr. WALLACE. All for linen?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, that is what my officers tell me..

Mr. TAYLOR. I understand the hon. gentleman to say that this $4,000 for linen was to pay a debt of last year for which no amount has been voted. I always understood that if money was not voted, it could not be paid. I should like to know by what right the hon. Minister paid for linen ordered the year before, when he had no vote out of which to pay it. Then he tells us that he found the building out of repair and that he ordered repairs to be done, and after the money is spent, he asks the House for a vote. Well, we have at Gananoque a drill shed which the Government was bound, by written agreement with the corporation, to have removed some time ago. I put a question on the paper, and the answer was: It cannot be done until the money is voted. How then did the hon. Minister come to expend this money on Rideau Hill before there was any vote? No doubt he relied on the support of his friends behind him, who used formerly to criticise very severely the expenditure on Rideau Hall, but who will now swallow anything. Now, the hon. gentleman asks $18,000 for next year, where the late Government asked only $14,000 for the last year they were in office.

Mr. COCHRANE. I would like to ask who the linen belongs to after the hon. Minister pays for it?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. COCHRANE. Do not be in such a hurry; I will make the question plain so that you can understand it. This country pays $4,000 for goods; the country wants to know who the goods belong to, do they belong to this country or do they belong to the occupant of the House for the time being?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Everything that we pay for belongs to us; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. WALLACE. Of course these goods came in free of duty, and in order to find the value here you must add the duty to the English price. I would like to know by whose authority that order was given.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The authority to buy that linen was given by the late Minister of Public Works, Mr. Ouimet.

Mr. WALLACE. Without any appropriation?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand that no appropriation was made. As a matter of fact, I may say, I am informed by the officers of my department that accounts have always been kept behind, from year to year, and that is the reason why I thought it right to come straightforward, and say I think it is necessary for me to spend $18,000. I have paid now all the back accounts, and will try not to incur any expenditure which is not authorized.

Mr. WALLACE. The whole matter is like this: When the members and supporters of the present Government were in Opposition, they condemned this large expenditure on Rideau Hall, and especially said that too much money was spent in repairs. But now the hon. Minister of Public Works says that that is a mistake, and that not enough was spent on repairs, that Rideau Hall was going to decay for want of such expenditure. I have observed that when the hon. Minister wants to spend money on wharfs and other public works, he tells us that they have been sadly neglected by the late Government and that he had to spend money on them in order to maintain them properly and avoid serious loss. The Minister of Public Works tells us the same tale now in regard to Rideau Hall, notwithstanding that, year after year, large sums have been expended for maintenance and repairs to keep this building in proper order.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we must have a balance on expenditures upon Rideau Hall in some way. If the hon. Minister feels that the house must be kept up, the only way to keep the balance is to have the Governor General's salary reduced by the amount of the excess. I hope that the hon. gentleman will prevail upon the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) to see to that.

Dredging—

Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick.....	$8,000
Ontario and Quebec.....	$8,000

Mr. MARTIN. I would like to ask where, in Prince Edward Island, this dredging is proposed to be done?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The dredge is now at Charlottetown. I am given to understand by my chief officer that it is to be employed at Summerside shortly.

Mr. MARTIN. In the early part of the session I asked a question in regard to dredging some harbours on the south side of the island, the hon. Minister who has the patronage of Prince Edward Island told me that I should get my answer when the Supplementary Estimates came down. The Supplementary Estimates are now down, and I naturally supposed that the information would be given. Though we are very well pleased that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) should be made a belted knight, and though we all hope that he will long wear his honour, I hope we are not expected to take the honours conferred upon him and so upon his province in lieu of necessary public works in Prince Edward Island. I may say that for the past year the dredge was sent to Crapaud in his own constituency—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). That is not in my constituency.

Mr. MARTIN. Well, it is in the constituency of the hon. member for East Prince (Mr. Yeo). I do not know what the object is in sending it to Crapaud unless it be to make room for the "Petrel," which has been laid up there all winter.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The "Petrel" never was at Crapaud at all.

Mr. MARTIN. I would like if the hon. Minister (Sir Louis Davies) would see to it that the southern part of the province is not neglected. I have called the matter to his attention several times and have always received the same answer—that nothing could be done at present. I may say that these harbours on the south side to which I am calling attention are the very harbours spoken of by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for a number of years, and for alleged neglect of which he challenged and condemned the Government. Now that he is honoured with a portfolio in the Cabinet, I hope that we shall see him carry into effect those improvements that he made so much noise about when in Opposition.

Mr. KAULBACH. It is to be hoped that out of this large amount of money that is to be expended in Nova Scotia, some portion of it will be applied to works that I brought prominently before the Government a short time ago, that is to say, the harbours of Lunenburg, LaHave and Mahone Bay.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will certainly consider the representations of my hon. friend.

Mr. KAULBACH. I think that consideration is certainly due to these harbours. They deserve the attention of the Government more than any other harbours in Nova Scotia.

Resolutions to be reported.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1 o'clock p.m.

Second Sitting.

WEDNESDAY, 23rd June, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock, p.m.

PRAYERS.

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

To provide for salaries of architects, draughtsmen and clerks, chief architect's office..... $2,100

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think that the committee will remember that last year I stated that Mr. Fuller, then chief architect, would be superannuated. I found out later that Mr. Fuller's services could be utilized for one year more. To be frank, I found that as I could not give him the superannuation that I thought he was entitled to, I kept him one year more, and that is the reason I ask for this amount of money to-day.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the reason my hon. friend could not give him what he thought he was entitled to?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Fuller was formerly in the employ of this Government, and he left our service to go to the United States. He came back to Canada in 1880, when his time of service began. I thought that perhaps we could add some years to his term for superannuation, but I found that Council had adopted the rule not to do anything of this kind; and, in face of that rule, I made up my mind that Mr. Fuller should be kept for one year more. I think the committee will sympathize with me and with him.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not want to give my hon. friend any advice, but I think that as a member of the Government he had better take the Government's decision as his own, and not tell the House that he wanted such and such a thing but his colleagues would not let him do it, because that is a way of getting sympathy at the expense of his colleagues.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There was no great difficulty about it, but I thought, in view of that rule that we could not add any number of years to his term of service, and, thinking the House would sympathize with Mr. Fuller under the circumstances, I decided to keep him another year.

Mr. FOSTER. As my hon. friend could not do it one way, he took a roundabout way to do it. It is hard to head off my hon. friend.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am only asking the committee to do what it has a perfect right to do, in order to do justice to an old and faithful servant.

To provide for temporary clerical and other assistance, inclusive of services of all persons required who were employed after 1st July, 1882, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act..... $1,500

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is smashing the law again.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I may say frankly that I am short of $1,500. The grant when I took the office was $30,000; I cut it down to $23,000, and now find myself short by $1,500.

Mr. BERGERON. Before we pass away from the Estimates for public works, I desire to ask my hon. friend some explanation about a contract which I think has been given to the foundry in Beauharnois. I desire to say at first that I am very glad to see that the hon. gentleman has found himself in a position to have some work done at the Beauharnois foundry. I have seen that in the newspapers, and there is a great deal of jubilation over the work that is being given there and over the large amount of money that is being thrown into that place. I would ask the Minister what amount of work was given, whether tenders were asked for, if it was given to the lowest tenderer and how it is being done. I am not at all criticising, but simply asking for information.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If I remember rightly I gave the work to the Star Company. I have ordered from them two boilers, one to be put into the Richmond court house and the other into the Prince Albert jail. We asked for prices from some companies and we found that the Star Company could supply us with all the material needed, and we have given them the contract.

Mr. BERGERON. Would the Minister of Public Works be kind enough to tell me the amount of the contract?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot give the exact amount. It amounts to $1,000, I think. I will be very glad to give every information to my hon. friend privately if he likes.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Did I understand the hon. Minister of Public Works to say that he gave a contract for a boiler to be put into the jail at Richmond.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is for the Richmond Post Office.

Mr. CASGRAIN. You said the jail.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I made a mistake.

Lachine Canal Enlargement..... $216,000

Mr. FOSTER. We would like to know now whether the information has been brought down, or is ready to be brought down on which we have been asking so long.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I have gathered all the information that it is possible for me to get. That has gone to the Secretary of State, and I presume it will be back inside of an hour.

Mr. FOSTER. I would suggest that you might better let that item stand until it comes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That will include the report of Mr. Wilson and other papers, but it will not include all the evidence. I cannot get all the evidence.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will go on with my Supplementary Estimates if you will permit me.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Am I right when I say that the repairs which are being made to some of the walls in Quebec are under the direction of the Militia Department?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes. They are not under my direction.

Department of Public Works—To pay Mr. William Keys in full for insertion of a sketch with illustrations concerning history, jurisdiction, transactions, &c., of the Department of Public Works of Canada, in the book published by him under the title of "Capital and Labour;" order given prior to 30th June, 1896..... $245

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of that?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In 1894 Mr. Keys requested the then Minister of Public Works to authorize him to publish a sketch of the history of our public works. At that time it does not seem that Mr. Keys got any written authorization. He published a sketch all the same. Later on he got a letter from Mr. Ouimet to the effect that he had been authorized, and in the presence of this we cannot decline to pay it because the then Minister had given his authorization.

Public Buildings, Ottawa—Towards reconstruction of Western Departmental Block, destroyed by fire, 11th February, 1897..... $100,000
Public Buildings, Ottawa—Fire protection, electric lighting and power generating plants, &c..... 75,000

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the Minister of Public Works if this is a new building, and if so, what is the contemplated cost?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I stated this morning that the estimated cost is about $140,000 for the building. It is not for a new building, but for rebuilding the old block.

Mr. FOSTER. We would like to have some idea as to this.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As to the item of $75,000 the idea is to change the system of lighting which we have to-day. Part of the buildings are lighted by electricity and the balance by gas. The bills so far have amounted to from $1,000 to $23,000 a year for gas alone. The idea in my mind is this. We would change the whole thing and build a new plant at the foot of the hill where we now have a plant, increasing the strength and capacity of that plant and using electricity for fire appliances. We are not now protected. After the fire in the West Block, we went all over the buildings and found that we were in no way protected. My intention is to add to the plant we have now, to do away with lighting by gas, which costs us a great amount of money, and to utilize our electric power not only for lighting but for appliances against fire. We propose to put electric pumps in every building. I have no definite plan yet, although I have given a great deal of attention to the subject, and my intention is to have the best possible means to protect these buildings against fire. My proposal is to change the mixed system into one system, and I am sure that it will effect a great saving.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works will go over the Estimates—I do not know whether he has done that or not—he will find that we are entrusting a very large amount of money into his hands this year. I do not know how many hundreds of thousands of dollars for these buildings in around and about Ottawa, and in connection with other things, but it is an immense amount of money. Before he takes a sum of money like this and undertakes a complete change in reference to the system of fire protection and lighting, he should do more than give us a little generality in a few words. He ought to tell us what he proposes to do, but instead of doing that he says he has no plan at all. He says he has a general idea of what he wants to do. He proposes to change everything, but he has not given any information as to what they have decided upon. I think it would be well for the hon. gentleman, to put a plan before this committee. While we have unlimited faith in him as Minister of Public Works and in his knowledge of electric lighting, fire protection and the different merits of gas and electricity, I think we must exercise our reason or else our mental capacities will grow dull. We must know something as to the hon. gentleman's plan, something as to what he proposes to do, whether it is imperative that this year when expenditures are swelling up to an enormous amount that the plan should be changed. For a great many years we had a dual system of lighting, gas partly and electricity partly, and there has been a very large diminution in the cost of gas. Theoretically, I am in favour of electric lighting rather than lighting by gas, on account of the less danger to the buildings. We are going to have a system of fire protection and we are going to change the system of lighting entirely. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Tartte) ought to give us the plan upon which he is about to proceed, and to give us the cost, and ought not to ask $75,000 for himself and employees to go to work and conjure up a plan. They might get the best plan, but the House is entitled to know what that plan is. We have unlimited faith in hon. gentlemen opposite, under certain conditions, but we must make a mild protest, and ask that at least in these large expenditures, plans should be laid before the House; otherwise, we might as well have government by committee with the Minister of Public Works at the head of the committee for spending money.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Last year I asked for a pretty large sum of money, and I quite remember that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) reproached me and prophesied that I would spend more than I was asking for. Well, out of the money I asked from Parliament last year there is today a sum of $800,000 that I have not spent. I am all right so far, and I believe that my friend (Mr. Foster) should trust me for the future.

Mr. FOSTER. No; I must dissent.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am very sorry, indeed, that my hon. friend dissents. Under the same circumstances, I would certainly trust him.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, no.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am sorry he has not the same confidence in me that I might have in him. We are now spending for gas a sum varying from $18,000 to $22,000 or $23,000 a year, and our electric system costs us about $10,000 a year. It is admitted that it is dangerous to use gas in these buildings, and a few days ago a committee of the House properly suggested that gas should no longer be used. Some means ought to be taken to guard against the great disaster we have experienced. I consulted with the engineers of my department, and with engineers and architects outside and they suggested to me that it would be better, in the public interest, that a system of electric lighting and electric protection against fire should be adopted. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) wants a detailed plan; will he permit me to say that it would not be wise to give it, as I intend asking for tenders.

Mr. FOSTER. Tenders for what?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Tenders for putting in all this apparatus.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) mean to say that whenever a Minister proposes to call for tenders for a work, he is not, because of that, bound to give to the House what he thinks about the cost of it?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not mean that.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, we want to know what the hon. gentleman proposes to do, and what is the estimated cost; that has nothing to do with the tenderers.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The House has a right to know, in a general way what I am asking for. Calculations have been given to me, but of course I do not say that they are correct, or that I will adopt them, but they are to the effect that we will require, in the eastern block, 1,200 incandescent lights.

Mr. COCHRANE. How much will be saved in that building on account of lighting by electricity instead of gas?

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. TALBOT. Thirteen thousand dollars.

Mr. COCHRANE. I am not asking you, I am asking the Minister. You don't know anything more about it than I do.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Will my hon. friend allow me to go on with this statement first. We will require in the western, 1,600 incandescent lights; in the Langevin block, 750; in the Supreme Court building, 250; in the Museum building, 250; in the Post Office building, 300; and in the Printing Bureau, 600 incandescent lights, all of 16 candle power. It is estimated that the probable minimum number of lamps burning at one time would be 2,000, and that the probable maximum would be 5,000 or 6,000. To meet the requirements, we want a generating plant consisting of boilers, engines and generators sufficient to meet these needs. I cannot give any definite figures now as to the cost of these generators and boilers. I have here suggestions for wiring the buildings, for providing the necessary power, for placing electrical pumps in every building, and I hope that the whole thing will not cost more than the sum of money I am now asking. Suppose I spend $75,000 in replacing the mixed system of gas and electric light which costs us, in round numbers, from $32,000 to $33,000 a year; we can borrow money cheap enough to make a large economy; and, at the same time, the House will agree with me that we are better providing for the safety of the building.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the estimated cost of the plant?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am asking this sum of money after having taken information generally on the subject. My intention is not to enter into any contract whatever, until I have received the best possible information and asked for tenders, so that we will have the work done as cheaply as possible. I cannot offer more guarantee than this.

Mr. BERGERON. Do I understand the Minister to say that for that amount of $75,000 we will do away with all the gas used in the buildings?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I hope to be able to do so.

Mr. BERGERON. And there will be no more gas fixtures, but electricity all over.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Quite so. I hope we will be able to do so.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister has not given to the House any information which would enable it to come to a conclusion on this question. It seems to me that we should have the following information: First, the cost of the plant which is necessary to meet the maximum lighting of the buildings; second, to have the estimated cost of maintenance; then, a description of this system of electrical protection against fire. That I do not understand, and I do not know that the House does, and we ought to have a little information on that. My hon. friend will see that after travelling around the ring, he has got to where he started, and we have no more information than we had before.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It seems to me that I should not be asked for more, after I have stated that I intend to ask for tenders. The question is whether the House, knowing that we are expending about $23,000 a year for lighting by gas, and knowing that we want a better fire system, can trust this Government to carry out the change, when we say that we intend to ask for tenders for the work. It is not possible for any Minister to give detailed information.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the proposed saving?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The proposed saving should be very large, as my hon. friend can see himself.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. Minister says that the cost of gas and the electric light is $33,000 a year. What does he contend that the lighting will cost under the new system?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It seems to me that under the new system it should not cost more than $15,000 a year to operate the works; but I cannot pledge myself to that.

Mr. FOSTER. On what basis does my hon. friend make that statement?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We shall use the plant we have now, and it will not require a very large increase in the number of men.

Mr. WALLACE. Is this the only building that has the electric light in it?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The electric light is in the Council Chamber, in the Post Office and in the Printing Bureau. I may say that there is a very large expenditure on gas that we cannot control.

Mr. WALLACE. There is no electric light in the East Block or in the West Block?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is none in the West Block.

Mr. LISTER. It seems to me that hon. gentlemen opposite are deliberately heckling the Minister.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think so.

Mr. LISTER. All I can say is that if the Minister does not think so, he must be very obtuse. What is the fact? Part of the buildings at Ottawa are lighted by gas, and part of them by electricity. It is admitted by everybody, I think, that that system is somewhat dangerous. Suppose that the works cost $100,000 or $150,000 and that there will be greater safety in having them all lighted by electricity. Surely the House will grant whatever sum is necessary to properly protect the public buildings of this country. As appears by the Public Accounts, we are paying the gas company a large sum of money for the lighting of these buildings, and we are also paying for the electric works for lighting this building. Suppose the necessary works cost $100,000, this at 3 or 3½ per cent would mean an annual expenditure of $3,000 or $3,500. To that you would have to add the cost of operating the works, which would surely not amount to anything like what we are paying to-day for gas. If that expense can be cut down to a great extent, the Government will be entitled to the thanks of the country. If, in addition, the lighting by electricity will reduce the danger of fire, surely no one here will raise an objection.

Mr. QUINN. I am sorry that I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. I look at this as a very serious matter. I am asked to vote not only $75,000 for fire protection, electric lighting and power-generating plant, but I am asked to approve of a new system without knowing what the system is. I can understand that the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, with that perfect confidence that he has in the Government, will assume that because this is proposed by a Minister, it is a safer system of lighting.

Mr. LISTER. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. QUINN. The hon. gentleman said that electricity was generally admitted to be a safer system of lighting. I do not know that it is generally admitted. As a matter of fact, in London, England, there are very few buildings lighted by electricity, and the reason is that that system was tried and did not prove successful; in fact, it alarmed the public mind there to such an extent that it was discarded. I do not know much about it myself, but I do know many instances in Montreal in which fires have been caused by the electric wires. I also know that the system of gas lighting has been used in these buildings for the last thirty or thirty-five years, and I do not know that it has been proved that any fire has occurred here from that fact. Because a fire has occurred in a public building, which has not been traced to gas, we are asked to vote $75,000 to change the system, without knowing what it is going to cost either to establish or to maintain the new system, without even knowing whether the company that is in existence in Ottawa will not supply the electric light in the building where it is now more cheaply than it has been managed by the Government. I think we will all admit that the Government of Canada is not generally regarded as an institution that can manage works of this kind as economically as a private company. Without having made any of these inquiries, the hon. gentleman asks us to vote $75,000, and possibly there will be a Governor General's warrant for another $75,000 before the end of the year, which we will be asked to provide for afterwards. Some better explanation should be given. Some report of a responsible engineer, such as the Chief Engineer of Public Works should be before us.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am very sorry not to be in a position to say much more. Our intention is to change the building we have for a larger one, and to obtain larger plant. We will use the old plant and supplement it with new machinery.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I just put it to the hon. gentleman, as a business man, whether if he were going to build a house for himself, he would not require some estimates of the cost and some report from an engineer or architect, with plan showing each part and the cost of each? Surely the hon. gentleman can tell us how much the change in the building is going to cost, and how much it will cost to light the building after the plant and the building are changed. With the very capable officers he has in his department, he should be able to give these details, so that we may know what we are doing. When the Minister rose, I thought he was going to suggest that the building should be lighted with coal oil.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Lister) thought we were taking a little pleasure, in this early part of the session, in hectoring the Minister. I can assure him we are not. Take the case which my hon. friend stated. Here is the owner of a large mansion who has an agent, and his agent comes to him and says: You have been lighting your house with gas, I think it better to have it lit with electricity. What is the first question the owner will ask? He will want to know what the plant will cost and what it would cost to run it afterwards. But the hon. gentleman cannot tell us what the proposed saving is. He cannot tell us what the plant will cost and what the running of it will cost, but asks us to trust him with $75,000. That is a large draft, and we should know the conditions on which the hon. gentleman proposes to make the change. My hon. friend has capable officers who could supply him with the information.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My expectations are that we will save at least $10,000 a year and provide, at the same time, a better system. I am not in a position yet to give the details because I have made up my mind to adopt the best possible system after asking for tenders.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not going to debate the question any longer, but the hon. gentleman is an intelligent man and will see that his reply is not satisfactory. It is all very well for him to say: Have faith in me, I will not do anything that is not right, and I will ask for tenders. But that is not the principle upon which money is voted. It is voted on plans and policy, and if the policy and the plans meet the approval of the House, the vote is given. There is another question that might well be brought up. There is a large company in this city, the Ottawa Electric Car Company. Is it not possible to avail yourself of their power and get electricity in a wholesale way without going to the expense of getting new plant?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have already the plant and will simply have to add to it. I do not wish to commit myself to any definite plan because I want to be in the position of availing myself of any other scheme, and might perhaps accept the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman. I want to provide a good fire system and a good lighting system for less money than we have been paying. As to having plans, I am new to the office and may be mistaken, but it seems to me that estimates for public works all over Canada have been voted without plans being submitted. I am asking for the money, I will have the plans made, and then call for tenders. I propose to follow the example set in the past.

Mr. BERGERON. If I understand well the hon. gentleman, this may cost less than $75,000 or it may cost more. Will the hon. gentleman tell us what has already been expended on the electric plant here or how much the electric plant which generates the light in the House of Commons cost, so that we might be able to estimate the cost of the change?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not in a position to give that now, but will give it to-night.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that the hon. Minister, until he has a well matured plan and is able to submit it to us, he had better hold over this item.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not in a position to give more information on this point. I am asking $75,000 for the very thing I have described and I do not feel obliged to give any more details.

Mr. BERGERON. With regard to the first item, would the hon. gentleman tell us in what way this $100,000 is going to be expended on the western building, the part burnt? Is that purely and simply for repairs?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
For rebuilding.

Mr. BERGERON. The whole roof of the western building ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
Quite so. That is for this year. My chief architect thinks it will cost $140,000 for the whole, but we cannot spend this year more than I have asked for.

Mr. BERGERON. I am glad to hear that, because when the fire took place, there were a great many reports, some that it would cost the country $100,000, and others that it would cost as high as $1,000,000. I am very glad now to hear that it will not amount to more than $144,000 or $150,000.

Public Buildings—Chargeable to Income—Nova Scotia—

Kentville public building.....	$ 5,000
Liverpool public building.....	5,000

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Public Works what the policy of the Government is with regard to the places to be chosen for the erection of post offices and public buildings throughout the country. It will be remembered by hon. members who were in the last Parliament and in former Parliaments that the Opposition of that time opposed the Government spending money in this way, and I think it is well to be as consistent as possible now that the Opposition of that time have got into power. Therefore, I ask what is to be the policy of the Government in the erection of public buildings in towns and villages throughout the Dominion ?

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend cannot blame the Minister of Public Works for that.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I desire to know if it is the policy of the Government to put up buildings in small towns or if it is their intention to limit the erection of buildings to towns of a certain number of inhabitants or to those which furnish a certain income from their post office and custom-house.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
The policy of the Government is to erect buildings where it is found in the public interest to do so.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear ; oh, oh.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
I am very glad to hear that the House agrees with me so thoroughly on that point. In the case of Kentville we found ourselves in this position—we were paying $140 per annum for the rental of our post office, and we were paying at the same time $75 for our custom-house, making a total of $215. Kentville is a thriving town and the inhabitants of that town urged us very strongly that it was in the public interest to erect a building there, and the Government, after taking this question into serious consideration, made up their minds that it was.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. What is the population of Kentville ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
The population is 2,526, and increasing every year, I may say. In 1871 the population was only 1,179 ; in 1881 it had increased but little, while in 1891 it had increased to the figures I have just given. I have no doubt that it is now about 3,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN. That was due to the National Policy.

Mr. POUPORE. I would like to know if the hon Minister of Public Works will apply the same rule to my county.

Mr. CASGRAIN. No doubt he will if you will give him another vote.

Mr. POUPORE. I will give him a vote whenever he deserves it. There are three thriving towns in my county, Quyon, Shawville and Portage du Fort, to which this rule ought to be applied.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
I may say a little more in answer to my hon. friend from North Wentworth and Brant (Mr. Somerville). The revenue that we collect at Kentville is very large indeed. Last year the goods—

Mr. FOSTER. What is the post office revenue, first ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
In 1895-96, the post office revenue was $4,004.39. The customs duties collected for the same year amounted to $20,997.19, a very large amount of money, showing that Kentville is a thriving town. As to what my hon. friend from Pontiac (Mr. Poupore) has said, I may remind him that even a good rule cannot be applied at the same time everywhere ; but I shall certainly take good note of the circumstances he has mentioned.

Mr. FOSTER. What is to be the cost of this building ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
It will be about $12,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Will that include fittings ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
We hope so.

Mr. WALLACE. And the site ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
We hope so, but the plans have not yet been prepared, and I cannot pledge myself to any definite course, but my intention in all these small towns, thriving though they may be, meritorious though their cases may be, is not to erect any expensive buildings.

Mr. BENNETT. Having been in the last Parliament and heard the denunciations by hon. gentlemen of the iniquity and extravagance of the then Administration in erecting public buildings in small places, I beg to call attention to some of the facts in this case. The population of this place, according to "Lovell's Gazetteer," is 1,626. The hon. Minister of Public Works tells us that $215 is now expended in rents for the post office and custom-house in this place. Now, the hon. Minister in a wild fit of economy, proposes to retrench in this fashion—he proposes to spend $12,000 (that is the figure he puts in, and we may fairly assume, considering his past acts, that that will swell to $15,000)—

Mr. QUINN. Twenty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. BENNETT. I will be well within the mark, for the benefit of the hon. Minister, and will call it $15,000. At 4 per cent, this will be $600 a year. He must have a caretaker for this building, which will take about $300 more. Then there will be repairs. Altogether the country will stand an expense of at least from $1,200 to $1,500 a year for a service which we have now performed at $215. Now, the hon. Minister has had a very touching appeal made to him by the hon. gentleman behind him (Mr. Somerville), but he has not yet stated the policy of the Government on this subject—whether it is proposed to go on the basis of receipts or of population, or of political exigency, but I rather think he inclines to the last. Before the item passes, will the hon. Minister state which of these three captions this item comes under—political exigency, population, or receipts of the office?

Mr. BERGERON. Before the hon. Minister answers my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett), I would like to tell the hon. member for Brant that he forgets one thing. When he speaks of the denunciations of the late Government by their opponents, he forgets that the Minister of Public Works was with us at that time, and favoured all these expenditures on La-prairie post office and others of the same sort. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Somerville) ought to keep quiet; his turn is coming. So far these expenditures are only for the front benches. The hon. Minister of Public Works gives first to those who are most deserving. I understand that the first of these places for which appropriation is made is in the county of the hon. Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden, King's), and that Liverpool is in the county represented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). After these gentlemen have been served the favours will be distributed among the back benches, and my hon. friend (Mr. Somerville) will get his reward.

Mr. TARTE.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. For eighteen long years, some of these counties have been left out in the cold, and it would not be surprising if our friends who are electors were asking to be recognized a little, when there is an opportunity for it and the public interest is served at the same time. And on that account, it seems to me our friends opposite should be a little more charitable. I worked with them at one time, and for eighteen years hon. gentlemen opposite have been benefited by these expenditures. It is long enough.

Mr. BERGERON. We are not complaining, the complaint comes from the other side.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I do not agree with the Minister of Public Works that the public interest will be served by the erection of the public building he described; and if the rule is to be established that all villages of 1,000 population are to have post offices, there is not a man in this House who cannot name from half a dozen to a dozen villages in his own county as deserving of having public buildings as the towns named in this estimate. Now, there are a number of items here of the same character.

Mr. LISTER. There are the "Four Corners."

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I have not any very large towns in my county, but I have three or four villages that would be just as much entitled to public buildings as these, and I do not ask for an expenditure of public money in this way. I do not think that it is in the interest of the public that the Government should go on with the practice which was established by the late Ministry in connection with these buildings. When Mr. Mackenzie's Government was in power that practice was never adopted. Public buildings were erected only in places of importance, and where the public service required the erection of such buildings. I do not think that it is in the interest of the Liberal party or of this Government now in power, to follow in the footsteps of those who have preceded them in the way of expending money for the erection of public buildings in small villages just for the sake of pleasing the electors who live in that section of the country. Now, if we are to have this rule established, then I claim that we should have public buildings in every village of the same population and which yields the same revenue to the Post Office Department and the Customs Department, as those villages that are now to be favoured by this Government with the erection of public buildings. I think that we should not adopt this system, and I, for my part, enter my protest against the Government I support spending public money in this way.

Mr. POUPORE. I would just say this, that if the revenues of the post offices in the different villages named by my hon. friend would warrant the construction of such buildings, I think it is a good business to construct buildings in such places. I know two or three towns in my county where the rent paid for buildings is far in excess of the interest on the money which would be necessary to put up public buildings in those places. Now, if the post office revenue is such as to warrant the construction of a building of that kind, I think it is good politics, no matter from what party it may come, and that it is in the interest of Canada and in accordance with sound business principles to do so.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Hon. gentlemen opposite find fault that public buildings are to be put up in the two counties in Nova Scotia represented by Ministers. Well, I suppose the fact is that these two counties have been punished for a number of years because they elected members on the Liberal side. I do not think it will be denied that if these towns had been in counties which had for a series of years been represented by friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, they would long ere this time have had public buildings, judging from what has actually occurred in the past in other places. Take the town of Liverpool, in the county of Queen's, which I have the honour to represent. That is not a large county, and the town is a small one. But, in the first place, it is a shire town, and I claim that a distinction can be properly made between a shire town of a county and a town which is not a shire town. There is another point. The county of Queen's has not, up to the present time, received the benefit of a single dollar of railway expenditure. I think it has to be considered. I think it is a fair thing to note that in many of those villages of which my hon. friend speaks, where they say they have no public buildings, they probably have well-subsidized railways which represent to the people an expenditure of public money. What are you going to say in speaking of any county where, year after year, they have desired railway construction and have desired it in vain, and where they have nothing within the limits of the county to show in the way of expenditures for public buildings, or railways, or anything of the sort? It is natural, whether it is reasonable or not, that these people, irrespective of politics, should wish that some portion of the public expenditure should be made within their borders. Now, I say that if there is a county town within the Dominion of Canada which has no public works of any sort representing Dominion expenditure, it is not an unreasonable thing that they should ask to have a modest public building, not an extravagant public building. You may draw a proper distinction between a building in a large town and one in a small town. If there is a county town in the Dominion of Canada which is in the position which I have described, which has no public building and no railways, I will justify the expenditure of a moderate sum of money there, not for an extravagant building, but a building in proportion to the reasonable requirements of the people. I think my hon. friend was mistaken in giving the population of Kentville. My impression is that it is a town of about 2,500 people.

Mr. BENNETT. The "Gazetteer" gives it at 1,600.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is a mistake.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Two thousand five hundred, I find, is the population.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Its population, I think, is larger than that of Liverpool. At all events, it is a town in the centre of a large agricultural district. Perhaps it is not more prosperous than most of the towns in the lower provinces, but it is by no means one of the least important. I think my hon. friends opposite at one time recognized its importance so far as to put a vote in the Estimates of $4,000 for a building there, but, owing to some peculiar circumstance, which it is not necessary now to explain, they failed to provide the money when it was required. Now, the proposition is that we shall do that with respect to Kentville, which my hon. friends opposite started in to do and which they failed to carry out.

Mr. POWELL. Might I ask the hon. gentleman if Kentville has any railways in the vicinity, or if any have been subsidized, and if so, how many?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The town of Kentville has a railway running through it, which has been subsidized; but Liverpool has no railway.

Mr. POWELL. Is there not one to the neighbouring town of Kingsport?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is a railway from Kentville to Kingsport. I was pointing out that the county of Queen's has no railway that has been subsidized. There has just been built a section of five miles of railway. Companies have projected other lines but, unhappily, they have never done anything. I do think that a fair preference should be given to a county town where they have no railways and no public expenditures of any kind.

Mr. POWELL. There is no case of that kind.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Liverpool is just such a case as I have stated. As respects Kentville, it is one of the large towns of the province, and I think if there is any place that is entitled to a public building, Kentville would come fairly within any moderate rule which you might lay down.

Mr. LISTER. So far as the maritime provinces are concerned, perhaps a different rule should be adopted than that adopted in the other provinces. My hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) is opposed to this vote in the Estimates. All I can say is that it is a pity that the hon. gentleman, after all the years he has been in this House and supporting the party which he now supports and which he supported when they were in power, did not find it convenient and proper to protest as strongly as he has protested to-day against an expenditure of public money on post offices in small places. I take the ground that in the erection of public buildings the Government should consider not only the population of the place, but also the amount of receipts from post office and customs and other public offices in the county. I think revenue should be the only test. But while that is my opinion, and always has been, I am bound to say that in the past it has not been recognized by hon. gentlemen now sitting on the Opposition benches. Why, Sir, the effects of this pernicious system which they adopted while in power for the purpose of buying support are to be seen to-day in public buildings in many small towns in Quebec and Ontario, yielding most insignificant incomes, nothing like sufficient to pay interest upon the amount invested in those buildings, and the care of them. My hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance while in power did not think it was improper to put up these buildings in small places. In the little town of Sussex a public building was put up at the expense of the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. I am sorry that I have for the second time to call the attention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lister) to the fact that I did not, unfortunately, have anything to do with that.

Mr. LISTER. Well, then it was your partner. It was a long time ago.

Mr. FOSTER. I was born then, but not in politics.

Mr. LISTER. I suppose you were 21. In Marysville also, I think it is in the county which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) represents—

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. LISTER. When the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) had made up his mind to leave his old constituency and to seek new pastures he found that it would be wise to put an amount in the Estimates to put up a public building in Marysville. Then a building was put up in the little town of Laprairie with its population of three or four hundred.

An hon. MEMBER. Eight hundred.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. LISTER. I am told that the population is 800. It has a total revenue of $500, $600 or $700.

Mr. TALBOT. $595.

Mr. LISTER. They thought it was proper to put a public building up there, and it can hardly become a subject of complaint now if members of the Government think that buildings should be put up in the maritime provinces. We think that they should be erected in sections of Ontario which have been neglected in the past.

Mr. COCHRANE. But you said that was wrong.

Mr. LISTER. Hon. gentlemen opposite have always used this sort of patronage to secure support for themselves. The county of East Lambton sent in a Liberal to represent it for a couple of Parliaments, and so long as a Liberal represented that county it was not deemed expedient that the town of Petrolea should have a public building. It is a town of some 4,000 inhabitants and yielding quite a revenue. As soon as the county of East Lambton changed its allegiance from the Liberal to the Conservative party there was a vote put into the Estimates for a public building in Petrolea which cost something like $40,000.

Mr. BERGERON. What do you think of that?

Mr. LISTER. I will not tell you just now what I think of it. West Lambton had always been true to Liberalism. The town of Sarnia had a large population and a revenue four times that of Petrolea and it was entitled to a public building, but the Government always turned a deaf ear to my applications that it should be treated in the same manner as the town of Petrolea. The inland revenue of Petrolea, according to the last return, was $16,257.42, and the post office revenue $7,170.92 or $23,427.24 together. They have had a public building in that town since 1887 which cost between $40,000 and $50,000. The town of Sarnia has a population of 7,500, and is the county town.

Mr. BERGERON. A nice place too.

Mr. LISTER. A very nice place. Its inland revenue amounted to $38,008.13, its post office revenue to $9,623.02, and its customs revenue to $111,334. In the face of that fact the town in which I live, with a population double that of Petrolea, returning a revenue to the Government of $159,000 a year, has been refused a public building, while in the adjoining county, with a population of about 4,000 people, an inland revenue of $16,000, and a post office revenue of $7,000 which was untrue to the Liberal party, the late Government showed their appreciation at once and erected a public building. But to show what hon. gentlemen have done in other places I will give a few more figures. Take Amherstburg, a small town in South Essex, represented then by the present Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba.

Mr. CASGRAIN. No, he represented North Essex.

Mr. LISTER. At all events it was promised to the town prior to the elections. The revenue of Amherstburg is, from the post office, $2,289.05; customs, $20,000, making a total of $22,289. Cayuga, a county town with a small population and a post office revenue of $1,533.30, apparently no customs revenue, a public building was put up. It is in a riding represented by my hon. friend the late Secretary of State (Mr. Montague). Take Cobourg, represented now by a supporter of the Opposition, and then by a supporter of the late Government. It has a post office revenue of $6,618.26, and a customs revenue of $512,000. There is also the case of Cornwall, with a post office revenue of $8,056.71, and customs revenue of $21,000. Goderich, while represented by a supporter of the present Opposition, succeeded in getting a public building. The receipts from the post office amounted to $6,068.99, and from customs $22,000. There are also Lindsay, post office revenue $9,130; customs, $13,000; Napanee, post office revenue, $6,331; customs, $7,000; Perth, post office revenue, $5,269; apparently nothing from customs; Port Hope, post office revenue, $7,415; Renfrew, post office revenue, $4,960; nothing from customs; Smith's Falls, post office revenue, $7,549; Strathroy, a little town with a population of 2,500 or 3,000, post office revenue, $4,733; Trenton, a small town with a post office revenue of $5,515, and customs revenue of $5,000; and Walkerville, a county town, post office revenue, $5,012. These small towns throughout the country, when they sent supporters of the Government to Parliament were granted public buildings, while counties that elected members of the Liberal party were refused them. As examples of this latter fact take Ingersoll with a large post office revenue; Woodstock, with a post office revenue of $12,000 or $15,000, Sarnia, with a revenue of $150,000, and Owen Sound. I believe a building was promised Owen Sound before the last election.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LISTER. Before the last general election. These places have been utterly neglected.

Mr. BERGERON. They are provided for in these Estimates.

Mr. LISTER. In the provinces of Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia you will find that in nearly all the small towns public buildings have been erected. When in Opposition I protested against the erection of such buildings unless the public requirements demanded them. The hon. gentlemen opposite disregarded these protestations and went ahead in their wild career of extravagance. There are certain towns as mentioned by the Finance Minister as having been utterly neglected in the past, and I am sure in so far as these places are concerned at all events some of them may be entitled to public buildings and they are more qualified for them than places which have received these favours in the past. It comes with very bad grace indeed for hon. gentlemen opposite to complain of this as being wrong who for eighteen long years supported the late Government and the course it has pursued.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman has made a speech for the Opposition. He seems to forget that he is now supporting the Government. He says that we are objecting.

Mr. LISTER. So you were.

Mr. BERGERON. Not at all. We are not objecting. We are asking for information.

Mr. LISTER. Oh, yes.

Mr. BERGERON. The Minister of Finance has a great advantage over many of us, because he has not had the pleasure of listening to his friends protesting against items for similar purposes to this, during the last eighteen years. Under the late Administration, there was, perhaps, one case where the expenditure was hardly warranted, but generally the moneys were spent in the same way that this money for Kentville and Liverpool is to be spent, and the expenditure under the late Government was religiously and vigorously protested against by the gentlemen now in power. My hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Somerville), a Roman of the Romans, has been fighting for years against these expenditures, but to-day he merely makes a mild protest, and will vote for and swallow every item in the Estimates brought down by this Government. The present Government have taken the policy of the Conservative Government in this, as they have in everything else.

Mr. WALLACE. I express my entire concurrence in the remarks of my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Somerville). Although I supported a Government, generally, that did not hold this opinion, I can say that in my own constituency we have a town of 5,000 population, and I never asked for a public building of any sort for it, but on the contrary have repeatedly declined to do so. I believe that only in large towns and cities should public buildings be erected. I have in my constituency a town with at least twice the population of Kentville, and I do not think I could justify a proposition to erect in it a large and expensive public building. The Minister of Finance tells us that places like Kentville and Liverpool have been for eighteen years suffering. Suffering from what? Were they suffering because there was not a public building erected, when public interest was against the erecting of a building there? The Minister of Finance further argues, that his Government is justified in this expenditure because these places have been punished in the past for not sending members to support the Conservative Government. There is no punishment when they have no right to a public building, on the ground of public policy. Hon. gentlemen opposite vigorously denounced the late Government, in and out of Parliament, for expenditures of this kind. But because the late Government did these things, that is no justification for them pursuing this extravagant course. The Minister of Finance also told us, that the erection of these buildings was justified on the ground that the places named have not received grants for railways. Well, there has not been one dollar of public money expended in the west riding of York since it became a separate electoral district, and the people of West York have never asked for it. That argument of the Minister of Finance falls flat. The hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) has given us a long list of places in which public buildings have been erected, and he entered into a comparison between the town of Sarnia in his constituency, and the town of Petrolea in the adjoining constituency which has been represented by a Conservative. He told us that Sarnia did double the business of Petrolea, and in order to prove his case he said, that the customs revenue in Sarnia was $111,000 a year. I admit, that would make out a pretty good case for him, but when I asked him what were the customs returns in Petrolea, he said they had not a custom-house there.

Mr. LISTER. I said there were no returns from it.

Mr. WALLACE. Well, if he had asked the Controller who is calmly slumbering on his right, he could have learned that there were customs returns from Petrolea, and that the customs returns for Sarnia were not $111,000, but just one-quarter of that, or $29,027.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. WALLACE. And the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lister) could have learned, that the customs returns for Petrolea, where he said there were no customs returns, are $62,403, or more than twice as much as from Sarnia.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. WALLACE. And in order to make up the $111,000 for Sarnia, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lister) took the customs returns of Petrolea and added it to Sarnia, and not being satisfied with that, he took $18,000 or $20,000 from the returns of Point Edward, and then got his $111,000 and said: Look at the business we are doing in Sarnia. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lister) will certainly have to revive his memory. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) comes before this House, and says: Look at the business done in Kentville. There are $20,000 receipts from customs there. The hon. Minister was not satisfied with giving the exact returns from Kentville, but he entered the returns from Burwick, Canada Creek, Canning, French Creek, Hadleyville, Port William and Hopefield, and by this means he got customs returns of $20,900. The hon. Minister shakes his head. Is it because there is nothing in it?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Are you sure about your figures?

Mr. WALLACE. Oh, quite so. I have the report of the Controller of Customs in my hands, which shows that the receipts from Kentville were $13,920 and not $20,927. The figures quoted by the Minister were made up from the returns of all those places I have mentioned. Let me refer again to another peculiarity about Kentville. Some hon. gentlemen opposite said, that its population was $2,400, and the Minister of Finance repeated the figures; but as a matter of fact the population, according to the census of 1891, was 1,686.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Then, these Tory officers of mine have played tricks on me.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister, if he does a clever thing, claims credit for himself, while if there is a blunder, he blames his officials.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not blame anybody.

Mr. WALLACE. We will have to put the responsibility on the Minister of Public Works and on the Minister of Finance.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The figures here are $2,500.

Mr. WALLACE. The figures here are: for 1881, $1,275; and for 1891, $1,686; an increase of $401 in the ten years. In my constituency there is one place with exactly three times the population, for which we are not asking for a public building, and for which I declined, when on the other side of the House, to ask, either verbally or in writing, for a public building. Yet the Minister of Finance says that because they have had no expenditure of public money there, at a place with 1,686 people, it is a proper thing to expend on a public building $12,000, which may swell to $15,000 or $20,000—at a place where they now pay a rental of $215, and where interest, repairs, a caretaker, heating and lighting will cost the Government $1,500 a year, or seven times as much as the rental they are paying today. What justification can there possibly be for this expenditure, especially by a Government pledged to economy, who swore most solemnly that if they were returned to power there would be none of this Tory extravagance prevailing throughout this country, but that they would husband the resources of the people. In my opinion the Government are doing something which they cannot justify, even with the special pleading of our good friend from West Lambton (Mr. Lister), in putting up public buildings at places like Liverpool and Kentville. For Liverpool I see the customs returns are $4,579. It does not cost 5 per cent. on the average, to collect our customs duties, and therefore the cost at Liverpool should be about $200; but, of course, in places like that, there is sometimes a preventive service, which would increase the expense. Yet the Government propose to put a public building in this place, where the post office and customs revenues are necessarily small. I think these expenditures are unjustifiable and in direct contradiction to the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite when they were in Opposition.

Mr. TAYLOR. I see that the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) is in the House now. I would like to know if he would justify this vote.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. According to the census returns, the population of Kentville and Canning, which are the same place for postal purposes—

Mr. FOSTER. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. They are no more the same place for postal purposes than Montreal and Quebec.

Mr. WALLACE. I may tell the hon. gentleman, too, that for customs purposes there is a custom-house at Kentville and another custom-house at Canning.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The figures laid before me are simply taken from the census.

Mr. FOSTER. Better withdraw the vote.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will withdraw the figures.

Mr. FOSTER. Do I understand that as the hon. gentleman's information on which he bases this vote is wrong, he will no longer persist in asking for a vote on false pretenses, and withdraw it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friends are forgetting what they did in the past. I am asking from this committee two small sums of money for two towns in Nova Scotia—Kentville and Liverpool. During the last ten years the following towns in the same province have been supplied with public buildings: Amherst, with a public building which cost $37,588.78.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is not a city.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the population of Amherst?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. 3,781.

Mr. WALLACE. Twice as large, and the customs returns are a good deal more than twice as much.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Annapolis has been provided with a public building costing $14,079.93; Pictou, with one costing $14,006.74; Tynemouth, with one costing $12,508.66; Lunenburg, with one costing $33,978.50; New Glasgow, with one costing $43,285.61; North Sydney, with one costing $25,994.35.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What is the population?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. 2,426. Truro was provided with a public building costing $36,690.11; Windsor, a very small town, with one costing $32,347.29; Yarmouth, with one costing $41,700.71. It seems to me our friends should be a little more fair.

Mr. BERGERON. We are not objecting to it. It was hon. gentlemen opposite who objected to all these expenditures under the late Government, and they are now following the same course.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I am not convinced by any of the arguments which have been advanced, either by the Finance Minister or my hon. friend from West Lambton (Mr. Lister), that the Government I am supporting are doing right in incurring expenditures such as these and such as were formerly incurred by hon. gentlemen opposite. The hon. Finance Minister justifies the expenditure for the erection of a public building in the town of Kentville on the ground that no public money has been expended in that section for railways.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, there has been.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The Finance Minister's plea recalls to my mind the argument made by the late Government when we were discussing the expenditure on the Tay Canal. The ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) justified that expenditure by saying that the county he represented had never previously got anything from the Government, and that consequently it was entitled to the expenditure of half a million dollars. They had never, he said, got any railway grants, and had been paying tribute to all other parts of the Dominion. This argument of the Finance Minister is just on a par with that which was made by the ex-Minister of Railways, to justify the illegitimate expenditure of half a million dollars on a canal which it costs about $2,000 a year to maintain and which yields a revenue of $125.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Was there any railway in Perth?

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Yes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Then the cases are not parallel.

Mr. FOSTER. The cases are parallel. There is a railway running through Kentville which was subsidized by the Dominion Government.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. My hon. friend from West Lambton was just as vigorous an opponent of this kind of expenditure as hon. gentlemen sitting opposite us are to-day, and I cannot for the life of me see how he can expect to justify this vote. He did not, as a matter of fact, justify it. He pointed out some of the larger towns, where the revenue was large, but did not refer to any of the smaller towns. When he was in Opposition, however, he referred to the smaller towns, and we are drawing a fair inference from his remarks when we say that he is of the opinion that this Government has the right to follow in the footsteps of the late Government and that this expenditure is legitimate because we ought to serve our friends as they served theirs.

Mr. LISTER. I made no such statement.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. We all know that when in Opposition, we laid down certain principles regarding the expenditure of public money; and when we get into power and are asked to do the very thing that we then condemned, I for one am not prepared to justify such expenditure. That is not the only evidence of this kind we have in the Estimates. We have a number of similar votes that cannot be justified. Take, for instance, the little village represented by my hon. friend who sits behind me, Montmagny (Mr. Choquette). He has obtained a vote for $7,500 for the erection of a post office. What do you suppose the revenue of that office amounts to. There is no custom-house there. It is stated by men who live in that section that the principal industry there is a saw-mill, and that when all the pine is cut up there will be no village left. The total revenue of the post office is $1,731, and the salaries $639.93, leaving a net revenue of $1,091.07. The population in the village is 1,697. Then my hon. friend on the front benches (Mr. Beau-soleil) has another post office grant for a town of about the same size and whose revenue is about the same. I for one, who have been a Liberal all my life, and shall continue to be a Liberal, if the Liberals carry out in office what they professed in Opposition, cannot justify this expenditure. I say that we have no right to follow in the footsteps of our predecessors when they did wrong, and I for one must condemn the Government in this matter.

Mr. SOMERVILLE.

Mr. LISTER. My hon. friend, in his heated declamation, thought proper to refer to me as supporting the item now under consideration. I desire to say to the hon. gentleman that I said explicitly that the position I took in Opposition I take now, and I remind my hon. friend that whenever the question of post offices came before the House, when in Opposition, I attempted to point out to the Government the claims of the town I come from. I pointed out its claims session after session, I named the different towns that yielded to the Government far less, in many cases not one half and in others not a quarter of the revenue derived from the customs and post office at Sarnia, and I appealed to the late Government on all the grounds of justice and fairness that Strathroy, and other places through Ontario were entitled to those public buildings. Sarnia certainly was entitled to them. I urged the Government on behalf of the towns I come from and of Woodstock and Ingersoll and other places which gave larger revenues to the Government. I said you should first erect public buildings in these places which justify the expenditure on the ground of population and revenue. I have always held that the Government are bound to erect public buildings in the larger towns, and that it was manifestly partisan and unfair that the Government should have erected these buildings in small places, simply because these smaller places had representatives here supporting the Government, and have overlooked the large places. That was the line of argument I took then, and it is the same I take now. The late Government, by their policy, distributed favours throughout the lower provinces and Ontario, and it does seem hard that places of equal importance, which are supporting the present Government should not now be treated in the same way. I say now that the Government should lay down the hard and fast rule that public buildings should only be erected where the minimum population was a certain number and the revenue from their public offices amounted to a fixed minimum sum. If that principle were adopted, now and for all time, this wretched question of erecting public buildings in places where their erection cannot be justified by the revenue, would be at an end. Now that nearly all the large towns of Ontario are satisfied because they have public buildings, the next raid on the treasury will be, not from the county towns, but from the large outside towns, with populations of from three to four thousand. They will point out to their representatives that if such and such a place got a building they are entitled to one, and they will unite their forces and compel the Government to grant their demands. The only way that this can be gotten rid of is, as I stated a moment ago, to lay down a principle upon which public buildings should be erected and not depart from it, and I believe that the sound principle is population and revenue to the Government.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. As this is as good an opportunity as will probably be afforded me, I wish to say a few words in regard to the Montmagny post office. I am sorry that my hon. friend (Mr. Somerville) who sits before me, should repeat facts that have been stated in my presence as a joke.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I beg to correct the hon. gentleman (Mr. Choquette). The facts I gave were taken from the blue-books, the census returns and the official report of the post office.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Part of the facts are taken from those sources—

Mr. SOMERVILLE. All the facts I stated.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. The hon. gentleman takes the population of the town of Montmagny alone, which is 1,600. But he must remember that we have only one post office not only for the town of Montmagny but also for the parish of St. Thomas. There is only one parish—only one church—and the town and the parish have a population of about 5,000. You take the census of the town of Montmagny and the parish of St. Thomas and you find the population is about 4,607; the population of the parish of St. Thomas, which is also served by this post office is about 3,000. More than that, Montmagny post office is also the centre of distribution for the Grosse Isle quarantine station, and for Crane Island and, in all, has a population of about 6,000. In 1885, there was a requisition sent by the town council to the Government and presented by the member for the county at that time, the present Senator Landry, setting forth the need for this building. And to show that this is not a political question, I will state some further facts. I have been asking for this post office ever since I came to Parliament. This post office was promised by the late Government and by Mr. Landry. In 1882, I was defeated by Mr. Landry, the then Tory candidate. Mr. Landry promised this post office, and the post office was an important factor in the election. In 1885, being then a town councillor, even though I knew that it would help my opponent, Mr. Landry, and give him strength in the county, I myself seconded a resolution in the council which was carried, asking the Government to build this post office as they had promised, and this was transmitted by Mr. Landry to the Minister of Public Works, then Sir Hector Langevin, in a letter dated the 16th March, 1885, and before the general election of 1887. This letter was as follows:—

I have the honour to transmit to you a request from the City Council of Montmagny, asking for the erection of a post office at Montmagny, and offering to the Government the site necessary.

Let me reiterate my demand just as I made it in my last letter on the subject of that post office, that the foundations be laid this year. That is all we ask. From $2,000 to $3,000 will be sufficient for this year. Hoping to succeed in obtaining at least this sum of money for the county of Montmagny.

(Sgd.) P. LANDRY.

In the election of 1887 this same question came before the people. Mr. Landry told the people: The Government will be returned to power, and if you elect a supporter for them, you will be all the more likely to get the post office. So I gave a pledge then to support the Government on this question. I said: If the Tory Government is returned, and willing to carry out its promises to put a sum in the Estimates to build the post office, I pledge myself to support the Government in that matter. And I did so. Every year I asked the Government to fulfil its promises; and when the question of the post office at Laprairie was up—they spent $20,000 for a building in a place that gave a revenue of not more than $500—I asked the Government to redeem their promises and promised them my support in doing so. All this shows that this is not a political question; it shows that this is a question of honour, for me, a question of honour for the Tory party, to support the proposal which they favoured for fifteen years and on which they fought two elections. Now I come here to ask the Government to redeem the pledge they made to the electors, to redeem the promises that the Tory Government made to the electors. I ask only for $7,500, a very small sum, because I do not hold that we need a great or splendid building there but only such a building as is necessary to carry on the business of the post office in the county. I may explain that at the time that these promises were made, we had no custom-house, though the merchants and importers in my riding had very often asked that one be established. We have done our customs business in Quebec. Only a few days ago I received a petition signed by Senator Price—who is a good Tory—and a great many others, asking to have a custom-house established. Now, last year what was the revenue of the post office at Montmagny? It was $1,723.19, and the expenses $699.33, leaving a balance of $1,043.86. So we have been giving to the Government for twenty years a net income of over a thousand dollars. I think that, under these circumstances, the Government is quite justified in putting in the Estimates this small sum to redeem the promise made by both parties in the county, a promise made by both Governments.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I would ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Choquette) if the building that it is proposed to have there is not already erected?

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I am glad to have that question put, and to give an explanation with regard to the matter. Mr. Landry, the ex-member for the riding, in 1886, to show that the Government was willing to have a post office there, induced one of his friends to put up a big stone building costing about $10,000. The object of putting up the building was that the Tories could say: You see the building is already being put up and the Government will buy it. I was very glad of that, and I was willing to give the Government my support in doing it. But after Mr. Landry was defeated, he refused to ask the Government to buy the building. The man who was induced to put up a building had to borrow money from the Quebec Seminary. He borrowed $7,000. But he went away to the States. He was a good Tory, good enough to get credit with Mr. Landry and the farmers, and he stole about $30,000 or $40,000 from the farmers in his transactions in cheese and butter and went away to the States.

The Quebec Seminary has a building there, and they have asked me and some of our friends opposite to induce the Government to buy that building, and they are willing to sell it for thousands less than it cost them. If the Government think best in the country's interest and in order to save money, to buy that building, I am willing to support them in it.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I believe this is a private residence.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. It may be used so now, it was erected as a public building.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Was it not built for a creamery?

Mr. CHOQUETTE. No: It was built to serve as a post office. It is a three-story stone building, with heating apparatus, a very good building, and if the Government are willing to buy it at a low price, considerably under the cost price, I am in favour of it.

Mr. TAYLOR. Are the Quebec Seminary the owners of the building?

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Yes, and always have been.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is under mortgage.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. No, they have a clear title to it, they bought it from the sheriff, and they had to disburse some more money to get it.

Mr. COCHRANE. What did they pay for it?

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I do not remember, but I think the mortgage was over $8,000.

Mr. KAULBACH. While I have the honour of a seat in this House, I am desirous of seeing even-handed justice dealt out to all, a public building for Kentville, county King's, and Liverpool, county Queen's, N.S., not excepted, the matter now before the House. I am acquainted with the town of Kentville as well as any one in the House; it is in a county adjoining my own county; is a shire town, and I do not know of any town that is more entitled to a post office than this town; and I feel that in justice to the inhabitants of Kentville they should have one. The town of Liverpool is also in the county adjoining mine, which has no railway. True there is a road projected in North Queen's, but is not built. I hope it will be built in the near future or it will be a disappointment to the expectants. It is a progressive town, and a town that is well deserving of a post office, more so, I think, than some places where post offices have been built. Therefore, I feel that, in justice to these two places, they are entitled to the grants that are now asked for.

Mr. SPROULE. I have been listening to this debate with a great deal of interest, and watching the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Paterson). I noticed that he was sleeping away his day of grace under the sunshine of the new gospel of the Minister of Public Works, and not saying a word about the important town of Owen Sound which he represents and which the Hon. Mr. Hardy said was going to get more than cold justice provided the hon. member was elected. This gentleman drew a distinction between cold justice and ordinary justice, and they would get the former if they elected the hon. member for North Grey's opponent. Well, they elected the hon. gentleman who tries to get more for them than cold justice, and I regret the Government have not seen fit to put in an item for a post office there, because Owen Sound is a live town, it is the county town of our county, having over 9,000 inhabitants, and they have no post office building. If the rule holds good that the Minister of Public Works has laid down for the building of post offices, I shall put in a claim for two or three post offices in our county. We have the town of Thornbury which has none, Meaford has none, Owen Sound has none. These are large and important lake towns. Up to the present time I have never asked the Government to build post offices in any of these towns, because I always held that when the service of the country could be carried on in buildings, the rent of which would cost less than the interest on the amount of money necessary to erect new buildings, it was better to continue to rent the buildings, and I think so still. But if this principle is to prevail which the Minister of Public Works has laid down then I shall, after awhile, endeavour to get more post offices in our part of the country.

Mr. COCHRANE. I have never objected to the expenditure of money, no matter in what part of this Dominion, if I thought it was justifiable. But it is strange to me that the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) should take the ground that the doctrine he preached when he was in Opposition is all right now because the parties have changed places.

Mr. LISTER. I have not taken any such ground.

Mr. COCHRANE. But you have voted for it like a little man. Now, I do not object to the expenditure of money in post offices, and never did; what I object to is hon. gentlemen finding fault with us when they were in Opposition for doing what they called iniquitous things in the erection of post offices—for that is what we were arraigned for in the country, and a good many members supporting the present Government are sitting there in consequence of the fact that these paltry questions were raised and they got in under false pretenses; and now when we challenge members supporting the Government for doing what they condemned us for doing, all they say is, you're another, you did the same thing. The hon. gentlemen opposite only got into power on a fluke anyway, it was because they condemned us for doing just such things as they do now, and which they justify themselves in doing by saying we did the same. That is no argument at all. If it was wrong in the Conservative party to put up post offices in these small villages, it is doubly wrong for the present Government to do it, because they condemned it so strongly when in Opposition. Public men may make a mistake and be perfectly conscientious in doing it; but the Opposition is not justified, when we point out that mistake, in attempting to justify it because we did it. I do not say but that my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) is quite right, and that these post offices should be built down in his province that the leader of the Government said was the home of boodlers. If that is a fact, the boodlers are not all dead yet, we have got some of them in the Cabinet, because they have been boodling by building post offices in little villages all through the maritime provinces. But that is no reason why these boodlers should not die, and that we should not be quit of them. The leader of the House may well say to these men: "Get thee behind me, Satan, thou art an offence unto me."

Mr. McMULLEN. In the year 1890 there was a unanimous resolution passed by this House, accepted by Sir John A. Macdonald, leader of the Government at the time, that public buildings should only be constructed where the revenues of the country warranted it. That resolution was agreed to without a dissenting voice. Unfortunately, the hon. gentlemen opposite did not carry out that resolution. If they had stuck to that principle until now, I question very much if we would have before us the items which we are now discussing. I may say that, for my part, I take strong exception to the expenditure of public money for buildings where the revenues do not warrant it; and in this case I take my stand that such an expenditure is wrong. I consider that no public building should be erected in a place until the population becomes considerable, and the revenue received at such points justifies their construction. Now, with regard to county towns, I admit there is a certain force in the argument that county towns, occupying a prominent position of that kind, should receive perhaps a little consideration. You can never lay down a hard and fast rule that can be carried out. It would cease to be a rule if it had not an exception. The rule should be that public buildings should only be put in places such, for instance, as Sarnia, represented by my hon. friend (Mr. Lister). I say that in my humble opinion it was a gross wrong to that section of the country that a post office was not erected there. But if there is any place that stands out more prominently than the rest as a place where a positive, barefaced wrong was perpetrated, in the matter of the erection of public buildings, that place was Woodstock. There is a live town in which the receipts are something like $15,000 or $16,000 from the post office alone, besides which there is a very large customs revenue. Notwithstanding the fact that, year after year, post offices have been built in such places as Marysville and other miserable little towns up and down the country. Woodstock did not get a public building simply because it sent a representative here in opposition to the late Government and also because it elected a leading spirit in the local legislature. I contend that hon. gentlemen opposite, in this, perpetrated a barefaced wrong, and it is not much wonder that people became exasperated with them. In 1890 a resolution was moved by the Hon. David Mills, accepted by Sir John Macdonald and unanimously approved by the House, declaring that public buildings should only be erected where the revenue warranted it and where the receipts of the current year gave some balance to the credit of the country which might be invested in public buildings. I say we should get back to that rule at once.

Mr. TAYLOR. That rule was never violated.

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes, it was violated in several cases. It was violated in the case of Cayuga and in the case of Marysville. In this latter case there was a barefaced violation of the rule. It was also violated in other places where buildings had been put up. If that rule had been adhered to we would possibly not have had before us items which we have now to consider.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) does not want to misrepresent the facts.

Mr. McMULLEN. Let the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) take his seat.

Mr. TAYLOR. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) has made the statement that this resolution was violated in the case of Cayuga.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. I think the hon. gentleman should not rise to such a point of order as that.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is very well known that this rule has been violated in the case of several places.

Mr. TAYLOR. Not in Cayuga, though.

Mr. McMULLEN. I give hon. gentlemen opposite credit for discussing these points. We upon this side of the House challenged these expenditures when in Opposition and I should like now that the House should re-adopt the principle, adopted in 1890, that public buildings shall only be erected in places where the revenue and the population warrants it, and I would only say to the members of the Cabinet that if ever any proposition is made to violate that principle I shall undoubtedly support a motion to condemn it. I say that we should adhere strictly to that principle.

Mr. BAIN. Before this resolution is adopted I want to say one word. I have listened to the discussion of every question as my hon. friends on this side of the House have, night after night, in former years, when we were in opposition, and I confess that my hon. friend for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) expressed my sentiments exactly. There is no pretense that in the smaller towns postal accommodation where it is furnished by rental or in any other mode, has been any detriment to the service or to the accommodation of the public, and I have to say this emphatically that if the Government want to avoid for themselves a great deal of trouble with their supporters in the future, they had better adopt the principle of avoiding spending public money in smaller places. I do not care whether you call it a county town or anything else. In my town we collect some $15,000 in customs, and our postal receipts are about $3,700 or $3,800. Some years ago we rented a post office there, and the Government spent a couple of thousand dollars in fitting it up. But suppose we had spent $10,000 or $12,000 in erecting a public building, you will get by that no better accommodation than we have to-day, and I do say as a question of principle, that there is no justification for simply spending public money to decorate a town with a building because it looks nice. As my hon. friend for East Simcoe says, we have the wear and tear of a large investment and we have to pay a caretaker for the building. I do think the sooner we adopt the principle of cutting off the erection of public buildings in the smaller places the better it will be for the Government. It will save them a great deal of trouble from their supporters who are perpetually asking them to do things they should not do, and it will save large investments of money that are yielding no return to the country. I presume none of us wish to spend money simply for the purpose of spending it, and I hope we shall not have private members saying that because a railway has not been bonused through their county therefore we should spend money which gives us no practical return. We are all anxious to secure nice public buildings, but it is possible to buy gold too dearly. If this Government are to justify to the public their existence as administrators of public affairs, they do not want to do exactly as their predecessors did for there is no use of calling a Government by a new name and going on in the grooves that has been pursued in the past. I think we owe that much to ourselves, to the Government and to the public, and I do say emphatically that in this matter the very fact of the bitter discussions that have taken place, night after night in former years, in this House, did deter the late Government, in the later years of their administration, from expenditures that otherwise would have been thrust upon them by their own friends. I think hon. gentlemen opposite will bear out what I am saying, that it is exceedingly hard to refuse the applications of your own friends, of the men who have stood by you in the House, and I say that we ought to adopt the principle of cutting off these expenditures, in the smaller places, even if it does offend some of our friends.

Mr. FOSTER. This debate is valuable for two reasons, and I want to call the attention of the committee to them before the item is passed. Now, I am going to make a frank confession. Too much money has been spent on public buildings in the past, just for the sake of gratifying the pride of those places which desired to have public buildings. I acknowledge that that has been done. Before 1890 we were very sharply criticised by the Opposition in the House and by the papers outside. That was the position laid down then by the Opposition and the one which they considered it proper to adopt. They made a motion; Sir John Macdonald accepted it, and the House agreed to it. It passed without any vote at all. That laid down precisely what the feeling of the Opposition was, the principle, in reference to these expenditures, and it was acquiesced by the Government of the day that that principle was a correct one. Taking into account all the pressure which was placed upon the Government. I take occasion to say that if you look through the list of post offices and public buildings, erected since that year, you will find that with the exceptions of those which had been started before for which a vote had been asked, the rule was adhered to.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I rather think that Marysville came under that head.

Mr. FOSTER. It had been in the Estimates, then left out for a year or two and put in again. I think you will find, however, that with one or two exceptions, not more than one, that the late Government did not put up any new public buildings against that rule after 1891. We acknowledge that that was a salutary rule. Those that were started, and had the land bought for them, or the like of that, we felt we ought to carry through, and if there were one or two cases outside of that rule, it was the maximum. But no one in the Opposition at that time doubted that it was the correct principle. Not a single man doubted but that when the Opposition came into power they would carry out that rule, and they criticised us since 1890 because in the case even of post offices which were in process of construction in small places, we continued the building. Now, only three supporters of the Government have made protests with reference to this. I do not think that in these very small places it is in the public interest that we ought to invest a lot of public money for which we get no return whatever.

But the grave thing that I want to call the attention of the House to is the proposition and the principle advocated by the present Minister of Finance, who sits upon the public chest, and who holds the purse-strings of the country. If ever there was a plea, open and unabashed, for the expenditure of public money on other than public grounds, it was made by the hon. gentleman who to-day is the Finance Minister of this Dominion. What was it? He justified this vote on the very ground on which we were trenchantly criticised for granting this expenditure on a previous occasion, and which they called favouritism. When a town or a county which has not had large expenditures, and which comes to the Government and says: You have not given us this and you have not given us that, and you have given it to other places; give us something now; they propose to accede to the request without reference to the principle as to whether the something they ask is a fair expenditure and in the public interest. Now, what were the reasons given by the Finance Minister, and it is grave and important to consider it under the present circumstances. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) was disposed to joke at it very jauntily, and when the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Somerville) raised his protest, he thought it would be like the protest that the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) occasionally enters, and that there would be no persistence in it, and so the Minister in a light and airy and jocular strain gave an answer to my hon. friend (Mr. Somerville) which did not satisfy him. But a grave answer was given by the Minister of Finance. His three points were these: First, these little towns have been left out in the cold by the wicked Tory Government, let us give them a little fire to warm themselves with, no matter whether it is on just grounds they ask it or not. What was the other reason? It was that these little places had not received public money in the way of railroad grants, and consequently they must have their share out of the public till, and so the Minister of Finance said: Give them this whether it is necessary or not. When the Minister (Mr. Fielding) came down to analyse Kentville, he found that it is on the main line of railway, and has branch lines as well. And when he came to the little town of Liverpool, which is growing smaller, and with no great future before it, unless something takes place which has not taken place within the last fifty years; he makes the argument that because it is a county town his Government should spend $12,000 in it, although there is not much more than 1,200 of a population in the place.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. More than double that.

Mr. FOSTER. The census does not show it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The census says 2,465.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well, a little town of 2,400 is to have expended in it $12,000 or $15,000, just for the sake of giving it a little distribution of the public money. Now, that is the vicious principle that hon. gentlemen opposite thought was so detrimental, and they fought it so determinedly that it had its effect, and that in 1891 Sir John Macdonald admitted the principle laid down in the resolution, and from 1891 on there had been very few evasions of that principle. I call the attention of the House to this: that the Liberal party laid down their principle in 1891, and fought consistently on it in Opposition, until it came to their first year of power, and now they have the Minister of Finance and Minister of Public Works tell them: Oh, this was only Opposition talk, we must give these little places their sop, for they have been out in the cold so long. The other principle laid down by the Minister of Finance was: You are to spend public money just for the sake of gratifying the people and not for the public good. If that is not the principle to be laid down, then I cannot see any other principle underlying it at all.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I must not allow the hon. member (Mr. Foster) to state the principle I laid down in the manner he has. In the first place, I deny that any wrong would be done to the public service of Canada, if, having entered on the policy of erecting public buildings throughout Canada, you erect a public building proportionate to the size and extent of the town. If you put one public building in every county in the Dominion of Canada I deny that any great wrong is done. I say that the people of the various sections of the Dominion have a right to feel that they are sharing in the expenditure of public moneys, which we presume are always expended in the public good. And though the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) says it is a violation of principle, I say it appeals to our reason and common sense that if there is a county in any part of the Dominion which is contributing of its means to every public work that is going on, and has nothing to show as its share of these things, it is a natural and reasonable thing that they should desire that some of this distribution should come to them. If that distribution comes in the way of wasteful public work, I would not for a moment defend it, but I say, if the town—if the county, because I am speaking of the county rather than the town—if the county should apply that in its shire town a public building should be put up, and if that building be of a modest character, with due regard to the condition of the town and its business, I deny that there is a violation of principle or a waste of public money in meeting the request of the people. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) may say that it is the assertion of a vicious principle, but I say it is the assertion of something that is so near to human nature and common sense that the people of the whole Dominion of Canada will say that it is reasonable that the several sections of each province and the several sections of the Dominion shall share fairly in the public expenditure. Of course, you might apply the rule in such a way as to cause wasteful expenditure, for you might put in a small town a large building out of all proportion to its needs. Let us see how the principle was applied by the Conservative Government in the province of Nova Scotia. In the town of Annapolis, which according to the census has only 959 of a population—I think my hon. friend (Mr. Mills) will say that return is hardly just, because I believe Annapolis has a larger population—in that town with 959 of a population according to the census, the Conservative Government put up a building costing $14,000. I also find that in the town of Baddeck, with only 1,200 of a population, they spent $14,000 on a public building. Now, is it not natural and reasonable, when many of the counties in Nova Scotia have been supplied with buildings of that character, is it not natural that the people in the other counties should look for some consideration when they present their claims.

Mr. COCHRANE. It is not fair and reasonable for you to give it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I fancy my hon. friend (Mr. Cochrane) has some public buildings in his county.

Mr. COCHRANE. No.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I venture to say that if my hon. friend had no public works of any kind in his county he would not be prepared to take the broad and generous view he does. I have to speak as the representative of the people who have no share in the favours of the Government in the past and which hon. gentlemen opposite shared in. Though you may call it a narrow view, it is a very human view, and it is not inconsistent with the best interests of the country if it should result, as I said, in giving every county in the Dominion one public building. But I say that if you multiply these buildings, and put them up in small places, you may overdo the business. I ask hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House to put themselves in the position of members who represent Liberal counties, and who have for years seen the Conservative Government go on the principle of erecting $14,000 buildings in towns of 900 population, and I ask them: Is it not natural that a desire should exist in the other counties of the province to have buildings.

Mr. BERGERON. But you protested against that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am informed that in the province of Ontario almost every county town to-day has a public building, with the exception of very few.

Mr. COCHRANE. Not at all.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am informed so, and I give the information as it came to me.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I beg to inform the hon. gentleman that there never was a building put up by the late Government in a county represented by a Liberal.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no doubt that consideration has always had some influence, and we are all human. But, I ask, is it not reasonable, after you have given public buildings to two-thirds of the counties of a province, that we should give a public building to such places as those mentioned to-day, provided that it is a modest one, and that there is in no sense extravagance or waste of public money.

Mr. HENDERSON. The last speaker stated, I believe, that no public buildings had been erected by the late Government in counties represented by Liberals. We must remember, however, that when the Liberals were formerly in power, they saw that their friends were provided for. For example, in the city of Guelph, in the county of Wellington, they erected a large post office in a constituency then represented by a Liberal, but now represented by an hon. member sitting on this side of the House. In the county of Peel there is a large public building, which was built by the late Government. That county is now represented by a gentleman supporting the Government. I am glad the hon. member for North Brant (Mr. Somerville) has raised this question, for I think it is time the Government announced some fixed policy to govern them in this matter. They have no policy whatever, except the policy announced by the Minister of Public Works, that he was just going to pursue such a course as public policy dictated, and you know what that means; it means that he is going to pursue the policy which was condemned by hon. gentlemen opposite when they were sitting on this side of the House—a policy of suiting and pleasing his own friends. I do not think it can be wise for hon. gentlemen who have condemned that policy to continue to carry it out. I think the hon. member for North Brant is perfectly right in condemning a continuance of that policy. In almost every riding in this Dominion, at least in the older provinces, there are four or five considerable towns or villages. I would not object to a county or shire town having a little more expensive building; but I do object to and I always have opposed, the expenditure of very large sums for the erection of post offices. I do not believe in expending $20,000 or $30,000 for the erection of a post office in any place that is not a city.

THE MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Has the hon. gentleman under his hand at present the page of "Hansard" on which he recorded his objection to such expenditures? I have been in this House for a long time, and I do not remember hearing him make any very distinct protest.

MR. HENDERSON. The hon. gentleman may be quite correct in what he says. I did not say that I made that statement in this House. I advocated it in the country, and I held that opinion. So far as my own county is concerned, I never asked the late Government to expend a large sum in erecting a public building there, though I had a right to do so. Consequently, the statement I made is correct. My plan is to take, say five incorporated towns and villages in a county, and, instead of spending $30,000 for the erection of a large public building in one town, divide that into five amounts of $6,000 each, and erect a building in each of the five places. I know something of what buildings can be erected for in Ontario at present. Labour and material are cheap, and a most substantial building, large enough not only for a post office, but for a residence for the postmaster, can be built, with the site included, for $6,000.

THE MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, for less than that.

MR. HENDERSON. I can safely put it at $6,000. For that sum you could have a very good building, almost fireproof. At any rate, you could have in it a vault for the protection of registered letters and other valuable property passing through the mails. Instead of spending $30,000 on one building, let us have five for the same amount. Then you would save the rents paid by the Government, and an hon. gentleman reminds me that you would save the cost of a caretaker, amounting to $400 or $500 a year. If we are going to run the country economically, we must get away from the idea of these large expenditures, and adopt a policy suitable to the requirements of the country. I think the hon. member for North Brant has done well to draw the attention of the Government to the mistake they are making in erecting post offices or public buildings in small towns such as that referred to in Montmagny and in other counties, where it is the intention of the Government to erect buildings. For my part, I shall be happy to endorse them in adopting a policy such as I propose, and I am quite sure the country will endorse them. But I think the country will condemn them if they continue to spend large sums of money in erecting expensive post offices and public buildings throughout the country.

MR. SPROULE. I would like to say a few words with regard to the principle laid down by the hon. Minister of Finance, which I consider, and which I think the country will consider, a very bad one; that is, that certain towns, because they have had no public money spent in them, are entitled to have public money spent, whether it is needed or not. The country will concur in the wisdom of spending public money where it is needed to be spent to carry on the operations of the people; but the country will not justify either the present Government or any other Government in spending public money in any locality just because no public money has been spent there before. I think that is a very unsound principle. I want to say a word in regard to the statement by the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister), that constituencies represented by Conservatives were generally supplied by the late Government with post offices. Let me call his attention to the fact that in South Simcoe, which has always been represented by a Conservative, there is not a post office or any other public building built by the Government.

Mr. LISTER. Is the county town in it?

Mr. SPROULE. Not the county town, but there is a town in it. Then take East Grey.

Mr. LISTER. Is there a county town in that?

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman did not say anything about county towns. He said in constituencies represented by Conservatives.

Mr. LISTER. How large a town is in it?

Mr. SPROULE. Between two and three thousand inhabitants.

Mr. LISTER. What is the name?

Mr. SPROULE. Meaford.

Mr. LISTER. That is simply a village.

Mr. SPROULE. That was represented by a Conservative, and has been for a great many years. Take North Grey, which has been represented generally by a Conservative and which has a county town of over 9,000 inhabitants, and yet it has not had a post office erected there. If the hon. gentleman thinks that the constituencies represented by the Conservatives were all supplied, he could not have been well informed.

Mr. LISTER. Is it not a fact that the late Government promised to put up a public building in Owen Sound?

Mr. SPROULE. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. LISTER. It was in the Estimates of last year of the late Government.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not aware of it. I am replying to the argument advanced by my hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Lister) that the counties represented by Conservatives had all been supplied with public buildings and that it was only right we should extend the same treatment to those represented by Liberals. Take the town of South Grey, the town of Durham is a very important town, sufficiently so to have a post office built in it by the late Government.

Mr. LANDERKIN. And it shall now.

Mr. SPROULE. It shall now if the hon. gentleman has sufficient influence with the Government.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Perhaps if you will conclude, I will get one built at Markdale.

Mr. SPROULE. On that principle there are many places that ought to have had post offices. I hold that it is clearly wrong.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You will hold on until half-past six.

It being Six o'clock, the committee rose for recess.

After Recess.

Mr. SPROULE. When you left the Chair, Mr. Chairman, I was replying to the argument advanced from the other side that constituencies represented by Conservatives were all supplied with post offices, and I think I have shown that that was not the case. I mentioned the two ridings of East Grey and North Grey and also South Simcoe. I would now mention Cardwell as being a constituency which has been represented by Conservatives for a long time and which has no public buildings. I might also take West York and East York and many others on the same list. I cite these places to show that constituencies represented by Conservatives were not better treated in this respect than other places.

Mr. McALISTER. I agree entirely with what has been said by the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) as to the advisability of our laying down some principle on which the different constituencies, in need of public buildings, should be supplied with them—some principle as to the minimum population and business done in a town before any public money is spent on public buildings there. The hon. Minister of Finance this afternoon referred to Liverpool as one of the places entitled to a public building. I am not in a position to say that Liverpool is not entitled to one, but I see a number of grants in the Supplementary Estimates for public buildings in places that are smaller than the town of Campbellton in the county I have the honour to represent. Take Liverpool in the county of Queen's and Shelburne, which has been mentioned by the hon. Finance Minister. The total revenue from the post office there is $2,085.14, and the total amount of post office orders issued is $21,212.77. Take Montmagny, which is to get a public building, the gross receipts in the post office there are $1,743.19, and the total amount of money orders issued is $8,623.40. Compare those with the town of Campbellton, where the population is in the vicinity of 3,000 and where the gross revenue from the post office last year was $3,146.56, and the total amount of money orders issued $31,826.77. If such places as Liverpool and Montmagny are entitled to a public building, certainly Campbellton is, because it is a larger place and gives a larger revenue from its post office. It has been said that places represented by Liberals during the Conservative administration were neglected and places represented by Conservatives were favoured. Well, Restigouche has been represented by a Conservative continually since 1882, and the town of Campbellton is still without a public building. I applied for a grant for a public building there on several occasions from 1891 to 1896, when the late Government was in power, and the answer I always received was that the Government had decided not to spend any more money on public buildings in places of that sort, and therefore I did not waste my time. I bring this matter up merely to show that while grants are being made to smaller places than Campbellton, where the post office business is much less, Campbellton is still without any such grant. In fairness to that town it should be given a public building, if these other smaller places are to be thus favoured.

Mr. SEMPLE. I must say that I fully endorse the remarks made by the hon. member for North Brant (Mr. Somerville). I have been a member of this House for a considerable length of time, and, therefore, have some experience in opposition, and I know how strongly Liberal members then denounced such grants, and it seems to me that a change of place should not make a change of our principles. There are a number of members present who were not in this House when we had these discussions. The hon. Minister of Finance certainly was not. It is an unfortunate thing that such items as expenditure of money for building small local post offices should be found in the Estimates. The Liberal members have followed the Government on important questions involving large expenditures: because we have had faith in their judgment and have looked to the future for results. But in a case of this kind, no such thing can be said, and expenditures of this kind are contrary to what we have professed in the past while in opposition. I hope that even yet the hon. gentleman will withdraw the Estimates for these small post offices. In the province of Ontario, a great number of counties have never received a single dollar from the Dominion Government, and many of them have received nothing from the local government. But they have taxed themselves to help on the construction of their own railways and other necessary public works. I believe also that under the late Government there were a great number of Conservative members who had large towns in their counties and did not ask for these expenditures. Only in some cases were such expenditures asked and received, and where these expenditures were made, we remonstrated because we believed that the expenditure was not in the best interests of the country. Once let it be understood that a county is given the benefit of an expenditure of this kind simply because no other public expenditures have been made within its bounds, and every place will be at once looking for something. Centre Wellington has never received anything from the Government of much value.

It is true that a post office was built in the town of Orangeville, which is in Dufferin county, and in my county. That post office cost from $20,000 to $25,000, and there is now a caretaker who receives $400 a year. In the care and maintenance of these buildings a great deal of expense is involved, and if you multiply these all over the country, the public expenditures will be increased enormously.

Mr. HAGGART. I desire to make a few remarks in support of the position taken by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). Time, with its many changes, brings its revenges. I remember well the time when I used pretty nearly the same arguments in support of these works of a partially local character. I said that there were sections in which expenditure of public money on great public works like the Canadian Pacific Railway and others had been of no benefit, more than they would have gained from building a railway in Great Britain, and which had not received any grant since confederation, while, all the time, they had been paying their share towards the expense of the country. I gave that as a reason why it would be perfectly justifiable to make an expenditure of public money in such places. The Finance Minister states that in this particular place they have received no subsidies for railways, nor have they any public works built in their locality. It is quite natural to expect, as the Minister of Finance says, that the people of these localities should be dissatisfied at being called upon to contribute their share to immense expenditures in other parts of the country, while no expenditure takes place in their own locality. In some places, under these circumstances, I contend that an expenditure is perfectly justified. That is a principle upon which the late Government justified many subsidies for railways, perhaps of a provincial or purely local character. Another ground of justification was that we were receiving money in excess of the requirements of the country, and there was no better way in which it could be returned to the localities. On these grounds, we held that expenditure would be justified. But I was met with the unanimous opposition of the gentlemen who were then on this side of the House, and their press ridiculed the arguments used by the then Minister of Railways in support of his contention. But I persevered in what I held to be sound policy. I am still of the same opinion, and so I think that the hon. Minister of Finance was perfectly justified in the remarks he made in defence of a small grant for an expenditure in a section of the country which, in reality, never received any grant of public money. But what becomes of the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite? What part of that policy is left to them? Their demand for the control of public expenditure has vanished; their opposition to the granting of subsidies to railways is vanished, and as to their plea for retrenchment and economy of expenditure, why, we have Estimates before us in excess of any that have ever before been presented to Parliament. I thought, perhaps, that this one little principle opposed to the arguments I used in regard to the public expenditure in localities might still be retained. But this also they have dropped altogether, and they have adopted, holus bolus, the policy of the Government they have succeeded.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am not surprised that the Estimates exceed those of former years. This Government, unfortunately, is paying off legacies left by the preceding Government. Every page of the Estimates, almost every item, bears evidence of this fact.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the use of a change?

Mr. LANDERKIN. We changed you a year ago to-day, on the 23rd of June.

Mr. BERGERON. But what was the use?

Mr. LANDERKIN. As soon as we get these old debts paid off, incurred by the late Government, we will be able to initiate and carry out a policy that will be far more economic than that shown at this time.

Mr. BERGERON. That will not be believed; you cannot do that twice.

Mr. LANDERKIN. We cannot repudiate these obligations, for repudiation is no part of the Liberal policy. If any one will take the trouble to look through the Estimates, he will see how many millions of dollars there proposed have been incurred by the former Administration.

An hon. MEMBER. The Drummond Railway.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Drummond, yes; incurred by the former Administration, initiated by the late Administration at double the amount that will be incurred by the present Government. But they had not the nerve to carry out a measure that was calculated to give benefit not only to the province through which it passes, but to the western provinces as well. This will open up a highway to the west through the province of Ontario, and will furnish better railway communication and a better return for the money we have invested in the Intercolonial Railway. Now, to refer again to what the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) had said, this country has reason to rejoice over and celebrate this day because it is just as important an event as we celebrated yesterday, because a year ago to-day we put a Government out of power that has incurred heavy responsibilities, contracted enormous debts and followed a policy that brought about disaster. In fact, when they went out of power the people had scarcely anything left but their souls. That Government had spent the people's money, bankrupted the country and left it in such a deplorable state that the incoming Government will be burdened with its debts for many years. The Kentville post office is one of the obligations that were entered into by the late Government. If I remember rightly, and I think I do because we discussed that on one or two occasions, it was placed in the Estimates just before an election; and the then Government was obliged to build this post office, but they dilly dallied with it from time to time, and if this Government puts it in the Estimates it is because the faith of the Crown was pledged to it. There may be other places more deserving, I have no doubt if you look through the country there are. But I have an idea that this Government will stand to the policy that was laid down, that public buildings should be erected only where the public interest demands it and requires them. This Government has been carrying out this session the platform of the Liberal party; there is no part of their policy that they have scattered to the winds, as has been stated by the hon. member who has just taken his seat. This Government is obliged to redeem the obligations that have been incurred by the Conservative Government, and no doubt it will take a long time to get out of the slough into which they plunged this country during the past years.

Mr. DUPONT. You are not serious.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The country took you seriously and kicked you out a year ago to-day. The people were serious then, and I do not see why our hon. friends opposite won't adjust themselves to the position in which they find themselves by reason of the votes of the people of this country. Why don't they try to adapt themselves to it? During this session they have been doing nothing but crying like children who have been robbed of something; they are not happy, they are not contented. When we were on that side we gave them an example of chivalry and unity which it would be well for them to follow. We never asked them for post offices, we never asked them for public buildings. In fact I did not know where the departments were in these blocks. I never asked them for anything. But now we find hon. gentlemen opposite are continuously asking for things, wanting things, insisting upon things. Why, I never went to a department. I never was inside the Finance Department, I never tried to get my hand into the public chest. I wanted no favours, I asked for nothing for my riding, I was satisfied to abide by results. I scarcely know where the departments are now. I am an independent representative, I ask for nothing. I only ask that the Government should administer the affairs of this country honestly and justly; if they want my support they can have it on no other terms. I am quite satisfied that it is their intention to do so. The character of the men give me the strongest belief that they will so administer the affairs of this country, and I have no fear for the result when we have a Government such as the present. The members of this Government are pledged to the strictest economy, and I believe they will carry out what they profess, and will administer the affairs of this country in the most economical manner. This Government is not going to be a Government carried on for the interest of party; it will be managed purely and solely in the interest of the country. Hon. gentlemen opposite have an idea that no Government can stand unless it is run in the same way as their Government was run, that is to say, purely and solely for the party without respect to the interests of the country. Affairs are differently managed now, and it is no wonder. Hon. gentlemen opposite got so reckless, having enjoyed the sweets of office so long, that now they are out of office they think that this Government must do precisely what they did. But they will find the public affairs managed very differently now, they will find that the public money will be spent judiciously, economically and honestly by this Administration. They are surprised that such things can be done by this Administration. The hon. the ex-Minister of Finance enjoyed the sweets of office for a great number of years, but he finds there is a sting in his honey just now. He is in the sulks, he scolds, he scolds, he scolds from morning to night. He wonders how it is that this country can get on without him having a share of the pabulum that is going. I would like to see him accept the situation, I would like to see him act like a Briton, because he will have to adapt himself to that situation, he will have to give up these tears, these groans, these lamentations, which are louder than ever they were in Rama. As to the item that is before the House now, I say the faith of the country is pledged to it.

Mr. TAYLOR. What about Liverpool? What about St. Martin's?

Mr. LANDERKIN. And what about Gananoque? That was a glaring instance in the old days, but I don't think the hon. member offered any objections to that.

Mr. TAYLOR. Take Ingersoll, take Rat Portage.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Rat Portage has a population now of 7,000, so I am informed, and it is growing. But I would not object to that, nor would I object to Ingersoll, nor would I object to Woodstock. In every one of these places I think the Government have acted wisely and well. They have selected places where the revenues will warrant them in erecting public buildings, and I believe that they are quite justified in doing so. No doubt it is very nice for a constituency for the Government to follow the political morality laid down by the hon. member for South Lanark. I do not know whether he would lay this policy down when in power, but I believe that he is going to lay it down in Opposition. I do not know that there is any use in spending public money where the public interest does not require it. I do not believe that it is a good policy to lay down, I do not approve of that policy. Wherever the interests of the public demand that public money should be spent, I am in favour of the Government spending it in a legitimate and an honest way. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would just like to remind hon. gentlemen again that this is a day of great importance, this is the anniversary of the battle that was fought on the 23rd of June a year ago, when the actions and conduct of the gentlemen who were then administering the Government met with the rebuke that they deserved, and the incoming Administration was hailed with satisfaction, as the people knew that they would conduct the affairs of this country honestly and economically, which I believe they will do.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice all through the Estimates that these post offices are called public buildings. Was that for the purpose of hiding them so that members on this side would not know what kind of buildings they were?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think it usually happens, at all events in the lower provinces, that these public buildings are not confined to the uses of a post office. Usually the same building is used for a post office, customs, excise, savings bank, and all branches of the public service in that town.

Mr. SPROULE. But you do not say so in this case. At St. Martin's you mention post office and custom-house separately.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think that there are any cases where the post office is mentioned alone. In all cases I think it will be found that the public building contains the quarters for all the Government officials in the neighbourhood.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think it is very unfortunate for this country that the policy was ever adopted of erecting public buildings in the small towns. It is very questionable whether it is in the public interest whether they should have been built in a number of the larger places, and it is most unfortunate that this system has been so much abused in the past. I was pleased to hear the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) urging upon the Government the desirability of adopting the principle contained in the resolution unanimously passed by the House in 1890. It would be very fortunate if the members of this House would join in supporting the Government in upholding that policy. I sympathize very much with my friends in the present position, but I think that members of Parliament, in discussing this question, ought to be somewhat practical and reasonable. We know that for a great many years this policy was much abused. It became a scandal as an hon. gentleman said with perfect truth. Probably it had a good deal to do with putting the last Government out of power the way they abused this policy for partisan purposes, making grants to constituencies with the view of affecting elections. This policy was so abused that it became a public scandal. I can appreciate the present position. During the election, having regard to the fact that the Conservative party had put up public buildings just where they received a favourable verdict and had denied them to other places, no matter what their claims might be, and that promises were made by members of the Government and by the Conservative candidates in these constituencies I could understand that their opponents as the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Choquette) frankly stated also promised to support grants towards establishing public buildings in the towns in their counties. There is probably under the circumstances much to be taken into consideration outside of merely the revenue to be derived, although we do look upon that principle and it is a good one. As one hon. gentleman has said, the circumstances in different sections differ. The central place in the parish, or county, known as the county, or shire town, although not having a large population, although the revenue may not be large, is the principal point at which all the business of that district is carried on, and I can understand that under these circumstances members representing such a locality might make out a strong claim upon the Government to consideration. Under these circumstances I shall support the proposals brought down by the Government after the explanations given to them. I am very sorry that they have found it necessary to depart from the principle which all advocated and which the House adopted by resolution. I do not know that we are prepared to say that they are justified in departing from it even though the late Government, after adopting it, departed from it so much. I hope that for the future the members of this House will unite in sticking to the rule that has been adopted by the House, and that in the expenditure of public money to erect public buildings consideration will be given to the population and the revenue derived.

Mr. BENNETT. Before the item passes I desire to recall to the recollection of the Minister of Public Works that a little time ago he caused the services of the caretaker of the large public building at Orillia to be dispensed with on the ground of economy, and he furthermore on that occasion stated that no successor would be appointed, and that the rule of the department would be henceforth that no caretakers should be appointed and that the public buildings would be placed in the care of the postmasters in each of them.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As much as possible.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman by adding that kills the whole thing.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I said that at the time, and I say it now.

Mr. BENNETT. If the Minister is going to add "as much as possible" to his proviso, I must assume that on each occasion when these buildings are completed there will be caretakers appointed to positions. I can only say that on the occasion I have referred to, I was led to understand that the Minister was not going to make an invidious distinction in the case of the Orillia post office, but that that was the rule to be laid down and maintained in the future. If it is not carried out and applied to other places I trust he will carry it out in the case of Orillia. I suppose that a successor will be appointed.

Mr. MILLS. I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works to what use he now places the rooms formerly occupied by the Dominion Savings Bank agent at Annapolis. The Dominion Savings Bank agent at Annapolis, as has not yet been made apparent, was dismissed and the office was abolished. I think the rule in the department is when the savings bank agent is dismissed or dies, the agency becomes abolished and the money is then vested in the post office savings bank. We have a nice large building at Annapolis and there are two rooms which were occupied by the Dominion Savings Bank agent. The agency now is not there. The postmaster has charge of the moneys and he carries on his business in the lower flat of the post office. The rooms are now vacant and I wish to ask if there was an offer to the Government to rent those rooms and have they been rented.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Nothing has been decided upon. They have not been rented yet.

Mr. MILLS. Is it the desire of the department to rent them?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not been able to give much attention to the question so far. I know that an application has been made for them, but I do not remember exactly by whom. I think it was Mr. DeBlois.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. DeBlois, the Dominion Savings Bank agent, wished to retain the office. Does the Minister refuse to rent the rooms to Mr. DeBlois.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, I do not refuse. I have not considered the matter so far. But as soon as the session is over I will decide upon it.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. DeBlois has not only gone out of the office of agent of the Dominion Savings Bank, but out of the rooms. The Government can acquire some little revenue from Mr. DeBlois. It may be that when the Minister has time to give it his attention there will be no tenant to apply for it.

New Brunswick—

St. Martin's post office, custom-house, &c. $5,000
Chatham public building—Repairs to custom-house, wharf, boat shed, &c. . . . . 500

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to have some information about this. In reference to the Liverpool public building what is to be the cost of it?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have no estimate made for the Liverpool public building. I may be allowed to say a word or two. I have a great deal of sympathy with what has been said to-day. I quite agree that we should not erect so many public buildings in small places. The policy has been followed in the past, but I am very glad indeed to hear what has been said in the House to-day. This will be the last time that I shall come before Parliament and ask for grants for smaller places. That pledge I will give. My hon. friends on the other side of the House have an idea of the great pressure that is brought every day upon us to have public buildings erected. I am asking money to-day for a very few public buildings. If I had yielded to the numerous demands that had been made upon me by hon. members on this side of the House, I may say, that instead of three or four public buildings I would have had fifty. I have given too much perhaps. I yielded too much perhaps, because I quite agree that we should have a more strict policy, and to give effect to the view that I now express, I move:

That the St. Martin's post office, the Berthier post office and the Rat Portage post office be struck out.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the Minister going to deal justly or not?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Justly.

Mr. FOSTER. On what ground of public justice, does he strike out the Rat Portage post office and keep in the Liverpool post office, except it be that a Minister represents one and does not the other?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My feeling is, that Rat Portage can wait a little.

Mr. FOSTER. And cannot Liverpool wait. What has happened down in Liverpool that it cannot wait?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Well, Liverpool has been agreed to by the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. Liverpool has been agreed to because the Minister let it go.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. And the Opposition let it go also.

Mr. FOSTER. And the Minister starts in to say, that Rat Portage, a thriving town where population is flocking in, where it is going to be we believe one of the most important towns in Ontario; Rat Portage post office must go out, but Liverpool, because a Minister sits for that county, Liverpool post office must stay in.

Mr. DYMENT. The hon. Minister has not the facts with regard to Rat Portage in mind, or he would not think of striking Rat Portage post office out. To begin with, a site is to be given to the Government which is worth $1,500 or $2,000, by the town. Rat Portage has about 7,000 inhabitants now. Last year it increased by 1,000, and I am told on credible information that this year it will increase 1,000 more, and it is likely to be a city in the course of twelve or eighteen months. I am very sure that Algoma has not received very much consideration at the hands of any Government heretofore, and I certainly object to this item being struck out.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The reason why I am asking that Rat Portage post office be struck out, is, because we are only paying $169 a year rent there, and the House evidently does not want any more money to be spent on public buildings.

Mr. FOSTER. How much rent do you pay at Rat Portage?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $169.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, you are only paying $140 in Kentville.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Kentville has been agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. That is too thin.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We must draw the line somewhere. That is my suggestion and I am quite in the hands of the House. We must have one thing or the other.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The Minister (Mr. Tarte) ought to have made this announcement before he took the vote on these three other buildings. Now that he claims that these items have passed, I would ask him to include with St. Martin's post office and the Berthier post office the post office at Montmagny, because the post office at Montmagny is not as important as the other offices. I cannot see why he should leave the Montmagny post office grant in, and strike out the others. I think the Minister ought to strike that out too. I am glad to hear that the Minister has come to the conclusion that he will have a stiffer backbone in future in dealing with the supporters of the Government who ask for these grants. I think it is highly necessary, that if this Government is going to be maintained by the people of this country, they should turn over a new leaf in regard to these matters, even at this their first business session. It is in the interest of the Government that I have opposed these grants, because I know that the Liberal party, all through the province of Ontario at least, have been aroused at the extraordinary expenditure which was made by the previous Government with regard to the public buildings, and they have made up their minds that they would not support any party in power which would thus squander the public money. That is the reason I have brought this to the attention of the House. I am glad that the Minister of Public Works has made this announcement, and I am glad that in future we shall not have financial grants for the erection of public buildings in small villages in any of the provinces of the Dominion of Canada. Now, I understand that the Minister of Public Works agrees to withdraw the vote for the Montmagny post office also.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
No.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must remind the members of the committee that we are now on item 32, and I would ask hon. gentlemen to confine their discussion to that.

Mr. LISTER. I must endorse the statement of my hon. friend from Algoma (Mr. Dymont). In my judgment, if any of the small places in the province of Ontario or in the Dominion of Canada are entitled to a public building, the town of Rat Portage is that place.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We are now on item 32. The question of Rat Portage will come up on item 34.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask my hon. friend the Chairman, if there is not a motion made by the Minister of Public Works that Rat Portage be struck out.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand that the motion was not in order.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. (Translation.) I call the attention of the Minister of Public Works that he was the first to set the example to us, when he mentioned item 33.

Mr. SOMERVILLE.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is moved to strike out of resolution 32 the following words:—

St. Martin's post office, custom-house..... $5,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I confine myself to that.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to have the answer of my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) as to why he proposes to single out the province of New Brunswick; take the little thriving town of St. Martins and knock its hopes out by one stroke. This is the same Minister who an hour ago poked fun at the member for Brant (Mr. Somerville) because he would dare to call in question the wisdom of the Minister in putting a post office grant in the Estimates.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not say one word.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, this Minister goes to work, and after he has satisfied the inordinate desire of the Minister of Finance for two full sized post offices in Nova Scotia, he attacks New Brunswick and Rat Portage, with a magnanimity that is worthy of him in every respect. Let us have fair and reasonable justice. I will go for striking out every one of them, but I am not going to see my own province bull-dozed in that way. If there is any fair sense of justice in putting a post office any where, Rat Portage is that place.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) is very unreasonable. For two mortal hours, hon. gentlemen opposite have been denouncing my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) for bringing down, in a good humoured moment, some votes which perhaps erred a little on the side of generosity; and the moment the Minister complies with the request of these hon. gentlemen up they all rise, with the ex-Finance Minister at their head, to denounce my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) for doing the very thing which for two hours they have been desiring him to do. I say this frankly. There is not the slightest doubt that this matter of erecting buildings all over the country has been abused. It was very much abused, and it was denounced, and I was until now going to congratulate the ex-Minister of Finance on having made a very fair and reasonable statement on the question, and one that deserved to be considered both by the Minister of Public Works and by the Minister of Finance; because there is no doubt that it will not do to be creating a vast number of little post offices all over the country. As to the position in which the Government find themselves, I might just say to my hon. friends that after eighteen years in Opposition, there is not the slightest doubt that some concessions have to be made to counties which have received a very scant measure of justice or no justice at all during that time. But what I do object to is the unfairness of assailing my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works, when at some considerable personal inconvenience to himself, and at the risk of displeasing some of his supporters, he accepts the advice tendered by hon. gentlemen opposite. The ex-Minister of Finance ought to lead the steps of my hon. friend in the way they should go. He knows as well as we all know what tremendous pressure is put upon the Minister of Public Works; and I know, what he perhaps does not know, to what an extent my hon. friend has stood against that pressure—what an immense number of applications, involving an immense amount of money, my hon. friend has rejected, bringing upon himself a considerable amount of odium thereby. Now, my hon. friend offers to take out one or two of these, which appear to him, after what has been stated on the other side, to be open to fair objection. I think my hon. friend's proposition is a most reasonable one, and it shows an amount of moral courage that is not often displayed in this House. If he has made a trifling mistake—and after all it is only a trifling one—on one or two matters, my hon. friend has the courage to say so, and he proposes to withdraw them, for which I think he deserves credit. He does not deserve, I will not say to be heckled, but to be censured and made light of because he is doing a thing in the public interest; and I look to the ex-Minister of Finance, who has been there and knows all about it, to help my hon. friend.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to help him to be just, and to go two steps further than he proposes to go, and to wipe out this crowning injustice. If he allows these two places to have post offices, let us treat all places alike. My hon. friend is entitled to great credit at this moment for deciding to strike out some of these items; but I will give him all the credit I possibly can if he will go two steps further and wipe them all out. I will put Rat Portage and Liverpool together, and place them before any business man in this world, and he will say that Rat Portage has beyond all comparison the greater claims for a post office.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am myself impressed by what may be considered the unfair discrimination so far as Rat Portage is concerned, and I would not like to be the instrument of any unfair discrimination. I think it better to have some general principle agreed upon. At any rate, I do not want any advantage for my own county that is not fair and reasonable, and I am going to ask that the item be allowed to stand until the case of Rat Portage can be considered.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Let them all stand.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think, under the circumstances, the hon. Minister was a little hasty in striking out one or two items; and, after having heard both sides of the House, that, while acknowledging the abuse that has existed, the great majority are willing that the public buildings he proposes should be gone on with, he might let these go through, and not strike them out, unless all are struck out.

Mr. McMULLEN. I cannot admit that at all. I cannot admit that the followers of the Government are prepared to adopt that line, or that any place should have a public building which does not show a ground for it in the way of revenue. In the town where I live the receipts from the post office are $4,280 a year, yet I have never asked the Minister of Public Works to build a post office there, because I really expected that the principles we advocated when in Opposition would be honestly carried out, and I earnestly hope that after mature consideration, the hon. Minister will come to the conclusion that places which yield only a mere trifle of revenue should not have a public building, and that those members representing the counties in which these places are located, will not insist upon the Government pursuing a policy entirely at variance with that which they advocated when on the other side of the House.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I fully agree with the suggestion just made by my hon. friend from North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland). The Government, having just put this item in the Estimates, after due consideration, did so, no doubt, on very good grounds. It is too late now for the Government to strike out that item, as it would be most unfair to the hon. gentlemen who represent in this House the constituencies affected by these votes. For is it not now a matter of public notoriety that the Government have decided to make these grants, and they should not withdraw them except on warrantable grounds. I presume that the proposition of the hon. Minister was made under the pressure of some hon. gentleman on the back benches who support the Government of the day on common matters, but my hon. friend will agree with me that he would not be dealing fairly by the constituencies in favour of which these votes have been proposed. After having properly considered and granted those sums for some public buildings, they ought not, except on very good grounds, to withdraw those items. Should my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) not acquiesce in the views which will, no doubt, be given expression to by other hon. gentlemen, when the item concerning the county of Berthier will come up, I will give to the House some explanations which will prevent it concurring in the motion of the hon. Minister of Public Works proposing to strike out the item concerning the town of Berthier.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I would ask the Minister of Public Works not to press his motion.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. All the items stand.

Mr. WALLACE. This item is for a post office and custom-house at St. Martin's. I would like to ask the Controller of Customs if there is a customs port at this place?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). I think there is an outport.

Mr. WALLACE. It is not on the hon. gentleman's list. I think the outport is at Quaco. The customs revenue there last year was $115.02, which would not justify the erection of a public building.

Montreal drill hall—New skylights and other alterations, and roof, &c..... $10,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The roof has been leaking three or four years. An inspection was ordered in 1895, and made by two local architects, who reported that a change was necessary. After I took office, I had an examination made, at the instance of the Militia Department, by my chief architect, and he suggested a change. On each side of the roof there are long skylights through which the leakage takes place. It has been suggested to remove entirely the present skylights and have a flat roof put on. My chief architect made a very careful examination, and he has reported that $10,000 was required to make the change. That drill hall has cost a great deal of money, and, to my personal knowledge, it is being destroyed since two or three years by the leakage.

Montreal post office—New plant for heating and generating power for electric lighting, running elevators, &c..... $18,500

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We are under a contract for the lighting of the post office. Before that contract was made, we were paying a fixed amount which was, if I remember right, about $3,000 per year. The contract was changed, and instead of making the expected saving, the cost of lighting the post office was largely increased, so much so that to-day we pay about $12,000 per year for lighting purposes and the working of the elevators. It is proposed to have a plant of our own, and it is estimated that we would thereby save about $3,000 a year over and above all expenses.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the power?

Montreal post office—Balance due J. Nelson, architect, for professional services rendered from 1891 to 1895, inclusive, in connection with works of improvement and repairs carried out, &c. $1,908 15

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There were two architects employed,

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL.

Messrs. Raza and Nelson. Nelson's account is $4,008.15, out of which he has received $2,100. His account was recognized and certified, and he is now claiming the balance due.

Kingston drill hall..... $30,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This will be a drill hall of the same kind as the one here in Ottawa.

Port Colborne public buildings—Mansard roof for caretaker's quarters, &c..... $1,100

Mr. LISTER. Is that a post office and customs office?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot say whether there is a custom-house there.

Public Buildings, Ottawa—Grounds—New sidewalks and footways on Parliament Square (revote)..... $15,000

Mr. FOSTER. What kind of sidewalk will you make?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Asphalt. This is a revote from the main Estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the difference between granolithic and asphalt pavement?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Granolithic costs $1.18 square yard, and we are paying now for asphalt $2.19 per square yard which is very cheap—the cheapest we have ever had.

Mr. SPROULE. But it costs more than granolithic.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, but it is a great deal better; everybody concedes that.

Mr. BERGERON. That is for the sidewalks. Is it the intention of my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) to pave the walk from the stairs to the public road. That is a very muddy walk at times.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think we can have that done this year.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this paving done by contract?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes: after public tender.

Public Buildings, Ottawa—Grounds—Removal of old sheds in rear of Supreme Court building, and erection of new greenhouse..... $5,000

Mr. WALLACE. Will that greenhouse take the place of the present one?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. WALLACE. Is the old one a pretty good building?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No; the foundation is all gone now and must be replaced immediately.

Smith Falls public building—Compensation to contractor Robert Cameron in full and final settlement of all claims for losses sustained through stoppage of contract works ordered by the Government..... $500 28

Mr. BERGERON. What is the explanation of that ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Government stopped this man from doing his work and later on they found that they should not have stopped him, and he presented claims. This was done before I came into office. It was in 1895.

Mr. BERGERON. That means that it is a good thing, I suppose.

Alexandria Reformatory..... $9,000

Mr. BERGERON. What does this mean ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This question came before the committee last year. When we took office, we found that a contract had been entered into, but work had been stopped on account of some difficulty between the department and the contractor, Mr. Bourque. That difficulty led me to investigate the question carefully, and I found that the contract signed was for $95,000 but that this was only the beginning of a contract which, if it had been fulfilled, and the whole building completed, would have involved the country in an expenditure of about $800,000. I consulted my colleagues, and we came to the conclusion that the erection of that reformatory was not necessary. Then came the question whether we could agree with Mr. Bourque. There has been a certain amount of work done and a certain amount of money paid on account. I think that the sum paid was about $2,600. Of course, there is work done for a larger amount than that. I may say that I have a report from one of my officers, which report has remained, so far, a confidential document. What I propose to do is to settle with Mr. Bourque by arbitration. I propose that the department shall appoint an architect, and Mr. Bourque another, and, if they do not agree, they will appoint a fair man as third arbitrator. So I think the public interest will be conserved.

Mr. BERGERON. And when the arbitration takes place and the matter is settled, the money paid, I suppose, will be within this amount of $9,000. I suppose that all the work done and expenditure undertaken will be abandoned and lost.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Public Buildings—Chargeable to Income—Manitoba—Winnipeg immigrant building $4,600

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of this ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) has asked me to put that amount in the estimates because he expects a large amount of immigration.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the only reason which my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) puts it in ? Has he not looked into the matter himself ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No; that has been my reason for doing so. The Minister of the Interior has told me that it was necessary for his immigration scheme to have that amount put in the Estimates.

Mr. JAMESON. This is included in the matter that I brought up the other day. The object is to prevent small-pox and other diseases being spread by these immigrants. It is intended to add to the immigration building which is already in existence in Winnipeg, a certain number of rooms, so that in case of there being any infectious disease on these trains of immigrants that come in, those cases can be isolated without the necessity of bringing them to the Winnipeg General Hospital. I think the hon. ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) was here when I mentioned that matter the other night. When there is a case of infectious disease among these immigrants, some of whom are not going to our own country, but to Dakota, the case has to be taken to the Winnipeg General Hospital, with the danger of spreading infection among our own people. The Minister of the Interior decided that it would be well to add a wing to the building already in existence so that these cases of infectious diseases may be isolated without any danger being incurred to our own citizens.

Post office, Portage la Prairie (revote)..... $4,000

Mr. FOSTER. Before that goes any further, I want to have a little conversation with the Minister of Public Works.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am very glad.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps my hon. friend will not be so glad when I get through. Last year we had this matter of the Portage la Prairie post office before the House, and the House understands what took place at that time. At that time the site had been taken by the old Government, the contract had been let, the foundation had been laid, and some other work had been done, how much I do not know. When matters had progressed that far, a certain section of that town asked the Minister to change the site of the post office, that is, asked the incoming Government to take a building, a post office which had been settled by the preceding Government, with all this work done in connection with it, to choose another site, and to pick it up and transfer it to that other site. The member who represented that constituency was here at that time, and a long and varied discussion took place. My hon. friend understood what was the gist of that, it is not necessary to repeat it. Suffice it to say that a very strong protest was made on this side to anything like changing the site of the Portage la Prairie post office. The hon. Minister of Public Works passed his word across this House that no attempt would be made to change the site of the post office until he should come down to Parliament and ask a further vote for that purpose. On that understanding the item was allowed to pass. On a subsequent occasion I put a question myself across the floor to the hon. gentleman asking with reference to a certain vote, because the member for that constituency was at that time in Toronto, and wanted me to telegraph him if that removal was to be carried out. I asked the Minister if any portion of that vote was to be used in changing the site of the Portage la Prairie post office, and he assured me that it was not. That left that matter then in this way—that so far as the Minister went, he had assured the House that no change would be made in the foundation until he should have come down and asked the House for a special vote to do that, that is, until he had taken the House into his confidence and released himself from his pledge. Now I think a change has been made—at least I put a question to the Minister at the beginning of this session, asking him if the post office at Portage la Prairie has been changed, and the Minister gave me to understand that it had. Now, these are the simple facts of the case. The Minister pledged himself to this House that he would not change the site of the post office until he took the House into his confidence and asked for a vote especially to do it. He asked for no such vote. He did not take the House into his confidence as he intimated that he was going to do; he told the House that he was not going to do it, but in the interim he did it. Now, my hon. friend may have a good explanation for that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think there is some misunderstanding in that regard. I do not remember to have pledged myself to come before this Parliament and ask for a vote for that purpose, but I may have done so. The facts of the case are these: The question came up last year in the House when Mr. Boyd was present. I submitted the facts, which were that the change was asked for by the Board of Trade, and by the Town Council, and by a vast majority of the electors. The first site had been forced upon the town; I proved that to the House before. In face of the protest of the Board of Trade, of the Town Council, and of the majority of the electors, that site was first chosen by the late Government, and I made up my mind that a change should be made. I disclosed all these facts last year, I did not take the House at all by surprise. Another site was offered to us.

Mr. FOSTER. This is not a discussion as to a better site, this is simply a discussion as to whether the Minister kept faith with the House. The very same statement he made here to-night as to who asked for the change, as to the petitions that came in, as to the first site being a bad one and the second site a better one—that was all discussed in this House hour after hour, and after it was all discussed, the Minister made me that pledge, and he repeated it again on a subsequent occasion.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If I remember rightly, the pledge I made was that, as I intended to go to the Northwest I would take information. I may be mistaken now, I have sent for the "Hansard" to see. I think the only pledge I made was that I would take additional information because I then disclosed all the facts to the House. If I made that pledge I must apologize, but I do not believe that I did.

Mr. FOSTER. I have looked the matter up, I have had before me the "Hansard," I asked a question of the Minister in the earlier part of the session, and I know just exactly what it is. I do not accept the Minister's apology. When a Minister takes the House into his confidence and gets an item of the Estimates through with the promise—and I want to tell him, and he knows it, that he would not have got that item through without that promise. There was a long debate at the latter part of the session, and the Minister made the promise to get this item. His promise was as straight as man could make it, that he would not have the site changed until he came to Parliament and asked for a special vote for that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The pledge I made was that I would come before this Parliament and ask for authorization, and so I did. When my main Estimates were presented to the House this year they contained an item of $5,000 just for that change.

Mr. FOSTER. When?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This year, in my main Estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, is my hon. friend going to change his ground that way?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, I am not.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, why did he introduce it? I am right, then, in my assumption that he did give his pledge, and he changed the post office site before he laid his Estimates on the Table.

Mr. LISTER. It should be changed, anyway.

Mr. FOSTER. It may be, I am not going to argue that question. I am going to say that when we are discussing items in this House, and when we have the pledge of a Minister across the floor in the House, there is no consideration that can allow a Minister to go back on that pledge unless he carries out the condition that he made when he made that pledge. If a Minister undertakes that with the House, well, the House will have to advise itself that the Minister's pledge may be overlooked.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. I am surprised that the ex-Finance Minister should allude to the Portage la Prairie post office at all. If ever there was a disgraceful job perpetrated upon a long-suffering people, it was the first location of the Portage la Prairie post office. A site was chosen at the extreme west end of the town, quite beyond the centre of business; in fact, beyond almost all the business establishments in the town. It was chosen contrary to the wishes, not only of the great majority of the people of Portage la Prairie, and to the wishes of the Town Council and the Board of Trade, but directly contrary to the inspector of public buildings, the official of the public works department. That gentleman positively refused to report in favour of the site selected. The sum of $75 a foot was paid for that land by the late Government. I attended an auction sale of land a year ago last winter and for property alongside of this land for which the Government paid $75 a foot, they were only able to get a bid of $20 a foot. Nobody wanted it. The people of Portage la Prairie were justly and rightly incensed in regard to that matter, and they took every possible means in their power to have the wrong righted. People who do not know the circumstances and the location of the town might be misled by the plausible story which has been told on the other side of the House, but the fact is that the people of Portage la Prairie were almost a unit in desiring the removal of that post office and public building to a site further east. A petition was signed very largely and by almost every responsible business man in Portage la Prairie favouring the removal. That petition was committed to the care of the then mayor of the town, Mr. W. J. Cooper, for transmission to the Public Works Department. We never heard of it any more. Then the building began to be put up. When the Government was changed on the 23rd of June last, one of the first expressions of public opinion at Portage la Prairie was that, "Now we will obtain justice in reference to the post office." The citizens went to work, and they thought as a matter of justice that a site should be provided. However, the Minister of Public Works took a firm stand. He said that while a certain expenditure had been undertaken by the late Government and while he could not hold himself responsible for their misdeeds—I would be sorry for him if he had to do that—at the same time he could not justify the loss which would be caused by the purchase of a new site and the removal of the foundation. Then the citizens formed themselves together and purchased a site which cost $80 a foot. They presented that site to the Government for the purpose of the erection of the building. That building is now being put up and everybody is satisfied, except two or three wire-pullers who were the means of implementing the first bargain. These gentlemen are not so very much dissatisfied either because they got $75 a foot for land which is not worth more than $25 a foot. The building is going on and the Government has got a valuable site, worth at least $80 a foot instead of a site that was dear at $20 to $25 a foot. I would have thought that the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) would be ashamed to reopen such a shameful chapter, small and short as it is, in comparison with the large and long shameful chapters of maladministration of our public affairs; I am surprised that he has opened up such a chapter of the misdeeds of himself and his colleagues in office, and I am sure that the people of Portage la Prairie, of Manitoba and the people of Canada, as far as they are familiar with the question, will have nothing but words of praise for the Minister of Public Works for taking the stand which he has taken. He has made a good bargain for the people of Canada and he has satisfied the people of Portage la Prairie. I am surprised that the matter should have been reopened in the manner in which it has been.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not responsible for the surprise of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Rutherford). The hon. gentleman may or may not have understood my point; he has not seen it or else he has avoided it. I do not propose to take any position as to the question of the site at all. It is simply a question as to whether a Minister has passed his pledge to the House and the country after having given that pledge. I think there can be no doubt even with my hon. friend (Mr. Rutherford) as to where the surprise would come in a case of that kind.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I must admit that I was pretty clear. In answer to a question put to me by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) I said:

I will not make any change until I come to the House and ask for $5,000.

I must frankly admit that I did so, but at the same time if the hon. gentleman refers to the whole debate which took place he will find that I stated very distinctly that I would make the change if a free site were provided. Time was pressing and I must admit frankly that I forgot that I had given that pledge to the House. Having disclosed my intention to change that site if a free site was offered to us I thought that I was perfectly free to act. I will be frank about it. I recognize now that I did go farther than I had said. I said to the House that I would not make the change until I came and asked for the $5,000. As soon as the question came up I stated that the change had been made, but at the same time I must say that my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) is right that I had given that pledge. The change has been made as it had been entirely agreed by the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I have read the debate very carefully and I understand the whole drift of the discussion. The objection was not made to the change of site, but it was to the cost involved in the adoption of the principle that where a new government comes into office it may pull down and rebuild public buildings erected by a preceding Government, and it was after a long debate that the hon. gentleman the Minister of Public Works gave this pledge. Here is what passed :

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not asking for $5,000 necessary to make the change.

Mr. FOSTER. Do I understand that if the hon. gentleman does decide to make the change suggested, he will not make it until he has come down to the House and asked for $5,000?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will not make any change until I come to the House and ask for $5,000.

Later again Mr. Boyd put this question to the Minister :

Mr. BOYD. Before any site is selected, and before any change is made, will the hon. Minister come down to this House and ask for the money?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes. That establishes my position.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not deny it.

Mr. FOSTER. I have nothing to say : I do not want to ask for apologies or anything of that kind. All I want to say to the Minister is that it is well when he makes a pledge of that kind and the House depends upon it that a note should be made of it so that it will not escape the memory because it rather helps to destroy the confidence that you may expect from both sides of the House.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I quite admit that I should have taken a note of it, but the hon. gentleman will find that the question had been threshed out and it was practically agreed upon, but at the same time I gave that pledge, and perhaps I should have kept it.

Mr. WALLACE. Is it only "perhaps" that he should have kept it?

Mr. TARTE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Oh, well, it is my hon. friend's English.

British Columbia—

Victoria drill hall and accessory buildings—Revote $3,600—To complete.....	$ 5,700
Williams Head Quarantine Station—Quarters for crew, alterations, improvements, furniture, instruments, &c.....	7,000
Victoria—New post office (revote).....	10,000

Mr. MAXWELL. I would like to know what has been the cost of this drill hall.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think the original contract was for $22,000. If my officers are rightly informed I think the total cost has reached the amount of $30,000.

Mr. MAXWELL. Not more?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not more than that.

Mr. MAXWELL. It is one of the jobs out there you know.

Victoria—New post office..... $10,000

Mr. MAXWELL. What is the full cost of that post office in Victoria?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The total cost will be $312,000.

Mr. MAXWELL. What is the population of Victoria?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About 20,000.

Harbours and Rivers—Nova Scotia..... $60,800

Mr. MILLS. Does the Minister intend to let Hampton Pier in Annapolis County go to entire ruin?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not find I made any provision in the Estimates for that.

Mr. MILLS. I might refresh the Minister's mind. When I asked him the question before, he said he would take it into deep consideration; it is there yet.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Of course I did, but I could not find my way to do it.

Harbours and Rivers—New Brunswick. $49,117 50

Mr. FOSTER. Where are those wharfs on the St. John River for which you are asking $2,500?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Those wharfs have not yet been located, but we have received numerous requests to build them.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, now, Mr. Chairman, the idea of asking a vote to build a wharf without even having located the places where that wharf is to be built. Why, it is worse than the electric light business this afternoon.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is not worse at all, it is just as good.

Mr. FOSTER. You are estimating on air.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There have been numerous petitions sent for these wharfs, although they are not actually located.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the plan on which these Estimates are compiled all the way through. If so, we will have to be very critical. If the Minister is going to spend $2,500 on wharfs, he must know where they are surely.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I would simply ask that that item should stand until to-morrow.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps the hon. gentleman from Albert (Mr. Lewis) could tell us where Two Rivers is?

Mr. LEWIS. It is in Albert County.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there a harbour there?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the Minister explain what he proposes to do with the $5,000 for hydrographic survey in St. John Harbour?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There has never been any proper survey of the harbour, and numerous requests have been made for it.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose it is not for the inner harbour, which is pretty well known, but it is to cover the channel in and out.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The channel and the entrances have to be surveyed.

Mr. McALISTER. I am very much pleased to see $2,000 in the Estimates for the public wharf at Dalhousie, which requires repairs very much, but I must again express my disappointment at seeing nothing in the Estimates for the public wharf at Campbellton. As I have pointed out to the Minister of Public Works on several occasions, the way we are situated there we have no wharf accommodation at all, and until the private wharf to which the other wharfs are connected is taken over by the Government or another wharf built, we can have no access to the public wharfs at all. In addition to that, considerable money has been expended there on a ferry wharf. That wharf never was completed and has been of no service whatever. Until it is completed it is impossible for any boat to land there, and I would ask that a small grant be made to complete and extend it, so that the ferry boat can use it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I intend visiting Dalhousie if I can, and will give my attention to that subject.

Shippegan Harbour—Extension of protection works, and repairs to same..... $10,000

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend explain this?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. These works, which cost a considerable amount of money, were partially destroyed a year ago. They are very important, because they afford accommodation to the fishermen between the Baie des Chaleurs and the Northumberland Straits. These works have cost in the neighbourhood of $90,000, and we hope that with this sum of $10,000 we shall be able to put them in a good state of repair.

Cape Tormentine—Repairs to break-water..... $25,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I move that this be reduced to $12,000, because we shall not be able to spend more than that much this year.

Amendment agreed to.

Harbours and Rivers—Quebec—Rivière du Lièvre—Urgent repairs to retaining walls in connection with Little Rapids lock and dam..... $4,500

Mr. FOSTER. What is that?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. These works, as my hon. friend knows, have cost a large amount of money. The water is pushing itself inside of the wharfs, and with this amount of money we feel able to save those wharfs.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any navigation going on there now?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, there is not as much as formerly, because the phosphate industry has stopped; but we feel that we should not let these wharfs fall into disrepair.

Isle Perrot—Addition to wharf, north side. $2,500

Mr. BERGERON. In connection with this item I want to call the attention of my hon. friend to some boulders at the end of this wharf which are dangerous to navigation, especially in the fall, when the water is low; and there has been a demand for some years that they should be removed. The work could be done in a short time when a dredge is passing there.

Cacouna—Extension of wharf..... $5,000

Mr. FOSTER. What wharf is that?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is a wharf there, but the pier is not long enough, and we want to build another pier.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the length of the pier you have to build?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand that there are several hundred feet between the block and the shore.

Mr. FOSTER. Can you get out to the block ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We can only reach the block at high water. It is a tidal harbour.

St. Nicholas—To provide for the construction of a public wharf..... $7,000

Mr. FOSTER. Where is St. Nicholas ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is in the fine county of Lévis. It has no public work at all, and it has a right to a wharf. There is a large parish that has no wharf.

Mr. FOSTER. Is my hon. friend going to undertake the policy of building wharfs up and down the St. Lawrence River ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, only where it is necessary.

Gatineau River—Protection of east bank of river between Canadian Pacific Railway Bridge and the Ottawa River..... $4,600

Mr. BERGERON. What is that ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The vote is explained by the words of the resolution. The bridge has been greatly damaged, and it is claimed that the damage has been caused by our dredging.

Mr. FOSTER. What dredging has been done on the Gatineau River ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand from the chief engineer that years ago dredging was done, which changed the current and caused that damage.

Mr. FOSTER. How many years ago was that ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand it was some seven or eight years ago.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will require millions if he is going to undertake to repair the river banks, along rivers like the Gatineau, which have become damaged through the effect of improvements made on the river seven or eight years back.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When the officers of a public department say that the damage had been caused by our own works, I think we are responsible.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there navigation on the Gatineau River ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, up to the railway. It was after being informed that there was navigation that I assented to that item.

Mr. FOSTER. What navigation is going on there ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I went over the ground the other day and found half a dozen of barges loaded with lumber there.

Mr. TARTE.

Mr. FOSTER. We should know where we are. On every stream where lumber is carried, does the Dominion Government take the position that it is going to look after the navigation of that river ? Suppose this river is navigable, and for the purpose of improving the channel we dredge it, and eight years later the river bank falls away, is the Government going to take upon itself the expense of protecting the river bank in every case ?

Mr. WALLACE. There is another feature, and it is this, that this is practically private property. Gilmour & Co. have piling grounds there, and vessels go up and load at those piling grounds. There is no public wharf there or navigation for the public at all. We are doing this simply for the benefit of private parties.

Mr. POUPORE. There were considerable improvements made in the river by the Dominion Government, and the passage of logs down the stream by high water has so destroyed the banks that the channel is blocked. The Dominion Government derive every year revenue from the passage of the logs down the river, and it is quite just and proper that they should clean up the river when the channel is blocked.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think that the late Government spent very large sums for the very same purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. This is not for clearing out the stream, even supposing you are going to enter upon the good work of cleaning out all the logging streams in the country for the passage of lumber. This item is for protecting property on the river bank.

Mr. CHAMPAGNE. The facts are these. Seven or eight years ago the Government decided to make certain improvements to the booms which are the property of this Government.

Mr. HAGGART. Are the dams at the mouth of the Gatineau the property of the Dominion ?

Mr. CHAMPAGNE. Yes. The Government decided to make certain improvements consisting in the construction of piers and dredging the river. A pier was constructed in the centre of the river, and the result of its construction and the dredging was that the stream was diverted from its natural course, and considerable damage was done to the properties of the riparian proprietors. Complaints were made by these proprietors and by the municipalities interested, whose municipal road had been taken away by water. It was shown that the change in the current of the stream was the immediate cause of the damage. Five or six years ago, the Dominion Government acknowledged that the damage was the result of the work that had been done there by the Government, and expended a sum to protect the banks, which, I am informed, was in the neighbourhood of $3,000. They thus admitted that they were responsible for the damages caused to these riparian proprietors and the municipalities. It happens that the protection given was insufficient, a portion of those works was carried away by water, and it has been found necessary to make some more repairs. At my personal request, the hon. Minister of Public Works was kind enough to put at my disposition one of his engineers, Mr. Chas. Taché, who lives at Gatineau Point, and with whom I went over the place. I verified myself the extent of the damages, and Mr. Taché made a report in which he says that the cause of the damage to these properties is the works made in previous years by the Dominion Government. In face of that report, the Minister of Public Works thought it was his duty to insert a sufficient amount in the Estimates in order to avoid future damages. This is not a favour given these people by the Dominion Government, but simply an act of justice, because I submit that, under the circumstances, we are legally bound to indemnify the parties injured. Legally speaking, I consider the Government responsible for the damages.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the nature of this bank which has to be protected. Does it extend along a considerable portion of the river, and is it owned by private individuals?

Mr. CHAMPAGNE. A portion is owned by different individuals and there was a road on the shore which has been destroyed, being worn away by the water. In several places the road is located four or five acres from where it was originally located. Thus several riparian proprietors and two municipalities are interested.

Mr. FOSTER. Was this caused by a building of a pier?

Mr. CHAMPAGNE. That is the conclusion at which the engineer of the department arrived—that it was through the dredging and the construction of the pier in the middle of the river.

Mr. FOSTER. The pier was built for the benefit of the lumber mills there?

Mr. CHAMPAGNE. Exactly.

Mr. FOSTER. And the slidage and so on, are the property of the Government?

Mr. CHAMPAGNE. No doubt about that.

Mr. FOSTER. And the Government gets fees from them?

Mr. CHAMPAGNE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Has my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) the report of his officers upon that question?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think it was Mr. Pelletier who made the survey there upon which this item is based.

Mr. FOSTER. And the legal opinion given by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Champagne), who has just taken his seat, is shared by the representative in the House of the Department of Justice that if improvements are made in the river and a wharf constructed, and eight years afterwards, the side of the bank was eaten out, the Government is responsible?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) should not forget that in what I am doing, I am only following the course adopted by him, and I thought that he himself had consulted the law officers.

Mr. FOSTER. But is my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) only to do what we did?

Mr. HAGGART. I do not remember that we received any dues or owned any slides or booms on the Gatineau.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Oh, yes; no doubt about that.

Mr. HAGGART. What are the receipts?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot give that information now, but it will be found in our report.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope the hon. gentleman will bring that information before concurrence.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will.

Mr. COCHRANE. It appears to me that this opens up a very large question. If the Dominion Government have control of this river, they have a right to make what improvements they see fit. The contention is that the Dominion Government is responsible and will be for all time to come, for protecting the bank owned by private individuals, and that, if a road along the river is washed away, the municipality will have a claim. I understood the Minister and others behind him to say that this was a legal question and that he was bound to make the repairs. But I would like to know, and I think the committee has a right to be informed by the Minister of Public works, whether the Minister has consulted the Department of Justice on the question of our being bound to make these repairs.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I can only repeat what I have already said—the work having been begun under the late Government it was assumed that all this had been done.

Mr. COCHRANE. I do not understand that this work was begun under the late Government.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, it was.

Mr. COCHRANE. You say that, but I do not so understand the case. I understand that the improvements to the river were begun, not the protection of the banks.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, the protection of the bank was begun by the late Government.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the length of the bank we are protecting?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About half a mile.

Public Works—Chargeable to Income—Ste.

Anne de Sorel—Ice-piers..... $3,600

Mr. BERGERON. What is that for?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The ice is doing very great damage there every year and some of these ice-piers have been altogether carried away, and must be replaced.

Rimouski Pier—Repairs..... $500

Mr. FISSET. (Translation.) I wish to call the attention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) to the fact that the vote asked for is not large enough for making the necessary repairs to this wharf. I take occasion to say that such a small expenditure will almost prove useless as you will not be able to make all the necessary repairs.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) There is another item for that purpose in the Estimates.

Mr. FISSET. (Translation.) I am speaking of the wharf at Rimouski. I know there is some difference of opinion in that connection between the Public Works Department and the Department of Railways and Canals. The Department of Railways and Canals is of opinion that those repairs are under the control of the Public Works Department; while the Department of Public Works says that they are under the control of the Railways and Canals Department. I understand from a remark made to me by the Deputy Minister of Public Works that the department claims that it has nothing to do with the building of wharfs for railways. I coincide in this view of the matter. At all events, all the hon. gentlemen know that the wharf at Rimouski is used in connection with the hauling of the English mail, and therefore, is a public work of absolute necessity. The woodwork inside the wharf is in a state of decay and a portion of it is gone. The wharf inclines considerably. This expenditure of $500 will hardly cover the cost of the works that are to be carried out this year. I am even afraid accidents may happen, owing to the wharf being so much out of repair. I know that a report has been made by the railway officials, in which the facts I have just alluded to were stated, as they, no doubt, wish to free themselves thereby from all responsibility in the matter.

Mr. BERGERON. Now that you are through with the Quebec items, Mr. Chairman, I think I must congratulate the Government upon the justice rendered to Quebec. But I must say I am very sorry not to see an item I would be glad to see. I am afraid that my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) has forgotten that a good many of the electors who are living on the shore of the feeder to the St. Louis River, Valleyfield, have been making very strong representations to him on the subject of damages to the property of farmers on the shore of that river. The Government have built some works over there. These have not been completed, unfortunately, and the earth on each side of the feeder has fallen in. In fact that piece of work is now in a very bad condition. It is very dangerous because the water, instead of following its natural course, deviates, and some of the farmers have suffered very heavy damages, comparatively, through the water getting into their cellars and destroying their vegetables, &c. In fact, we have a claim for some damages from the Department of Public Works, which I think he will find in his department, to the amount of $1,500 or $2,000. I understand that the last time the Minister was in Valleyfield they made a complaint to him, and he promised to look after it. I thought I would find in these items an amount necessary to cover these damages, and also to clean the feeder and to repair the gates, which are to-day in a very dangerous condition. In fact, if these gates were broken away, it might happen that the whole stream would follow that course as well as to pass through the channel. This was brought to the attention of the Government some time ago by the gate keeper, Mr. Bergevin, who came here to Ottawa for that purpose. I hope that the hon. Minister will take note of it.

Mr. COCHRANE.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I remember Mr. Bergevin made some representations to me, and I think we can find enough money in our general vote of $10,000 for these small affairs.

Mr. BERGERON. Will my hon. friend take note of it? Because it is really serious.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, the chief engineer has a note of it.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask if this Iberville wharf is a Government dock, or the property of a private individual?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is a Government work.

Honora, Manitoulin Island—Wharf..... $6,000

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to have some explanation about that item. Is that a Government wharf?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have been building a new wharf there, which will be the property of the Crown.

Mr. OASGRAIN. Did the hon. gentleman say the wharfs in Ontario are not Government wharfs?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Some of them are.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would like to know whether the system of paying tolls upon all the wharfs is to be kept in force. I raised this question last year when the item was voted, and my hon. friend was good enough to say that he would try to devise some means by which, upon certain wharfs where a very small revenue was derived, to do away with the tolls. Now, in the county of Montmorency there are certain wharfs upon which certainly the tolls do not amount to a sufficient sum to pay for the keepers. I would remind my hon. friend that the population of the county of Montmorency have enjoyed no Government favours in the way of subsidies for railways or to steamboats to carry them from the Island of Orleans to the city of Quebec or to any other place. I would like to ask the Minister what policy the Government have adopted on this point regarding the tolls.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That question does not come up in my department. As soon as the wharfs are completed they are passed over to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I think he has not yet made up his mind as to his future policy with regard to these wharfs.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would like the hon. gentleman to try to make up his mind between this and the next session in relation to tolls upon wharfs, especially in the county of Montmorency.

Mr. WALLACE. I must ask again for some information about this wharf in Honora, Manitoulin Island. Perhaps the hon. member for Algoma can give us some information.

Mr. DYMENT. I do not know what information I could give. The wharf is not built yet.

Mr. WALLACE. That is directly contrary to the statement of the Minister of Public Works.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I beg you pardon. I said distinctly it was a new one.

Mr. WALLACE. I never heard of this place before. Is it going to be a Government wharf?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It will be Government property.

Mr. LISTER. I hope the present head of the department, if he intends building another wharf up there, will not do as the late Government did. As a matter of fact, they spent about $10,000 on another man's property under an agreement that the conveyance should be made to the department. The conveyance never was made to the department, the department never took control of the wharf and the person in whose name it stood, mortgaged it to the bank, and the Government lost all the money that was put in it.

Mr. WALLACE. It is a timely warning, but it is not information about this wharf.

Mr. DYMENT. It is in one of the best settled portions of Manitoulin Island, and was promised by the late Government. It is about thirteen miles from Little Current.

Mr. WALLACE. Is there any town there?

Mr. DYMENT. No; there is a settlement and mills.

Mr. WALLACE. Who is the owner of the mills there?

Mr. DYMENT. Dr. Herriman.

Mr. WALLACE. Is there anything besides Dr. Herriman's mills?

Mr. DYMENT. There is a store there.

Mr. WALLACE. I never heard of the place before.

Mr. DYMENT. As Algoma is about one-half the province of Ontario, I could not be expected to know all the places in it.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We will put up a lodge there.

Mr. WALLACE. I can tell the hon. gentleman that Manitoulin Island is full of them.

Port Stanley—Assistance towards harbour improvements..... $10,000

Mr. HAGGART. Does that finish the improvements?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. The ground, I suppose, is given by the company?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have undertaken to pay one-third of the amount.

Hilton or Markdale Wharf—To provide for purchase of wharf property, including water lot, wharf and storehouse..... $5,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This amount of $5,000 is asked from Parliament to purchase from Mr. A. G. Duncan his wharf property.

Mr. HAGGART. Where is Hilton?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is on St. Joseph's Island. That wharf is now owned by Mr. Duncan. He charges heavy tolls, and the inhabitants think that they should have as much right as those of any other part of Canada to have a free wharf. The Government, after having read the petition that has been presented here, with the approbation of my hon. friend (Mr. Dymont) decided that the people have a right to a free wharf.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Why should not the people of Montmorency have a free wharf?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have no doubt my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will settle the case of my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain).

Mr. HAGGART. What amount has been expended there?

Mr. DYMENT. About $11,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Government built a part of the wharf and were not wise enough, I am sorry to say, to become the owners of the wharf.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Is this wharf to be made free upon which no tolls are to be paid?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In the first place the wharf was built by Mr. Duncan. Later on the Government made an addition to it. To have access to the shore the people were obliged to pay a large amount of money. We have made up our minds to free them from that burden.

Mr. HAGGART. When you are making an expenditure of that kind why do you not expropriate the property?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We did not make the expenditure; it was made by the late Government.

Mr. HAGGART. Why do you not do it now?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am doing it now; I am buying Mr. Duncan's wharf.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Is this to be a free wharf or not?

Mr. DYMENT. It will be a regular Government wharf upon which the tolls will be of a trifling amount. Heretofore Mr. Duncan has been charging about ten times the amount of the right tolls. Farmers and others have worked up quite a market at the Soo. They have to take their produce over the wharf and they have the profit taken out of it by the tolls. This is a very cheap way to get back the money we have spent upon this wharf.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What do you pay now?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They will be charged whatever tolls are prescribed.

Mr. SPROULE. The wharfs are generally taken over by the municipalities after the Government has built them.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). No.

Mr. SPROULE. I am quite sure of it, because I put a bill through myself with the assistance of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The municipality owning the wharf charge shippers for use of it, and the money is set apart for the repair of the wharf. Take Meaford, Thornbury and Penetanguishene, for instance, where the wharfs are all under the municipalities. Certain tolls are charged after they have been assented to by the Governor in Council.

Mr. DYMENT. That is not the way we have it in our part of the country, there is a regular toll which the Government have.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is handed over to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. SPROULE. Why should you refuse to do it on one side of the Georgian Bay and not do it on the other.

Mr. LISTER. On St. Joseph's Island they do that to help settlement.

Mr. BRITTON. If the tolls are of a very small amount this will be a continual bill of expense to the Dominion Government, because the cost of maintenance has to be borne by the Dominion Government, and in all quite a large item is proposed to be paid. If therefore the practice has not generally been as it has been stated by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) of passing these works over to the municipalities by legislation in that behalf, it would seem to me that it ought to be. If it is a fact that so many of these wharfs are being built for the convenience of the people and only a nominal toll is charged and that the maintenance year by year is charged to the Dominion Government, then some are getting a great convenience that others such as have been spoken of by the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) ought to get. I think that this is a matter which should be dealt with by the Minister of Public Works with the object of adopting some general system.

Mr. DYMENT. I said trifling in comparison to what the owner has been charging, and besides the toll that the merchant or farmer pays the Government are getting from every boat that calls from $2 to $2.50 every time they call. Boats from Collingwood, Owen Sound and other places frequently call, and this is a source of revenue.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think if the Government build wharfs they should control them. I know that year after year we have voted money for wharfs in Quebec and in the western part of Ontario, but at Toronto, Kingston, Brockville, Gananoque and all those points on Lake Ontario and the River St. Lawrence the wharfs are private property and have been built by private individuals who charge whatever tolls they like. If the Government own a portion of the wharfs they should control them all.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In the Maritime Provinces most of the wharfs are owned by private parties, but some are owned by the Government because they are considered to be of national importance.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Possibly some principle should be adopted by which aid should be given only to wharfs that are of national importance, that are of importance to the whole province or the whole Dominion. But I think we should not be asked to vote items of this kind that we really know nothing about. I do not know whether the Minister desires us to understand that all these wharfs in the country are Government wharfs or not.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Part of them are our property and others are not.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). On what principle does the Minister of Public Works proceed in regard to affording assistance to these wharfs. I can understand that if the wharf is of Dominion or provincial importance it may be desirable to afford it aid, but I do not understand that we should vote aid to other wharfs except under special circumstances which the Minister ought to explain to us. He has not given us information in respect to any of these wharfs, and I think before the item is passed the Minister ought to explain which of them are of national or provincial importance and as such are deserving of Dominion aid.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not asked for a cent for wharfs which are not our property.

Mr. WALLACE. Is there not a vote for Collingwood Harbour that belongs to Collingwood.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is not a wharf. I am speaking of wharfs now.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries stated that these amounts were voted for wharfs for national importance. I think that the wharfs at Kingston, Brockville and Gananoque, are of as great national importance as the wharf at Iberville for which $8,000 is being voted. The wharf at Kingston is at the foot of Lake Ontario where all the commerce of that great lake is landed. These certainly are wharfs of much national importance.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The national importance of it is that they are in the county that Mr. Tarte represents.

Mr. TAYLOR. I see. If the Government are making light tolls in certain portions of the province of Quebec, the people of the province of Ontario should have the same facilities for carrying on their trade.

Mr. QUINN. If these wharfs are Dominion wharfs they are passed over to the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Quite so.

Mr. QUINN. What system is adopted for fixing these tolls, and is the system uniform?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They are of a uniform rate.

Mr. QUINN. Are the same tolls charged on the Marksville wharf as on the Montmorency wharf?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. QUINN. That seems fair.

Fort Francis Lock..... $25,000

Mr. BERGERON. I think we heard something about the Fort Francis Lock before. What is this for?

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister cannot expect us to give $25,000 for this resurrection without knowing something about it?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is a monument to the Hon. Alex. Mackenzie's wisdom and foresight, and ought to have been built twenty years ago.

Mr. SPROULE. The trouble is that he was twenty years ahead of his time when he made the expenditure.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. St. Francis Lock was built in 1875 and it has been abandoned since, but to-day it is found to be a work of great importance in view of the development of the mining regions there. When that lock is repaired it will give about 200 miles more of navigation.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the completion of the lock enable you to go from Rainy Lake to Lake of the Woods?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, with a few improvements we are making in the Rainy River?

Mr. BERGERON. How much money has been spent already on that St. Francis Lock?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Government I understand has spent in the past $280,000.

Mr. DYMENT. As most hon. gentlemen know, probably the best mineral country in Canada is in the Seine River district. Most of the boats are on the Lake of the Woods and there is only one on Rainy Lake above the locks. All the supplies going into that country have to be transhipped there to this one little steamer, at very great inconvenience and cost. This work will help the mining interest in the Seine River district.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the depth of the water on the sill of the lock?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
Six feet.

Mr. HAGGART. Do you intend to have six feet all along on the Rainy River.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works to a matter that has been laid before him during the present session. I notice that for all along the shore of Lake Ontario, there is only a grant of $4,000 in these Estimates. The town of Bronte, an old Indian reserve, and a place of some considerable importance, midway between Toronto and Hamilton, has made a demand on the Minister some time during the session, through a deputation of the municipal council I am told, for improvements there. About a year ago an engineer was sent by the department to survey it, and he made a report. There is a very considerable amount of fishing done in that neighbourhood, and it is very important that the Government should resuscitate the pier, and put the harbour in such a shape that the people may transact their business. I know the work is of pressing need, and I would be very glad indeed if the Minister would look into the engineer's reports in his department and take the matter into his consideration.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Minister's own friends in that section of the country are very anxious that he should make the harbour useful for the people of that neighbourhood.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
My chief engineer will take a note of my hon. friend's remarks.

Harbours and Rivers—Manitoba—Lake Manitoba—Opening of additional outlets to prevent overflow of lake, and maintenance of same at proper level for navigation purposes..... $25,000

Mr. BRITTON. This lake is a very large lake, and a vote of $25,000 for such a purpose as is named here, unless there is some explanation of it, seems a strange one.

Mr. HAGGART. I never knew that it was an objection to navigation that a lake would rise above its ordinary level.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The real facts of the case are that the rising of the water in Lake Manitoba is causing very damaging floods, and that to make these floods impossible for the future, it is necessary to deepen the outlet of the lake. I caused a survey to be made, and the report is that with this sum we shall be able to deepen the channel in such a way as to prevent the recurrence of these floods in the future.

Mr. TARTE.

Mr. HAGGART. Then, the Minister asks for a grant of money for the purpose of preventing a lake overflowing private property. On what principle does he justify that? According to his statement, it is not for navigation purposes at all.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The effect of the work will be first to prevent the overflow of the lake, and at the same time to improve navigation.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. In regard to this item, I may perhaps be able to give the committee a little information. Lake Manitoba and Lake Winnipegosis are the natural basins for the drainage of a large part of north-western Manitoba. Into these lakes the water from a large number of streams and from an enormous area of land flows. The outlet of Lake Manitoba is very narrow. The only outlet is Fairford River, which flows into Lake St. Martin, and thence through the Little Saskatchewan, the water finds its way into Lake Winnipeg. There is a fall of 100 feet between the two lakes. This small outlet is blocked with boulders and silt, until after a succession of wet years and heavy snowfalls in Manitoba, a large area of north-western Manitoba is partially inundated. Not only land owned by private persons, but an enormous area of valuable Government land is flooded, and a large settlement of Icelanders who settled on the west shore of Lake Manitoba have been forced to leave their homesteads. The settlers all around Lake Manitoba, engaged in ranching and fishing, are being forced to leave their houses. Lake Manitoba is situated on the north side of Portage Plains, an exceedingly fertile and valuable region, and some 40,000 acres of valuable wheat land occupied by settlers who have put up fine houses and other buildings, is being inundated. An inundation took place in 1882, after which we had a series of dry years; we have recently had a succession of wet years, and these people are being driven back from their homes again. As an economical measure, this is a small sum compared with what will be saved by the drainage of the lake. As regards navigation, the idea is to keep the lake at its normal level, to widen the outlet without deepening it in such a way that the navigation on the lake will not be destroyed. I understand that the department have had thorough surveys and reports made on this question, and are well advised in asking for this sum of money. I know that the people in my constituency are exceedingly anxious to have this work carried out. I have been receiving letters and telegrams about it for some time back. In fact, it has been a live question for years, because people knew that the lake would at some time again overflow its banks and make trouble. I am very much pleased to see this sum in the Estimates, and I am sure it will benefit a very large section of Manitoba, because it involves not only the district immediately surrounding Lake Manitoba, but a much larger area, for, owing to the country being so flat, the water is dammed back for a considerable distance.

Mr. HAGGART. The only reason the hon. gentleman has given for this grant that I can see it that the Government own some lands there. I was not aware that the Government owned any lands there that we have not granted to railway companies. Those that we have not granted to railway companies will, I suppose, come under the designation of swamp lands which belong to the Manitoba Government. The hon. gentleman has made a very strong argument for provincial assistance, to prevent the lake overflowing its banks, but he has made no argument for assistance from the Dominion Government for that purpose.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. If the hon. gentleman will look over the geography of the country, he will find that the Dominion owns a very large quantity of land around Lake Manitoba and Lake Winnipegosis.

Mr. HAGGART. I think I am acquainted with the geography of the country, and I think that all the land belonging to the Dominion in that country is set apart or scheduled to the different railways there, and those lands in which the odd sections are reserved belong to the Manitoba Government under our agreement with them.

Mr. QUINN. What is to be the whole cost of this work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We do not expect to spend more than this $25,000, and so far as I am concerned, I do not intend to spend any more.

Mr. QUINN. It seems a small amount for the work to be done, and it would be useless to undertake it if you are spending what is insufficient.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. It will be quite sufficient.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The report I have is that $25,000 is sufficient for the work proposed.

Harbours and Rivers—British Columbia—
Columbia River—Improvements in narrows between Upper and Lower Arrow Lakes..... $10,000

Mr. FOSTER. What depth will that give?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Seven feet at low water.

Mr. FOSTER. What width of channel?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. One hundred feet

Mr. FOSTER. Does this take in the whole construction?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief engineer tells me that to complete the work would require about $25,000.

Mr. FOSTER. So that this is only to do part of it. Is it intended to make the whole channel a uniform depth of less than seven feet, or is it proposed to do a portion of it fully?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We intend to do a portion of it fully, and then go on with the balance of the work.

Fraser River—Improvement of ship channel, additional amount..... $50,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.

I want to take the House into my confidence about that item because it is a very large sum indeed to ask, and before I put it in the Estimates I hesitated very much. I visited British Columbia a few months ago and inspected all the works. As hon. gentlemen know, we have expended about $600,000 on them, and have about 21 feet of water between New Westminster and the sea. I have a little plan here which will explain the whole thing. At the end of the works is Western Isle. We have built up a channel in the Fraser River by means of matrices. At the end of these matrices is Western Island, and the current is now threatening to destroy Western Island and pass behind the works. If this happened our works would be altogether destroyed. The river is the most difficult in America perhaps, according to the engineer. The current and floods are terrible during spring, and Western Island is the basis of all the work. If that island were destroyed, our works would all disappear. I have already had a report from Mr. Gamble, the late engineer, and also from my engineer who has visited the river himself, and both agree that it is necessary to spend that amount of money to protect our works. A few days ago I received a telegram from Mr. Roy, stating that if we did not spend immediately that sum of money, our works certainly would be destroyed, so that I was face to face with the fact that works on which we had spent $600,000 would be destroyed if I did not obtain a vote for the amount I ask.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the hon. gentleman going to do it by days' work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, we have done that in the past. We are well equipped for that sort of work.

Maria Street Bridge, over the Rideau
Canal, Ottawa—Reconstruction .....$10,000

Mr. HAGGART. Does the city contribute anything?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Both the city and the Canada Atlantic Railway are to pay their share of the work and I will not spend a dollar if they do not pay their share.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the share the Canada Atlantic Railway will have to pay?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Booth will be obliged to build in iron the part of the bridge he has built in wood. I may say that the shares have not been defined, but I have had several interviews with both Mr. Booth and the Mayor of Ottawa. I understand that the Government is bound to pay one-third.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman does not intend to spend anything unless the proportion which is at present agreed upon between the city and the Dominion shall be adhered to. And Mr. Booth is to complete the diversion caused by the extension of his railway into the city.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Quite so.

Prince Edward Island—To provide for the purchase of the following wharfs on the Hillsboro' River from the provincial government, by paying for each wharf the amount expended on it, from the 1st of July, 1873, to the 30th of June, 1897, together with interest at 5 per cent per annum, viz.:

For Red Point Wharf....	$4,028 31
For Haggarty's Wharf....	5,745 00
For Cranberry Wharf....	2,069 85

Mr. FOSTER. This is an item we want some explanation about.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Some years ago, after the decision in Holman vs. Green, the Government of which my hon. friends (Mr. Haggart and Mr. Foster) were members, purchased from the local government of Prince Edward Island those piers which were deemed of national importance. They sent an engineer down to examine all the piers of the island and reports were made upon them. Some piers were taken and some were rejected. But the provincial Government refused to abide by the conclusion of the engineer, and pressed for other piers to be taken, on the ground that they were of national importance. So far as the piers here named are concerned, the late Government practically adopted the first named, the Red Point wharf, and, about four years ago had a sum voted to put it into proper repair. But it was never formally taken over. Now, Haggarty's wharf and Cranberry wharf are on the same arm of the sea, the Hillsboro' River, which runs up twenty miles and has some 7 or 8 piers upon it. I may say that the steamers run twice a week up that river as far as Mount Stewart. The Government decided that it would not be fair to take any of the piers on the north side of the river because though, years ago they were useful and might be considered of national importance, after the railway was built, they were not deemed of national importance, because all the shipping was done by the railway on the south side, and therefore they rejected the claim of the local Government with respect to the piers on the north side of the river. With respect to the south side, the Red Point pier was recognized as one that should be taken over by the late Government and they voted the money for its repairs three or four years ago. So only two, Haggarty's wharf and Cranberry wharf which stood in exactly the same position as Red Point wharf, have yet to be decided. When my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) submitted to me the petition of the local Government that, these wharfs should be taken over, I told them my personal judgment was that, they should be taken over, but that I thought he would not be right in taking them over unless he had the report of an impartial engineer on that point. So he sent Mr. Hagan, maritime engineer at St. John, and he made a report on the wharfs on both sides of the river. After reading it carefully over in Council, and reading what I had to say upon it, the Government decided to strike out all the other wharfs except these three, but decided that these were fairly within the rule laid down in Holman vs. Green. The engineer's report was strongly to the effect that these were of national importance and should be taken over.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the price paid?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Only the actual cash paid up by the provincial Government.

Mr. HAGGART. Do I understand that they claim that these wharfs should belong to the Dominion under some arrangements of the terms of confederation?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, not of confederation. It was not thought by the lawyers of the maritime provinces that these piers belonged to the Dominion. But a trial took place in the Supreme Court known as Holman vs. Green, and in that case it was decided that these wharfs belonged to the Dominion. Consequent upon that decision, the Government—I do not know whether the hon. member (Mr. Haggart) was a member of it—took over the piers of Prince Edward Island to the amount, if my memory serves me right, of about $120,000. My hon. friend from East Queen's (Mr. Martin) can tell what the amount was.

Mr. MARTIN. I think it was something less than $100,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. When these wharfs had been taken over, a request was made to the local Government: Let us settle accounts and give us a clear receipt. But the local Government, then a Conservative Government, refused to do that. They refused to accept the decision as final. But certain wharfs were taken over by the Dominion Government, and others were not. But subsequently the Government practically took over Red Point wharf, and had money voted to put it in repair. The question then arose as to Cranberry and Hillsboro' wharfs. An engineer was sent and the conclusion was reached that most of the wharfs were to be left to the local Government, but these were so near the rule laid down in Holman vs. Green that they had to be taken over.

Mr. MARTIN. I am very much pleased that these three wharfs are taken by the Dominion Government. While I say that, I think it is rather unfortunate that the question has been taken up at all by the Dominion Government unless the whole question in regard to these wharfs in Prince Edward Island is taken up.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We cannot do everything in a day, you know.

Mr. MARTIN. But the hon. Minister of Marine told me the other day—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is so much conversation I cannot hear my hon. friend (Mr. Martin).

Mr. MARTIN. If the Chairman would stop the conversation, perhaps I could be heard better. I think if there is anything inopportune about this, that inopportune-ness is in the hon. Minister allowing this question to be taken up only partly. The three wharfs that he mentioned are near Charlottetown in the district which the Premier of Prince Edward Island represents.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. And the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) also.

Mr. MARTIN. I know that.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Does the hon. gentleman oppose this?

Mr. MARTIN. No, I do not oppose it. But I say it is unfortunate—and I hope the hon. gentleman is hearing me, if he does not hear me I will try to speak louder—that the Government in taking up this question did not take up the whole question of the wharfs in Prince Edward Island. No person was louder in his denunciations of this course than the hon. Minister of Marine himself. I say that from the expectations which he raised in the minds of the people of Prince Edward Island, it was thought that when he occupied a seat in the Cabinet, not only these wharfs but others would be taken over by the Government. The hon. gentleman knows that it is only a small number of wharfs that should have been included in this list. I wish to call his especial attention to the wharf at Murray Bay. If I do not mistake, a memorial has been forwarded to the Government last spring about that particular wharf. I know that a meeting was called during the winter season which was attended by the two local members—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I hope the hon. gentleman will leave that matter open because he knows the intention of the Government with regard to the railway.

Mr. MARTIN. What railway?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. From Murray River to Belfast.

Mr. MARTIN. Does that interfere with the wharf?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No; but I hope the whole question will be left in abeyance.

Mr. MARTIN. What connection can there be between a wharf and a railway? If the hon. gentleman wishes to shirk this question—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not shirking; I do not say that it ought not to be taken.

Mr. MARTIN. I wish to inform the committee that the provincial representatives, friends of the hon. Minister himself, agreed to memorialize the Government in regard to the expenditure at Murray River. There is no doubt that the wharf at Murray River is just as important as any of these wharfs which are mentioned in this item. I need not remind him, also, of the pier to which I called the attention of the Minister of Public Works several times and as to which I have not yet received a decided answer. I refer to the pier at Bell River. When this engineer went down to Prince Edward Island it is a pity he did not visit Murray River and Bell River. I might also mention a few others. There is McAuley's wharf, and a wharf at Alexandria. Either of these wharfs are of just as much national importance as those which are mentioned in this item. I am astonished that we have no information in regard to this pier at Bell River, but that is not all that I have to complain of. While this money is voted, it is not voted to put these wharfs in repair. What is this money for? It is money voted for the local government, but those wharfs are to continue in the same miserable condition that they are in now. I do not say that the local government may not want this money very badly, they are friends of the hon. gentleman. But instead of this money being spent on repairs for those wharfs, it is to be paid over to the provincial government to extricate them out of their straits. While I am pleased to see these wharfs taken over, I am sorry that there is no item to put them in good repair. I wish also to call the attention of the Minister to the wharf at Red Point, as I called it to his attention last session. While this money of $4,028.31, is to be paid on account of that wharf, there is not one dollar to be spent upon it; while there are $5,745 to be paid for Haggarty's wharf, and $2,069.85 for Cranberry wharf, there is not one dollar to be expended on them. Where is that money going? The hon. gentleman may stand up here and make it appear that these wharfs are to be built, but there is not one dollar going to be spent on these wharfs, this money is going into the provincial treasury. I thought after the argument used by the Minister of Finance to-night in regard to getting a post office at a small village in Nova Scotia because that village had not received any railway subsidy. I thought if that argument was good when applied to small villages all over this Dominion, it should apply with still greater force to a whole province. If any hon. gentleman can stand up and say that he demands a post office for a place because they have no railways built at the Government expense, what is to be said in favour of a whole province whose claims date from confederation. It appears that there is one argument to suit the case of a Minister in one province, and another argument for a private member in another province. Now, if the Minister of Public Works wishes to deal fairly in regard to those wharfs, he will send an engineer down to the province of Prince Edward Island and re-examine, as he did in these three cases, the other wharfs which the late Government has not taken over, so that eventually even-handed justice may be done all round. The memorial which the premier of Prince Edward Island presented here only includes the wharfs in his own district, leaving wharfs equally important in other sections of the island without any mention being made of them. The hon. gentleman knows that there are many wharfs in Prince Edward Island equally important with these. I think the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who assumes a paternal care over the interest of Prince Edward Island, has done that province a great injury by taking these wharfs over without going into the whole question. There are other wharfs of national importance that are not included among those situated on this small river. No doubt these are of importance, but not one dollar is to be expended on them. I think that not only should those wharfs be examined by an engineer, but all these other wharfs which are not assumed by the Dominion Government, should also be examined. Now, I wish the Minister of Public Works to tell me if he is going to send an engineer down to inspect that work at Bell River; and he might also include Murray River.

Mr. MARTIN.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not want to debate this matter. I am sorry my hon. friend has talked about the Hillsborough River as a small river. Everybody knows that it is an arm of the sea. I have seen five British battleships at one time anchored in that river.

Mr. MARTIN. Just excuse me for a moment. The hon. gentleman takes a particular pleasure in trying to misrepresent me. I did not say small river. A small river—I am sure it is not as large as the St. Lawrence. Certainly it is small, comparatively, as I suppose I am small compared with the hon. gentleman who is now a belted knight. The East River is small compared with the Amazon or the St. Lawrence. I think the hon. gentleman says that in order to be reported in "Hansard" and to make a case against me in Prince Edward Island. I would remark, for the benefit of this committee that I am going to give the hon. gentleman a warning. Every time I attempt to say anything in this House the hon. gentleman has taken particular pains to belittle me and to misrepresent me. But, Sir, so long as I have a seat in this House I will strike out for fair-play, and the hon. gentleman, great as he is, and orator as he is, will find that I am not going to be put down or misrepresented by him.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman misunderstands me. I did not wish to misrepresent him or to put him down. If the hon. gentleman did not speak of this place as a small river, I will say nothing more about it. It is a very large arm of the sea. But he don't oppose this vote, he says it should be more extensive. Well, I dare say that my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works may be induced to make a further examination of these Bell River and Alexandria wharfs, and other wharfs that may at some future time be considered. But we are all agreed that these ought to be included, so there is no more controversy about the matter. The wharfs were reported to be in first-class condition by the engineer who was sent there. There is no occasion for any more repairs at present. I do not see why we should get into a political fight about this. We have already taken a vote for $5,000 for the purpose of purchasing Creosote piles for general repairs for the wharfs. I am sure that my hon. friend will agree that this is a step in the right direction. Instead of having these ordinary hemlock or spruce piles, we have done away with them and we propose to get creosote piles to repair them with, and we have brought down this vote.

Mr. HAGGART. I am opposed entirely to it. I have never heard a reason advanced why the Dominion Government should take over these provincial works, and especially after taking them over why they should pay for the amount expended by the provincial governments hitherto. The only argument that I have heard advanced that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has advanced in regard to it was the decision in some case.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, in the case of Holman vs. Green.

Mr. HAGGART. I did not mean the decision in that case. That only referred to the jurisdiction.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman's own Government adopted that decision and took over a large number of wharfs in pursuance of it, and others were left in doubt. For those which were taken over they paid $100,000.

Mr. HAGGART. If these works were taken over as a matter of Dominion or national importance it was not a matter of necessity at all, but of option. The most extraordinary argument that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries uses for the purpose of taking over those wharfs is the one used in regard to the wharf on which there was expended $4,028.31 by the provincial government and when it comes to the Dominion Government there will be a further expenditure. Because the Dominion Government expends a sum of money for repairing the works and the provincial government says we are liable for all of the money expended by the provincial government on that work. All the works are precisely in the same position, and he believes they ought to be taken over too. This is the argument of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I hope the argument of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will have no influence with the Minister of Public Works, and we will not be taking over works in regard to which the statement will be made that they are of national importance. In taking over these works and assuming all the expenditure that has hitherto been made we are undertaking a little too much.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was about to suggest something in the line that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) has just mentioned. I do not quite understand why anything held in Holman vs. Green would make it necessary or desirable to take over these wharfs, and particularly I do not see why on account of anything decided in Holman vs. Green it should be necessary or expedient to repay to the provincial governments the amounts which the provincial governments have expended upon these wharfs. A principle of that kind might involve this Government in some conclusions which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries does not at present foresee. For example I think a logical result of this principle which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has laid down, would be that the Government of Canada would be obliged to repay to the province of Nova Scotia all the subsidies given to railways that were subsequently declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada. There are in Nova Scotia a number of railways which have been declared to be railways for the general advantage of Canada. I believe there is now outstanding a claim by the province of Nova Scotia for a refund of subsidies expended by the province of Nova Scotia upon these railways. I am not desirous of dealing with the merits of that question, but I merely desire to put it interrogatively to the Minister whether or not the principle which he has laid down to the committee to-night would not logically involve the conclusion that the Dominion Government should repay to the province these important subsidies. It strikes me at present that it would involve that, and, if so, this fact would involve a very important matter both to this Dominion and to the province of Nova Scotia. The hon. gentleman has probably a much better acquaintance than I have with the case of Holman vs. Green, of which I have nothing more than a general recollection, and I would like to ask him or the Solicitor General, who no doubt has the case in mind, whether or not the decision in that case is in any way touched by the judgment of the Supreme Court which is now on appeal to the Privy Council. I have not examined that judgment critically nor the judgment in Holman vs. Green.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I argued the case of Holman vs. Green myself. The decision in Holman vs. Green was to the effect that the bottoms of the harbours belonged to the Dominion of Canada, and in the course of that argument it was intimated that the piers were within subsection B of the Dominion Act and became the property of the Dominion of Canada. That was the decision. The late Government, of which my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) was a member, acted upon that decision. They sent a commissioner very properly to Prince Edward Island to see what Dominion piers were within the decision of Holman vs. Green, and he reported that A, B, C, D and so on were within the decision. The moment they made that report the Dominion Government became owners of these piers and the local government said "you must pay us what we have paid upon them." They said "all right." Then there was the question as to whether the other class, E, F, G, H, were within the decision. The Dominion Government contended that they were not, and the provincial government contended that they were. The Dominion Government paid over $100,000 for those piers in regard to which there was no dispute, leaving the others in regard to which there was a dispute.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Was it a question of fact?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is a question of fact. The question was whether the pier was a pier coming within the meaning of the Dominion Act. The Government sent a commission to determine that fact because it depended upon that fact whether the piers to be taken over by the Dominion Government were of Dominion or local importance. There was no other criterion that could be suggested. The late Government took over a large number of piers and paid for them. But they did not take over three or four piers which the provincial government thought that they should. Subsequently the late Government practically adopted the Red Point pier and paid $600 or $700 to repair it. They practically made it their own. This question was pressed year after year. The provincial government said, "There are three or four more piers that you have not taken; you must take them and bear the expenditure because they are Dominion piers within the meaning of the British North America Act and within the decision of Holman vs. Green. The Government sent down the Dominion engineer to go over the ground and he has reported. This Government is determined not to accept the contention of the local government in regard to seven or eight piers, but they accept the decision of the engineer in regard to these three cases. They think they are of such clear Dominion importance as to justify our taking them over from the provincial government and paying the expenditure that the provincial government has made upon them. There is a larger number of piers in that same estuary that the Dominion Government do not propose taking over. All the piers upon the north side of the river they did not take over at all. It is only a distinction between a wharf which is used for local purposes, and a Dominion pier.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not understand whether the commission the hon. gentleman speaks of, went to Prince Edward Island for the purpose of deciding a question of fact, or, as the Solicitor General has pointed out, the question was of law. Does the hon. gentleman remember what Holman vs. Green decided with respect to the facts necessary to give the Dominion Parliament jurisdiction?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is some years since I had my attention specially called to the case, but my recollection is: The schedules of the British North America Act declared that public harbours shall belong to the Dominion of Canada, and that piers shall belong to the Dominion of Canada. Piers evidently did not mean every little local wharf erected for a local purpose. Then the question came: What is a pier? That was not a question decided by the court, but the Dominion and local governments between them determined which were piers in the meaning of the British North America Act and which were local wharfs. That commission took over a large number of piers, and we paid for them, but two or three were left in dispute, and the dispute has been continued from year to year. Now, a second commission has determined that these three piers should be taken over by the Dominion. I do not dispute what my hon. friend from East Queen's (Mr. Martin) says, that we may have to take over two more. Perhaps we may. He speaks of Alexandria and Belle Creek piers. Perhaps they may be taken hereafter. At present, after discussing the matter with the Minister of Public Works, we decided that the evidence with regard to these three piers were so clear that we had to recommend them being taken over.

Mr. HAGGART. I understood that the judgment in that case was that it gave jurisdiction over the foreshore.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No; it said that these piers were the property of the Dominion Government.

Mr. HAGGART. Then the Provincial Government would have the right to collect this money from the Dominion Government and it is not optional with the Dominion Government.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is correct.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In justice to the late Government, I ought to say that the province of Nova Scotia has already received the advantage, as respects her wharfs and piers, which under this arrangement is now granted to Prince Edward Island. Some years ago, while I was Prime Minister of the province, I thought I had a fair claim on the Dominion, and I based it on the argument that as respects a number of these piers they had expended Dominion money upon them. I am glad to say that to the extent of $70,000 the Dominion Government recognized this claim of the province of Nova Scotia. They did not give us all we asked for, but we do not get all we ask for in this world.

Mr. BORDEN. They did not give you all you expected?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) was connected with the matter professionally, but I think he has forgotten it. They did accept a very considerable number of these piers and breakwaters, and recognized them as Dominion works. I was glad to be able to receive from the late Government—although our Government was politically opposed to them—the sum of $70,000 upon the principle which Prince Edward Island is now getting the benefit of.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does my hon. friend the Solicitor General consider Holman vs. Green in any way touched on the case recently decided by the Supreme Court of Canada, and now in appeal?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) refers no doubt to the fishery case? He is aware that the judges did not all agree in the answers they gave to the questions. I think one of the judges said he would not be bound by the decision in Holman vs. Green, but on the whole the answers are on the line of the judgment in that case. In my own province the beds and foreshores of harbours are under the control of the Dominion Government.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understood from some one who heard the argument in the Supreme Court of Canada, that it seemed to proceed on the line of acquiescence in the case of Holman vs. Green.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The kernel was in the question: Did they declare that we should have jurisdiction, or that the property was in the Dominion? They declared the property was in the Dominion.

Mr. MARTIN. This matter was thoroughly discussed in the House some years ago, and the views which are advanced by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) and by the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) are not tenable in this case. I am pleased to see that the Minister of Finance has come to the rescue of Prince Edward Island in regard to this item. I wish to call attention to the remarks of the Minister of Marine (Sir Louis Davis). He thinks that because I agree heartily that these three wharfs should be taken over, I should sit down in my seat and say nothing at all.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Oh, oh.

Mr. MARTIN. That was the gist of his remarks. I pointed out to him that there were a good many others besides the wharfs I have mentioned. These four or five wharfs which I have mentioned are in my own riding, and the hon. gentleman knows that there are wharfs in King's County and wharfs in different parts of the province, which are of Dominion importance and should have been taken over by the Dominion Government years ago. I think that this Government have begun well in this matter, and I am going to give them praise for doing what they have done. However, they should go a little further, and since they have taken up the matter, now let the engineer make an examination of these wharfs which have not been taken over, and see how many of them are of Dominion importance. The wharfs in Prince Edward Island are more numerous proportionately than in other parts of the Dominion; but are not expensive structures; that is necessarily so, as the province is densely populated, and the people must get out their products largely by water. I would be very pleased if this whole matter had been gone into, and I feel that some of this money should be expended on these wharfs.

Department of Agriculture—To pay John Leafloor, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary, the sum of $100, being the difference between $300 per annum and $400 per annum..... $100

Mr. HAGGART. Why do you require this vote?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This messenger is a man who was put on at the time of the census, and he has been paid $500 a year. When I wished to make him a permanent messenger in the department, I had to put him back to $300 a year; but as I found him a very efficient officer, and as I put him in charge of the messenger service of the department, I decided to allow him $400.

Supreme Court—To provide a salary of $900 to R. G. Davis..... $100

Mr. HAGGART. What is the reason of this increase?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. He is secretary to the judges of the Supreme Court, and at the request of the judges his salary is increased to $900.

Mr. HAGGART. Why do you increase his salary more than the regular statutory allowance?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not think he comes within the statutory allowance at all. He was recommended by the judges for a larger increase, and we made it very moderate.

Mr. HAGGART. They will recommend anything. I do not know any reason why he should get more than the statutory increase.

Mr. BRITTON. I agree with what the hon. gentleman says. I would not take the recommendation of the judges for an increase of salary.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I know Mr. Davis. He is a very deserving man indeed, and I think he ought to get the increase.

Mr. HAGGART. He is a lawyer, and he will get the support of every lawyer in the House.

Gratuities to penitentiary officials to be retired..... $5,000

Mr. HAGGART. Have you a list of the officials to be retired?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have not the list.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman must have a list on which this sum is based.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There were four or five mentioned by name as certain to be retired at Kingston. There is a number expected to be dismissed, I understand, from the St. Vincent de Paul. That cannot be ascertained until the report is made.

Mr. HAGGART. I heard the hon. gentleman say most distinctly with reference to Kingston penitentiary that he intended to dispense with the services of four or five. That would not make up the amount.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We began with Kingston, and from there we went to St. Vincent de Paul, and from St. Vincent de Paul we should go to Stony Mountain. If the results are what we met in Kingston, $4,000 or $5,000 would be fairly adequate.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the principle upon which the gratuity is based?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It depends on salary and length of service.

Mr. WALLACE. I presume there will be no gratuities to those whom the commissioners recommend should be dismissed?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No gratuities will be given to those who are not entitled to them.

To pay expenses of commission appointed to inquire into the Algoma election.... $547 30

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). That election was held on the 30th June and not the 23rd, and an inquiry was instituted to ascertain why it had been postponed. The election had been ordered for an earlier date. The writ was issued in time for the election to be held at an earlier date, but it was not. Mr. John Trerar, Q.C., of Toronto, was appointed commissioner, and went to Algoma to investigate. The returning officer was a Mr. Plummer. I could not give all the particulars without reading the whole commission.

Mr. HAGGART. Surely the facts could be briefly stated without the hon. gentleman having to refer to the commission.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, there could not. The writ was sent to the returning officer in ample time for him to have held the election on the 23rd of June. Instead of issuing the writ he returned it to Ottawa.

Mr. COCHRANE. Could he not have been summoned before the Bar of the House?

Mr. HAGGART.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The writ was evidently received by him in time, but he returned it to Ottawa, and it was found in the hands of one of the officers of my department. It was brought to this officer's room by a messenger without word or explanation, and I cannot tell why the writ was not executed. The election was held at a later day.

Mr. WALLACE. By the same returning officer?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes. The case certainly demanded an explanation, and I do not think the explanation was altogether satisfactory.

Mr. WALLACE. You have paid $547 to a gentleman to ask the revising officer why he did not hold the election on the 23rd of June instead of the 30th.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not to ask why, but to find out why.

Mr. WALLACE. The writ was returned to the same returning officer and he held the election. I should like to know why we should give $547 to Mr. Trerar merely to ask a question.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If a writ is issued by the proper authorities, the returning officer must obey it, and it is a very serious thing not to obey a writ. Such a thing might have a very serious effect on the whole political condition of the Dominion. We want to know why he did not obey the writ. The hon. member for East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) says he could have summoned him before the Bar of the House, but that is considerably more expensive than sending a man to Algoma to make an inquiry and examine witnesses.

Mr. WALLACE. Could this man not have been asked why it was he delayed the writ? He was an officer of the Government.

Mr. SPROULE. There is another point and that is whether the hon. member for Algoma is sitting here legally as the member for Algoma. We have no report of the commission, and we do not know whether it was held regularly or not. This is a matter which should come before the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). With all deference to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, it seems to me a remarkable proceeding to issue a commission to investigate the conduct of the returning officer without first demanding an explanation from him. His course was regular or it was irregular. If regular, there was no need of a commission; if irregular the first thing to do would be to ask him for an explanation of his conduct. Suppose a business corporation appointed an agent to do a particular thing, and that agent conducted himself in an irregular manner, would the business men in whose employ he was issue a commission to investigate his conduct without first asking an explanation. I do not know whether the matter is one for a commission or not—we have not the papers before us to judge of that. But, giving the Government the benefit of the doubt, and assuming that this was a matter with which a commissioner might properly deal. I do not think that there was any justification for sending out that commission without first asking for an explanation, which the Government might possibly have obtained at the expense of a postage stamp.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That was tried.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understood that it was not.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman could hardly have understood that from anything that was said on this side.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understood the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to say that it was of no use to ask for an explanation, and that led me to understand that no explanation had been asked.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That may have been my fault in explaining. The Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) said there were circumstances so suspicious about that case that the Government thought it worth while to issue a commission to ascertain why he kept it back.

Mr. WALLACE. What were the circumstances?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The officer was ordered to hold an election but failed to do so. And he has given no explanation.

Mr. WALLACE. Was an explanation asked?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, but none was received. The officer in charge of these matters, the clerk of the Crown in Chancery, was applied to and he had no explanation to give. We thought that this was not a matter merely of party importance but of national importance, and that the officer to whom the task of holding an election was committed should hold that election or else make a return to this House setting forth why he did not. If this was allowed to go on without inquiry, every returning officer might take the matter into his own hands and say: I know that the House of Commons does not care, and I will hold an election or not just as I please. The intention of the Government was, if he was guilty of wilful fraud, to punish him, and the commission was issued to ascertain the facts. I think that hon. gentlemen in this House will agree that we did the right thing.

Mr. SPROULE. What was the finding of the commission?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It will be brought down and laid on the Table.

Mr. SPROULE. But it should be brought down and laid on the Table before we are asked to vote this item.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The question of finding has nothing to do with the voting of the money, and the question is whether the commission should be issued or not, and the finding has nothing to do with that.

Mr. QUINN. Before this item is passed, I desire to say that a different course should have been pursued. I understand we are now voting the Estimates for the year ending the 30th June, 1898. It appears, that the Government have allowed two years to elapse without consulting the committee appointed by this House for the purpose of dealing with just such questions as this. If any steps had to be taken for the investigation of an election which was held or which should have been held on the 23rd June last, I think those steps should have been taken in the committee on—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Will my hon. friend permit me? We are willing and more than willing to allow the item to stand and bring down the report.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is not Algoma one of the constituencies where the returning officer has discretion in holding an election?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There is no use wasting time on the matter. We will let the item stand and bring down the report.

Mr. QUINN. Will the next items stand also?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. These are different altogether. The Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) will explain them all.

To provide for payment to deputy returning officers, enumerators and others, the amounts withheld by the returning officers on these districts:

Alberta.....	$2,519 05
South Victoria.....	145 11
Chateauguay.....	41 12

————— $2,695 28

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). This is a very simple matter. A man named Quinn was appointed returning officer in Alberta. After the election and after he had made his return, he filed accounts for amounts due to deputy returning officers and enumerators of $13,800.63. These amounts were taxed by the Auditor General down to $7,505.62. The returning officer had received an advance from the Government of $5,200, and he applied the whole of the money he received not to pay the accounts as taxed by the Auditor General but to pay accounts as he alleged them to be himself. Therefore there was a deficiency. Now, we ask the House to give us $3,719.05, to pay the enumerators and the deputy returning officers who have received nothing in accordance with the accounts as taxed by the Auditor General.

Mr. QUINN. Does the same explanation apply to South Victoria?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Absolutely the same explanation, except that in the case of Alberta, the returning officer, under a show of right and a pretense that he has a right to money, has refused to pay over. But in the other cases the returning officers made default and disappeared.

Quarantine—Towards necessary steps for the prevention of the spread of tuberculosis in cattle throughout the Dominion $20,000

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. (Mr. Fisher). A great deal of attention has lately been turned to this matter of tuberculosis in cattle. I have received many appeals from all parts of the country to deal with it, and I felt that in the interest of the health of the people in this country as well as of the health of the animals themselves, some investigation, or at all events, some educational process, ought to be undertaken in regard to dealing with this disease. I find there is a good deal of fear in regard to it throughout the country, a fear which I think is not altogether justified by the facts, because I am satisfied that on the whole the cattle in Canada are as healthy or perhaps more healthy than those of any other country. At the same time this disease does exist in Canada, and I find that the farmers throughout the country, through ignorance of the disease and of the way it is propagated among the herds, are unintentionally allowing it to spread when it might be arrested. I wish to do something towards informing the farmers and stock keepers in regard to this disease, and of the way in which its spread may be stopped, and to inform them of the steps necessary to guard the health of the people in the country from the spread of tuberculosis, or consumption, from the cattle to the human animal. I have not yet actually formulated the details of a plan by which this may be done. A good deal has been said about compensation for slaughtered animals, but I propose to be very careful indeed about entering upon a plan of that nature. It is possible that in any instance that may come before me where it is clearly shown that there is absolute necessity in the public interest for slaughtering animals, I may perhaps on certain occasions order the slaughter, and then feel bound to compensate under the law which requires, in other contagious diseases, that where an animal is diseased the compensation should be one-third the original value of the animal. But I may say that I hesitate very greatly indeed to adopt a regular system of compensation; and the vote I ask for here is not such a sum of money as will at all enable me to undertake a general compensation. Not only so, but I do not propose to enter upon any course of compulsory testing. I say this in order that people may not fear that I intend to pursue that course which has been pursued in some of the states, where the state has undertaken to compel people to make the test contrary to their will. I do not wish to undertake that at all.

Mr. HENDERSON. I wish to draw the attention of the Minister—and I do not see any other item in which I can refer to it—to a new disease which has broken out amongst the fruit trees in the Niagara Peninsula and is causing considerable alarm there. I think some half a dozen members of the House of Commons, myself amongst them, received telegrams the other day urging strongly that some action be taken in reference to this matter. I understood the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Bain) Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, brought this matter to the attention of the Minister. I hope in the interest of the people in that section who are very much alarmed over this matter, that he is doing something to prevent the importation of trees that are diseased. I think that absolute prohibition should be applied, if necessary, to prevent that disease from coming into the country.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This matter has been brought to my attention by formal resolutions sent in from a meeting which was held at Hamilton and a previous meeting held in the Niagara district. I have taken them into careful consideration, and have consulted the horticulturist and botanist about it, and I propose to make such investigation as will enable me to prevent the spread of the disease. So far it has been found in only four places in the whole of Canada, and I believe there is very little if any more disease in the country than that. But I propose thoroughly investigating it, and at the ensuing session of Parliament, if any such prohibitory measures are found to be necessary. I shall ask Parliament to give me power to carry them out.

Immigration—Further amount required for general immigration expenses..... $25,000

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The reason of that is found in the adoption of the policy of advertising through Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Belgium, Holland and Germany; and the officers of the department estimate that the expense of this advertising will amount to the sum asked.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the Minister of Agriculture give us information about those Galicians who have gone across the line? I see an item in one of the North-west papers saying that it cost us $1,000 to bring them into the country, and now they have gone out of it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The item before the House now is simply for advertising, as I have explained. The hon. gentleman's question is not one that I object to at all, but it has nothing expressly to do with the vote immediately before the committee.

Mr. SPROULE. But in that is involved the question as to whether it is wisdom to advertise for a class of people that come to this country and do not stay here. I ask the question in connection with this item, as I am not aware of any other item for immigration to be considered, when I could get the information.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I admit the hon. gentleman is well within his rights in asking for this information, but I have not got it. All the information I have is that this vote is for the special purpose that I have mentioned.

Mr. WALLACE. Then the Minister might let the item stand.

Mr. SPROULE. He could furnish us the information on concurrence.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will give it on concurrence.

Militia—Gratuities to officers to be retired, including $2,040 to Lt.-Col. Bacon, Brigade Major, appointed 14th December, 1866, resigned 14th December, 1883, to accept civil service appointment..... $12,140

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This, I may mention, is chiefly in connection with the contemplated retirement of certain professors from the Kingston Military College who were mentioned in the course of discussion on that subject. These officers are expected to receive a gratuity in proportion to the length of their service.

Mr. HAGGART. Why should we give a gratuity of $2,000 to a gentleman in respect to civil service employment?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Colonel Bacon, with whom several gentlemen on the other side of the House are well acquainted, has spent thirty years in our service. During the first seventeen he was in the service as brigade major or deputy adjutant general. He would have been, in the ordinary course, entitled to a considerable gratuity on retiring. After thirty years of service he is being retired for the good of the service. He is an old man and not able to serve us as he used to do. I think he is over seventy years of age. The superannuation allowance which he would receive would be very small. I think his present income is about $1,500 or $1,600, so that he would only receive about $500 under the present system. We submit this item to the committee as a reasonable gratuity, in addition to the small superannuation.

The Militia Contingent to represent Canada at the Queen's Jubilee, London, England..... $10,000

Mr. BERGERON. Is that an addition to the $26,000 we voted the other day?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I do not expect that we will be called upon to expend it all, but it may be that these companies will be detained for a considerably longer time than was expected, owing to the holding of a great review, and if they are there will be an extra charge. I do not know whether I am interfering with the prerogative of my hon. friend the Postmaster General when I say that all the expense we are going to in connection with the Jubilee will be much more than repaid to us out of the sale of Jubilee stamps.

Subsidy for carrying the mails between Canada and Newfoundland during the seasons 1893-94-95..... $2,510 40

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This is an old debt, apparently, which is reported to my department as being due for services rendered from time to time.

Mr. HAGGART. That is under the Post Office Department.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No; mail subsidies are under the Department of Trade and Commerce. I would say to my hon. friend the leader of the House that this is an old debt that apparently will have to be paid. I have some little knowledge of the circumstances, but I ask the committee to consider it as a matter still under deliberation. The claim has been made for some time, and the officers of my department seem to think it should be paid. The parties have asked either to be paid or for a fiat in order to bring an action for payment. I do not think it has been determined absolutely that it should be paid.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As a matter of fact, the parties did carry the mails whether they had a contract or not, and therefore it is only fair that they should be paid.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think so, but the contract between them and the Government of Newfoundland has not been produced. I thought it was proper to see the contract under which they have performed the service. It is not in Canada, but we have asked that it should be sent to us.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think where accounts seem to have been unpaid by the late Government the present Government should look well into them.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This one was reported to me as not having been paid by the late Government. If an account had been unpaid by the late Government, I can assure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) that I would be cautious indeed about paying it.

Steam communication from 1st July, 1897, to 30th June, 1898, weekly between Quebec and Gaspé Basin, touching at intermediate ports..... $5,000

Mr. TAYLOR. I have been looking around to see if the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers) or any of his colleagues, the Patrons, were present. They have a plank in their platform protesting against steam subsidies. They should be here to protest against this.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have not risen in the House very often this session, and I do not intend at this late period of the session to make a long speech, but I may be allowed to offer my sincere thanks to the leader of the House, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, for the subsidy of $5,000 he has consented to place in the Estimates for a steamer's service between Quebec and Gaspé Basin. This small subsidy will enable a company to charter a steamer that will establish weekly communication between Gaspé and the rest of the province of Quebec. I must say that the county of Gaspé, the oldest in the Dominion, is perhaps, the only one deprived of railway communications. For years and years my electors have agitated the railway question, but with no practical result. In order to help the population there, the late Administration granted large subsidies for a steamer's service between Dalhousie, N.B., and Gaspé Basin. I must say that I do not object to this subsidy because the service is a most creditable one, and this part of the country is most deserving and most industrious. Apart of all other commercial interests served, at this period of the year, thanks to this steamer's service, the county of Gaspé is visited by thousands of tourists and sportsmen, coming from every part of the world. I may add, as a personal reminiscence, that last year, during my campaign, it was my good fortune to meet Mr. Rudyard Kipling, the celebrated English poet, who could not conceal his admiration for the grand scenery of that part of Canada. In fact, I am sure that Rudyard Kipling was inspired by the picturesque nature of Gaspé when he wrote his beautiful poem on Canada. Now, Mr. Chairman, coming to practical facts, it is true that the southern portion of Gaspé, that is to say, the portion facing the Baie des Chaleurs, was well served by the Government, but the northern part was completely ignored. From Gaspé Basin to Cap Chatte, a distance of some 150 miles, with a population of ten thousand people, scattered on the coast, no communications were given. This population is composed chiefly of fishermen. There are no steamers plying between these two places.

Mr. BERGERON. Does the "Campania" not pass there?

Mr. LEMIEUX. She passes there, but she will not stop. As a result, the fishermen are left completely at the mercy of a few greedy merchants, who, in the autumn, buy their fish and other products, at a ridiculously low price. The fishermen are not even paid in cash. They receive provisions in exchange. This state of things has led to abuses which are well known to this House. For the last year the fishermen have tried to sell their fish to certain Quebec firms, but with no success, because they were deprived of communications. I have seen myself, some of those fishermen who had been waiting at night in open sea, in small boats, the passage of a steamer in order to send their fish to Quebec.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Do they sell their fish to Le Boutillier & Robins and Colas & Co.?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, that is the trouble. They sell their fish to these companies and at a ridiculously low price. They want to get competition, so that they can sell their fish at higher prices.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The Renaud firm, and almost all the firms in Quebec, deal with Le Boutillier & Co.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I was saying that fishermen had to wait the passage of steamers, in open sea, in order to send their products to Quebec. Some would succeed, but in most cases, the fishermen had to come back with their freight, the captains of the steamers refusing to stop. It is stipulated that with this service, the steamer will stop at all ports and harbours between Gaspé and Cape Chatte, giving this population the communications that they are entitled to have. I am sure that this will enable them to sell their products at better prices, competition being the life of trade. It will also develop that part of the country which is rich in natural resources of all kinds.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What steamer is going down there for this subsidy?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I do not know what the regulations of the department are, but I suppose that when the subsidy is voted, they will call for tenders.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Surely you cannot get a steamer to go down there for $5,000 a year?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The subsidy is a very small one, I know.

Mr. CASGRAIN. You have the "Campana" there now?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The "Campana" runs from Montreal to Pictou and Summerside and Charlottetown, but she does not stop on the northern part of the county of Gaspé.

Mr. BERGERON. She might stop if she got the $5,000.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No.

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, I saw Mr. Garneau, one of the directors of the company, and he said it would not pay them to stop between Cape Chatte and Gaspe Basin. I may say that the company which owns the "Campana" is a large company, and they have a fine steamer and are doing a good service. They go direct from Montreal to Quebec, stopping at Father Point, Gaspé Basin, Percé, and sometimes Cape Cove. During the election of 1897, I had to make my campaign in a small boat, as the "Campana" would not stop for one or two passengers, or for a barrel of fish. They say the trade is not large enough to induce them to stop. I may also state that the "Campana" is used for summer tourists, and she has certain fixed trips advertised for months before in Canada and the United States. They will not stop for that small trade on the northern part of the county of Gaspé, but with a small steamer, say of 300 tons register, they could do a good trade. The people along the coast could then send their fish and potatoes to Quebec, and buy their supplies at a cheaper price there than they do now in the stores established in these little harbours. For years and years the people of Gaspé have been at the mercy of some greedy merchants like the Robins and others.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Oh.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I know I have some of my friends amongst them, but I say that the people of Gaspé have been at the mercy of these merchants. They are obliged to sell their fish at ridiculously low prices, and they are not paid in cash. They are paid in provisions, and sometimes do not see a red cent during the whole year. My hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) should not object to this vote, because when this service is established, these Gaspé fishermen will be able to trade with the merchants of Quebec. This is practically a Quebec subsidy. The only representative who ever worked for the county of Gaspé was the late Dr. Fortin, who was a good Conservative, but who did noble service for that county. Since his time the county has been completely ignored. It is the oldest county in the Dominion, yet it is the only one, strange to say, which has been deprived of railway communication, and this Parliament will not end before I agitate this question for a railway in the county of Gaspé. In the meantime, I must be satisfied with this small subsidy of $5,000, and I must specially thank the leader of the House (Sir Richard Cartwright) for his courtesy towards me and my electors. The first time I met that hon. gentleman on the question, I showed him the statistics, and when he saw the census returns and the trade that was carried on there, the hon. gentleman promised me that a subsidy would be granted. Tonight I am glad to extend to him my warm congratulations, and I am sure the county of Gaspé will appreciate what the hon. gentleman has done.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. After the very interesting lecture which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) has given us about Gaspé and its trade, I must say that I do not exactly understand why we should be called upon to contribute $5,000 for a new service. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) properly says that Gaspé is one of the oldest counties in the province of Quebec, but up to the time the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) was elected to represent it, the steamship service there met the requirements of the trade and commerce. The hon. gentleman tells us that the steamer service at present in existence does not consider that the trade of that locality is sufficiently large to warrant them in calling in to these different ports for a barrel of fish, as the hon. gentleman says, or for some goods which the fishermen send to Quebec. Why should we pay $5,000 more to establish a new line for the purpose of accommodating a trade, which is not sufficient to induce the present steamer to call at certain places. Anxious as I am to see all facilities extended to trade in the different portions of the province of Quebec, yet, the information which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) has given us, does not warrant the House of Commons in voting $5,000 for a new line, when the trade is not sufficiently large to induce the present steamer to call at these small ports. I do not believe it is possible for the hon. gentleman to convince the House that that new line should be established at a cost of $5,000 per annum.

Mr. HENDERSON. I simply want to say that to my mind, living as far away from Gaspé as I do, this subsidy looks somewhat fishy? At the same time, I think we had better grant it and not lose any further time.

Steam communication between Port Mulgrave, Arichat, Canso, Guysborough and Port Hood during the years 1893-95—Revenue of lapsed amount..... $7,000

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This goes to Mr. Roderick Macdonald, no doubt well known to several

hon. gentlemen opposite. The service was rendered, and the money was voted, but it has lapsed.

Mr. HAGGART. Why was it not paid?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I cannot exactly say why, except that there seems to have been some dispute. Mr. Macdonald did not sign his contract, as he ought to have done, but he did undoubtedly perform the service.

Mr. BERGERON. Was this service performed by the steamer "Rimouski"?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes.

To provide for the services of counsel and other expenses in connection with the Fisheries Reference, to argue the appeal for the Dominion before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council..... $8,000

Mr. HAGGART. Does it require $8,000 to argue that case before the judicial committee of the Privy Council.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This is the amount which the Department of Justice forwarded to me as the probable amount required. Mr. Christopher Robinson argued the case before the Dominion Supreme Court, and he has been retained to argue it before the Privy Council, and there will be an English counsel with him.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I do not think the amount is any too large. I know that some gentlemen go to England on cases not half so important, and get $5,000 or $6,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I may say that this is one of the most important cases that ever came before this Dominion. Mr. Christopher Robinson fixed his fee at $5,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN. And he ought to get it.

To provide for the expenditure incurred by Dr. Andrew McPhail, Montreal, on the scientific examination of the cause of the blackening of canned lobsters.. $2,185 45

Mr. POWELL. What is the result of this investigation?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The result is very satisfactory indeed. I think it will be established that Dr. McPhail has discovered a means of preventing the blackening of the lobsters. He carried on the investigation at the factories in the maritime provinces himself in conjunction with a scientific medical man from Montreal. After he returned, he continued his investigation at McGill College; but he found that he had not there sufficient scientific apparatus to enable him to complete it, and he applied to the department for permission to go to London University to finish his work there, and of course we consented. The amount of his bill was $2,185 for expenses. I wanted to submit it in the fisheries vote, but the Auditor thought it should be in a special vote. He has determined that the cause of blackening is bacteria, and he proposes to overcome it by the introduction of some antiseptic. I would not state positively that the investigation has been successful, but the indications are that it is so.

Indians—Manitoba and the North-west Territories—To provide for the completion and equipment of the Elkhorn Industrial School buildings..... $5,000

Mr. HAGGART. It is surely time that expenditure for these industrial schools for the Indians should cease. An enormous sum has been expended for that purpose, and a number of the members from the North-west have deprecated the expenditure. They say that the cost of teaching the Indians in the North-west is largely in excess of the cost of educating the white people there.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That is true, and it is a subject that is engaging the attention of the Minister of the Interior. The hon. gentleman knows that that system grew up not under our Administration. The subject deserves the best attention of the Government, and it will have it.

Mr. HENDERSON. May I ask the leader of the Government if that is the object of the present Minister's visit to Winnipeg?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No. If the hon. gentleman wants a full explanation, I will read it to him.

To provide for the payment of gratuities to retiring officers in Manitoba and the North-west Territories..... $5,630 78

Mr. WALLACE. Who are the parties to receive the gratuities?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are 36 altogether and I shall put the list on the Table.

Mr. TAYLOR. Last year the hon. Minister of the Interior was not present as he is not to-day, but the Government handed over the details to the Minister of the Exterior, the hon. member from Quebec West. Have they voted want of confidence in that hon. gentleman that he is not in charge of the department to-day?

Mr. DOBELL. I might explain that the multiplicity of my engagements prevented me.

Amount required to pay claims in connection with the sale of certain lots in the town of Banff, made prior to the passing of the Rocky Mountain Park Act, 1887... $2,500

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. These are claims which have been standing over for some years. These parties had bought lots in Banff from the agent of the Government who gave them an agreement of sale and had put up improvements on these lots. The lots were taken back on the ground that they had been illegally sold and these people claim damages. A commissioner was sent out to investigate, and after a great deal of trouble it was decided to make them a reasonable allowance, which was, of course, much below the amounts they claimed.

Mr. HAGGART. The claim came before the late Government, and the report of the Minister of Justice was that they had no claim whatever, but I suppose you have further report from the Justice Department lately?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, but the nature of it I am not prepared to say. I am not basing this on strictly legal grounds. We thought that we ought to pay these men who had bought the lots in good faith and put up improvements.

Mr. CLANCY. Their cases were dealt with entirely on equity?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. Messrs. Williamson and Taylor have a claim against the Government for damage done their holding in the town of Chatham. They claim $250. The sum was voted, but the department would not certify to the cheque until the Chief Engineer gave his certificate. The Chief Engineer knew nothing about it and would not certify, and those gentlemen have not been paid.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In what year was that?

Mr. CLANCY. In 1892 a settlement was made, and I hope the Minister of Public Works will see that the amount due is paid.

To provide for the payment of gratuities to temporary employees of the outside service of the Department of the Interior. (Payments from this vote shall be charged to the several services under the control of the department)..... $6,000

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have a list here showing the amount paid to each temporary employee dismissed. There were 36 altogether.

Mr. HAGGART. Put the list on the Table and it can be referred to on concurrence. It used to be the habit of paying them by Order in Council.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The sum of money has to be voted. You cannot pay the amount by Order in Council, but must get a grant from Parliament.

Mr. HAGGART. But you can take a vote in a general way.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is what we do. We take a general vote. But it is thought best to put it in this way.

Mr. BERGERON. But if this is required for this department, how will the other departments do to fulfil the same sort of obligation to their employees.

Mr. HAGGART. They have taken votes all along, some of them about as much as this.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, they have taken votes all along.

Government of the North-west Territories—
 Schools in unorganized territory $ 5,000
 Further amount required by the N.W. Government. (Subsidy to be paid half-yearly in advance)..... 40,000
 ----- $45,000

Mr. BERGERON. What schools are these?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is the same vote as usual.

Mr. HAGGART. It seems to me that it is $5,000 extra.

Mr. BERGERON. It is very awkward not to have the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) here.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will let this item of $5,000 stand.

An hon. MEMBER. Give the information on concurrence.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Very well, we will give the information on concurrence.

Additional amount required to meet salaries and travelling expenses of inspectors of ports and officers on preventive service..... $6,250
 Amount required for the purposes of defraying expenses of special preventive service..... 5,000
 Amounts to be paid to Department of Justice to be disbursed by it and accounted for to it for secret preventive service.... 5,000
 To pay John Reid for services..... 200

Mr. WALLACE. Will the hon. Controller of Customs (Mr. Paterson) please explain the first item?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The additional amount is required to pay salaries.

Mr. WALLACE. The amount in the Main Estimates was nearly as large as it was last year. Why is this extra amount required?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The main estimate was the same as it was last year. But there were expenses this year that were not covered last year. My hon. friend will remember that Mr. McKay was appointed inspector. While the main vote was $48,750, the expenditure in 1895-96 was only $46,327.05. But the salary of Mr. McKay, who was appointed, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) knows, under his own administration, was only paid for a month or two and $1,666 was unprovided for in the vote, and also his travelling expenses of $400. Mr. Clute was inspector at New Westminster. He received $400 as inspector while he received his salary at that point. The growing importance of British Columbia made it necessary that he should devote his whole time to the work of inspection. In 1895-96 there was not expended the full amount of $46,589, which left a difference unexpended of $2,161. That being the case the hon. gentleman might naturally say: You don't require such a large vote because you have an unexpended balance. I am showing the extra amounts which bring it up to $8,666 more than we are estimating for. That accounts for the $1,600 to Mr. McKay; and there are travelling expenses, $400. Then Mr. Jones has been appointed chief preventive officer at a salary of $1,600. Then we propose to have two more assistant inspectors at $1,500 each, and their travelling expenses, $400 each. That makes a total of $8,666, which we have to meet as extra over the annual expenditure of 1895-96, being $2,000 less than the estimate was for. We deduct that from $8,666, which leaves the amount of $6,500 for which we ask a vote.

Mr. WALLACE. You are creating two new offices altogether.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I am taking two officers who have been long in the service and are on the pay-list at the ports of Montreal and Kingston; and I propose to put upon them the extra duty of assisting the inspector. These are Mr. Lemieux, who has been over twenty years in the service at Montreal, and Mr. Shaw of Kingston, who has been in the service about the same length of time. Mr. Lemieux has been receiving $1,000, and Mr. Shaw $1,200. As assistant inspectors it is proposed to give them $1,500. I will ask the House to grant me this vote so that if I find it necessary to engage them the whole time as assistant inspectors, they can be paid out of this vote. I have found, and no doubt the hon. gentleman has found, that the inspection of the ports has not been done as it should have been, and results which are not in the public interest, have occurred. I propose to have a more frequent inspection of the ports than has taken place in the past. We have many ports that have not been looked into for years, and irregularities in more than one port have come to light. It has been pleaded on the part of the collectors that the department were remiss in their duty, and that the ports have not been inspected often enough.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman has taken officers from the service in Kingston and Montreal. I think their places do not require to be filled. The present staff is sufficient to enable him to dispense with the services of those men.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman has dismissed an official from his department on the plea of economy, and he is asking more for the officers of the department now than his predecessors asked. He stated that one of the reasons why Mr. Webster was not required was that he could dispense with him, but he has not only asked for the full amount that was required to carry on the office last year, but an amount in excess.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Mr. Webster was in the inside service in my department and we thought we could work the present staff without him. No one is being put on in Mr. Webster's place. These officers are for outside work.

Mr. QUINN. Is it the intention to fill the position of assistant collector in Montreal?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. No, it is not the intention.

Mr. LEMIEUX. While we are discussing this item, I would like to ask the Controller of Customs if any settlement has been arrived at between the Government and the late Mr. O'Hara. I understand that he had a claim against the Government for having acted as collector of customs at the port of Montreal during three years. I think I voice the sentiments of the commercial community of Montreal in asking the Government to settle this claim with his family.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Nothing has been done in that way; it would require a special vote of the House. But I have listened sympathetically to the plea that was put in for Mr. O'Hara. There are several other gentlemen in the same position whose claims have been before the department. They were before the Council last year, but nothing was done in that direction, and nothing has been done this year.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand the Minister said some time ago in the House that these claims were still under the consideration of the Government.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. They are under consideration now, and they can be considered another year as well as this.

Mr. WALLACE. I understood the Controller to say that Mr. Jones is appointed as special preventive officer. Does his salary appear in this $5,000?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. There was a sum of $5,000 for an additional cruiser which it is possible we may find it necessary to put on. This is taken as a precautionary vote in order that we may have the money if it is necessary to do so. It is not for the payment of Mr. Jones.

Mr. HAGGART. There is another item that the Minister will please explain :

Amounts to be paid to the Department of Justice, to be disbursed and accounted for to it for secret preventive service.... $5,000

If I understand this properly the Department of Customs are going to pay that amount over to the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Justice can dispose of this $5,000 in any manner he likes.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. This is put in in this way purposely by myself. It has been thought necessary to have a sum of money to provide for secret service officers, and I preferred, so far as my department was concerned, that it should be handed over to the Department of Justice and expended in that department. It is put in plainly so that hon. gentlemen can see what it is for. I dare say the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) knows that smuggling in different parts of the Dominion has become somewhat serious, I may say very serious, and vigorous attempts have been made and will continue to be made by the Government to put a stop to it as far as possible. In order to do that it is necessary that an expenditure shall be incurred, and it is one of those things in which we cannot see a direct return. You will see in the Estimates and additional expenditure but you will not see, as far as my department is concerned, anything to offset it, but I trust you will find in your Inland Revenue returns an augmented receipt. If we are able to stop this illicit traffic the expenditure shows against the Customs Department, but you will find the result in the augmented receipts in the department of my hon. friend the Controller of Inland Revenue (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière).

Mr. HAGGART. I have no doubt that the Department of Customs will obtain receipts commensurate with the expenditure. But I protest against the granting of a large sum of money to any member of the Government for which he will not account to the Auditor General and of which the House will not have any control. This thing has been objected to again and again. Twenty or twenty-five years ago when a vote was taken for this purpose strenuous opposition was offered by hon. gentlemen who are at present controlling the Government. They objected notwithstanding the fact that the Government offered at the time to submit the vouchers to the leader of the Opposition to show that the expenditure was not diverted to any other purpose and was justifiable. Here are $5,000 to be placed in the hands of the Minister of Justice which he can expend for any service that he likes, and he does not account to any one for that.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What was the amount objected to before ?

Mr. HAGGART. There never has been a vote of that kind for the last ten years.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I refer to the vote of twenty or twenty-five years ago.

Mr. HAGGART. $15,000.

Mr. LANDERKIN. This is only $5,000. I think the amount previously was $50,000.

Mr. WALLACE. I remember twenty or twenty-five years ago, although I was not in Parliament then, that it was considered necessary at that time on account of the Fenian invasion of the country to send men into the Fenian camps and this money could not be accounted for. It was justifiable on that ground.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Although this is not a time to prolong this discussion, I may say to the House that smuggling in the St. Lawrence has attained such proportions and is inflicting such tremendous damage on our revenue, that very active steps must be taken to put an end to it. We cannot by any possibility deal with informers in a matter of this kind publicly. If we make public their names and make public the amounts which they receive we will imperil their lives and utterly destroy their utility. I think it is one of those cases in which we can with considerable propriety make an arrangement whereby the leader of the Opposition might be shown the various vouchers and the various ways in which the money was expended, and in concurrence I will be able to state to the hon. gentleman whether a plan can be adopted with that end in view. I think it is done in England, and it is a reasonable thing for hon. gentlemen to ask.

Mr. HAGGART. That will satisfy us.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not think it will satisfy me as one of the third party in this House. I think this is no time for this discussion, and we might allow these three items to stand over.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is absolutely necessary in my judgment to bring this smuggling business to an end, to reach not the unfortunate man who is employed for the purpose of conveying liquor in his schooner from St. Pierre and Miquelon or wherever he brings it from, but the man who provides the supplies and holds out the inducements to this unfortunate man to engage in this nefarious practice. I think we can reach these men in only one way. In dealing with men of that sort we have to use means that under ordinary circumstances one would be loath to have any connection with. I find that we can only attain the result by the use of money applied in the proper quarters. I think that if we use money in that way it will serve the purpose. We are desirous of suppressing this traffic. There really ought to be some way arranged so that these accounts should be submitted either to the leader of the Opposition or some other gentleman on the other side of the House to show for what purpose this money has been expended. It seems to me that hon. gentlemen will agree that we can only suppress this traffic by reaching the men in cities who supply the money to carry on this business and who secure the profits.

Mr. WALLACE. I have no doubt that the largely increased duty on tobacco and on spirits will stimulate smuggling. The Government will find that they have made a mistake so far as revenue is concerned, but I do not propose to discuss that special point. I see the Controller of Customs has a sum here of $6,250 for the purpose of paying inspectors. I think the explanation of that point does not cover more than the vote of last year, and that this $6,250 is an additional sum for inspectors. You can fairly say that the $5,000 will be for officers of the preventive service. Then there is a second item of the amount required to defray the expenses for the preventive service, and the Controller of Customs tells us that that may be used to procure a steamer in the gulf at some of the lower ports. He may use it for any preventive service he likes. There are $15,000 for this service, all of which is more or less secret. I do not think the Government should ask for such a vote without being able to tell the House specifically what they propose to do with this money. The machinery of the department is quite sufficient to provide for this matter without giving publicity to the names of those who are acting as spies for the Government. It is not necessary for these names to appear in the accounts. The Controller and the officers directly concerned would be aware of it, but the names are not published in the Auditor General's Report or anywhere else. In times past hon. gentlemen opposite were the most strenuous opponents of the secret service, although at that time it was known that foes were outside and inside of this country too, and that it was necessary to use money to circumvent them and get into their camps. It was a far more justifiable secret service vote than this, because you had to have a secret service then to get into the confidence of men who were plotting for the destruction of our country. My experience as Controller justified me in saying, that there is no necessity for asking for such a vote as this from the House.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. How would the machinery of the department protect the informer and compensate him?

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman knows, or ought to know, because there are men who are informing to-day, and whose names are not given to the public. The hon. gentleman ought to know that.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I am not aware of that, but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) knows, or ought to know, that these informers only get their pay if there is a seizure made and the proceeds are there for them. Suppose information is given where no seizure is made, and where the parties are to be punished, how are the informers to get their money? Could the department do that?

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, there is another resource.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. How could that informer be paid?

Mr. WALLACE. The department has 5 per cent of the seizure devoted for a certain fund.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Could the informer be paid out of that fund?

Mr. WALLACE. I think so.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. He certainly could not.

Mr. WALLACE. Why not?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Because we asked the Department of Justice with reference to paying John Reid, whose name is in the Estimates now, and we were told by the Department of Justice that we could not pay it.

Mr. WALLACE. That was a case where the department could not pay it out of any fund.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. There were no proceeds.

Mr. WALLACE. Not at all. This case is half a dozen years old, and I asked the Department of Justice whether Mr. Reid could be paid, not from these funds, but from the contingencies of the department.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) could not pay John Reid out of any fund.

Mr. WALLACE. I submitted a case to the Department of Justice whether John Reid had a legal claim against the Department of Justice, and the department replied that he had not.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The question the hon. gentleman submitted to the Department of Justice was, that John Reid had given information with reference to persons defrauding the revenue. There was a fine of $9,000 imposed upon the individual, but he cleared the country and there were no proceeds from the seizure whatever.

Mr. WALLACE. I think there was.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. There were no proceeds from that seizure, and the hon. gentleman submitted to the Department of Justice, whether this man, whom he thought in the public interest ought to receive something, should not receive a certain amount.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I move that the committee rise.

If hon. gentlemen wish the Item to stand, let it stand, but we cannot remain here any longer. We have to meet at 11 in the morning, and the members of the Council have something more to do. It appears to be utter waste of time to proceed now.

Resolutions to be reported.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY— FURTHER SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER read the Message as follows:—

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, Further Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ending 30th June, 1898, and in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867," the Governor General recommends these estimates to the House of Commons.

Government House,
Ottawa, 23rd June, 1897.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 2.05 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock, a.m.

PRAYERS.

CARETAKER AT FORT ANNE.

Mr. MILLS asked :

Who has been the caretaker of Fort Anne, in the county of Annapolis? When was he appointed? When will his services cease? What was the total amount of the pay of said caretaker during his term of office? What is the gross amount received by way of rentals and sales of grass during the time said caretaker had control?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Mr. H. E. Gillis has been caretaker. He was placed in charge of the property on the 22nd February, 1892. His services will cease after 30th June, 1897. The total amount of his pay was $250, and the gross amount received by way of rentals and sales of grass during the period was $244.53. No expenses have yet been reported. The net proceeds were $244.53 so far.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, it would be well for the leader of the Government to give the House some information to which it is entitled, and which so far as the Opposition is concerned, I feel that we have been a little lax in asking from the Government. Everybody knows, that for the last ten days, Parliament has simply had a precarious existence. The rump of Parliament has been left, but the main body has dispersed to its home. Since that time large and important measures have been pressed through the House, and very large and important measures have been brought down and are still remaining on the Order paper. I think the time has now certainly arrived—it probably arrived some time ago—when we should ask the leader of the Government what are the measures that he proposes to call the attention of this rump Parliament to, for the remainder of the time that it may please him to keep it in session. We are entitled, before we go one step further, to know what the view of the Government is in this respect.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Well, Mr. Speaker, I may observe in the first instance, that while it is true that some of the important measures to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) alludes have not reached their final stage, they have, I think, with very few exceptions, been placed before the House, and if my memory serves me, fully discussed before any considerable number of members went away. I do not at this moment remember, nor do I see on the Order paper, any measure which can be considered of importance, which has not been submitted in one shape or other to the House, and been discussed.

Mr. HENDERSON. What about the railway resolutions?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. With the exception of the railway resolutions, a very large proportion of which the hon. gentleman knows have been discussed in this House before, and actually proposed.

Mr. FOSTER. Not under the present conditions.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Actually proposed by the hon. gentleman himself, or his colleagues.

Mr. FOSTER. Not under conditions which contemplate the doubling of the subsidies.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That I think will be found to apply to only a very limited percentage of them.

Mr. FOSTER. That remains to be seen.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think too, that the conditions imposed are ones, which, when they come to be discussed in the House, will be found calculated to advance the public service, and they are conditions which I think the hon. gentleman himself—at least I don't despair of having his own approval of them before we close.

Mr. WALLACE. Can the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) properly say that the Crow's Nest Pass Railway was discussed before the members went away?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think so.

Mr. WALLACE. They had made their arrangements to leave and were actually on their way, before that matter came up for discussion.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I remember that the leader of the Opposition not only discussed it, but expressed his warm approval of it before the members disappeared. I think he was supported therein by his colleague the present leader of the Opposition (Mr. Foster). Practically speaking, the only measure of importance, apart from the railway subsidies to which I have alluded, are that same Crow's Nest Pass Railway—the bounties and so forth have been before the House for a month. The supplies with the railway subsidies are the only ones that can be considered of real importance, that have not been long before the House. I may be able, after three o'clock, to tell the hon. gentleman more definitely what measures we propose to proceed with; but if he looks over the list he will see that although it looks a little long, there are very few things in it, with the solitary exception of the railway subsidies, which have not already engaged our attention.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has not answered my question as to what they propose to proceed with. I find, for instance, that on June the 19th the House was in committee on a Bill to further amend the Post Office Act. We do not know whether it is the intention of the Government to proceed with that or not. Then I presume that the Bill with reference to the Franchise Act is virtually abandoned. There is a Bill for the abolition of the civil service superannuation, and the retirement of the members of the civil service.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is tacitly understood that both these Bills would not be pressed.

Mr. FOSTER. Then with regard to the resolutions respecting the Superannuation Act.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Item 19 on the Order paper is based on that.

Mr. FOSTER. It is abandoned.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. We have had no announcement with regard to the Act further to amend the Civil Service Act.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We had some discussion on that, and it really is tied up with another Bill of the Postmaster General's.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman propose to proceed with that Bill?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I will be able to tell the hon. gentleman after three o'clock.

Mr. FOSTER. Then with regard to the Manitoba School fund which was not introduced until June 11th, that certainly is a contentious matter which will evoke a good deal of discussion, and a most important principle is involved, that has never been explained to the House yet. Is it the determination of the Government to proceed with that?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am not now in a position to inform the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. Then there is the Criminal Code amendment which the Minister of Marine made a urgent though brief plea for. Are we to consider that his remarks were the funeral oration of that, for the present session?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If there is a strong opposition to that it may not be pressed.

Mr. FOSTER. The Crow's Nest Pass Bill involving three and a half million dollars has been left aside for a few days into a resting place. Will my hon. friend tell us whether it is intended to let that still rest there, or whether it is proposed to draw it out and give it another start on the rails.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We will inform my hon. friend later.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, we have a resolution respecting the raising of a loan, which my hon. friend, in the interest of economy, must see through. Then, we have the House in committee upon certain railway subsidies, involving an expenditure of from $1,500,000 to $4,000,000 or $5,000,000, according as incidents and circumstances may eventuate, depending on the good-will of the Minister of Railways.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You are anticipating your argument against it.

Mr. FOSTER. I have still some left ; I do not give it all out at one stage. Then, there is a Bill to amend an Act respecting certain savings banks in the province of Quebec, which the Solicitor General proposes to go on with. We have got down to certainty on some, and to a state of not very greatly prolonged uncertainty on others. The hon. gentleman thinks that by three o'clock we will be able to define the will of the Government for the present. I do not ask him to tie himself down for a very long period ; that would be insecure.

Mr. MACLEAN. I would like also to ask the leader of the House to say at three o'clock what he intends to do with item 36, referring to the Bill to promote the safety of railway employees. It has already been reported.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am very much afraid, with every desire to facilitate the hon. gentleman's wishes, that he will have to maturely consider that measure for a few months.

Mr. MACLEAN. I may say that as the hon. gentleman's leader promised the railway men of this country that he would this session give them legislation on this subject, he had better consider it, and not myself.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We will both consider it.

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Customs, &c.—Additional amount required to meet salaries and travelling expenses of inspectors of ports and officers on preventive service..... $6,250

Amount required for the purposes of defraying expenses of special preventive service ..... $5,000
 Amounts to be paid to Department of Justice to be disbursed by it and accounted for to it for secret preventive service ..... 5,000
 To pay John Reid for services..... 200

Mr. FOSTER. I laboured under the disadvantage of not being present last night when this item was allowed to stand. Would the Controller of Customs think it too much trouble to let the House know what the purpose of that vote is ?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. We discussed the two first items rather fully last night. We were at the third item. The explanation I gave was that a certain sum more would be required in order to meet the expenditure for the coming year. We based our estimate upon the expenditure of 1895-96, when we found that we had estimated for $2,161 more than we expended. With the charges which will stand against this fund in the future, we shall require something like $6,500 more, in addition to the $2,161. There was the salary of Mr. McKay, $1,666, and $400 for his travelling expenses. Mr. Clute, in British Columbia, is paid $400 as inspector, receiving the balance of his salary as collector of customs at New Westminster ; but, owing to the extent of the business there, it was thought desirable that he should be assigned to the duties of inspector alone. Therefore, we provide for his whole salary out of this item this year. Then, a new preventive officer has been appointed in the preventive service at a salary of $1,600. We propose two assistant inspectors at $1,500 each. These inspectors are in the service now, and have been for over twenty years, one attached to Montreal, and the other to Kingston, the former receiving $1,000 and the latter $1,200. They are still attached to those ports, and drawing their salaries there ; but we provide for their salaries here, in case we should have to draw them from the ports to do inspection work continuously. We also provide $400 for their travelling expenses.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not surprised at all at the item, as I hold in my hand a return showing the number of new appointments. I need say very little with regard to professions of hon. gentlemen opposite as compared with their practice, but as we all feel interested in knowing how they have carried out their professions of economy with regard to appointments. I shall read a return showing the names of new appointments to the customs, together with the salaries and dates of appointment from the 1st of July, 1896, to 27th of April last :

RETURN to an Order of the House of Commons, showing names, offices, salaries and dates of appointment, of all persons appointed to the Department of Customs from the 1st day of July, 1896, to 22nd April, 1897.

*To be paid by the Railway Company.

I wonder if he was recommended by the genial Whip from Gananoque (Mr. Taylor). These are the names of those who have been added to the list since the 1st July, 1896. I only read the list because it is an evidence of the economy which the hon. members representing the Government have displayed since they came into power, and in carrying out the principles which they said should guide them if they were given control of the government of the country.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the hon. Controller of Customs (Mr. Paterson) if the collector at the outport of Wallaceburg at the village of Sombra, has been dismissed, and, if so, who has been appointed in his place. Also I would like to ask if the collector of customs at Courtright has been dismissed, and, if so, who has been appointed in his place. Will the hon. gentleman deign to give the committee any information? I see he is perfectly silent. I understand that these dismissals have taken place within the last few days, but the hon. gentleman seems to sit silent even when information that may quite reasonably be expected, is asked of him. The committee is entitled to an answer. Does he expect his silence to be taken as an answer? Of course, he may take what course he pleases.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). I have not the information at hand. I thought it better to wait until after the hon. gentleman had taken his seat. I did not at first, nor am I sure now that I understood the names of the officers concerning whom he asked.

Mr. CLANCY. I shall have to crave the attention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) as I think the members of this committee have a right to ask his attention, and that he shall not discuss other matters when this subject is before the committee. If he had paid a little attention, he would have heard what I have said.

Mr. BRITTON. That is a courteous way of asking a question.

Mr. CLANCY. No doubt the hon. gentleman (Mr. Britton) will teach us courteous manners later on, but meantime we are not asking advice from him. I asked the Controller of Customs if the collector of customs at Sombra had been dismissed, and, if so, who was appointed in his place. I asked also with regard to Mr. Cronk, the collector at Courtright, whether he had been dismissed, and, if so, who had been appointed in his place. I have heard that these dismissals have been made.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Speaking from memory, as to Sombra, I do not remember that name. Is Mr. Roebuck at one of the points mentioned by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy)?

Mr. CLANCY. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I am not quite sure whether that order has passed the Council yet or not, but the dismissal has been recommended, I know, and if the hon. gentleman has heard that it has taken place, the probability is that it is so. I could ascertain the facts and give them to the hon. gentleman at a later time.

Mr. CLANCY. What about Courtright?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. As far as my memory goes, I think there has not been a change there; but I cannot speak with certainty.

Mr. WALLACE. Surely the hon. gentleman knows whether he has sent a recommendation to Council within the last few days with reference to these matters or not.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I said that I had sent a recommendation regarding Mr. Roebuck.

Mr. WALLACE. What about Mr. Cronk?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I will find out.

Mr. WALLACE. That is exceedingly satisfactory, I am sure. We are the ones who want to find out, and we are asking the one who is supposed to know, and he takes our position and says he wants to know.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. If you would give notice of the names you want to know about, I would have the information ready.

Mr. WALLACE. I have not asked information concerning any names.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Speaking from memory, I say I do not remember that case. There has been a good deal of business before me, and one can hardly carry all the facts in mind. But I have told the hon. gentleman that I will get him this information. I will have it for him this afternoon. I suppose he can wait that long.

Mr. CLANCY. I am quite willing to wait. But I think we are entitled to the information at that stage of the proceedings when, if necessary, a reply can be made to any statement that may be made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson). I suppose that it would be better to let this item stand, unless the hon. gentleman will consent to discussion taking place, if necessary, when the information is given.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I have no objection to all the discussion taking place that the hon. gentleman wants. I may say, in answer to what the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has said, that he has read a return in which he refers to a great many new appointments. There must be appointments in the public service. If gentlemen die, if gentlemen resign, if gentlemen are superannuated, if gentlemen are dismissed, their places must be filled, if the offices that they held are necessary to the public service. And in a large service like the customs service, deaths will happen, cases will arise of gentlemen asking for superannuation, owing to being enfeebled: cases will arise in this department as in others, where charges have been preferred against officers and it has been found that they have violated their duty, and their services have been dispensed with. These officers have to be replaced. And though my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) read the names given in a return covering the appointments from the 1st of July, I notice that some names given are those of officers who were appointed before I came into office, for instance, the collector at Black Creek. But the hon. gentleman did not call this fact to the attention of the committee. Nor did he mention the fact that this return calls for the date and appointments of all persons appointed in the Department of Customs for whatever reason or whatever cause. As I have said, a great many officers have deceased, and others have been superannuated and others dismissed. But the hon. gentleman will find, I think, when the expenditure for the year comes down, and he can judge more properly with regard to the matter, that the expenditure has not increased, or, if increased, it has increased very little. I do not deny that there has been an increase in British Columbia. That was necessary, and there will have to be an additional expenditure incurred there if we are to carry on the work thoroughly. Then the same gentleman said that I was appointing officers not only in Canada, but in the United States. Very well, we have officers in the United States, we have had officers there for years and years. He referred to Mr. Mazurette, a gentleman who was appointed by his predecessor, resigning the office. Mr. Mazurette is appointed to work in the United States, and the railroad upon which he is engaged pays his salary as they did before, and it is no burden at all upon the people of Canada. The hon. gentleman has seen fit to place a return upon the "Hansard," with the view, I suppose, of leaving an impression that appointments have been made right and left without any necessity for them, and with the result of greatly increasing the cost to the country. I think when the actual expenditure for the year is in his hands, bearing in mind what he has said on the present occasion, he will find that his fears were groundless as to a great additional expenditure being entailed on the Government through the appointments that have been made.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice, making all due allowance for appointments that were made by the late Government after 1st July, 1896, that a larger number of these appointments were made late on in the season and a great many in the spring. Now, when I count up the number who have been dismissed and take the number of new appointments, I find that the new appointments are more numerous than the dismissals; therefore I assume that there must be quite a number of additional men employed in the service over what were employed before; and if additional men are employed, their salaries must come from some source; therefore, it cannot mean a reduction of the expenditure, but rather an increase, and an increase is not in the line of economy.

Mr. MILLS. I notice in the list read by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that the office at Port Lorne, Annapolis County, was mentioned. I would like to ask the Controller whether Officer Graves is still in his position at Port Lorne.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. There was some change made in Annapolis County, but I would hesitate to state to the hon. gentleman now from memory whether Mr. Graves is still there. Some offices were changed there, and the officers as well. If he would like a statement in reference to that, I will be prepared to give it to him.

Mr. MILLS. I would like to know whether Mr. Graves is now in the custom-house at Port Lorne, or whether he died or resigned, or was superannuated or dismissed; and if he was dismissed, the cause of his dismissal.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I will get the information for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. WALLACE. The Controller has just told us that the expenditure is not increased in the Customs Department. In face of the facts, I do not know how he could make such a statement to this House. What are the facts? That in 1894 our expenditures for the Customs Department were $921,000; in 1895 they were decreased to $917,000; in 1896 to $896,000, when the present Government came into power. In 1897 the Estimates are $953,000, or an increase of $57,000 over last year. They were not satisfied with that, and this year they are asking in their main Estimates $956,000, that is more than ever before, and $60,000 more than in 1896, and $3,000 more than their last year's accounts. Now they come down to the House and ask us in addition to this $956,000, for $16,250, or a total of $972,000, a higher figure than has ever been reached before in the extravagant days of the Tory Government, by more than $50,000. Yet, Sir, the Controller of Customs tells us that they have not increased the expenditure. The hon. member for East Grey has read out a list of names of new appointments. According to a return which was presented to the House the other day at the request of the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Wood), there is a statement that there were dismissals, superannuations, &c., on the permanent staff amounting to forty; and on the temporary staff to thirty-eight, making seventy-eight dismissals. Now, the new appointments show thirty-five permanent and seventy-eight on the extra staff, making a total of 113, or thirty-five more appointments than there were persons dismissed or whose services were dispensed with. Now, in my opinion, that increase was altogether unnecessary. I realize the fact myself that our staff was sufficiently large, and the estimate shows that we were trying to reduce expenditure and were successful in reducing expenditure, not so much as we might have done, but at any rate we were going in that direction every year. Now, these gentlemen who are pledged to economy, pledged to retrenchment, pledged to reduce the expenditure, the first thing that they do is to increase the expenditure by the amount which I have just quoted, increased it from 1896 to the present time by $70,000 in those two short years.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. If the hon. gentleman will allow me—he has compared the expenditure of one year as he ascertained it, with the Estimates, and he speaks of the Estimates as an expenditure. Does he think that is fair, when he knows that the amount estimated for is not paid? Does he think that it is fair to take the expenditure of one year and compare the year he speaks of with that lower expenditure when he had an estimate, as I am informed by officers in my department, cut off just prior to the election by $50,000, for which he had made no provision, when he had not dispensed with the services of the officers, when those officers were in the employ of the Government, and when they had to be paid out of the funds I had asked Parliament for?

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman has asked me if he thinks that I am fair in comparing the expenditure of one year with the estimate of another. Well, I can say this: After the hon. gentleman has been about eleven months and a half in office he ought to know something about what the expenditure is for the twelve months. Last year when they had only been in power for a month or two, they came here and pleaded that they wanted sufficient money to cover contingencies; and now when eleven and three-quarter months of the year have expired, the hon. gentleman should be in a position to know whether his expenditure has tallied with the Estimates that he asked the House to vote. After eleven and three-quarters months the Government come down and ask us for $16,000 more than the Estimates, making $953,000 for the current year. He knows to-day that $953,000 is to be expendent. If he knows this to-day he is in a position to know exactly what is required for the next year. I think that is a fair proposition, yet in the face of that he comes and asks for $98,000, an increase of $19,000 over last year. This is less than one week of the end of the present fiscal year, and he has asked for $953,000 for that year. Yet he comes back to the House within one week of the close of the year and says: "I asked for $953,000 last year, We have come to the end of the year; we have spent that $953,000. I find I will not be able to conduct the affairs of this department for $953,000, and I ask you to vote us $19,000 more." The argument that he advances that you should not compare the Estimates of one year with the expenditure of another I do not think will hold water, because he is in a position now to know what he will require, and he is now coming and asking for unlimited sums of money. If we had confidence in the hon. gentleman we are fast losing it because what are the facts? There have been 113 appointments and 78 dismissals from this department during the term for which a return was brought down to this House, or 35 new appointments in excess of the dismissals. In many cases when officials drop out for various causes it is not necessary to reappoint men at all, and if 78 of them are dispensed with there should have been less than 78 new appointments. I am waiting with interest to find out what was the cause of the dismissal of Asa Cronk of Courtright whom I know to be an able, efficient and honest officer of the customs. But we come to the items which the Controller of Customs asks this House to vote. The first item is, "Additional amounts required to meet salaries and travelling expenses of inspectors of ports and officers on preventive service, $6,250." This amount is increased over the present fiscal year 1896-97. In that year the salary of Mr. McKay, the inspector for Ontario was provided for. I am not sure whether the salary of Mr. Clute of British Columbia, was provided for in 1896-97.

Mr. WALLACE.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. No.

Mr. WALLACE. This is an increased expenditure of $1,600. What else? We find that the salary of Mr. Jones, who was appointed chief preventive officer may be taken either from this item or that it may be taken from the following item. It has no business to be taken from two items. When the Controller of Customs comes here and asks for $6,250, there should be a definite statement of what the money is intended for because when the Controller of Customs asks for money he must be in a position to give a detailed account of every expenditure under the item. The next item is, "Amounts required for the purposes of defraying expenses of special preventive service, $5,000." I asked last night, "What are you going to do with this $5,000?" The Controller of Customs said, "We might charter a steamer, buy a horse, or do anything with it." I think that is no statement to be presented to this committee. The Controller of Customs ought to say what he is going to do with this $5,000. He ought to come prepared to say to this committee, "We have adopted a plan of preventing smuggling, and for that plan I will require $5,000." In addition to the $5,000 taken for preventive service there is the item of $6,250, or over $10,000. But we come to the next amount; "Amounts to be paid the Department of Justice to be disbursed by it and accounted for to it for secret preventive service." I think this item is altogether objectionable. Such a thing has not been known in the history of the Government of this country for many years. I remember a quarter of a century ago or more when the Fenian raids were taking place that the Government had to send their agents into the camp of those who were plotting for the destruction of this country. Then a secret service fund was essential to the protection of the people and the Government of this country, but those times have passed away and the Government are not asking for any such secret service fund. The Controller of Customs comes down and says, "We want for customs purposes a secret service fund." I think this country. Then a secret service fund was ever obtained in the Department of Customs before. Is this the first instance upon which a secret service fund has been asked?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I never asked for the item before.

Mr. WALLACE. I did not ask the hon. gentleman what he has done before, but he has the records of the department under his hand, and I asked him if in the history of the Customs Department secret service money has ever been voted by Parliament. He tells us that he has never asked for it. He has not been very long in power.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman was in power.

Mr. WALLACE. When I was in charge of the department I did not ask for a secret service fund because I did not think it necessary. The Customs Act gives enormous powers to the Controller of Customs and the officers of the Customs Department. That has been considered necessary that the collection of the revenues may be made properly. The collection of three-quarters of the revenue of this country devolves upon the Controller of Customs and in order to protect these revenues, in order to protect the money of the people of Canada, extraordinary powers have been given to the Controller of Customs, powers which many people think are too large to be exercised by any person. That may be, but here is a proposition to enlarge these powers, to give $5,000 into the hands of the Controller of Customs, to use in any way that he likes. What might be the effect of that?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. That is not the way it reads.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes; to be expended in any way he likes; "To be paid to the Department of Justice, to be disbursed by it and accounted for to it for secret preventive service." The Controller of Customs accounts for the moneys that he expends to the Department of Justice.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. No, I hand the money to them.

Mr. WALLACE. Who employs the men? The Controller of Customs?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. No, the Department of Justice.

Mr. WALLACE. What has the Controller of Customs to do with it then?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. He has to pay the amount on the requisition of the Department of Justice.

Mr. WALLACE. If the Controller of Customs simply pays the amount to the Department of Justice why not vote the amount to the Department of Justice which will have the spending of it. But the wording of this item says that it is the Department of Customs that shall expend the money, and it is only this department that has the machinery for spending it. The Department of Justice has no machinery; is not acquainted with the details of the working of the department and could not use the money advantageously. What does it mean? An engine of oppression which can be used against every importer and manufacturer in this country, you are holding a whip over their heads. We are told that this secret service money is wanted for the purpose of detecting men. We are told that smuggling is going on in the country and they say, "We want to go into the warehouses of these men who are sending out these smugglers in order to detect them." A very praiseworthy object. Sir, that power does not end there. If they wish to enter an importer's or manufacturer's establishment in Montreal or Toronto, they send their secret emissary as a secret spy, and they take this money to do it. The machinery of the Customs Department is sufficiently strong to-day without adding this additional engine. It is altogether wrong to vote $5,000 as a secret service fund, which may be used to ruin the business of any merchant in this country, if dishonest men are employed, and dishonest men might be employed on work of this kind.

Mr. QUINN. No decent man would do it.

Mr. WALLACE. This proposal of the Controller of Customs should not receive the approval of this House. It is unprecedented in the history of the Customs Department of Canada, and it is unnecessary, because the machinery of the department is at present ample to carry out the law effectively. It establishes a system of espionage over the honest merchants of this country, and it may be worked to their ruin. The Government can fairly be asked to withdraw this vote.

Mr. FOSTER. My opinion is that this is a vote which we ought not to pass, and it is a system which ought not to be initiated. There is only one case in which I would be prepared to entrust to the Government the funds of this country without audit. That would be in the case of some question of national existence, or of some danger which threatens the nation. In that case, it might be well sometimes to ferret out secret foes, and to grant the power to the Government to a limited extent inasmuch as it is almost impossible for ordinary methods to reach the object in view. But, Sir, in the history of this country for twenty-four years, I do not think there can be an example found of any vote given to any department of government, outside of the ordinary and usual service of the country. This is an innovation which puts $5,000 in the hands of the Minister, to be used in any way the Minister likes within the limit of preventive service, where the white light of public criticism through the Auditor General cannot beat down upon it at all. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) can take a vote of $5,000 with reference to his department, every Minister could ask for the same vote, and the opening wedge is put in, and it will be given him by the majority of the Government, and a precedent made. Is it not possible for my hon. friend (Mr. Paterson) to carry out the service of his department without contravening what has been the stated principle in the disbursement of public moneys ever since Parliament took that matter into its mature consideration, and decided that there should be a parliamentary officer, to wit, the Auditor General, who should audit all accounts which would then be submitted to the criticism of Parliament? The thing you are asking to-day may be wise and proper in itself, but do not go into greater peril, and take a course which is beset with difficulties in the end, if you undertake to sanction the principle of employment of moneys without audit, and without the criticism of the House. Granted that if you had this $5,000 of secret service money you might effect an object, but that object, it seems to me, might well sink into significance before the principle you are establishing, that a Government, with a majority at its back may send public money without accounting to the representatives of the people. I appeal to my hon. friends opposite, to not initiate the course outlined in this vote, and to not put us to the test of having to forcibly show our protest. I am making this statement, not from any partisan idea at all. I have been in a Government for eight or ten years, and I have supported the Government for longer, but I most assuredly say that I would not have been a party to the employment of public funds in this way. Unless some national peril threatens us—and in that case I would be willing to put the whole resources of the country into what we might think was a proper channel for avoiding that peril—but in a case of this kind, I do not think the circumstances call for it, and I ask my hon. friend (Mr. Paterson) seriously to think over whether it is not better for him to forego this vote and depend upon the ordinary and effective machinery of the customs preventive service.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I do not at all object to the criticism which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has directed against this vote. It is quite right that a proposition of this kind, which is unusual, should be criticised, and it is quite right that we should be asked, what are the special circumstances which impel the Government to ask for this vote. I have got to say this, and I wish the House to consider the matter seriously. The most clear evidence has been brought to the Government for many months, that the entire service of the customs is utterly inadequate as at present administered, to prevent the frightful system of smuggling which is causing great immorality all through the lower St. Lawrence districts, and I believe extending in a considerable extent to the maritime provinces. We have good ground to believe that the revenue is at present being defrauded to the extent of many hundreds of thousands of dollars a year, by the illicit importations of quantities of spirits, particularly from St. Pierre and Miquelon, and from the quantities that are brought in in various ways from the adjacent republic. The existing machinery of the customs has proved hopelessly inadequate to deal with that evil. It is a great evil. We hear reports from those who are in a position to know, that it is demoralizing the population of whole parishes along the lower St. Lawrence. We have very good reason to believe that the ramifications of this system—for it has attained to the dignity of a system—extend not merely along the St. Lawrence, but that they have their headquarters in the city of Quebec and, to some extent, in Montreal, too. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is a man of business. He must know that it is utterly and hopelessly impossible to obtain the requisite information, which alone would enable you to cope with and suppress this great and growing evil, unless the informers know that their names will be kept secret, and that they will not be exposed to the vengeance of the parties against whom they give information. That is perfectly well known. It is one of the reasons which justified, to some extent, the criticism of the hon. gentleman on the occasion of the bringing down of the Budget, when he pointed out that when the excise or customs duties were raised to a high point, there was great danger of increasing smuggling. I admitted at the time that that part of the hon. gentleman's argument required grave consideration; but I want him and the House to understand that when we ask for this small special vote for the purpose of carrying on an effective secret preventive service, we do not do it without having absolute proof that in a large section of Canada an extensive system of smuggling is going on. The loss to the revenue is immense; but that is not the most serious part of it. The demoralization of a large section of our people is immense; and if ever there was an occasion—I do not except even the so-called Fenian secret service—when the Government were justified in saying to the House, Trust us with the administration of this insignificant sum for the purpose of putting down this great evil, it is this occasion. But I recognize the force of what the hon. gentleman said last night, and in the few remarks I made on the subject I stated that we were perfectly willing to submit to the leader of the Opposition for the time being an account of the mode in which that money had been expended. That has been done in England on more than one occasion when the Government have had, for various reasons, to ask for secret service money. It is not a vote which we desire to press too strongly upon our friends behind us; but we think they may fairly, under the circumstances, trust the Department of Justice with the administration of this small sum of money, when I tell them that, so far as we can judge, the loss to the revenue resulting from this system of smuggling amounts to $700,000 or $800,000 a year; and when I tell them further that the resources of the Customs Department have been wholly inadequate to cope with this evil. If the hon. gentleman has any other suggestion to make, we would not object to consider it. We do not want to use this money for any illegitimate political purpose, I do assure him. We simply want to use it for the purpose of putting down this great evil which I have alluded to, and which has not been grappled with successfully for many years past. There are many men in this House who can corroborate more fully than I can the great loss to the revenue and the great injury to the country sustained by this system of smuggling; and, without unduly disparaging the hon. gentleman's remarks, I think he might reasonably accept the offer I made last night to submit a detailed account of this expenditure to the hon. gentleman or to his colleague, the leader of the Opposition, and I would not mind adding the ex-Controller of Customs—I do not object to a triumvirate, and a triumvirate may be found existing on that side—on condition that they will pledge themselves on their honour not to reveal the names of the persons who may be the beneficiaries of this fund.

•Mr. FOSTER. I quite understand my hon. friend's point of view, and his argument from that point of view has considerable strength in it, no doubt. I only called attention very strongly to the other side of the case, which we must look at before we commit ourselves to this policy. There is no one point, so far as I can see, on which this vote could be justified, except the desirability of getting information from the informer without the informer being subject to publicity and to consequent persecution. I take it that is the only thing which could not just as well be got at by the ordinary machinery as by this special machinery. If it is true that that matter as to the informer can be got over without the adoption of this principle of a secret service fund, my hon. friend agrees with me. I think, that that should be done. Those gentlemen who have had the disposition of customs and excise ought to know that better than myself. I know that this matter of smuggling is a terrible evil, as demoralizing as it can be on the community at large where it is carried on, utterly subversive of all respect for law; and no means can be too strong or vigorous to stamp it out if that can possibly be done. But this matter of smuggling is not a thing of recent date.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. But it has grown to frightful proportions.

Mr. FOSTER. I am quite aware that it has grown and that it is growing, and that the higher you put the duties the more it will grow. That formed a subject of conversation in my time very frequently, and the view which I got from the officers was that those officers, with the machinery they had, were quite as able to cope with the evil as they could do it in any other way.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. But they have failed.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, and my hon. friend may get this vote, and the Minister of Justice may dispense it, and the whole of it may be spent, and at the end of the year the Controller of Customs will have to come forward and say that there is an immense amount of smuggling still. With 5,000,000 people along our frontier, and the incentive so great as it is for smuggling in tobaccos and liquors, it is impossible to stop smuggling; and the Department of Justice, the Minister of Inland Revenue and the Minister of Customs combined cannot stop it. But I do not want to take the stand of burking the possibility of stopping it, and I have thought of this suggestion. The Auditor General is the parliamentary officer for auditing the accounts; he is a man of sense and a man of honour and probity; and if the hon. gentleman will extend his proposition so that this expenditure shall be audited by the Auditor General, with the supervision of the leader of the House and the leader of the Opposition—

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. But without the publication of names.

Mr. FOSTER. The Auditor General has before him scores and hundreds of individual payments which he never displays on the pages of his books. I know—and I am not giving away any secret—that in the course of auditing accounts, he has called in certain Ministers and asked them for information, and when that is given to satisfy him, he has passed the account, but has not displayed it on his books. The Auditor General is the ultimate judge of what he will display, and what he will not display; and I think we may trust him, when the revenues of the country are in hand; and no man in the service of the country would rather have the revenues conserved than the Auditor General.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I may say at once that, on the condition, of course, that publicity is not given to the names, I see no objection to accepting the hon. gentleman's suggestion, which is as I understand, that the audit of this expenditure shall be made by the Auditor General, and that the leader of the Opposition shall be allowed to know likewise what passes, both gentlemen being under pledge on their honour not to reveal the names of the recipients of the money. We would require that, because, the hon. gentleman knows that in the case of smugglers carrying on smuggling on so extensive a scale as we know they are doing, men's lives would not be safe if it were known that they have given information to the Government. In order to get information, these men must go among a very lawless set of men, and to a certain extent, must take their lives in their hands. We know what has occurred in England and in other countries where smuggling has been rampant. We know that an informer would get an extremely short shrift if the men on whom he informed knew of his proceedings. On the condition stated, I accept the hon. gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. FOSTER. I make that suggestion and I think it will meet the case. We do not forego the audit. The Auditor General has the audit, the leader of the Opposition has the right to see all the documents. If those three gentlemen, the leader of the Government, the Auditor General and the leader of the Opposition are satisfied, that is all that is necessary. If those three have cognizance, I do not think the Government would dare to attempt anything wrong, and in the second place I think it might be well left with the Auditor General.

Mr. WALLACE. It does not do away with the fact that the Government are asking for this sum.

Mr. QUINN. Without any desire to obtrude myself upon the notice of the House at this stage, I cannot refrain from expressing my objection to this vote, not so much because it may be used for political purposes, but because of the principle of it. I object to the principle of the vote. It is only necessary to mention the fact that the system has been abandoned in England for many years, except in connection with the discovery of treason, and it is even a question if it will not be abandoned in that case also, in view of the experience the authorities in England have had with the informers who have been paid out of the Secret Service fund. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce said that the only reason for this was the protection of the informers in order that their names should not be exposed. But the customs law of this country provides that protection.

Mr. CASGRAIN. For a number of years I was the agent of the Minister of Justice in Quebec city. We took out a great many suits against smugglers, and not in one instance could we succeed, because informers would not come up to give evidence as they were afraid for their lives.

Mr. QUINN. My hon. friend says that the Government had great difficulty in obtaining convictions, as they could not get the informer to go into the witness box.

Mr. CASGRAIN. We could not get them to inform or have their names mentioned under any circumstances whatever, even in private.

Mr. QUINN. Then my hon. friend thinks that if a sum of money is put in the hands of the representative of the Minister of Justice in the city of Quebec which will enable him to go to a man and say: Here are $100 or $500 cash give me such and such information, he can get the information. But is that information on which the Government ought to rely for the purpose of committing smugglers or anybody else—information purchased at so much a word? The Customs Act now protects informers. Under it the Minister of Customs, the Controller and Collector of Customs, the meanest official in the Customs Department who has received information is not bound to divulge the name of the informer to anybody. The lowest officer in the customs may walk into an establishment in the city of Montreal and seize that whole establishment, and is not bound to give to the collector of customs, to whom he reports the seizure, the name of the informer on whose information he is acting. Not only that, but in obtaining the judgment of the Controller of Custtoms he does not declare the name of the informer. He simply reports to the Controller that there is an informer in the case and asks him to be good enough to appropriate one-third of the amount realized for the benefit of the informer. If that is not sufficient protection for the informer, I do not know what more you can want. I do not know how you can have better protection by putting the paltry sum of $5,000 spot cash in the Estimates for that purpose. If it be necessary to increase the amount paid the informer, give him one-half instead of one-third. If $700,000 a year are being stolen from the Dominion by smuggling, the country can well afford to lose $350,000 a year to recover double the amount. Increase the protection given the informer, if you will, but do not put it in the hands of any officer of any department to send private spies into a merchant's office to purchase his clerks. Do not allow any officer to purchase, for example, the office boy, a lad of fourteen or fifteen, and get from him information, not altogether accurate, against his employer. I could give you some instances of the operation of the Act to my own knowledge, in the city of Montreal. An establishment in Montreal imported certain machinery from the United States. The manager charged the company the full amount of duty and obtained from it a cheque for that amount, but in making the entry he undervalued the goods and pocketed the difference in duty. He was dismissed some years later, but still within the five years which would prescribe the offence. He then went to a subordinate official in the customs and laid the information that this machinery had been smuggled or entered at a lower valuation. The machinery was seized, confiscated and sold, and this informer shared with the customs officer the money realized on the sale of that machinery. Here was the man who actually perpetrated the fraud, laying the information and getting one-third of the money.

Mr. BERGERON. Did not the cheque of the company show that the company had paid the full amount of duty?

Mr. QUINN. Quite true, but the decision of the Minister of Customs at the time was that the company was obliged to pay, and this man who had committed the fraud pocketed some $3,000 or $4,000 by the transaction.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. What year was that?

Mr. QUINN. It is a good many years ago, and I do not think it necessary to give the particulars.

Mr. TALBOT. What became of the man that did it?

Mr. QUINN. Nothing was ever done to him.

Mr. FOSTER. He was not made an officer of the Government, was he?

Mr. BERGERON. Was he knighted?

Mr. QUINN. Let me give one other instance to show how the existence of such a law has a corroding and deteriorating effect on the community. How much worse it will be if we sanction, by a vote of this Parliament, the expenditure of a secret service fund for which nobody can be held accountable by this House, concerning which nobody will be bound to explain one word, which may be put into the hands of degraded officials—for I do not think that anybody will pretend that every officer in the Customs or in the police department of this country is above reproach—say only that it may be put in the hands of indiscreet men, and I say it will have a most degrading and debasing effect upon the community in general. But I said I would give you one other instance. The case I speak of is that of a wholesale merchant who, being weak and under the pressure of hard times, consented, at the solicitation of his financial manager, to pass certain items through the custom-house fraudulently. He did pass the entries of two seasons in that way. But he was a perfectly honest and honourable man and wished to do right. But he was enabled by the means I have suggested to tide over a very hard time. Being successful afterwards, he wished to make a settlement with the customs, although what he had done was utterly unknown to the customs authorities. He tried to effect a settlement in a quiet way. He sent a representative to the Department of Customs to ask the Minister what steps would be taken if he should make a clean breast of the whole affair and offer to pay the amount of the frauds he had perpetrated. The answer was not satisfactory. Of course he could not afford the penalties the law would exact if he should make the confession, and he determined to wind up his business. In the meantime his financier, the man who had prompted him to perpetrate these frauds became aggressive. He tried to get rid of this man but the man said: If you dare to dismiss me, or if you do not give me so much money, I will expose you to the customs authorities. So the merchant consented to give the amount of money required for the time being. But, of course, his life became intolerable; he could not stand the strain of his position very long. The consequence was that within two years he was obliged to wind up his business—a large wholesale importing business—and leave the country. Now, here is a case where a man used the Customs Act, knowing that he would be sheltered as an informer, for the purpose of blackmailing the man whom he had led to commit a crime. After all, what is the defrauding of the customs? I do not mean to say that it is an act that ought to be lauded or approved by members of Parliament, but I can imagine offences much more serious than the defrauding of the customs, in fact, I think that on the Statute-book of this country there is no law an offence against which is less serious than that of defrauding the customs, except where the frauds are carried on to such an extent as to materially impair the revenues of the country. The offence in itself is not a high crime, it is not treason, it is not anything like the offence, for example, of stealing from a private individual. But where it is carried on to such an extent as seriously to impair the revenue, then serious measures ought to be taken for the purpose of protecting the revenue. But I think it would be a serious mistake if, for the purpose of protecting the revenue, we should be obliged to descend to methods that have been dropped by the mother country. We know, that as a matter of fact, in the mother country the secret service exists only for one purpose, and that is for the purpose of discovering treason. We know that in the mother country there is no such thing as advertising a reward for the conviction of a prisoner. We have a striking example of that in the case of the great Jack-the-Ripper atrocities. During the whole of the time when these atrocities were being committed the British Government did not offer a reward of a single shilling for the discovery or detection of the man who committed these crimes. Having such an example as this before us, I say it would be unwise for this Parliament to have a secret service to protect the revenue of the country. As I said, it is not necessary; ample protection, as I have explained, is given. If it is necessary, let us spend a larger sum of money, let us have a larger number of vessels; let us send down five hundred officers if one hundred are not enough—let us send a thousand, let us send an army, but for Heaven's sake, do not introduce this vicious system.

Mr. TALBOT. Who will be the general of the army?

Mr. QUINN. I would suggest the hon. gentleman (Mr. Talbot) himself, as he would make a pretty good detective. Hon. gentlemen scoff at the idea of employing an army. I am sorry they do not look more seriously at the question and think of the horrible consequences that will flow from this force for the corruption of innocent boys—because that is what it comes to—and ignorant men to betray their employers, on the plea of protecting the revenue of the country.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I think that I ought to say a word on this subject because I come from a part of the province of Quebec where smuggling of whisky is taking place at an enormous rate, and increasing every year. I am sure that if my hon. friend from Charlevoix (Mr. Angers) were here, he would corroborate what I say. I do not look upon this vote which the Government asks Parliament to grant so much as a protection for the revenue as I regard it as a protection for the morals of the country. The smuggling of whisky is going on at such a rate in the lower St. Lawrence that parishes in which whisky was hardly known before are becoming demoralized, and where not only the men and women drink, but the very children also. Every means have been taken to prevent the bringing of illicit whisky into the country. We have spent large sums of money in this service, and special cruisers have been built and sent into the St. Lawrence to assist in protecting the revenue. The clergy also have done their best and have adopted most extreme measures in some cases to stem this evil, which threatens a large part of the province of Quebec, and nothing has yet succeeded. To my knowledge, the law has been often violated in the district of Quebec where I was the agent of the Minister of Justice for some time. Under instructions from the department I took every means I could think of to bring the smugglers to justice. But I did not succeed. We meet smugglers in the streets and know that they are engaged in that occupation and that they are getting rich in it. We know that large quantities of illicit whisky are brought into Quebec and into the parishes along the St. Lawrence. We know the men who are engaged in this business but we cannot get evidence to convict them. Why? Because these men are very astute; they know their business perfectly well, having been engaged in it a long time; and they understand, if they are as good detectives as they are smugglers, they will find the men who have informed upon them, and I say that the life of an informer upon these matters in certain districts in the province of Quebec is certainly in danger every day. Therefore, not only as regards the protection of the revenue, but more as regards the protection of the morals of a great part of this country do I favour this proposal. I say that even if it is against the principle of good administration to give to the Government a secret service fund, seeing the great evil with which we are threatened, I say we should not oppose this vote, especially under these circumstances which have been stated to us, that these accounts are to be audited by the Auditor General and two members on this side of this House.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I agree with very much of what the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) has said. But I must say that under the late Government smugglers were not prosecuted with much vigilance. I can cite one instance which the hon. gentleman will remember. Proceedings were taken against a most prominent smuggler.

Mr. FOSTER. If we want to discuss this question properly, it is just as well not to raise the party question.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I can say this, Mr. Chairman, that some years ago there were complaints about smuggling, and the late Government of Quebec imported a Montreal lawyer to take out proceedings in Quebec against the smugglers. One smuggler was convicted, and when his friends saw that, they bought that lawyer off and paid him a large sum of money, and the other prosecutions were dropped.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What is his name ?

Mr. CHOQUETTE. The hon. gentleman knows him very well. I approve of this action of the Government to prevent smuggling; but I must say that in my opinion, the very best way to put down smuggling is to reduce the duties on liquor. It is just as well for the Government to get $1.20 on two gallons of liquor as $2.40 on one gallon of liquor. If they reduced the duty on liquor, the importation would be much greater, smuggling would be less, and the Government would have just as much revenue as it does now. If they do not wish to reduce the duty they will be compelled to spend a large sum of money in employing two or three cruisers to prevent smuggling.

Resolutions to be reported.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1 o'clock p.m.

Second Sitting.

THURSDAY, 24th June, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

REPAIRING WALKS—PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS.

Mr. HENDERSON asked :

Has the contract for repairing the walks in front of the Parliament Buildings and for road work in front of the post office been let? If so, to whom, and at what price per square yard?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). 1. Yes. 2. The Sicily Asphaltum Paving Company of Montreal. 3. $2.19 for mastic sidewalks around the Parliament and departmental buildings, and $3.39 for rock asphalt in front of the post office.

PRIVILEGE—THE SENATE AND THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY EXTENSION.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to make a brief statement with regard to a report in the Ottawa "Citizen" of this morning, in which report the hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell is stated to have said :

The Whip of the Liberal party in the House of Commons has been telling members of the Senate that, if they rejected this measure, the Government would withdraw the Crow's Nest Pass Railway Bill. What in the world had the one to do with the other? It was simply an idle threat, used in the hope of influencing members of the Senate who were known to be in favour of the Crow's Nest Pass Bill being passed, and who were friends of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

I simply wish to state that if the hon. gentleman said what he is here reported to have said, he was misinformed, for I never made such a statement to a Senator or to any other person; nor would I be guilty of using a threat to a Senator or to any other person. I simply wish to make this statement, although it is a matter of indifference to myself personally, but I think that it is only fair to the Government and to the public, as well as to myself, that I should say that there is no truth whatever in the statement, so far as I am concerned, and I am sure that the hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell would not wish to misrepresent me.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FOSTER. I think before the Orders of the Day were called, we were promised some statement about the intention of the Government with regard to the business of the House.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Yes, I will tell the hon. gentleman what we propose to do. In respect to Item 18 it is not the intention of the Government to proceed; with respect to Item 19 for the abolition of the civil service, we do not proceed; with respect to Item 22, the House in committee on the Civil Service Superannuation Act, we do not proceed. With respect to 26, we want to have a little conversation with our friends about it. It seems a very innocent little Bill, and we think that they are under a prejudice about it. With respect to Item 27, we will proceed; with respect to Item 28, we will proceed. Of course, we go on with the Loan Bill, and with the resolutions for subsidies, and such of the other matters as the House will enable us to consider.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask my hon. friend, in view of the extraordinary estimate which was brought down last night, if it would not be a wise thing for him, or for the Minister of Railways, to explain what is meant by that estimate. I think it would probably contribute very much to the enlightenment of the House, and might save us time.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I admit the hon. gentleman has a right to expect explanations, but I think they will properly come when the item is called.

Mr. FOSTER. I will suggest to my hon. friend that at this stage of the session, as he himself will admit, we should know what is proposed before we can make much progress with business. Now, I suggest that for the better progress of business we should have that explanation as soon as possible.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I take it for granted that the hon. gentleman as well as myself is not disposed to delay prorogation unnecessarily.

Mr. FOSTER. No.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I do not at all dispute the right of the hon. gentleman to have full explanation of the item in detail whenever the item comes down, but I think it would be more convenient at a later stage. But if the hon. gentleman wants to have it earlier, I will endeavour to see that it is given him if possible either to-night or to-morrow morning.

Mr. FOSTER. I just reiterate what I said before, that it is of such an important nature and has become of so controversial a nature, that I am quite sure that the business of the House would not be impeded if the explanation with reference to that was made at as early a period as possible.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I will bear that in mind, and I will endeavour to comply with what, under the circumstances, I admit to be a not unreasonable demand. If possible, I will let the hon. gentleman have what he desires either at half-past eight to-night or at eleven o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. FOSTER. Half-past eight to-night will be preferable, if we can express a preference in the matter.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the Government ought to state their position in the matter now, because having put the estimate there, they are in a position at this moment to make the full explanations that are necessary. I think this is an opportune time, and it would facilitate the business of the House for them to state now their reasons for bringing this down, and the probable results of such an arrangement.

Mr. FOSTER.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I will endeavour to meet their views as far as I reasonably can.

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Customs..... $16,450

Mr. TAYLOR. Before this item is adopted, I want to ask the Minister for a word or two of explanation. In the statement that was read this morning by the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) I noticed an appointment made at Gananoque of a preventive officer. I want to ask the Minister if that is a permanent position and what salary is attached to it?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). My impression is that it is just during the summer months. In reference to the question asked by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), I may say that the services of Mr. Henry Roebuck, as customs officer at Sombra, have been dispensed with and a successor has been appointed, Mr. Myers. With reference to the other question, concerning Mr. Cronk, customs officer at Courtright, no change has been made respecting that position. There is, however, a charge I believe lodged against him, but no action has been taken thereon.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the charge?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. A charge of partisanship. Then the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills) asked me with reference to Port Lorne. The memorandum given me with reference to that is that that outport was abolished by Order in Council, and the sub-collector, Mr. Walter Graves, was superannuated at an allowance of $96 a year.

In reference then briefly to one or two points that have been brought up by the ex-Controller of Customs (Mr. Wallace) I may make a remark or two. In reference to the return to the House which he mentioned, I may say that that return calls for a list of those who have been dismissed from the service. It did not call for those who had died, but those whose services had been dispensed with. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) called attention to the number of appointments that existed as compared with those who had left the service for one cause or the other. Of these extra officers fourteen replaced deceased officers; nine replaced officers resigned; eight replaced permanent officers dismissed; one replaced a permanent officer superannuated; one replaced an officer who was promoted; two replaced officers transferred; four replaced officers employed during the season of navigation only; three replaced officers paid by railway companies, and two officers were appointed without salary, making a total of 44. In reference to the increased expenditure, I think the ex-Controller of Customs will find that it is accounted for by the increased necessities of the services in British Columbia and by the officers in connection with the preventive service. I will say that the Government have been fully impressed with the necessity of adopting strong measures to combat more successfully with the smuggling of liquor in different parts of the Dominion. As has been said on both sides of the House, it is becoming a serious matter. It is estimated that many hundreds of thousands of dollars of revenue are lost in consequence of the smuggling which is going on. We propose to adopt precautions, and we ask the House to place in our hands a sum of money to enable us to combat with this practice. Whether we shall be entirely successful time alone can tell, but if we should be successful in a partial degree in combatting the evil the country will be far more than compensated for the outlay. The $10,000 in the Main Estimates for a new cruiser is an additional expenditure. As to the $5,000 in the Supplementary Estimates, though a boat has not yet been engaged, I have thought that perhaps the committee would trust me with that fund and place it at my disposal, so that if I found that necessity demanded it and it could be used successfully, I might be able to engage another cruiser, at least, during a portion of the summer months. Then the $5,000 for extra preventive officers I think will be necessary. Complaints are not only coming to us from the maritime provinces, the province of Quebec, but our friends from the western coast assure me that there is a great deal of illicit liquor coming in there, and I have been impressed very strongly that steps should be taken to check that traffic. The $6,250 is intended specially for preventive officers. While part of it will go for the inspection of the ports the greater part is for the preventive service. Then $5,000 extra is asked for. This I do not wish to retain in my own hands, but the ex-Controller of Customs is wrong in saying that it is to be left at my disposal to do as I please with it, and picturing secret service men going into the stores of responsible and respectable merchants and terrorizing them. There is nothing of that kind at all in it. The whole thing is in connection with the endeavour to stop this smuggling of liquor which is becoming of such magnitude. I desired, and the Government concurred in it, that that sum should not be disbursed by me but should be paid over to the Department of Justice as they may require it for such proceedings as they may adopt in the effort to restrain this practice. It is true, what the hon. gentleman opposite said, that the names of the informers are not divulged. The name of the seizing officer appears, and the remittance of one-third which may be given to the informer is sent to the seizing officer, and that officer, knowing who he derived the information from, gives the money to the informer. But hon. gentlemen will see this difficulty. Under the provisions of the customs law the informer is entitled to a portion of the proceeds that are derived from the confiscation of the goods after all the necessary expenditure has taken place. One-third of the net amount is given to the informer, one-third to the seizing officer, and the Government retains one-third. But supposing a case is given to the Department of Justice in which information would have been given to that department about an illegal transaction having taken place some time ago. It would be criminal in its nature. They would have it brought before the courts and the conviction of the guilty party would have a most deterrent effect especially if it should be a case of a person of business standing and wealth. It would strike a very great blow at the practice of smuggling, but there would be no proceeds from it. It would be a criminal action and there would be nothing to divide and no fund out of which the informer could be paid under the law as it stands. I think hon. gentlemen would see the distinction.

Mr. WALLACE. There is no fund out of which he could be paid, but there is a fund out of which he could be paid his disbursements, and the expense to which he had been put.

Mr. QUINN. There is another procedure open to them even if the man has been convicted in the criminal courts, and the operation of the criminal courts has been exhausted. A man can be pursued by the Government for a specific sum of money, and I think the limit now is any time within seven or ten years after the commission of the offence, and any money which is recovered from him by such proceedings may be divided with the informer. Information upon which a man may be convicted or upon which a complaint may be based is certainly sufficient to bring a suit to recover the amount of money. It will not be pretended surely that our judges are more lenient to persons sued under such circumstances than our juries are. A man might be convicted of smuggling by a jury and the Government certainly could recover against him a condemnation for the specific sum of money sued for by the department.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Quinn) think that persons in possession of this information will wait; that they will, so to speak, take their chances of waiting until this suit is all over. The pressure always is for the distribution of the fund, the object being to secure it. I only mention the case to show that the law does not cover all these points. We have an item here to pay Mr. John Reid for services, which has been put in, subject, however, to the will of the committee. This matter came before the late Controller of Customs, and he found this was the case of a man who gave information that led to the detection of frauds that had been going on, I think during some years, and which extended into many thousands of dollars. The papers revealed that there was something like $9,000 fine imposed on a man responsible for the frauds, but nothing was derived from it. This informer would have been entitled to some $3,000 if the fine had been collected, but nothing being available the department were not able to give him anything at all. The ex-Controller of Customs thought that it was a claim that ought to be paid. He thought that this man's services deserved recognition, and he was anxious to pay for them. He asked the Department of Justice to give him an opinion as to whether he could not pay it out of the 5 per cent that they retained on the seizure. The Department of Justice advised him that the man had no legal claim and that it would not be possible to pay him out of that fund. I have simply given this case by way of illustration. Therefore, if this amount is available to be disbursed by the Department of Justice, it will promote the object which we have in view.

Mr. QUINN. I do not want to make a speech on the subject, but I consider that I would not be performing my duty to my constituents if I did not enter my protest against the vote properly. I know that the merchants of Montreal will view this vote with a great deal of regret indeed. I know that the merchants have hoped for an amendment to the existing laws, and I am satisfied that a great many members of this House have not taken the trouble to understand the Customs Act, or else they would not vote for this. Merchants hoped for some change that would permit them to have their cases decided upon promptly, and not be left as they are at the mercy of irresponsible officers, the object of many of whom is to share in the fine which may be inflicted. Although we have the assurance of the Minister to the contrary, I have no hesitation in saying that eventually this money will be used to corrupt the employees of merchants and manufacturers. I register my disapproval against it. One vote amounts to nothing, but my vote shall be given against it, and for that reason, if the item is carried, I wish it to be carried on division.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I wish to get some information from the Controller of Customs. It has been suggested, and properly suggested, that a change should be made in the mode of inspecting the customs offices and inland revenue offices all through the country. For many years past, it is well known that the inspectors have been appointed on political grounds, and that men who had scarcely any knowledge whatever of accounts, and who were not qualified to audit the accounts, were placed in these positions. The result of that method of inspection has been that at many ports, notably very recently, Peterborough, Dundas and Berlin, large defalcations have occurred. The Customs Department ought to establish a new system of inspection, and appoint competent accountants who would be able to go to these officers and see whether the accounts were in proper shape or not. If this were done, defalcations would be prevented, and large sums of money saved to the treasury. Every one knows that these inspectors have not been appointed in the past because they were qualified for the positions, but that the appointments were in every instance made on political grounds. The last one was the appointment of a gentleman who formerly sat in this House, and who had the appointment in his pocket while he was still voting in this House. I have nothing to say against that gentleman; I am on good terms with him; but I say that he is not a competent officer to discharge the duties of such an office. The Customs Department ought to appoint men as inspectors, not because they are politicians, but because they are competent accountants who can ascertain if the books are kept in proper shape. I ask the Controller of Customs if it is the intention of the Government to make any such change as has been suggested in order to protect the revenues of the country?

Mr. CLANCY. I desire to say a few words with reference to the statement made by the Controller of Customs, as to the dismissal of Mr. Roebuck and the proposed dismissal of Mr. Cronk.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I did not say that.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) said that Mr. Roebuck had been dismissed, that Mr. Myers had been appointed his successor, and that Mr. Cronk had not yet been dismissed but that there was a charge against him. The reasonable inference from that is that Mr. Cronk would be treated in the same way as Mr. Roebuck. I am informed that Mr. Roebuck has been dismissed without any investigation, and merely upon information given to the Controller of Customs by persons who are seeking the place for themselves, who are politically hostile, and who have made up their minds to conjure up a charge whether one exists or not. There is no more inoffensive man in Canada than Mr. Henry Roebuck. He has never spoken harshly of any political party in his life. True, he has his own views, but he has never been a hostile partisan, and has never taken an offensive part in party politics. I am sorry to learn that Mr. Myers has been appointed in his place. I can say nothing derogatory of the private character of Mr. Myers, but he is one of the most offensive partisans in the district, and he has earned his position, if he could earn it in any sense, by making a charge against one of his fellow-citizens. There was no opportunity given Mr. Roebuck to convince the Controller of Customs that these charges were without foundation, but upon the tittle tattle of the neighbourhood, the Controller of Customs dismissed Mr. Roebuck. If any one could be chargeable with active partisanship, Mr. Myers is that man. Charges are secretly made against the civil servants of this country, and let me ask, Why are they not investigated? They are not investigated for the reasons that if there was an investigation it would be made perfectly plain to the Controller of Customs that there was no foundation for these charges. This system sets spies upon the civil servants to plot against them, so that these spies may earn positions through their own infamy. My hon. friend from West Lambton (Mr. Lister) stated last session that one of the charges against Mr. Cronk was that he attended a Conservative convention at Dresden in 1896. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lister) I have no doubt had such information, but I have positive personal information that that statement is utterly destitute of a particle of truth. Mr. Cronk did not attend any Conservative convention and he did not take part in the elections. Nevertheless, he is singled out for punishment. The sword is now suspended over Mr. Cronk's head, but I venture to say that no investigation will be held, for the reason that the Controller of Customs dare not hold an investigation any more than he dare hold an investigation in regard to Mr. Roebuck. I say it is a public outrage. The hon. gentleman is not restrained, even by the strength he should show as a Minister of the Crown, from yielding to the clamour of his friends who are earning their positions at the price of personal honour and of everything that is manly, by plotting against their fellow-citizens, with the full security that the hon. gentleman here will turn a deaf ear to every complaint, and refuse an investigation for the sake of avoiding difficulties in a matter which is utterly unwarranted and a disgrace to the Government of Canada.

Mr. BERGERON. I believe that nothing should be spared in the effort to put a stop to smuggling, and I understood that it was settled this morning between the leader of the Government and the leader of the Opposition, how that matter should be dealt with. There is a great deal of smuggling done, not only in the lower part of the province of Quebec, but also on the border, and in the district of Beauharnois—and I am sure the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver) will bear out what I say. Both the regular and the special officers, I believe, have done their duty in the past in that district; but there is one thing in which I think we ought to make a new departure. In the past, when an officer of the Customs Department has detected a man smuggling, petitions have been got up and demands have been made from members of Parliament and others, both Liberals and Conservatives—and I have been one of them—in favour of the man who had been found guilty of violating the law; and the Minister would yield. I believe a stop should be put to that. If those who violate the law knew that if they were caught they would not be pardoned, but would be prosecuted with the utmost rigour of the law, I think it would do a great deal to stop smuggling. But my purpose in rising is to ask the Controller of Customs who are the securities for Mr. Brodeur, whose name was mentioned this morning as having been appointed collector of customs at Valleyfield, and what is the amount of the securities?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I have not that information with me, but I will bring it down on concurrence. In reply to the hon. member for North Brant (Mr. Somerville), I wish to say that the question of the better inspection of ports has not been lost sight of, and I am taking a vote here for the payment of the salaries of two additional inspectors—one now at Montreal and one at Kingston, both over twenty years in the service, and both very capable men. It is my intention to avail myself of the services of these gentlemen in order to have an inspection at much more frequent intervals than hitherto. There have been several cases of irregularities, I regret to say, which might not have occurred if there had been a more regular and frequent inspection. Unfortunately, Mr. Boultbee, one of the inspectors, is almost wholly incapacitated; I think he is not able to do any work. With reference to Mr. McKay, perhaps he might not have been the most suitable man who could have been appointed, but from what I have seen of him, he is endeavouring to do his duty. But we required more help than we had, and I trust to be able to look after the ports more closely than has been the case in the past.

Mr. SCRIVER. The hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) has done me the honour to refer to me as being like himself a representative of a border county. The hon. gentleman is not exactly the representative of a border county, while I am strictly so. My county runs along a frontier of some fifty-five miles, and the temptations and facilities for smuggling, I admit, are very great. But I reside in the county, and I know pretty well what transpires there, and I am prepared to say that my constituents are not like those of a former member of this House, who described them as protectionists by day and free traders by night. The only wonder to me is that, as I believe, so little smuggling takes place on that frontier. What smuggling does take place is to a large extent of a petty character. I am prepared to say that smuggling on a large scale does not exist there, and has never existed, partly, I dare say, owing to the conscientiousness of my constituents and partly to the vigilance of the officers. These officers, I may say, have been in office for some time, and so far as I know they have discharged their duties efficiently and thoroughly. With regard to what the hon. gentleman said as to the appeals made to the representatives of border counties—I suppose he means his own county and the adjoining counties and my county—I can appeal to the late Controller of Customs and the present Controller of Customs in support of my statement that the appeals for the relaxation of the law from myself have not been frequent. When those appeals have been made, they have been in reference to cases of peculiar hardship, where the smuggling was of a petty character—generally a few gallons of coal oil, which is the commodity, if anything, that my constituents bring into the province without paying duty—and where, as an accompaniment of the seizure, a horse and vehicle have perhaps been seized. In cases of that kind there have been occasional appeals, and I am bound to say that, both by the predecessors of the present Controller, and by him, in the rare instances in which I have found it to be my duty to apply to him, I have been treated, on behalf of my constituents, reasonably and considerately. But I am bound to say, in reply especially to what has been said by the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Quinn), that I do not consider this a good time to relax the rigidity or severity of the law. Owing to some of the changes that have been made in the tariff, the temptation to smuggle particular articles will be greater than it has ever been before, and I would regard it as a great misfortune if any relaxation were made in the instructions to officers, or if any encouragement were given directly or indirectly to people living along that long frontier, to do differently in the future from what they have done in the past. With regard to the item before the House, with reference to which the hon. member for Montreal Centre has had a good deal to say, my opinion is that if a man has been honest in his business, as he ought to be, he has nothing to fear from the attempt to bribe his employees with money to make disclosures. What can they disclose, if he has observed the law as it should have been done? I do not consider that an argument of any great consequence. With reference to the inspectors, I differ from my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Somerville), so far as my experience goes. I do not know what may have taken place in his province, but I am bound to say that the duties of inspector in that part of the country where I live have been thoroughly and honestly performed. Mr. O'Mara, who holds the position in the district in which I live, is quite capable of performing these duties and has, to my knowledge, performed them efficiently. He is a good accountant and makes a thorough examination of the offices along the frontier at stated intervals, and in no instance that I am aware of has any official on that frontier been convicted of dishonesty since I have had the honour to represent that county. I would only say once more that I trust every means possible in the power of the officials at the head of this department will be taken to check smuggling, especially on the Lower St. Lawrence. Smuggling is the only ground for the application of this money, and the prevention of smuggling is what is aimed at by the estimate before us. If the statement in the newspapers and the reports which have reached me are at all correct, smuggling has gone on there to a deplorable degree, and has been the cause of great demoralization, both as to intemperance and dishonesty in all that territory below the city of Quebec, and I do trust that no effort will be spared by the department to put an end to it.

Mr. WALLACE. I cannot agree with the hon. member for North Brant (Mr. Somerville) in what he said about inspectorships. He said that they were all political appointments. His information is certainly not accurate. It is true that two appointments may be said to have been due to politics—Mr. Boulton and Mr. McKay. Mr. Boulton is not an accountant but an experienced lawyer, and the department utilized his legal knowledge with reference to those seizure cases somewhat at that time, and he was found valuable in that regard. Mr. McKay has had a training which fits him for that position. He has been a business man all his life, and has had a business training which fits him for the position.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. What business did he follow?

Mr. WALLACE. The last business he was in was keeping a grain and flour and feed store.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. That does not qualify him for an inspectorship.

Mr. WALLACE. He had an extensive business experience.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. What did he do before that?—he kept a hotel.

Mr. WALLACE. With regard to the other inspectors, there is Mr. McMichael, the chief inspector, a man who has been all his life in the customs service, and who never was a politician, because he entered the service almost before he was out of his teens. His appointment was in no sense a political one. He is one of the ablest men in the public service to-day. His assistant, Mr. Belton, is also a very competent accountant. With regard to the other inspectors, Mr. O'Meara, of Quebec, has been all his life in the service, and his appointment was not a political one. He was in the customs at Quebec many years before he was promoted to the position of inspector. Mr. McLean's case, of the province of Nova Scotia, is exactly the same. He was in the department from boyhood in the city of St. John, and was promoted to an inspectorship. Mr. Clute, of British Columbia, and Mr. Hill, of Nova Scotia, were promoted in the same way. Captain Young, of Manitoba, is also a gentleman who never took an active part in politics, so that all over the Dominion to-day you may say that Mr. McKay is the only inspector who may be said to have been a politician. The charges made by my hon. friend from North Brant are, therefore, not accurate.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Was not Mr. Boulton a politician?

Mr. WALLACE. The Controller of Customs told us that he is incapacitated from work, and therefore I do not refer to him.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. He is in the service yet.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. Controller has said he was incapacitated. With regard to the other point, that these large amounts had been asked from this Parliament, $10,000 for a new vessel and $16,000 for the preventive service, because smuggling is increasing, when I was Controller my information was that smuggling was decreasing. I concede, however, that the increased duties in the tariff on tobacco, between 50 and 60 per cent, and on liquors, will encourage smuggling, no doubt, and the Government will have to exercise extra vigilance. But I deny that smuggling was on the increase, and the proof will be found in the correspondence which I had with many priests in the province of Quebec, who were very ably assisting the Customs Department in ferreting out cases of smuggling and preventing smuggling wherever they could. No more ardent men could be found anywhere than the priests of the province of Quebec, recognizing as they did the evil of introducing smuggled liquors throughout the country, which work so much injury to the people. They did their best to prevent it and assist the Customs Department in carrying out the law. But I recognize the fact that with their assistance and with the extra force we had placed in the province of Quebec for the preventive service, the evil was decreasing, so that this large expenditure to-day, which is proposed for that prevention, if necessary at all, is necessary only because of the largely increased duties upon tobacco and spirits. So that my objection to these votes is as strong as ever, notwithstanding what has been said about the necessity of preventing smuggling. It is as strong as ever against the proposed secret service vote. I am opposed to the principle of that service money being used. I am safe in stating it has never been found necessary in Canada to vote a dollar of secret service fund for the customs service, and I do not think it is necessary to-day. You are putting a weapon in the hands of men which they may use judiciously and carefully, but I say we should not give this power to any man. But we may not always have so conscientious a Controller of Customs as the present occupant of that office.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I do not disburse the money.

Mr. WALLACE. It is under the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson's) control.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. No, it is handed over to the Department of Justice. They are to dispose of it and account for it; the Customs Department has no charge of this.

Mr. WALLACE. That makes it all the more objectionable, to my mind. The Controller of Customs has the machinery for this purpose; he has full control of the preventive service; he has new officers whom he has just appointed; he is reorganizing the staff, and yet he says that the $5,000 he asks us to vote is not to be utilized by him but to be handed over to the Department of Justice. And he gives us no idea what facilities the Department of Justice has for preventing smuggling. The money is to be handed over to the Department of Justice for them to do what they please with. I say that whatever is expended for the prevention of smuggling should be used by the Controller of Customs. Nobody else can do it effectively; nobody else, in my opinion, can do it at all. The customs officers are the only men who are responsible; they are the ones who know the law. As I view it, the Department of Justice would have to employ the customs officers. If you do that, you have two heads for one staff—you will have both the Controller of Customs and the Minister of Justice having charge of the same men. That would be an unworkable scheme.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I wish to say a word with regard to what the ex-Controller of Customs (Mr. Wallace) has said concerning the inspection of custom-houses. It is well known to the people in my section of the country that while Mr. Mewburn, who was a practical accountant, was inspector of custom-houses in that section, no defalcations took place.

Mr. WALLACE. That is not correct.

Mr. MACLEAN. Mr. Mewburn's was a political appointment; he was an active politician before he became inspector.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. But he was not an active politician in the sense that Mr. McKay was. Mr. McKay was the Whip of the Conservative party in this House, and he was discharging his duties as a member of this House while he had in his pocket his appointment to the position of inspector of customs. Now, as I said, defalcations were not heard of, to my knowledge, during the time that Mr. Mewburn discharged the duties of his office. When Mr. Boulton was appointed, he was a politician—no doubt about that. He was appointed because he was a politician, and he was not a Dominion but a local politician and a worn-out local politician. After Mr. Boulton's appointment, we had a defalcation in Peterborough of $12,000 or $14,000, we had a defalcation in Berlin of $9,000 or $10,000, and we had a defalcation in Dundas of several hundred dollars. These were all under these capable men, who, the ex-Controller of Customs says discharged their duties so faithfully. If they had been careful officers, would it have been possible for these defalcations to have taken place? They were not the work of a single year, but it was proven on investigation that they had been going on year after year, in some cases for twelve years.

Mr. WALLACE. They were going on during Mr. Mewburn's time, then?

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Not at all.

Mr. WALLACE. You have just stated so.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Even if they were, that is no reason why the department should not try to protect the revenue of the country better now than they did before. As I say, with all respect for Mr. McKay—because I have every respect for him as an individual—I fear that when he was appointed, whatever he may have become since, he was not competent to discharge the duties of that office. I say that without fear of contradiction, because I know Mr. McKay's history better than the ex-Controller of Customs knows it. I know that for many years Mr. McKay kept a hotel in Hamilton, and not a very large hotel either, and afterwards he kept a flour and feed store in Hamilton. And I would like to know what a flour and feed store has to do with the customs. Nothing. Mr. McKay was appointed simply because he voted in the last Parliament to suit the leaders of the Conservative party. There is no use trying to conceal the fact. I hold that the Customs Department cannot be properly protected against thieves if they have not better inspectors, gentlemen who understand book-keeping and know how to audit accounts.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver) seemed to think that I want to be unjust towards some of his electors. That was not the motive. I simply wish that the law be respected. The hon. gentleman said that he remembers two or three cases in which he had been appealed to. How much more then, must I have been called upon, being a supporter of the Administration at that time. I know that in every case the Minister of Customs tried to be as kind as possible to the people and remit the fine—

Mr. SCRIVER. You were better treated than I, then; they never remitted a fine for me.

Mr. BERGERON. I remember the Controller of Customs treated my hon. friend (Mr. Scriver) very well, and though he may not have ever remitted a fine, he remitted a great part of it. The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) could tell a good deal about that if he were here. I am not blaming anybody, but I hope that in the future we shall abandon that policy. My hon. friend from Huntingdon spoke about petty smuggling—a few gallons of coal oil and things of that sort. Though my county is not on the border, those who bring goods in without informing the customs officers must come through Huntingdon. I can tell my hon. friend that he can go into stores in my county and see there india-rubber coats that have been smuggled, as well as considerable quantities of tobacco. So far as coal oil is concerned, I do not want to scandalize my hon. friend from Huntingdon, but I have known men to come into the town of Beauharnois with three barrels of coal oil, and to get there they had to cross the county of Huntingdon and a great portion of the county of Beauharnois. If these are small matters, there is no use of talking about any smuggling being a disadvantage to the country.

Mr. BENNETT. I think that the hon. member for North Wentworth and Brant (Mr. Somerville) was hardly fair to Mr. McKay, the customs inspector. I think that good taste, possibly, would have suggested that Mr. McKay's name should not be connected with this matter at all. However, since the hon. gentleman saw fit to parade the case, he should have gone further and told the whole facts. He knows very well that Mr. McKay was, for more than one term, mayor of the large city of Hamilton. His tenure of office there as well as his ten years' membership in this House are enough to show that he was a man of more than ordinary business ability. If it is anything to Mr. McKay's credit, I must say that he certainly in one case detected an error in books and brought it to the attention of the department, and that where the hon. gentleman's idol, Mr. Mewburn, had failed, having passed over the same error.

Mr. LISTER. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) as usual, under pretense of asking a question respecting the item, began to sing the old song about dismissals. I would remind my hon. friend that in his whole county I think only one man has been dismissed, Mr. Roebuck. I do not think there has been any other dismissal in his county, not because they should not be dismissed, but because of the generosity of the Controller. As for myself, I only became aware the other day that such a dismissal had taken place. As the hon. gentleman knows, the township of Sombra adjoins my own county, and I have known for many years what was going on in that township, as it formed a part of my county for the local. I can tell my hon. friend that Mr. Roebuck, for many years before he was appointed to this office, as well as after, took a very active part in politics, and on many occasions a very offensive part, so that if he was dismissed he only has himself to blame. I can tell my hon. friend that he drew voters to the poll, that he attended public meetings, that he took an active part in the organization of the party in that county, and in every way that an active partisan could act, Mr. Roebuck has acted since he became an officer under the Government, as well as before.

Mr. WALLACE. Did these occurrences take place before his appointment or afterwards?

Mr. LISTER. After as well as before. Of course, he had a right to do as he liked before, he was then his own master. Then my hon. friend referred to Mr. Cronk. Now, I want to say to my hon. friend that I do not think he is doing his friends any service by making wild statements as he does here to-day. Men are little more than human who will sit here and listen without protest to the extravagant statements made by my hon. friend respecting the dismissal of officers throughout the Dominion; and I believe that he would be more truly a friend of Mr. Cronk and of others, if he did not make these extravagant statements in the House and elsewhere. So far as Mr. Cronk is concerned, his is a small office to be sure. Mr. Cronk has not been dismissed. I have made no complaint against him at all, although my hon. friend wishes to make out that I am urging on the dismissals of officials. I can say to my hon. friend that if I thought proper to make a complaint and to urge the dismissal of Mr. Cronk, I believe I could pile up abundant evidence to justify the Government in making that dismissal. But let me say, moreover, that there is a Mr. Alnus in the Customs Department, in the town of Sarnia, who left his duties and came into the county of Haldimand and for months, while drawing his pay, as documents in the department will show, was actively engaged in the political contest in the interest of the late Secretary of State in the county of Haldimand. That man has always been an active partisan. But he says that he was ordered to go there on that occasion by the chief of the department. I have not investigated that, but I believe that there is some evidence for it, and if that be true, I would feel great reluctance in taking proceedings against him, because he did not act voluntarily. But my information is that that is the answer Mr. Alnus makes to that charge of going into the county of Haldimand, going upon the stump and actively canvassing through the county, leaving his duties at the port of Sarnia, and, at the same time, receiving his pay as a public officer. If there is anything that will justify the dismissal of an official, I am sure that my hon. friend will say that that would justify it. Yet I have not taken any steps to have that man dismissed, for the reason, as I say, that he claims that he was ordered by the then head of the department, the Hon. Mr. Wood at that time, to leave the office of Sarnia and go into the county of Haldimand for the purpose of helping the then Secretary of State. My hon. friend talks about a person being appointed in Mr. Roebuck's place being a partisan. True, he is a partisan; true, he has taken an active part in support of the Liberal party in the past; but we expect him now that he holds office, to cease to be a partisan, to cease to take an active part in politics in the future. If he does, he must expect to receive the same sentence that has been awarded to his predecessor. We know that in all these appointments, it is the active men who are appointed, but what we expect of them is that after they accept employment under the Government, they shall cease to be partisans and shall devote themselves to the business which they are paid by the country to perform, taking no part in politics except to exercise the right to vote which they have as citizens. So long as they do that under this Government or any Government, they will be perfectly safe in their position, but when they cease to become non-partisans and become partisans, then they must expect to fall with the party they supported.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman is careful not to state that he had any personal knowledge of Mr. Roebuck's partisanship; the hon. gentleman makes no charge, and why? The hon. gentleman knows no grounds upon which he could make such a charge.

Mr. LISTER. I beg your pardon.

Mr. CLANCY. He has not stated to the committee that he knew personally of any offence of the kind. Now, let me say to the hon. gentleman that when he counsels moderation; when he asks this House to take his advice, we cannot believe him disinterested. Does that advice come from so pure a source that hon. gentlemen on this side should be greatly impressed by it? It would be much more to the credit of the hon. gentleman if he were able to inform the Controller of Customs that he had personal knowledge of Mr. Roebuck's alleged offence and that he had more than mere tittle tattle which, as he must know, must be greatly discounted. Now, would it not be a fair thing for Mr. Roebuck, before dismissing him, to have given him a trial and to have made perfectly sure that he merited dismissal? I know Mr. Roebuck many years, he is a most efficient officer, no one has complained that he was away from his office and neglected his duty, therefore the public service did not suffer in the least. Then the hon. gentleman said that he hauled voters. I deny in toto that he ever either hauled voters to the polls, or canvassed voters in the late contest. No doubt he cast his vote, he is known as a Conservative, and he does not attempt to conceal it. But the hon. gentleman has made no defence of his dismissal, although the hon. gentleman is an adept at special pleading he has not been able to bring to his aid the shadow of a reason why Mr. Roebuck should be dismissed. He is not able to say that he has personal knowledge of Mr. Roebuck's alleged offence, or that he has been dismissed because he neglected the duties of his office; he has only been able to repeat mere hearsay in the neighbourhood, statements of men who were anxious possibly for Mr. Roebuck's dismissal in order that they might take his place. I am informed that the gentleman who has now been appointed to the office was the one who formulated the complaints against him, or many of them; he made affidavits about Mr. Roebuck's offensive conduct, and now he is awarded the office. I can only repeat that these are not wild statements, in any sense. It is not a wild statement to say that the Government are encouraging a class of conduct that is degenerating the civil service. Now, the hon. gentleman says that this man who has been appointed was a partisan before, but he is not now. He was very careful to say that Mr. Roebuck was a partisan before he was appointed, and that is part of the offence, in the hon. gentleman's mind; yet it is not an offence in his mind that Mr. Myers should have been a partisan. I say that no gentleman should be considered an offensive partisan, whether he is in office or out of it, unless it can be shown that he neglected his duty and that the public service suffered in consequence. They stand precisely on the same ground, and it is a mere piece of special pleading to attempt to make a distinction where there is no difference existing. The public service will be degraded by the admission of men into it who have earned their position by being spies. You have held out inducements to men to do things which are not manly, which will not improve our service and which will not improve the morals of those engaged in it.

Mr. LISTER. So far as Roebuck is concerned the complaint is that he was a partisan after he had been appointed to the service and continued to be one. So far as his dismissal is concerned I made no charge here against him. Mr. Mills was the gentleman who opposed the hon. member (Mr. Clancy) now in this House, and I suppose if he goes to the department he will possibly find an abundance of evidence that this man was an offensive partisan. What I do know is that he was an offensive partisan while he held office.

Mr. QUINN. Before the item is passed I would like to ask the Controller about another branch of the subject, or rather to draw his attention to the memorials that have been sent to the department from the Montreal Board of Trade and the different other trade associations in Montreal and throughout Canada asking, on behalf of the merchants, for the appointment of a committee or a court or a board of arbitration, or the adoption of some means that will bring about the speedy trial of persons charged with infractions of the customs law. I need not say much upon the subject, except to draw the attention of the Controller of Customs to the fact that one of the great evils from which the mercantile community suffers is that when complaints are made to the department against them and which necessitate the seizure of certain goods and certain property of these merchants, that property remains in the hands of the department for a very long time so that very often it is impossible for the merchants to dispose of it in any way. In many instances the complaint is utterly unfounded, and the injury that is done to the merchant by the seizure of his goods is incalculable. This has operated to such a great extent and to such an injurious extent upon the mercantile community, particularly in Montreal, that the Board of Trade and several other organizations have memorialized the Controller of Customs in past years asking that some means should be adopted to bring cases of that kind to a speedy trial in order that the goods may be realized on with as little delay as possible. I would ask the Controller of Customs if this matter has been taken into consideration, and if not, that he would give it his attention in the near future.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I believe that there were memorials of that kind sent in, in times past. The subject is engaging the attention of the department. I do not think that there have been many complaints of delay since I have been in office. We endeavour to despatch business as quickly as we can. Of course, after the seizure is made, thirty days are allowed to parties to put in their defence. If they waive that and ask for an earlier decision we try to give it to them.

Mr. QUINN. The delay in these cases is very often most injurious. I would like to see some procedure adopted that will tend to a speedy trial. I think that is what the mercantile community ask for and I am glad to draw the attention of the Controller to it, and I hope that he will address himself to the subject with the view of having something done for their relief.

Mr. LEMIEUX. There is an impression prevailing in the House that most of the smugglers are to be found below Quebec. I cannot speak for other counties, but only for my own, and I will say that there are no smugglers in Gaspé.

To pay L. A. Frechette for technical translation..... $100

Mr. FOSTER. What were Mr. Frechette's services ?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). I do not want to take up the time of the committee too long, but I desire to draw their attention to the necessity there is for this work. We want to have our laws and our regulations in such language as might pass muster even if they were submitted to the inspection of the finest scholars. I must admit that it is very difficult for us in this country to find out the technical terms now current in France to describe the different points connected with the material and operations employed in the department. It is true that the French language, such as it is spoken in the province of Quebec, is wonderfully pure, and I think there are very few words employed by our habitants that cannot be found in the most classical works of 200 years ago, in the time of Racine and Corneille. Since then there have been so many changes, so many improvements, so many names applied to modern inventions that the difficulties in the way of making an intelligible translation are great. I allude to this to show the necessity of employing such an eminent French scholar as Mr. Frechette to make our translations. These 57 pages contain very many words which though they may not have become classical, are in common use in France and ought to be used in this country.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Does the hon. gentleman the Controller of Inland Revenue not think that he will have to translate them into the vernacular to be understood by those who use these rules.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. No. Mr. Frechette generally puts between brackets the English word or a word in general use among us. We speak good French, but we do not speak exactly modern French.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is that little brochure to be used ?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. These are the regulations of our department.

Mr. FOSTER. Are they to be used in Canada ?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes, they are to be used in Canada.

Culling Timber—

James Patton, in consequence of promotion made in Supplementary Estimates for 1896-97.....	$ 300
To provide for the salaries of Martin O'Brien and Edward Kelly, two superannuated cullers who are to be put back on the permanent staff.....	1,400

Mr. FOSTER. Why are these two to be put back on the permanent staff ?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. The amount of square timber that has been produced this year and which has reached the port of Quebec is much in excess of what has been sent there during the last few years. Two years ago the department of cullers was reorganized, and 22 were pensioned off and only five retained. The gentlemen connected with the lumber trade have discovered that the present number of cullers is quite insufficient to meet the increased shipment of square timber from Quebec. They have sent a petition to the department, a few lines of which I will read :

We, therefore, beg that you will take our representations into most favourable consideration, and cause two additional cullers to be added to the present staff, by reinstating Mr. Martin O'Brien and Mr. Edward Kelly, who are well known to ourselves and to the trade generally, as thoroughly competent for the duties of this position, and who will be fully acceptable to the purchasers, shippers, sellers and buyers. The present value of timber renders it absolutely necessary that the measuring should be correctly done to the satisfaction of all parties, and these men, from their ability, experience and character, would be acceptable to the entire trade.

I might have hesitated about acceding to the prayer of the petition were it not for the following offer which we have received :

Readily recognizing that the increased cost of such addition to the present staff, which was only reduced to its present number by the late Government last year, should be borne by the trade, and not wishing to ask for the expenditure without showing our willingness to bear the same, we beg to express our readiness to pay, in addition to the present rate, 1 cent a ton of 40 cubic feet, which would be ample to meet and entirely cover the proposed additional outlay.

That petition was signed by gentlemen well known in the lumber trade, amongst others McArthur, Egan, Mackey, J. K. Ward, N. Flood, Cook, Calvin, Poupore, Bryson, Booth, Gilmour Company, Alexander Fraser, Calvin Company, Dunlop, St. Anthony Lumber Company, Whitney, Sharples, Dunn, Kennedy, Burstall ; in fact, all the representatives of the timber trade. In view of the liberal and fair offer made in the petition, I thought it only right to appoint these two cullers, in whom the trade has ample confidence.

To provide for the salary of George Roy as chief inspector of raw hides.....	$1,500
--	---------

Mr. QUINN. I would like to ask the Minister about the dismissal of Mr. Mooney, who was hide inspector in Montreal. I understand that Mr. Mooney was dismissed on the alleged ground that he was not qualified for the position.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Mr. Mooney and another gentleman whose name I forget were in partnership for the inspection of hides, and sometime last September, the tanners and leather merchants complained of their inspection and asked for their removal. They were not officers of the department, but paid by fees, the inspection being voluntary. I refused to entertain a complaint against them until I got a petition signed by the leather trade and that petition was sent me and upon that I acted.

Mr. QUINN. Would the Minister be good enough to let me see the petition he refers to?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Certainly, I will be glad to show it to the hon. gentleman any time that he calls, but I have not it with me now.

To pay expenses of commission appointed to inquire into the Algoma election.... $547 30

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I brought down the report which the hon. gentleman asked for the other day.

Mr. SPROULE. I can only say that in the few minutes which I have had to look over the report, it has been impossible to get any intelligent view of it, and, therefore, I will not try to make any criticism of the vote.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It has to be paid, and if there is any fault to be found with it, it can be criticised afterwards.

Post Office Department—To provide for arrears of salary, from 1st January to 30th June, 1897, due B. M. Armstrong, being the difference between the pay received by him as a first class clerk in the Toronto post office, and his salary as controller of the railway mail service..... $500

Mr. FOSTER. Before we go any further with the Estimates of the hon. Postmaster General, I want to remind him of a return which I asked for early in the session, I think on the 3rd of May, giving the correspondence with reference to the appointment of Mr. King to the postmastership of Marsh Hill, and the change from Mr. King to the next postmaster. My hon. friend knows that before I asked for the return, I tried in a great many different ways to get the information, and my hon. friend blocked me, at one time particularly, by pointing out that I had one "G" in the wrong place, although he must have known quite well the person to whom I alluded, and the information I was after. I would like to hear from my hon. friend what reason he has to give for not bringing down the return in answer to the order of the House—a return which it would not take his officers twenty-five minutes to prepare.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). When the hon. gentleman called my attention to some returns a little while ago, I at once asked the secretary to have them prepared. Shortly afterwards he handed them all to me, except this one regarding Mr. King, which he told me was not forthcoming owing to the papers having been mislaid. I thought they might be in the hands of the Deputy Postmaster General, who has been away about six weeks, and who has been back only two days. I assure the hon. gentleman that the delay has been quite unintentional and departmental. If the hon. gentleman will not cause that to be an obstacle at this moment, I will do all I can to procure the return. I have not the custody of the papers, and know nothing about them. Orders have been given to produce them.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not want to be too insistent, but when an order of the House has been given for a return, and it is very easy to comply with it, it should be complied with.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is nothing intentional in the delay.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, I asked for a return giving the names of the postmasters and other persons in the employ of the Government in the counties of King's and York, N.B., who have been dismissed since July, 1896, and all the correspondence connected therewith. The Government have brought down a return of the postmasters dismissed, but no one else, though I know that lighthouse keepers and other officials have been dismissed in both of those counties. Then, I want to call the attention of the Postmaster General to this correspondence, which is incomplete. While it contains the letters of the member for King's (Mr. Donville), and some of the letters of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) with reference to York county, the correspondence of the department is almost entirely omitted. Reference is made to it, but the letters themselves are not here; and what I particularly wanted to find out, the position of the Postmaster General and of the Government in the matter of dismissals, as disclosed in the correspondence, is not before me in this return at all. I find that the present member for King's has begun a systematic crusade against the postmasters in the county of King's. He has on his own responsibility, as a member of Parliament, demanded their dismissal, and if his demand has not been immediately complied with, he has reiterated it. He has made very serious charges against some of these gentlemen, but in no one case has an investigation been ordered or have these gentlemen been given an opportunity for stating their side of the case at all. This is a matter of some moment, so far as the character of these gentlemen is concerned. I suppose a member of Parliament considers his character and reputation somewhat dear to him, and if a member on either side of this House rises and asperses the character of another member, he is quickly brought to book, and, if his aspersion is a wrong one, he is made to apologize. This is done because hon. gentlemen prize their reputation, and do not want it aspersed without good and sufficient reason. Now, the reputation of a gentleman living in a county and conducting one of Her Majesty's post offices is just as dear to him as the reputation of a member of Parliament on either side of this House, and it ought not to be aspersed with impunity any more than the reputation of a member of this House. I find that the hon. member for King's has not contented himself with simply asking for the dismissal of postmasters in that county, but he has made the gravest charges against them in some cases, and there has never been a single opportunity allowed to these gentlemen, so far as I can gather from the correspondence, to meet those charges, and they have become patent and public. While not saying anything with reference to the value of his assertions, I say that they are no more to be accepted than the assertions of any honest man in the county of King's or York. When a gentleman, even though he occupies the exalted position of member of Parliament, goes so far as to ask for the dismissal of a man who is respected in his locality, who is an honourable right-thinking man, and asperses his character, it becomes a grave matter indeed. And it is not fair for any member of a Government to libel that man's character by accepting the aspersion, and in consequence recommending his dismissal. I do not know that we can play with men's characters in this House with impunity, because we happen to be members of Parliament and Ministers of the Government. I do not think that we have any moral or social right to do it, I do not think the accident of having an office gives us in any way the right to be anything else than careful of the reputation of men who are our equals as citizens even though they do not occupy the positions some of us do.

Take, for instance, the case of Mr. Fowler, a gentleman whom I have known from his youth up, a gentleman of undoubted character; I find that a demand was made for his dismissal from the post office at Belle Isle Creek, and that the post office be handed over to Mr. Wm. H. Henderson. The first demand is as follows:—

I am informed that Mr. Fowler, the present incumbent, is making arrangements to dispose of his store, and I see no reason why his successor should not have the office. In addition to this, Mr. Fowler was a most active partisan, and I am not satisfied at the way the mail matter was handled on many occasions in my county. If you desire any further information, I shall be pleased to give it. If this can be done without delay, I shall be very much pleased.

What is the imputation there? First, that Mr. Fowler is an active partisan, and then that he was derelict in his duty because he did not handle the mail properly. When a charge like that was made, was it not the duty of the Postmaster General, before dismissing him, to have, at least, asked the inspector to look into the matter? No such action was taken, but the Postmaster General was a little dilatory in attending to the peremptory demand of the hon. member for King's, and shortly afterwards the demand came again, but the letter reads somewhat differently. Evidently something has transpired which led the hon. member to think he had not made a sufficiently grave charge, and that the Postmaster General was not disposed to dismiss the man:

Some time ago, I wrote you with regard to the dismissal of Mr. Fowler, postmaster at Belle Isle Creek, and have yet received no reply. Fowler has been a worker against us of the very worst type.

There are some pretty bad types that work for politicians. The hon. Minister of Public Works has had some experience, and I dare say he knows some pretty bad types of political workers on one side or the other.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
On the other, yes.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman acknowledges that. Here is a charge made by the hon. member for King's, that Mr. Fowler is a worker of the very worst type. No political heeler who has followed my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works through his devious political windings, in and out and out and in, is as bad as Fowler was. The man's character is aspersed. Then the writer proceeds:

He stood at the polls against me on election day, and to my knowledge paid out money in bribes to defeat me.

There is a man who is charged with bribery, with political corruption, with having violated the laws of the land, with being the worst type of a political worker, and with handling the mail matter in a manner which was not honest and right. Did the Postmaster General, when this man's character was aspersed in that way, take the least trouble to find out whether an honest man had been lied about, or did he simply dismiss him and leave him to bear the onus of these charges? That is only one case and there are others, more or less bad. There are fifteen cases of dismissals of postmasters. One of them was the dismissal of a postmistress at Collina in the county of King's. The first letter is dated the 22nd September, and is as follows:—

I would be much obliged if you would remove the present incumbent of the post office at Collina and appoint Mr. Chamberlain in her place. I have no hesitation in recommending this. And all our friends there think it to the advantage of the public it should be done. The present post office has been used as a political centre, and the people are not satisfied about the mail they receive. It is stated that newspapers and other matters have been suppressed, and I do not think there can be any doubt in proving this. It will be very satisfactory if you can carry this matter out for me, if you have time.

The hon. member for King's thinks it is of no consequence at all to asperse a man's character, and evidently thinks it is no less a light matter to asperse the character of a postmistress. In the first place, he asks for her dismissal, and then he says that there has been tampering with the mails. Now, it so happens that the statement he made that this postmistress was just about leaving the locality is hardly borne out by the facts. The first letter was written on the 22nd of September.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Who signed it?

Mr. FOSTER. James Domville.

Mr. LANDERKIN. That was in King's.

Mr. FOSTER. I have been trying to impress on my hon. friend's upper story that it was in King's.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The people were too good for you there. It is valiant on the hon. gentleman's part to attack the member for King's when he is in England serving the Queen.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not attacking him, but the Postmaster General, and if in order to attack the Postmaster General I have to read the correspondence of the hon. member for King's, which has been put before the House, I am not attacking him behind his back. The letter written on the 22nd September did not bring about the desired results, and on the 28th October, Mr. Domville wrote:

I wrote you, some time ago, with regard to the post office at Collina, and have not yet received any reply. Mrs. Folkins is going to leave any time, and I should like to get the post office transferred before she does. The post office has always been a political centre against us, and in the past the delivery of some of the papers and letters has been anything but satisfactory.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The delivery apparently was tardy.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend, who is a doctor, speaks from experience. So that the second letter gives as a reason why her services should be dispensed with that she was going to leave the place, and it was necessary to transfer the office before she left. But what kind of leave was she taking? She had been there as postmistress, she had asked for leave of absence from the inspector and she got it, she had the assent of her security, the guarantee company, to keep the guarantee good for the person who was to take her place during her three months' leave of absence. That was the leaving she was going to do; but it was represented to the Postmaster General as a reason for taking the office from her that she was going to leave the place and he wanted the office transferred before she left. Here is an application for the leave, and here is the granting of the leave by Mr. King, and here is the transfer of the security by the London Guarantee and Accident Company, Limited. Well, Sir, these are two samples. I am not going to take up the time of the House reading more. Now, I simply put the fair, honest question to gentlemen here who do not want to hurt people's reputation, who want to see justice done—has justice been done by taking an ex parte statement of the member for King's and dismissing people, honourable people, good people, whom I personally know and vouch for on the ipse dixit of that member, and not even allowing them the chance to answer the charge, which is a weighty and serious and grievous charge, if it can be established? Is that fair and honest treatment? Does not partisanship go too far when it goes so far as that? And what becomes of that guarantee which was given to us by the leader of the Government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), that no dismissal should take place of any man against whom a charge was made without his being given an opportunity to rebut that charge. That promise was made in this House, made solemnly; it is recorded in "Hansard" over and over again.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. RUSSELL. Oh.

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Russell) think that that is not so?

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not know that it was said over and over again.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, over and over again. If my hon. friend (Mr. Russell) wants to hear it once more, I shall be glad to give it to him again.

Mr. RUSSELL. What does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) mean by "over and over again?"

Mr. FOSTER. That must mean that it was repeated two or three times at least. But suppose, for argument sake, that it was said but once. How often must the leader of a Government and of a party solemnly state his position and give his pledge in order to make it binding? This is what he said, according to "Hansard" of 1897, page 62:

We announced on the floor of Parliament last session that no member of the civil service, whether of the inside or outside service, would be dismissed, except for cause. We declared that every man against whom a charge was brought, would have an opportunity of defending himself before a court of inquiry.

That seems inclusive, quite inclusive enough to suit my purpose. Honourable men and women, just as honourable as any who sit in these seats, have been used in the way I have pointed out and their characters taken from them so far as it is possible for their characters to be taken from them in that way, and they have been dismissed from office. Now, I want to call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) to a case in the county of King's, to the dismissal of the lighthouse keeper at Oak Point.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). What was the name?

Mr. FOSTER. Pickett. The young gentleman who was appointed to this position is the son of the Episcopalian clergyman at Oak Point. His family is of the best and most respectable, they are just as good as we are—any of us—their word I would take as quickly as I would that of a member of Parliament, and so, I think, would anybody who knows them. That young man received his dismissal. I asked whether there was an investigation and why the dismissal was made, and the answer given me—I have not it at hand, but the hon. Minister will remember it—was that no investigation had been held, but that the hon. member for King's (Mr. Domville) had declared that this gentleman had been guilty of offensively partisan conduct and that was sufficient. I have a letter from the gentleman in which he denies in toto that he was guilty of offensive partisanship in any way, and he asks the simple question: Why am I to be thrown from my position and be degraded in the opinion of my neighbours on a charge which I have had no opportunity of answering? Mr. MacAlpine perambulated that county and held investigations. He was asked to hear the case of this gentleman, but the answer was that the department had adjudicated upon that. And the answer in this House was that an investigation had not been considered necessary because, forsooth, the member for King's had said that this young man must go on the ground of offensive partisanship and the Minister had taken that as sufficient. But right beside this young man, there are those against whom the same charge was made, and they are tried, and, in some cases, if I am not wrongly informed, the report was that they were not guilty. But my young friend is turned out of his position without notice and without trial, while his neighbour is given a trial, and if it is proven that he has not been guilty of offensive partisanship, perhaps, will be retained. Where is the equal justice in that? Where is the justice, any-way, of throwing a man out on a charge simply made by a member of Parliament of offensive partisanship, without giving him a chance before your own appointed commissioner, such as he is, to prove the truth of the charge. I do not want to carry this matter further. Some people will say that it is pea-nut politics talking about dismissal. But I hold that the element of truth and justice cannot be eliminated from the public life of Canada without detriment to all our interests, and I hold that a private citizen's character and honour are just as dear to him and as little to be trifled with as the honour of a member of Parliament. The difference in position makes no difference in principle; and what I do feel is that though we may be in a position which gives the power of life or death over these people, we ought yet to be just and merciful—and, above all things, to be just. But somebody may rise and say: You dismissed an officer at some time. That may be true, but does it alter the principle? I leave this matter before the House, and I say that the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) as between man and man, has not acted rightly. I do not wish to make imputations against a member of Parliament, but I state here in my position as a member of the House, that I would take the word of any of these I have referred to, as readily as I would the word of the member for King's. The fact that we may write "M.P." after our names does not make our word a bit better than if we had not that privilege.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I differ from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster). When the matter of dismissals was brought up, I stated, speaking for myself and myself alone, that unless I was overruled by my colleagues, in cases where a member of Parliament wrote to me and, over his own signature, stated deliberately, that he took the responsibility of saying that a certain public official in my department had been guilty of active and offensive partisanship, to his own knowledge—

Mr. MILLS. How about an unsuccessful candidate?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I hope the hon. member (Mr. Mills) will allow me to proceed—if a member tells me this of his own knowledge, I thought that would justify me in acting without the expense of an investigation. I think so still. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman that a member of Parliament's word is to be trifled with by a Minister. I think that if a member of Parliament, representing a county, having a personal knowledge of the official in the county that I cannot possibly have, comes to me and states: Your lighthouse keeper stood on the platform beside me, and abused me and abused your leader—I cannot tell him I will not take his word.

Mr. FOSTER. Did he say that?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have forgotten the exact statement in this case, but it was to the effect that this man had been to his personal knowledge an active and offensive organizer and politician at the last election against him. I accept that statement. I would do it again. I thought I was acting on the lines laid down clearly in this House before. The hon. gentleman mentioned to me a large number of other names that he wished dismissed, and he said they were active politicians. I said: Are you prepared to place your signature to a paper that you know that of your own personal knowledge? Are you prepared to take the responsibility in the House, if it is challenged of proving the statement in your place in Parliament? He was not. In those cases I would not accept his statement, and I required an investigation. But I think the hon. gentleman will see that it would never do for a Minister to tell a member of Parliament who says deliberately: Of my own knowledge I know such and such to be the case, and I pledge my honour to you as a member of Parliament that I am prepared to defend this in the House—it would never do for a Minister to ignore that statement. To say that you won't receive it unless you send a commissioner down to investigate, would be to sever the relations which should exist between a Minister of the Crown and the members who are supporting him in this House, or who are opposed to him. I think my hon. friend will see that I was fully justified, and that the action I took was not inconsistent with the statement made by the Premier last year. The Premier stated that whenever there was a charge made against a man he should have an investigation. He did not refer to a case where a member of Parliament made a statement on his own personal knowledge and there is no necessity in such case for an investigation unless you are prepared to state that you won't accept the pledged word of a member of Parliament given over his own signature that the thing has occurred to his own personal knowledge. I may be right or I may be wrong, but that is the stand that I have taken all through.

Mr. WALLACE. Will the hon. Minister accept the statement of a member of Parliament on this side of the House as well as the statement of a member on that side?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not going to deal with hypothetical cases, I deal with actual cases. The hon. gentleman does not ask me to accept his statement, yet, when he does, I will be prepared to deal with it.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman has laid down this proposition, that when a member of Parliament makes a statement before him that a man has been guilty of partisanship, he will accept his statement. Now, I ask the hon. Minister if he will accept the statement of members on this side of the House to the same effect.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman's case is unique. I am not so sure whether he is a supporter of this side or not.

Mr. WALLACE. I am not asking this in view of my own case, I am asking about the general proposition.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have no hesitation in saying that a more immoral proposition than that laid down by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, could not possibly be uttered. The hon. gentleman is not to see that even-handed justice is carried out, he is not to see that every one accused has opportunity to defend his character, his honour and his place. He has only to see what is the statement that his supporter makes to him, he has not to go beyond that at all. And what is that statement made by a supporter? Simply a charge. And how far has he a right to go? Let him say this to his supporter: You state that this gentleman who holds that office has been guilty of offensive partisanship? Yes. Then, I will have an investigation at once, and if he is guilty, he shall not keep that office. Is there anything fairer than that? Surely my hon. friend cannot say that a member of Parliament, because he happens to support him, shall be not only the prosecutor but the judge. But that is what he makes him. The member for King's comes and says, This man did so and so; dismiss him. The Minister does not look into it. Now it is sufficient reason, if any member of Parliament says it, to have an investigation, and that is fair treatment, fit for any member of Parliament. If I say to my hon. friend, Such and such a person has been guilty of bad conduct in this office, and I give you that information, you have a right to make that the basis of an investigation, and I do not think you could refuse it. If a man on this side does that, you have just the same right to do it, and no more. But what right can there be in your making a man who prefers the charge, who is interested in getting the person removed, because he has some person else that he wants to put in, and who is consequently an interested prosecutor—making him at once the judge and the executioner? But you sit there in your office pretending to carry out justice in high places and you simply register the prosecutor's charge and carry out his judgment. Now, that is not justice, and there is no fair-minded man in this country, I do not care where such a case happens, that will call it justice. I was a member of Parliament before I was a Minister, and I have had pressure brought upon me to have officers discharged. Men have come to me and said, Such and such is the case, can you change that officer? My answer invariably was: If you can give reasons I will have an investigation made, and that was carried out if the reasons were sufficient. That is the best I ever got, and that is the best I ever should get, or any other member of Parliament. Outside of that, how far are we going? Members of Parliament are peccable and fallible, just as men outside of Parliament, and members on the Government side are not a whit less so than members on the Opposition side. But does not my hon. friend see that the man who sits in high places should do justice, and that there is no justice in this country on an ex-parte statement? The execution of a man because somebody is interested in his removal and declares that he has been malfeasant in office and consequently ought to go—that is outside the deeper question as to the interest and property that every man has in his own reputation.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. My hon. friend's statement did not go that length, to suppose malfeasance in office; it was with respect to a very particular class of offences, and with respect to those only, that my hon. friend declared that he thought it his duty to take the formal statement of a member of Parliament; it was with respect to a class of cases in which men are removed very often on the score of active partisanship, it was with respect to those alone. And be it understood that it is with respect to those alone that my hon. friend intended that rule should apply.

Mr. FOSTER. I am very glad of my hon. friend's help; he has helped me particularly with the Postmaster General. Now, with the Postmaster General's cases, there was not simply the charge of political partisanship, there was the charge of malfeasance in office in both cases that he cited. Now, I agree with the leader of the Government on that point, there is a distinction. I have his help on that point; but where it is a charge of malfeasance in office which blackens a man's character, that man has an indefeasible right to his own reputation, and he ought not to be robbed of it unless he has a chance to defend it and to obtain a court of inquiry. But in reference to the act of political partisanship, a man's right to his office is just as strong if he has not been a political partisan, because, under the theoretical principle laid down last year you are bound not to disturb the man in office who has not been guilty of political partisanship. So his title to his office stands on just as good ground, and he ought not to be deprived of it on the testimony of hon. gentlemen opposite unless he has been guilty of active political partisanship of an offensive kind, I suppose. Therefore, injustice is done even in the case I mention. Now, I put this question to my hon. friend: Suppose there is a statement by this man that he was not guilty of offensive partisanship, and he asks for a court of inquiry, will my hon. friend grant it?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If statements came to me that I had been misled in any matter of the kind, I would have an inquiry. It is not the first time I have done it.

Mr. FOSTER. And if the inquiry proved to your satisfaction that he had not been guilty of offensive partisanship, would you restore him to his position after you found that he had been wrongly dismissed? The hon. gentleman is inevitably driven to that conclusion.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to inquire of the ex-Minister of Finance whether the principle which he has laid down was ever put into practice during the time that his Government was in office. Where has there ever been a case in which a man has been suspended from office for offensive partisanship where he has been accorded a trial and dismissed on the basis of that trial? The hon. gentleman cast a serious reflection upon the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) in the remarks which he addressed to the committee. He was rather severe upon him because he knows that it was clearly proven that the leader of the Opposition after dismissing a man from the Intercolonial made no reply for six months to the question of the dismissed employee as to why his services had been dispensed with. It took him almost a year to explain to the young man's father that he had been dismissed for offensive partisanship. Was there any trial in that case or any investigation? The action was taken on ipsi dixit of the leader of the Opposition.

Mr. TAYLOR. One case in eighteen years.

Mr. McMULLEN. Now that the ex-Minister of Finance has laid down the rule that should be followed will he get up and give us a single case in which that rule was followed while his party was in office?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. McMullen) need not think that he is going to get his friends out of this thing by a statement of that kind. Every member on that side of the House; no, I will qualify that because some are too honourable to engage in that sort of thing, but there are members on that side of the House who go into this thing in a systematic way. By the list which I have read, and which shows what has been done in the short space of a few months in the county of King's, you will see that they have gone to work to rout out every postmaster in that county who is a friend of mine or the Liberal-Conservative party.

Take the ten years I have been in Parliament and go through the records with the Postmaster General, who has a great facility for hunting out records, sometimes private records, you can go and nose around with him into all the private and public records of the department and in ten years you cannot find more than two or three instances of officials who have been dismissed in the whole county of King's.

Mr. TALBOT. They were all your friends.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend the member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot), who sits on a front seat and ejaculates so often, does not understand anything about that. We had in the town of Sussex in my county an officer about whom such a row has been made lately, the collector of inland revenue (Mr. Scoville). He and his family were open road travelling and field travelling opponents of mine. After the election pressure was brought to have that man dismissed, but I said: If he has done his office work properly I will not ask for his dismissal. Though he and his family were always opponents of mine he remained in his office until after the election of June 23rd took place.

Mr. McMULLEN. We can all cite cases of that kind.

Mr. FOSTER. Will you cite a case in my own county the opposite of that. My hon. friend (Mr. McMullen) cannot do it. The Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) has been studying Scripture, and he has read that the sins of the father are visited upon the children even unto the third and fourth generation. In York there is a father and he is a good friend of mine, and I believe he is not a good friend of the Minister of Railways and Canals. His son, who had a post office, has been dismissed because his father was a partisan. That is visiting the sins of the father upon the children.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There is Scripture warrant for it unto the third and fourth generation, does it not say?

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the Postmaster General if he thinks he has carried out even-handed justice in the case I have mentioned?

Mr. BERGERON. I think we are losing a great deal of time in speaking about these dismissals. We have had them under discussion for the last three months, and I think we have had enough of them. I am surprised that my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has not made up his mind before this that it is perfectly useless to talk about them. If we were to talk about them for six months we could not change the determination of the Government. They have no principle and no established system, but they have made up their minds that whenever their supporters want positions they must find a hole for them. There may be one excuse for this. If there is one thing more than another that is the curse of this country it is patronage. People are given too much to the idea that they must have positions in the Government employ. I have known well-to-do farmers who left their farms to get Government positions so as to receive ready money at the end of the month. I repeat that this is one of the curses of our country. I can quite understand that hon. gentlemen, having been in Opposition for eighteen years and at last getting into power, their friends are eager to secure positions occupied by Conservatives, and that they are pressing them for these places. A man wants to get a position and he must have it. He goes to the member for his county or to one of the Ministers, and says: "I must have that place." That is all the principle there is about it, and if we talked here for a whole year we would not change it. It is apparent that the spoils system has been introduced for the benefit of the party in power, and we cannot change it no matter how much we desire to do it. It will be left to the people to say what they think of it at their first opportunity.

Mr. MILLS. Just here I wish to refer to a case in Annapolis county which comes in very nicely with what has been said by the last speaker. He said that whenever a Liberal desires a position, he goes to the unsuccessful candidate or to the Liberal representative and he gets a position if he has been an active partisan. I will refer you to the case of Daniel J. Riordan, in Annapolis county.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. I would ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mills) if this case comes under the item we are discussing now?

Mr. MILLS. Yes; it is all right, I know what I am talking about. Riordan was a man who in 1891, forged the names of three young men, who were not of age, to declarations. He not only forged their names, but he also forged the name of a magistrate, and acting as the agent of the then Attorney General and the present Attorney General of Nova Scotia, placed these declarations before Judge Savary, the revising barrister. The declarations were forged, the magistrate's name was forged, the names of the men whom it was sought to have placed on the list were forged, and the subject matter of the declarations constituted perjury because the men were not of age.

Mr. LISTER. Did you prosecute him?

Mr. MILLS. He was prosecuted. Three declarations were put in. I was present before Judge Savary's court myself and examined this man upon the stand. I forced him to admit upon cross-examination that he signed the names of the magistrate and of the parties sought to be placed on the list. This man was indicted and brought before the grand jury. I am very sorry to say it now for the man is dead, but the tool of the Attorney General, the sheriff of the county so manipulated the grand jury at the time, that the grand jury brought in "no bill"; giving it as an excuse—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. MILLS. Just wait; do not laugh yet, you will hear enough of it—giving it as an excuse, that it was done as a political matter, and that such things when done in the way of politics should be excused.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Were the grand jury all of one politics?

Mr. MILLS. The matter is not ended yet. At all events, all of these affidavits have been published. I had the paper containing them here, but thinking the session would end sooner, I sent it home. This man Riordan has been after the postmasters in Lower Granville, James H. Thorne and Capt. Covert. You cannot find more honest and respectable gentlemen than these two. Mr. Thorne has been the warden of the county, and is connected with the most respectable family in the maritime provinces. These two gentlemen came under the bann of this Daniel J. Riordan, and what did Daniel J. Riordan do? He said that they were partisans in the late election, and a charge was brought against them, and the charge was investigated, and a court was held. James H. Thorne was called upon and Mr. Covert was called upon by the post office inspector and the Attorney General Longley, and they found nothing against them, and the charges were dismissed. But that office must be got for Daniel J. Riordan somehow, and how was it got? The Government abolished both of the offices, and appointed Daniel J. Riordan postmaster of a new office in between. I intend to discuss that more fully, but these are the plain facts. A more disreputable piece of business never was transacted in a civilized country than that. Two honest men were turned out, and the Government put a man in office who ought to be in the penitentiary.

Mr. MACLEAN. I must take this opportunity of denouncing the doctrine laid down by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), as well as by the the Minister now leading the House (Sir Richard Cartwright), and some time ago by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair). They said they would dismiss a public servant on the statement of a member of this House.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I never made such a statement.

Mr. MACLEAN. You practically made that statement here to-day.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, I put a most important qualification, which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) leaves out. I say that if I stood on the hustings and saw an official actively and offensively opposing me, it would be childish that I should hold a judicial investigation to know whether my eyesight deceived me or not. If a member comes to me and says: Of my own personal knowledge I know such and such a thing to be the case, and I am prepared to defend it in Parliament; that dispenses with the necessity for an investigation, in my opinion.

Mr. MACLEAN. It is a brutal and butcherly doctrine, but it has been laid down in this House by the present Ministry before to-day. It is un-British, because the British principle is, that a man charged with an offence has a right to be heard and tried, and if guilty to be punished. The right hon. the leader of this Government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) laid down the principle last session: that every man against whom a charge is brought would have an opportunity of defending himself before a court of inquiry. But, these hon. gentlemen opposite have abandoned that doctrine.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. MACLEAN. The Minister of Railways has abandoned that doctrine.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. MACLEAN. These gentlemen have repudiated the policy of their leader in his absence, and they have set up the spoils system in this country as it has been practiced in the United States. I expected better than that from gentlemen now on the Treasury benches. I expected that they would have lived up to the principles which they professed in Opposition. I am disappointed in their conduct, and I am more than disappointed at the manner in which they have abandoned the policy announced by their leader.

Mr. HAGGART. If there can be a worse doctrine than that laid down by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, it is the doctrine laid down by the Minister of Railways, according to the statement of the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Frost). The Minister of Railways does not want any member to make a charge against an official, because according to the statement of the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Frost) in this House, he was furnished with a list of all the employees on the canal, and told that it was his option to have them discharged or to leave them on as he thought proper. That statement of the hon. member (Mr. Frost) is published in "Hansard," and the hon. gentleman, in reply to that letter from the Minister of Railways, said: I did not exercise the right that was given me by the Minister of Railways, but I recommended that they should all be retained in their positions. The Minister of Railways did not even want a charge laid against any of these men, for he was prepared to dismiss them without any charge at all. Two keepers of bridges have been discharged in my county, and two others put in their places, and I venture to say that the Minister of Railways has not a single charge from any member of Parliament, or from any other person in the constituency against the men whom he dismissed. If he wants to know the names I can give them to him.

Mr. FROST. I had nothing to do with those in South Lanark.

Mr. HAGGART. I am speaking of those in Leeds, and you had the option to discharge every one of them without making a charge.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I agree with the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) that more time is taken up with this question than it deserves.

Mr. BERGERON. I did not say that.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) lays down the principle that the Government should not respect the advice of a member of Parliament in these matters. I know a gentleman who will go further than the hon. member for York. I refer to Sir Mackenzie Bowell, the late Premier of this Dominion, and I believe that he will not even take the word of an ex-Cabinet Minister. His colleagues came with him to this House over a year ago, bound by oath to stand together—

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, you interrupted me a moment ago when I was speaking, and I now ask you what this has to do with the item under discussion?

Mr. LANDERKIN. This has reference to dismissed officials. These men were sworn to stand together—

Mr. MILLS. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the same rule of order which you apply to me should also apply to the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Landerkin).

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am sorry to say that immediately I brought the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that he was out of order. The ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) brought up the question of dismissals in the Railway Department. It would be much better for the despatch of business if hon. gentlemen would confine themselves to the item under discussion, which is to provide for the arrears of salary from 1st of January to 30th June, 1897, due B. M. Armstrong.

Mr. HAGGART.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I will deal with the dismissals that took place on the other side of the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It is a very disagreeable question to you.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Not at all.

Mr. LANDERKIN. A meeting was held in Toronto by these gentlemen opposite, and they dismissed their leader, Sir Charles Tupper, and he got no trial or no inquiry. There was no court, and another was named as his successor. Did they give their leader a trial? No. These are the gentlemen that are now claiming to mete out fair-play to the people, but why did they not mete out fair play to their Premier? They dismissed not only officials, but members of the Government.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question, question.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Yes, you do not like to hear this. Why do you not like to hear your record? You are willing to discuss the record of the Government here.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Address the Chair.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Talk about morality. Talk about the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) lecturing us upon political morality—the man who came to the House and declared that his leader was an imbecile, but who ten days afterwards crept into the arms of that imbecile. He to lecture us on political morality—it would require a man with a prodigious cheek to do it.

Mr. MILLS. I am sure that if I got off that rot, you would call me to order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. There has been no investigation into the conduct of Sir Charles Tupper by his friends, when they met in Toronto the other day and shipped him. Did they try Sir Mackenzie Bowell when they shipped him? Did they try the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Adolphe Caron) when they kicked him out? Did they try Mr. Ouimet when they kicked him out? Did they try Mr. Daly, the late Minister of the Interior, when they kicked him out? He belongs to the department of the exterior just now. They get up and talk about an official whose salary was perhaps $100 a year, and here are officials whose salaries were about $7,000 a year—

Mr. FOSTER. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I knew I would bring you to a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FOSTER. I am very sorry to deprive the hon. gentleman of so pleasant and congenial a task, but I would not like to have a sudden death from apoplexy.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. My point of order is that the hon. gentleman is not speaking to the subject, and I would like to have the decision of the Chair.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am very willing to render a decision, that this discussion which has been going on for the last few minutes is absolutely out of order. If I understand the rules which should govern us in the discussion of the Estimates, we should confine ourselves entirely to the item under discussion. The item under discussion is concerning Mr. Armstrong, and I consider that the hon. gentleman who has just raised the point of order was himself out of order when he began the discussion. At the same time, I think it has gone far enough, and we should now come to business.

Mr. LANDERKIN: All I have to say, in conclusion, is that I regret that the hon. member for York will not take the word of his supporters on the other side of the House. I quite agree that the Government are justified in taking the word of their supporters, and the followers of the hon. member for York will appreciate him when he will not take the word of a single one of his supporters.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries laid down this afternoon a doctrine which I will not invoke.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. My ruling was that this discussion was out of order.

Mr. BENNETT. What I wanted to say does not refer to post offices, but if I had not been interrupted by the Chairman, I would have finished before this.

Mr. MACLEAN. Who is now acting chief clerk in the Toronto Post Office instead of Mr. Armstrong?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When Mr. Armstrong was removed to Ottawa, no new appointment was made in the Toronto Post Office, but the duties were re-arranged. I would not venture to say exactly how, but I know that the deputy postmaster took some increased duties, and I think the postmaster himself did the same.

Mr. MACLEAN. Will there not be a chief clerk, then?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There will be no appointment in place of Mr. Armstrong.

Post Office Department—Amount required to enable certain increases of salary payable under the Civil Service Act, and accruing on 1st January and 1st April, 1897, which were temporarily suspended, to be continued during the year ending 30th June, 1898..... $1,397 50

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of this?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will read the explanation furnished by the secretary. The statutory increases occurring on the 1st of January and the 1st of April having been withheld, no account was taken of them in framing the Estimates for 1898. As similar increases have been granted in other departments, and as in many cases such increases seem to be deserved, the sum of $1,397.50 is required in order to enable the salaries to be carried on during the ensuing year at the advanced figures.

Mr. FOSTER. I have had something to do with estimates for some time, but I never before saw an estimate of this kind offered to the House. Whenever the Minister has a clerk who he thinks should have a special increase, he takes a special vote for that increase. But here is the Postmaster General asking for a lump sum in order that he may increase the salaries of certain clerks as he chooses. We ought not to grant that. If the hon. gentleman wishes to increase the salaries of any of his clerks above what is allowed to them, let him bring down estimates for the different amounts, and state what clerks he proposes to advance, and how much he proposes to advance them.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Of course, the hon. gentleman understands that none of these increases will be beyond the amount allowed by the statute. The increases have not been made yet, and I have not had time to consider the merits of the various clerks; but I intend, as soon as the House prorogues, to go through the department with a view of dealing with each case. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, I could bring on concurrence a list of the clerks to whom it will apply.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. When the hon. Postmaster General brought down his bill, I called the attention of the House to what appeared to be his policy in that matter as it is in this. In his bill he desired to grant contracts without tender, and to act upon his own responsibility.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I beg pardon.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In the present instance the hon. gentleman, different from any of his predecessors, and different from any precedent known to this Parliament, wishes to get a lump sum of money, and to distribute the increases according to his will, and not according to the rules which have been invariably followed up to the present time. I think this is most objectionable, and there is no department in the whole service in which an excess of that kind could be more disastrous than in the Post Office Department, as the clerks in it are very numerous, almost an army being distributed all over the Dominion. I am not imputing any motive to the hon. gentleman. I am discussing this purely as a departmental measure, which is to my mind very objectionable, and should not be tolerated in this Parliament.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that we are drifting to a very bad principle. In the early part of the session, the Postmaster General spoke to this effect: We have suspended the law which provides for statutory increases and reserve the right to consider each individual case on its merits, and as we find increases are earned, we will bring down Estimates giving the names of the parties to whom the increases are given and whatever other information is required from the House. But here we have this item submitted to us:

Amount required to enable certain increases of salary payable under the Civil Service Act, and accruing on 1st January and 1st April, 1897, which were temporarily suspended, to be continued during the year ending 30th June, 1898..... $1,397 50

We did not hear anything about increases being temporarily suspended, but understood that they were permanently suspended and that the Ministers reserved the right to themselves to give increases only to those who were recommended by the heads of departments as entitled to it. We are not told to whom these increases are to be given, nor to how many. The amount may be divided between two or among three or four. We should have all this information before passing the item.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman wishes to make the increases, he need not change the amount, but might bring down a list of the names and the amount opposite each, and then the item would be regular.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not wish to exceed, in any case, the limit which the law imposes, but I want to have time to properly consider each case, and would not like to be compelled to make the increases in all the cases. If it would meet the case, I would be happy, at a later stage, to make a list of any increases that may be made, but I only ask not to be compelled to make the increases until I have considered each individual case.

Mr. FOSTER. It would no doubt be a convenience to the hon. gentleman to allow him time to make up his mind, but he should have done this before submitting the Estimates. We ought not to go outside the established rule. The hon. gentleman should let this stand until to-morrow in order to settle on the names.

It being Six o'clock, the committee rose for recess.

After Recess.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

DRUMMOND COUNTY RAILWAY AND GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). By Sir ADOLPHE CARON.

sent and your good-will, Mr. Chairman, I will just reply to the hon. leader of the Opposition on the point he was inquiring about. As I understood him, he desired to know why we had brought down an Estimate for the purpose of paying rent to the Drummond County Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway during a few months of the coming financial year. I would simply say this: We are of the opinion that, under the circumstances, it is very desirable that the experiment should be tried, at any rate for a few months, with the object of seeing what the result would be of extending the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal. We consider, of course, that the action taken by another body in this respect was ill-advised, but, at the same time, as it has been taken, it is proposed to proceed, not on the basis of any agreement, because, as a matter of course, that is at an end now—but we think it is desirable that the experiment should be tried. We think it important, whichever way it goes, that the House and the country should have an opportunity of judging whether we are right in our contention, in which case the objections would disappear, or whether we have been mistaken, in which event it would not be necessary for us to proceed further with the experiment. For those reasons we desire to ask the House to give us the power of carrying out for a few months the experiment of connecting the Intercolonial Railway with the city of Montreal, as originally intended.

As regards the other matters, if we make reasonable progress with the Estimates we are now engaged in, I think I shall ask the Minister of Railways, at a convenient hour this evening, to proceed with a statement as regards the subsidies to which we propose to direct the attention of the House, and we will probably, also, take a stage in connection with the Crow's Nest Pass. That, I think, will be as much as we can hope to achieve this evening.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman oblige the committee by stating, not in minute detail, the lines of the agreement upon which the Government propose to make this experimental trial?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I may say that we are not in a position at this moment to state the terms of any agreement between the Government and the Grand Trunk Railway Company, or any other company, whose rights it will be necessary to acquire and use for the purposes of this extension. We have made no agreement, as yet, but we contemplate the extreme probability of our being able to make an agreement which will commend itself to the Government, and will enable us to acquire the use of these lines for the term we have mentioned within the sum we ask Parliament to grant for that purpose. Of course, as to the details, I could not now give the House and the committee any information. That would be obviously impossible as, since the action was taken in another place, we have had no means of considering the subject or of entering into negotiations with a view of making even a temporary arrangement. We are firmly convinced that the policy of extending the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal is a sound one, and we shall adhere to it. We think that it is not in the interests of the country that the Intercolonial Railway should, any longer than is absolutely necessary, be compelled to terminate at the point where it now terminates, and we shall address ourselves to the making of such an arrangement—if Parliament gives us the grant that will enable us to do so—as will give the matter of extension a fair trial. I do not wish to convey to the committee the idea that the experiment which the time at our disposal—now about nine months—will enable us to make, will cover the ground adequately, but it will give us some information, and it may possibly be that we may ask Parliament for means to continue the experiment for another year. These are matters which will come up in due season.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Blair) will see that a great many difficulties surround the arrangement, if the Government simply come down without any matured plans at all and ask for a vote of $150,000 or $160,000 for what, as I understand it, is altogether in the air. The old agreement has passed away, that, as I understand my hon. friend, is the position; but if the House will grant them this amount of money, they will try to make some arrangements by which they can get into Montreal. That is simply asking the House to give them a large sum of money without any conditions attached to the grant at all, without anything on which the House can base that vote. I point this out to my hon. friend. I wish to point out another matter which occurs to me. No arrangement or experiment that might be made under conditions of that kind in the short space of eight or nine months, would probably be considered satisfactory either by those who are in favour of making this arrangement, or by those who do not see the wisdom of it. These points occur to me at the moment, and I bring them to the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite. May I ask if any sum of money has passed to the Drummond County Railway under the proposed arrangement?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. None whatever.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. None whatever.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I may say that there is a limitation to the obligations which the Government would assume in connection with any arrangement we might make, and that is the limit of the sum voted by Parliament; and hon. members will see further that the sum named corresponds with the amount which was agreed upon with the two companies as the consideration for which we should acquire the necessary facilities for extending the railway to Montreal. And, presumably, the arrangement which may be entered into temporarily may be on the lines—certainly it will not be in excess of the terms which are contained in the contract agreed upon, and which now, by reason of the action which has taken place, is at an end. I may say to the hon. gentleman further that, so far from there having been any arrangement at all between either the Grand Trunk Company and the Government, or the Drummond County Company and the Government under which they would receive any consideration from the Government, there has been an entire absence of anything of that kind. The only thing that has taken place is that we have given to the Grand Trunk Railway Company an assurance that we will ask Parliament to make to that company the usual 15 per cent grant, as hon. gentlemen have seen in the proposed resolution. We intend to ask Parliament to give them 15 per cent of the amount for the reconstruction and enlargement of the Victoria Bridge—the assistance we grant not to exceed $300,000. I may add further that it is our purpose to ask Parliament to give the subsidy in the ordinary way to the Drummond County Railway Company in order that they may go on and complete their road. That subsidy, of course, would apply only to the mileage that remains uncompleted, that is to say, between Moose Park and Chaudière, the exact distance, I believe, being 42½ miles.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the rate of the subsidy?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is proposed under the same conditions as other railway subsidies which have been brought down.

An hon. MEMBER. That is $6,400 a mile?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The subsidy proposed is $3,200 a mile; but under the terms of the resolution, if the Governor in Council is satisfied that the expenditure on the road, that is the bona fide reasonable outlay, exceeds $15,000, we propose that in this case as in others, we can pay 50 per cent on the amount in excess of $15,000 per mile, but not to exceed, on the whole, $6,400 a mile.

Mr. FOSTER. And it is the intention of my hon. friend, I suppose, to include that on the general Supply Bill?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know whether it is customary here to include the general Supply Bill—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). No.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We do not propose to take any different course in that regard from that which is customary.

Mr. FOSTER. All I can say is that hon. gentlemen opposite will consult their own interest, and, I am sure, the convenience of the House, if they will bring that measure down as soon as possible, with just as full explanations as they can give to the committee at that time. The Opposition will take it into their consideration with a view to doing what is best for the country. And, perhaps, I may be permitted to say that we act as a Parliament made up of two Houses, and if this House, which is a component part of Parliament, takes it into its head that a certain thing is good and pushes it, or that a certain thing is bad and vetoes it, it would ill become the other branch of Parliament to say that we acted from partisan motives. I hope that the same charitable and just judgment will be used by us toward what is an essential component part of the Parliament of this country, and that whatever is done will be considered to be done upon business principles, and not from considerations of partisan interest.

POST OFFICE MAIL SERVICE— CONTRACTS.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I should like to draw the attention of the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) to the case of the Paspebiac and Gaspé Basin contract for the carrying of the mail. I may say that my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) will remember that I mentioned to him that I would bring this matter before the House. I would like to know the names and amounts of the new tender for the Paspebiac and Gaspé Basin mail service. The tenders, as I understand, were received on the 11th of the present month. When I happened to occupy the position which the hon. gentleman occupies to-day, the contracts were signed with Mr. Sutton. So far as my recollection goes, speaking from memory, I understood that Mr. Sutton was the lowest tenderer, and, of course, the hon. gentleman, having the official records of the department, will be able to say whether I am correct. As I understand it, when the last by-elections took place, an hon. gentleman who does not belong to this House, but who took a strong interest in favour of the party who now sit on the right of the Speaker, insisted that this contract should be cancelled. I know not whether there were reasons why it should be cancelled, but I understand that the contract was cancelled. Judging from the information which was sent to me from the constituency, a very strong memorial was signed addressed, I believe, to the Postmaster General by the wardens of the different municipalities, asking that Mr. Sutton should be allowed to continue to hold the contract until the time expired. This memorial was signed by the wardens of Gaspé, Newport, Pabos, Grand River, Cape Cove, Douglastown, York, and most of the merchants. The large fishing houses, as I understand, and the most prominent merchants in the locality also joined in signing the memorial I have just referred to, asking that Mr. Sutton should be allowed to keep the contract until the term expired. I also believe, from the information that I have received, that the post office inspector, Mr. Bolduc, would certify that Mr. Sutton was carrying out the work to the satisfaction of the department. Of course, I need not say that Mr. Sutton was at the time that he entered into this contract, and still is, a Conservative. I do not understand that there is any charge made against him for political partisanship in the last elections, which took place, but I know, as a matter of fact that Mr. Sutton is a strong Conservative. But, unless there are very strong reasons brought forward by the department to show that this contract should be cancelled, and although he did not take any prominent part in election matters, I think it would be hardly reasonable to suppose that the mere fact of his disagreeing with the political view of hon. gentlemen opposite, would be a reason why the contract should be broken. As I have already stated, I notified the hon. Postmaster General that when his Estimates came up I would take occasion to question him upon this point, as I will have an opportunity of questioning him about another case. But when the matter first came up on the ordinary Estimates, the hon. gentleman was away, and I did not like to bring it up until he was present, but I told one of his colleagues that I intended to bring it up. Now, I would like to hear from the hon. gentleman the names of the tenderers with the amounts, the amounts of the tenders accepted; and also whether it is not a fact that under the old contract which was signed when I was Postmaster General, Mr. Sutton was the lowest tenderer.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I thank the hon. gentleman for having, in advance, informed me of his intention to make these inquiries, and I have no fault whatever to find with anything which he has said. The old contractor was Mr. Sutton, the contract was awarded to him in 1895, he at that time being the lowest tenderer. The contract was for a service of 103 miles in length. It was represented to me by the late Mr. Fauvel, the then member for the county, and also by the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) in this House to-day, that the service could be better performed and at a less rate if it were divided into sections. Accordingly, it was divided into three separate sections, one section from Gaspé Basin to Perce, a distance of 39 miles; another from Newport Point to Paspébiac, a distance of 34 miles; and the third section from Newport Bridge to Perce, a distance of 30 miles. The hon. gentleman is correct in stating that the date for receiving the tenders was the 11th of June. I have been furnished by the department with the names and the amounts of the various persons who have tendered, and the contracts have been awarded in each case to the lowest tenderer. But, as the hon. gentleman knows, there is always an interval between the sending off of tenders to the inspector to complete the contracts, and the contracts being completed. That is the state of affairs at this moment. The 11th of June has just gone by, the papers have been put in the hands of the inspector of the district, Mr. Bolduc, and, up to this moment, they are not completed, the usual delay of carrying out contracts at a remote point like that must take place. Under the circumstances, I am sure that the hon. gentleman will not ask me at this date to give publicity to the names and the amounts of the tenders, because it is quite at variance with sound practice under similar circumstances, either in public or in private tenders, to give the names of the tenderers and their amounts until a firm contract is made; to do otherwise might prejudice the public service. Men may withdraw, schemes and complaints, and demands may be made, so that the lowest tenderer may, perhaps, drop out, and finally we may find ourselves with higher tenderers to deal with. Therefore, it is only in the public interest that I am obliged to refuse the hon. gentleman; I am sure he won't press me for that information in detail. I may say, however, that for the three sections there was substantial tendering. For the first section I named, there were seven tenderers; for the second section, fifteen tenderers; for the third section, nine tenderers; and in each case the contract has been awarded to the lowest tenderer. I have information showing the price at which the contract has been performed by Mr. Sutton. I think I can without prejudice to the public interest say that the total amounts of the three lowest tenders that we are now dealing with and expect to carry into effect, as furnished to me by the department, aggregate the sum of $3,320. My hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) here is turning up the amount of the original contract and he will see how that compares with original contract price.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not altogether agree with the view which the Postmaster General takes about the letting of public contracts. I believe that the Government, like an individual, ought to keep faith with a contractor who enters into a contract with the Government or with an individual. The Postmaster General has just admitted that Mr. Sutton was the lowest tenderer. Would it be right for the Government, before the termination of that contract, to say, "We are going to break through the contract; we are going to invite new tenders. We are going to throw you overboard before the term of your contract expires, and we are going to let other people take this contract." The hon. gentleman has just stated that the new contracts were let to the lowest tenderers. If they have been let to the lowest tenderers, there is no possible reason, public or private, why the hon. gentleman should not give the names of the new contractors as well as the prices at which these contracts were granted. I call the special attention of the Minister to the fact that the leading commercial houses and the wardens and mayors of the various municipalities, outside of any political influence whatever signed a strong memorial to the Minister asking him to permit a man who had carried out his contract to the satisfaction of the department, as is shown by what Mr. Bolduc has reported, to continue to the end of his term. Mr. Bolduc has had no communication with me about the matter for the reason that I invariably have no communication with any department except through the political head of it, and if I cannot get the information through the political head of the department, I am satisfied to do without it. I am informed that Mr. Bolduc, the inspector, stated that the contract was carried out to the satisfaction of the department, and the strong memorial which has been signed indicates that it was carried out to the satisfaction of the public. I remember that during my term of office when Mr. Sutton was the contractor we looked upon him as one of the best contractors we had in the department. I merely draw the attention of the Postmaster General to this fact, because I think it is a very unsatisfactory thing to allow the public to get hold of the idea that because there has been a change of Government, contracts which have been signed shall not be respected. The Government ought to be a standing example of the faithful carrying out of contracts between the private individuals, and I say that it is a bad thing that the notion should get abroad that merely because there is a change in the Government contracts which have been signed shall not be respected. The information which I have received and letters which have been sent to me by some of the most substantial houses in that district indicate to me that it was not from any personal motive but that the real reason why this contract was cancelled was because Mr. Sutton was a Conservative, and the hon. gentleman or his friends behind him wished to have somebody else belonging to their own political view to get the contract instead of leaving it in the hands of the late contractor.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I would say to the hon. gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron) that the contract was not cancelled, so far as I know, for any such reason. The contract contained a provision saying that it might be cancelled after three months' notice, and the reason the contract was cancelled was this: I was informed by the then representative of the riding, Mr. Fauvel, whom we all regret is not left with us, and who represented one of the most extensive business concerns in the riding, that with one continuous contract, covering 103 miles, the general public was unable to fairly compete.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. But it had been let.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know how it had been let, but by letting this 103 mile contract none but men able to handle a 103-mile contract could tender for it. By dividing it into three sections—

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Dividing the patronage.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have stated the principle upon which I have been dealing with these contracts. There is no question of patronage in the matter. Perhaps I would not be transgressing the confidence of the department, or injuring the public interest, if I told the hon. gentleman, and since he is so deeply interested in the welfare of Mr. Sutton, and suggests that I took this action for the sake of patronage, it would be a source of gratification for him to know that Mr. Sutton is one of the successful tenderers. I omitted to ask the department what price the hon. gentleman was paying for his 103 mile contract, but I have the report issued by the hon. gentleman for 1895-96, in which the contract appears in the name of Mr. Ramier, "Gaspé Pasiu to Paspébiac, service 103 miles, V. P. Ramier, $6,720."

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It may be a translation for Sutton.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is the name of the contractor that the hon. gentleman has given to the House in his report, and for this service the price set down is $6,720 per annum. By dividing it up into three separate services and making it possible for the general public to compete I have received tenders aggregating $3,320.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. For the same service?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. For identically the same service, same lines, same routes, same times. I have not the contract here. I am assuming that these are the correct figures which I have found in the public report of the hon. gentleman. I have beside me the report of my officers giving me the figures of the three lowest tenders, which aggregate $3,320, a difference per annum of $3,400, or a difference in four years of $13,600. I leave it to the hon. gentleman if this is not a good enough reason for adopting the course I have adopted.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Even then I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman admits that the Sutton contract was given to the lowest tenderer. If that be so, his contract up to the time it expired should have been respected, and the hon. gentleman with his view to economy should afterwards have advertised for new tenders. I must ask the Postmaster General to bring down these contracts before I can congratulate him upon his economy. I want to see just what kind of service we obtain from these individual contractors, so that I can judge between them and the contract entered into with Mr. Sutton. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) says he has selected the three lowest tenderers, but he does not give the names or the amounts.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Your friend Mr. Sutton is one of them.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That shows how wise it is to advertise for tenders, and not to attempt to do away with tenders as the Postmaster General asked to do by his Bill.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I never asked for such a thing.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The fact of Mr. Sutton being the lowest tenderer and receiving the contract, proves that the department looks upon him as a good contractor. I contend that a contract was entered into between the Crown and Mr. Sutton, and up to the time when that contract expired, he should not have been interfered with.

Mr. LISTER. So far as the postal contracts are concerned, I can bear testimony to the fact that all the contracts that have been cancelled by the Postmaster General, in my own and in the adjoining county, have resulted in a very great saving indeed to the treasury. Every contract he has let in the county of Lambton has been let at a considerably reduced price, without destroying in any way the efficiency of the public service. My hon. friend (Sir Adolphe Caron) has talked about the Government keeping faith with contractors, but the hon. gentleman knows that in every one of these post office contracts, there is a clause under which the department has the right at any time, and for any reason, to cancel that contract and ask for new tenders. Within my own knowledge of the results achieved, I can say that the Postmaster General was perfectly justified in cancelling these contracts, and in every instance he has effected a saving of from 10 to 30 per cent. There is no injustice done to the contractor, because he knows that it is in the power of the Postmaster General at any time to cancel the contract, and to re-let it by giving the required notice. If the cancellation of contracts has been at all extensive, I venture to say that a great deal of money has been saved to the country by the action of the Postmaster General. Why, Sir, it is only necessary to take up this supplementary report of the Post Office Department, to see that contracts which had been let for $8,000 and $9,000 by the late Government, have been cancelled and re-let by the Postmaster General at a saving in many instances of 50 per cent, and in some instances of more than that. It is shown by this report that the administration of the Post Office Department in the past has not been all that we had a right to expect from that department. Under the late Government contracts were awarded, and they were renewed from time to time without tenders being invited, and the result of the re-letting has been the saving of many thousands of dollars to this country. I will ask the Postmaster General, what the saving to Canada has been by reason of the cancellation and re-letting of contracts, up to this date.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lister) the information later.

Mr. LEMIEUX. As representative for the county of Gaspé I happen to know something of this Sutton contract. The late Mr. Fauvel and myself asked the Postmaster General to cancel this contract, because the largest firms in the counties of Gaspé and Bonaventure, represented to us that the service was not sufficient, and that Mr. Sutton having the contract for a route of 103 miles, sub-let to certain people at a very low price. At every parish in the counties of Gaspé and Bonaventure the mails were exchanged, and it appears that on two or three occasions they were lost. I will not criticise the administration of the department by the ex-Postmaster General (Sir Adolphe Caron), but if I remember aright, the papers I saw in the department last winter show that this contract for $6,000 had been given the last time without tender.

Mr. Fiset. When?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I think it was a few days before the general elections.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I was not Postmaster General a few days before the election.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Let me refer for a moment to the impartiality and indeed the severity of the present Postmaster General, in dealing with these contracts. Six or seven contracts were advertised in my county during the last winter for carrying the mails. The time had lapsed and new notices were sent. I came to Ottawa at that time thinking that perhaps my Liberal friends in the county should have a chance to get these contracts, because according to the notices the Minister was at liberty to give them to any of the tenderers. I represented, I confess, to the Postmaster General, that these contracts should be given to my political friends, because the figures in their tenders were not much higher than the figures in the tenders of Conservatives. The Postmaster General in every case gave the contract to the lowest tenderers, and out of seven contracts five or six were given to Conservatives. That is the law, and it has been followed very closely by the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock). My friends in the county of Gaspé now understand that the lowest tenderer will get the contract. That is the case with the present contract. I again repeat that there were serious complaints against the carrying of the mails in that district. There was one sub-contractor for each parish and they exchanged the mails. This continuous exchange of mails from day to day, every morning and every evening was most damaging. It is reported that three or four times the mails were lost, and the largest firms, one of which was that of Mr. Fauvel, protested against that state of affairs; and this is the reason why the contract was cancelled.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I wish to lay before the committee what I think are important matters to be remembered when this question of mail contracts is discussed. I had some experience of that department, and I can tell the hon. gentleman that no contract was ever renewed in my time as Postmaster General without a tender, except upon the report of the officers of the department, who believed, as I believe today, after my experience, that we could get the contracts carried out more economically if we renewed with the old contractor than we could if we called for new tenders; and I will give the hon. gentleman the reason why. Take the case of Sutton. I mention him, not because I think his contract would better illustrate my argument, but because his contract was for 103 miles, and to carry out his contract he required to have horses, wagons, harness and other plant. I used to call upon the contractors, subject to the advice of my officers. I did not pretend, and do not pretend now, to know the geographical location of these contracts. It is quite a specialty, and the special adviser of the Minister, whether the deputy or one of the inspectors, has a perfect knowledge of the contracts, and he advises the Minister what it is best to do; and I am quite certain that when the hon. Postmaster General has gained more experience in that department, which is to a certain extent a technical department, he will see that the new contracts are always higher than the old. With the country developing and the requirements of the people increasing every day, I can say as a result of my experience that when we called for new tenders, almost invariably—I think it can be proved from the records of the department—the new contracts were higher than the old ones. Of course, there is a clause in every contract providing that by giving three months' notice you may cancel a contract; but the question I am discussing is whether or not it is good policy to do that. In the case of Sutton, my hon. friend who represents the constituency (Mr. Lemieux) says he knows of complaints which were made against the Sutton contract. Who knows of these complaints, if not the department whose duty it is to look after the mail service all over Canada, and I believe it will be found that Mr. Sutton gave universal satisfaction.

Mr. LISTER. He sub-let the contracts. He did not do the work himself.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I understand my hon. friend's argument, and it would be a strong argument if the Postmaster General had not among the records of his own department this memorial signed by all the leading fishing houses of that district.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The names the hon. gentleman has just given are really the names of the Tory committee of the county of Gaspé.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That only proves that the whole business of that county is in the hands of Tories. I protest against the use that is made of the name of Mr. Fauvel. Mr. Fauvel has gone to his long rest, and I think it is rather unbecoming to make use of his name to excuse what the department has done. Let the department take the responsibility, and not throw it upon a dead man. If the hon. gentleman will read the memorial placed in the hands of the Postmaster General he will find who the men were; it matters little to me whether they were Tories or Liberals. I am not discussing a political question; I am not discussing whether the Tories or Liberals were in favour of Mr. Sutton; I am discussing the fact that Mr. Sutton had signed a contract with the Crown, and that Mr. Sutton was recognized by the officers of the department as a good contractor. Mr. Fauvel was a friend of mine, and he was justly respected among the people of Gaspé.

Mr. LEMIEUX. His letters are in the department.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. But he was not the whole trade of the district. His was one of the small companies. Collas, Robin & Company did more business in one month than the Fauvel Company did in ten months.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The Fauvel house is one of the largest in the Dominion—Le Bouffiller Bros.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have had an opportunity of studying that part of the province of Quebec, which the hon. Postmaster General, from his numerous engagements in the province of Ontario, has not had. I am not discussing whether Mr. Fauvel was one of the leading men or not; but if you take up that memorial and read the names in it, you will find that the preponderating weight of the commercial interests of that county testified that Mr. Sutton efficiently carried out the contract. Of course, you have a clause in every contract, giving you the right, on giving three months' notice, to cancel the contract; but I think this clause is inserted for a specific purpose. If you find that the contract is not properly carried out, you can take advantage of that clause; but if the contract is properly carried out, you surely should not cancel it, simply because you want to get rid of a man who does not see, politically speaking, through the same glasses as you do. If the Postmaster General will look into this matter, he will find that the information I have received is absolutely reliable. He will find that for the purpose of cancelling that contract, Mr. Sutton was sacrificed and three friends of the hon. gentleman brought in. And Mr. Sutton was sacrificed, not because he did not give satisfaction, because the fact of his being now accepted by the department shows that he fulfilled his duty. I would ask the hon. gentleman, as he has stated that the lowest tenders have been accepted, to give the names and amounts.

Mr. LISTER. Is the hon. Postmaster General in a position to tell the committee what proportion of contracts has been cancelled and what saving has been effected thereby?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the total number of contracts cancelled for the year, but I can give him the amounts saved. The amount paid by the late Government, under contracts which had been cancelled by my direction, was $381,237.22. These are four year contracts and they were cancelled and renewed by public tender, and in every case the contract awarded to the lowest tenderer. The gross amount was $277,302.25 as compared with $381,237.22, making a saving of $103,936.97 per annum, or for the four years which these contracts had to run, a saving of $415,747.88.

Mr. HAGGART. Were they for the same service?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes. There may have been occasional cases which would not be altogether identical, but in many of the cases the contract was for a tri-weekly service and I renewed it as a daily service. In other words, the service obtained by the public exceeds in mileage that of the cancelled contract.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman does not give any figures at all.

Mr. HENDERSON. I want to give a little bit of my experience which may show the committee that there were savings as well under the late Government. I remember that in the case of one of the last contracts in my county, which was about to terminate, I advised the then Postmaster General to call for tenders and he did so, and the result was that instead of costing $430 the service was obtained for $219. In another case, where we had a daily service costing $200 and a semi-weekly at $100, the two running together, the new service was obtained daily for about $225. That was under the late Government. I mention this to show that what is occurring to-day was occurring then, but it was not the practice then to open a contract unless we knew there were people anxious to tender and there was reasonable probability of obtaining the service at lower figures.

I wish to make this statement and I make it fearlessly, that while this amount of money seems to be saved, in reality it is not. I do not believe we have any right to say that we have saved $400,000 to the people if that saving has simply been ground out of poor men who are compelled to do this work for half what it is worth. There is no doubt that plenty are doing the work for half what it is worth. There are men keeping up a horse and wagon and working from seven in the morning until eight at night for the miserable pittance of 75 cents a day, and I cannot think this Government can boast of saving money when the saving is effected by grinding men down in that way. I confess that I have little sympathy for the system which brings about such a state of affairs. It is proper that we should economise, but I do not think it fair that people should be asked to do a public service at starvation pay. The Postmaster General would be perfectly justified in allowing a little more than he has, so as to reasonably compensate those who are doing this work.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is not the Act of Parliament.

Mr. HENDERSON. It may not be, but to my mind there is no great necessity in this country for grinding people down to the very last figure. The class of people who do this work are respectable men. They have to be honourable men, they have to be men of integrity who enjoy the confidence of those around them, they have to furnish sureties, and I am not in favour of grinding these men down to the bottom cent for the services they perform. I fail to see that the country is so much richer simply because we have squeezed a little more out of these poor men.

Mr. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). I would not have taken part in this debate were it not for the statement made by the ex-Postmaster General (Sir Adolphe Caron). He said that in nearly every case, under this administration, new contracts were let for more than the old ones, and that during his term of office he never renewed a contract without calling for tenders. I might draw his attention to the contractors in the district of Saskatchewan, Messrs. Leason & Scott, who have had the mail contracts for eighteen years. Tenders were never asked for. People wrote time and again to the department saying they were willing to take the contract for $5,000 a year less and put up the securities, but no attention was paid to them. Leason & Scott got $9,000 for one contract from Saskatoon to Onion Lake. The contract was cancelled, and I think it has been re-let for about $4,000. These people had that contract for about 18 years; and if the hon. gentleman will figure that out, he will find that the country is out about $75,000.

Mr. LISTER. That is one of the poor men that the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) talks about.

Mr. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). Yes, this is one of the poor men. I know that time and time again people tried to have tenders called for that work so that they could get a chance to tender for it, but they never could succeed. This is only one instance; if I desired to take up time, I could give other instances of the same kind.

Mr. McMULLEN. I was surprised when I heard the ex-Postmaster General (Sir Adolphe Caron) state that tenders had always been asked for when he was Postmaster General. In looking over the supplementary report issued by the Postmaster General, we find cases in which the hon. gentleman must admit that that rule has not been carried out. For instance, we have the case of the mail contract between Back Bay and St. George. The report says:

This contract was let without tender for the term commencing on the 1st July, 1892, at $274.88, while there was a tender in the department for $153, the loss being $487.52 for the term. It was renewed for the succeeding term without tender at the same rate, but the present Government cancelled the renewal and invited tenders. A contract having been obtained for $140 per annum, the saving for the term will be $539.52.

Now, this tender was put in by Mr. Dewar for $153.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. When was that?

Mr. McMULLEN. It was in July, 1882. I have here the correspondence that took place.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I was not Postmaster General then.

Mr. McMULLEN. I will read the correspondence and I think the hon. gentleman will admit that he was.

St. George, 13th January, 1896.

Dear Sir,—I desire the renewal of my mail contract between St. George and Back Bay upon the same terms and conditions as now held. The present contract terminates 1st July, 1896.

Praying that you will kindly assent to my wishes, and grant a renewal for a period of four years from 1st July next.

I am, &c.,

(Sgd.) A. J. SEELYE.

Hon. Sir A. P. Caron, K.C.M.G., Postmaster General.

Ottawa, 23rd January, 1896.

My Dear Mr. Foster,—The Postmaster General wishes me to ask you whether you have any objection to the renewal for a further period of four years of the contract for the mail service between Back Bay and St. George. The present contractor is Mr. A. J. Seelye, whose application for renewal the inspector recommends.

An early reply will greatly oblige.

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) WILLIAM WHITE.

Hon. G. E. Foster, Minister of Finance.

Ottawa, 12th February, 1896.

My Dear Mr. Foster,—I have much pleasure in informing you that, in accordance with your recommendation, I have authorized the renewal of Mr. J. A. Seelye's contract for the mail service between Back Bay and St. George for a further period of four years.

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) ADOLPHE P. CARON.

Hon. G. E. Foster,
Minister of Finance, Ottawa.

Ottawa, 25th February, 1896.

Dear Sir Adolphe,—Mr. A. J. Seelye, of St. George, N.B., has made application for the renewal of his contract for carrying the mails between Back Bay and St. George, N.B. I will be glad if you can meet Mr. Seelye's wishes in this matter.

Yours truly,

GEORGE E. FOSTER.

Hon. Sir Adolphe Caron, K.C.M.G., P.M.G.

Ottawa, 25th February, 1896.

My Dear Mr. Foster,—Referring to your letter of the 25th inst., recommending the renewal of Mr. A. J. Seelye's contract for the mail service between Back Bay and St. George, I beg to say that, on your recommendation, this contract was renewed on the 10th inst. My letter of the 12th inst. informed you of the fact.

Yours faithfully,

ADOLPHE P. CARON.

Hon. G. E. Foster,
Minister of Finance, Ottawa.

Now, there is a contract that was renewed by the ex-Postmaster General—

Mr. LANDERKIN. By the ex-Finance Minister (Mr. Foster).

Mr. McMULLEN. The ex-Finance Minister requested that it should be done and it was done in the face of the fact that there was a contract in his own office to do the work for $175. If the hon. gentleman wants to follow this case, he will find it at page 258, in the supplementary report of the Postmaster General, page 258. I see it before him.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) sees it before me, he sees more than I do.

Mr. McMULLEN. I saw that the hon. gentleman was looking over a blue-book and I thought it was this one. I will make the hon. gentleman the present of the copy that I have if he wishes. I congratulate the country and the House upon having a man at the head of this department who will do his duty fearlessly and will give contracts at the lowest price. I was surprised at the remark of my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson). If we are not to accept the lowest tender, what is the use of tendering at all. If people are prepared to do the work even for nothing, however low a tender they may make to the department, the department is justified in accepting it. If the work is not efficiently done, the department can cancel the contract. I am glad to know that we have turned over a new leaf, and I hope that before long the expenditure of this department will be brought within revenue. Hitherto enormous sums have been thrown away for mere favouritism. This system will be done away with. I trust that the Postmaster General will long continue to preside over the department which he manages with such ability and with such advantage to the people of the country.

Mr. LISTER. I have the case of another poor man—the contractor for the mail service between Eastern Harbour and Port Hastings, N.S. That contract was let, as the facts appear here, and renewed without tender. When the present Postmaster General took office, he cancelled the contract and called for tenders, and the result is a saving to the country of $4,000 a year—fully 50 per cent of the price paid by the late Government for many years for this mail contract. In this case the ex-Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) and not the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) appears to have taken a very lively interest in securing to these contractors the continuance of their contract at the exorbitant price which they have paid for so many years. The ex-Postmaster General wrote the following letter to the Deputy Postmaster General:—

Ottawa, 7th September, 1895.

My Dear Col. White,—In the matter of H. A. Archibald's contract for carrying mails in Cape Breton, I should feel obliged if you will not advertise for tenders until I have an opportunity of speaking to you on the subject. Please make a note of this, and oblige.

Yours faithfully,

CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

Then Sir Adolphe Caron writes a letter:

My Dear Sir Charles,—In accordance with the recommendation you make in your letter of the 7th inst., I have authorized that the notices advertising the Eastern Harbour and Port Hastings mail service be withdrawn.

Yours faithfully
ADOLPHE P. CARON.

Then Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper writes this extraordinary letter :

My Dear Col. White,—Will you kindly bring to the favourable attention of the Postmaster General the following proposition in regard to the contract for carrying the mails in Cape Breton, at present performed by H. A. Archibald, of Port Hastings :—

1st. That the department advertise contract as a whole. This is the manner in which it was formerly put up to tender.

2nd. That your department do not call for tenders sooner than six weeks before the contract is to be awarded, or six weeks before the expiration of the present contract.

3rd. That four days be allowed to parties to whom the contract may be awarded, to complete arrangements and furnish securities. This was the time allowed Mr. Finn, the late contractor.

4th. That the amount of security to be given should be made $13,000. This will prevent irresponsible persons from tendering.

I am told that all previous contractors on this route have failed to give satisfaction to the public, and were involved, having heavy judgments rolled up against them, finally having to abandon the business on account of the small consideration paid.

Now, Sir, of all the letters that were ever written by a public man, I do not think that this letter can be paralleled. We have the fact here that Mr. Archibald had been contractor for carrying the mails between these points for a number of years, that that contract as a matter of fact had been renewed from time to time without tender, no notice ever having been published from the first date inviting the public to tender for the carrying of these mails. But we find that for the avowed purpose—because it could be nothing else—of preventing people of moderate means from tendering, the Postmaster General was asked to put up this contract as a whole. And what more was he asked to do? Why, Sir, not to issue invitations for tenders until six weeks before the contract expired, and to provide that there should be four days only allowed for the purpose of completing the security to be given for the performance of the contract. I am told that this place is nearly a thousand miles away from here down in Nova Scotia, and the man was expected to send his tender in, to get a letter advising that the tender was accepted, and then, within four days, to make all the provision necessary for the purpose of carrying out a pretty extensive contract. If the hon. gentleman had publicly proclaimed that his object was to prevent that contract being taken at a reasonable price, he could not have done it more effectively than in the letter which appears in this book. It was to be provided in this notice that the man who had the tender should only have four days to complete his security. In other words, after receiving the notice that his tender was accepted, he was to be in Ottawa and have his security completed and be prepared to carry out the terms of his contract. It was simply asking for an impossibility, and it meant nothing more than this, that it was intended that Mr. Archibald should get this contract under guise of asking for tenders. It was always intended that this man should get the contract, because the terms of it were so severe and onerous that no person else could possibly have taken it. But the Postmaster General, when he came into office, cancelled this contract and re-let it, and the result has been a saving to this country of $4,000 a year, or $16,000 in the four years this contract had to run.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The saving was about $6,000 a year, not $4,000.

Mr. FOSTER. A very good catechism.

Mr. LISTER. I know my hon. friend does not like it.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend will allow me a word—I enjoy it very much. The hon. gentleman thinks that in this fresh and early period of the session we had better undertake two or three days' discussion on these past contracts. If the members of the Government and gentlemen sitting on that side desire it, we are quite willing for it, but I was under the impression that we were somewhat in a hurry to get through with the business, and if so I would just suggest whether going into this back matter—which cannot be allowed to go on unless it is thoroughly discussed, and the record of the party on the other side, I do not care how far back, is brought up—I want to ask the Government how long they expect to keep us here if this is carried on. The hon. gentleman need not be at all afraid that I am feeling badly over this, I am not; but I just want to point out that this brings on recrimination, undoubtedly, and that if we are prepared at this time of the session to go into a debate as to the records of the two parties—well, we are ready for it if you are.

Mr. LISTER. I am very glad indeed to bear the hon. gentleman make this statement, because for the last three weeks it has been more strongly impressed on my mind from day to day that the hon. gentlemen were merely marking time, that they were wasting time deliberately, and I thought that we might just as well take part with them.

Mr. FOSTER. When it is desired to get through with the business it is always incumbent, I think, on the Government that the Government party should be restrained a little. The Opposition has its rights, you know, of attack and criticism ; but I want to point out to my hon. friend that this is opening up a very inviting field.

Mr. LISTER. I have no desire to prolong the session, but when my hon. friend the ex-Postmaster General gets up and makes charges that we are not saving any money, I think it is in the interest of the Government that the contrary should be shown.

Mr. WALLACE. These hon. gentlemen are claiming their great superiority over the late Government, and the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) seems to have been put up to eulogize the Postmaster General ; at any rate, the Postmaster General was ready with his answer, and everything appeared to be cut and dried to give a sounding cheer to the Postmaster General for his great economies in cutting down contracts for these men who, I say, are the worst paid men in Canada to-day. I do not believe that the country will endorse the cutting down by $10 or $15 or $20 per annum a contract where the men are really earning more than twice that amount in honest service to the country. But when the Postmaster General makes these great claims to economy, and brings down his estimate to the House, what do they show ? In 1893 the expenses of the Post Office Department were $3,421,000 ; to-day they are several hundred thousand more than that. In 1894 they had increased to $3,517,000 ; in 1895 they were $3,593,000 ; in 1896, $3,665,000. You all know that just before an election claims are made for postal routes. It is inevitable that the expenses should increase immediately before an election, and very properly so, because people want more postal facilities, and perhaps they were refused before. Now they get them, and they are entitled to the best postal facilities that the country can give. For these four years the average expenditure was $3,549,000. Then we come to the present Postmaster General. Last year the Postmaster General asked for $3,787,000, or $238,000 more than the average of the previous four years. Does that show his great economy ? For this year he asks $3,636,000 or $87,000 more than the average of the four years. Yet he claims that he has been economical, and that he has cut down the contracts of these men, one of whom I know spends the best part of the day driving a team of horses fourteen miles over a bad road for $229 a year or 70 cents a day. The Postmaster General gets just a little over thirty times that each day for his arduous labours. I am sure that the country will appreciate the fact that this mail carrier is to be cut down $11 per annum. I am sure that if the Postmaster General has made these economies that he modestly boasts about and which he gets hon. members to ask him about he will be able to show it in the Estimates produced before this House. I find that $3,640,000 are asked for the present year, the highest estimate in the history of the country with the exception of 1896, when it was $25,000 more. So I think that before the Postmaster General can make a claim to exercising economy in the administration of his department he should ask for less money and conduct the affairs in a much more economical manner than he has yet done.

To compensate Mr. Harry Knauf, of the Dead Letter Branch, for technical services as translator of the German and Norse languages, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act., $200

Mr. FOSTER. I want to ask the Postmaster General in reference to the fourth item. Of course it is understood that the third item stands until the details are brought down. Why is this extra sum of $200 given to Mr. Henry Knauf ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I would ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) to allow me to refer to my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) for a moment. I would say to my hon. friend for West York that the figures which he has quoted are not correct figures showing expenditures of the department for the years to which he has alluded. There was a constantly increasing deficit in the department and it increased during the year 1895-96 by the sum of $68,000. I think that is the amount which you will find in the special report of the auditors, Messrs. Cross and Munroe, contained in my report laid on the Table of the House this session. I assume that that deficit had been accumulating during the years in regard to which he has quoted. There was no correct balancing up of accounts or a clearing up of the liabilities so that the apparent expenditure as appearing in the accounts did not indicate the real expenditure.

Mr. WALLACE. What was the amount of that deficit ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The total amount is, I think, $687,000. It had been growing and there was not a correct balancing. However, I do not desire to go into that question. I just wished to answer that part of the hon. gentleman's statement.

Mr. WALLACE. The Postmaster General says that the overlapping accounts amounted to $687,000, and that that extended over a period of years. Could he tell us how much it was in the fiscal year ending 1st of July, 1895 ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. At the end of the fiscal year, 1895, the liability outstanding was $616,000.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Is that what the hon. gentleman called an overdraft ?

Mr. FOSTER. This whole discussion will come up on an item which the hon. gentleman the Postmaster General has in the Estimates for meeting that amount.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Very well, I will not press it. I will inform the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) what is the meaning of this $200. There is in the dead-letter branch a gentleman named Mr. Knauf whose business it is to decipher dead letters. He discharges the ordinary work of a third-class clerk. He is a German, and being familiar with the Norse languages is of special value to the department. He has shown me that it was the intention of the late Postmaster General (Mr. McLennan) to increase his salary by $300 a year. He did increase it $300 one year, but it was not continued as Mr. McLennan left the department.

Mr. FOSTER. What salary has he now ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. $1,000 a year.

Mr. FOSTER. And you are giving him $200 more ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) objects to it, I shall not press it. Mr. LeSueur recognizes him as a most efficient man, and I believe he is of special value. He is not a friend or acquaintance of my own, but he has been a valuable man in the department. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) does not think it a fair proposal, let him say so.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. All I can tell the hon. gentleman is that during my time in the department my information was not exactly the same as that of the hon. gentleman as to this officer deserving an increase. I think it is a very large increase, but the hon. gentleman may have had more information than I had.

Mr. FOSTER. The next item calls for two increases contrary to the Civil Service Act.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Messrs. Lindsay and Smith are in the mail service branch, and they are very efficient officers. I had to make special demands upon their time during the past year and I may say in carrying out the work of their branch they have given me most efficient service. They are not the 4 o'clock men that are sometimes alluded to, but they have practically remained in the department until almost midnight in the discharge of their work.

Mr. SPROULE. What salaries have they now ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Smith has $1,350, and Mr. Lindsay has $2,000 or $2,050. They have certainly done two days work in one.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I may add my testimony to what the Postmaster General has said. These are very efficient officers and are entitled to some consideration.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to make another and probably a final appeal to my hon. friend the Postmaster General to know what he thinks of these additions.

Mr. BENNETT. Perhaps the Postmaster General can explain why two clerks out of his whole department should be rewarded in this way with an addition of $150 each, particularly the one who enjoys a salary of over $2,000 a year. There must be a great many clerks in the department who are getting less than $1,000 a year and surely they should have claims for a little advancement. True, the Postmaster General has said that these men had to work harder than the others. It may be that they have some particular duties to discharge. I will be bound to say that there are many clerks in the department paid under $1,000, who would be delighted to have some special duties assigned to them so that they might get this $150. Would the Postmaster General tell the committee what special work these two gentlemen have recently been so untiringly assiduous in.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Lindsay is superintendent of the mails contract branch and has been in the service for perhaps a quarter of a century. Mr. Smith has been in the service for from 15 to 20 years. Mr. Lindsay is a most valuable officer.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Hear, hear.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not wish to say differently of Mr. Smith, but I speak of Mr. Lindsay first, as superintendent of the branch. He is industrious, efficient, courteous, and most devoted to the public service. I think his services are even underpaid at the salary of $2,050. The same may be said of Mr. Smith.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Hear, hear.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. With regard to the other members of the staff there are nearly 300 in the inside service, and some of them did receive during the past year increases as the result of the votes of last July. The increases which in the ordinary course would have been awarded from 1st of January and the 1st of April, were not granted, because I did not think that these increases, statutory or whatever else you may call them, should follow as a matter of course, but that they should be granted on a special report recommending a particular officer, and not on a mere perfunctory recommendation grafting them all in as has been to some extent the practice. I therefore intend to have a special report with regard to each officer, not to be severe, but simply to grant these rewards in an intelligent way.

Mr. MACLEAN. There is in the post office in Toronto a third class clerk who day after day for many days has been discharging the duties of chief clerk, and chief administrator of that post office. He does all the work, and yet there are a great many other clerks who are his seniors who have received increases year after year, while this young man cannot claim the reward he is entitled to owing to the rules as they are now. If the Postmaster General intends hereafter to pick out the men in the post office service who are entitled to increases, I will back him up in that. In the meantime I would direct his attention to the case of this man which I have mentioned.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Will the hon. gentleman let me know his name.

Mr. MACLEAN. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. The Postmaster General missed the point of my inquiry. I asked, what special services Mr. Lindsay has been affording the country in the past few months. The people of the riding I represent have a commendable amount of curiosity, and they peruse the public accounts with the greatest possible avidity. For instance, they find in this wonderful work—the author of which I would name, if I were able to give him all the credit due for his curiosity in probing it out—they find one contract which was cancelled, and in the carrying out of which, in all kinds of wind and weather a man travelled 32 miles a day with a team of horses for part of the year, for the princely remuneration of $1.50 a day. The Postmaster General, having regard to how far a dollar goes in this country, and the little opportunity that is afforded a man for honest employment, thought that $1.50 a day for a man and one horse, and two horses part of the year, was altogether too much. I think he has been successful in securing the services of a man and a horse to travel the 32 miles for $1.15 a day. This is a very curious man whose contract was cancelled, and he has written me for a copy of the Public Accounts showing the salaries paid, and I will be bound to say, that with that curiosity which dominates in him since his contract has been cancelled, he will want to know how it was that the Postmaster General thought that $1.50 a day was too much for a man with a pair of horses, whilst $7 a day was not sufficient for Mr. Lindsay. I am not complaining that Mr. Lindsay is getting too much, but if the Postmaster General is in on a streak of economy, surely there are several ways in which it might be practised instead of cutting down the services of a man and two horses in this way. It is true the Minister has got the work done for $1.15 per day instead of $1.50, but as it is equally true, that as the new contractor is a good Liberal he tendered low on the expectation that he would get an advance, and an application has already been made to me as to the means and ways he will get that advance. The Postmaster General I expect will have that contract on his hands in a short time. It is but fair for the Postmaster General to tell the House what special services Mr.

Mr. MACLEAN.

Lindsay and Mr. Smith have rendered to entitle them to be picked out for increase to their salaries. I have nothing to say against Mr. Lindsay. I have known him for the past five or six years as a most courteous and obliging official, but his department is largely routine work, and I think he was well paid for it at a salary of $2,100.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The mail contracts in charge of Mr. Lindsay involve an annual expenditure of nearly $900,000, and they amount in number to between eight and nine thousand. During the past year, we have renewed about 600 contracts.

Mr. SPROULE. Renewed or re-let?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Renewed, after advertisement and tender.

Mr. SPROULE. They were re-let.

The POSTMASER GENERAL. Very well. In addition to that work Mr. Lindsay has a great many other details in connection with this branch. There are constant applications for new services and for changes of route, and it is more or less an intricate branch of the service of which he has made a study. He has the mail service of the country at his finger ends, and his services to the department are extremely valuable. Without him it might take at least a couple of efficient men to do the work which he does. The vote before the House is for extra service during the past year, and I may say that Mr. Lindsay with Mr. Smith, has returned to the department almost every night and remained there until midnight. They return back practically every night to the department—he and Mr. Smith; and I think they are certainly well entitled to the small allowance I ask the committee to let them have.

Mr. HAGGART. I have not a word of objection to the amounts given to these three officers; but I think the Postmaster General has made a mistake in selecting three, and his action cannot but excite jealousy in the department. If he had made these increases on some principle, there might have been some justification for them. I have not a word to say against the increases to Mr. Lindsay and Mr. Smith. I know Mr. Smith to be one of the best officers in the department; I know that the Auditor General was anxious to get his services. But we do not find any increase proposed for Mr. Matheson or for Mr. Everett, two heads of branches of the department, and most efficient officers in any civil service in the world. I do not know of any offices requiring more efficiency or more inventive skill than those presided over by these two gentlemen. It must cause jealousy among the officers in the department to see special increases granted to these three officers.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am exceedingly sorry to notice that the system of granting sums of money to civil servants, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, is being continued. In the cases mentioned by the Postmaster General, there may have been exceptional services rendered; but if we are going to continue this system, I think it would be much better to amend the Civil Service Act. I found fault with hon. gentlemen opposite when they practised this system. It appears that every clerk who has any possible excuse upon which to hang a claim for additional salary, makes application and presses it until, eventually, possibly with the assistance of the deputy head, the Minister gives way and the evil continues. I think the Civil Service Act should be amended in some way, so that we shall not be asked every year to pass votes of this kind.

Mr. CARGILL. I would like to know from the Postmaster General on what principle he is proceeding when he proposes to increase the salaries of these civil servants, and, at the same time allows contracts to be let at such very low rates as that to which the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) has just referred, from which a man with a team has been making $1.50 a day. Here we have civil servants who are paid $3,000 a year asking for an increase of salary. In the last general elections the hon. Postmaster General sympathised with the Patrons of Industry, one of whom I had the pleasure of running my election against; and one of the principles laid down by the Patrons of Industry had reference to the salaries paid to the officials in the different counties. They put the case in this way, and it is very hard to meet their arguments. For instance, they say, a man has an investment of $5,000 or $10,000 in a farm and stock. He has three or four sons and daughters, all of whom work on the farm, and at the end of the year, when he totals up the accounts, he finds that he has scarcely sufficient money to pay his taxes. I think that the men who get contracts to carry the mails in different parts of this country at $1.50 a day have a much greater claim on the Government of this country for increased remuneration than the civil servants at Ottawa. I am not questioning at all the efficiency of the civil service at Ottawa, but at the same time I believe they are well paid and they are paid chiefly by the toiling farmers of this country; and I think it is the duty of the Postmaster General and of every member of the Government to consider very seriously the requirements of the agricultural community before coming down here and asking for increases to the salaries of the civil servants.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. Postmaster General stated that these gentlemen who are now to have increases were engaged in working overtime. He has not yet stated the character of the work that was being done by these gentlemen. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if they were engaged at any time in preparing the supplement to the hon. gentleman's report, which I confess has very much the appearance of a campaign sheet.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The preparation of that valuable work was not commenced until a very recent date. I think it was laid upon the Table about the first of this month, and its compilation would probably take a couple of weeks, not more. Prior to that time, these gentlemen were engaged in the work of their department, not only during the day time but also in the evenings. Their work involves the preparation of advertisements, the laying out of routes, correspondence with the inspectors, overhauling contracts, and receiving and opening tenders. Every Friday at 12 o'clock, the tenders are due, and a very large number come in every week and are opened in the presence of two officials—I think these two, or one of them at least. This work probably extends over Friday, Friday night and Saturday. These tenders are sometimes for a bulk sum, sometimes for a trip sum, involving many additions of figures.

Mr. WALLACE. How many clerks in that branch?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I could not say.

Mr. CLANCY. Was that a new class of work which devolved upon these gentlemen or the ordinary routine work? The hon. gentleman has told us that the only new work was the compiling of this very excellent book.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know who compiled it.

Mr. CLANCY. The gentleman who did compile it evidently endeared himself to the hon. gentleman and is now being paid for his service. Was not the work done by these gentlemen the ordinary work performed by them in years past?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They did in one year far more than a year's work. Not only did they deal with the ordinary expiring contracts which were brought to a sudden end and re-let. The work is not mere routine. There is a good deal of routine in it, but also a great deal of head-work is required for the proper management of the work of the branch.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I cannot agree with my hon. friend in claiming the clerks who were employed upon this interesting literary work which the hon. gentleman has laid on the Table. But I would blame the Minister who permitted to be placed on the Table of Parliament private letters having no connection with official life or departmental practice. I do not blame the men who were ordered to do this probably disagreeable work, but the Minister who gave the order.

I wish to call the attention of my hon. friend to the case of the postmaster at Carleton. On the 10th September, 1896, a letter was addressed to John Lefebvre, Esq., postmaster. The letter is as follows:—

A complaint has been made to this department, that during the recent Dominion election you had taken an offensive part as a partisan on behalf of the Conservative candidate in Bonaventure, canvassing during the campaign and on election day, conveying voters to the polls, and using offensive language against the Hon. Mr. Laurier and the Liberal candidate, Mr. Fauvel. It is further alleged, that even since the election, you have continued to use abusive language towards each of these gentlemen. In case you may desire to make any observations as to the correctness or otherwise of this complaint, opportunity is hereby given you, pending further action.

Mr. John Lefebvre could not take advantage of this invitation to answer the complaints because he had died and was buried before the election took place. Consequently, his offensive partisanship cannot have been very considerable. But the letter came into the hands of one Auguste Lefebvre, and he wrote to the Postmaster General stating that John Lefebvre was dead and buried, and that he was acting postmaster, and that if the complaint was intended to apply to him, he had never taken any active part in the election of the 23rd of June, he had never driven or canvassed, and he asked the Postmaster General to grant him an investigation. Well, nothing more was heard from the department until the by-election took place, and the hon. gentleman who so worthily represents the county of Bonaventure, pressed very considerably by his friends, insisted upon Auguste Lefebvre being dismissed. The friends of the hon. gentleman said to him: Time is pressing, tomorrow the vote will be taken, and unless you dismiss Lefebvre, the result may be disastrous. Without any notice to him, and although he had written on the 15th denying the charge and asking an investigation, the day before the election the Inspector came down, Mr. Bolduc, and bundled out the bags and everything else appertaining to the position of postmaster, and transferred them to the house of one Boudreault, a man who cannot read or write but who is a good Liberal. It is important that Boudreault should be, just before the vote is taken, appointed postmaster in the place of Lefebvre. The inspector, after going over the office and looking into the books, found everything in the best possible order. There was no complaint against Mr. Auguste Lefebvre, but the place was wanted for somebody else. Mr. Lefebvre is one of the best citizens in the locality, and a merchant, and like all country merchants is not rich, but an honest, honourable man, and his dismissal without charge or investigation should be resented by every honest man in the Dominion.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the Postmaster General as to these two men, Smith and Lindsay. I understood him to say that the only work they did outside of their regular work in the department, was to compile this valuable report that we have before us. This work, the Minister told us, occupied two weeks. He seems to be paying them pretty liberally for that work—at the rate of $75 a week.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They did a great deal more than the ordinary work of the department that they would be called to perform, for the reasons I have mentioned. In reply to my hon. friend from Three Rivers (Sir Adolphe Caron), as to why Mr. Auguste Lefebvre was relieved from the position of postmaster, I will say that the notice to him happened to be addressed to Jean Lefebvre, but it was received by Auguste Lefebvre and accepted as intended for him. The reason for the mistake, as I am informed by the officers of the department, was that the name had not been changed in the postal guide since the transfer of the post office from the deceased Jean to Auguste. But, as I have said, no prejudice resulted, as the notice was accepted by August Lefebvre and replied to by him.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In the way I have said?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He replied denying the statement. The removal was made on a statement presented by the late Mr. Fauvel.

Mr. BERGERON. What was the charge?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Fauvel's letter was as follows:—

I beg to own receipt of your communication of the 17th past, inclosing a letter from the postmaster at Carleton, county of Bonaventure, re charges of his doings in the past election. It is nothing less than I expected from him, and I can only re-echo my recent charges, backed up by memo. from Mr. P. E. Perron, civil engineer, of Carleton, who is now in this city.

I, therefore, ask for the removal of the post office from Mr. Lefebvre, and recommend Mr. Joseph Boudreau for the position.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Is that a letter from Mr. Fauvel?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is a copy of the letter of Mr. Fauvel, the original of which is in the department. There was evidently an earlier letter, because he refers to it, and I do not find it here. There is a letter also of the 2nd November, 1896:

Before leaving Ottawa, I sent you a declaration from Mr. P. A. Perron, of Carleton, giving the details for the removal of A. Lefebvre as postmaster at Carleton, P.Q. Since then I have had no acknowledgment of the receipt.

This, it will be observed, was on the 2nd November, 1896. The removal of Auguste Lefebvre took place, I think, in March of this year.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The day before the by-election.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Very well, have it that way.

Of all the most obnoxious partisans against us during the late and previous elections, Mr. Lefebvre was, I may say, the worst, and I should deem it a special favour that he should be removed as soon as possible. He has repudiated, by letter, the accusations that I had previously placed before you, but this does not amount to much, as the greatest criminals in the courts of justice will invariably plead not guilty.

Mr. Fauvel accompanied these letters of 1st October with the statement of Mr. Perron, who lives at Carleton, and who says:

At the request of Mr. W. LeB. Fauvel, I have the honour to place before you the following facts with reference to the postmaster at Carleton. Mr. Auguste Lefebvre, the present postmaster at Carleton, is the son of Jean Lefebvre, who resigned his position on the 1st June.

I will omit a part that seems to have no reference to the subject.

During the last electoral struggle, in the post office and before many persons, one of the postmaster's brothers-in-law spoke infamously against Mr. Laurier, —

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Why did you not dismiss the brother-in-law?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Have patience.

—branding him as a renegade, and saying that he trampled upon Christ himself. Infamies of this kind were repeated every day before the Liberals. During the whole time of the struggle the post office was the place of rendezvous for the Conservatives, the place where they met to organize for the fight. On the eve of the nomination, Auguste Lefebvre himself went to Dalhousie for Hon. L. Philippe Pelletier and other speakers, and on the morning of the nominations he accompanied the Conservative candidate to the house of the returning officer. Since the election, his children have called their animals by the name of Fauvel, &c. The post office is far from being a secret place. If a letter is sent or received from a political leader, all the Conservatives know it immediately. For some years, registered letters have been stolen at the post office.

And so on. Mr. Fauvel, at all events, believed that assertion to be correct, and he further asserted of his own knowledge concerning this officer: "Of all the most obnoxious partisans against us during the late and preceding elections, Mr. Lefebvre was, I may say, the worst." On the 13th March, 1897—that is the day before the voting, my hon. friend (Sir Adolphe Caron) says:

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Hear, hear.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Two other members, the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Savard) and the hon. member from Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) gave me their word by telegram as follows:—

Postmaster Lefebvre, of Carleton, has been violent partisan. Replace him by Joseph Boudreau.
(Sgd.) P. V. SAVARD.
(Sgd.) O. E. TALBOT.

On the statement of hon. gentlemen who are here to explain for themselves, I considered the case fully established, as I accepted the word of these gentlemen, and acted accordingly.

Mr. WALLACE. I believe that the increase to these two gentlemen, Mr. Lindsay and Mr. Smith is totally unjustifiable. This is not an honorarium for a service rendered this year, but it a permanent increase of salary of $300 per annum.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, it is not permanent.

Mr. WALLACE. It says: "To provide an addition of $150 each to the salaries of A. Lindsay and W. Smith, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act." The hon. gentleman said, a while ago, they had to obey the law. Why did not they obey the law in this case? That is proposing to violate the law, and asking Parliament to consent to it, or to make a new law applicable to these two gentlemen. He says Mr. Lindsay is affable, polite, industrious, and so on. I presume that we have hundreds in the civil service who are so. I know there are men in the Department of Customs who, during the three years that I was there, came back almost every night to work, and I will venture to say, worked longer hours than either Mr. Lindsay or Mr. Smith, and did not get $150 increase contrary to law. They were not asked to do any dirty work, either. I contend this increase is for all the time they may be in the service. I presume it is not the intention to decrease their salaries next year. Now, I wish to call attention to another matter. I heard a prominent official in the Post Office Department, some time ago, say there had not been a dismissal in the post office for political reasons for forty years. He could not say that now, because there have been dismissals by the score, by the hundreds, perhaps. We do not know how many, because sometimes there are investigations, and sometimes they are dismissed without any investigation. In my opinion, the postmasters of this country are a class which should not be dealt with as civil servants are. A member of the civil service gets a salary sufficient for his maintenance, and gets increases as the years go on, if he proves efficient, and he is superannuated at the end of his time. Postmasters are not in that position; they cannot be superannuated. They receive small salaries, ranging from $20 up to $100, and sometimes $400 or $500. They are not in the same class; therefore, I claim that they should be left free and untrammelled, and that was the rule until the present Postmaster General assumed that office. Take a case that has come under my own knowledge, in the west riding of York. Mr. J. P. Rupert, when I was a candidate in one of the election campaigns, was president of the Reform Association of the west riding of York. He conducted the campaign, and did all the duties pertaining to the presidency of the Liberal Association. He arranged for the meetings; he organized the campaign, and did all that work, and did it exceedingly well. He was likewise, during all that time, and for years afterwards, postmaster in the village of Maple, a position worth some hundreds of dollars per year. But I never made any attempt to have him removed, because I did not think that I had any right to interfere with him. He was performing his duties of postmaster properly, and that is all the department could require of him. I know some persons said that he was a Government officer, and should not interfere in politics. But that was not my feeling, and I did not see any reason why he should not take an active part, if he desired to do so. That was the rule that obtained until the present Postmaster General assumed that office. Now, without a moment's warning, a rule is made that has never been recognized before, a rule that any man, if he only receives $20 a year, keeping a post office, not for his own benefit, but for the accommodation of the neighbourhood, as many hundreds and thousands of postmasters do, the Postmaster General says to these men: You are not to interfere in politics; you are permitted to vote, but that is the extent of your interference. I say, such a regulation is entirely unauthorized, that it is improper, that the Postmaster General has no right to assume that power. The letter read by the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Adolphe Caron) shows that the Postmaster General has written letters to men, saying that they have no right to take an active part in an election. What is to prevent a postmaster from doing so? Is there any law or regulation prohibiting postmasters from taking part in elections in this country? Of course, I do not refer to city postmasters, who are on the civil service list, but to those ten thousand postmasters throughout the country who are not on the civil service list. Is there any regulation prohibiting those men from interfering in politics?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are many obligations upon people in life for which you may not be able to point to any direct law compelling them. Public officers such as postmasters, I think, take office on an understanding that they will maintain political neutrality and keep aloof from political struggles. It is impliedly part of the conditions on which they assume the office. There is no law saying that a member of the permanent inside service should not take part in a political struggle, but the impropriety of it would be recognized.

Mr. WALLACE. There is a written obligation so far as the civil service is concerned; authorities have laid it down, precedent has established it, the rule is recognized, that a member of the civil service is not to take an active part in political matters. But no such rule exists with regard to these postmasters, or has ever existed in this country. The Postmaster General says there are unwritten obligations that are recognized in respect to postmasters. I say no such obligations have ever been recognized, from the fact that, until he came into office, there has been no dismissal of a postmaster for forty years in this country for political reasons.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman is speaking without full knowledge of the facts. The postmaster of the city of Hull, Mr. Loucks, was dismissed without a moment's warning, after the election of 1878, for political reasons.

Mr. Fiset. In Rimouski and Matane, postmasters were dismissed for the same reason.

Mr. WALLACE. Was the postmaster of Hull in the civil service?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He was postmaster in the city of Hull, the same as the other ten thousand the hon. gentleman refers to.

Mr. WALLACE. The postmaster in a city gets a salary, and is in the civil service. Hull being a city, the postmaster of that city is in the civil service.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The postmaster at Hull is on the same basis, as far as the office is concerned, as the postmaster in the smallest office in Canada. It is not a city post office.

Mr. WALLACE. I can say that the statement was made to me by a high official in the Post Office Department who knew and who ought to know, and it has been generally recognized. When the present Postmaster General went out on his various political campaigns, he gave it out to the postmasters that they must not interfere in elections. In North Grey, I know that he did so.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. He cannot know it.

Mr. WALLACE. I know that the hon. gentleman interviewed a postmaster not far from Owen Sound and gave him a warning that he must not take an active part in the political campaign.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I never gave any such warning to any living man.

Mr. WALLACE. The statement was made to me in Owen Sound. I was there at the time, and I know that the Postmaster General was making himself very busy visiting postmasters. I know that a postmaster visited him there.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I must again correct the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace). He must not mistake anything. I made no visit to any postmaster, though I may say that when I was in Owen Sound the postmaster of that place called upon me as any gentleman might, and I treated him as I would any gentleman. I did not order him out of my presence. I never interviewed or communicated directly or indirectly with any postmaster there during the political campaign.

Mr. WALLACE. We will have to accept the hon. gentleman's statement, but he cannot deny that he has dismissed a large number of postmasters without holding an investigation. The case that has been cited here is one of very many that have occurred.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The discussion is out of order.

Mr. WALLACE. This is a nice time of the day, Mr. Chairman, to tell me that I am out of order. I am very glad you called my attention to it, because I have just finished my remarks.

Lachine Canal enlargement..... $216,000

Mr. FOSTER. What we wanted on this item were the names of the officers on these different canals who have been dismissed, and the names of those who have been appointed in their places.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will hand to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) a statement.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will see that this is very bulky, and it is difficult even to cursorily analyse the statement off-hand. Perhaps my hon. friend had better go to some other of his items until we have a chance to look this over.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no objection.

Railways—

Intercolonial—To complete the Dartmouth branch .....	$25,000
To supply and erect clock on tower of station at St. John.....	500

Mr. HAGGART. Perhaps the hon. gentleman the Minister of Railways and Canals will be kind enough to state for the information of the committee the state of efficiency in which the Intercolonial Railway road-bed and rolling stock now are. I saw a statement in the press, and perhaps the hon. gentleman will give an explanation of it. The statement was that the revenue and expenditure of the Intercolonial had been brought pretty nearly to a balance on account of the degradation of the road-bed and the rolling stock. I wish to know from the hon. gentleman and from the officers of his department, what state of efficiency the Intercolonial is in at present, both in regard to the road-bed and the rolling stock, as compared with any prior time.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman will probably find that information in the report which has been laid on the Table, at all events up to the end of the last fiscal year. I have no later data. I think that I perhaps could say that the Intercolonial is not in any less state of efficiency nor is its condition in any less satisfactory state now than it was at the close of the fiscal year ending 30th June last.

Mr. HAGGART. No, that is not satisfactory. I think that in the report there is a general statement that the road-bed and the rolling stock are in a very efficient state. I may say that when I was at the head of the department I gave strict orders to the officers who had charge of the Intercolonial Railway that neither the road-bed nor the rolling stock was to be in any way degraded, that they were to be kept up in a most efficient condition, and the hon. gentleman must know from the officers of the department whether this was carried out after the time that I left and whether the road is in as efficient a state as to any prior time. The Minister has his deputy there and he can ask him whether the statements I make are correct or not.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not going to say, from personal knowledge, that the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) is not correct. I have made no remark with reference to the condition of the Intercolonial Railway as the hon. gentleman left it, reflecting upon its condition, and I do not see why the hon. gentleman should assume that I did so.

Mr. HAGGART. I am not saying that you did.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not at all reflecting on the hon. gentleman's management of the railway.

Mr. HAGGART. I see the hon. gentleman does not intend to answer that question. I see from the debates that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) stated a few days ago that during the last general election in June there were 400 more men employed than were usual. He made the comparison at the period which did not correspond with the period of the preceding year. I now tell the House and the Minister of Railways, that no official of my department, and no official of the Intercolonial got orders or even a hint from me, to employ any persons but those absolutely necessary for the road, on account of political or any other purposes. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair), when he made that statement, had Mr. Pottinger, the superintendent of the Intercolonial Railway, and he had the deputy of his department, he had them to refer to to prove the incorrectness of the statement he made, that any one was employed on the Intercolonial Railway for political purposes.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have given personal attention for several years to the enormous number of employees on the Intercolonial Railway, and I submitted to the House a comparative statement of the employees of the Intercolonial Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, which showed that far more men were employed per mile on the Intercolonial Railway than on either of the other two. It is admitted on all hands that the Intercolonial Railway has been over-manned for years, and I am glad that the Minister of Railways has announced that he has dismissed a large number of employees, and thus relieved the country of an enormous drain for supporting this road.

Mr. COCHRANE. It will be like the Customs Department; they will weed out some and appoint more.

Cornwall Canal..... $145,600

Mr. HAGGART. The Sheik's Island dam on the Cornwall Canal is now about to be completed. Has the Minister any reports in his department on this. I believe the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) visited that place himself, and I would like him to state whether he thinks that work is for the benefit of the public or whether the expenditure on it is also for the advantage of the country.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I presume the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) was advised by the officers of his department that the work done on the Cornwall Canal was necessary and proper. I am not going to make any assault upon the policy which the hon. gentleman pursued in that regard. He appears to be very anxious that I should assail him.

Mr. HAGGART. Not at all.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no desire to do it. I can assure my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) that I am not going to be drawn, at this moment, into any criticism of the course he pursued, nor do I think that he ought to insist upon me expressing very high commendation. I am willing to leave his work as he directed it to be done, and as it was done, and I am content to pass no opinion upon it one way or the other. I think he ought to be perfectly willing that I should assume that attitude.

Mr. HAGGART.

Mr. BRITTON. In this vote there is a claim of $600 for interest, which matured in 1887. If it was a just claim it would appear to one not acquainted with the facts that it should be paid by the late Government.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have carefully considered this matter, and I have come to the conclusion that that $600 ought to be paid to Mr. Smith. The claim is of long standing, but it is one that should not be prejudiced by reason of the delay in paying it. Mr. Smith was adjudged a considerable amount for land damages, but he refused to accept the principal as a final settlement of his claim, contending that he was entitled to interest from the time the property was practically expropriated by the Crown. Others under similar circumstances had been paid interest. The matter dragged along until the interest increased to about $1,200. It remained unadjusted until the change of Government, when an Order in Council was passed by the late Government on the 8th July, 1896, giving Mr. Smith half the interest which he claimed. He then refused to take it, but recently he has expressed his willingness to accept the $600 in full payment for his claim for interest. The amount ought to be paid him.

Mr. HAGGART. I am not finding fault with this, but Mr. Smith gave a conveyance in full to the Government for $4,000. Perhaps he had a mental reservation in his mind at the time about interest. He claimed the interest from me. But my answer was, here is your conveyance for the money you agreed to take. I suppose that was your intention at the time you agreed to it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know Mr. Smith personally, except that I have met him since this matter came up. The sum was offered to him, and he was told that unless he accepted it on the terms offered, that is, without interest, he would not get his money, and he accepted it. The hon. gentleman has forgotten that he did not maintain the attitude he has stated he maintained, because he himself recommended it to Council, and on the strength of his recommendation, Council passed an order on the 8th of July, 1896, for the payment to Mr. Smith of $600. He has quite overlooked that fact, but that is the fact.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not remember anything of the kind. If the hon. gentleman has it there, with my signature, it is correct; but I do not remember that I recommended any such Order in Council.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not the Order in Council, but I know that it was passed on the 8th of July, I presume on the recommendation of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SNETSINGER. Does the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) remember giving the contract for Sheik's Dam without a tender ?

Mr. HAGGART. I do not remember anything of the kind. I remember that on the recommendation of the officers of my department I granted an extension to a contractor who had the contract already, and at the lowest price.

Mr. SNETSINGER. The contract was given to Gilbert & Sons for that section.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Perhaps the hon. gentleman can settle the question by stating whether he was Minister of Railways on the 8th of July, 1896.

Mr. HAGGART. I may have been Minister, but I may not have been there. It is very likely some one was acting Minister at the time. I do not remember that I signed anything of the kind. It is possible I did, but I have no recollection of it.

Sault Ste. Marie Canal—

To pay wages of employees whilst unoccupied owing to delays for which the Electric Company were not responsible..... $ 624

Construction..... 80,000

To pay Contractors Hugh Ryan & Co. the cost of pulling down and rebuilding timber wall in prism of canal, &c. 5,796

Mr. HAGGART. I suppose the $80,000 is to pay the balance of the claim of Mr. Ryan ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, this is to pay the Ryan firm.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it would be a very appropriate time for the hon. Minister to give some information with regard to the men who have been dismissed from the Sault Ste. Marie Canal. Some time ago when I asked him about them, his answer was that these men were considered as being employed only during the season of navigation, and when they were put off at the end of the season it did not necessarily follow that they would be employed again. I see that in the list handed to us to-night, out of the thirty-seven men put off there were only three re-employed. My information from some of these men is that they were dismissed without any complaint, political or otherwise, being made against them, and without receiving any information as to why they were dismissed. I would like to know on what grounds the hon. Minister has dismissed them? If on political grounds, it seems to me a very extraordinary course; if because he is adopting a new principle, of dismissing all the employes along the canal at the end of the season. I am sure he is not adopting a course which will meet with the approval of the country. There is no doubt that men leave the employ of the Government as they leave the employ of private individuals, with a good reputation or a bad one. If a man is dismissed and no reason is given for his dismissal, it will naturally be assumed by some people that he has been dismissed for not doing his duty, and this might interfere with his getting employment elsewhere. I think the Minister should tell us why he has dismissed and whether he gave them an opportunity, previous to their dismissal, to defend themselves or to refute any charges which were perhaps unjustly brought against them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is applying the rule to the cases of persons who are only employed temporarily, that is to say, only so long as their services are required for the season, and when the season is over and the canal is closed, they are no longer in the Government employ, and it is open to the Government in the following season to select any men for that season. There is no similarity between the cases of the men thus employed and the men who are in the civil service. I think the hon. gentleman himself will recognize that a very great distinction exists.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. gentleman follow the same rule with the employees of this House, such as sessional clerks and sessional messengers, who are only employed for each year, but come back in the following year ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They are probably in the civil service. You cannot class men employed temporarily in the capacity of labourers with men in the civil service. When the hon. gentleman says that only two of the men have been re-employed during the current year, of those who were employed last year, he is in error. He will find on looking over the list that a considerably greater number than that have been re-employed. The staff on the Sault Ste. Marie Canal was to a considerable extent reorganized. A number of men were dropped out. We proposed to get along with a smaller staff than has been customary on that canal. The reorganization of those in the higher class of employment on the canal has also been very carefully arranged for. We have considerably reduced the cost of maintaining the service on that canal, as we have on some of the others. Some of the men were unquestionably exceedingly offensive in their conduct during the election.

Mr. SPROULE. Which of them ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There were quite a few. The hon. member who represents that constituency could throw some light on that question. I confess I did allow myself to be guided very largely by the knowledge and recommendations of that hon. gentleman with regard to those employed.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it in the interests of the service that men who have become familiar with the work should be dismissed and others put in their place? The list of dismissals and appointments was laid on the Table only a few minutes before these Estimates were submitted, no doubt lest we might otherwise have time to go into an analysis of it, but a rapid glance over it shows that men who have been doing the work year after year and who expected to be taken on this year again at the opening of navigation, were ruthlessly left aside and others appointed. Such a course was not followed in the past. Is it not a fact that on the canals the same men were re-employed year after year, and that, in pursuance of this understanding, these men have bought lots and built houses in the vicinity of their work, which they would not have done had they considered themselves liable to be not called upon again once their season's work was over. Take one man who was dismissed, on the Sault Ste. Marie Canal, he has only one limb, but did the work satisfactorily, and there is no information that he took any part in the election, or even voted, and it does seem a most inhuman thing to dismiss such a man as that. Then, with regard to the other parties dismissed, I would like to have the names of those who were considered offensive partisans and the name of the member who represented the riding and on whose representations they were dismissed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They were not dismissed.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, they were not re-employed, and it amounts to the same thing.

Mr. HAGGART. This is the first time in our history that any such policy as the hon. gentleman has introduced has been pursued. Every employee on the canal formerly was appointed by Order in Council, on the understanding that he would be kept on during good behaviour. There has been just the opposite policy introduced on the Soo Canal. The hon. gentleman said the reductions were made there for the purpose of economy. Well, there were thirty-two employees in all, and he has twenty-eight at present. He discharged every one of the old employees but two. He discharged thirty without inquiring whether they had been active partisans or incompetent or not. He altered a policy that has been pursued in this country ever since confederation. The lockmen on the canal were always appointed by Order in Council, and the same men kept on from season to season. We even took over from the Imperial Government all those who were on the Rideau Canal, and I am glad to see that the common sense possessed by my hon. friend from North Leeds (Mr. Frost) prevented his advising the dismissal of these men, for he knew the feeling that would be caused in that section if those old soldiers, who have been some forty or forty-five years in the employ of the Government had been treated in the supercilious manner in which the Minister of Railways treats employees from one end of the country to the other. Such a disgraceful condition of affairs never existed before—taking the bread from the mouths of the poor men in this country, who were appointed on the understanding, an understanding which has always been adhered to previously, that they would be retained during good behaviour. This gentleman, however, sends a letter to each of his political supporters, notably the hon. member for North Leeds (Mr. Frost), inclosing a list of every man employed on the canal, in his country, and gives him the option of either dismissing them or keeping on as many as he likes. Is that the policy which should be pursued by the head of a large department such as the Railway Department? The country will remember it. There is no advantage to be gained by conduct of that kind. Never was there any question raised by any previous Minister of Railways and Canals whether a man was a political partisan or not, so long as he did his work well. He owed his appointment, no doubt, to the fact that he was a political supporter of the party in power, but wholesale dismissals such as the hon. gentleman has made are the first in the history of the country, and I venture to say that no such disgraceful episode will again occur in its history as the dismissal of these men.

Mr. DYMENT. I know something with regard to these new appointments on the Soo Canal, and why the old hands were not taken on again. I am very much surprised to hear gentlemen of the long experience of the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) and the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart), who had a list of these employed in front of them, get up and make the bald statement that there are only two of the old men kept on.

Mr. HAGGART. I take it from the list furnished by the Minister of Railways and Canals. On that list there are twenty-eight new appointments on the canal and two of the old hands kept on. If there is anything wrong, it is in the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, which the hon. gentleman can see for himself.

Mr. DYMENT. To begin with, Superintendent Boyd is still there.

Mr. LISTER. He should be removed.

Mr. DYMENT. The next one I see is Mr. Taylor, the chief electrician. The next is Mr. Hill, the assistant electrician. I come down to John Gilbertson, the diver. These are the important positions with the big pay. Further on is Mr. McRae.

Mr. SPROULE. Look at McRae and see if the initials are the same?

Mr. DYMENT. In the one case it is C. W. McRae and in the other it is C. McRae. Then there is Breckman and J. Arnold. That, I think, makes seven or eight of the old hands retained. These are all I see here. There are two others who are not here, who were put on by the superintendent. There were five struck off. The staff was reduced by five. But recently it was found absolutely necessary to put on an oiler at night. So that makes four less than there were last year. These four and the nine still there make thirteen. Several of them, as the Minister of Railways and Canals says, were strong partisans.

Mr. SPROULE. Who ?

Mr. DYMENT. Mr. Brown, for instance, who attended the convention. And when he was asked to support Mr. Hearst, who was a great friend of his, he almost weepingly said: William, I would like to vote for you at this convention, but I must vote for George. George had the patronage. Mr. Williamson is another case. And there is another one who is not on this year, but who held the important position of chief foreman on the canal last year. I took the trouble to inquire in the Marine Department to-day, and I was told by the official in charge that this man was a defaulter to the Government in about $1,300

Mr. SPROULE. Was that put in against him ?

Mr. DYMENT. I think it is a sufficient reason for not continuing him in the employ of the Government.

Mr. SPROULE. Was it brought to the attention of the Government ?

Mr. DYMENT. As a matter of fact, the Marine Department was going to prosecute him and he skipped to the United States.

Mr. SPROULE. Was it because he was a defaulter or because you recommended his dismissal that he was dismissed ?

Mr. DYMENT. I think that a defaulter to one department of the Government should not be continued in the employ of any other department.

Mr. SPROULE. But was that considered.

Mr. LISTER. Would you have taken him on again ?

Mr. DYMENT. Another man who was on last year but is not on this year has been suspended several times by the superintendent, Mr. Boyd, and another man had been suspended by Mr. Boyd a couple of times for drunkenness. I do not think that such men should be taken on. Ten of them never applied to me or to anybody to be employed. They recognized that they were employed for the season and did not expect to go on again. It seems to me, hon. gentlemen opposite who are so solicitous for their friends in the matter of mail contracts ought not to find fault with us if in the case of these who were not permanent employees, we recommended those whom we preferred. I do not think the Minister of Railways and Canals has done wrong. A number were left on, because it was thought that there should be enough of the old hands to ensure the efficient running of the canal; and I am informed by the officials here that it never worked better.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. What about the man referred to by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) who had only one limb out of the four ?

Mr. DYMENT. He was night-watchman, and I do not think he was a fit man for that position. He could not run and tell anybody if a fire occurred. The mere fact that he is a cripple was not a sufficient reason for keeping him in a place the duties of which he could not perform efficiently.

Mr. SPROULE. I can only say that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Dymont) has made a painful exhibition of the use of the authority he possesses, a painful exhibition for a young man—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SPROULE. It may be a laughing matter to men who are well off in the world; but, when a man has to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow and has lost one limb out of the four, for that man to be kicked out by a man who has got plenty in the world and is operating on the timber belonging to the country and practically filling his pockets, I say is inhuman. Now, with regard to the statement that the hon. gentleman made that some of the men who were dismissed were guilty of partisanship, one of these was Mr. T. A. Brown. I have known Mr. Brown for twenty years, and I would take his word as ready as I would take that of any man in the country, and I have his emphatic denial that he took any part in the election. Would it be reasonable, I would ask the hon. gentleman himself, considering that the election took place on the 30th of June, a week after the general elections, when the Conservatives were defeated—would it be common sense for these men to take part in the election knowing that they might be dismissed? Mr. Brown tells me that he did not take any part in the election, and that he was dismissed without any charge being made against him so far as he knows.

Mr. LISTER. They were not dismissed.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon gentleman (Mr. Lister) is merely quibbling. Men had been on the canals in this country for forty years and the custom of the country had been to re-employ them, but at the opening of one season when they were prepared to resume their work, they are told that their services are not required. If that is not dismissal, I do not know what it is. I think the hon. member for Algoña (Mr. Dymont) is exercising an authority that it would be well, in so young a man, not to exercise. He is just commencing his political career; he is just building a reputation for himself which will not be to his credit. He complains that I did not give the number of those appointed. I say that I had not an opportunity of seeing that list. Information is retained until the very moment it is required for the discussion of items before us, and then it is thrown at us. I say that it is unfair to the members of the House that they should not have an opportunity to get the information that is necessary in order to defend their friends who are unjustly assailed and dismissed without inquiry. The leader of the Government (Sir Wilfred Laurier) stated in my hearing that no man in the public service would be dismissed without having a fair chance to defend himself against any charge brought against them.

Mr. LISTER. They were not dismissed.

Mr. SPROULE. I say they were dismissed. There is no other word in the English language that will describe the treatment they received. They were dismissed without trial.

Mr. DYMENT. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman a question. If the tables were turned, and his side was in power, would he recommend the re-appointment of these men?

Mr. SPROULE. Certainly I would.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SPROULE. Hon. members laugh. They are laughing in a sneering way that is not becoming. I have been in this House for nineteen years, and when pressure was put upon me—now I am giving a personal history—to dismiss some of the postmasters one of whom hounded me throughout the riding and abused me on the platform, I never asked for his dismissal. I went to Sir John Macdonald and asked him what was the custom, and he said that so long as a man did his duty as an officer it was unusual to ask for his dismissal. And he remained 12 or 14 years longer in that office until he resigned it voluntarily. I refer to Mr. Middleton, of Dundalk. The hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) knows him. I can give two or three instances of the same kind; but in no case did I ever ask for the dismissal of a man in my riding for political partisanship or any other reason, so long as he did his work faithfully.

To pay Contractor Archibald Stewart for loss caused by stoppage of work on sections 1 and 2 of the Soulanges Canal.... $17,345

Mr. SPROULE.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I wish to add the following words to that item:—"Notwithstanding that the said amount is not legally recoverable by the contractor under the strict legal interpretation of the contract." Now, with regard to this item, I may say that it is the sum which it has been concluded that Mr. Stewart is entitled to by reason of actual loss caused him by stoppage of the work upon sections one and two of his contract on the Soulanges Canal. A very strong opinion was given by the engineer in charge of that work, that the stone which was being supplied by the contractor was unfit for use on the canal, and did not properly comply with the specifications of the contract. This occurred before I entered upon the duties of the department, and, upon the opinion of the engineer being received by the gentleman who was acting as Minister of Railways at the time, instructions were given to stop the work. It was felt that, if the opinion of the engineer was correct and this stone was unsuitable, it ought not to be allowed to be put into the work any longer; and it was thought proper to have an immediate investigation into the whole matter. Opinion, I believe, was invited. Experts were sent down for the purpose of examining the stone. Some of them reported favourably, and some condemned the stone. Other experts were sent, a good deal of delay occurred, and a great difference of opinion was found to exist among those who were supposed to be competent to form a judgment upon a question of that kind; and it became a very serious question as to what ought to be done. It would, of course, be a most disastrous thing if stone which was unfit for that work, should be allowed to be put into it. Naturally, a good deal of delay occurred in reaching a conclusion as to whether the engineer in charge of the works was right, or the chief engineer of the department, who pronounced in favour of the stone. Ultimately it was determined that the engineer in charge of the work was not justified in condemning the whole stone. Some of the stone, it was decided, was unsuitable for the work, and some of it was suitable. The quarry itself did contain, it was decided, proper stone for use, while, of course, it contained a good deal that would not answer the purpose. The decision arrived at, therefore, was, that the general condemnation which had been pronounced by the engineer in charge, was too broad, and that the work ought not to be stopped, that a portion of the stone which he had got out could very properly be put into the work, and the ultimate decision was in accordance with that view. Before the final conclusion had been reached and the contractor was notified, he had been delayed a long period. I think some three months elapsed before the matter was ultimately decided. His machinery was kept idle, and a number of his hands were kept unemployed. A good deal of expense was incurred, and, as a result, a claim was preferred by him against the department for a very large sum, as damages resulting from the stoppage of the work. That claim was looked into by the chief engineer very closely. I think the gross amount of the claim which he preferred, was $51,000. He gave items showing upon what he based this claim. After a careful investigation of the different items, it was ultimately decided that he could properly ask for $17,345 as the loss which he personally sustained resulting from the stoppage of the work during this period. The matter was referred to the Governor in Council, a report of all the circumstances of the case was presented to Council, who concluded upon recommending that this sum be paid to him.

Mr. HAGGART. I have no doubt that the claim is a just one. The question arose when I was Minister of Railways, as to whether the stone was suitable for the work or not. The engineer in charge of the work objected to the stone. I told the deputy of my department, the chief engineer, to inquire into it particularly. He got an expert from the Intercolonial Railway, a man who had been a bridge builder for a number of years on the Intercolonial Railway, and several other parties, to inquire as to the character of the stone. They also got a technical report, either furnished by the contractor himself, or furnished directly by an expert in McGill College, where the stone was tested. The consensus of opinion was, that the stone was of an excellent quality and fit for the work. I know the engineer in charge of the work objected to it, but he had not sufficient reason for objecting to it. I think the Minister was perfectly right in his course, and the application is a just one. I think the stone is probably as good as can be found in Canada for that work. But what I object to is, that an officer in charge of an important work, like the Soulages Canal, when the stone was cut under his direction, where he had a report of every day's stone cutting, although he objected to the quality of the stone in the first instance, he never made any objection afterwards; and that, on account of the crassness of this gentleman, the country is put to an expense of over $17,000, by reason of delay caused the contractor in putting into his work material which was as good as could be furnished, perhaps, in Canada.

Mr. LISTER. I do not think the engineer should be condemned in the language that my hon. friend has used. He must not forget that other men, experts in that sort of thing, examined this stone and condemned it.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not know who they are.

Mr. LISTER. Men who have been working in stone for years and years; and there is still grave doubt, after all the examination, whether the stone being put into that canal is proper for the purpose.

Trent Canal—Construction..... $250,000

Mr. BENNETT. The importance of this undertaking must be my excuse for addressing to the House a few remarks at this late hour and at this late stage of the session, on this question. I do not propose to go into the Trent Valley work as a whole, it has been so often dealt with in this House. But I do complain that the Minister has not dealt with the construction of the work in that generous spirit, in that fair spirit, that we, who reside along this route, hoped and desired he would do. Now, of this work, as I understand it, two sections are under contract. There is, first, the section between Lakefield and Peterborough; then, going west, there is the section between Balsalm Lake and Lake Simcoe. Last fall, when the Minister pursued the very commendable course of going over the route and seeing it for himself, I will not say that he led those who heard him in the town of Peterborough, at the banquet given in his honour, to believe that the section between Kirkfield and Lake Simcoe would be proceeded with at once. But I rather think that the statement which was made on that occasion inclined people to the belief that that would be undertaken this year. Now the position of the matter is this. To-day there is an uninterrupted water communication from a point about fifteen miles from Lake Ontario to the town of Peterborough. After leaving Peterborough there is this section of nine miles under contract, and part of the amount of $650,000 which is placed in the Estimates for this year is to be applied to the final completion of that section. From there to Balsam Lake there is an uninterrupted water communication and under the contract which was let in that vicinity by the late Government there is water communication to within six miles of Lake Simcoe. That is when this Kirkfield section shall have been completed. I think the Minister of Railways and Canals fairly led those people who heard him last year to believe that the construction would be completed to Lake Simcoe from Kirkfield. There is water communication from within fifteen miles of Lake Ontario clear through to Lake Simcoe, and yet there remains seven miles of that uncompleted, and we are disappointed to find it that the Minister is not asking that the remaining portion should be placed under contract this year. I think in view of the large grants that are being made from one end of the Dominion to the other that the Liberal members who have constituencies along the route of this canal, and who are deeply anxious to have this work completed, should have pressed upon the Government the necessity of providing for the completion of the work between Kirkfield and Lake Simcoe. There are along the route of the canal half a dozen constituencies represented by supporters of the Government, and while they would spend millions in Quebec and British Columbia they sit quietly by and are not able to exert the influence which ought to be brought to bear upon the Government in order to secure the necessary grant for the completion of this work. I do not intend to deal with the work as to its national or local importance, but so much money has been spent and as the late Government as well as the present one have acknowledged the desirability of the construction of the canal there can at this late stage be no looking back. I think that members from Ontario have been remiss in their duty in not asking the Minister to insist upon the Government making a further appropriation this year. I know that some years ago it was a matter of some difficulty to prevail upon the then Administration to undertake the commencement of the work. There had been portions of the work connected locally, but the late Government having undertaken the construction of the sections between Lakefield and Peterborough and Kirkfield and Balsam Lake it would be a small matter to go on and complete the remaining sections between Kirkfield and Lake Simcoe. In the Main Estimates there is a sum of $650,000 and in the Supplementary Estimates $150,000. Is the $150,000 included in the $650,000?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The $150,000 is to pay for that portion of the work that we expect will be completed before the end of the fiscal year. The amount in the general Estimates for 1897 is for the work that will be completed under existing contracts.

Mr. BENNETT. Then no new contracts are being entered into in the year 1897, and the money that is appropriated is simply to complete contracts now in existence for the sections from Lakefield to Peterborough, and from Kirkfield to Balsam Lake. I can only express my regret that the Government supporters in Ontario have not prevailed upon the Government to undertake the completion of the interesting space between Kirkfield and Lake Simcoe and place it under contract this year. We know that it is too late now to ask the Minister to do anything in that regard. I believe that the Minister is favourably impressed with the importance of the work and I hope that we may expect to see next year the remaining space between Kirkfield and Lake Simcoe placed under contract.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister of Railways and Canals has not stated to the committee what his programme is as to this Trent Valley Canal. He has not told us whether it is his intention to complete the work from one lake to the other, nor has he said anything as to what the duration of the work shall be.

Mr. BENNETT.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not in a position to inform the committee as to what will be decided upon in respect to that. If I were to express my own view it would be that a very great deal of time would not be permitted to elapse before we would ask Parliament for an appropriation sufficient to complete that portion of the work between the two lakes. I am not now stating any conclusion which has been arrived at by the Government on this subject. Of course the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) knows that no matter what may be the view of the Minister all he can do is to present his view to Council and Council may or may not authorize an application to Parliament for a further appropriation. Until that view has been accepted and a conclusion arrived at I would not be in a position to make an authoritative statement.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the Minister of Railways and Canals is hardly treating us fairly in coming to Parliament and asking for a large vote. That vote is part of a well considered programme adopted years ago.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not asking for any vote at all to authorize new contracts to be entered into. I am asking only for sufficient money to complete existing contracts.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the object of completing existing contracts if it is not the intention of the Government to prosecute the work from end to end. To construct all these small sections without continuing the work I think would be very little better than undertaking a useless expenditure.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I presume there would be no way in which the Government could escape its liability to complete the contracts that were actually entered into when they assumed the responsibility of government. I would judge that the most that could be expected of the Government would be that we would as soon as we felt that the time was ripe for the purpose of coming to some conclusion as to the entering upon of new contracts, cause a further contract to be made.

Mr. BENNETT. I understand the Minister to state that he is personally favourably disposed to the completion of the intervening space between Balsam Lake and Lake Simcoe.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman has not caught my remark correctly. I said that if I were to state my own personal view it would be that the work between the two lakes would be completed.

Mr. BENNETT. That is between Lake Simcoe and Balsam Lake.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, between Lake Simcoe and Balsam Lake.

Mr. KENDRY. I may say that I am sorry that the Minister of Railways and Canals has not seen fit to put into the Estimates a sufficient amount to prosecute the construction of this canal. We have expended a great deal of money in the centre of this canal. We have seen just now that the appropriation is some $650,000 to prosecute the work from Peterborough to Lakefield. This work will be of hardly any use at all until the end sections of this canal are completed. Unless there is something done on the Simcoe division, the work so far as the canal is concerned, will be of no use, and I am sorry to see the Minister has not seen fit to make provision for that. We have spent $2,000,000, or about that, already on this canal, and the advantage of that expenditure cannot be reaped until the canal is opened up to the lake. Even at this late day, I trust the Minister will see his way to make provision for that.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the estimate for the uncompleted portion of the Balsam Lake—Lake Simcoe section, from Kirkfield north of Lake Simcoe?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Estimate made for me in the department is, that it will take in the neighbourhood of $4,000,000 to build the whole canal, beyond that which is now under contract.

Mr. BERGERON. Four millions more?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, $4,000,000 more. The whole work was estimated to cost upwards of $6,000,000, and we have already expended and provided for something in the neighbourhood of something over $700,000. It will take at least $4,000,000 to complete the whole canal.

Mr. BERGERON. What depth?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Six feet.

Mr. BERGERON. What will be the length?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There will be sixty-two miles of artificial canal works.

Mr. HAGGART. It is stated in the newspapers that the Minister proposes to use other than the Portland cement in these works. The Government has previously tried the native cement in some of the canals along the St. Lawrence, and every engineer of the department has reported that Portland cement is the only cement that is fit to use for this work. Some cement works have been established, and they pretend that they can make cement equal to the Portland cement. But if the Minister uses any cement manufactured in this country, I hope he will see that it is equal to the best Portland cement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I presume the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) knows how strongly the opinion of the chief engineer coincides with his on this subject. He may rely upon it, that no cement will be used which it would not be safe to use for the purpose. There will be portions of the work where probably the native cement can be used without any disadvantage, and I think the officers will be alive to that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think it is rather unfair to the Canadian cement to condemn it off-hand. Cement is an article that can be tested by experts, and if it is not up to standard, it need not be used. We all know that there is a prejudice in favour of an article that has given great satisfaction and has got a name, and it may be true also that some of the Canadian cement—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Native cement.

Mr. HAGGART. There is a Portland cement made in this country which may be equal to the imported, but there is a cement called native cement, which is a different thing.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In the early stages of the manufacture of cement in Canada, some of the tests made might not be up to the standard of imported cement, but experience in manufacture has improved the quality of cement used here, and we have tested it in our section of the country in water works and the abutments of bridges, and the engineers are satisfied that some of the cements manufactured in Canada are quite as good as the imported article. Of course, if our cement is not up to standard, it would not be proper to use it in important works of this kind. But it should not be refused on account of any prejudice that exists. It should be given a fair test by the department. I think it is only due to our own manufacturers that they should have that opportunity. Of course, if their cement does not come up to the standard, nobody would ask that it should be used. But if they can manufacture an article of as good a quality, and supply it to the Government and to contractors at the same price, or at a lower price than the imported cement, I think the preference should be given to it.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman has, I believe, received tenders for about 85,000 barrels of cement. Would he tell the House what he got it for, and from whom he got it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We divided it among various tenderers. I could not, at the moment, state accurately the portions which went to the different tenderers. The Rathbun Company, manufacturers of Portland cement, were awarded a contract for some 10,000 barrels. We gave a Belgian tenderer a contract for some 8,000 barrels. The manufacturers of native cement got contracts for 25,000 barrels. There were parts of the work for which we thought we could safely use the native cement. The balance was divided among the various tenderers for the Portland cement. The average price was in the neighbourhood of $2.10.

Mr. SPROULE. What was the size of a barrel ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We insisted that it should contain 400 pounds.

Mr. HAGGART. What was the price of the native cement ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It would be about half the price of the Portland. It takes a great deal more of the native cement than of the Portland to do the same work ; so that there is not much difference in the cost ; but we felt that wherever we could use it safely, we should give the native cement the preference.

Mr. BERGERON. Does not the Portland cement come nearly all from the same firm ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the larger portion would be imported.

Mr. SPROULE. Was this bought by tender ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Oh, yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Had you any tenders from the Owen Sound firm ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, and we awarded them a contract for a considerable quantity.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the hon. gentleman require the same standard from the native cement, as to contraction, pressure power and expansion ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, it is required to stand the same test as the Portland.

Beauharnois Canal—

To pay Joseph Julian $275 and Francis Grenier $10 for damage to crops by overflow.....	$ 285
Replacing cope stones at Nine Locks....	1,000

Mr. BERGERON. Will the hon. gentleman give us some statement with regard to these damages paid to Julian and Grenier ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. These are two cases of several, in which it was concluded that damages might fairly be awarded for injuries caused in the winter of 1890 by an overflow from the blocking of a culvert. Mr. Brunet was awarded $45, Mr. Poirier a small sum, Mr. Julian $275, and Mr. Grenier $10. These matters were referred to the Department of Justice in 1895, and they advised that the Government were liable for the damage. Two of the parties accepted what the Government offered, and the other two refused to accept, and the matter remained over ; but now these two parties express their willingness to accept the sums of money originally awarded to them.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman is stating what he has been told, but that is not at all, I think, what happened. The two parties mentioned, Brunet and Poirier, live near Valleyfield, and their claims were for damages caused by water breaking through the bank of the canal and getting into their cellars. Julian and Grenier live seven or eight miles from there, and they have claimed damages, but from an entirely different cause—from water which had come down through a culvert, and which, through the bad management of the canal, had gone around the barn of Julian and caused damage for which, at the time, he claimed, I think, $500. Some exception was taken to that, and he was offered an amount which he refused. The others took their money, but I may remark that the damages were paid through a notary, and the payment was registered in the registry office of the district of Beauharnois. As Julian has accepted this amount, I would suggest that it should be paid to him by a notarial deed, and the deed registered ; otherwise the same claim for damages might be made again upon the department at some future time. I also see a vote here for $1,000 for replacing copestones at Nine Locks. I do not know whether this is a revote, as we voted the same amount last year for the same purpose.

Mr. BERGERON. Last session we voted the money.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then it was not expended

Mr. BERGERON. Then this would be a re-vote.

Mr. QUINN. I understand that tenders were accepted for the cement at $2.10. They were the lowest, I presume.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The contract was awarded to the lowest tenderer. There may have been two or three tenders at the same figure, and if so the contracts were divided among them.

To pay damages to R. S. Snider in connection with his mill.....	$1,000
---	---------

Mr. BRITTON. Will the hon. Minister explain this ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. His land was taken and he claimed a very much larger sum, but the valuator recommended the payment of $1,000, which he has agreed to accept.

Mr. BRITTON. Long before I knew anything about Parliament from personal experience, there was a discussion in reference to the Tay Canal, and it was said that the mill of a man named Snider was ruined, and that we would have to pay a large sum of money to him in addition to the cost of the canal.

Mr. HAGGART. There was no amount paid on account of the Tay Canal. This man's water power was destroyed by the dam which took away from the height of his water power. No doubt, he has a fair claim on the Government, but what it is I do not know.

Baie des Chaleurs Railway—Operating and maintaining..... $18,500

Mr. CASGRAIN. I understand that this is to pay the operation of the railway during this year. I would like to know if it is the intention of the Government to continue operating it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, it is not; we have already handed over the possession and control of the railway, and are not now operating it.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend tell the committee the circumstances under which he took over this work of operating a road for which no appropriation was granted by Parliament, which had never been submitted to Parliament, for the taking over of which and operating it at the public expense there was not a tittle of authority. If the hon. gentleman could take this road over and operate it, he could take the Grand Trunk Railway over and operate it without asking Parliament at all, and then ask Parliament to reimburse the expense.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There would be a great deal of difference between our taking over the Grand Trunk Railway and operating it and our operating this road.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no difference in principle.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This does not involve a very considerable sum. We found ourselves in this situation that we were called upon by gentlemen connected with the South Shore or the Great Northern Railway, which it was proposed to construct on the south shore of the St. Lawrence, and which it was contemplated would strike the Montreal, St. Lambert and Sorel road and then connect with the Baie de Chaleurs at the terminus at Gaspé Basin, to carry out the policy of the late Government. This company had a great deal of encouragement from the ex-Minister of Finance. They had gone to Europe to float their undertaking upon the strength of some communication which had passed between the Government then, and certain endorsement of the Finance Minister. They had pressed upon us that we should take up the engagement which the other Government—

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend mean to say that anything ever occurred in connection with the late Minister of Finance which bound him to take over the Baie de Chaleurs road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It would be too much to say they were bound, because if they were, I apprehend they would have endeavoured to carry out their engagements. But there were relations of a very close character between the company and the Government, and the hon. gentleman will probably recall that he gave a certain guarantee in connection with the payment of interests upon these bonds. They took home the hon. gentleman's guarantee to the London market, and attempted to finance upon it, and after they had proceeded a certain distance the hon. gentleman either notified them that they were not using his name by authority or that he had withdrawn from any assurance he had given. At all events their financial arrangements were brought to a standstill, and they were put probably to a good deal of expense and disappointment in not realizing their expectations and the whole undertaking was brought to a sudden termination. One of the consequences was that the Baie de Chaleurs Railway ceased to be operated. The winter was coming on, and the people along the coast were going to be deprived of railway accommodation. This company was urging us to ask Parliament to take it up in the line on which it appears to have been taken up by hon. gentlemen opposite. After considering the matter in Council very carefully, we concluded that we could not hold out any expectation to the company that this House would endorse their project, as they said it had been endorsed by hon. gentlemen opposite. We thought the principle was entirely false.

Mr. FOSTER. What principle?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The principle of giving a Government guarantee for interest for any term of years on the bonds of a railway company. That principle was unsound. We considered that was unsound and did not want to encourage useless expectations. But, the representatives which they made to us, fortified, I am bound to say, by a good deal of evidence, were to the effect that the Baie des Chaleurs Railway would be a good paying property, that it could be run to advantage, that it was in litigation, having been taken possession of by the sequestrators of Quebec, or was in some way in the courts under proceedings then pending, and, as a result, it would not be operated during the winter. Upon consideration we concluded that it would be a proper thing, under all the circumstances, to run the road for a short time, for the winter at least, and see whether or not it had merit, whether it would be a paying piece of property in connection with the Intercolonial Railway. We tried it under these circumstances with the result that the balance turned out to be on the wrong side of the account. We closed down the operation in the month of May.

Mr. FOSTER. When did you commence ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In January, I think, on the 1st of January. It ran through January, February, March, April and May—five months, and at the end of May we handed it over having concluded that it would not pay.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it running yet ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not being run by us.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is being run by the company.

Mr. FOSTER. Was any money paid out over and above the receipts for the operation and maintenance of the road ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I apprehend that the charge and expenses of operating were paid out of the Intercolonial Railway fund—I presume they were.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) know ? Cannot he say whether that was done or not ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) might fairly infer from that—

Mr. FOSTER. Now, the hon. gentleman comes to a fair inference. I ask him a fair question, why cannot he give me a fair answer ? He "presumes" and "supposes" and "infers" and goes around and about and athwart the question. But why cannot he come on squarely and say, not what he "apprehends" but does he know whether any sums were paid out, and, if so, out of what vote ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no doubt they were.

Mr. FOSTER. Can my hon. friend tell me under what legal construction of the Act he presumed to take money which Parliament had voted for the running of the

Mr. BLAIR.

Intercolonial Railway and devoted to the running of an alien line entirely.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is a road connected directly with the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. FOSTER. But a man may live next door to the hon. gentleman without being related to him. A road may run parallel with the Intercolonial Railway, it may butt up against it and still be an entirely different road. I say the hon. gentleman had no more business to take money voted for the Intercolonial Railway and devote it to the running of the Baie des Chaleurs road, than he had to take $18,500 of public money and use it to run a road in Russia. I would like to ask him if the sum of $18,500 has been paid out, and, if so, was it paid out under audit by the Auditor General ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not followed the actual fact of the payment. I have said to the hon. gentleman that I have no doubt that it is paid, and if so, it has been paid on the strength of an Order in Council which was passed, and, of course, the responsibility of which we must assume. I take it that it was quite within our province in the exceptional circumstances I have stated relying upon being justified by Parliament in making these payments. At all events we have done it, and we ask Parliament to make the amount good by this appropriation.

Mr. FOSTER. Has my hon. friend the Order in Council before the House authorizing the running of the road ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think that is on the Table.

Mr. FOSTER. Was it simply an Order in Council authorizing the Government to take over, or to operate for a certain length of time this road, or has there been an Order in Council passed appropriating certain sums from any source towards the payment of this amount. Or has the hon. gentleman simply paid it out of a credit and now asks Parliament to vote this sum in order to put the amount back into the credit ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I ask this vote so that the amount may be recouped to the Intercolonial Railway fund. As to the Orders in Council, they authorize the Department of Railways to take this road over and operate it for this limited period on the conditions I have stated. I would be very glad to bring the Order in Council down.

Mr. FOSTER. I fancy they do not raise the question at all as to whether that would eventuate in the Dominion having to pay a certain amount of money, but simply authorize the Minister of Railways to operate the road without mentioning whether he was to find the money for it, but assuming that it would come out of the road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We assumed from the first the possibility that the balance might be on the wrong side of the account. But the Order in Council, I think, makes no distinct provision for the payment of money, but authorizes the road to be run as part of the Intercolonial Railway, those who were running to pay wages and other expenses incident to the operation in the same way that they pay the charges of the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the hon. gentleman state whether the Auditor General objected to the payment of this amount, and if he objected, was there an Order in Council overruling his objection?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have heard a good many objections from the Auditor General, but I do not know that I have heard any on this particular point. I do not know whether the matter had reached him or not.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend cannot tell whether the Auditor General has reached it or whether it is hanging around the purlieus of the suspense account of the Intercolonial Railway. I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) has been wily enough not to have it brought before the Auditor General.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman must know that I am anything but wily.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I desire to ask under what statutory authority such an Order in Council could be made. I have been looking at the Act of the Department of Railways and also the Government Railways Act and I cannot find in these statutes any authority for the Governor in Council to make such an order. Perhaps the hon. Minister will explain that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am quite willing to accept the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Borden's) assurance that no such authority can be found.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I do not like to detain the committee at this hour, but I am sure that the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Guité) must have been disagreeably surprised when he heard it announced that it was the intention of the Government not to continue to run this road. One of the principal reasons for the hon. gentleman's election was that his friends, if not himself, promised that the road should be run by the Government. They held this Government up to the admiration of the people down there. Look at this good Government. As soon as they come to power our railroad begins to run; and if you vote against Mr. Guité the road will cease running immediately. The promise was held out that not only would the road continue to be operated if the hon. member was returned, but I heard the hon. member himself make a speech on nomination day at Caplin in which he said that not only would the road continue to be operated by the Government, but that he had no doubt that if he was returned he would get a subsidy of about three millions to continue the road down to Gaspé. I am sure that the hon. gentleman is much disappointment at what he heard from the Minister of Railways this evening.

Mr. GUITÉ. (Translation.) It is likely enough, I may say, that on nomination day I may have told the voters of the Bonaventure county that should I be returned to this House, I expected to see the Government operate the Baie des Chaleurs Railway, and further, that the Government would go on with the work on that railway. But I did certainly not give any pledge to the electors that the Government would prosecute the completion of that railway, nor did I tell my constituents that I had received from the Government any pledge to the same effect. I merely told them, on nomination day, as I already stated, that I had good grounds for hoping that the Government of the day would assist us and push the railway works to completion, not only in my own riding but also in that of Gaspé. I deeply regret, I must say, that the Government have not seen their way to going on with the building of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway, and even reaching the county of Gaspé. I am sorry to see that the work has been stopped. But before long, I hope the Government of the day will deal fairly by the Gaspé territory, and will make arrangements with one of the companies or otherwise for the purpose of prosecuting the work; and still better, the Government, I hope, will take to their own charge the building of that railway which is bound to so largely benefit the whole Gaspé section.

Mr. BERGERON. I myself heard the hon. gentleman on the day of nomination at Maria, when he was far more keen than he is to-night. He told the people there that the good Government that we have now in power, the best Government we ever had since this country existed, had taken hold of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway, and it would be a calamity to Canada not to vote for him because then the Government might get discouraged and stop the railway. But he said if he was elected not only would the Baie des Chaleurs Railway then existing be operated by this good Government but, more than that, he would obtain over three millions of dollars to take that railway down to Gaspé Basin; that the steamships coming across the ocean would come in the basin of Gaspé and there would transmit the mails to that railway, and that altogether it would be the greatest boon for Gaspé that could be imagined. Promises like these were made at every meeting. He promised it in the French language, which he has spoken to-night, and he also promised it in English, and I was surprised that he did not speak English to-night, as he speaks that language very well. Well, he was elected by an immense majority. We were not surprised. I do not see why the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) does not get up and say something in favour of his county. He was not there himself, but his namesake was there, the member for Bonaventure in the local. He went a great deal further than the present member in the Commons (Mr. Guite) : he said that this railway would be such a boon to the counties of Bonaventure and Gaspé that the whole question in that election was the railway question. He went further than that and he said things so profane that I scarcely dare repeat them here. He said : If the bishops and the priests send the Liberals to a certain place, we will go there like gentlemen, in cars on this railway ; we will no longer have to go there on foot.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
A very clever idea.

Mr. BERGERON. I suppose that is where my hon. friend wants to go. We told the people then that this was purely and simply an election promise. We told the people then not to believe the member for Bonaventure, who was probably sincere in what he said, because it was purely an election scheme, and that as soon as the object of the Government in carrying that county was attained, the road would come to a standstill, and it has come to a standstill.

Mr. GUYE. (Translation.) Allow me to say again, Mr. Chairman, that I do not regret having made to this House the statement which my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) has just animadverted upon, and that I still feel confident, as I was before, that the Government of the day will mete out even-handed justice to my constituency. I had good grounds for complaining of the late Administration, in connection with the Baie des Chaleurs Railway matter, on account of their having for so long a time ceased to operate that line. I did certainly place more confidence in the present Government, and I still cherish the hopes, in concert with the electors of Gaspé, and, still more, I do feel satisfied that we have much more to expect from the present Government in connection with the building of this railway than we could expect from the hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. LEMIEUX. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I am at a loss to understand why this Baie des Chaleurs Railway matter stirs up to such a degree the wrath of my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron). I do not suppose the reason is that, when the hon. gentleman went down to Bonaventure, with his hon. friend of Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), he had to come back to Montreal over this railway line, looking quite sheepish after the defeat he had sustained there. The hon. gentlemen opposite seem to be under the impression that this road has been operated in view of the federal election which took place in that county, but, as everybody knows, the Government had been asked to operate the road long before the death of the late member (Mr. Fauvel) had occurred. Mr. Fauvel, accompanied by the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Préfontaine), Mr. Lemieux, the member for Bonaventure in the Quebec legislature and myself came up to Ottawa in order to interview the Government, and ask them to run this road, in order to give to the people of Gaspé the railway facilities they had so long been waiting for. The Government complied with our request, and the road was run all through the winter. True, there is, this year, a balance of $18,000 on the wrong side of the account, for the running of this railway ; but it is only fair to add that the Government have operated it through the worst season of the year. Were they now to run it through the summer season and the winter, the receipts would cover the expenditure. As a matter of fact, I may say the late Government never dealt fairly by the people of Gaspé in connection with this railway matter. They handed over the road to schemers, men whose names are far from conveying the idea of honesty and uprightness, and this is why the road is now on the verge of bankruptcy. But, as I said, were the road to be run on a business basis it would pay its operating expenses. As I said here, last night, when speaking about the steamer's service between Quebec and Gaspé, from now until this Parliament ends, I shall never cease with my hon. friend from Bonaventure agitating this railway question. The county of Gaspé is the oldest county in the Dominion, the first one to be discovered in this country, and still, it is the only one that is deprived of railway communication with the other portions of the country. This is the first time that a Government grants to that county an appropriation enabling it to establish communication with the civilized world. It is the bounden duty of the Dominion Government to deal fairly by this portion of the province of Quebec that has been so long ignored. When the line of the Intercolonial was surveyed, it was agreed upon that this railway should be extended down to Gaspé Basin ; but we all know how, on the suggestion of some of those wealthy merchants mentioned by my hon. friend the late Postmaster General (Sir Adolphe Caron), like the Robins, who wished to keep the population of that county in a state of bondage, the Intercolonial was not extended down to Gaspé Basin. As I said, the Baie des Chaleurs Railway was handed over to some well-known jobbers of the province of Quebec.

Mr. TALBOT. Armstrong.

Mr. LEMIEUX. (Translation.) That is the reason why the road was not extended further down. I appeal to my hon. friends from Montmorency and Beauharnois to say whether I am not within the mark in stating that the counties of Gaspé and Bonaventure are the most picturesque and the most renowned for their natural wealth and capabilities throughout the whole Dominion. Tourists who have visited that part of the country have been loud in their praises, calling the Baie des Chaleurs the Mediterranean of America, and saying that the Gaspé region recalled to their minds the picturesque scenery of Switzerland and the Alps. Notwithstanding that small deficit of $18,000, I hope that before long this railway will be operated successfully, once the line has been extended to Gaspé Basin, its natural terminus.

Mr. BERGERON. Mr. Chairman, I am not surprised to hear the speech just delivered by the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux), it has evidently been prepared for a St. Jean Baptiste celebration. My hon. friend might make that speech on the hustings, but he cannot do it here. He forgets that if there has been built that piece of railway, some eighty-five miles, in that most beautiful country which I acknowledge to be among the finest in the Dominion—

Mr. LEMIEUX. The finest.

Mr. BERGERON. I will say the same thing, it was not very nice in the month of March when I was there, but no doubt it is in the summer time. But if a railway has been built there it is due in great part to the Conservative party and to the Conservative Government who have given immense subsidies to that railway. Now, if some of those subsidies have not found their way to that railway, it certainly is not the fault of the Conservative party or Government who granted the subsidies. The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) mentioned the name of Armstrong. I think Mr. Armstrong can defend himself, and he would do it if he were here. But there is one other name, although I will not mention it. About $100,000 found its way in to somebody's pocket, and it was not spent by the Conservative Government or party. The hon. gentleman knows what I mean. When he goes on to speak in that way, he must give everybody his due. But as a matter of fact, there would never have been an inch of railway built in that part of the province of Quebec were it not for the subsidies which have been granted to that part of the province by the Conservative Governments.

Mr. TALBOT. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, in connection with this Baie des Chaleurs Railway matter, I may say that having upon several occasions, visited this section of the country, I may be allowed to offer a few remarks to the House about the item now under consideration. I think the remarks just fallen from the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) as to the natural resources of that section of the country, are quite within the mark. Let me, however, offer a few words of explanation in connection with the deficit in the operating expenses of the road. The House should bear in mind that the road was run in the winter season; in fact it was in January that the Government took over this work of operating that portion of the road. Now, it is a well-known fact by all who are conversant with the way in which business is carried on in the province of Quebec, and chiefly in that remote section of the province, that all the merchants in the Gaspé peninsula and the county of Bonaventure had already made their purchases for the winter season and shipped their goods before the road was put in operation, as late as the month of January, too late, in fact, for the road being enabled to pay its running expenses. The fact is the road should have been operated during the summer season. All those who took part in the election made necessary through the death of Mr. Fauvel, are well aware of the fact that all through the electoral campaign which lasted three weeks, petition upon petition was sent to the Government, asking them to continue operating the road. Those are some of the grounds on which may be explained the deficit in the operating expenses of the road last winter under circumstances which could not well be remedied as the merchants of those localities had already had their goods shipped unaware of the fact that the road was going to run. In my opinion, under such conditions, the deficit is easily accounted for. All those who have visited that section of the country cannot help agreeing that the county of Bonaventure from the standpoint of the fertility of its soil, is one of the finest in the Dominion. Undoubtedly, had the appropriations voted under the shape of subsidies by the Dominion and the Quebec Governments to this railway been expended as they should have been, we would now have in that section of the country a road brought to its completion and in full operation. All those, among the Conservatives as well as among the Liberals, who have visited that section of the country are unanimous in saying that this is undoubtedly one of the finest sections of the province of Quebec, and even the whole Dominion. Should the Dominion Government think it their duty to take steps to have this road operated by some company, so as to secure the prosecution of those works, they will only be dealing fairly by the Gaspé peninsula. It is not only a mining country, and one noted for its fisheries, but it is also an agricultural region, and one equal to, if not superior to any other section of the province of Quebec. With an excellent climate, and a soil of unparalleled fertility, there is certainly, from the standpoint of farming operations, a brilliant future in store for that section of the country, which will become an important factor in the general prosperity of the Quebec province.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Minister of Railways and Canals give the receipts of the road for the period during which it was operated, and the operating expenses?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The operating expenses will be $17,298.40. In putting the amount in, we placed it at $18,500, not having all the particulars. The receipts were $7,267.36. The actual loss on the five months' operation being $10,031.14.

Mr. FOSTER. Did the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, when he was recommending the scheme to his colleagues, make any estimate as to what the cost of operating the road, over and above the receipts?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I doubt if I made any estimate. It was, of course, problematical. We had these representations made to us. They said that the business would be likely to be well sustained, although, during the winter season, the results would not be as satisfactory as during the summer; yet they did not anticipate that there would be any considerable balance on the wrong side of the account.

Mr. BERGERON. I am surprised to hear that the railway did not do more, because when I was down there, the cars were always crowded. There were a great many people travelling. It is true, that somebody said that nobody paid, but there were a great many people there.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the resolution is adopted, I would like to emphasize one point. It is perfectly apparent that unless there is some authority under the statute for making this Order in Council, there was no authority at all for the operation of this railway by the Government. I understand the Minister of Railways to state that there is no authority under the statute. If that be so, the result is, that an Order in Council has been passed without any authority whatever, for the operation of this road, and the country is asked to pay $18,500 for an unjustifiable and illegal act. I may be wrong in this, but if I am right, this is the result. I do not think that this is a matter which should be passed over with a word or a laugh. It strikes me, that this is an extraordinary condition of things. If the Government can pass an Order in Council in this way, providing for the operation of a railway, they can pass an Order in Council for the operation of a sugar refinery or a cotton factory, and come to this Parliament afterwards and ask Parliament to vote the money which has been lost by the operation of that particular institution. I think it is extremely desirable, before the item is passed, that the Minister of Railways and Canals should state to the House under what legal sanction the Order in Council was made, because it is apparent the expenditure has been made under some pretense of authority, and I would like to know what the pretense of authority was.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) is no doubt correct. We passed the Order in Council, assuming the responsibility, and trusting that, under the circumstances, Parliament would indemnify the Government and furnish us with the amount which would be sufficient to cover the expenditure which has been made. The people were in need of railway accommodation and we were being strongly pressed by them to take this thing up and to ask Parliament to make a grant in aid of the undertaking. They asked us to consent to a guarantee in the way in which they had for a time induced hon. gentlemen opposite to guarantee the interest upon their securities in the London market. We could not do that, but we did the next best thing under the circumstances. We said: If you are not able to carry it on by reason of the proceedings pending in the courts, if you are so confident that it is such a valuable property and one that we would be justified in asking Parliament to give some assistance to, we will undertake to operate the railway for a short time. At all events, we have done so, and we have found that the road had not at all the merits claimed for it. If it had turned out as these gentlemen represented it to us, if it had proved a valuable property, which would have become a valuable feeder for the Intercolonial Railway, I have no doubt that Parliament would have felt that it was desirable to take some steps to have the road permanently assumed by the Government. But as it is, after the experience which we have had, we have not felt justified in asking Parliament to extend any further aid to it or to assume any further obligations in respect to it. We have tried the experiment and become assured that it has not been successful, but we have probably satisfied a good many people who have been pressing us to make a proposal to Parliament looking to the assumption of further liabilities.

Mr. FOSTER. I think this is one of the most singular transactions that I ever heard of in Parliament. The Minister of Railways has made no defence of it at all. He has acknowledged that the Government undertook a thoroughly illegal and unjustifiable expenditure. It turned out so bad that it involved a net payment of nearly $11,000 out of the public chest. The Minister of Railways and Canals admitted that they had no authorization by law, no authorization by this Parliament in any way at all by the previous discussion of it. He simply undertook a la New Brunswick methods to set the law in defiance. He asked his colleagues to consent to this undertaking, and they adopted his suggestion and committed a completely illegal act. What is there to justify it? Nothing at all. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) was perfectly right when he stated that you might just as well undertake to put a sugar refinery or a cotton factory into operation without any appropriation. The Minister of Railways tried to draw me into this matter as affording by my previous action an excuse for himself. That company wished to raise money, and there was an arrangement by which that money could be raised by them, with the guarantee that my hon. friend talks so glibly about and it was this. They had no guarantee of the scheme in the least. We were to accept the money to be placed in our hands, and we were to pay it out, as trustees, on the well-understood condition that we did not guarantee or authorize their scheme, and the reason why that authorization was withdrawn was because we thought that on the London market they used that in order to guarantee their undertaking to the public. As we did not intend to guarantee it. This is what the Minister of Railways and Canals tried to bring in as an excuse. But there is no connection between the two arrangements at all. The fact is that the Minister of Railways has undertaken an altogether illegal expenditure. This House has no right to vote it. The Minister and this Government should ask the House to indemnify them for having done an illegal thing. But there is a worse side than that. The whole thing was conceived and carried out as a political matter, to tide over a little difficulty in the Baie de Chaleurs counties, and to assist in the election of a Liberal; and these hon. gentlemen, and the Minister of Public Works himself said it was a cute thing. It was simply political, it was not legal. If we had done a thing like that when we were in the Government, I imagine how the welkin would have resounded when the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) stood upon his legs to show how we prostituted the public service, and took the people's money without warrant of law in order to carry out our schemes. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) is mute to-night. The Minister of Railways attempts to justify this by saying that the amount involved is not very large. I say the Government have as much right after this House prorogues, to operate the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada, and to pay the expenses of it, as it had to operate that road and foot its expenses. There is only difference in amount. A more unjustifiable thing has not been done by this Government and they have done a great many unjustifiable things. It seems to be thought by some members of the Government that they are superior to law, that they have a subservient majority behind them, and that all they have to do is to come to that majority in order to have the wrong which they have done made right, so far as a vote can make it right. I do not believe there is a single member behind the Ministry who will justify this conduct of the Government. Even the Minister of Railways apologized for it from beginning to end. There is no common sense to base it upon, and as far as I can see it has no legal standing either.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The question before the House has been entirely blurred by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster). It is all a question of reasonableness, and he knows that very well. The House is not here to discuss whether there is a technical statute authorizing you in so many words to enter into this contract. The Minister of Railways stated here that the enormous expense that has attended the operation of the Intercolonial Railway would be lessened if we took under our control certain of these branches. The members of the Government did not know whether the facts stated with regard to the Gaspé road were correct or not. They thought it was reasonable that they should take the best means of testing these statements, either by appointing a commission or by taking over the road as an experiment.

Mr. FOSTER. Without authorization.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. To take it over for a short time and see whether the statements made with regard to the earning-power of that road were correct, in order that, before entering into a contract, they might know the facts from experience. The question before the House is whether it was reasonable to do that or not. My hon. friend has shown that the loss upon the experiment was $10,000, and the question is whether it is not better that should be done rather than to have asked the House to plunge into a contract, without data, without inquiry, and without proper evidence as to whether that road should be taken over in the public interest or not. We made a practical test to see if it was desirable to take over the road. We have run the road for five months, and we have shown the country what it would cost to run it and what its probable receipts would be, and we have the evidence upon which the House can form a judgment if they are ever asked to. The Minister of Railways has told us that he has handed the road over to those who owned it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) would lead people to think that this cost hundreds of thousands of dollars, whereas, as a matter of fact, we went into a scheme which would not cost as much as a commission roving from one end of the road to the other. We have taken the best means of ascertaining the facts, and I believe the course we took was a prudent one. We are now in possession of the best evidence in the world to show the country what the result would be if we took the road over. Whether there is a technical law justifying it or not, is not the point before the House, but the point is, whether the Government took a reasonable course in trying the experiment.

Mr. FOSTER. I am glad I spoke, because I drew forth this reply from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. It is weaker even than the statement made, by the Minister of Railways and Canals. These two hon. gentlemen stand together on that, and I am glad to know that they have made out the best defence that can be made. The Minister of Marine proposes to simply make Parliament a tool to register his acts, and in this case to recoup the bad results of experiments with which the Government chooses to try without authorization. What business has the Government of the country to carry on large experiments involving the public funds unless they first come for the authorizing power of Parliament to discuss the question, and to receive its sanction. If the hon. gentlemen can do it in one case he can do it in the other case. Why do they not make a nine months' experiment with these fast line steamers, to demonstrate whether or not it is possible to make it a paying concern, so that afterwards they might come to Parliament and say that we can or we cannot operate a fast Atlantic service. My hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) cannot possibly justify this action on any constitutional grounds. Another thing this has brought out is that it has discredited the Minister of Railways and Canals. It was on his recommendation that they did this; it was one of his schemes. He either knew the facts or he did not know them, but he led the Government into an expenditure which the Government would not have gone into unless they had been pretty well advised by him that it would turn out all right. It has turned out all wrong. If he is discredited on that, it is one of the best reasons why the House should not take the lead of the Minister of Railways on the Drummond County deal, and on the Grand Trunk Railway deal, and on these airy schemes which he proposes to substitute for them by the vote he is going to ask this House for tomorrow. The man who leads the country into loss in reference to a small scheme, without constitutional or legal right for it, is a man whom you ought to be careful in following in a large scheme, which will have the effect of involving the country in greater loss.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) will no doubt be comforted by the reflection which he has just given expression to. If the Minister of Railways is discredited by this operation, no doubt it will be eminently satisfactory to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), and it will occasion him no end of delight. I am quite willing that he should enjoy all the satisfaction which the circumstance gives him.

Mr. FOSTER. There are two of us delighted then.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries was giving us the idea that he had no information as to what would be the result of working the railway. Did the Minister of Railways and Canals conceal from him the amount of the receipts and expenditures?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The receipts and expenditures were not known.

Mr. HAGGART. I beg your pardon.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. How could we know the receipts and expenditures of a road that had been running only five months?

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman does not understand me. The reports of the working of the road for a couple of years are in the department, and the Minister of Railways and Canals knows to a dollar the amount of the receipts and expenditures. Was he not in possession of all the facts? Was not a report of the receipts and expenditures made by his own deputy? Was not a report made by Mr. Pottinger on the question of taking over the road? Did he not know that the expenditure was $2,000 more than the receipts—that the receipts were in the neighbourhood of $17,000 or $18,000 and the working expenses in the neighbourhood of $18,000 or $19,000? What other information does the Minister of Marine and Fisheries want? Has he not the sworn statement of the officers of the road? If he did not know the receipts and expenditures, he ought to have known them, because they were in the department.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. And a nice thing it was to recommend to the English market—to try to mislead the English market by the amount of about three million sterling.

Mr. SPROULE. The act was either legal or illegal. The Minister admits that it was illegal. He knows that he broke the law, and he admits it. It is a very unenviable position for a Minister of the Crown to put himself in. It is strange to me how the Auditor General, who is supposed to be the guardian of the expenditure, allowed the account to be paid. At some time in the future we may get a little more information on this subject from the Auditor General's Report. The hon. Minister told us that he was about to try an experiment in connection with the Drummond County Railway. I would like to ask him whether, in view of the disastrous consequences which attended this first experiment, he had not better let the other alone.

Mr. QUINN. I would ask whether there was no question as to the legality or illegality of the Act, and no opinion given by the Department of Justice?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the feeling was that it would be necessary to come to Parliament and ask for an indemnification for any outlay that might be incident to the operating of that road.

Mr. QUINN. My idea is that where any doubt exists, it is the duty of the department which intends to pass an Order in Council, to get the opinion of the Department of Justice as to the legality of what is to be undertaken. I have not the law before me, but I remember there is some such provision. If a department can undertake any matter it likes, without submitting the question of its legality to the Department of Justice, it is leaving to any Minister the right to do almost anything he likes. I think this is a most serious position, and it strikes at the very root of the rights of this Parliament if a Minister of the Crown can get the assent of Council to a proceeding which is not declared legal by the Department of Justice. The Minister might as well do it of his own free-will without applying to Council at all, and we have no guarantee that that is not done every day.

Mr. FOSTER. I move that this vote be struck out.

Mr. BRITTON. This does not seem to me to be such a very serious matter. Perhaps I am wrong; but put a case like this. Suppose certain harbour improvements were asked for, and the Government thought it worth while to make an examination of the harbour and to make soundings before venturing to submit to Parliament a proposition for the improvements; does my hon. friend think that he would find a statute which would authorize the hiring of a tug and the employment of persons to make the soundings and to estimate in a general way what the improvements would cost? Or suppose another case. Suppose it was thought proper to enter into negotiations with a railway company to take over a part of their line, and it was said to be in a certain condition in which the Minister of Railways said it was not. Does my hon. friend think he would find a statute which would authorize the hiring of a car and the travelling of a hundred miles with the engineer of the department and the deputy head? I do not think he would find a statute of that kind; and unless they were prepared to pay the expenses of these things out of their own pockets, they would have to come to Parliament and ask for a vote to cover the expenditure. In a matter of this kind, if the Government make any arrangement that can be considered permanent or quasi permanent, they would have to get the authority of Parliament to do it; but merely to make an experiment, to see what is in the road for a short time, and then to come to Parliament and ask for a vote to cover the expenditure, does not, I think, involve such a violation of the constitution as the hon. gentleman suggests.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not see the slightest application of the illustrations the hon. gentleman (Mr. Britton) has put before the committee, and I will hardly waste the time of the committee in going over them. I think that hon. gentleman will see that no government or company can operate a line of railway in this country except under statutory authority. It has been conceded by the Minister of Railways and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that no such legal authority was possessed by the Government, so far as this railway is concerned, and the Government operated it without statutory or any other authority. What would have been the result if one of the trains had killed some people or set fire to a building or did some other damage? If the railway was operated without authority, very serious consequences would have resulted. It does not seem to me a good principle for any Government to attempt to operate a railway or any other public work without statutory authority and then ask Parliament to vote the money which had been lost in operating it.

Mr. SPROULE. The other illustration which the hon. gentleman gave was just as bad. He cited the action of the Government in spending money on a public harbour, but we have never spent a dollar on a harbour until voted by the House. This contract was, however, entered into and the work carried out before Parliament was asked to vote a dollar for it.

Deepening St. Pierre River..... $40,000

Mr. HAGGART. On what principle is this vote asked for the deepening of that river?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My engineers advise me that this expenditure is required. The St. Pierre River was deepened and straightened by what is known as the Lachine Drain, which cost something like $140,000. To make that river useful and get the proper depth, I am told it will require $40,000 more.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that a part of the navigation?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In the first place, we will require to purchase 20,000 superficial feet of land. The excavation will cost $12,000; masonry of the culverts, $520; masonry in the bridge, $19,000; revetment wall, $175; value of land, $3,600; contingencies, between $3,000 and $4,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the hon. Minister state whether that expenditure on the St. Pierre River is between the Lachine Canal and the St. Lawrence ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it is at the mouth of the canal—from the mouth to this river.

Mr. HAGGART. The ditch from Lachine down to the St. Pierre River is completed. There is a culvert under the Lachine Canal for the purpose of carrying that into the water of the St. Pierre River, and if I do not mistake it, this is for the deepening of the St. Pierre River between the Lachine Canal and the St. Lawrence.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That will be north of the canal.

Mr. HAGGART. No, south of the canal, not on the canal at all. It is for the deepening of the river between the Lachine Canal and the St. Lawrence. The river that we do not interfere with at all by the canal. The reason assigned for the building of the ditch from Lachine down to the St. Pierre River, which goes under the canal, was that we interrupted the flow of water by the construction of the Lachine Canal. It was a very poor justification for the expenditure of $140,000 but our Government were responsible entirely for it, but to ask for the deepening of the river between the canal and the St. Lawrence is to ask what I do not think there is the slightest justification for. It can have only one object, the draining of the land of parties situated between the Lachine Canal and the St. Lawrence River, whose property is not interfered with by the construction of the Lachine Canal. The river is carried under the canal.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Perhaps it is to facilitate the flowing way of the water.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, but the natural stream is there. We have provided a channel under our own works, and after that there is the river in a state of nature.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What was the $140,000 spent for ?

Mr. HAGGART. To build a ditch to drain the village of Lachine down to the St. Pierre River, and provide a culvert to allow it to flow under the canal; and from the canal down to the St. Lawrence the river St. Pierre runs in its natural bed.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I know the locality well. This river has been filled in by this canal and by this ditch coming from Lachine and by the overflow of water within the last five or six years, and the health committee of Montreal have been making application to the Government to abate the nuisance. The people around there have complained, and have applied to the provincial board of health, and it is probably on account of the representations they have made that this vote is asked for now. But I must say that I think that $40,000 will be sufficient not only to deepen this river which is a small river, a mere brook, but also to cover it, so that the nuisance created by the water flowing into it from Lachine shall cease. I draw the attention of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) especially to that so that before spending any money, he may see whether it would not be advisable under the recommendation of his engineers to entirely cover this portion of the River St. Pierre.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My engineer stated to me that $140,000 was expended for the purpose of deepening and straightening the St. Pierre River in the upper part, that would be north of the canal, I suppose.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am advised now that $40,000 more is required in order to complete that job from the south side of the canal to the mouth of the river. I confess that I have no personal knowledge with regard to it; but it has been represented to me that this amount is required. The method in which the money is to be spent, has, of course, been detailed to me by the engineer.

Mr. HAGGART. No doubt, it will take $40,000 to deepen the St. Pierre River from the canal to the St. Lawrence. But what justification is there for such an expenditure? We have already spent a large sum to provide a clear channel for this river notwithstanding the presence of the Lachine Canal, and now we are called upon to deepen the river all the way from the canal to the St. Lawrence.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. But that is made necessary by reason of the work that has been done, and the deepening of the river alone will not suffice; it will be necessary to cover it up and make a regular sewer of it in order to protect the health of the inhabitants there. There is the municipality of St. Paul and also St. Gabriel ward of Montreal that are specially interested in having that work done as soon as possible, because, as I have stated, the health committee of Montreal and the provincial board of health, will certainly take steps to force the Government to do what is necessary.

Mr. FOSTER. What is it that goes into the ditch above the canal ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I understand that the sewage of Lachine goes into it, and that it is discharged into what remains of the St. Pierre River, which is really an open ditch running through a thickly populated part of Montreal.

Mr. FOSTER. The whole thing is as plain as daylight to me, although I do not know the locality. We are spending $40,000 in addition to what we have already spent to make a system of drainage for the people of Lachine, who should be expected to do that work for themselves.

Mr. HAGGART. The reason the Government made the expenditure in the first place was that, on account of the building of the Lachine Canal, some of the water was backed up nearly to Lachine. We drained it into the River St. Pierre, which passes under the canal. The people of Lachine utilize that channel to drain their village. We have already done more than we were called upon to do, and there is now no interference with the flow of the river as it was in the state of nature. But the river does not afford a sufficient flow for the drainage of the whole of that country, and we are now called upon to build a system of drainage for the whole section by deepening the river from the canal to the St. Lawrence.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It must be understood that it was the discharge from this ditch which causes the trouble. The water is no longer clean, and there is a larger quantity of it. The river has become a nuisance on account of the Government work, and it must be attended to. I knew nothing about this vote being put in the Estimates, but I know that complaint has repeatedly been laid before the city council of Montreal, and that the two boards of health have been asking that something be done in the matter.

Mr. CLANCY. Is it the board of health at Lachine that has complained?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No, the complaint comes from the municipality of Cote St. Paul and St. Gabriel village which is now a ward of the city of Montreal. The people there hold the Government responsible.

Mr. FOSTER. Why is the water no longer clean?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Because the village of Lachine has drained into it.

Mr. FOSTER. Whose fault is that?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Why did you build a ditch for the Lachine people to drain into?

Mr. FOSTER. The difficulty arises from the fact that Lachine requires a system of drainage and it has built sewers and has emptied them into a certain channel. When the outflow of the water through the channel was impeded by the canal, there was some ground for grievance. But we remedied that at a cost of $140,000, and provided a channel under the canal, to a point where the river remains as it was. But the dirty water comes from the sewers of Lachine and not from the canal. Now, because their sewage system is not perfect they are asking $40,000 to make it perfect.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There is a misunderstanding as to the situation. It is not the people who are draining into this ditch who are complaining, but you have built a ditch for the people of Lachine, and you have allowed him to drain into it, and you have polluted all that part of the little river which runs through St. Gabriel Village, and you are imperilling the health of the citizens there. They would have no objection to have a stream of clear water running through the village, any more than to the canal itself. The village of St. Gabriel is under control of the city of Montreal, and there is no drainage from the city of Montreal running into that river. It is the sewage of the town of Lachine which has been allowed to run into that ditch by the Government, which is doing the mischief now; and the late Government is responsible for this $40,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Forty thousand dollars will not begin to build and cover the ditch.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It is only a short piece, not more than three or four acres.

Mr. SPROULE. The Government cannot be responsible for having built the ditch for the purposes for which it was required; but the village has afterwards made their sewer to that ditch and drained into it.

Mr. QUINN. It was my intention when this item came up to ask the Minister of Railways or the Minister of Public Works if they had heard anything from the Board of Health of the province of Quebec concerning this River St. Pierre. The portion of the River St. Pierre which was complained of as having been interfered with by the Lachine Canal, is seven miles at least away from the point where it crosses under the Lachine Canal. It was complained of by the citizens of Lachine that when the canal was widened there, the River St. Pierre was dammed up to a certain extent, and consequently the surplus water which ought to have been carried away from the neighbourhood of Lachine through this river under the old canal, was allowed to flow over the properties adjoining Lachine, that is some miles away from where it goes under the canal. Now, the Government, recognizing that there was something in the claim of the Lachine people, constructed a ditch for the purpose of carrying away the surplus water, and deepened the River St. Pierre at the point where it went under the canal in such a way as to allow it to perform its natural functions, that is, to carry the surplus water away from the surrounding country under the canal and into the River St. Lawrence. That was all very well in its way, but some people, probably Lachine people, turned their own private drains into this ditch, or the people living on the border of the River St. Pierre kept throwing all sorts of refuse into the River St. Pierre. The consequence is that the last three or four weeks, as I am informed, the River St. Pierre is no longer clean water at all; and it spreads over the country on the other side of the Lachine Canal, and a little on the north of the canal, that is in the village of St. Gabriel, or St. Gabriel ward and Cote St. Paul. So that this water spreads over there and has become stagnant water, dangerous to the health of the community. On this account the Board of Health has intervened. I understood it was the intention of the Board of Health to apply to these surrounding municipalities, of course, to establish the liability somewhere. But where the liability exists, I do not know, it is difficult to say. But certainly it is a menace to the public health there, and if the Government considers that it is responsible in any way for the condition of things which exists there at present, it would certainly be a very beneficial thing to remove the nuisance at once. I do not wish to say that the Government is responsible, but I merely put the facts before the committee in order that the Government may have some idea of the position of the matter. Has the Minister heard anything from the Board of Health?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I have not. I rather wondered that I had not heard from the Board of Health when I learned that they were complaining. The matter was brought to my attention by the chief engineer of the department, who represented that it was a natural consequence and a necessary result of the previous expenditure that had been made. He reported to me that it was necessary, in order to make a complete job of what already had been done, and which involved an expenditure of $141,900, that this work should be extended, and that the deepening from the south side of the canal should be made at the mouth of the river.

Mr. QUINN. I was probably not quite accurate in saying that the Board of Health had undertaken to communicate with the Government. I do not know that the agitation has reached that point. The distance between the Lachine Canal and the River St. Lawrence at that point is somewhat more than the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Prefontaine) has stated it. It is over a mile, I think, from the Lachine Canal to the river at that point, so that if it is the intention of the department to undertake the deepening of that canal, it would be well to provide also for covering it, not only there, but on the northern portion, that is, north of the canal, in order that it may not be filled up as it has been latterly. If it is left open, all sorts of refuse will be thrown into it, and there will be a continual difficulty in keeping it clear.

Mr. QUINN.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think it is quite evident that Lachine wants drainage, and I think this vote is clearly for the purpose of giving Lachine drainage. Now, I do think that some good, sensible reason should be presented for this vote before we are asked to pass it. The engineer merely reports to carry out what has been done before, that this vote is necessary. If the people of Lachine are using that stream for the purpose of draining their places and they have caused this nuisance to arise, it is the town of Lachine that are responsible for it, and not this Parliament.

Mr. HAGGART. I think I was asked to report upon the subject to Council, and I made a report. Anyway, it was urged strongly upon me that I should report to Council in reference to the matter. I forget whether I put in a written report or reported verbally to Council on the subject.

Mr. FOSTER. There is another important point here. Some hon. gentlemen say that the distance is nearly a mile and that $40,000 is not at all sufficient.

Mr. HAGGART. If it is a covered drain it would not commence to do it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will have the matter looked into very carefully before any portion of this expense is incurred and unless I am thoroughly satisfied that this is a matter which we might fairly be expected to deal with in respect to the appropriation we have made here I will not have any portion of the money expended.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The city council of Montreal will certainly contribute an amount should the $40,000 not be sufficient to make it a covered drain, and there is also the municipality of Cote St. Paul. The vote is absolutely necessary to give relief to these people.

Mr. SPROULE. It is quite evident that this is purely a provincial matter, but if the province can get out of it and get the Dominion Government to bear the cost they will be quite well pleased to have this money expended.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think it is altogether fair to assume that this is a purely provincial work. There are a great many nice questions as to the construction of drains along our canals in small towns and it is not clear that there is no responsibility resting upon the Government in regard to the making of this kind of drainage. However, if the committee will give the amount I will repeat the assurance that I have referred to.

Mr. QUINN. Do I understand that the whole item is to be passed or whether there will be some question about dismissals.

Mr. FOSTER. We have held over an item on which my hon. friend (Mr. Quinn) may bring up this point.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair) moved that the House, at its next sitting, resolve itself into committee to consider the following proposed resolutions :—

1. Resolved, That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to grant a subsidy of $3,200 per mile towards the construction of each of the undermentioned lines of railway (not exceeding in any case the number of miles hereinafter respectively stated), which shall not cost more on the average than $15,000 per mile for the mileage subsidized, and towards the construction of each of the said lines of railway not exceeding the mileage hereinafter stated, which shall cost more on the average than $15,000 per mile for the mileage subsidized, a further subsidy beyond the sum of $3,200 per mile of fifty per centum on so much of the average cost of the mileage subsidized as shall be in excess of $15,000 per mile, such subsidy not exceeding in the whole the sum of $6,400 per mile. The expression "cost" used in this resolution means the actual, necessary and reasonable cost, and shall include the amount expended upon any bridge forming part of the line of railway subsidized not otherwise receiving any bonus, and such actual, necessary and reasonable cost shall be determined by the Governor in Council, upon the recommendation of the Minister of Railways and Canals and upon the report of the Chief Engineer of Government Railways, certifying that he has made or caused to be made an inspection of the line of railway for which payment of subsidy is asked, and careful inquiry into the cost thereof, and that in his opinion the amount upon which the subsidy is claimed is reasonable, and does not exceed the true, actual and proper cost of the construction of such railway; the lines of railway being as follows, that is to say :—

To the Great Northern Railway Company, for 35 miles of their railway from St. Jérôme, in the province of Quebec, to Hawkesbury, in the province of Ontario.

To the Drummond County Railway Company, for 42½ miles of their railway from Moose Park to Chaudière River, provided that the amount of the said subsidy shall be refunded to the Government of Canada in the event of the company's railway from Ste. Rosalie to Chaudière River being purchased or leased for a term of years by the Government.

2. Resolved, That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to grant the subsidies hereinafter mentioned to the railway companies, and towards the construction of the railways also hereinafter mentioned, that is to say :—

To the Irondale, Bancroft and Ottawa Railway Company, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy for the last 5 miles of the company's railway; the eastern terminus to be either at the village of Bancroft or some point near the Hastings Road, in the township of Herschell, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 56 Victoria, chapter 2, not exceeding in the whole $16,000,

To the Great Northern Railway Company, towards the construction of a railway bridge over the Ottawa River at Hawkesbury, 15 per centum upon the amount expended thereon, not exceeding $52,500.

For a railway and traffic bridge over the Ottawa River at Nepean Point, between the city of Ottawa and the city of Hull, 15 per centum upon the amount expended thereon, not exceeding $112,500.

3. That the subsidies hereinbefore mentioned as to be granted to companies named for that purpose shall, if granted by the Governor in Council, be granted to such companies respectively; the other subsidies may be granted to such companies as shall be approved by the Governor in Council as having established to his satisfaction their ability to construct and complete the said railways respectively; all the lines for the construction of which subsidies are granted, unless they are already commenced, shall be commenced within two years from the first day of August next, and completed within a reasonable time, not to exceed four years from the said first day of August, to be fixed by Order in Council, and shall also be constructed according to descriptions and specifications and upon conditions to be approved by the Governor in Council, on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and specified in an agreement to be made in each case by the company with the Government, which agreement the Government is hereby empowered to make; the location also of every such line of railway shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council.

4. That the granting of such subsidies respectively shall be subject to such conditions for securing such running powers or traffic arrangements and other rights as will afford all reasonable facilities and equal mileage rates to all railways connecting with those so subsidized, as the Governor in Council determines.

5. That the said subsidies respectively shall be payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, by instalments, on the completion of each section of the railway of not less than ten miles, proportionate to the value of the portion so completed in comparison with that of the whole work undertaken, to be established by the report of the said Minister, or upon the completion of the work subsidized—except as to subsidies with respect to which it is hereinbefore otherwise provided.

6. Any company receiving a subsidy as aforesaid, in excess of $3,200 per mile, shall be bound to carry Her Majesty's mails for a term of ten years free of charge over the portion of railway subsidized.

Motion agreed to.

ABSENCE OF MEMBERS.

Mr. TAYLOR. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to read a paragraph that appears on the editorial page of the Montreal "Gazette" of yesterday, which is as follows :

Something like a trap appears to have been laid for the Conservative members at Ottawa. It is usual, towards the close of a session, and when all the Government business is done, for the Speaker to issue an order to pay the members their full indemnity. Speaker Edgar, it seems, gave instructions that all who had made a full "pair," should be paid, but no others. With the Government's large majority in the House of Commons, the Liberals could pair off with most of the Conservatives and still have more than a quorum to run through their deals.

I think it is due to you, Mr. Speaker, that I should say that if there is any blame to be attached to any person, none whatever can be attached to yourself. You have simply followed the course of your predecessors in years gone by. As I stated the other day, when the leader of the Government and the leader of the Opposition thought they saw the end of the session, they approached the Speaker, and asked his consent to allow the members to go in pairs. You, Sir, consented, as the Speakers in former years have done when the leader of the Government and the leader of the Opposition agreed, and pairs were made and certified by the Whips. This year, when you were spoken to, the Bill allowing the twelve days had not passed the Senate, and you declined to give your consent until the Bill had passed the Senate. When that was done, you allowed the members to go. So that I think the papers should not comment on your action, for if any one is to blame, it is not you.

Mr. FOSTER. If you would allow a suggestion on this matter, I think it would be well for this House to come to the conclusion at once to obey the law. The Speaker is continually getting into trouble, there is dissatisfaction on both sides of the House, and this practice has the effect of depleting Parliament at a time when it is important that members should be here. I know that members are anxious to get away, but the public business should be the paramount consideration, and I suggest whether it would not be better for us to take the dignified course and obey the law.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What was the practice under the old Administration ?

Mr. FOSTER. The practice under the old Administration was this. Two days, or about that, not more, before it was certain that the House would prorogue, members were allowed to draw their indemnity.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It was several days before.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, if my hon. friend wants to discuss the question, we will take it up. I was simply making a suggestion which I think is in accordance with the dignity of Parliament and in the public interest.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would like to state to the House that what was done by former

Mr. MULOCK.

Speakers and has been done by myself, as explained by the Whip of the Opposition, has been for the convenience of members and at the request of the leaders on both sides. It was done on this occasion at the request of the leader of the Opposition before he left. So that there is no difference, so far as I know, in what has been done on this occasion from what was done on former occasions. It is to a certain extent irregular, and I was not anxious to do it, and did it largely against my own wishes ; and I made up my mind, as I stated the other evening when the matter was spoken of unfavourably by a couple of members in Committee of Supply, that it would not occur again. I made up my mind to that course, and I am strengthened in that decision by the observations which have just been made.

LOAN OF $15,000,000.

The House resolved itself into committee to consider a certain resolution respecting the raising by way of loan such sum or sums of money, not exceeding in the whole the sum of $15,000,000.

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). This resolution calls for authority to be given to the Governor in Council to raise from time to time by way of loan sums not exceeding $15,000,000. Of course, by the House and by those familiar with questions of public finance, the nature of a Loan Bill is well understood ; but there is a tendency outside to confuse it with an Appropriation Bill, and to regard a measure of this kind as an authority to expend so many millions in excess of what has already been agreed upon. It is, perhaps, hardly necessary to emphasize the fact that a Loan Bill is not an Appropriation Bill, and this measure will not in itself give the Government authority to expend one dollar. Parliament from time to time, in addition to the ordinary expenditures of the country, which are payable out of revenue, votes sums of money for the public service which are chargeable to capital account ; but at the time these appropriations are made, provision is not made for raising the money. That has always to be dealt with as a separate matter, and hence the passage of the Loan Bills from time to time. It is not expedient to have loans passed every session, and consequently these Bills are only introduced at intervals and for a sufficient sum to meet the wants of the Dominion for a reasonable time. The last Loan Bill was passed in 1888. At that time there was an outstanding authority to borrow to the extent of $26,082,681, as shown by the Public Accounts of the 30th June, 1887. Some change in the borrowing power took place between that time and the session of 1888, but substantially the position was the same. In 1888, however, an Act was passed granting borrowing powers to the extent of $25,000,000, which, adding the $26,000,000 already outstanding, raised the borrowing powers of the Government to $51,000,000. We do not think it is necessary that we should ask for any such authority, but we ask for a sum which we think will be sufficient to meet the requirements of the Dominion for a shorter period than was contemplated in the Loan Bill of 1888.

I have here a statement showing the borrowing powers held by the Government in a series of years from 1887 to 1896 :

Borrowing powers, 30th June, 1887....	$26,082,681
do do 1888....	48,926,607
do do 1889....	37,764,954
do do 1890....	40,219,325
do do 1891....	37,421,597
do do 1892....	34,161,212
do do 1893....	29,714,379
do do 1894....	22,932,721
do do 1895....	13,121,015
do do 1896....	8,613,422

It will be seen that the borrowing powers of the Government have now fallen to a comparatively low amount and that it is necessary, in view of the expenditure of the Government which has been authorized by Parliament, that we should ask the sanction of the House to a Loan Bill giving us authority to borrow what may be required from time to time, not exceeding a total of $15,000,000, which, added to the $8,000,000 outstanding, will give the Government a borrowing power of $23,000,000, as against $51,000,000 in 1888, when the last Loan Bill was passed.

As to the matters to which these $15,000,000 may be applied, there are outstanding temporary loans to the amount, in round numbers, of £1,000,000 stg., or $5,000,000. Of these, $2,000,000 were contracted by my predecessor shortly before his retirement, and $3,000,000 by myself shortly afterwards. There are therefore $5,000,000 of temporary loans to meet in the first instance. The appropriations on capital account for the coming year are very considerable. The largest of them, of course, is in relation to canals, for which we ask a very considerable sum owing to the desire of the Government to prosecute these great enterprises to an early completion. Taking the items chargeable to capital account in the Estimates, we have $7,052,214 as the amount. Then the Crow's Nest Railway will call for $3,630,000, and the treasury Bills to which I have referred amount to $5,000,000, making an aggregate of $15,000,000, besides which there are railway subsidies, some portion of which will be called for. Of course, the expenditure on Crow's Nest Railway will not all be called for in the first year, but it is not unreasonable to suppose that we will require $15,000,000 within the next two or three years. In view of the figures I have mentioned, it will, I think, be seen that the proposal of the Government is altogether a moderate and reasonable one.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no intention of making any prolonged discussion on this. My hon. friend is quite right in saying that borrowing power is not synonymous with appropriation, but it is equally right to say that borrowing power is the natural result of making appropriations, and I have no doubt at all that my hon. friend has based the borrowing power he is asking for upon that and nothing else.

The large borrowing power which the hon. gentleman has said existed in 1888 would be, of course, misunderstood unless the fact were taken into account that a large proportion of that was limited to conditions which made it practically unavailable, for instance in connection with the Intercolonial Railway. However, the general assumption is, of course, correct, that a Government is not to be judged by the borrowing power it takes, but by what it actually expends. I understand that the total borrowing power which the Government will have, if this passes, will be $23,600,000 in round numbers.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Where are these temporary loans running?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They are all contracted in London. Although a portion was contracted with the Bank of Montreal, it is really a London transaction, and a portion of it is with an English bank.

Mr. FOSTER. What bank?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The National Provincial Bank.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the loan contracted with the Bank of Montreal under the condition that the Bank of Montreal may associate with another bank in London?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The condition respecting the association with other banks has relation to the floating of permanent loans and not temporary.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the hon. gentleman undertaking to make temporary loans with other banks than the Montreal Bank?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have made a temporary loan with a bank other than the Bank of Montreal.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish my hon. friend would be kind enough to bring down a statement with reference to that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I can tell the hon. gentleman. We have £400,000 stg. of these loans, roughly speaking, $2,000,000, with the National Provincial Bank. The remainder, $5,000,000, is entirely with the Bank of Montreal. We are arranging now to renew the loans, but as the transaction is now pending I do not think I can state the rate, but it is a very profitable rate indeed.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman propose to put a loan on the British market this year?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A portion of the $10,000,000 probably will be placed on the market this fall.

Mr. FOSTER. $5,000,000 as a temporary loan is a very large amount to be running for any length of time. I quite appreciate that the time for putting on a loan must be a matter for consideration by the Finance Minister himself. It is sometimes better to run a large temporary loan than to take the market at a disadvantageous time; but if the market is in a favourable condition, it is better to have the loan in permanent form.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I quite agree in the views expressed by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) and the course he has indicated is that which will probably be pursued. But I may say that the rate at which we are borrowing temporarily at the present moment is a very favourable one, indeed.

On resolution 2,

2. That the sums of money hereby authorized to be raised by way of loan shall be so raised in accordance with and under the provisions of that portion of chapter twenty-nine of the Revised Statutes of Canada relating to the public debt and the raising of loans authorized by Parliament; and the sums so raised shall form part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada: Provided always, that the rate of interest to be paid on any loan to be raised hereunder shall not exceed four per centum per annum.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not see why my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) cannot make that 3½ per cent. I think he will be perfectly safe in doing so. Keeping it in the statute at 4 per cent really does not put the credit of Canada where it ought to be. I cannot conceive of any circumstances that can arise to prevent the Government from borrowing at 3½ per cent or less than 3½ per cent. I just throw out the suggestion whether it would not be wise to bring down the maximum credit limit of the country now to 3½ per cent. It would certainly strengthen us in this regard.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I rather think my hon. friend (Mr. Foster's) suggestion is a good one. We have always put the limit at 4 per cent, not as indicating the actual transaction but as a margin. I think we should be quite as safe at 3½ per cent as at 4. so I accept the hon. gentleman's suggestion, and move that the resolution be amended accordingly.

Amendment agreed to.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 148) authorizing the raising by way of loan of certain sums of money for the public service.

Mr. FOSTER.

CROW'S NEST PASS RAILWAY.

Bill (No. 146) to authorize a subsidy for a railway through the Crow's Nest Pass, was read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On paragraph (i),

Mr. FOSTER. In passing, I call the attention of the committee to an innovation made by this business Government. It seems it now proposes to put through its Acts in two sections, one contained in the Bill itself, and the other important ones contained in the resolution. I commend that as a very business-like operation. But what I want to call to the attention of my hon. friend is: If "the company, or any other company with whom it shall have any arrangement, by constructing the said railway or any part of it," it shall become entitled to get the lands, and then the Dominion Government shall have 50,000 acres of those lands. That is all conditional. It is possible then, so far as you can translate the language, that the Canadian Pacific Railway may get none of those lands, and if it gets none of them, then of course they cannot carry it out.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then they do not get any subsidy.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that stated?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is absolutely the case.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think that it is stated. The matter is so worded that the getting of 50,000 acres of land is entirely contingent, but there is no contingency about the payment of the $11,000 per mile as a subsidy. That may be in my hon. friend's mind, but it would be well to translate that into a binding Act of Parliament.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Among the conditions which are imposed upon the granting of the subsidies, is that an agreement shall be entered into providing for all these things that we have not embodied in these resolutions, all the terms, all the details of the agreement which is to be entered into. It is provided that the agreement shall contain, inter alia, the covenants not herein stated. I may say that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company thoroughly understands that they do not get one dollar of subsidy unless the land provided for shall be acquired by them and shall be made over to the Government. They understand that, and that will be embodied in the agreement.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend must see this: Once you have passed the law the Minister of Railways is bound by the law just as much as the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now, this starts out by saying: "Subject to the conditions hereinafter mentioned, the Governor in Council" may grant so and so. Now, one of the conditions is this one in paragraph (i), and it is purely a contingent condition. The Bill commences: "Subject to the conditions hereinafter mentioned," subject to these conditions the $11,000 is to be paid. Now, the conditions may be absolute or they may be contingent; if they are absolute, of course the company is bound to carry them out to the letter; if they are contingent, then of course they are not absolute, and the company is only bound to carry that out provided such and such takes place; and the proviso in this is that if the company get any lands, then 50,000 acres shall go to the Government. When this is passed, if the Canadian Pacific Railway does not become possessed of those lands, there is nothing in the Act at all which would debar the company that built the road, from getting $11,000 per mile; that is absolute. What does my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works say now? My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works is going to France, and to Germany, and all over the world to view public buildings—

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). I have not gone yet.

Mr. FOSTER—so that he may become an architect skilled in plans and the like of that. My hon. friend may go and have his visit, and it may be paid for by the country, but I would not give the snap of a finger for his architectural knowledge, even as well developed mentally as he is. Now, my hon. friend is not a lawyer, and I leave it to the lawyers in the House, to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, if conditions are attached to a grant and some are absolute and others are conditional, if this railway company carry out the absolute ones absolutely, and the contingent ones contingently, then, so far as the Act is concerned, if the company does not get possession of these lands, as that is a contingency, and the lands are not given by it, it has a right to demand the subsidy and must get it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The passing of this Act is only permissive. It only authorizes the Government, if they choose to do so, to enter into an agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway for the purposes of the construction of the road. It in no particular imposes an obligation upon the Government to do it, and it confers no right upon the Canadian Pacific to come to the Government and say, "You must enter into an agreement and you must give us a subsidy for the construction of this road. It is entirely optional, absolutely discretionary with the Government whether they should do it or not. The terms embodied in the Act are the result of a long discussion. It was impossible for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company absolutely to agree that it should hand over these lands, because they do not know absolutely that the lands will be theirs, but it is clearly and explicitly understood that unless the Canadian Pacific Railway do acquire these lands they will not be entitled to receive one dollar of subsidy from the Government, and I state most emphatically to this committee that such a clause will be embodied in the agreement, should we, in the end, be in a position to enter into an agreement.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has acknowledged the whole principle and basis of my contention. He has explicitly stated that in the contingency of it being impossible to get the land the company cannot hand over the 50,000 acres. But the Minister says that this Act does not oblige him to enter into any contract. We are placing $3,630,000 in the hands of this Government and we are voting that money under certain conditions. The Minister says that one of the conditions is that unless the company is in a position to hand over the lands, no agreement will be entered into. That is a contingency. I ask my hon. friend the Minister of Railways, is it absolutely understood that if the Canadian Pacific Railway cannot guarantee 50,000 acres of these lands that the Crow's Nest Pass Railway will not be built subject to these conditions?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Crow's Nest Pass Railway will not be subsidized by this Government, at all events, unless Parliament shall again be referred to, upon these terms, upon the terms of giving $11,000 a mile, unless the Canadian Pacific Railway put themselves in a position to assign to the Government, 50,000 acres of coal lands.

Mr. FOSTER. I think Parliament, if it is going to affix the conditions at all should make them absolute and that they should not be left to the Minister of Railways and Canals. This is an important matter we are considering, and we should lay the conditions down straight and plain.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What does the hon. member (Mr. Foster) propose? The subject to which he has referred has been very much discussed, both by the Canadian Pacific Railway and ourselves. However, if the hon. gentleman has any words which he would suggest, let him propose them, and I will consider whether I will consent to adding them to the Act. But I may say that the addition of any words which will vary the terms of the proposal as they are submitted might involve the contingency as to whether or not the Canadian Pacific Railway will be in a position to comply with them.

Mr. FOSTER. When the Minister of Railways and Canals brought this proposition down and recommended it to the House, of granting $11,000 a mile there were no ifs nor ands nor buts about it. The great recommendation of the Minister was that we would get 50,000 acres of land and that this would preclude all possibility of a coal monopoly. Now, it seems that this is only a condition. To leave the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to arrange the conditions outside of Parliament would be giving to him the right, ultimately, to grant the $11,000 per mile without getting these 50,000 acres of coal lands which was to be one of the chief compensating conditions.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is perfectly right in bringing this matter to the attention of the committee, but the substance of these resolutions was arrived at only after a great many consultations were held between the lawyers on both sides and the managers of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Every word of these resolutions was thoroughly weighed, and I am not able to conceive at the present time, any other language which could be used to express the meaning. The Canadian Pacific Railway have not yet, in a legal or technical sense, possession of these lands.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They have not even a contract with the British Columbia Southern.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. But they state that they will be in a position to carry out the agreement, and we say that the whole condition of granting this subsidy is that 50,000 acres of land shall be placed under our control.

Mr. FOSTER. If they cannot get that land they cannot get the subsidy. I for one would never consent, never have consented, to an agreement voting so much money to the Canadian Pacific Railway unless it were made conditional upon our securing such a portion of these coal lands as would obviate the possibility of any monopoly in future. It strikes me that no other language could be employed in the resolutions to better express the meaning. I could suggest words in plain English which would carry out the intention, that it shall be a condition, absolute, to the granting of $11,000 a mile that 50,000 acres of these coal lands shall be handed over.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is a very simple matter to suggest words and propose their incorporation in this proposal, but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has not been through the negotiations. The situation is this: The Canadian Pacific Railway had an agreement with the British Columbia Southern Railway Company under which the Canadian Pacific Railway were entitled to receive 5,000 acres of land, and only 5,000 acres.

Mr. FOSTER.

When they came to negotiate with us, and to hear the terms we imposed upon them, they said: "We have not 50,000 acres of land, we have only 5,000 acres." We said: "You can get an agreement for 50,000 acres of land, and unless you undertake to give us 50,000 acres, you will not get this subsidy." They said: "If you incorporate that in the agreement now, the Canadian Pacific Railway will be wholly in the hands, and under the control of the British Columbia Southern."

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Railways and Canals has stated absolutely, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has echoed it, that unless 50,000 acres of land are given, this contract will not be signed. With the declaration of the Minister of Railways and Canals and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, which is the declaration of the Government wafted to the ears of the British Columbia Southern, the Canadian Pacific Railway are just as much in the power of the British Columbia Southern Railway as they would be under any agreement made absolute in this contract. But now all this certainty of getting this 50,000 acres of land is involved in contingency, and it must be approached with fear and trembling because this British Columbia Southern will hold the Canadian Pacific Railway at their mercy. I would like to know what kind of a meal this British Columbia Southern Company is going to have. They build no railway; they get 250,000 acres of land of invaluable worth; they toil not, neither do they spin, and, up to the present moment, the Minister of Railways and Canals is in grave doubt as to whether they will not hold the Canadian Pacific Railway corporation under their thumb, in respect to getting this 50,000 acres of land. All the explicitness and definiteness of the Minister of Railways and Canals when he was proposing this vote to the House has vanished in thin air, and this British Columbia Southern Railway Company, with its enormous privileges, and its concession of 250,000 acres of valuable coal lands is going to hold the Canadian Pacific Railway in its tetracles.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to ask the Minister, what is the necessity for putting in the requirement with regard to the disposal of the balance of the land, at such price as the Governor in Council shall decide; if, as the Minister says, they were only to get 5,000 acres a mile and that was to be passed over to the Government. There will be evidently no balance of land to dispose of, and this regulation is misleading to the House and the country, because the impression would be created that they were getting the 450,000 acres, whereas in reality they are only getting 5,000 acres a mile, which is passed over to the Government. I object to this, in the first place, because it is not in the Act. We have only one portion of the Act as an enactment, and then we pass resolutions that are not in the Act, but which are to be added to it when it leaves this House. That is an innovation in the usages of Parliament which this House should not consent to. It is unfair to us, and it is very irregular. It was evidently contemplated by a provision in the resolution that the Canadian Pacific Railway would not get the full amount which it was represented they were likely to get from the British Columbia Southern Railway. It seems to me that the deal is this: whoever own the British Columbia Southern Railway, whether it be Jaffray and Cox as we are told by the press, they have made a capital bargain with this Government, and a capital bargain with the British Columbia Government. They first get 250,000 acres of coal lands from the British Columbia people for the construction of this line, and then they make a bargain whereby they relinquish 50,000 acres, and keep 200,000 acres to themselves. Then they have got this Government to provide the balance of the subsidy necessary for building this road. The British Columbia Government gave them 250,000 acres believing it was necessary to give that to get the railway; but the parties having control of that company, have succeeded in a deal by which they pocket the proceeds of 200,000 acres of these coal lands, and get the railway built by giving 50,000 acres. There is some one behind this deal who is operating it very nicely, and if it is not a grand steal, it will be at least a grand speculation for them, out of which the country does not get any benefit at all.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What do you refer to in that connection?

MR. SPROULE. I say that the provision is that they get 250,000 acres of land from the British Columbia Government if they build the railway.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A great deal more than that.

MR. SPROULE. That is the mineral land.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are 250,000 acres estimated as coal lands.

MR. SPROULE. Out of the coal lands they are receiving, they give us 50,000 acres, and they have 200,000 acres for themselves, and are certainly making a good deal. The Minister tells us that he is determined that we shall not enter into an agreement for the building of this railway, without the express understanding that this land shall be given to us. However, the Act only provides that they shall give the land to us if they get it. If this Government were defeated, or if the Minister of Railways died, and some one else took his place, we would have nothing to fall back upon but the bare Act of Parliament, and the Act only provides, that if they do not get the lands they will be under no obligation to give us any. We would nevertheless be called upon to pay $11,000 a mile all the same. Under these circumstances the provisions which the Government say they have made to prevent a monopoly of the coal lands, is not worth anything at all.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) has failed to grasp the facts in connection with this transfer, or otherwise he would not have passed the criticism which he has. He appears to be under the impression that 250,000 acres only, or whatever the quantity is, of coal bearing lands are to be earned as a subsidy by this road. The facts are entirely otherwise. The subsidy which has been promised to be given by the British Columbia Government to the British Columbia Southern Railway Company, amounts to 20,000 acres per mile, and for 300 miles that would be 6,000,000 acres.

MR. SPROULE. I understood that included in that, there were 400,000 acres of mineral land.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Included in the six million acres would be the coal lands which are estimated to amount to about 250,000 acres.

MR. SPROULE. And out of that 250,000 acres the Government is to get 50,000 acres.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. And out of the coal bearing lands, whether they amount to 250,000 acres or less, the Government is to get 50,000 acres. The balance of the lands which are referred to here, and which the Government will take power to regulate the sale of and fix the price of, are largely timber lands, and perhaps might be described as mineral lands other than coal. We have taken these powers with a view of preventing these timber lands, or mineral lands, from being held by the company as a monopoly. Now, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company get the British Columbia Southern Company, under their arrangement, all the lands except the coal bearing lands. Therefore, assuming that the area of coal bearing lands would be 250,000 acres, they would get the six million acres less the 250,000 acres. Now, of these 250,000 acres, they have engaged with us that they will get from the British Columbia Southern Company 50,000 acres, instead of 5,000 as was first provided for, and these 50,000 acres they will make over to us. The ex-Minister of Finance says, that this agreement does not contain an explicit statement, that the giving of these 50,000 acres shall be a condition precedent to the company getting its subsidy. That subject was very fully discussed between the representatives of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and those who were acting for the Government, myself among the number; and it was said by the Canadian Pacific Railway people to us: If you insist upon incorporating in this memorandum the condition, that the 50,000 acres must be given by us at all hazards, whether they are earned or not from the British Columbia Government, or whether they are received or not under the agreement with the British Columbia Southern Company; you will enable the British Columbia Southern Company to impose any terms which they may choose upon us, because they will see that we are under obligation to the Government absolutely and they will say: Yield these terms to us or we won't move a peg. We said in reply to that: That is reasonable on the face of it, but nevertheless you must consider yourself as absolutely bound when this agreement is entered into, to agree to the condition that 50,000 acres must be acquired by you, and must be made over to the Government, or otherwise, not one dollar of subsidy will be paid. They agreed to that.

The hon. gentleman says: You are making that public now. True, so we are; but many days have elapsed since these conditions were agreed upon, and I believe the Canadian Pacific Railway Company immediately set themselves to work as soon as we came to an understanding, and I have no doubt that at this moment a new contract has been executed between the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the British Columbia Southern; so that any announcement now made, and which may be communicated to the British Columbia Southern, is not likely to be attended with any of the consequences which I mentioned a little while ago, and with which it would have been attended at the period when these negotiations took place. As to whether the British Columbia Southern is getting these 200,000 acres from the British Columbia Government without a sufficient consideration, that is a matter with which we are not concerned. We came to the conclusion, after mature consideration, that we would not be justified in disallowing the Act, and, seeing that the British Columbia Government chose to give to the British Columbia Southern Railway Company all these privileges and this land grant, it was not a question for us whether they were giving them improvidently or not. All we thought we were in duty bound to do, having regard to the general public interest, was to see that we exercised sufficient control over these lands to prevent them being held as a monopoly. Beyond that we have not felt that we were called on to go, and it is entirely beside the question to say that the British Columbia Southern Company are getting 200,000 acres of coal lands for nothing. I do not know whether what they say is correct or not; but they say that they have expended $100,000 in connection with their charter, and in the way of developing those lands, and in connection with railway building. Whether that is correct or not I do not know. I have been informed by Mr. J. D. Chipman that the British Columbia Southern Company, of which his brother-in-law, now deceased, of Toronto, was a member, had paid $100,000 in cash into this enterprise. So that they are not getting the land for nothing, as the hon. gentleman says. I do not know whether that is a fair consideration; I am not concerned in that. All we are concerned in is, so far as our power lies, in seeing that no monopoly shall exist in coal lands or in any other lands gained by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and I think we have accomplished that object.

Mr. FOSTER. I must say I think this is the most extraordinary presentation of a case that I have heard from a Minister of the Crown. In the first place, the hon. gentleman tried to saddle on me the responsibility of placing the Canadian Pacific Railway Company at the mercy of the British Columbia Southern Company. Why, Sir, who put the Canadian Pacific Railway Company at the mercy of the British Columbia Southern Company? The Minister of Railways himself ten or fifteen days ago, when he stated positively, over and over again, that this subsidy would not be given until 50,000 acres of these coal lands were negotiated for by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and were handed over to this Government. His whole argument was based upon that. Having taken that basis, his argument went, not upon an assumption, but upon a certainty. What did he say?

I am not quite familiar with the details of the arrangement concluded between the British Columbia Southern Railway Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway, but I am well aware, from the information I have received from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, that they will be in a position to carry out the terms of the proposal which we make to them, namely, the condition which we impose upon them before they can get any subsidy for this road, to give us a title in fee of 50,000 acres of these coal lands.

The Minister's statement pledged the Government. The wires are all up. The British Columbia Southern managers, even if they were farther away than Toronto, could very soon get the Minister's declaration; and if they wanted to squeeze the company, what better instrument as a squeezer would they need than the declaration of the Minister of Railways and Canals made in Parliament in the face of the whole country that 50,000 acres of land were to come before this contract was settled? It was the hon. gentleman himself who put the Canadian Pacific Railway Company into the hands of the British Columbia Southern Company, if it has been done.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. member is saying that I stated in this House that 50,000 acres would be received by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company before the contract was let. I did not say that.

Mr. FOSTER. Before any subsidy was given

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is another thing.

Mr. FOSTER. Is my hon. friend as a business man willing to state that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will undertake to construct the road without having a hard and fast arrangement that they will get $11,000 a mile?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, they want a hard and fast arrangement.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, will my hon. friend let the contract before he makes these conditions with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am complaining of your attributing language to me different from what I used.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman let the contract to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company before he gets that condition fulfilled in black and white?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly not.

Mr. FOSTER. Five minutes ago he declared that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company should not get a dollar of this subsidy until they made it clear and absolute that they would get these 50,000 acres, and would hand them over.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I say so still.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). You do not listen to his statement, and then you go on arguing, assuming that he made a statement which he did not make. He has told you that he would have the provision in the contract which you are referring to.

Mr. FOSTER. And then he states that he will make the contract without the provision.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, he did not say anything of the kind.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That will be in the contract.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend stated that on the 18th of June. Then, my hon. friend made the statement which puts the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, as he states, in the power of the British Columbia Southern to be squeezed with reference to those 50,000 acres of land. There is no getting out of that. The trouble has all arisen from the fact that on the 18th of June the Minister of Railways put before this House as a certainty what he states to-day as a contingency; and now, to get himself out of the difficulty, he again represents it as a certainty. He says that since his statement on the 18th of June, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have been at work, and he has no doubt that the arrangement has been made by which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have made sure that they will get these lands; and now he says you must not put the condition in, because it will put the Canadian Pacific Railway Company into the power of the British Columbia Southern to be squeezed with reference to these lands. These are the difficulties which the hon. gentleman gets himself and his party into by making statements from time to time which are diverse from each other. When the hon. gentleman was in British Columbia, there were no words too strong for him. He stood before admiring crowds and declared that the British Columbia Southern Company had an infamous franchise attached to their charter, and were getting all these valuable lands for nothing. To-day my hon. friend is not concerned with the British Columbia Southern, and declares that he has nothing to do with that. He says they probably paid $100,000 for all that block of 250,000 acres of valuable coal lands. When among the British Columbia mountains he roared like a lion; but when he is back here he is as tame as a sucking dove.

When the hon. gentleman was in the mountains, he inspired in the heart of every miner and prospector and ardent British Columbian the hopeful feeling: Here is a man who is bound to have a Government railway constructed. But when he comes back, he is taken by the collar by his colleagues and quietly told that the road is to be constructed by the Canadian Pacific Railway at a subsidy of $11,000 per mile. What consolation will the hon. gentleman give the Rossland Miner out at Rossland, which has some admiring correspondent here—probably the hon. gentleman is not present in the House now—who every day sent a wire as follows:—Blair stands firm; Blair will not talk with Shaughnessy and Van Horne; Blair is bound to see that British Columbia gets her rights. The other night a strong meeting was held at Trail, which sent telegrams to the man who was to stand firm by British Columbia, and see that she got what she wanted, asking why the Heinze proposal was not carried out. The hon. gentleman was in favour of it, body and bones, but now the people of Trail have ample opportunity to repent for the implicit confidence they reposed in this man who was to stand so firmly by their rights. And yet, no doubt to-day and to-morrow these same telegrams will go forth: Blair will stand firm; Tupper got roasted.

Mr. SPROULE. Notwithstanding all that has been said, I still hold we should put some provision in the Bill that would make it compulsory that we should get these lands.

That if the company, or any other company with whom it shall have any arrangement on the subject shall, by constructing the said railway or any part of it, as stipulated for in the said agreement, become entitled to and shall get any lands as a subsidy from the Government of British Columbia which, in the opinion of the Director of the Geological Survey of Canada (expressed in writing), are coal-bearing lands, then the company will cause to be conveyed to the Crown in the interest of Canada a portion thereof to the extent of fifty thousand acres, the same to be of equal value per acre as coal lands with the residue of such lands.

That is the plain simple wording of the resolution, and that will be binding if this Bill is passed. No matter what additional contract the Governor in Council may enter into with the company, this is the plain wording of the resolution, and the Canadian Pacific Railway would claim a fair interpretation of it. It seems to me before we pass this measure, we should make a provision stipulating that this land must be handed over to the Government.

There is another feature to which I intend to refer. The province of British Columbia gave a certain quantity of land for the construction of the railway. The company agreed to build it for that consideration, and what other assistance it could get, and that consideration was supposed sufficient by the British Columbia Government without any additional assistance from the Dominion. The Dominion Government, in making the contracts for building a railway through British Columbia, should take into account the consideration which British Columbia has given. The amount given by the province is 250,000 acres of coal lands, and of that we will only be entitled to 50,000 acres. The company may retain 200,000 for themselves. But do we get that 50,000 absolutely? We do not. The Bill provides that we shall get this land only provided the Canadian Pacific Railway get it. If they get it, we get it. The Bill does not provide that we shall get it absolutely, so that the Dominion Government may get none of the coal lands whatever. Now, we understood that the coal lands had passed over and that the Canadian Pacific Railway had an absolute right to them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How could that be possible when the land subsidy would not be earned until the railway was built?

Mr. SPROULE. This Act provides that it shall be built. The assumption is that the road is going to be built in order to earn the subsidy given by the British Columbia Government. We assume that the Canadian Pacific Railway will build this railroad, but they may not build it to the satisfaction of the British Columbia Government and may only get the subsidy given by the Dominion Government. In that event, we will get no coal lands, and there would be no provision to guard against monopolies, because the people who own the British Columbia Southern charter would open coal lands all over. I would like to have the names of the hon. gentlemen who hold the British Columbia Southern charter to-day, so that we might see who they are and might know what influences are operating to prevent the country getting its rights. We should know if it was a fact that the "Globe" newspaper is manipulated by this company and if the Canadian Pacific Railway is being manipulated by this company. We should know who are negotiating the deal and who are behind it. And if we had the information we might find that some of the members of this House or the Upper Chamber are the men negotiating the deal.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Railways if the Canadian Pacific Railway, in addition of getting the timber and land of these 6,000,000 acres gets the mineral rights over the area as well?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The mineral rights upon that area will, no doubt, pass to the grantee of the soil, subject to the mining regulations and other conditions that are imposed by the British Columbia Government—that is, save and except the royal metals, gold and silver. Other minerals are subject to a commission or royalty to the British Columbia Government, and I think there is a condition which applies to all the lands which are given by way of subsidies, this condition being that the land must be sold on application, and, I think, at a price not exceeding $5 per acre. That is my impression.

Mr. WALLACE. Then we understand it that the Canadian Pacific Railway, or British Columbia Southern, or whoever may have these six million acres of land, are getting not only the land and the timber, but they are to have the exclusive right to ten thousand square miles—because that is the area of a grant of land of 20,000 acres for 330 miles—of the richest land in British Columbia, and they are to have the power to exclude a miner or prospector who may come—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think so.

Mr. WALLACE. But the hon. gentleman has told us so. He has told us that they become absolute owners, subject to the same regulations and conditions as the miners who go there and take up a claim.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I did not say that.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman said that they would be subject to the British Columbia regulations with regard to mines. Those regulations provide that the miner may go and take up a claim and then he has to fulfil certain conditions afterwards. The British Columbia Southern, or the Canadian Pacific Railway, or whoever may have these six million acres of lands, stand in the place of the British Columbia Government, so far as ownership is concerned, and no one can have a right to go in there and take those mines, because the right of the British Columbia Government is transferred. So that 10,000 square miles of what is now known to be a most valuable mining property—the most valuable in the world, I believe—is to be handed over absolutely to these parties.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Has not anybody a right to go in and stake out a prospect in any part of the Crown lands?

Mr. WALLACE. I presume it cannot be done in these lands if the fee simple is transferred—the fee not only in the land and timber, but in the minerals as well.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Gold and silver always excepted.

Mr. FOSTER. They do not go with the land.

Mr. WALLACE. But the hon. Minister has told us that the mineral rights are transferred with the land.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Except the royal metals, which are reserved under all grants—that is my impression.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. Minister can only tell us his impression. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) asked the Minister to say who were these British Columbia Southern people, these favoured children of fortune, who have, as the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) has said, acquired an immense franchise and property without doing anything for them. The Minister of Railways and Canals has said a great deal about this mythical company and its having spent $100,000 in development and in starting to build a railway. I do not believe they spent a dollar in building a railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That has nothing to do with it.

Mr. WALLACE. If the Government do not care about whether this money has been spent or not, they are in the same position as when they had the power to disallow a most iniquitous Bill, a Bill which the Minister of Railways and Canals himself, in British Columbia, declared to be an infamous one—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not at all.

Mr. WALLACE. Was not that his language or was it stronger?

Mr. FOSTER. It is only just to say that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) had a locum tenens who used a good deal of the strong language.

Mr. WALLACE. He had a wicked partner, as it were.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Who was a little too many for the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster).

Mr. FOSTER. Quite true. Virtue is not always triumphant.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister of Railways and Canals said that these gentlemen have expended $100,000. He has repeated that many times.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will tell the hon. gentleman what I said, if he can succeed in quoting me correctly. I have said that I was informed that these people had spent that amount of money. But I did not say of my own knowledge that they had done so.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman made that statement without being asked on this side, and he has claimed it as a virtue of these men.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) is quite mistaken.

Mr. WALLACE. How could they have put $100,000 into this scheme? They were doing no work. They simply stepped between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, who are constructing this road, and who are going to enjoy, apparently, an enormous share of the benefits that are to be secured. Now, with reference to the general question of building the road, the Minister in his speech introducing this measure to the House dilated upon the necessity for this line of railway. He told us that the mineral products of British Columbia last year were over $7,000,000, that they had more than doubled within the last three or four years, and that the greater part of the increase was from the West Kootenay country. And he said that it was essential to the development of that country that railway communication should be provided. Therefore, the argument was that this Crow's Nest Pass Railway must be built and must be built at once. But when does he propose to build it? He proposes that 200 miles of it shall be built by the end of 1898. And when will the other 130 miles be built? I would like to ask him if he has made any calculation as to the completion of that part of the road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Nothing has been concluded with regard to the building of any portion of it. The time has not been fixed by the Governor in Council for the completion of any part. I said I anticipated that the first 100 or 110 miles would be built by the end of the current year, and that the line to Kootenay Lake would be built at the end of the next year. As to the balance we have not come to any conclusion.

Mr. WALLACE. Where is the terminus of the road ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. At Nelson.

Mr. WALLACE. That is on Kootenay Lake ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It will be some sixty or eighty miles, perhaps 100 miles, from Nelson. It will be built along the shore of the lake for a considerable distance.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister said the first 100 miles would be built by January 1st next, and it is proposed to complete to Kootenay Lake, 200 miles, by the end of 1898.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the expectation.

Mr. WALLACE. Then where do the 330 miles come into Nelson ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My impression is that it is about 210 miles to Kootenay Lake; then the rest of the mileage is made up between Nelson and that point where the Kootenay Lake is first touched.

Mr. WALLACE. There cannot be 100 miles nor anything like it, because Kootenay Lake is not more than fifty to sixty miles north of Nelson.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is south of Nelson.

Mr. WALLACE. That makes it worse still; because it is certainly not 100 miles from Nelson to the boundary line. There should be some calculation made more accurate than that which the hon. gentleman has given to the House. The hon. gentleman has dilated upon the absolute necessity of building this Crow's Nest Pass Railway and his whole argument would lead the House to believe that there was no other means of communication. He has referred to other means of communication incidentally later on, but his whole argument in the opening part of his speech was that there must be a railway built if that country is to be developed. I will read one or two sentences that he uttered :

You cannot look for development to precede the construction of railways and the providing of transportation facilities. One is consequent upon the other, it is true, but the development is consequent upon the providing of these necessary facilities.

And further :

We must have the railway, if we are determined that we shall have that country developed in respect of these resources, which, I am led to believe, relying upon authoritative data, are practically inexhaustible.

Well, it will be a surprise to a person reading his speech to find that that country has been developed very largely by the constructing of railroads and by the utilization of two magnificent water stretches, the Kootenay Lakes on the eastward, running north and south, and the Arrow Lakes and the Columbia River westward, parallel to these two, furnishing lines of communication for the conveyance of traffic at a lower rate than railways can carry it, reaching points where roads cannot so well be constructed. So we have in these two lakes filled with lines of steamers promoting commerce, facilities for transportation to-day which the hon. gentleman never alluded to. We have a number of lines of railway there. From Spokane on the American side we have one line of railway running to Nelson in British Columbia, tapping the southern portion of the great silver district of British Columbia; we have a line branching off to Rossland, which is the centre, perhaps, of the gold-bearing district west of the Kootenay Lake. We have this, it is true, from American sources, carrying trade largely into the United States, still it is opening up and developing that country by railway. And what more have we? We have that short line from Trail to Rossland, and we have a longer and useful line from Kaslo into Slocan City, and into the very heart of the silver mining country. Now, these lines of railway are each connected either with water communication or with other lines of railway opening up and developing that country. This railway may be considered necessary to be built for other reasons, for putting trade into Canadian channels, and for furnishing a supply of coal for the opening up and the development of the country, still it is to-day being very rapidly improved with railway facilities. In addition to that, what more have we? We have the Canadian Pacific Railway Company themselves developing that country by lines of railway and a steamship company which they have acquired. Starting from the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Revelstoke, they have a line down to Arrow Head. Then they have water communication down to Nakusp over a deep water lake, then they have a line of railroad from Nakusp into the silver-bearing country, thirty or forty miles long, and they are continuing that line down to connect with another line there. From Robson to Nelson by building one or two links in the chain, they will have a continuous railway communication not only into the silver-bearing district of the Slocan country, but right into Rossland. If this line reaches Kootenay at the end of next year, we may consider that it will be built on to Nelson to connect with the railway system, so in the year afterwards, that is in 1900, we will have this railway connection by the Crow's Nest Pass. But we can have it during the present season with a little energy and a little expenditure on the part of the Canadian Pacific Railway on the lines that they are building to-day; and we can have these short links that will connect the Canadian Pacific Railway from Revelstoke on the main line, with Rossland, the centre of the gold-bearing district. We have now connected that silver country to Slocan, and we can have the Canadian Pacific Railway with a little expenditure of money, getting into those two great centres of the gold and silver country of British Columbia without the enormous expenditure which would be entailed upon the country by the bargain which is now before the House. But when you come to examine that bargain, what do you find? You find, first, comparing that with the bargain made a year or more ago, by the Government of that day, that the present one is less advantageous, though the Minister of Railways and Canals told this House that he had made the best bargain he could possibly get, that no better terms could be got from the Canadian Pacific Railway. The terms that were submitted to the House a year ago by the late Government, I may say the House was not committed to, the Conservative party were not committed to, because they were not really submitted to the House for their consideration, but were on the Order paper as the proposal which, I presume, both the Government of that day and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had agreed to. But what is that bargain? Was it $11,000 a mile, as the hon. gentleman proposes to-day? Nothing of the kind. They were to give a subsidy of $5,000 a mile, or $1,650,000. There was a loan of $20,000 per mile at 3½ per cent, the Government taking out of that transaction $33,000 a year, or in twenty years $660,000. So they were building this complete at an actual cost to the Government of a trifle less than a million dollars, as against the $630,000 of saving by the latter proposal. Sir, I say that this bargain cannot be justified. It is true they say: We have railway possessions; and I will refer to that later.

Now here is another estimate: $1,650,000 at 3 per cent would be $49,500. The saving that we would make on the $6,600,000 which is the amount of the late Government's proposed loan to the Canadian Pacific Railway at ½ per cent would be $33,000, so that the former agreement would be just $16,500 a year as against the interest at 3 per cent on $3,630,000, which equals $109,-

000 a year, or a saving by the former plan in interest of $93,500 per annum. This is the difference between the two bargains with the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Minister of Railways tells us that this is the best bargain we can get or that they would consent to. The Government says: "Look at the terms we have made in regard to freight rates." If you calculate it at so much a bushel for so many bushels it is an enormous saving to the people of Manitoba and British Columbia. The Government say that the freight rates on this railway have been brought under the provisions of the General Railway Act. In my opinion that part of the bargain which says that the Crow's Nest Pass Railway shall come under the provisions of the General Railway Act is not worth five cents to this country. Can any hon. gentleman in this House tell me where the Government ever interfered and fixed the rates charged by any railway company in this country? I have no knowledge of that ever having been done, and I would like some one to inform the House whether there is a case in which the Government have stepped in and said: "The rates you are charging are too high; we will fix them." The Canadian Pacific Railway Company have to compete for trade. If they are to take the produce of the Northwest Territories into British Columbia they will have to do it at certain figures to meet the competition of the southern lines of railway which go into that country. One hundred miles to the south of British Columbia, in the United States, in the fertile Colville Valley they raise wheat which a few years ago they were selling at 17 cents a bushel, although the price is higher to-day. They are raising farm produce at prices with which people who live like civilized men cannot compete, because wheat cannot be grown in Canada for 17 cents a bushel. Competition with the United States will largely regulate the freight rates of the Canadian Pacific Railway and will bring them down. Last fall the Canadian Pacific Railway announced a reduction of from 25 to 35 per cent on many articles carried on the railway and the line of steamers on the lake connection into this country. They did this of their own motion as a business transaction. Recognizing the demands of trade and of competition they reduced their rates from 25 to 35 per cent on all freight going from the eastward into this part of British Columbia. I say that the bringing of this new company under the control of the General Railway Act is a concession which in my opinion is of no practical value whatever to the people of this country, but that the rates would be fixed by other considerations and that the Government will not be called upon and will not exercise any power in regard to the freight rates upon this line. One of the advantages claimed for the Crow's Nest Pass Railway is that it will secure for the people of British Columbia the benefits of the coal fields in the Crow's Nest Pass. In my opinion coal is not a very important matter because there are unlimited quantities of timber all through British Columbia, and the coal would simply come into competition with the timber. What is necessary for the smelting works and for the development of the country is that there should be a plentiful supply of coke at a low rate. The Minister of Railways and Canals has not stated to the House, nor have I heard any hon. gentleman on that side of the House state whether the coal of the Crow's Nest Pass is a coking coal.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think it is.

Mr. WALLACE. If it is it is satisfactory, but if it is not then this reason which was strongly urged would fail.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I cannot speak with absolute knowledge, but the question was repeatedly put to the authorities of the Canadian Pacific Railway who had made diligent inquiry into it, and they informed us that it was good coking coal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have the opinion of the Geological Department, and they give us a positive assurance as to the quality of certain of the extensive seams of coal for coking purposes.

Mr. FOSTER. It is first-rate for coking purposes.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1 o'clock, p.m.

Second Sitting.

FRIDAY, 25th June, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock p.m.

PRAYERS.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF DEBATES.

Mr. CHOQUETTE presented the second report of the select committee to supervise the official report of the Debates; as follows:—

Your Committee recommend that Mr. George Simpson who has, from the 14th instant, acted as a temporary substitute on the Official Reporting Staff in the place of Mr. Geo. B. Bradley, Chief Reporter, who, owing to illness, has become incapacitated for the present from performing his official duties, be paid for his services at the rate of $15.00 per day during the time he is engaged in the above capacity.

Mr. CHOQUETTE moved that the report be concurred in.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this merely a temporary appointment and just for the present session?

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand the report says $15 a day.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Yes. Mr. Simpson replaces Mr. Bradley, who is very ill.

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Simpson will not be on the staff after this session, of course.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Oh, no; Mr. Bradley will be better, and will take his place again.

Motion agreed to, and report concurred in.

DEATH OF MR. POULIOT, M.P.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). It is my painful duty to announce to this House the death of one of our colleagues, Mr. Pouliot, the member for Temiscouata. He was not an old member of this House, and owing to the state of his health it was not my good fortune to enjoy his intimate acquaintance; but there are circumstances connected with his decease which must appeal to every hon. gentleman here. I observe that Mr. Pouliot was barely in his 40th year, and he had a long life of usefulness apparently before him. As the House knows, it is not the first time in this Parliament, short as its duration has been, on which we have been called upon to lament the decease of one of our colleagues. If my memory serves me no less than three have passed away from our midst. As I said, I had not the pleasure of a sufficiently intimate acquaintance with Mr. Pouliot to speak as fully as I could wish of our deceased friend, but those who did know him assure me, that in him we have lost a friend and colleague who promised to be of extreme service, both to the political party to which he belonged and to the country at large. I can only say, and I am sure that both sides of the House will unite with me in this statement, that I extremely regret that a gentleman of such promise should have been cut off at this early age, at the very outset of his career in the Dominion Parliament.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I desire to join in what the leader of the House (Sir Richard Cartwright) has stated in reference to the loss which we experience in the death of Mr. Pouliot. Owing to the bad state of his health, we have not had the opportunity in this House to appreciate the high gifts and talents with which this Mr. Pouliot was endowed. He took a prominent position at the bar in Quebec, had distinguished himself at Laval University, and if his health had permitted, he would have been a most useful man in the House of Commons of Canada. I am quite certain that I voice the feeling of members on this side of the House, when I say that his loss is deeply regretted by those who had the advantage of his acquaintance, and I am sure that we all join in tendering to the family of Mr. Pouliot our deep sympathy in the sad loss which they have sustained.

Mr. TARTE. (Translation.) It was my privilege to enjoy the friendship of our deceased colleague, whose loss we all mourn. I had occasion to appreciate his merit, his virtues as a citizen and his qualities in social life. He had a kind heart and was an upright and honourable man. He studied law and was admitted to the Bar. In the practice of his profession, he rose to a prominent position, through his untiring industry and his unimpeachable integrity. Endowed with an ardent temperament, he was fond of public life. He sought parliamentary honours and was returned to the Quebec legislature, where he played an important part. At the last general elections, at the particular request of the Hon. Mr. Laurier, who held him in high esteem and reckoned upon him for future struggles, he consented to come forward as a candidate.

Before leaving the Capital, Mr. Pouliot wrote to me a feeling letter, in which he heartily thanked me for some small favour I had shown him. He added that the labours he had imposed upon himself in the interest of the Liberal party to which he had always belonged, had "drained his vitality." I take my last farewell of Ottawa, said he.

Mr. Pouliot was a sincere Christian; and he awaited fearlessly the summons of death. He took his departure for the unknown region, with the peace of a good conscience, which is the fit reward of all those who have passed through the world in doing good.

I have but one word to add: let our departed colleague rest in peace in the bosom of our common mother, the earth, the last abode of us all.

Mr. Fiset. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I deem it my duty, under the circumstances, to contribute my share of encomium and to pay a last tribute to the memory of our departed colleague. The death of our friend is a loss not only to his family, to his friends and to the constituency he represented here, but also to our province and to this House in particular. Under a modest and unassuming appearance, Mr. Pouliot possessed a noble soul. Owing to his uprightness and integrity, and his great legal mind. Mr. Pouliot commanded the respect of all those who were acquainted with him. Mr. Pouliot had a great many friends in this House and out of it. His characteristic feature, was, in addition to his kindness of heart, that he was earnestly devoted to his friends and to the constituency he represented in this House. In fact, the electors of Temiscouata, when they returned him to this House, were quite satisfied that they would find in their representative a man who would fearlessly advocate their interests on the floor of this House.

The words of comfort just fallen from the acting Prime Minister (Sir Richard Cartwright), the hon. member for Three Rivers and St. Maurice (Sir Adolphe Caron) and the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), will alleviate, in some measure, the sorrow of his friends and of his family in the sad loss which they have sustained.

BOUNTIES ON IRON AND STEEL.

The House resolved itself into committee on resolutions (page 4653) respecting bounties to iron and steel.

In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). This resolution has been the subject of discussion already in connection with the tariff, and I do not imagine it will be necessary to go into it to any length. The argument of course in favour of the resolution is: That Parliament had adopted a system of bounty as a means of aiding the iron industry, and in connection therewith the higher customs duties which hitherto prevailed. Under the new order of things the present tariff has considerably reduced the duties on iron and it was therefore thought expedient to assist the iron industry temporarily by giving it bounties to a larger extent. The object is, to some extent at all events, to make amends to the iron interests for the loss they will undoubtedly sustain by the lowering of the duties. I have no doubt there are in the minds of many hon. gentlemen objections to the system of bounties, but we have thought that as these interests were established and large capital invested in them, it was only reasonable that we should give them a chance to see what development might be possible for a few years longer. We have therefore come to the conclusion, in lieu of the higher duties which they formerly received, to ask the House to grant them increased bounties to the extent stated in the resolution. In all probability, we shall have to increase the payments to the various iron industries in the way of bounties, to the extent of over $100,000—$119,000 is our estimate.

Mr. FOSTER. What production do you estimate?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Assuming the production to be the same as in 1896, our estimate is 70,000 tons of pig iron produced from native and foreign ores in equal parts. You will observe there is a distinction of the rate of bounty on the iron from the native, and the iron from the foreign ore. Seventy thousand tons at $2.50 per ton amounts to $175,000. Upon iron puddled bars, we estimate 4,500 tons at $3 per ton making $13,500; and on the steel ingots we estimate 15,000 tons at $3 a ton making $45,000. That will be a considerable increase on the amount paid in bounties in times past.

Mr. FOSTER. That bounty then, that my hon. friend bases on that estimate, will amount to $233,500.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Has any change been made in these bounties from the time they were introduced subsequent to the lowering of the duty, up to the second bringing down of the tariff?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Mr. FOSTER. The Finance Minister does not think it is necessary to explain to the House how, if the bounties were meant as an amend to the iron industry for the reduction of the duties, and if, when the iron products were placed at a certain duty when the tariff was first brought down, it was the opinion of the Government that the proper compensation was figured out at that time, how it comes that when you reduce the duty on the iron, there is no corresponding increase in the bounty, in order to get at what the Government declared was the principle of compensation. Did anything occur between these two periods to render the position of the iron-makers any more advantageous, and does not my hon. friend think that if he was just at the first bringing down of his tariff, and only just, he is less than just if he does not revise these figures when he revises the duties on iron? It would be interesting to note the solidity of the conversion of the great Liberal party to the principle of paying bounties, which was so long a subject of horror to them.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. On the contrary, it is most objectionable to them.

Mr. FOSTER. This worst form of protection; but then it is only one of a piece with the many points of conversion. I do not know whether there is anything left in the whole round of fiscal policy where my hon. friends have found a hunting ground for change.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I thought you regarded this as an extremely free trade tariff.

Mr. FOSTER. It is pretty difficult to tell what kind of a tariff it is, I acknowledge. But has my hon. friend taken into account

Mr. FIELDING.

this fact—and this is a serious criticism. I believe there is a kind of iron made, notably in the province of Quebec, which is of a superior grade; different from the iron made in Nova Scotia. It is what is called charcoal iron, the large market for which is inevitably found outside of Canada; and when the condition is put down that you will not pay the bounty except on iron which is consumed in this country, the question is whether or not it is fair treatment to a very extensive industry, the distribution of labour in which is peculiar. The bog iron ore, which is the basis of the manufacture, is scattered over large areas, and is not mined by companies with company labour, so to speak, but is a source of labour to the farmers and inhabitants of large sections of the country who get out this bog iron ore just as in other sections of the country people get out pulpwood or cordwood. We have also the widely distributed industry of making charcoal, not by companies on an immense scale, but by every person who has suitable wood on his farm, and within fair distance of the mines. That utilizes a wood which is otherwise of very little profit, and is consequently a double benefit. In such an industry as that there must be much to commend it to the attention of the Government, as compared with an industry which you might call monopolistic, that is, in the hands of a great company. There is quite a difference between the two, as my hon. friend will see; and it does seem to me that when you impose the export condition, you are not giving even treatment, but are rather discriminating against an industry of that kind. You are making it a sharer in this advantage only so far as it can find a home market, which is necessarily limited for iron of that kind, but because it has to go abroad, it is punished in so far as it does not get the bounty. Again, it seems rather inconsistent to say to a manufacturer of agricultural implements, who imports iron and puts it into his machines, or, if he uses iron made here in Canada, getting it cheaper to the extent of the bounty, that he will get a rebate of the duty if he exports. I have no doubt that my hon. friend has thought of all these things. He knows now that there are more difficulties in tariff-making than he thought, when criticising the late Government. However, I put the case of this charcoal iron strongly to my hon. friend, and I think that if anything can be done to make the conditions more even for that great industry, it would be well to do it. After all, coming down to broad principles, is not the main object of giving this bounty to get the iron manufactured in this country—not so much that you want it used in this country as that you want it manufactured? Take all your bounties and duties off, and you would still have as much iron used in the country as before, perhaps more. You want to get it made in the country, simply because it is a great employer of labour; and what difference is there whether it finds a home market or a foreign market, so long as you accomplish that which is the only object for which you give a bounty? So long as you get the iron made in the country, do not put a disability upon the man who, by energy, enterprise, capital and skill in his manufacture, gets for himself a market in a foreign country for a very important Canadian product. I do not see, reasoning from these principles, why you should keep the condition in.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. With regard to the first question of the hon. gentleman, whether anything had occurred in the iron industry which had enabled us to make a reduction in the duties without compensation in the way of bounty, we did reach the conclusion that in the adjustment of the duties to the bounty in our first schedule we had not been as exact as we should have been. We have to consider the relation of one duty to another. It happens that one or two of these concerns, one notably, uses all the processes—raises the ore, makes it into pig iron, and converts the pig iron into steel billets; and it became necessary to consider these processes as separate industries for the purposes of our calculation. Treating them in that way, we came to the conclusion, having reference to the changes made in the duties, that we were a little too generous in the scale of bounties, and the change we make adapts the bounties to the scale of duties. We discussed that with gentlemen interested in the iron business, and I think we have satisfied them on that point. Whether in the main we are giving them sufficient bounties, is another question. The general principle of paying bounties on goods exported is open to very grave objection, and it would require a very strong case to justify it. But before the final stage of this matter is reached, I shall be happy to consider that question, and perhaps the wording may be so changed as to leave it to be dealt with on its merits in the light of further information.

Mr. FOSTER. I would just suggest to my hon. friend that if he considers this matter and comes to the conclusion—and I do not see anything in the way of his coming to a conclusion—to take off the condition, he would simplify the matter very much. Do not simply leave it for the Governor in Council to do, but let us make it, as we do all other conditions, a straight letter of the law. I would strongly counsel my hon. friend to take away the condition. I do not see a single argument on fair, broad ground that can be urged provided you look at what the bounty is really for. It is not so much to obtain the consumption of the goods at home as the labour and production; and the larger foreign market you can get, the more labour you will have in production.

Mr. CLANCY. If there is any object whatever in giving bounties, it is that the manufacturers may have some compensation for the reduction of their protection against foreign imports. If you give bounties in lieu of protective duties, you do it to attain the same result. If there is any possibility of making iron cheap to the consumer, it is by encouraging a large output. I am leaving out of the question the important feature of the labour that would be employed, but the hon. gentleman is no doubt well aware that the only chance of producing cheap goods is to afford the largest market to the manufacturer, so that he may not depend upon a large profit and small output, but upon small profits and large output. If our manufacturers are able to double their output, they will produce iron, not only for competition in the foreign market, but correspondingly cheap in our own country. I hope the hon. gentleman will decide not to narrow his bounty down to the iron produced for home consumption, but give it in the broadest sense.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I trust that the hon. Minister of Finance will see his way to meet the suggestion of the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) not to limit the payment of bounty to iron produced for consumption in Canada. Everybody realizes the importance of Canada producing at home the raw pig iron and steel she requires, and no doubt we all realize also that it is absolutely impossible in a country like ours, where the market is limited, to compete with other countries where the conditions are more favourable, without considerable assistance from the Government. It is pretty generally admitted that the foundation of nearly all our interests lies in the production in our factories of iron and steel, and it seems almost essential, if the policy of the Government is to be successful in securing production of this great material, which some people say is the raw material of almost all industries, that we should remove this restriction and place our iron producer in a position to compete in every market in the world. Our population is only 5,000,000, and, therefore, the home consumption is comparatively small, and if we cannot, at this stage, produce iron and steel in Canada without the assistance of bounties, it follows that in order to realize the full advantage from these bounties and get the advantage of the outside markets, this restriction should be removed. At present, I am informed by the iron producers of the county of Pictou that with the assistance of the bounties they are enabled to compete with British products, but that it is impossible to compete with the great iron-producing interests in the United States. The reason is that the operations in this country must be conducted on so limited a scale, so long as we are confined to the home market, that they cannot compete with the enormous industries of foreign companies, notably in Pittsburg. There is a single furnace in Pittsburg which has ten times the capacity of the furnaces of Ferrona in Pictou. It would be absolute waste of capital to erect such a furnace in Canada so long as our manufacturers are confined to the home market. Therefore, it strikes me if we are to drive this interest on from point to point until it is equal to meet foreign competition, we must in addition to the home market give to it the benefit of the world-wide market and not restrict in any way its output. I am very much pleased to hear from the Finance Minister that the Government will take this matter into their consideration. Then, as to the proportion which the bounty bears to the decrease in the duties, the hon. Finance Minister must admit that in some cases the reductions made in the duties are far more injurious than the bounties are beneficial. Take the duty upon steel billets, reduced from $5 to $1 or a reduction of 80 per cent. I am sure that the increase in the bounties does not offset that remarkable reduction.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. You forget the reduction on the raw material which makes a difference.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I do not forget that. After all, admitting all that can be said, I think it is impossible to show that the change in bounty would offset the reduction of 80 per cent in the duty. But so far as the results of the production of pig iron in this country are concerned, and so far as such an institution as that in Pictou county, where they manufacture from the raw material, the ore, the flux and the coal, you do not have the production of pig iron on the scale desired. Put that issue out of the question. It strikes me that, altogether, the industry is not in as good a position as before the Government made the change. I suppose that the purpose of the Finance Minister is, to protect these industries, to enable them to continue. I presume also that he is prepared to go further and say that he wishes them to progress. I cannot assume that this Government is going to be satisfied merely with sustaining these industries at the level which they have attained, that they merely wish to avoid destroying the work of the preceding Government. I am bound to assume that if the Government adopts this policy of protecting these industries, it does so with the hope of accomplishing more in the future that has been accomplished in the past. Therefore, I would urge the hon. Minister to take into consideration this question and give to the industries the advantage of the greatest possible output, so that the great object of developing these industries may be realized by having cheaper prices. The rule is inexorable that a small quantity can only be produced at a high price, and if you wish to realize a low price such as will give the people of Canada the real benefit of this industry, you must put the manufacturer in a position to produce on the largest scale.

Referring to charcoal iron, I may say that a plant has been put up in Pictou county for the manufacture of this article. I understand that owing to certain changes in the manufacture of car wheels, the limit of the home market for this article is largely impaired; and if these charcoal iron interests, either in Quebec or Nova Scotia, are to continue, it is imperatively necessary that they should be permitted to export their product. I would urge that in the question of charcoal iron as well as of charcoal steel, the Government would consider the value of results that would flow from treating this industry as liberally as the warmest friend of the iron industry could wish.

Mr. QUINN. I would like to add a word to the very able plea made by the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) and to draw the attention of the Minister of Finance particularly to that branch of the iron industry which is known as the charcoal steel and iron product. As a matter of fact, this is a form of iron and steel which is not produced in the British Empire at all. The continent of Europe, as I understand from information I have received, is supplied from Sweden and Norway. The reason of this, of course, is that elsewhere the wood is too expensive to be used for the production of iron and steel. In this country we have both the iron and the wood. In the district in which this industry is carried on, the wood is collected by the farmers, who, having cut their cordwood, use the refuse of the cordwood to make charcoal, which is then used in the furnaces for the purpose of making charcoal steel and iron. The market is altogether in Europe, I understand, particularly in England and Germany. In order that our producers may ship to those countries, it is necessary, of course, that arrangements should be made beforehand and that the producers should know in what position they stand as regards the customs duty in this country. You will see at once, Mr. Chairman, if they are to be met with an export duty on this product, it will be impossible for them to continue their work, whereas if they are allowed the benefit of the bounties on the iron which they export, the consequence will be that they will find a large market, even as they do now in Europe, where they are able to compete with the Swedish manufacturers. By a little industry, by a little pushing of their trade, they will be able to get rid of a very much larger output, and consequently, they will produce the article at a very much cheaper rate. The consequence will be that we shall not only develop a very large industry in this country, but we shall produce the article at a lower rate, and thus consumers in this country will benefit directly from the manufacture here to a far greater amount than the bounties given by the Government. But I will also say that if there is no certainty that these bounties can be given on the goods which are to be exported, it will be impossible for the manufacturer to continue the production. It will be impossible for them to manufacture on speculation, that is, on the possibility of receiving some benefits or some bounties from the Government. It will be necessary for them before they begin the manufacture, to know that they will receive the bounties.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. First, as to the point made by my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell) where the manufacturer makes both the pig iron and the steel billet, I may say that is very easy indeed to become confused as to the relation of the bounty to the duty; and I frankly confess that at the first stage of these resolutions, we went astray ourselves. My hon. friend points out that where the duty on the steel billet was $5 and is now reduced to $2—he said $1, but that is a mistake—there is a loss of $3, and, as there is not an increase of $3 in the bounty, therefore the maker of the steel billet suffers to that extent. I thought this to be the case myself, and the first resolutions gave expression to that error—

Mr. BELL (Pictou). The duty was $4.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, in the first instance. The particular company for which the hon. member for Pictou naturally speaks—a large enterprise in his own county—makes the pig iron and billet both. In thinking of them one naturally does not stop to consider what amount they make by the reduction on the duty on pig iron. They would at once say that they are not gainers but losers by that. But, for the purpose of considering the matter properly, we must treat these as two distinct industries, one being the making of the pig iron, and the other the making of the steel billet. Looking at it this way, we see that they have not suffered the serious loss that my hon. friend thinks. Dealing with the matter roughly, the position is as follows:—The maker of the steel billet has a protection of $5, now reduced to $2. Therefore he has lost $3. But he makes his steel billet out of pig iron which has been cheapened by the change of these duties. Formerly, it carried a duty of $4; it is now reduced to $2.50. Therefore the man who makes steel billets saves $1.50 on his pig iron by reason of the lower duty. Then he has an increased bounty of $1 on the billet. Therefore, between what he saves on the pig iron, $1.50 and what he gets in the form of increased bounty on the billet, $1, he makes a total of $2.50 on one side of the account as against a loss of $3 on the other. So, at the worst, there is only a loss of 50 cents. But in reality it is not so great, because we propose, as a more convenient form of paying these bounties, to pay them on the ingot rather than on the billet, and as the ingot is cheaper than the billet, he gets an advantage there. It will be found that the maker of the steel billet is very little worse off than before. I am not surprised that my hon. friend (Mr. Bell) thought otherwise, because I thought so myself at first. But if he will separate the industries, and treat them as two industries, he will see that account must be taken of the cheapening of the raw material of the billet, in the shape of the pig iron. So far as that is concerned, therefore, I think, on careful examination, it will be found that the scale of bounties is adapted to the scale of duties. I have already intimated that on a particular point of this question to which reference has been made, as to whether we shall limit the payment of bounties to consumption in Canada or pay bounties on exports, I am willing, before the matter passes its final stage, to give that question further consideration. But I would like to point out to my hon. friends that if they want to understand the effect of giving bounties on exports, they would do well to put themselves in the place of somebody else. Suppose the United States Government were giving a bounty on exports, on the manufacture and export of some particular article, and that that article was being shipped into Canada, what would happen? The Canadian manufacturer of that article would come before us and say: "Look at what they are doing, they are making an attack on our industry, they are giving a bounty, they are actually sending their goods in here under what we call the slaughter market system. We do not mind fair competition, but we cannot compete with these goods on which bounties are paid by the American Government." If the American Government were to do that in the case of any article being shipped into Canada, the maker of the Canadian article in Canada would feel that he was badly treated, and he would come and demand that we should increase his protection in order to offset that. However, there are exceptions to all rules. I only want my hon. friend to look at the question of a bounty on exports from that point of view. When we are told that the German Government puts a bounty on sugar which comes into Canada, the Canadian refiner comes to us and tells us that he suffers from the illegitimate competition.

Mr. FOSTER. From the export?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The bounty on exports, not an export duty.

Mr. FOSTER. A bounty is different.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not at all, if we pay bounty on an article.

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend mean to say that if Germany puts an export duty—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, they pay a bounty on sugar that is exported, and to that extent it is held by the Canadian manufacturer of sugar that it is an illegitimate competition, and that Canada should preclude them from that. Now, if it is a wrong thing for a foreign country to pay a bounty upon things which come into our country to compete with our native industry, would it not be equally wrong for Canada to pay a bounty on iron and send it into some other country to compete with the industries of that country?

Mr. CLANCY. Then the hon. gentleman's argument resolves itself into this, that it is only so far as it may arouse the hostility of other countries and induce them to do the same thing.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, I have already said that I do not wish to pass a final judgment in the matter, but I wanted to set my hon. friends thinking in the right direction; that if we were to pay a bounty on iron and it could be shown that the iron was being shipped to a country which produces such iron, we would immediately be told that we were attacking the industry of that country, that we were doing exactly what the Canadian sugar refiner complains of to-day in relation to the German refineries. However, there are exceptions to all rules, I do not want to commit myself too hastily, but I would like my hon. friends to think it out on that line. There ought to be a strong case to justify the Government in paying bounty on goods which are to be exported to foreign countries in competition with the industries of those countries.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is not putting it quite in that way. You are not paying a bounty for export to a foreign country, but you are paying a bounty to the maker of goods in this country. Now, there is every difference between simply paying an export bounty on an article and paying a bounty on an article made in the country when you get it made. The German Government does both; it protects the home industries inordinately, as we think; and in addition to all that, when the German sugar producer exports his sugar, they give him an actual bounty for the mere export itself. I must say that I have allowed these resolutions to be before the House all this time, and not until my hon. friend called my attention to that, did I dream of such a thing as this Government putting an export duty on iron that a manufacturer might wish to send to a foreign country. Now, I enter the most solemn protest I can against a policy of that kind. Why, look at the injustice you are doing to work. You simply say to one large industry of that kind, the charcoal iron industry: I will punish you in the first place by not giving you a bounty on the manufacture of your iron, because after you have manufactured it and employed labour in this country, you are going to find a market for it in a foreign country. There is one punishment you put upon them. But you go further and you say: You shall not only have no bounty for manufacturing it in this country, but if you dare to find a foreign market for it, we will punish you by an actual export duty. I think the thing is preposterous.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is not the proposal.

Mr. FOSTER. But that is the proposal. It is enabling you to provide "that the foregoing bounties shall be payable only on iron and steel for consumption in Canada." That is one thing, and that language carries its own meaning. "And that the Governor in Council may at any time by proclamation, impose export duties on such iron and steel if the same shall be exported from Canada." I really do not believe that there were ten men in this House that had noticed that. I must say that I had not noticed it. I had read it over two or three times, but not looking for a thing of that kind. When I saw that the bounties were not payable for exports, I dropped the resolutions thinking that I was at the end of them. Now, I ask my hon. friends opposite, and the Minister of Finance especially, to think over the consequences before putting a thing like that into operation. What reason is there for it? Have we to look after every other country in the world as well as our own interests? My hon. friend justifies it because they give an export bounty. But we are not giving an export bounty. We simply say to every man who manufactures iron in Canada: If you will manufacture iron in this country and employ labour here, and make the iron, we will give you a bounty on every ton that you make. Find your market where you like. But then you go on and say: If you have the misfortune to find a market in a foreign country we reserve to ourselves the right to put an export duty on every ton that you export in addition to the first fine. But what is the ground upon which you justify that? The Finance Minister says: We might be exporting iron into some country and that country might feel sensitive because our men went in there with this iron, and they might retaliate. Let us look after our own country and not after the others. Besides, we are not giving an export bounty in order to help the manufacture of this article in our own country. But what stimulus is there to an industry, what reason is there that you should hold this threat over an industry? Why should you fine the industry in the first place? Because when it employs all the labour in this country and makes the article, there is full justification for a bounty, or why do you give the bounty. You first fine them because they find a market in a foreign country by refusing to give them a production bounty. Then you hold over their head, over their investment, over their capital, you hold 'over them a threat that the Governor in Council at any time may decide to put an export duty on every ton that they send to a foreign country. There is no doubt you would entirely depress the industry, make it non-progressive and keep it from enlargement by a policy of that kind. I earnestly implore hon. gentlemen that they will not put a disability like that upon the iron industry of the country. I cannot see how a policy which is based upon that idea can succeed, and I do say it is fraught with great danger.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Referring to the remarks of my hon. friend (the Finance Minister), I suppose it is necessary that he should take a wider view of this matter than I am required to do, because to a certain extent I look upon the question from the point of view of the county which I represent. I speak particularly in reference to the great iron-producing industry of that county. Of course the hon. gentleman had to take into consideration the interest and welfare of those who are not the most important class, but who are engaged in manufacturing certain more finished products of iron. The reduction of the duty on pig iron is a gain to the man who is producing steel billets or steel bars only, but he cannot apply the argument to show that it is in the interest of those who are producing the raw material out of which all steel must be manufactured, and which is pig iron. The intention of these bounties is to encourage the production of what is the raw material of all other irons, pig iron. That is the great purpose of the bounties. I am entirely in accord with extending that system to the production of steel but I am sure that the Finance Minister will agree with me on again looking carefully into the matter that the reduction of the duty on pig iron is not an advantage to such a concern as that at Ferrona in Pictou county, nor to any similar concern wherever it may be in Canada. The position of those men who are producing pig iron is just where it was. They had a bounty of $1 a ton on their product made out of half home ore and half foreign ore. They got $2 a ton upon iron made out of home ore, and nothing at all upon iron the product of foreign ore. They had a protection of $4 a ton. The total of the two is $5. Now the duty is reduced to $2.50 a ton, and the bounty may be held to be increased to $2.50. If we suppose that they are producing iron from half home and half foreign ore, therefore, in that case they have a protection of $5. In so far as any argument based upon the fact that they are getting iron cheaper is concerned, I think it falls to the ground because the position in which they stand is exactly the position in which they stood before. Although I admit that it is important and necessary to encourage those persons who are engaged in producing steel billets and steel bars, still the great purpose of giving iron bounties must ever be to develop the production of pig iron. Without pig iron we could not have any other iron products. Every person familiar with the working of the iron trade knows that it would be impossible to apply it with the best results to any great resultant business producing iron unless we produced our pig iron at home. It may be that to a certain extent steel may be produced out of imported pig iron, but that never can become a great interest until the beds of ore and the coal mines are opened up and the fluxes procured in the country under favourable circumstances. The imposition of the bounty is intended to have this effect. It is intended to encourage the iron industry from the very foundation steps. My hon. friend says that the duty on steel has only been reduced by $2. That is true if he applies it to steel billets only. But the reduction on scrap steel I think is to $1.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes. That is in their favour; they use it.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). So far as these great concerns go they do not start out with the presumption that they are going to use steel scrap or imported pig iron. And these are the only industries that we are really interested in promoting. You cannot develop the iron industry as a great national industry if you start with the assumption that the work is going to be carried on with pig iron, and scrap steel imported from abroad. The purpose of the bounty is to develop the production of the coal and iron of the country, and, therefore, I maintain that it is not a fair argument to turn to a man who has invested over $1,000,000 for the purpose of establishing this industry on a solid foundation on the ground floor in Canada and say that the principal things that are required by the producers of the more highly finished products are always to be brought from abroad and that the services of the men engaged in the manufacture of these products may be dispensed with. This, it strikes me, is an unjust and an almost cruel thing. I am sure no one will admit the cogency of such reasoning. The fundamental principle of the granting of bounties is that it is desirable to induce our own people in Canada to utilize our own ores, our own coal and our own flux, and to carry out the process from the beginning. I hope the Government will view this matter from that standpoint, and that their course will be such as will result in the continuance of this industry and promotion of its prosperity in the future.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Finance to one point. The Radnor Forges, which are operating in the district which I represent in Parliament, are manufacturing car wheels and to a great extent their markets are in England and Germany.

Mr. QUINN. The United States also.

Mr. BERGERON. And Belgium.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I understand that their export trade, so far as Germany is concerned, has increased considerably. As I understand the measure of the Minister of Finance they would get a bounty upon the product manufactured here, but an export duty would be charged upon the iron which was exported to a foreign market.

Mr. BERGERON. He says it may be.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It seems to me that that would absolutely destroy that industry. They have no protection from the large amount of manufactured goods which are sold in Canada in the shape of car wheels and other things. I do not know exactly how the measure of the hon. gentleman will affect this industry. I think the Minister of Finance will agree that this is a valuable industry.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell), I think, is in error when he claims that there is no advantage in the reduction of the duty on pig iron. My hon. friend looks upon that matter from the point of view of the single industry in his own section. We must forget, for the moment, that there is one concern making all these things, and separate them into distinct industries. There is a concern making pig iron, and a concern making steel from that pig iron. They do not all make steel, but we are bound to assume that the effect of the reduction on pig iron was to cheapen pig iron in Canada, whether it was imported or whether it was made here, and inasmuch as there was a cheapening of pig iron to the extent of $1.50 per ton, this other man who makes steel from that pig iron, has a cheaper raw material. My hon. friend says it is no advantage to the particular company he names because they make the pig iron and do not want the reduction, but you cannot look on it from the point of view of one single company. I wish to call attention to an error which the ex-Finance Minister (Mr. Foster) made, and which he persisted in after I tried to correct him. I do not think these words in the resolution are capable of meaning what he said they did, and if they do, then they undoubtedly should be changed. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) says that we first refused to pay the bounty on the iron made in Canada, and then that we punished them a second time if they exported. That certainly was not the intention and I do not think the resolution means it. What the resolution means is, that we should not pay them a bounty on iron except for home consumption, and if we pay them a bounty on iron for home consumption, then if they exported it we should have a refund of that bounty. If the resolution does not read in that way, it should be changed to make it mean that. There may be difficulties in determining what is iron for home consumption. Perhaps we could not know it was not for home consumption until they exported it. There is a phase of the question which it is somewhat difficult to meet, and it is that while we, if we enforce that regulation, would impose a duty on iron when exported, if they should go a step further and convert that iron into a manufactured article such as car wheels, then, under the terms of the resolution you cannot impose an export duty on the car wheels, but you could on the iron. I admit that leads to confusion and I am quite willing we should consider it again, as I am not prepared to commit the Government on that matter. The resolution simply means, that if we decide we shall only pay the bounty on iron consumed in Canada, then there must be some method of determining what is home consumption, and you might have some difficulty in determining that. That is the intention of the resolution, and there was no intention in our mind of having that double punishment which my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) referred to.

Mr. FOSTER. I am very glad to hear that, and probably in the ardour with which I was pursuing my argument, I did not fully understand the meaning of the hon. gentleman's interruption. I quite understand now what he means. I do not think that the language of the resolution, when one reads it without knowing the inside view, would carry that out, but the Finance Minister will no doubt make the language carry it out.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If we adhere to it, yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I again hope—and I have not abandoned hope until the thing shall have ultimately passed this House—that my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) will treat all this iron alike, and no matter where a man may find his market, let us give that impulse to enterprise and the extension of our foreign trade. The whole object, it seems to me, is gained when we have the thing made by our own labour in our own country.

Mr. QUINN. With reference to one argument made by the Finance Minister, I would like to say that I do not think the manufacturers of charcoal iron or the Government, would be open to the same imputation, as is the German Government which gives bounties for sugar exported. I believe that we could extend this bounty to iron manufactured in the country for the purpose of exportation, and yet this bounty could not be looked upon as a bounty for the purpose of encouraging the export of this iron to other countries. I do not think any country would look upon it, as in any way calculated to injure its own manufactures of its own particular article. I would, therefore, ask the consideration of the Finance Minister to that view of the question, and I am sure he will arrive at the conclusion that it is not at all the same as the export bounty which is given by the German Government for the export of sugar.

Resolution reported, and read the second time.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 149) to provide for bounties on iron and steel made in Canada.—(Mr. Fielding.)

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Amount required to pay the British American Bank Note Company for printing and engraving Dominion notes..... $33,656 15

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The explanation of that item is that last autumn the circulation was somewhat larger than usual, and it became necessary to have a larger issue of Dominion notes, so that, under ordinary conditions, we would have been obliged to have brought in a supplementary Estimate for the current year for the amount of $20,000, by reason of the increased demand on the circulation. In addition to that, in view of the change that was about being made from one company to the other, it became necessary we should have a supply of these notes in advance to guard against being short. Therefore an order was given to the British American Bank Note Company for a supply of notes beyond the requirements of the current year, which will come off the outlay for next year, and make a difference of about $15,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the new company in a position yet to do work in the new building?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The new company are doing the work of the Post Office, but they have not yet actually commenced work on Dominion notes. I think they will do so shortly.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General if the Jubilee stamps are being printed by the new company in its building at Ottawa?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose they are not all struck off yet?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not quite.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman tell the committee why he did not think it would have been a courteous thing, at least, to have given the old company the work of the Jubilee stamps. I believe there were some negotiations and for five or six weeks, my hon. friend kept the old company on the string. I believe they considered that they had as good as had the arrangement made; and they were very anxious, not merely for any profit which it might bring to them, before the business was taken out of their hands, to have the honour, as good Canadian citizens, of striking off the Jubilee stamps. But, after toying with the Burland Company and leading them on he suddenly broke off the communications and gave the work to the other company. I think it might very well have been given to the old company. The difference in rates surely was not much. I would like to ask my hon. friend if he can say whether there were any insuperable reasons which intervened between him and the carrying out of that policy?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have no objection to tell the hon. gentleman the reasons that caused me to place the contract where I did. When I decided to make an issue of Jubilee stamps, it was during the existence of the contract with the British American Bank Note Company, and I contemplated giving the contract to that company. But having first of all to prepare a design involving a great deal of detail and trouble, I consulted gentlemen of taste. Without having myself invited Mr. Burland to offer his services, that gentleman called upon me. He seemed to know what I was contemplating, and I told him. He then asked me where the design was. I told him that there was no design up to that moment, but that a gentleman of taste was engaged in sketching it. He then asked me if I would have any objection to his calling on that gentleman to see the sketch. I said I would have no objection, and he called. As I had not received the sketch after some delay, I applied to the gentleman who was making it for an explanation why he had not sent it to me, when he informed me that the president of the British American Bank Note Company had got possession of it, saying that he had received orders from me to get it. I was somewhat surprised at that turn, and endeavoured to get back the sketch, which I ultimately did. But before I had decided upon any design, the company seemed extremely anxious to force their methods upon me—in fact, were trying to prevent me adopting such a design as I thought would meet the approval of the public. This was my first acquaintance with any gentleman connected with that company, and I would as a matter of course have given them the contract but for the further incident which I have referred to, which put me upon an inquiry in the department. I then ascertained in the department from those who had to do with the issuing of stamps that there was an inequality, an unevenness, in the work that company did—that they would furnish a sample of colour for a stamp, and then would not print true to sample, a very serious defect in the case of particular work such as we had in hand. I was further informed in the department that the company had furnished paper not up to the standard, that their gumming was not first-class, and that their perforation was not true—in fact, that their workmanship was not as it ought to be. The unsatisfactory report of their workmanship which I received was what ultimately determined me in the course I pursued. I did not decide it all at once, but it gradually forced itself on my mind, that the workmanship by Mr. Burland's company would not be equal to what we desired, and further that they would not be as prompt in the issue as the circumstances demanded. In the meantime, time was drifting along. I was not, as the hon. gentleman suggests, toying with Mr. Burland in bad faith. When he called upon me I spoke to him in good faith. But this I will say, that I never sent for the gentleman, and I did not invite his assistance. He simply volunteered it; and, while his contract was on, until nearly the 22nd of April, the date at which I think it ended, I discussed the matter with him, feeling that I would be under an obligation to give him the work during that period; but, as I say, my experience, and the interviews I had with him, led me to the conclusion that we would get more satisfaction by a change. As a matter of fact, I did not come to a conclusion to make the change until about the time it was made—some time towards the end of April. At that time the contract had about expired. It had been in my mind for a few days before that to employ the new firm, but I really had not decided upon it until the old contract had expired. I am more than pleased with the workmanship of the new firm. The mechanical work has been reported to me by Mr. Stanton, the head of the department, as exceeding anything he had ever expected. He has reported the workmanship, the material, and the completeness of the work as something he had never had in his relations with the old company.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend can scarcely justify himself in not giving the work to Mr. Burland, on the ground that negotiations went on until the 22nd of April, and then the contract expired; because we have already a vote brought down by the Finance Minister to pay Mr. Burland for work which he is now carrying on, and which he is going to carry on until the 1st day of July or longer, if the other company is not ready to do the work. My hon. friend says that he did not run after Mr. Burland, but that Mr. Burland ran after him. I take it that that is the rule. The Minister does not have to do much running, so far as this kind of activity is concerned; his running is at a different time and of a different kind. There was a very strong reason why Mr. Burland should have got the work. He was the contractor during all the time we have had this work done. It was a matter of some pride for him that he had established this industry and carried it to perfection, and he was very anxious to have the credit of striking off the Jubilee stamps. My hon. friend says he consulted some one else, but anybody knows that no one but an expert in the matter of steel engraving could give a sketch to be worked in steel engraving, and the gentleman to whom he referred would not be considered an expert.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I consulted persons of great taste and experience before deciding. I received advice from disinterested people, and acting upon this I asked the gentleman to give us the benefit of his taste in that preliminary sketch. I had confidence in my advisers and in the taste of the gentleman whom I was consulting, and having decided that he should prepare the design, I did not intend to allow Mr. Burland or any one else to force another design upon the department. Of course, Mr. Burland could have been induced to print according to the design, but it would have been perhaps an ungrateful work for him. But the thing that determined me ultimately was the statement I have referred to before as to the relative character of workmanship and material.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman consulted this gentleman as to the sketch, who was not a steel engraver and not an expert. He had in the meantime referred Mr. Burland to some of his colleagues. I hold in my hand the design that Mr. Burland made, and though not an expert I see enough to convince me that it is a very neat and I think a very true design. I shall send it over to the hon. gentleman because it will bear inspection. The Postmaster General seemed to acquiesce in the arrangement that Mr. Burland was to get the work because he sent him to one of his colleagues.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not send him to anybody.

Mr. FOSTER. At least he had a letter from the Postmaster General to one of his colleagues, and the colleague approved of Mr. Burland's design. The Postmaster General appealed to one of his colleagues as an arbiter in matters of taste. It was the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell), and the Postmaster General, feeling that his colleague was superior to him in such matters, appealed to him for a decision. His colleague initialled the design as being very true to Queen Victoria, and a very fine design it was, and Mr. Burland thought he was certainly going to print off the Jubilee stamp. Ultimately, however, all negotiations were broken off, and the work was given to the alien firm, so that in this jubilee year, when we are pluming ourselves and joining together closer the bonds of Imperial federation, we had to get a gentleman from New York to print off our Jubilee stamp. The hon. gentleman says that they stick better than the others, and that the paper is of better quality. But that was all in the hands of the hon. gentleman's own department. No work need be taken unless the hon. Postmaster General sits on it, and after having sat on it, consider it takes the pressure well, and is up to the desired quality in every respect. It is really no argument that because it might not stick as well or because the paper was not up to quality, the hon. gentleman could not trust a gentleman who has been doing that same kind of work for twenty or thirty years. The hon. gentleman could have seen himself that the Queen's obverse would adhere to the envelope when placed upon it, and I am sorry indeed that in this jubilee year, with strong patriotic sentiment pulsing through the veins of Canada, we have to go to an alien to strike off the Queen's head.

Amount required to recoup the vote for unforeseen expenses.....	$3,000
Further expenditure in connection with the Tariff Inquiry.....	6,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There was a sum of $3,000 taken from the unforeseen expenditure for the purpose of the tariff inquiry and this is to recoup that amount and cover further expenses. This will cover everything. This pays the expenses of Ministers who conducted the inquiry, travelling expenses, and also the cost of stenography and typewriting, which was very considerable. The evidence had to be taken down by shorthand writers and typewritten.

Mr. FOSTER. Does any part represent payments taken out of unforeseen expenses to meet the cost of these partisan official investigators? I notice in the unforeseen expenses a sum of nearly $3,000 which was used to pay the expenditure incurred by these travelling commissioners. I am not a lawyer, but I want to put this view before the House. If you appoint a commissioner simply to investigate as to whether a man voted or worked in an election, you have no authority from Parliament to pay for a service of that kind. You have a right to pay for the investigation of an officer's conduct so far as concerns malfeasance in office, neglect of duty or anything of that kind. The officer who does not perform his duty is, of course, subject to discipline. But here is a case in which a new crime has been read into the statute, that crime being active participation by a civil servant in an election. That is to say, if a man who is a civil servant is an active partisan—whichever one of the different interpretations that is given to that term—you hold that that constitutes an offence and you appoint somebody to take cognizance of that offence and to try the party upon the charge. But you cannot find ground for such a charge in any statute law in this country, provincial or Dominion. What right has the Government to read into the law of the country crimes which have never been made crimes, to appoint commissioners to investigate them, and to take public money to pay for this investigation? I do not believe that the Government have any right to use the public moneys for this purpose. They have appointed commissioners to investigate the conduct of civil servants, not with reference to their performance of their duties, but with reference to their political belief and their political action. They have themselves created a crime, and have then taken out of the public funds money to pay judges to investigate and either to condemn or excuse as the evidence may decide. I think that before they use one cent of money for that purpose, they must get the authorization of Parliament; and I believe that this is as much a misuse of the public money as was the Baie des Chaleurs business, which was acknowledged by the Ministers to be a misuse of public money last night when they cried peccavimus.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) said that he was not speaking by the book because he was not a lawyer. If he had been a lawyer, I venture to say he would not have raised the question as to whether these commissions were properly issued or not. An official who is an active partisan disqualifies himself for the performance of his duties, and the statute gives the Government authority to inquire into the discharge of the civil servant's duties. My opinion as a lawyer is that in so doing they acted not only within the spirit but within the very words of the statute.

Mr. FOSTER. As a man of common sense and not a lawyer, I would put a case. Suppose a man has not neglected the duties of his office, but has done everything that was required of him in this respect, and has been always at his post when required, but that when not occupied with the duties of his office he has used his right as a citizen to vote for A, B or C, and to work for him—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman supposes and supposes. But I will not take suppositional cases; I will take the class of cases that are really investigated. Take, for instance, the large class of fishery officers who were charged with having prostituted their offices to advance their political party, who intimated to those who received licenses from them—not in express terms, but in a practical way known to fishermen—that unless the fishermen yielded and voted in the way desired by the fishery officers certain results might follow, in fact, used their influence as officers to influence the votes of those over whom they had a certain control.—would the hon. gentleman question the Government's right to investigate that?

Mr. FOSTER. That is a case of dereliction of duty, it is malfeasance in office, it is the use of their office for a purpose not contemplated by the law. But let me give the hon. gentleman another instance. There was one case which the commissioner was sent to try. I do not know how many days he wasted over it, but I can understand that he did not hurry it through in an hour. He tried it, and tried it, and tried it, and could get no evidence, and actually had to report that the man was entirely innocent.

Mr. COCHRANE. Did the commissioner get his money?

Mr. FOSTER. I have no doubt he did.

Mr. BERGERON. Was the man sacked?

Mr. FOSTER. I believe not.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There were dozens of cases of men not sacked.

Mr. FOSTER. There were dozens of cases of men not guilty.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. How can you know whether they are guilty or not until you try them?

Mr. FOSTER. But my hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) started on the assumption that there was a political crime, that where a man departed from the even tenor of his way and actively recorded his views, he committed a crime for which he could be tried, and, if found guilty, executed—and they have executed lots of them. And they have taken the public money to try persons charged with a crime which is not a crime under the rule of reason or under any law in this country, and in this they are in just as bad a hole as they were on the Baie des Chaleurs business.

Mr. LISTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) can turn double back somersaults as quickly as any man I ever saw. What have he and his friends been charging the Government with this session and last session? They have been charging them with dismissing officials without investigating the charges against them. And now when the Government asks that the commissioners who have been investigating these charges shall be paid, the hon. gentleman says that the Government has no right to investigate.

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Lister) want me to show wherein the difference lies?

Mr. LISTER. You can show anything to your own satisfaction.

Mr. FOSTER. I can show anything that is right. If my hon. friend (Mr. Lister) would only listen quietly and in a calm and non-partisan spirit, he would be convinced. What did we find fault with last night?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). Everything.

Mr. FOSTER. But I refer to one particular instance. We found fault with the Government taking over the management of a railway when they had no legal authority to do so and spending $19,000 of the people's money, and then coming here and asking the people's representatives to give them a certificate of good conduct. If the Government had come and asked a vote of Parliament to pay for these commissions, to try political offences, the money could have been voted and the thing done regularly. But the virus of unconstitutional doctrine is in the veins of hon. gentlemen opposite. Unaccustomed to the responsibility and the constitutional limits of office, they think that if they wish to do a thing, they have only to do it, and get the authority afterwards. But the proper constitutional way is to get the authority first and do the thing afterwards.

Mr. LISTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) talks of a railroad; we were talking about civil service.

Mr. FOSTER. But the principle is the same.

Mr. LISTER. The hon. gentleman has said that no dismissals should take place on the ground of partisanship unless the charge was investigated and the officer given an opportunity to answer. How is it possible that these charges can be investigated unless some person be authorized and appointed to investigate? And if men carry on these investigations, surely they are entitled to be paid. The hon. gentleman cannot demand an investigation and then, after the investigation has been carried on, refuse to pay the commissioner—unless, as a friend behind me suggests, there is a conviction. The hon. gentleman says that in case of acquittal there should be no pay. So far as the power of the Government is concerned to issue these commissions for the trial of these offences, there can be no doubt about it at all. I do not believe that any lawyer sitting behind the hon. gentleman, after investigating, will take the position that the Government has not the power and perfect right to do what they have done.

Mr. FOSTER. I will give my hon. friend the article in a moment. I believe the fast line service was necessary and useful to this country. But as a member of the late Government I did not go to work and put on a fast line service, and incur bills, and then come and ask Parliament to pay the bills. We got the authorization first, and so should the hon. gentleman. The whole point is not as to whether an investigation should be made, but as to whether the hon. gentleman had parliamentary authority for the expenditure of a cent; whether they should not have come to the House first and got authority before going on.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I must protest against my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and the ex-Finance Minister, and the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) talking of all these criminal matters in connection with this little item of mine. What has all this to do with the investigation of crime? The only crime that we investigated under this item was the crime of National Policy.

Mr. FOSTER. And they found it innocent, and made the whilom criminal their chosen friend.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We did not find it innocent. Unless my hon. friend can discover some crime in this item for the tariff investigation, all this talk is out of place, and I must ask you, Mr. Chairman, not to permit the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and other members to go so far afield.

Mr. COCHRANE. All the fault I find in paying that bill arises from the fact that when the late Government appointed a commission to investigate the same subject, the hon. gentlemen then in Opposition said it was not necessary, that the Government should know all about it, that it was an insult to members of Parliament that such a commission should be appointed. The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) was very loud in his denunciations. But when those hon. gentlemen got into power they do just what they said we were wrong in doing, and they have spent $6,000 in doing it. What I object to is paying the expense of these hon. gentlemen doing what they said the late Government was wrong in doing. But they do not seem to have any compunction of conscience in doing what they so loudly declared was wrong. I feel like supporting a motion to strike out the item.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). What is the total cost of the tariff commission?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This item of $6,000 will cover all the expenses so far as I can estimate. There are some accounts remaining unpaid which are subjects of investigation, but I think this item will cover them.

Mr. FOSTER. What were the chief items of expense in that? I may say to my hon. friend that it is a large sum, that the tariff investigations which were carried on have cost us a large sum of money. I thought $3,000 of that was for these political-partisan-offender commissioners, and I am not sure but what it is.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If my hon. friend has been making a speech under that impression, it is time that he should repent, because I can assure him that not a cent of it is for that purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the items?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Roughly speaking, about one-half the amount will be for the payment of the travelling expenses of the Ministers, secretaries and the officials who went from place to place investigating. About the other half, in round numbers, will be the expenses of the stenographers and typewriters, whose very voluminous reports we have carefully laid aside for such future reference as may be necessary.

Mr. FOSTER. If Parliament pays $6,000 for that work, it belongs to Parliament, and my hon. friend will have to bring all that stuff down. Was there expert testimony?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There was no expert testimony. If my hon. friend seriously wants these documents to be printed, we will have to expend a few thousands more in having it carefully printed, and collated, and fixed up for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. Who were the members of this travelling commission? Was the Minister of Public Works included in that commission?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the Minister of Public Works gave us the light of his countenance on several occasions, but so far as I am aware, this item does not include one cent for his expenses.

Mr. FOSTER. Therefore, when he went across the continent in a private car, with a coloured porter, and ate like a bird—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It does not come in this item at all.

Mr. FOSTER. Under what item is that covered up?

Mr. LISTER. Tell us something about the temperance commission.

Mr. FOSTER. I will tell my hon. friend about the temperance commission. This Government was very hard worked, so hard worked that when one of its members, to wit, the leader, went away, no more hard work could be carried on, no more important measures were to be brought down. The plebiscite could not be gone on with, because it was an important measure, and the Premier was to be present. The plebiscite left with the Premier. But $3,600,000 are being voted for the Crow's Nest Pass Railway; and equivalent of $7,000,000 is sought to be added to the public debt for Intercolonial extension; $8,000,000 for canals have been put through; we have before us a lot of railway subsidies, amounting to three or four millions, and other important measures, but the Plebiscite Bill could not be carried through. If my hon. friend wants to know anything more about that temperance commission, there are some other things that we might talk about. But seriously, with reference to this tariff commission, does the hon. gentleman mean to say that himself and the Controller of Customs spent $6,000 going about the country asking for information, when, for eighteen years, they declared, wherever they were, in this House or out of it, that they knew all about the tariff, they knew just what the country needed. What the country needed was to have the fetters unbound from its limbs so that this fair maiden of Canada could be made free to go on and prosper. Yet when they came into power they were so enamoured of the jaunting tour that, not for information—they knew it all before—they spent this $6,000 of the people's money. I never heard of such extravagance on the part of an economical Government. Where is the hon. member for North Wellington? Where are the Patron leaders? The member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) is still left, but he will not raise his voice against it.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the Finance Minister collated this evidence and put it into shape so that it could be analysed?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood him to say a few minutes ago that it was typewritten and might be of advantage some time in the future, but not for the present.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I said if the hon. gentleman desired it, we could have printed so much of that information as was not given to us confidentially, by spending a few hundred dollars. Of course, the information that was given to us in confidence would have to be separated from the other evidence. All that matter now is in the form of two huge volumes of typewritten pages which have been carefully considered. I would not like to swear that I have read every line of it, but I have heard every word of the testimony, and read a great deal of it over the second time.

Mr. SPROULE. I was not aware when the hon. gentlemen were going around getting this information that they held their examinations in private. I thought they were open to the public.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is not aware now that these examinations were held in private, because I have not said so.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman said that there were portions of the information which were private. These must have been of a confidential character. If the sessions were held in public they could not have been confidential.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is probably well aware that the investigations were held, so far as the Government were concerned, in the most open manner. Our desire was that they should be open, but if any gentleman who came before us expressed a wish to make a confidential communication he was permitted to do so.

Mr. FOSTER. There is one important part of the evidence that I would like to have brought down. There was one occasion upon which the consumer was heard, and that consumer was Mr. Alfred Jury, who was present, I understand, by special request of the Finance Minister himself. I would like to have his statement brought down, so that the House will have an opportunity of seeing it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid I cannot claim the credit for having specially secured the attendance of Mr. Jury. I may say that Mr. Jury desired to come before the commission at a time when it was not possible that we could hear him, as we had already made several engagements, but I informed him that when we returned to Toronto we would be glad to hear him. When we returned to Toronto he was informed that we would be prepared to hear him.

Mr. FOSTER. There is another part of the evidence that might be interesting, and it was that part where a protest was made against the virtue and general good qualities of the Controller of Customs' biscuits.

Mr. WALLACE. This is an excessive amount to pay for such services. The Minister of Finance has stated that about half of the amount is for stenographer's services. When the member for Brockville (Mr. Wood) and I conducted such an investigation a few years ago we went through Ontario pretty fully seeing the people who were desirous of laying their views before us. We took our private secretaries, who did all the work of stenographers without one dollar's additional expense to the country. In that case that $3,000 item was saved to the public. As I understand it, the private secretaries of the Ministers accompanied them, and as they are all competent steno-graphers, I think that $3,000 expenditure was nothing more than the throwing away of public money. In regard to the other $3,000 of the expenses of the commission, I am quite sure that under a Conservative Government it would not have amounted to one-tenth of that. I know that for myself it did not cost the people one dollar, and we travelled pretty fully through Ontario. I think this is an unjustifiable expenditure of $6,000 of the people's money.

Amount required to make good the ascertained losses to the Post Office Department caused by the defalcations of the late postmaster at St. Johns, Que., between the 3rd November, 1890, and 9th July, 1896..... $4,718 31

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of this item?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The explanation is this. That postmaster died about July last, and after his death it was discovered, on auditing the books, that he had been falsifying his returns for some five or six years. I think there were small stealings or embezzlements from time to time. Attempts have been made to recover the amounts from his sureties, but I am advised that they are not good for them and it will be a total loss.

Mr. HAGGART. Who was the inspector of that district? Surely the inspector is responsible for allowing it to continue five or six years.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is the state of affairs as we have found it.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the Postmaster General propose any change in this matter of securities of these postmasters in the line of having a guarantee company furnish the security?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have considered the matter, if you will allow me to mention it, in connection with a Bill which is under consideration. These defalcations were in respect to the money of depositors. It seems that he received the money from the depositors and took their pass-books, which he sent to Ottawa, and got them back again. I think he made changes in the pass books, crediting persons with more money than he had remitted to Ottawa. He entered in the book an amount deposited by the depositor, but which amount he did not charge himself with on remitting here. I discussed the matter with Mr. Matheson, and he told me that it was one of those cases of frauds against which no provision could be made. I asked him whether a repetition of this fraud could not be prevented by the department sending the books direct to the customers.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The books are sent here.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, but if these books were returned direct to the customers the postmaster could not falsify the entry before delivering the books to the customers. But Mr. Matheson gives me an explanation which seems a reasonable one, that in a case where a postmaster intended to commit a fraud he could possess himself of the book in transit. If he will commit a fraud he will not hesitate to adopt means to possess himself of the book. In regard to the question of security, I have a plan in view to provide for better security. It is proposed to have a company insure the officers, but not by name. I find that a company will issue a policy insuring whomever may be discharging the duties for the time being, and by giving a large number of officers to the company we will get a lower rate of insurance. Forty cents on $100 is the rate collected now from postmasters by the companies. The department can get the same amount of insurance for 25 cents on $100, and the remaining 15 cents on $100 will be a general fund covering any loss over the amount of the insurance. Unless you have a special fund to provide for any shortage or loss if you insured each man separately, you might not have enough to cover whatever possible loss there might be. While frauds can never be prevented, I believe that this scheme of insurance will be of great advantage.

Mr. BRITTON. I want to ask the Postmaster General if a distinction is drawn between the case of a postmaster committing a fraud such as has been mentioned and that of officers of the post office, because instances have occurred in which clerks in the post office have made use of the books in the way it is suggested was done in this case. I do not know whether the post office assumes liability for the loss in a case of that kind. I understand they do not assume liability in the case of loss of registered letters. The loss of a letter containing money must nearly always be through negligence of some officer of the department, and if the department admits liability, it is hard to see where any distinction can be drawn between the fraud of postmasters and the negligence or fraud of other officers of the department. I know of instances in which loss of money has occurred to persons in the post office savings bank by reason of fraud, not of the postmaster, but of another official, and I would like to know whether it is admitted as a liability by the department.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When money is delivered to an officer of the Government, the Government could not repudiate responsibility even if the officer is dishonest. You would never have people trust their money in the savings bank if the Government were not responsible the moment the money left the depositor's hands. It never has been the practice of the Government to assume responsibility for the loss of registered letters. It is of course possible for the public to cast the responsibility on the Government by purchasing a money order, wherever there is a money order office, and in that case, the Government is responsible as it receives the money. There have been propositions made to me since I have been at the head of the department, that the Government should become responsible for registered letters.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That never would do.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It has been suggested to me, but I have not formed any opinion on it.

Mr. FOSTER. Do not let us get into a discussion on that.

Mr. COCHRANE. Do I understand that it is customary for postmasters to send the books of the depositors to the department in Ottawa?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. COCHRANE. Then, if the money received did not correspond with the amount in the book, some official in Ottawa must have been negligent or he would have detected that fact. There is no use sending the books to Ottawa to be checked if they are not properly examined.

Expenses of commission investigating the charges in the North-west Territories..... $750

Mr. FOSTER. This is the item upon which the commission business is to be discussed. Would my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) be able to tell me, how much has been voted altogether for these different smelling commissions?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not it at hand now.

Mr. FOSTER. In the Railway Department it amounts to about $6,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is for the railways and for the canals. There is one item there of $6,000 under the head of railways, which I have moved to reduce to $2,500.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Blair) proposes to make an expenditure of $6,000 for partisan commissioners in the railways and canals, and there is altogether about $10,000 for these commissioners in the Estimates. For what purpose does the Government ask for that money? Simply for the purpose of getting excuses for turning out Liberal-Conservative office holders, and putting Liberals in their places. It is called a commission to investigate partisan political offences, and the principle upon which it is supposed to be based is that we should entirely delete partisanship from office holding in the country. But, the strange thing about it is, that in most cases that I am cognizant of, a pronounced partisan has been named as the commissioner or the judge. My hon. friend (Mr. Blair) has appointed a gentleman by the name of William Wilson of the city of Fredericton to conduct four or five commissions, and to investigate all and sundry of a lot of political offences in connection with the Intercolonial Railway. The only thing I can find in the papers brought down is, that this gentleman has been persuaded to undertake the work, and that authority has been given to the Minister by Order in Council to pay for that work, a sum not to exceed $25 per day, independent of actual travelling expenses. It does not appear from the papers brought down what amount Mr. William Wilson is paid, and what I want to know now is, what is the amount allowed to Mr. William Wilson per day.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. Wilson has not received a farthing as yet.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. William Wilson is not living on air and he is not a millionaire, and I venture to say, that he is not travelling about the country and paying his expenses. If I mistake not, in some of the papers brought down it appears that $500 has already been advanced to Mr. Wilson, My hon. friend (Mr. Blair) is, I fear, not correct in saying that Mr. Wilson has received nothing.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) to mean, that after having asked me a question, and after I made the reply, he does not believe the statement I made? I do not understand what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) recognizes as the rules of propriety. I said to him, that Mr. Wilson had not received one farthing, and I ask the hon. gentleman to accept my statement, if he knows what propriety is.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, yes, the hon. gentleman knows what propriety is. The hon. gentleman is bound by the rules of propriety and he bows to them when appealed to. My hon. friend (Mr. Blair) was good enough to turn the back of his head to me the other night, like a whipped school boy, in defiance of all the rules of decency and courtesy in this House. In defiance of all rules of decency and courtesy, he presented the grossest insult that a man could present, not only to a gentleman who was addressing him, but to the whole of this side of the House. And yet that hon. gentleman pretends to lecture me and gentlemen on this side upon what the rules of decency and courtesy are. When the hon. gentleman states that Mr. William Wilson has not received anything, and states it as a member and a Minister, I am bound to accept that; but I said, and I say again, that Mr. Wilson is not a millionaire, and it seems strange to me that he has been travelling about the country from November, 1896, to the present time, and has been paying his own travelling and living expenses. Now, Sir, will the hon. gentleman answer me this question: What is it proposed to pay Mr. William Wilson outside of his travelling expenses?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. So far as Mr. Wilson and the other persons connected with these investigations are concerned, I propose to look into the character of the work they have done and the reports I receive from them, and to make a proposal to Council as to what, under the circumstances, I think it would be reasonable and proper to pay. The Order in Council provides that the amount shall not exceed $25 a day. I do not propose to allow Mr. Wilson that amount; I think that would be excessive; but there might be occasional circumstances in which that sum should be allowed. I have not decided what amount I will recommend in the case of Mr. Wilson. He has not yet received one farthing, directly or indirectly; neither have any of the other commissioners. I had no means of paying them until Parliament has appropriated the money, and they were advised that they could not receive anything from my department until an appropriation had been made for the purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. That is quite satisfactory. I am very glad to hear that they entered on the work with the understanding that in the meantime they should pay their own expenses; but I think my hon. friend ought to state to the House what he proposes to pay Mr. Wilson.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot say how much. I do not propose to exceed the amount named in the Order in Council. My present expectation is that it will not come up to that. I propose to consult with the members of the Government on that subject.

Mr. FOSTER. Has any Order in Council been passed other than the general order which has been brought down?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. The maximum amount was simply stated?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The maximum amount.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has employed some half-dozen persons on commissions; he has had these gentlemen at work, some from October, some from November, some from January, some from February; and he has not yet come down to the business point of defining what their remuneration is to be. My hon. friend confesses that, with his men working all along the Intercolonial Railway for the space of two or three months, he has not yet any understanding with them as to what they are to be paid, or fixed the remuneration they are to have.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I think my hon. friend has again demonstrated his business ability before the House. Now, Mr. William Wilson is a political partisan of the strongest type.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He is a very decent and honourable man.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Wilson is a political partisan who has been hand in glove with my hon. friend and with his political fortunes for all these years. The man who is appointed to try partisan offences, and who ought at least to have the recommendation of judicial qualities, is scarcely to be found in a man who has been a pronounced and bitter partisan—I say that advisedly. Then there is Mr. McAlpine, who has also been appointed. He is also a strong and bitter partisan.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He was not appointed by the Railway Department.

Mr. FOSTER. He was appointed by the Government. He is known all over the province of New Brunswick as a very strong and bitter partisan. Is the appointment of men of this stamp in accordance with the doctrine on which hon. gentlemen stand, that what we want to get out of the service is the partisan feeling in it? There is a sense of injustice when you send a well-known and pronounced political partisan to sit as a judge in the case of an officer of a different political faith from himself. All I want to say, as a criticism on this proceeding, is that it would have been far better if the Government had selected men of moderate views, even though belonging to their own party; I would not say anything against that. But when they select men who have mingled in all the elections, who have gone all over the province with the hon. gentleman in his political contests, who have been connected with the inner work of the party for years, there is a feeling from the outset that justice is not going to be done; and when you add to that the fact that these gentlemen are not obliged to hold open court, but may carry on the investigation privately, that the instructions of the Minister of Railways are that they are to take these men and question them, and if by questioning them they do not come to a sufficient conclusion, they may then summon witnesses, but no counsel is to be allowed to these men; I think all these things put together show an inquiry which from the first must be looked upon as somewhat of a farce, and as not giving any reason for expecting fair treatment and fair trial.

Mr. McAlpine went in one case to a place in the county of King's where there was a lightkeeper whose brother was a very pronounced political partisan. Palmer, the brother, is a friend of my own, and an active politician, but the light-keeper himself is a man of altogether a different type. He is a quiet, unassuming man, who takes no public part in any political matters but attends only to his own business. The commissioner gave this man only two or three hours' notice and conducted an inquiry in his absence. In fact, he had witnesses brought up in his absence. He did not give this man a fair chance, as I am informed. I am not sure what report the commissioner made, but it is stated that the report is favourable, but that this light-keeper has been removed and some one else appointed. Now, I do not think that a man should be punished because his brother is a partisan. This gentleman has been dispossessed of his office, and he declares—and I believe him—that he was guilty of no partisan act at all, either in the last or the preceding election, and my knowledge of the man goes to prove that he is one of those quiet men who never take any active part in elections. So far as the appointments of these partisan commissioners are concerned, they defeat the very aim which hon. gentlemen opposite profess to have in view, and that is to give a fair and impartial court of inquiry.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not plead guilty to the charge of appointing partisan commissioners at all. When the matter first came before the House last session and the consensus of opinion was that those gentlemen who denied the charge of offensive political partisanship should have an investigation before being dismissed, the Controller of Customs and myself got together and we determined to appoint a gentleman as commissioner for the maritime provinces, who would be unexceptionable, so far as political proclivities were concerned. We appointed Captain Bloomfield Douglas, who has always been a strong Conservative, and has been in the employ of the Department of Marine and Fisheries for many years. I examined his record and learned that he had been stipendiary magistrate for years in Australia, and had vast experience in matters of this kind, and, having been brought into contact with him, I considered that he would do the duty impartially.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, I believe that was a good appointment.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I made the appointment, and there was a chorus of indignation on the part of my friends, because I did so, but I felt it desirable that we should have a man who would hold a fair, open, impartial and honest investigation. Captain Douglas was to have gone all over the maritime provinces had he been able, but as time went on, it was found that he could not get over the ground, and we appointed as commissioner for Prince Edward Island, Mr. J. H. Palmer, who is stipendiary magistrate in Queen's county, P.E.I., and who is a Liberal, but of a very mild type. He is a gentleman who attends to his business and who, from his very position of stipendiary magistrate, is not involved in political conflicts to any extent. He was appointed for Prince Edward Island, so that, so far as the Department of Marine and Fisheries and the Customs are concerned, the investigations have been made in Prince Edward Island by Mr. Palmer and in Nova Scotia by Captain Bloomfield Douglas. Mr. McAlpine did make a few investigations in the province of New Brunswick. I do not think it would be proper just at present to discuss the different reports because they are not before us, but I would say to my hon. friend that the practice I have pursued has been not to ask these gentlemen to pronounce judgment themselves, but to take the evidence down, and I take the responsibility of determining and reporting to Council whether that evidence shows active partisanship.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Is it an abstract of the evidence, or the evidence in full?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. All the evidence is reported to me in full, and I have reams and reams from Captain Douglas in every case. Of course, that evidence is obtainable by members of the House at any time. Upon that we pass judgment. Knowing that Captain Douglas was not a professional man, although he had had a quasi-professional experience, and as he was to be employed for a length of time, I did not deem it fit that he should be paid at the rate of professional men. I therefore agreed with him on $4 a day besides expenses, which is the total amount he is to receive. The expenses of all these commissions will be exceedingly moderate, and I can promise hon. gentlemen that every fair-play has been given.

Mr. ELLIS. With reference to the observations of the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) regarding Messrs. Wilson and McAlpine, I do not think he is correct in describing these gentlemen as strong and bitter partisans. They are strong but the application of bitter is rather unjust.

Mr. FOSTER. I have personal knowledge in one case.

Mr. ELLIS. There may be, of course, always an exceptional case, but I know both gentlemen; I know Mr. McAlpine very well indeed, and I would not say that he is a man who could be bitter at all. He is a man of an exceedingly humorous and kindly nature, indeed, and I am quite satisfied that all his reports will be very fair. There is a strong streak of kindly human nature in him that would prevent him being bitter when sitting as a judge.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not suggest he would be bitter as a judge, but I said he was a strong, bitter partisan—I mean in political contests. I entirely agree with the hon. gentleman as to the kindly nature of the man, and can bear testimony to that as well as my hon. friend.

Mr. ELLIS. The same is true with regard to Mr. Wilson. I am not so well acquainted with him personally, but I may observe that he is a man who takes the world as it goes largely, and would be reasonably fair in any case. My hon. friend will find that he would have good reason to withdraw that application of the word "bitter," as it might seem to the House and the committee that these men would be so bitter that they would no be able to do justice.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has been pleased to promote two investigations in my riding, one in reference to the fishery inspector and the other the light-keeper.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What are their names?

Mr. BENNETT. Smith is the fishery inspector and Little the lighthouse keeper. I do not propose to make any remarks with reference to these two particular cases. The charges against them are in connection with the last June election and not the by-elections; but if the hon. Minister is going to have investigations in that riding, I trust that he will also look into the case of a very pronounced Liberal lighthouse keeper, whom I do not ask to have removed on account of any officious interference in elections, but by reason of the fact that in the winter of 1895-96 he harboured in the Government lighthouse three men who were guilty of illegal fishing. The statement I have made will be borne out by the records in the hon. gentleman's own department. He will find that this very strong Liberal lighthouse keeper was convicted of having harboured these men and of having fished illegally, and was very properly fined $50. Of course it will be a matter of curiosity to hon. gentlemen opposite to know that I made no complaints against this man at the time, nor asked for his removal, as I might properly have done under the circumstances. However, he was a man with a family, and I thought it would be very poor gratification to myself to see a man turned out in that way, and I permitted the case to go by with a warning. However, if the Minister does propose to investigate the action of a few men simply because they exercised the right of voting on my behalf, I trust he will look into this case of permitting to be kept in the public service a man who, according to his own record, has been a law breaker in the past. I do not propose to name the man. But if the Minister does go on with the investigation against the other two, then I will afterwards call his attention to this case. If the hon. gentleman hides his political friends on that ground, I am afraid that he will have to condone the acts of this political law breaker, because the protest would be so strong from his large Liberal connection, that the hon. gentleman will think twice before dispensing with his services.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not recollect any investigation having been held against the parties my hon. friend refers to. So far as the province of Ontario is concerned, I have not appointed any commissioners there except the inspector of the province of Ontario, a gentleman who was appointed by my predecessors in office, and whom I do not know personally at all. But he holds a position with reference to fisheries, and I appointed him where I had occasion to investigate any matters. Although he was appointed by the previous Government, I must say that he appears to have discharged his duties very well. I have sent Mr. Cunningham from the department on one or two lighthouse cases, but I have not appointed a legal man at all. In fact I have discouraged these investigations as far as possible.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I have not anything to say about the appointments which have been made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The two men he has appointed would seem to be, from what he says, perfectly able to conduct the investigations with which they are charged and who, so far as appearances go, at all events, until proof to the contrary is given, will no doubt conduct these investigations with impartiality. But it seems to me that what my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) stated now, is a distinct condemnation of what the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals did in the district of Quebec; and also a condemnation of what the Postmaster General did in the same district. These men who are appointed to investigate such cases have a very serious duty to perform. Sometimes they are sitting in judgment upon men who have no other resource in the world than the salary which they draw from the Government. Now, it seems to me that these investigations should be carried on by men who are not in active political life, who are not partisans, sometimes indeed they are more violent than the men upon whose cases they are sitting; but they should be gentlemen who are, to a certain extent, removed from the political arena and who could judge with impartiality the conduct of men which they are to inquire into. Now, in the district of Quebec two gentlemen have been appointed to investigate charges against public officials in the Railway Department and in the Post Office Department. These two gentlemen are Mr. G. A. Bedard and Mr. Marcell Chabot. I am not going to say anything against Mr. Bedard further than that he is one of the most ardent political supporters of my hon. friend; that he is actively engaged in politics so far as a man can be who has not actually run for the House of Commons or for the provincial assembly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You will hardly find anybody who is not, who is worth anything at all, even perhaps among those on the bench.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I did not expect to hear a Minister of the Crown throw out that imputation against the bench in the province of Quebec; he probably means the bench in the district of Quebec. I may tell him that he can find on the bench of the Superior Court and of the lower courts, gentlemen who would be perfectly able to conduct this investigation with impartiality. I do not think that it is right for a Minister of the Crown, especially after the rebuke we got from the Chair the other day, to make any such imputation against the bench as has just fallen from the lips of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals. Now, as I said before, all I have to say against Mr. Bedard is that he is a violent partisan; I will not say anything further than that now, or until I have before me the reports which he is called upon to make on the different cases that he is investigating. The other gentleman I mentioned is Mr. Marcell Chabot. I do not know what fees are paid to Mr. Chabot, but I will say that he used to be a lawyer. His name, however, has not appeared upon the roll of lawyers for a long time; he has not had any occupation or calling of any kind for a long time, he has not been before the courts for a very long time. He was occupied during the last provincial elections, and for some time previously, in editing a very violent newspaper in the district of Quebec called the "Clairon," in which every day he said as much against his political adversaries as it was possible for him to say. At intervals he used to go stumping, and when he had nothing to do in stumping or editing his paper, he was sitting in judgment upon political opponents in the district of Quebec. It seems to me that such a man as Mr. Chabot is not qualified, in the first place, to occupy the position to which he has been appointed by the Government; and in the second place, being a violent partisan, he certainly cannot make an investigation which would meet the ends of justice. I asked my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries whether the whole evidence was taken in the investigations which were made by the commissioners appointed by him, and he answered that all the evidence was taken.

Mr. CASGRAIN.

Well, I may say that in some of the investigations which I attended and which were held by Mr. Chabot, that gentlemen distinctly refused to take evidence that was given by the witnesses, and dictated the evidence in his own words to the clerk of the commission.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I was specially referring to appointments in the maritime provinces.

Mr. CASGRAIN. But why was this same kind of conduct not followed in other circumstances? My question only applied to the commissioners who were appointed by my hon. friend. I say the rule laid down by my hon. friend is not a safe rule for those who are brought up before these commissioners; and I say the other rule under which a commissioner may be of the political proclivities of Mr. Chabot, is not a safe rule either, and not a just rule for those who come before his court. Now, the question has been raised by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) as to whether these commissions were legal. Now, I will give the committee an example of one of the commissions which was issued, and which I know something about, because I defended the man who was accused. A commission was issued to inquire as to whether a certain official had meddled in the last Federal elections which took place on the 23rd of June. Now, it seems to me reading the statute as I do, that no authority is vested in the Government under that statute; a commission such as that to make this investigation. It may be said that it is within the statute, it is within the right of the Government, to issue a commission to inquire into any official act of a public servant, that they may appoint a commission to examine into the acts of a public official which he has committed in his official capacity. But can the Government, under the statute, appoint a commission to find out whether a man has engaged in political conversation with one of his neighbours, as was tried to be proved in the case where I defended a man who was accused? The circumstances were these: A commission was issued to Mr. Chabot authorizing him to inquire whether a certain postmaster had been guilty of offensive partisanship, and evidence under that commission was taken as to certain conversations which had taken place between this postmaster and one of his neighbours on a certain day, and I protested against that sort of examination. Now, I say that these commissions are wrong, that they do not come under the statute; that it was nothing but persecution in the case I refer to; and it seems to me that a Government which calls itself a Liberal Government should not descend to the appointment of such commissioners as they have appointed in the district of Quebec.

Mr. HAGGART. I am glad to hear the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, because a few moments ago the Minister of Marine and Fisheries stated that there was no doubt, on his side of the House at any rate, of the power to issue commissions; and he doubted very much whether any lawyer in this House would dispute the power of the Government to issue a commission for the purpose of inquiring into charges of political partisanship during an election. The hon. gentleman from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) has just voiced my opinion. I am not a lawyer, although I have studied law; but I venture to say that the opinion of that hon. gentleman is in accordance with the law. These commissions are appointed upon the report of the Minister. I will give an example which I have extracted from the report of a committee of the Privy Council approved by His Excellency on the 18th of November, 1896:

On a report, dated 18th November, 1896, from the Minister of Railways and Canals, stated that charges of active partisanship in the last general election for the Dominion Parliament have been preferred against many officials and persons in the employ of the Government upon the Government railways, and statutory declarations have in many cases been received by the Minister of Railways and Canals, affirming and supporting such charges. The Minister deeming it expedient—

I will not read the whole of it.

—to appoint one or more commissioners, under the said Act, to investigate and report upon the said charges.

The Act referred to was chap. 115 of the Revised Statutes, under which the commissioners were appointed to investigate and to report. Well, let us look at the Revised Statutes of Canada to see whether there is any authority such as the Minister of Marine and Fisheries says that there is no doubt about:

The Minister presiding over any department of the civil service of Canada may appoint at any time, under the authority of the Governor in Council, a commissioner or commissioners to investigate and report upon the state and management of the business or any part of the business of such department, either in the inside or outside service thereof, and the conduct of any person in such service, so far as the same relates to his official duties.

I would like to hear the opinion of the Minister of Justice upon that statute, I would like to hear the opinion of the Solicitor General as to whether a charge preferred against a party of active partisanship in the last general election, comes within the provision "any person in such service so far as the same relates to his official duty." That is the clause upon which this commission is appointed. I am only giving what I think is a common sense interpretation to this clause; it is the interpretation of one who has been sitting in this House for twenty-four or twenty-five years, and who has been listening to lawyers in this House; and I venture to say that nine-tenths of the lawyers will not defend the view that this statute covers the commissions that have been appointed by the Government. If the case was brought up before one of the Superior Court judges, it would be held that the Governor in Council had no power under that statute to issue any such commission. Look at the absurdity of it. The intention is to inquire into a person's official duties. Does the phrase "official duties" include the act of a party having voted at the last general election, or perhaps taken some action which may be termed political? How can that interfere with his official duties? In ninety-nine cases out of one hundred what is called political partisanship does not interfere with his political duties. The Government state that they have authority under the statute of issuing a commission, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries very coolly says that there is no doubt upon the subject, that no lawyer in the House would venture to offer an opinion to the contrary. I was very glad to hear the late Solicitor General of the province of Quebec (Mr. Casgrain) get up and give the same interpretation to the statute that I have given.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not think that the late Solicitor General of Quebec will adopt your interpretation of the statute, nor any other lawyer.

It being Six o'clock, the Committee rose for recess.

After Recess.

YUKON MINING, TRADING AND TRANSPORTATION COMPANY.

Mr. MORRISON moved that the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 118) to incorporate the Yukon Mining, Trading and Transportation Company be concurred in.

Mr. BERGERON. I would ask the hon. gentleman to give an account of the amendments made in the Senate before we pass the second reading.

Mr. MORRISON. I may say that the amendment in this case is a legal amendment. There was a misapprehension as to the wording of the preamble. The company was registered in the province of British Columbia, and the word "incorporation" was used interchangeably with the word "registration," and at the instance of the law clerk an amendment to section 3 of this Bill was inserted which seems to overcome the apparent objection, and we have consented to it. I will read the clause as amended:

This Act, and "The Railway Act," so far as it is applicable, shall apply to the company and its railway instead of the said Acts of British Columbia and the British Columbia Railway Act, provided that nothing in this section shall affect anything done, any right or privilege acquired, or any liability incurred, up to and at the time of the passing of this Act, to all of which rights and privileges the company shall continue to be entitled, and to all of which liabilities the company shall continue to be subject.

The other amendment was as to the distance west which we could go, limiting us to the 133rd meridian. That, of course, puts it beyond peradventure that we shall not interfere with other charters which have been granted.

Mr. BERGERON. Does it not interfere with a charter granted the other day in this House?

Mr. MORRISON. No, because their charter names a certain meridian, and we are not able to go further west than another meridian. These amendments were made at the suggestion of the other parties. They were suggested to the Senate, and we consented to them.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not offer any frivolous opposition to this Bill, but it seems to me that there are many amendments here, in fact, more than what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Morrison) says, so much so that the Bill that went to the Senate does not come back in the same way in which it went. It is very hard to see the changes as they are brought down here.

Mr. MORRISON. I might explain very shortly that there have been a number of words and one or two paragraphs cut out, but that follows necessarily from the introduction of the amendment which I have read. The insertion of that clause obviates the necessity of these other clauses remaining in. So you cannot say that these are amendments in the sense of altering the intent of the Bill or changing the powers given by it. They have simply been necessitated by the introduction of the amended clause. For instance, section 2 has been entirely struck out. This has been necessitated by the introduction of the amended clause which I have just read. It is the same with clauses 4, 5 and 6. They follow as a matter of course, but these changes were made at the instance of the people from whom any objection would come or ought to come. We considered that the Bill was sufficient as it was, but rather than have any trouble or delay we accepted their suggestions. We thought that they were harmless, and I think that they are harmless. The very fact that the amended clause has been put in obviates the necessity of having the others. The others would be simply surplusage. Lines have been cut out so as to conform to the amended clause. The word "incorporated" is cut out. It simply adheres more closely to the petition as filed. The objection raised in the Senate committee was that by having the word "incorporated" there, to that extent it differed from the reading of the petition, and that by cutting out this word it brought it more in keeping with the petition as presented. We had no objection to that. We were quite willing that these words should be left out, and they having been left out it does not alter the meaning of the preamble in the slightest. It simply makes it less cumbersome.

Mr. SPROULE. You contended very strongly in the Railway Committee that it would never do to leave out the word "incorporated."

Mr. MORRISON. Yes, but we did not have the amended clause in then. At the time that these objections were raised the amendment was not suggested. It was a legal question, and I was quite willing to leave it to the law clerk of the Senate to confer with the law clerk of the Railway Committee, and they were both, as I am informed, quite satisfied with the amended clause. I was quite willing it should be left to the opinion of these gentlemen who are specialists. I have the greatest respect for the opinion of Mr. Creighton and Mr. McCord in matters of this kind. I think that they are quite competent, and more so than I am to judge as to what amendments should be or should not be made in a case of this kind. With these exceptions there are no other amendments made. As to the other provisions which go to the root of the matter they were left intact, and they follow the line of the charter which has been granted.

Mr. BERGERON. The objections which seem to apply to this Bill are these, as far as I can see them. The first is a change in the title of the Bill. It was originally entitled "The Yukon Mining and Transportation Company (Foreign)."

Mr. MORRISON. That change was made in this House.

Mr. BERGERON. It was one of those West Virginia charters of which there are a great many in British Columbia now. I belong to a company which had a charter of that kind, and it was changed in the Ontario legislature. It came from British Columbia, and it was incorporated under one of these West Virginia charters.

Mr. FOSTER. It was registered in British Columbia.

Mr. BERGERON. They changed it in the Senate, and they have called it "An Act to incorporate the Yukon Mining, Trading and Transportation Company." The other day we passed a Bill entitled "An Act to incorporate the Yukon Mining, Trading and Transportation Company," very nearly the same title. I am told that there are some privileges granted to this company which were refused to the other, and without any reason.

Mr. MORRISON. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) specify them?

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must confine the discussion to the amendments, and not discuss the Bill in its entirety.

Mr. LISTER. These amendments that you propose now, are amendments made in the Senate.

Mr. MORRISON. Yes.

Mr. LISTER. Was the Bill opposed in the Senate?

Mr. MORRISON. It was very vigorously.

Mr. LISTER. By whom?

Mr. MORRISON. On behalf of the British Yukon Company, which got a charter through this House for that locality or vicinity.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do you accept the amendments made in the Senate?

Mr. MORRISON. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What is the controversy about?

Mr. MORRISON. The hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) has been making certain inquiries which I have been endeavouring to answer, but I do not understand that he is opposing the Bill.

Mr. LISTER. These amendments which you now accept were made in the Senate by those opposing the Bill.

Mr. MORRISON. Yes.

Mr. LISTER. Then, why is the Bill opposed?

Mr. BERGERON. If my hon. friend (Mr. Lister) would allow me to say a few words he would find out. This is one of those Bills which sometimes goes hurriedly through the committee and of which we afterwards find out what we should have seen at first. I believe my hon. friend (Mr. Morrison) may be correct about the amendments, but that is not the information I have, and it is but natural that if these Senate amendments were carried at the instigation of the opposing company, the other company would be opposed to passing them here. Now, my information is as follows:—The petition alleges incorrectly that the company is incorporated in British Columbia. The genesis of the company is wrong and powers have been got under false representation. It is now distinctly stated that the company is an American company registered in West Virginia. If hon. gentlemen will look at name on it, and as we know usually the names of the incorporators appear in the Bill. It would appear that when they came before the House of Commons they simply asked powers to confirm them in these privileges which were granted by that West Virginia charter which was registered in British Columbia, but when they went to the Senate they took a different course entirely and asked for the ordinary incorporation and it was granted. This is now what they are asking to have sanctioned by this House and that is why we oppose it. My information further is: The powers of this West Virginia company are set forth in the British Columbia "Gazette," page 1414, 1897, and allow the company to do anything. In the committee of the House of Commons it was expressly stated that the company did not wish to trade and this was given as a reason why the charter should be granted. Under these circumstances is it the intention of the House to concur in the amendments of the Senate without recommitting the Bill. It is quite evident from the alterations made in the Senate that the Bill went through committee very hurriedly and the terms of it were not properly digested. The Bill gives powers to a trading, mining, navigation, &c., &c., company to build and operate a railway. In view of the strong objection taken to these powers being granted to the British Yukon Company, is the House prepared to grant such extensive privileges to a company purely American and one whose promoters are not known even by name?

Under clause 7, the company has powers to build to a point on Teslin Lake, not further west than the 133rd meridian. It also has powers to build to a point on the northern boundary of British Columbia. The limitation in the former part of the paragraph is therefore no limitation at all and the clause means that if this American company chooses it can build absolutely to the spot and over the route of the British Yukon Company, and as this charter is avowedly being got not for the purposes of the promoters building the line, but for the purposes of being sold. Is it not fair to assume that it would be used for the purpose of forcing money out of the pockets of the British Yukon Company, and thereby hampering their negotiation and work. As clause 25 has been struck out none of the controlling clauses mentioned in the Company's Clauses Act can be brought to bear against this American company which is only limited by the terms of its own West Virginia or Delaware charter, and although it is true that the transportation business is to be under the supervision of the Governor in Council, the trading, mining and other business outside this is subject to no control at all. And more especially does this relate to dealing with lands, because here again the Canadian Government cannot dictate to a company formed in West Virginia as to its powers. As it is quite clear that this foreign company is not controlled by the Railway Act. under clause 14 it can undoubtedly hold land to such an extent as to most seriously hamper any other undertaking operating in that region. At the present time the business on the Yukon is absolutely monopolized by the North American Trading and Transportation Company and the Alaska Commercial Company, both of which companies have steamers on the lower river and are most anxious to keep the approach from the south from being opened up. The former company controls the Indian packers over the Chilkoot Pass, the difficult pass now used from the south, and it is an absolute fact that whereas they have been charging from $14 to $17 per 100 pounds for carrying a distance of less than 20 miles, on it being ascertained by them that the British company was seriously intending to open up communication through the White Pass, they reduced these extortionate charges of $14 to $17 per 100 pounds to from $6 to $8 per 100 pounds. It is freely asserted in the city that this West Virginia Company is neither more nor less than an off-shoot of the North American Trading and Transportation Company, and it is well known that this company has been using its utmost endeavours, in the first place, to prevent the British Company having a charter granted to it, and in the second place to obtain a charter for the West Virginia Company. This shows that the passing of the other charter a few days ago had the result of reducing those charges more than half; and if this Bill passes in its present form, these reductions will be simply wiped out. There is an opinion growing—I do not know whether it is correct or not—that this company is really for other purposes than the building of a road and the carrying on of trade in that country. I think, not to delay the House too long, that it would be a great deal better if we had this Bill printed as it came from the Senate. This has been done very often here, and I do not see why we should not do it again. If the Bill is reprinted, we shall have an opportunity to read it, and if it is correct, my hon. friend will not lose anything, and it would be more satisfactory to the other members of the House to deal with the Bill according to the customs and usages of Parliament. I will not make a motion, but I would suggest to my hon. friend that the Bill be reprinted before he asks the House to agree to a second reading of the amendments.

Mr. MORRISON. I appeal to the hon. gentleman to allow this Bill to go through. I assure him that his information is absolutely and entirely wrong, and I know the source from which it emanates. Under the circumstances it is manifestly hard lines on the promoters of this Bill and every one connected with it that at this stage it should be arbitrarily opposed and blocked. We have been opposed by the other company which wants monopolistic powers out there, but this Bill has gone through both Houses, it has been fully and amply discussed before both Railway Committees, and I would appeal to the hon. gentleman to let it go through.

Mr. FLINT. I understand that this Bill, with the amendments made in it by the Senate, is altogether or very largely different from the Bill which passed this House some time ago.

Mr. MORRISON. I assure the hon. member that that is not the case. There is no material alteration in the Bill. Any alteration that has been made in it is to the advantage of the other company. This opposition is entirely evoked by the opposing company. I have not time, even if I had the inclination, to go into the details of the matter; but I intend at the proper time, and under proper circumstances to refer to that.

Mr. FLINT. If the amendments made in the Bill would have the effect which I stated when I rose, any person would be justified in making a searching inquiry into them. But on the assurance of my hon. friend which I have, of course, to take and do take with perfect satisfaction, that the amendments do not change the Bill materially from what it was as already accepted by the House, I will refrain from making that inquiry which, under ordinary circumstances, it would be my duty to make. To a certain extent, we are in duty bound to listen carefully to objections, even though they may be made by rival promoters, and to weigh them fairly and candidly. But, on the assurance of my hon. friend, I refrain from what, under ordinary circumstances, I would feel it a duty to do, namely, to insist on these amendments being printed and laid before the House.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I have not the least desire to block this Bill, and even if the hour for private Bills expired before this discussion concluded, there would be ample time to consider it next week.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. How many days do you intend to stay next week?

Mr. CASGRAIN. There are three days for private Bills next week. Seeing that the Bill has been subjected to a great many amendments in the Senate, we should know something about those amendments before we can discuss the Bill in an intelligent manner. The only way in which I could find out what the amendments were was to read the "Journals" of the Senate yesterday, and which I had not been able to get until very late this evening. I will read to the House some of the amendments made by the Senate in the Bill, to show the House how impossible it is for us to consider this Bill in an intelligent manner without having studied the amendments and compared them with the original Bill.

Mr. MORRISON. May I ask the hon. member—I hope he will not take offence at the question—if he intends to talk out this Bill?

Mr. CASGRAIN. Not at all.

Mr. MORRISON. The hon. member knows that if he talks much longer, that will be the result, whether he intends it or not. Understanding the Bill as I do, and knowing the advantage that it will be to the province of British Columbia, I am anxious that it should go through; but if the hon. gentleman intends to talk it out, I might drop it now and save the time of the House. I have tried to explain these amendments, and I think the hon. member ought not be actuated by a missionary desire to reform things as they appear to be, or to rescue the country from anything that might happen from the passage of this Bill. In all fairness, I must say that I am a little alarmed when I see these hon. gentlemen evincing an interest in this Bill. I have seen a good many Bills go through, and I have not seen anything of this kind happen before—one hon. gentleman getting up with a brief carefully prepared—I do not blame him for it—and right on his heels the other hon. gentleman getting up and deliberately quoting the amendments. I would ask the hon. gentleman to take my word that in my opinion those amendments do not materially alter the Bill and were made at the instance of people who oppose it. I would like the hon. gentleman to remember that these amendments were made at the instance of those who are opposed to the measure and we did not object. I would appeal to the hon. gentleman to allow this Bill to go on in the usual way. I give my word that the brief which was put in the hands of the hon. gentleman who spoke recently (Mr. Bergeron) is entirely misleading. I would not for a moment say that he wished to mislead the House, but the information received by him is altogether wrong. I again appeal to hon. members not to arbitrarily oppose this Bill which has been amply discussed and criticised and amended by the committee of both Houses.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would take the hon. gentleman's word certainly, and I hope he will take mine, when I say I do not want to block this Bill, for he is the last man in the House to whom I would do an injury of any kind.

Mr. MORRISON. I am not personally interested.

Mr. CASGRAIN. But I have a duty to perform, and having taken great interest in the railway legislation this session, although the hon. gentleman may be fully convinced that these amendments are all right, he may be mistaken. It is not fair to members of this House to have to look at Bills amended in this manner, when the proposed amendments are only found in the Orders of the Day, which come down at the very minute the Bill is to be discussed. There is something wrong somewhere. I would be sorry indeed if it should happen that on account of this the Bill was blocked, but that is not my fault and perhaps not the fault of the procedure of the House either. I do not know why this very important Bill, containing the largest powers Parliament can give, and giving them to a foreign corporation, should come in this shape before the House.

Amendments concurred in.

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I would like to have a word with my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition. Several members from both sides have come to me and expressed the strong and not unnatural desire to know whether we could not arrange to close the business of this House to-morrow. So far as the Government are concerned, the thing is practicable, provided a modus vivendi can be arrived at between the hon. gentleman and myself. I think we could give him all the time he requires, if it were possible for him to tell us how many hours he wants to talk on the various subjects.

Mr. FOSTER. Ask me an easier question.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. All the items that remain for discussion are the ones connected with the Railway Department. The others are of small importance, or ones like the special sum voted to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, reserved specially at the request of hon. gentlemen opposite. I was going to suggest that if he preferred it, we could allow these resolutions to pass on the express understanding that he shall have the fullest power of debating them on concurrence as in committee. If the hon. gentlemen, for reasons of their own, want to hold the House two or three days, let them say so, and we can fight it out according to the rules of the lists without any great inconvenience either to ourselves or themselves. I do not care a straw, but if it is equally convenient to the hon. gentleman it would be a very considerable number of members on both sides if we could come to a practical understanding that, so far as this House is concerned, our business should terminate to-morrow night. If we can come to an understanding, well and good, but if for reasons of state we cannot, let the hon. gentleman say so, and we will understand each other.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has put a question in which no doubt hon. members on both sides are very much interested and in the object of which they no doubt sympathize and that is to shorten the session. So far as my own talking is concerned, I am willing to abridge that as usual to the greatest possible extent. Speaking for myself, and I do not know but that I may speak for hon. gentlemen beside me, so far as the remaining items are concerned, there is nothing which should provoke much debate, provided the Postmaster General would bring down that little return he promised.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What return?

Mr. FOSTER. I have often heard that question from the hon. gentleman, but he knows very well the return I mean. I do not see anything serious in the Estimates that need take any very great length of time, but my hon. friend must recollect that when he speaks of closing the business by to-morrow night, he is only allowing us one day. There is the Crow's Nest Pass road up for debate.

Mr. LISTER. We will drop that.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. member for Lambton seems to have a strong desire to work behind the Government and have it dropped. Whether he is in the confidence of any member of the Government in expressing that desire, I do not know, but so far as I am personally concerned, I want to see it put through and will facilitate its passage as much as possible. I do not see why we should not finish the Estimates practically and get through the Crow's Nest Pass road to-night and possibly some of the other Government measures. I do not know how long the item with reference to school lands in Manitoba will take, if the hon. gentleman presses that. If he does not, he will remove a contentious matter out of the arena and greatly shorten the debate. Suppose that be done, the only important matter that remains is the railway subsidies, and the most important of those the proposal to carry out, by way of estimate for nine months, what has been debated in both Houses and has not obtained the consent of Parliament.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. On that of course the hon. gentleman has a perfect right to expect full debate. But I was going to suggest that if convenient to him and the hon. gentlemen beside him, we could take that pro forma and have the debate on concurrence just as fully as if sitting in committee.

Mr. FOSTER. That is on Monday?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. To-morrow. I do not know what length of time the hon. gentleman may wish to debate it. They have the right to take any length they please.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is very generous with the time. Of course it belongs to us too, and we have no desire to prolong the session one moment beyond what the interests of the country demand, but when the hon. gentleman asks us to close all the railway Estimates and that item as well by to-morrow night, I am afraid he is asking too much. I will do the best I can, and I am sure hon. gentlemen on this side have no desire to prolong the session indefinitely, and I think that perhaps we might get through the business by Monday night. Now, as to the resolution on the Manitoba school fund, does my hon. friend intend to press that?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Not to-night, certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. But suppose we could come to what is a fair arrangement to close this business, as regards this House, by Monday night?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I shall be in a position, perhaps, to give my hon. friend an answer to that question on Monday.

Mr. FOSTER. That is indicative at any rate, of the fact that you cannot close to-morrow.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Oh, no, we cannot close to-morrow.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not see how you could possibly do so, giving the Opposition the freedom that they desire with reference to that very important matter and the railway subsidies. I will do the best I can, and I think hon. gentlemen on this side will second me, to close on Monday. But that will depend somewhat on what is to be done with the above mentioned resolution.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to know when the Crow's Nest Pass Bill will be brought up again. I had a few remarks to make which were cut short when the Bill was up before.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Perhaps it will be brought up to-night.

Mr. BERGERON. Before we pass this item, I desire to say a few words. I understood that this was the item upon which we might express our opinion as to the commissions of investigation that have been appointed, and I imagine, after the courteous words that have passed between the two chiefs, that the business will be rapidly concluded, so I might as well say what I have to say on this motion. We have heard a great deal this afternoon about the investigations that took place against civil servants who were accused of offensive partisanship. Like my hon. friend from West Lambton (Mr. Lister), I am one of those who thought it would be cruel to dismiss a public servant for any cause without having an investigation before which he could defend himself. But I am ready to say now that, having seen the result of the investigations that have taken place, and the way they have been carried on, I am entirely opposed to their continuance, and I think that the sooner we stop these investigations the better.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, it will be money saved, and hon. gentlemen opposite intend to carry out their policy of dismissing right and left anyhow, and an investigation does not amount to anything. I know of only one case where an investigation has prevented the Government from dismissing a man.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I know of two dozen.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not question what the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) says, but I say that I know of only one such case, and that was the case of a postmaster in Ontario. I will give some cases within my own knowledge where there was an investigation and some where there was not. And in every case the result was the same. I have come to the conclusion that the fact is that hon. gentlemen need positions for their supporters and they must have them. The other day some reference was made to the employees on the canals, and some gentlemen stated, among them the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) that the lockmen on the canals were appointed purely and simply for the season. That was the first time I ever heard anything of the sort. These lockmen were appointed, as the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) said the other night, during good behaviour. They are supposed to hold their positions all their lives, if they do their work properly as lockmen. The best proof of that is that some of the men employed on the canal have paid and are still paying to the superannuation fund, men who were appointed twenty or thirty years ago. Some of them were superannuated since I came to this House. They have been replaced by men who, it is true, do not pay to the superannuation fund, but they took their offices under the impression that they would hold them as long as they did their duty. But not only were men of this class dismissed, but in the county of Beauharnois, men were dismissed who were permanent employees and who have paid to the superannuation fund for eighteen years. And they were dismissed simply on the ipse dixit of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) without any investigation at all. For instance, there was Mr. Danis, who was employed eighteen years as collector of tolls for the Department of Railways and Canals. He was dismissed without investigation. He had paid to the superannuation fund for eighteen years. He was also the collector of customs. He was dismissed after paying to the fund.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). He will be refunded what he paid.

Mr. BERGERON. I hope so. I am mentioning these things as an answer to what was said yesterday. I am not complaining now—I have done that before—but I am making a comparison between what was said and the facts that are within my own knowledge. Mr. Lefebvre, a permanent employee was dismissed without investigation. There were the lockmaster, Mr. Mathieu, Mr. Ruffauge and Mr. Cardinal. They were employed all the year round. They did not pay to the superannuation fund because they were appointed since ten years ago. They were not only paid but they were also housed by the Government. Then there was a man named Monette, a lockman who was in the same position. He was dismissed. The point I want to make is that whether there is an investigation or not the conclusion is the same—the dismissal of the employee. The Government dismissed the postmaster at Beauharnois, a man who had a salary of about $500 or $600—a good postmaster against whom nothing could be said as a postmaster. He was dismissed on the ground that he was an active and offensive partisan, but no investigation took place. Mr. Cardinal, in the parish, was dismissed without an investigation and was replaced by one of the strongest Liberals in the parish, or for that matter in the county of Beauharnois. There was an investigation held in Valleyfield. When an investigation was held there, why was not one held in Beauharnois or in St. Stanislas de Kotska? The man who held the investigation was Mr. Mercier, a lawyer of Montreal, a rabid Liberal, who has been working in every election in the county for the last five years, and who, in fact, was working in the election when he was holding the investigation. He was judge, Crown prosecutor—everything. The men brought before him had not the right to have a lawyer to defend them; they were called upon to answer his question, and if they dared to open their mouths to give explanations they were told to shut up. He carried on his investigation and made his report, which has been laid before the House. My own opinion is that this investigation was held simply to gratify Mr. Mercier. He was paid $10 a day and expense, and since then he has been appointed to do the same work at St. Ann's lock. As to investigations, I want to tell my hon. friends of something of an investigation which took place under the old Government to show the contrast with the tyranny of hon. gentlemen opposite. They are now holding an investigation in the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary—or rather they are holding an inquisition, for it is not an investigation. They have put out the warden of the penitentiary: he remains shut up in his house and is not even allowed to go around the penitentiary. The commissioners talk to the convicts and to the lowest class of employees about the place, and have them say what they want, privately, and then they bring them before their court and question them. Then, by and by, they go to the warden and say: Do you not remember such a thing as happening? The man has got no books or memoranda, and perhaps they ask about things that happened five or six years ago. He can only say: I do not remember; but if I had my books I could answer your question. Then they cross-examine him. Now, contrast that with the investigation held in Beauharnois in 1880. The late Government appointed a commission they appointed a lawyer to act as attorney for the prosecution and they appointed a lawyer to defend the accused. The late Hon. Mr. Mercier was appointed to defend Mr. Beique against the charge made against him in 1880. The investigation was carried on under all the rules of procedure, the same as in a court, and Mr. Mercier was paid his fee by the Conservative Government at Ottawa, and the report was sent to Ottawa and was adjudicated upon. And when somebody asked the Government: How is it you pay the lawyer for the other side? what was the answer given by Sir Charles Tupper? His answer was that when an officer was accused, the Government was bound to stand by him and defend him until he was found guilty. But this Government has a very different theory. They look upon a public employee, if he has the least tincture of blue around him, as a criminal.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, no.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes. The men are given no chance to defend themselves. These investigations are not investigations at all, and they are a waste of public money. My impression is that they are simply carried on in order to give some lawyers $10 a day and expenses.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Oh, oh.

Mr. BERGERON. And when all these expenses are brought down next session, when they all appear in the blue-books, my hon. friend there (Sir Louis Davies) will be astonished to find how much these investigations have cost. And with what result?

Mr. BERGERON.

With the result that if there had been no investigation at all, the civil servant, if he is a Conservative or has ever voted Conservative, must go out and give place to a partisan of hon. gentlemen opposite. Now, the hon. Minister of Marine spoke about his own department. Why, there was an employee, a minor employee, an overseer in Beauharnois, Mr. Kelly, a respectable man, who was dismissed without an investigation and without a word of accusation against him. He received a note from the Deputy Minister that his services were not needed any more.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The whole district was re-organized.

Mr. QUINN. Oh, oh.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Certainly: nobody was appointed to succeed Mr. Kelly. He was not accused of partisanship.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. Minister of Marine said he would not allow any man to be dismissed for partisanship without an investigation unless on the word of a member of Parliament—that is, a Liberal member of Parliament. This man, Mr. Kelly, was given no investigation at all. Now, I repeat that a vote for these investigations is purely and simply a waste of public money, as the investigations are now carried on.

Mr. QUINN. I should not have spoken—because we have not been favoured in my district with any of the investigating committees—but for a word or two that fell from the lips of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) who, I am sorry to see, has gone out of the House. That hon. gentleman, speaking about the commissioners, who ought to be appointed to investigate in Quebec, said in an undertone, but sufficiently loud to be heard by members of the Quebec bar who happened to be here, and who entertained a respect for their judges not exceeded by that of the members of any provincial bar for the judiciary of their provinces, that it was impossible for him to find in the province of Quebec, either on or off the bench—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). He did not say Quebec.

Mr. QUINN. He was alluding to Quebec—that he could not find men qualified to sit on these commissions of investigations.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He did not refer to Quebec.

Mr. QUINN. I am glad to hear the Postmaster General deny the accusation. That is what I would expect from a Minister of the Crown. It was not what I would expect from a Minister of the Crown to hear an hon. gentleman in that position to speaking so slightly of the judiciary of any province.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I heard the Minister of Railways and Canals make the remark, and it had no reference, so far as I understood, to the judiciary of Quebec; and when the hon. gentlemen opposite condemned the remark, the Minister of Railways and Canals attempted to correct him, but the correction was not accepted; the hon. gentleman who was speaking did not allow the Minister to interrupt him in order to correct him. However, I heard his denial that his remark had not any application to the province of Quebec.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Well, I did not hear the Minister make any correction. Otherwise I would have sat down and listened to it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It was when you were speaking.

Mr. QUINN. I was labouring under the same mistake as my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), and perhaps was more willing to believe it, because I have heard of it being made more than once by hon. gentlemen opposite. However, I say we were not favoured in my district with the investigating commissioners at all. We had meted out in that district to these poor men working on the Lachine Canal, that cold justice which I believe is usually meted out by the Government to those who do not give it any support. From the fact that in that district the voters were found so cold towards the Government candidate, I suppose it was only proper that they should be treated with cold justice, and they were not considered worthy of an investigating committee into their conduct. The system seemed to be adopted there that was adopted in the case referred to the other day by the ex-Finance Minister, who read a letter concerning a gentleman employed in the Post Office Department, I think, and whose great crime was that his father-in-law, or his great grandfather, or some one else had been a wicked Tory. Now this is the course that was adopted on the Lachine Canal. There was one young man, bright and intelligent, occupying the position of storekeeper for years, against whose character there was not the slightest complaint, a permanent employee to all intents and purposes, although not appointed by Order in Council; yet because his father happened to be a Tory, and voted for me at the last election, although this young man had never himself exercised the right of voting, the sin of the father was visited on the son, and he was dismissed from his employment. There was no investigation held, of course, it was too trivial a matter. This was only a poor young man receiving a salary of $55 a month, and such a man was not worthy of any consideration by hon. gentlemen opposite, except about election times. He was not entitled to any consideration, according to their ideas. A man receiving $55 a month was a man who could be dismissed summarily—not by the Minister, because I venture to think that the Minister of Railways and Canals never heard the name of Michael Bahan until I mentioned it in this House. Now, how was he dismissed? He was dismissed on the order of a committee appointed by a number of Liberal heelers in the district of Montreal, into whose hands were given the life and death of the men employed on the Lachine Canal? Why, I have heard it said that members of the Liberal party in this House refused to have anything to do with the dismissal of these men. It became such an onerous duty to decide as to whether men should be dismissed from their employment, it became so disgraceful a service, I am glad to say, that the hon. member who represents Hochelaga (Mr. Madore) in this House, would not have anything to do with it, and it was consequently handed over to a committee of which, I understand, the gentleman whom I had the honour of defeating at the last general election, was one of the ruling spirits.

Now, what do we find from the report which has been put upon the Table of the House by the Minister of Railways and Canals in connection with the Lachine Canal? It does not give all the information that I asked for, I regret very much to say, but it tells us who were employed on the Lachine Canal last year, and how they were dismissed, or rather who supplanted them. It does not give the names of the men who recommended the dismissals. It does not give any of the particulars. There were no papers; I am quite sure there are no papers, but this commission did the work. All that was necessary to do was for this committee to give notice to the superintendent of the canal that So and So must walk the plank, and walk the plank he did, in every case. It was not necessary that there should be any investigation; it was not necessary that the man should have committed any offence; he was only a poor devil getting a salary of $38 or perhaps $55 a month. The only time when he was required was when it was necessary to vote, and because he did not vote right when the time came he had to be thrown out. It was not necessary to know whether he had done right in the performance of his duty, or whether he was an honest, sober and steady man. He was only a poor labourer and, according to the doctrine laid down by the Minister of Railways and Canals last session it was not necessary to hold an investigation in his case. He is not a permanent employee, he is not an officer of the civil service; he is not a man who can be of use to any of the Ministers for the purpose of rooting out private correspondence of his predecessors, and thereby gaining an extra salary. He is a poor unfortunate labouring man; consequently, he gets cold and summary justice, the justice that is meted out by the committee of heelers. He gets justice meted out to him, not by the member in this House writing to the head of the department, and or not at the request of the defeated candidate. It is not necessary to write for he is only a poor man, and if the committee of heelers say, "off with his head," off it goes. I find the first name on this list is that of John Conway, who is called superintendent of the canal. Last year his salary was $1,800. He is still an employee, but he is employed at the rate of $3 a day. As the canal is open about six or eight months in the year that means a salary of $720 a year; a permanent employee reduced from $1,800 to $720 a year without any reason, without an investigation and without any report because I have asked for the papers, and I presume there are none. I have been told that there is nothing of the kind. Here is a man whose salary is reduced from $1,800 a year to a minimum of $720 a year, and a maximum of about $900 a year for over 300 working days. But, giving him 365 working days he is reduced from $1,800 a year to $1,100 a year and no reason given. Of course, he is not a member of the civil service, he is only the superintendent of the Lachine Canal, and that is the cold and summary justice that is meted out to him. The second name is that of Francois Corbeille, who was a wharfinger. The return here shows that he received a salary of $700 a year under the heading of "Names Present." I do not know that there was an investigation. I have asked that any papers should be brought down showing an investigation, and as I have got none, I assume that there was no investigation. Corbeille was only a poor wharfinger who was getting $700 a year. There was no necessity for an investigation. Chop off his head. I have placed in my hands just now the instructions to the commissioners from the Minister of Railways and Canals:

I must again point out that cases of daily labourers, or what we call temporary employees, men who are not required to have any special training or experience, can be and will be dealt with ordinarily, without resorting to an inquiry in this form. I allude to such men as section-men and persons in that grade of the service.

Of course, men such as labourers, poor labourers, who are too insignificant to be taken into consideration by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, or by hon. gentlemen receiving $7,000 a year and $1,000 sessional indemnity.

Mr. TALBOT. You forget the mileage.

Mr. QUINN. You never do that. These men are too insignificant to demand any thought or to be considered at all by the Minister of Railways and Canals. They are to be dealt with in a summary manner, with no investigation into their case. They are to be dismissed and, consequently, acting on this wholesome doctrine of the Minister of Railways and Canals, the commissioners, or the committee of heelers, operating in Montreal, thought they would stretch the line a little further and that they would call Mr. Corbeille, the wharfinger, a labourer, and of course his head was chopped off. Then there is the name of Michael Bahen on the list. Mr. Bahen was in receipt of a salary of $55 a month and was dismissed. In this case, Mr. Bahen worked assiduously in the discharge of his duties until the 30th of April. At six o'clock he went home intending to return to his duties on the 1st of May, but at nine o'clock in the evening he received from the superintendent of the Lachine Canal a notice that on and after the 30th of April his services would be no longer required. I am satisfied that no gentleman occupying a seat in this House—I dignify every member of this House by the title of gentleman—I say that no gentleman occupying a seat in this House would assume the responsibility of that act before a committee of gentlemen. Well, that is what was done by the superintendent of the canal. Will anybody pretend that Mr. Marceau, who is a gentleman of education and refinement did this of his motion? Will any hon. member from Montreal get up in this House and assume responsibility for that cowardly act? Not one. I do not charge it against any of my hon. friends except thus far: I charge against them that while sitting in this House they allowed it to be done without entering their protests against it. I charge against them thus far, though I do not make them responsible for the act itself. The act is attributable not to members of this House but the committee of Liberal heelers who hold in their hands the political life or death of every man who works within the district of Montreal. The next name on the list is that of Felix Larose, dockmaster, who was in the enjoyment of the princely salary of $1.50 a day. Larose was not entitled to an investigation; he was not entitled to any consideration. He was only a dockmaster. He was dismissed summarily and in his place was put Jacob Julien. Then we come to John Cunningham, the assistant electrician of the Lachine Canal. Cunningham, according to reports I have heard and seen was certainly a good electrician. But according to the doctrine of the Minister of Railways he was a labourer, notwithstanding the fact that he had been employed regularly each year on the canal for a number of years, and, of course, this wise committee of Liberal heelers having decided that a wharfinger was a labourer, they could not stop to consider whether an assistant electrician was a labourer or not. You will mark, Mr. Chairman, the fine distinction they drew between the electrician and the assistant electrician, and so Mr. Cunningham was obliged to walk the plank, and Mr. J. Prendergast was appointed in his stead. Then we come to Mr. James Gavin, patrol man, who was enjoying a salary of $1.25 a day, and who was replaced by Mr. Euclide Legault. I do not think that any one will say that a motorman is a labourer, yet Mr. James Johnson, the motorman, came within the designation of labourer, laid down by this committee. They called him a labourer because their object was not to make a proper distinction, even on the cruel lines laid down by the Minister of Railways, but to make a distinction in favour of themselves and for the purpose of rewarding their own political friends. Mr. Johnson was summarily dismissed and Mr. Arthur McKeown was placed in his stead. Théophile Martin was replaced by Alex. Lalonde. Redmond Blackburn was replaced by John Craven, Wm. O'Brien was replaced by John Hagan, Thos. O'Keefe was replaced by Dennis Brennan, David Murphy was replaced by James Meehan, John O'Brien was replaced by Ant. Filion, Barney McGurn was replaced by John Hardgraves, James Walsh was replaced by Wm. Flanagan, Ed. Heffernan was replaced by Michael Cooney, James Cardiff was replaced by Paul Furlong, John Duffy was replaced by Wm. Daly, Louis Donnelly was replaced by Patrick Murray.

Mr. QUINN.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. QUINN. Gentlemen on the other side say "hear, hear," and I suppose they think I have finished, but no doubt they will be surprised, and perhaps as much disgusted as they ought to be, when I tell them that all these men have been dismissed on only two locks. That was the list on two locks, dismissed to satisfy the party heelers. Lest there might be some suspicion that these dismissals were for the purpose of economy, I may state to the House that the Minister has been careful not only to give the same salary to the new men in every case, but in some cases to increase it, and also to increase, by two hands, the former number of employees on this part of the canal. Then we come to Bridge No. 1 of the Lachine Canal, and on Bridge No. 1, Joseph Hickey, the assistant keeper, was replaced by Thomas Barrette, Patrick Stanford, replaced by John Holden, and John Gallagher replaced by John Bell. These three men who were dismissed received $38 a month each. The greed of these heelers and their friends was so great, that they craved for the blood of the poor man who was receiving $38 a month. I can understand Liberal politicians wishing to elevate their friends or themselves to exalted positions, but I cannot understand politicians descending so low in the social scale, as to deprive a poor man who received $38 a month, of his bread and butter in order that one of their low menials may occupy his position. Now with regard to the waste weir on the canal. You will notice, Mr. Chairman, that there is not one branch on the Lachine Canal that has not been attended to by these gentlemen. Not satisfied with the men employed on the canal, and on the locks they go even to the bridges and the waste weirs, and the outside sheds. They have very properly described themselves as ferrets or foxes, because there is nothing too filthy for them to have resort to. On the waste weir, John Slattery, the water watchman, was dismissed and John Allan was appointed in his place. I do not know much about any of the other gentlemen who have been placed in positions by this committee of heelers, but I do happen to have some knowledge of Mr. John Allan. Mr. John Allan, the object of their solicitude on this particular occasion, is a man who occupies a unique position in Montreal. It is unique from the fact, that he has probably been convicted more frequently before the courts than any other man in that city. It is unique from the fact, that his criminal attempts have not been confined to strangers alone, but that he has been very generous in distributing them to his own family. His wife has been obliged to fly for her life in the dead of night, and his father-in-law, who died only a short time ago, received such a beating, that general report says it somewhat hastened his departure from this world. His wife and children were thrown out in the streets in the middle of the night, and exposed to the inclemency of the weather in order that Mr. John Allan might enter upon possession of the premises to remove what little furniture there was, to sell it and buy whisky for himself. Mr. John Allan has been so often in jail that when he goes there now, there is no question asked, but he is taken to his old cell. You see, Mr. Chairman, that Mr. John Allan occupies a unique position in the social life of Montreal. Nevertheless, he is the man who was chosen to replace Mr. John Slattery, a respectable citizen, a man who toiled day and night to bring his family up decently, who has struggled hard to educate them properly, and who has raised himself from the position of a common labourer on the Lachine Canal at 60 cents a day, to the somewhat respectable office of water watchman, receiving $38 a month, and he has been occupying the position for 35 years. This is the man who is ruthlessly thrown out by the Minister of Railways and Canals, because, although the hon. gentleman possibly did not sign the fiat which cut off this man's official head, yet from the words he used when he issued that mandate to his commissioners, he is responsible for every act done under it. I say under the orders of the Minister of Railways and Canals John Slattery, an honest, respectable, God-fearing citizen, is put out of his position, and a blackguard and ruffian is put in his place. Then we come to the Wellington Bridge, where Thomas Godfrey is replaced by James Clark, Charles Burns by Pierre E. Emard, James Shields by Dan Donnelly, and Michael Enright by Martin Dolan. I have not gone through the list; I have only gone as far as St. Gabriel's Lock. I would like the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Madore) to take this list and go through it. I know he does not know much about it; but he will get a good deal of information from it. He does not know what this committee in whose hands he gave up the patronage of the district, as I am informed, have been doing; but I ask him to continue the list from St. Gabriel's lock to the end of his division, and see what this brilliant commission have been doing in the way of displacing Conservatives by Liberal heelers. Mr. Chairman, this would be a very amusing subject if it were not one fraught with the greatest injustice to poor struggling humanity. I am glad to see two representatives of knighthood, members of the present Government, on the floor of the House while I am addressing the House on this subject. I have always understood that it was a distinguishing characteristic of knighthood to protect the weak. I have always understood that it was a matter of battle with a man who would dare to tax a knight with having stood by while a weak man was being oppressed. I have always understood that it was the greatest reproach that could be cast upon a knight to be told that he stood quietly by while a weaker brother was being oppressed. Yet in this case, I am obliged to believe, it is forced upon my conviction, that two belted Knights stood by while poor brothers were being oppressed in this matter by common political heelers. This is the conclusion which I am forced to; there is no escaping from it. Now, I sincerely congratulate the two hon. gentlemen who have received the honour of Knighthood lately; but I would ask the other Ministers to look well to their conduct, and to see that they are as worthy of Knighthood as the hon. gentlemen who have received it. I am glad to know that the hon. Knight who spoke to-day would not commit himself to the doctrine that was laid down by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals; but as our statesmen are always willing to accept and properly look for honours, I would warn the Minister of Railways and Canals that if he wishes to achieve that rare distinction, and to occupy in this House the exalted position of his leader and the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, he can never earn the right to it by oppressing the poor and weak, as has been done in his department of late. As I said at the beginning, it is not my intention to address the House at any great length on this subject. I could not refrain, however, from expressing my indignation at seeing this item in the Estimates which are brought down: "To pay expenses of investigation on Government railways and canals, $3,500." Now, in as much as the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has not thought fit to bring before this House any information as to the investigations which have been held, in as much as he has not thought fit to state the personnel of this commission of investigation in Montreal, who have acted with peculiar ferocity, I might say with incomparable atrocity, I cannot but express my indignation that he should ask for a vote to pay for their services. As these gentlemen do not work without remuneration, they must be paid, and if we are to vote the money to pay them, why should we not know who they are? As this is merely for the purpose of voting a certain sum of money, to be used by the Ministers as they think fit, without any account rendered by them, I think it is not only our right but our duty to ask, and to insist until we obtain, the names of the men who have been appointed to make these investigations. I therefore shall oppose with all the force I possess the vote which is now under consideration.

Mr. MADORE. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, some hon. gentlemen opposite have, upon several occasions, complained of the dismissals that have taken place on the Lachine Canal. This is the first opportunity I have of describing to the House the character of the grievances these hon. gentlemen complain of. I do not think the hon. gentlemen can pretend on good grounds that civil servants have been dismissed from the Lachine Canal, since the present Government came into power. Bridge tenders and lock-keepers and shopmen cannot exactly be called permanent employees, as just stated by my hon. friend from Ste. Anne (Mr. Quinn). Those men are employed during the navigation season, every year, on the locks, but no further than the month of November. Therefore, they are liable to be dismissed from the works at the end of each year, under any Administration. Under the late Government, it often occurred that men were dismissed from the service of the canal, being told that their services were no longer required. They were replaced by other followers more devoted to the party interests, without anybody having ever dreamed of creating a scandal out of such dismissals.

When the present Government came into office, about the month of July last year, navigation was about in the middle of its term. Now, had the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches followed the same course as their predecessors in office, all the bridge tenders and lock-keepers would have been right away thrown out of employment and their places given to others; but, on the contrary, they deemed it more humane to allow them to fulfil their engagements, being satisfied with notifying them that, at the end of the season, their services would no longer be required for the following year. Such was the course pursued by the present Administration, and when they were called upon to engage new men, in the month of May last, for the opening of navigation, they did not re-engage their political enemies for this service. Such is the offence they are guilty of. It strikes me that if the hon. gentlemen opposite believe that it was so greivous an offence for us to follow that course, they never thought, for the eighteen years during which they were in power, to act differently, having, at the very outset of their administration, applied the brush to all the public offices and dismissed the old civil servants and given their places to their own friends. I should think, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. gentlemen opposite, after such a long lease of power, and after having dealt so unfairly by us, should not expect any favours at our hands. I fail to understand why they raise such a hue and cry whenever we happen to appoint some of our friends to office. After having been so overbearing when in power, they ought, at least, in my opinion, to accept their defeat gracefully, as well as submit to the consequences of their downfall. When we, on this side, were occupying seats opposite, we never made such an outcry as the hon. gentlemen now do, when our friends were dismissed from the service and thrown out of employment. I think they ought now to allow us, when we are acting up to our rights, and chiefly when we do not unjustly dismiss anybody, to give to our friends the rewards due to their services to our party.

Now, this is not the only issue of importance in the case now under consideration. Even supposing that the men, over whose dismissal the hon. gentlemen are weeping and lamenting, were permanent employees, I hold that our action in dismissing them was justifiable on very good grounds. For over fifteen years, I have taken an active part in the electoral contests in the counties of Hochelaga and Jacques Cartier, which are crossed by the Lachine Canal; and I may state, as a matter of fact that, for the whole period mentioned, the offices on the Lachine Canal were used as political laboratories where caballers and heelers were being manufactured and where politicians took up their general quarters, in order to work in the interests of the Conservative Government. And it is, no doubt, out of a feeling of gratitude that the hon. member for Ste. Anne was prompted, to-day, to speak in such heated terms about those so-called dismissals. He has not forgotten, that if he occupies now a seat in this House, as the representative of that electoral division, and if he defeated the Hon. Mr. McShane, it was owing to the fact that the employees on the Lachine Canal worked tooth and nail against our candidate, and in favour of the member for Ste. Anne. The hon. gentleman is well aware that the men in question openly worked at the election. He is also aware that two employees who are now in the service of the canal, signed his nomination paper, and that two other men also in the service of the canal acted as his agents at the polls, on the 23rd June last. Now, in view of these facts I have just alluded to, the hon. gentlemen cannot complain on good grounds that we are persecuting them, whenever we dismiss from the service, or rather, when we decline to continue in the employ of the Government men whom we were quite free to dismiss, as their term of engagement had expired. At all events, I am satisfied that the Government will not allow themselves to be deterred from their course by the outcry raised by the hon. gentlemen. Now, I may as well intimate to my hon. friend from Ste. Anne that he had better prepare for the next session one of his philippics, because, since the hon. gentlemen opposite refuse to give us credit for our generosity, and the more we keep their friends in our employ, the louder they complain and reflect upon our course; and, the more we give them, the more they exact from us. I warn him, I say, that in our capacity as members for the division of Montreal, we will unite and insist upon the Government and the Minister of Railways and Canals, applying the brush for good to all the offices on the Lachine Canal, and dismissing all the bridge-tenders, the lock-keepers and the men working in the shops. I hope this will effectually put an end to all those debates about dismissals, which have taken so much of the time of this House during this session. My hon. friend from Ste. Anne will thus be enabled to ventilate all at once, his grievances on the floor of the House and we will be in a position to justify the dismissals made at our request. I think such a course would also enable the Government to reward the services of their friends and to deal fairly and justly by them.

Mr. QUINN. I could not allow the eloquent and vehement statements of the hon. gentleman to pass without one or two words in reply. What struck me as particularly good and clever politics was the threat of the hon. gentleman that he would continue and his friends would continue to urge the Government to clean out the whole Lachine Canal. I can only say to the hon. gentleman: "More power to your elbow." and I can cite the authority of one of the former leaders of the Liberal party as sustaining the position I take. The Hon. Mr. Laflamme, of sainted memory to the hon. gentlemen opposite, when speaking to a friend of his about the distribution of patronage, declared that it was the curse of a public man's life, and that, in his opinion, whenever he gave a public office—particularly with injustice to anybody else, I may add in parentheses—he created one ingrate and ten enemies. I can only hope that my hon. friends will receive the reward which their former leader prophesied was sure to follow conduct such as they are now pursuing.

Mr. BRODEUR. We will take the responsibility.

Mr. QUINN. But the hon. gentleman went a little further and threw a little side light on the manner in which these things are done. Since hon. gentlemen in opposition are not satisfied when only a few of their friends are dismissed from office, he threatened that the members from the district of Montreal supporting the Government would now unite and insist upon the Ministers cutting off the heads of all the Conservative employees. Are we to conclude that these hon. gentlemen have not been insisting already, and that it was by the pure volition of the Minister of Railways and Canals these men were thrown out? Now, however, they are going to insist, and we will see the results between now and next session. Well, I am glad to see members of Parliament and gentlemen glorify in such conduct. I am glad to hear members of Parliament belonging to the Liberal profession, and who have received the distinction of being elected to represent bodies of the electorate in this House, make these public declarations, and I only hope that the men who returned them to Parliament will look at their conduct in the spirit in which such conduct ought to be regarded by respectable and self-respecting men; and if they do, as I confidently believe the electors of the province of Quebec will look at such conduct in its proper light, these gentlemen will receive the reward they deserve at the next general election.

My hon. friend has told us that we ought on this side to accept gracefully the consequences of our defeat. Well, I was not defeated. I am not taking with bad grace any consequences. The consequences of my victory is that I am a member of the House of Commons, and I have nothing to regret, but I cannot say as much for hon. gentlemen opposite. There are some of these gentlemen—men who have been guilty of these acts—in whose shoes I would not stand to-night for all the wealth of a Golconda. Those men on the other side who make themselves responsible for these things, are men whose position before the public I do not envy. They say that I should not feel cast down. Do you think, Mr. Chairman, that I am interested, as far as self interest is concerned, in the appointment or dismissal of poor labourers of whom I know nothing; and I wish to assure you, Sir, that out of the list I have read, I have not come in contact with six of these men. It is no humiliation to me personally that these poor men should have been thrown out of employment. But it is a humiliation for gentlemen who occupy the Treasury benches; and it is a humiliation for us all who have the interests of our country at heart that gentlemen occupying high positions in the State should descend to such conduct. I regret such conduct, not from any personal interest, but because I regard it as a stain on the public life of Canada. As far as my own personal interests are concerned, instead of its being an injury to me, I am confident it will ensure my election on the next occasion by a very large majority.

My hon. friend from Hochelaga said that two gentlemen who represented me at the polls are still in the employ of the Government. I was not aware of it, and am very glad to hear that the public service contains two such respectable men, and if my hon. friend will give me their names, I will congratulate them.

Mr. GUAY. You ought to know your friends.

Mr. QUINN. My friends are so numerous that I cannot possibly know them all.

Mr. Fiset. (Translation.) The hon. gentlemen opposite will, no doubt, think that I should not interfere again in the debate on those dismissals, after all I said on this matter the other day; but I cannot allow the statement of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat to pass without a word or two in reply.

Our hon. friends opposite regret, they say, to see the Government cutting off the heads of the Conservative employees. Now, have they already forgotten what they did in 1878, when they assumed the reins of Government? Have they forgotten what took place in the county of Rimouski, which I have the honour of representing in this House? Do they forget how in 1878, they dismissed from the Intercolonial Railway, without any trial, not only the Liberal employees but even those who were suspected of being Liberals.

Mr. QUINN. I was not here in 1878, and I do not remember what took place then.

Mr. Fiset. (Translation.) You do not remember what then took place, but we do remember it and the county of Rimouski also.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) That was bad policy, and you should not follow bad examples.

Mr. Fiset. (Translation.) We want to do justice to our friends, by reinstating them in the places you took away from them.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) The men who acted in that way have since got their reward for it.

Mr. Fiset. (Translation.) If you are not satisfied with our present course, you ought to remember that you first set an example to us, when in power.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) That was a bad example.

Mr. FISET. (Translation.) Here is what the Hon. Mr. Huntingdon said about the dismissal of Régis Cardinal, who was employed on the Beauharnois Canal, at the time of his dismissal—

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) No, he was on the Lachine Canal.

Mr. FISET. (Translation.) You are right, he was employed on the Lachine Canal, when the Conservative Government cut off his head. Here is what the Hon. Mr. Huntingdon said, on the 19th March, 1879, addressing himself in this House to the Conservative Government, then in power :

We shall be indebted to the present Administration for the inauguration of the American system : to the victors belong the spoils.

You inaugurated that system in 1878 ; and you ought not to feel surprised at our insisting upon the Government of the day rendering justice to our friends. We are not clamouring now, as you did in 1879, for the heads of civil servants, saying : to the victors belong the spoils ; no, but we want justice done to the men who were then unjustly treated. Had not the Government, and the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals in particular meted out justice to the electors of Rimouski, at least, to a certain extent, I could certainly not be able now to meet them. But I am glad to say that it is not so, and I fully concur in the views given expression to by the hon. member from Hochelaga (Mr. Madore), when he said that we ought to continue the system inaugurated by our opponents. I do not say, to their own credit—a system which has enabled them to cut off the heads of so many of our friends. I hope that the Ministers will see their way to rendering justice to our friends and acquiescing in our demands.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) If the Ministers decline to yield to your demands, it is because they understand very well the character of that system.

Mr. FISET. (Translation.) Now, your friends also understood it in 1879, to such a degree that, without any inquiry, without any trial, they ruthlessly threw out of employment a large number of our friends. In your time, you did not require any investigation.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) And what happened since to the men who acted in that way ?

Mr. FISET. (Translation.) What do you mean ?

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) What became of that Minister ?

Mr. FISET. (Translation.) He has been relegated to private life, where he now is.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) Exactly so. Is that what you are after ? It was perhaps owing to such dismissals as you speak of, that he was sent there.

Mr. FISET. (Translation.) At all events, the public deemed it fit to dispense with his services. If, to-day, the Government does not continue rendering justice to our friends, we will not be able to go before our electors. The American system : to the victors belong the spoils, was set up by the Conservative party in 1879, in the county of Rimouski in particular. If that system is to prevail, it is not the Government of the day which will be responsible for it, but our opponents who began to enforce it in 1878 and 1879.

Intercolonial Railway—To pay salaries and expenses to pay investigating commissioners..... $6,000

Mr. POWELL. I do not propose taking up the time of the House at any length on these dismissals. The executive have taken the responsibility and upon them the responsibility lies. However, there are one or two respecting which I desire to question the Minister of Railways and Canals. There is the dismissal of some four or five young men from the public offices in Moncton. I shall ask if these young clerks had the benefit of an investigation or not ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There was no investigation in their case.

Mr. POWELL. Were they dismissed on account of having been guilty of what is known as political partisanship ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think so.

Mr. POWELL. Were they not among the six to which the hon. gentleman referred ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They were among those who were included in that list. They were among the five in the county of Westmoreland. I think I stated that the list included not only those set aside on political grounds, but on other grounds.

Mr. POWELL. The hon. gentleman's telegram read : " Please send me list by mail at once of the employees of the Intercolonial dismissed at the request of members of Parliament, and the name of the riding where they belonged to." You can scarcely conceive that the general management of the Intercolonial Railway is placed in the hands of members representing the different constituencies in the maritime provinces and the province of Quebec. The only ground on which these parties can have been dismissed is the ground of political partisanship. It would be absurd to say that these gentlemen are allowed by the Minister to usurp the functions of the general superintendent.

I am not going to dwell upon these cases except the case of one young man, a clerk by the name of Simonds, who was a very good official indeed, and who, on being dismissed, applied for a certificate of efficiency. There was no question about the manner in which he discharged the duties of his office. Yet this certificate was refused. Whether there was cause to dismiss him on account of political partisanship or not, I am not going to discuss; but when a young man starting out in life has been for some years a faithful public servant and then is discharged for political partisanship, he is certainly entitled to some fair-play. I appeal to the honour and good-sense of this House whether a young man against whose character there is not the slightest charge, who has rendered faithful and efficient service for many years, and who was dismissed simply from political motives, is not entitled to a certificate of efficiency and whether it is not an outrageous abuse of justice to refuse to give him one. Now with regard to the policy of issuing commissions, there is one phase of it that has not been dealt with in this House, and to this I wish to direct attention for a moment. In the first place, I challenge the whole policy of this commission business as an immoral policy. I challenge it on this ground: The public funds should not only be used for public purposes, and if the Minister of Justice or any other member of the Canadian executive applies public money for unquestionably party purposes, that is an immoral use of the public funds. What is the case before us? There is no question but that, so far as the public service is concerned, a man is neither a better nor a worse official because he is a Liberal or a Conservative, or a neutral, or a follower of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy).

Mr. FOSTER. He is deceased.

Mr. POWELL. At any rate he has not been here much this session. The Government issue a commission, on what ground? On what they claim to be a constitutional ground that a man who takes an active part in politics is disqualified from being a public servant. Well, I accept that. But if hon. gentlemen opposite are going into this thing on purely constitutional motives they should have their commissioners to investigate all cases of partisanship, whether Liberal or Conservative. But this talk of constitutional principle is merely a thin gauze thrown over a vicious system. What do they use this money for? Not to advance the interests of the country but to advance party interests; not to dismiss men who are not fit for the position they occupy, but to get rid of occupants of positions who happen to be of one political stripe, in order to give those positions to men who are of a different political stripe. Instead of boldly and manfully dismissing a man because they think he ought to be dismissed, for political reasons and political reasons alone, they take this means of getting rid of him. I shall not speak at length upon this point.

Mr. POWELL.

but I will say that this policy of issuing commissions to inquire into charges of offensive partisanship is nothing more nor less than a subterfuge on the part of the executive to shirk the responsibility attending on executive acts. I say that this policy is unprecedented in Canadian history, it is subversive of public honour, and is a violation of the sanctity of public funds.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Powell) complains that some young man in the service, who was dismissed, was refused a certificate of character or competency—

Mr. POWELL. Or even of service.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But the hon. gentleman has not stated by whom he was refused, nor the circumstances under which the refusal took place. I now hear of it for the first time, and I do not understand that the hon. gentleman suggests that any application was made to me. If he does say so, I shall have to rub up my recollection of the case. I have not the slightest memory of any such circumstances occurring. I should be sorry to give directions which would result in any person being refused a certificate of service or good conduct if he had conducted himself well in the employ. There must be some rule under which the general manager has acted, and I am sure he would be ready to justify his conduct in the matter. If the hon. gentleman will give the name I will inquire from the general manager and get that information, and if there has been any injustice done I will see that that injustice is remedied.

Mr. POWELL. I am glad to hear that statement of his intention from the Minister of Railways. I may say that this gentleman's name is Simonds. He applied to the chief superintendent of the road, and failing to get the degree of justice he thought he was entitled to, he applied to the gentleman who fills the position of Minister of Railways and Canals, and wrote to that gentleman twice.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think you are in error on that point.

Mr. POWELL. I have the correspondence in my room, but I am not going to worry the House with going over the points of it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will thank the hon. gentleman if he will refer to the correspondence and see whether application is made to me for a certificate of good conduct or of tenure of office. For, now that he mentions the name, I do remember to have received a letter or two from this gentleman, but my memory does not serve me as to his having been refused a certificate such as he has spoken of. I think the gentleman asked to be reinstated or wanted to know why he had been set aside. I presume that he may have applied to the general manager for information upon that point and may not have got it, and so applied to me. But I am sure that the hon. gentleman will find on referring to the letter that the subject to which he calls attention is not referred to in the correspondence.

Mr. POWELL. It may be that he did not apply to the Minister of Railways and Canals for a certificate of character; it is hardly likely he would do that. But he complained of the treatment he had received.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I should be very sorry to refuse, so far as any authority on my part is concerned, to direct that any employee should not receive a certificate, unless it were against the rules or unless the general manager had some special reason for refusing to give it.

Mr. QUINN. Now that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has once more graced the committee with his presence, I would ask if he would be good enough to give the names of the investigators who had charge of the cases of individuals who were dismissed on the Lachine Canal or if any were appointed? Also, what papers are in his department in connection with these dismissals?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Quinn) exactly what papers relating to this matter are in the department. But I will have a research made and if there are any papers interesting the hon. gentleman, I am willing that he should have copies made of them. As to the names of persons deputed to make investigations, I am not at the present moment aware that any were appointed to investigate the cases on the Lachine Canal. If I were to make a statement positively, it would be that there had been none. There may have been, but I do not recollect them.

Mr. QUINN. Then I was asking the Minister to furnish particulars of the investigations held on the canals referred to in the item under consideration, as I understand that we are discussing the whole of item 73 at the same time.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There have been investigations into cases of persons employed on several canals, the Grenville Canal, the Murray Canal, the Trent Canal, and I am under the impression that there was an investigation or two on the Cornwall Canal. These investigations were in reference to persons who were in the civil service, who were holding positions that would entitle them to a superannuation allowance, who were holding offices of a permanent character; they were not persons who are employed to-day and possibly may go out to-morrow. I cannot now undertake to give the hon.

gentleman any positive statement as to all the canals.

Mr. QUINN. I do not wish to ask for anything more than would be easily obtained by the Minister, but I would like to have on concurrence, copies of any papers in connection with the dismissal of persons from the Lachine Canal, that are in the department.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If there are any, I will be glad to furnish them.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to ask the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to a question that we discussed yesterday in relation to the dismissal of Mr. Geo. B. Pickett from the Oak Point lighthouse. What he tells me is this: He has been dismissed from the office of lightkeeper at Oak Point on the St. John River, on the 1st of March last. And he says:

On the same date I received notice of my dismissal, I got a letter from Mr. E. H. McAlpine, of St. John, informing me that charges of partisanship had been preferred against me, and that he would shortly come my way and grant me an investigation. That investigation he now declines to make, from the fact that the department has already dealt with my case. No more untruthful charges can be made against any man than those in my case, and I ask for the same privilege conceded to Mr. Palmer and Mr. Williams, adjoining light-keepers, namely, the privilege of meeting my accusers face to face.

That is the statement of the young man of whom I spoke yesterday, who was dismissed. He says that the officials just beside him received an investigation into the charges against them. He denies the charges of partisanship, and asks that he shall have an investigation as well; and I understood the hon. gentleman to say yesterday that in such cases he would grant an investigation. The other is in reference to Mr. Beverley Palmer who was keeper of the light at Palmer's Point, on the St. John River. He says:

On the 3rd of March, I received a letter from E. H. McAlpine, commissioner, saying that he would call on me soon to investigate charges of partisanship preferred against me. That same evening, at 8 o'clock, I received a notice to appear next morning at 9 o'clock at Mr. Jenkins's—

Who is a very strong party organizer for the party of my hon. friend.

—to answer to said charge. I appeared, according to notice, and asked for time to get witnesses and counsel. He told me that counsel was not allowed, and refused to allow me time to get witnesses, but wanted to take my evidence and go on with the investigation. To this I objected, saying those who had charges to make against me, should do so first. He overruled in this matter, saying that Col. Donville, member for the county, had charged me with organizing and being an active worker in the election for the Conservative party. I was then sworn, and made the following statement:—I never assisted in any organization, never asked any man to vote or how he voted, or took any part in any election in any way whatever, since I was light-keeper, except giving my own vote. I then had David Mills, Valentine Vanwart and G. W. Palmer sworn. They all testified that they had never known or heard of me taking any part in any election, except voting.

One of those was his brother, and the other two lived close beside him and knew him intimately.

I then told the commissioner that I could bring 25 or 30 to swear to the same, if he would give me time to get them. This he refused to do. There were several men in an adjoining room. I said to the commissioner: Have not those men got evidence to give? If so, bring them in; I should like to hear what they have got to say. He went in where they were, stayed a short time, came back, and said they had no evidence to give. But there were parties in the woods that had evidence to give, but would not be there till after dinner. He then suggested that I go home to dinner, and that he would adjourn the investigation until 2 o'clock to give me time to get back. He promised to take no evidence in my absence, but that I should hear what they had to say against me, and have an opportunity of cross-questioning them. I got back at twenty minutes to 2 o'clock, taking with me five persons that I picked up on my way—

And he gives the names.

—But notwithstanding his promise, he had taken the evidence of four persons in my absence.

And he gives the names of these persons.

Now, three of these were the very men that I asked him to bring in, and he said they had no evidence to give, and the fourth came in before I left for dinner. So, you see, I did not hear their evidence, nor have an opportunity of cross-questioning them, for they had all left before I got there. But he read to me what he said they testified to.

Then he gives the evidence, but I will not trouble the House with it. But I am informed that the commissioner, Mr. McAlpine, in the end reported that the charges were not sustained. I do not know how true that is. Now, there is his sworn testimony which he said he gave; it can be easily looked up by my hon. friend if he wants to see what was said in that case. The charges were not proven, and I rely upon my hon. friend, from what he said yesterday, to do justice in that case, and not allow an injustice to be perpetrated, because my hon. friend has taken the ground that if there has been no active and offensive partisanship the official ought not to be discharged.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I cannot recall the names of the parties at present. The reports of Mr. McAlpine of course are in the department, and I can produce them at any time. With respect to Mr. McAlpine's conduct I think it would be rather unfair to take the ex parte statement of the incriminated party as a fair representation of what took place. I should doubt it extremely, for this reason: When Mr. McAlpine was appointed

Mr. FOSTER.

I gave him the same instructions that I gave to the other two commissioners appointed, and told him that although I was averse to allowing counsel to appear, either for or against the party, because it involved a long delay and a great deal of expense, still he was to take special care that the party should be allowed to be present and have the fullest privilege of cross-examination of every witness; that every facility should be given him to produce witnesses on his own behalf, and that the investigation should not be closed while he desired to produce any further evidence. The instructions were very explicit, and of course I have every reason to believe that Mr. McAlpine carried them out. I shall take a special note as to the hon. gentleman's letter, and see whether Mr. McAlpine made a special report upon him.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend will take the "Hansard" remarks that there are upon it, and then have one of his officers refer to Mr. McAlpine's report he will find something that will corroborate the statement or the reverse.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will do that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it is only fair to say that Mr. Palmer wrote me very much to the same purport and effect as he has written to the ex-Minister of Finance, and I wrote to Mr. McAlpine stating what was alleged as to his conduct of this investigation. Mr. McAlpine wrote me in reply, that the statements were quite inaccurate, and that on the contrary he had afforded every facility to Mr. Palmer in the investigation. He added that as a result of his investigation he did not find Mr. Palmer guilty.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I did not recall that.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries will see that this is a strong corroboration of what I said.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am bound to say that I do not feel myself in any way bound by the finding of this commissioner. I did not appoint him to find whether the man was guilty or not. I appointed him to take the evidence down, and upon it I shall find whether he was guilty or not. He may have formed an impression about the evidence. If he did find the man not guilty I would probably accept that without looking closely through the evidence. But in almost every case I take the precaution to carefully read the evidence myself knowing that I shall be held responsible in this House for the conclusion reached.

Mr. FOSTER. In that the hon. gentleman is quite right. I do not want to press my objection unduly, but I want to say that if the finding in the commissioners report is that this gentleman is not guilty of offensive partisan conduct he should be put back in his place.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will give it the most careful consideration.

Mr. FOSTER. That brings the whole point up, and upon the decision of a point of that kind depends the bona fides of the assertions of the Government that they are only trying to root out offensive partisans, because, if it is clearly proved that this man is not a partisan and he was allowed to be dismissed on the recommendation of the member that will go far to controvert any position which hon. gentlemen have adopted.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to remind the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that in some of those cases, so far as the returns brought down show, the evidence has not been returned by the commissioners but only a summary statement.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Can the hon. gentleman mention a case to me?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, that is generally done.

Mr. BERGERON. I have seen cases like that myself, though it may have been in some other department.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In many cases the evidence has not been returned at all, but simply a summary statement as to what the evidence proved and the conclusions arrived at. In a case of that kind I think the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries will say that it is going rather far to override the decision of the commissioners without having the evidence before him. There is this, also, that I might add, in regard to the issue of these commissions. With all deference to what the Minister has said, I am not able to see that the language of chap. 115 justifies the issue of a commission for the purpose merely of investigating a charge of political partisanship where it does not involve some inefficiency or want of discipline in the conduct of the party's office. The language of the statute is this, omitting the unnecessary words:

The Minister may appoint at any time a commissioner to investigate and report upon the conduct of any person in such service so far as the same relates to his official duties.

Take the case of a man who has certain hours during which to perform certain duties. During the rest of the day he is his own master. If he attends faithfully to his official duties during the time prescribed by the rules of the department and if during the hours, in which he is his own master, he canvasses an elector he would be guilty of active and offensive partisanship within the rule as laid down by hon. gentlemen opposite. But I venture to submit with a great deal of confidence to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that conduct of that kind could not be a subject of investigation under the words of the statute which I have just read. But for the apparent opinion of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the contrary I would not have thought for a moment that the question permitted of a doubt. That, however, is not perhaps a matter of very much moment as possibly there might be jurisdiction under chap. 114 to issue these commissions, although as a matter of fact in the Orders in Council I have examined, chap. 114 has not been mentioned at all, but simply chap. 115. It is true, however, that some of the Ministers have in their instructions to the commissioners gone beyond the terms of the Order in Council and directed the commissioners to proceed under chap. 114 as well as chap. 115.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I am afraid you will deprive us of a fee.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is very little difference between my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) and myself for this reason, that my hon. friend looks upon offensive partisanship as a venial offence not inconsistent with a proper discharge of an official's duties. I do not. He says there is no harm in it at all. He can be an offensive partisan and it is no breach of official discipline. I say it is. But it is not so that we differ as to the construction of the statute. It is a question of fact. If I am right in my conclusion as to what is offensive partisanship, then he agrees with me in the construction of a statute. If he is right in his view that offensive partisanship is only a venial offence then he is perfectly clear on the construction of the statute.

Mr. FOSTER. To show that there does not seem to be a consistency running through the instructions given by the Ministers, I may point out that an Order in Council is found on the 19th of November, 1896, and in that Order in Council it is stated that the Minister of Railways and Canals gets authority for issuing a commission under chap. 115 of the Revised Statutes.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Does that prevent him from issuing a commission under chap. 114?

Mr. FOSTER. When he comes to send the letter, he gives the commissioner authority under chap. 114 and 115.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He has a perfect right to do that, because chap. 114 expressly authorizes him to do so.

Mr. FOSTER. That may be as to the summoning of witnesses and the like of that.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are two provisions of the statute. One gives the Minister power to issue a commission of his own accord without resorting to Council at all and the other one, chap. 115, requires him to go to Council to get authority. He may go to Council and get authority and conjoined with that authority is the other power of acting without reference to Council.

Mr. FOSTER. In this case he has gone to Council and got authority under chap 115.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That was perfectly right.

Mr. FOSTER. And then in his instructions he has acted under chaps. 114 and 115.

Mr. LISTER. That is all right.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not, however, the point that I am raising, particularly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In my view that is a proper thing to do.

Mr. FOSTER. My legal friends who are here tell me that you should get the authority of the Governor in Council.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What legal friends told you that?

Mr. CASGRAIN. I did.

Mr. FOSTER. What I find here as instructions to the commissioner, from the Minister of Railways and Canals, is this:

I do not suppose that it will be at all necessary in very many cases to hold anything like a formal court of inquiry. On the contrary, I wish you to proceed with the work in an expeditious way, notifying the person charged that you desire him to attend before you at a time and place to be named, and then having interrogated him and in an informal manner (not under oath) ascertaining whether he can successfully deny the charge of partisanship which has been preferred against him. If, after this informal inquiry, you are satisfied, from the party's own statement, that he is guilty, you will proceed no further.

That is no court at all.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The man may say he was guilty, as was done in many cases.

Mr. FOSTER. In some cases the man may do that, but in this case you make the commissioner the judge of the man by looking him over, and putting certain informal questions to him and he need not carry the inquiry any further at all, no matter how the man may declare his innocence.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

You can make a minute of the report and that with others of your cases, report to me the conclusion at which you have arrived. If, however, the person denies the charge against him entirely and insists upon proof, it will then be necessary for you to proceed in a more formal way, requiring the witness, doubtless, to be sworn, and if the party himself desires to make a statement, put him also upon oath. In this class of cases, you might make a brief synopsis of the testimony.

The evidence is not to be reported, but the commissioner may make—he is not required even to do that though—a brief synopsis of the testimony.

Make it as brief as it possibly can be made. Insist that it shall be to the point, and decline to wander off into outside or irrelevant issues.

Mr. LISTER. I wish that rule could be enforced in the House.

Mr. FOSTER—

This evidence upon oath you will, of course, return with your report upon it and the conclusions arrived at.

That does not seem to me to coincide very much with what the Minister of Marine and Fisheries stated to be his definition of what an inquiry should be. I commend the difference in this respect, and in regard to the character of the commissioners to be appointed—a difference as wide as the poles assunder—between the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the Minister of Railways and Canals. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has surrounded it with some official decorum and character. He has taken Captain Bloomfield Douglas who is in every way qualified, from circumstances which we need not go into here. I would as soon trust him as a judge. He has taken the stipendiary magistrate, and that gives a tone and character to it at once; but the Minister of Railways and Canals has simply taken the heelers and given them those instructions, and he has put any man's future entirely into the balance of the prejudices or wishes of irresponsible parties who in some cases he has appointed to make the investigation.

Post Office Department..... $685,447 03

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). The Postmaster General is not here at the moment, but I can state briefly what this is. They are the accumulated deficits of the post office for the last 20 years. It appears that they have always been outrunning the constable in that department, and they have been consistently paying out of one year's appropriations, sums which were due in the last year, and adding thereto from time to time. They have finally run up to this large sum, and the Postmaster General thinks it is time that should stop.

Mr. FOSTER. We will accept that explanation. We knew that hon. gentlemen opposite were going to bring down enormous appropriations, and we suppose we will have to let them pass.

Amount required to enable certain increases of salary payable under the Civil Service Act, and accruing on 1st January and 1st April, 1897, which were temporarily suspended, to be continued during the year ending 30th June, 1898..... $1,397 50

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of this?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is to provide for an increase of $50 each for six first-class clerks, two second class clerks and forty-two third class clerks, and $30 each for seven packers and messengers. I would add these words to the vote.

Mr. FOSTER. We had the authoritative statement made here by the leader of the Government and by the Minister of Finance, and I think by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, that the Government had come to the conclusion to do away with statutory increases.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. As a matter of course.

Mr. FOSTER. Now it is stated that the statutory increases were merely temporarily suspended. The Government at first told us that there were great abuses in giving the statutory increase, and as this was the year that was to be signaled by economy, the Government have come to the conclusion that they would do away with statutory increases, and statutory increases have gone holus-bolus in most of the departments, and only in a few individual instances have they been given. Now, the Postmaster General comes down at the end of the session, and he knocks that policy all into pie.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. How?

Mr. FOSTER. Because he brings down a vote here to ask that 57 of his clerks shall have a statutory increase.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did nothing of the kind.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman give his explanation again, then?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yesterday I asked the House to vote that item. The hon. gentleman took exception to it, stating that in the way it was worded the whole money might be given to one clerk. The item stood over for me to give particulars. I stated then that I intended, when the session was over, to consider the cases of deserving members of the staff, taking them up on their merits, and not in the perfunctory way which had come to be the practice by which every one received an increase of salary as a matter of course, and not for merit. I suppose it is quite possible to give a man an increase of $50 per annum if he deserves it without thereby giving it as a statutory increase. The increase will not be more than $50 in any case. It is a mere coincidence that it happens to be the same sum as is mentioned in the Civil Service Act; but because the department chooses to ask for that discretionary power, it does not follow that it is the affirmation of a right to an increase, as heretofore claimed and conceded under the Civil Service Act.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has not got out of it in that way.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Well, it is all I have to give you about it.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend must recollect that he has to be courteous.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You have to be fair.

Mr. FOSTER. I am fair.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You are putting a wrong construction on it.

Mr. FOSTER. I am simply giving the figures my hon. friend gave. These first class clerks he is going to give a statutory increase of $50 to—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not a statutory increase at all.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend cannot get out of it by dropping the word "statutory." Is he not giving increases varying from $12.50 up to $50 to fifty-seven of his clerks? Are not these what have heretofore been given as statutory increases? Have not the Government declared that their policy was to do away with these small increases called statutory increases, and is not my hon. friend coming down and asking for authority from Parliament to give these small increases, which he does not dignify by the name statutory, but which take the place of the statutory increases? Is the Government going to be run on a basis of unity and agreement, or is each man going to run his own department in defiance of principle and in defiance of the general will of Council? Either we ought to have a principle adopted with reference to the civil service, which will hold through all the departments, or there ought to be an explicit statement that in this respect there is to be no general principle, but that each man is to do what seems right in his own eyes. Do that, and immediately you have all coherence and all unity in the civil service done away, because civil servants who are not fortunate enough to be in the department of my hon. friend will get no statutory increase, while those who have that good fortune will get the equivalent of the statutory increase. In the Finance Department there are just as faithful and honest men as in the Post Office Department, and men who do as much work, and there are no statutory increases given in the Finance Department—why? Because they were informed by the Finance Minister that statutory increases were done away. To-morrow morning they might meet their Minister, if they would dare to go into his august presence, and ask him what this meant. How is he going to meet them? I might take the other departments in the same way. I say we ought to have some authoritative statement as to what is going to be the rule and practice. If you are to have any uniformity or any kind of subordination or discipline or ambition in the civil service, you have to treat all alike in the different departments. You propose to make the clerks in one department the recipients of favours equivalent to the statutory increase, and refuse to do the same for equally worthy clerks in another department—why? Because in one department the Minister keeps loyally to the decision which the Council has come to, while in the other the Minister flies in the teeth of the decision of Council. That is where the Government stand to-night. They may settle that among themselves; it is their quarrel. But as a member of this Parliament, I have something to say of the rights of the civil servants all the way through. I have friends in those departments, and I know the value of men who have worked under me, and who have as good a right to an increase as any man in the Post Office Department. Why do they not get it? Because the Finance Minister agreed to the decision of Council in that respect, and stood by it loyally. But the hon. Postmaster General has taken the bit in his teeth and says he is going to do what he likes. He may do it, and his colleagues may submit to his imperious will, but he has no right to disorganize the civil service in doing it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. There can be no doubt that the item which now appears in the Estimates, though it may be called by a different name, is the annual increase which has been paid up to the present. But if there could be a doubt on that point, the hon. gentleman's own words in this very Estimate indicate that he must have meant exactly this, because it reads: "Amount required to enable certain increases of salary payable under the Civil Service Act, and accruing on 1st January and 1st April, 1897, which were temporarily suspended." What does "temporarily suspended" mean? It must mean the old increases which for some reason were suspended temporarily. Now, I fully endorse everything my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) has just said. It is quite impossible that there should be in one department one rule, and a different rule in the other departments. As I have stated already, I consider the whole policy of the hon. gentleman, as evidenced by the Bill he has introduced, and by his making Parliament to give him a certain amount of money to distribute among the clerks whom he will select, is a departure from the rules and precedents which have been invariably followed in such cases. It is not sufficient for the hon. gentleman to come down and say that he is going to give increases to a certain number of clerks. I think the rule which has always obtained up to the present should be still followed, and the names of the clerks who are to get the increases should appear in the Estimates. That has been the invariable rule in every department, and the reason for that rule is self evident. Some hon. members may have ground for opposing the increase in any particular instances, and in any case it is a subject for parliamentary criticism, and which should be laid before Parliament for its opinion. The Minister is entitled to decide what clerks in his department are entitled to the increase, but Parliament is equally entitled to know who these clerks are.

Mr. FOSTER. This item reads: "Amount required to enable certain increases of salary payable under the Civil Service Act and accruing on the 1st of January and 1st of April, 1897." My hon. friend set me down very curtly when I said that these were statutory increases. Will he point out anything that is an increase of salary payable under the Civil Service Act and accruing on the 1st of June and 1st of April, 1897, which is not a statutory increase provided for by the Act?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman is quite right. When I spoke, I was not aware of the phraseology being as it is. I had refused to accept the item worded in this way, and had ordered these words to be struck out and supposed they were. I now ask to have the words struck out "payable under the Civil Service Act." They were not put in with my approval.

Mr. FOSTER. Then they are either statutory increases or the equivalent. I for one will insist that the names be given of the clerks to whom these several appropriations are made, and even when that is done, I will protest as long as I can against the injustice of having one department carried on in this way and equally deserving clerks in the other departments deprived of their increases. I must do that for the sake of the civil service, if for nothing else, and my advice to my hon. friend would be to let this item stand and go on with the Estimates.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I stated to the hon. gentleman that it was impossible to give the names at present, and then the hon. gentleman said he would insist on opposing this item until he had the names. That being the case, since that hon. gentleman is so solicitous for the welfare of the service and declares his intention to obstruct the conclusion of the work of this House, I move that the item be struck out of the Estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. I did that in the interests of harmony on the other side. You can thank me for getting you out of a pretty bad box.

Item dropped.

Intercolonial Railway—To provide additional rolling stock ..... $100,000

Mr. FOSTER. Is this for the Drummond County Road? This goes out now, I suppose?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not by any manner of means. This is only to provide for the carrying out of the intention of the Government to operate the railway from Chaudière to Montreal as part of the Intercolonial Railway. It would be quite impossible for the department to do that without procuring some additional engines and cars and ordinary equipment, and this sum will be necessary for that purpose. The amount is made up by six engines, three first-class passenger cars, three second-class, two baggage and express cars and two mail cars. These are the cars it is proposed to provide out of this fund. If after the experiment, it should be ultimately determined that the result is not satisfactory, there will be of course no loss at all because this equipment will be available for the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this needed unless to operate the Government line?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We would not be asking for this appropriation unless we intended to make this experiment.

Mr. FOSTER. That throws a very important light on the whole matter. We had a basis of arrangements submitted to this House and certain costs and charges. Directly following on the heels of that comes this item of $100,000 for additional rolling stock, rendered necessary entirely by the acquisition of power to run over the Drummond Road and the Grand Trunk Railway into Montreal. My hon. friend, as was shown last night, was not very happy in the experiment he made on the Baie des Chaleurs Road, and he should have been guided by that experiment. He had the history of that road and its working for two years, and could have told pretty well what the result would be. Now the proposition he submitted to this House in the first instance was not carried in Parliament, and my hon. friend is undertaking to make an experiment for nine months, and the very first item, as necessary to that experiment, is $100,000 for extra rolling stock. It does seem to me that that is not businesslike. If the hon. gentleman could make an experiment on a line of road at a fair rental into Montreal, and without the large expense, which otherwise need not be incurred even for nine months, there might be something said in its favour, but when the initial step of the coming nine months experiment, doubtful at the best, is a vote for $100,000 for rolling stock, nothing could more clearly show that it would be better not to try a costly experiment of that kind. We must reiterate again that we have not very much faith in the basis on which the hon. gentleman expects to get a return from that road. Any man connected with the railway interests of the country who will estimate 600,000 passengers and 500,000 tons of freight as an addition because of the road being extended to Montreal, taking no account of its relation to the whole of the passengers and the whole of the freight carriage, any man who makes that estimate in order to induce this House to accept his project, and will give no data on which he could reasonably form an estimate that there would be that increase, with all the probabilities against it, is hardly one whom we should follow into an experiment for nine months, the results of which are doubtful, except that we have to pay at least $100,000 for rolling stock besides the rental for the road to enable us to get into Montreal. I shall certainly advise my hon. friend to hold this item over until the project is discussed as to this nine months' experiment. If the House approves the whole project, very well; but if it is not pushed through, as I still hope it will not be, we shall not need to take this vote. I think he had better allow this to stand until we have discussed the other.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I have no objection.

Item allowed to stand.

Beauharnois Canal—To construct drainage culvert under the canal at Valleyfield... $25,000

Mr. BERGERON. Will the hon. Minister please explain this item?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. member (Mr. Bergeron) is perhaps aware that a good many years ago an arrangement was made between the Government and the people then living in the village of Valleyfield under which a fixed amount was agreed upon to be paid by the Government in lieu of the construction of drainage works at that point. The location of the canal absolutely cuts off the village from its proper drainage, and it was deemed not unreasonable at that time that the sum of $500 should be offered from the department, and it was, under protest, I believe, accepted by the parties concerned in satisfaction of their claims. Afterwards, however, it was found the arrangement was inadequate, and pressing demands were made to the department for some supplementary grants, and I have been very strongly pressed by demands of the municipal authorities that we should either agree to pay them an increase in the yearly allowance or that we should ask Parliament for some provision to enable us to execute necessary works. The question has become a very serious question. The board of health authorities are remonstrating very strongly against the continuation of the existing state of affairs, and, owing to the health conditions, we are confronted with a great problem as to whether we shall absolutely refuse to take any further responsibility in connection with the matter, and thereby endanger the public health, or whether we shall recognize the obligation which, they claim, rests upon us to provide some adequate relief. I have reports in my department from the engineers who have examined into this question, and they have estimates that to construct the proper ditch and culvert under the canal would cost from $25,000 to $30,000, and I am asking now an appropriation to enable me to do the portion of the work which is directly connected with the canal—not to extend the works at all beyond the point of conveying the sewerage across our canal, but strictly limit it to that. I am not able to state with positiveness just when the work will be undertaken. Since Parliament opened perhaps the hon. member may know, several delegations have visited the city representing the municipal authorities and the board of health, and have made very strong representations, and I felt that the case was so serious a one, as they presented it, and involved such serious consequences, that I would not like to take the responsibility of refusing at all events to ask Parliament to put me in the position that the necessary work should be done at once, and not to allow delay under conditions which would be likely to endanger the health of the people of the locality. Under these circumstances, the grant is being asked.

Mr. BERGERON. There is no doubt, in my mind, that the Government is responsible for taking care of that sewer, and I base that upon the fact that in the past the Government have done so. As the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) has intimated, formerly the Government capitalized the amount of money it should spend on these works and allowed the interest at $500 a year. Since then the town has grown a great deal, and a work which was sufficient at that time is no longer adequate now. The hon. gentleman says that delegations have been here. I have seen them, and they were here before then. But I am glad that the Government have put this item in the Estimates. The hon. gentleman said that he did not know yet how he was going to do this work, and perhaps he would allow me to make a suggestion to him.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Perhaps I failed to make myself clear when I stated that I was uncertain. I intended to propose to the committee that some words should be added to that grant to enable the Government, if we concluded that it would be desirable, to offer to the town a fixed amount of the grant, or if it were necessary, the full amount of the grant, to be accepted by the town under an agreement that the amount so accepted should be taken in full satisfaction for all time of any claim that they might have upon the Government in respect to this matter of drainage. It might be that that would make a more satisfactory arrangement in that way than by undertaking the work ourselves. That is a matter for consideration, and I thought I would ask the committee to enable me to take the grant in an alternative form so that in looking into the matter, if the conclusion were reached that it would be better to effect an arrangement of that kind, we could undertake the work in that way.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. BERGERON. I hope the hon. gentleman is not going to take the money and then not do the work neither in one way or the other. I was about to say that the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) when he was Minister of Railways and Canals, had decided to do that work. Unfortunately we were not allowed to vote the Estimates, and it was not carried on. The way I think it should be done is to carry it under the canal, this is the part for which I understand the hon. gentleman is asking this money. His predecessor would not allow any company or any person to pass under the canal, and so he decided to have that work done by the Government, because the hon. gentleman will understand how important it is that that work should be done properly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I should only allow it to be done under the control of our engineer.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. member for Lanark thought it was better to have it done by the Government and under their supervision. Now, for the part that is in the town and for which the Government is absolutely responsible, in my opinion, the amount of money which was paid, $500 a year, was supposed to represent a capital of about $10,000. The late Government had decided to give $12,000 for that part to the corporation, and then carry under the canal that work for which the hon. gentleman is now asking $25,000. I make this suggestion to the hon. gentleman, because that was looked upon by the delegations at the time as the cheapest way of doing the work in a permanent form. There is no doubt that to-day that sewer is in a terrible condition. I passed through Valleyfield the other day and I found that the people are very anxious about it. The provincial board of health have notified the corporation that they must do something, it is in a dangerous condition. I would ask my hon. friend to have that work carried out as soon as possible, and I think the way that I have suggested would be the cheapest and the most effectual. I want to congratulate the Minister of Public Works upon having kept his promise. He promised the electors of Valleyfield a day before the last provincial election that the work should be done, and I am glad to see that he has kept his word.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I never made any promise of the kind, I only promised to deal fairly with them.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems this estimate is brought into Council by the Minister of Railways and Canals without his engineer being able to say how much it would cost.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I said that there are reports in my department based on the engineer's estimate, that it would cost in the neighbourhood of $30,000 to $35,000. We have that information in the department.

Mr. SPROULE. But I understood the hon. gentleman to say that they have not yet decided how this work is to be done, whether as a public work or otherwise. It seems to me that a decision ought to be reached by Council before the item is submitted to Parliament, because it is only by placing such data before the House that we are able to judge whether the grant asked for should be given. I think the hon. gentleman has not furnished definite information in this case. According to his own statement he is not in possession of it himself. Were it not that the urgency appears so great, and that the public health is likely to suffer, I would say that it would be better to hold over the item until next session.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I thought I was making it clear to the committee that the urgency of the case had been presented to the department since the sitting of the House, and I felt it would be assuming large responsibility if we should determine not to take it up for the want of the information which would be necessary, and should decide to defer it until next session. If there is any objection among our hon. friends opposite because we have not reached a conclusion as to the mode in which this work should be done, I will not say that I would refuse to drop it.

Mr. HAGGART. Let me suggest to the hon. gentleman a plan by which it might be completed. The subject came before me when I was Minister of Railways. We are paying at present $500 to the town of Valleyfield, and I suggested that that amount could be capitalized at 5 per cent and the money given over to the town, which should give the Government a discharge in full for the future of any payment to be made. Our canal runs between the town and the place where the best drainage can be made. I think we are entitled to put a culvert under the canal. We ought to make that expenditure entirely ourselves. Give them the amount capitalized and let them build the ditch from the exit of the culvert to the river.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They have represented to me that they were given to understand that they would get a further grant of $1,000, making $1,500 a year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think there was something of the kind.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think they may not have been warranted in assuming that that was intended, but at all events, they presented the case to me in that light. It did not appear to me, with the knowledge I had, that it would be a judicious thing for us to assume for all time obligations made at $1,500 a year. I would much prefer that we should make the outlay ourselves, and have an end to it. If there is any serious objection likely to prevent the estimate being adopted I would prefer to drop the item rather than to press it under the circumstances.

St. Peter's Canal—Repairs..... $1,350

Mr. GILLIES. Would the Minister please state what repairs are to be made to St. Peter's Canal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am advised that two snubbing posts will be required and other repairs which go to make up the total.

Mr. GILLIES. Is there any intention of straightening out the west side of the canal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think not this year.

Mr. GILLIES. Has the Minister ordered any survey to be made of the west side of the canal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. An engineer whom I sent down there has gone over the ground and given the full report upon it, but I am not in a position to ask for a grant this year.

Mr. GILLIES. Does the engineer's report state the necessity of the repairs being made to which I draw his attention now?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am free to say that I have not studied the report at all, and I would not be able to say at the moment whether it has covered the ground the hon. gentleman refers to.

Rideau Canal—To pay land damages on Kingston Mills level, and legal expenses in connection therewith..... $1,300

Mr. HAGGART. Surely the land damages at Kingston Mills are about finished now.

Mr. BRITTON. I would ask the Minister to explain this item, and perhaps he will be able to say how much is land damages and how much legal expenses.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I presume that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Britton) is pretty well acquainted with the history of these claims for land damages. The claims, which are embraced in this sum, are alleged to be due to some ten different persons whose lands were flooded at the time. These are the remaining claimants with whom settlements have not been effected. Settlements were made with others whose lands were flooded, but these parties refused to accept, and as a consequence the matter has remained in suspense. They have now declared their willingness to accept the sums offered to them; that is to say, that they are willing to accept the settlement which was made with others at the same time.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister must understand that that canal has been built since 1832. There has been no increase in the height of the Kingston Mills dam, and there could be no more damage now than then. If there is damage, at all, it has occurred more than sixty years ago.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It may be a continuing damage. You voted an amount a short time ago for the same purpose.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Was the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart), the Minister of Railways and Canals in 1892?

Mr. HAGGART. I do not think so.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Because these are not new claims. The flooding occurred prior to 1892. The damages were valued by Mr. Wood, the Government valuator, in 1892. All the persons whose property was damaged entered into an acceptance of the valuation excepting these persons whose names I have on this list. We are proposing simply to pay the people whose damages were then settled, but who declined to accept the sums awarded to them, but which they are now willing to accept.

Mr. HAGGART. It is possible that the damage may have been done in 1832. It must have been done in the building of the original canal. The dam is the same height at Kingston Mills as when the canal was built.

Mr. BRITTON. The damage did not arise from any difference in height of the Kingston Mills level, and it arises from some improvement on some of the lower waters below Kingston Mills. I knew that there were damages as a matter of general public knowledge, but I thought they were settled or else I should have heard of it.

Mr. HAGGART. All I know is that there has been no damage from Kingston Mills to Poonamalee dam. That was raised and Mr. Snider was awarded damages on that account. It is possible that this was caused by the piers on the Rideau River.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was in 1887 the damage occurred.

Prince Edward Island Railway—Compassionate allowance to the undermentioned, who were passengers and seriously injured in an accident on the railway:—

Mr. J. F. Robertson.....	$1,500
Mrs. J. F. Robertson.....	500

Mr. HAGGART. Were these damages awarded upon the recommendation of officers of the department?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There were a number of persons injured at that time and several claims were made upon the department. The position was taken that they had no legal right to recover if our officers were not guilty of negligence, and if they were under the law there was no liability attached to the department. Certain persons injured took legal proceedings with the result that in some cases, though not in all, verdicts were recovered against the Government and very large damages were awarded—in one case, I think as high as $25,000. These were paid. The two claimants here, Mr. and Mrs. Robertson, were advised by their counsel that the law as it stood did not make the Crown liable for damages, resulting from negligence on the part of its officers. They did not take any proceedings but they appealed to the department, and the department did not entertain their claim, but stood on what was considered their legal right. After considering the matter, I thought it would be proper to have some person investigate it, and a gentleman was appointed for the purpose of taking evidence upon oath of persons who were familiar with the circumstances. I concluded from the examination of that evidence, that a compassionate allowance of the sum named might fairly be made. The amount is small considering the serious damages which these people sustained. I am not informed that they will accept this sum in full satisfaction of their claims, but unless they do we would not feel justified in offering them any larger sums.

Mr. HAGGART. I believe, perhaps, these people are entitled to the money, but I think the court holds that although we were morally liable we were legally exempt. I think we took a vote for those damages, and that the officers of the department apportioned it amongst them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. These people never were settled with.

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) I draw the attention of the Minister to the case of a man who was injured on the Prince Edward Railroad. He was an oiler on the Cape Traverse branch, and while in the performance of his duty he had to put his arm through the wheel of the carriage and the driver having started the engine without warning, the man lost his arm. He is a young man with a wife and family depending upon him, and if the person named in this vote is entitled to a compassionate allowance, there is a great deal more reason why this poor man should get one.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What is his name ?

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) His name is Sweeney. I believe if the Minister looks into his case he will see the justice of making some allowance for this poor man.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When did this happen ?

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) It is not more than two years ago.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will make a note of it.

Williamsburg Canal—To pay three months' salary, as retiring allowance, to ex-Superintendent Hickey..... $450

Mr. BRITTON. Does this simply mean, three months from the time of Mr. Hickey's dismissal ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. Hickey's case was one of some hardship, because we reorganized the staff so as to dispense with the necessity of having a superintendent as well as an engineer, and under the arrangement, Mr. Hickey had to retire from the service. There being no means of providing for his case, I had some correspondence with him, and he thought he would feel very well satisfied if he had an allowance of this amount. I think it is only fair it should be given to him.

Mr. BRITTON. The point I wish to make is that his year will expire on the 30th June, and in last year's estimates we have provided up to that date for his salary.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We could not pay this officer at all after he had ceased to be in the service.

Mr. BRITTON. Will this retiring allowance pay him to the 30th June ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This retiring allowance will pay him for three months subsequent to his retirement. It may be beyond the first of July, but it may not be up to that date.

Mr. BRITTON. I think that Mr. Hickey ought to get his pay up to the 30th June, and I hope the Minister will see that he gets it.

Public Buildings..... $5,500

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). I move that the item for St. Martin's post office be struck out.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Minister indicate what other striking out of post offices he is going to do ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. After having considered the matter again, having found that the revenue of the post office at St. Martin's last year reached only $615, I thought it just as well not to insist on going on with that building, and I move that it be struck out.

Mr. FOSTER. Did the hon. gentleman know what the revenue was before putting it into the Estimates ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I may say frankly that I did.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman indicate what is his general policy with reference to all those that stood over ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The general policy in future will be to exercise a great discretion.

Mr. FOSTER. That would be a great advantage.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is always time to improve ; but in this case I think there will not be very much room for improvement, because, after all, I am not asking much this year. But, seriously speaking, I quite agree with what has been said in the House on both sides. We have been going on building too many post offices. This year I will ask that all the other items be voted, but I may say at once that I will not spend one dollar more than I am now applying for.

Mr. FOSTER. What is to be done with Montmagny ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It will stand also.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the revenue of Montmagny ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The figures placed in my hands show that the postal revenue last year was $1,743.19, and the money orders issued, $8,623. The population of the town and the parish included—

Mr. FOSTER. Not the parish.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is the same post office.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. There are two post offices—the one in the town of Montmagny, and another called Casault for the parish.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend knows that the post office in the town supplies most of the parish. The population of the town is 1,690, and the population of the parish is, I think, about the same.

Mr. LAVERGNE. The population of the parish is 2,849.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I understood the Minister to say the other evening that he would drop St. Martin's, Berthierville and Rat Portage.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What I said was that, having listened to the sentiments expressed on both sides of the House, I thought it was just as well to bring matters to a conclusion; and I made a motion, which was not agreed to, to strike out St. Martin's, Berthierville, Montmagny and Rat Portage. There were protests on both sides of the House, and it was agreed that those items should stand. After having considered the matter again, I made up my mind to ask the House to allow me to strike out St. Martin's post office, but to allow me, at the same time, to go on with the post offices at Berthierville, Montmagny and Rat Portage, pledging myself faithfully not to ask the House in future to vote amounts of money for small places.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. What will be the limit?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think it would be reasonable to ask any Government to lay down any iron rule; but, at the same time, I think I have heard enough from both sides of the House, and especially from this side, to give me wisdom, and I have no doubt that next year I shall not be accused of asking the House to vote for any useless sum of money on this account.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I would repeat partly what I said the other evening. I think the Government are making a great mistake in putting these votes through the House. If the Minister understood the feeling all through Ontario with regard to the extravagant expenditures in which the former Government indulged in building post offices, he would never have put these items in the Estimates; I am satisfied of that. I am glad to know that he has decided not to make any such expenditures in the future. I think it is in the interest of the party, as well as in the interest of the country that such expenditures should not be made. These post offices erected in these small villages are not of service even to the party itself. I think a man must be a very unimportant man indeed if he requires to have a post office erected in his riding in order to get himself returned; I think he cannot amount to a great deal. I also think that the erection of these post offices in small places leads to endless expenditure. After the post office is erected, we must have a caretaker, and in some cases a fireman; and we are continually having small amounts put in the Estimates for fences, pavements, and repairs; whereas, in all these small towns, buildings could be rented for at least one-fourth of the expense. I am glad to know from the Minister of Public Works that he has put his foot down, and that, notwithstanding the pressure that may be brought to bear upon him by members who want these public buildings erected in their constituencies, more for ornament than for utility, he will refuse to concede to these men any grant in the public estimates for these purposes in future.

Mr. FOSTER. I think I must enter a mild protest against the Minister putting his heavy foot down in New Brunswick, and keeping it up in Quebec and all the rest of the country. If he is going to put his foot down, let him put it down all through. Let him put it on Montmagny. Is Montmagny any more important than St. John? The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Tucker) is away fighting the battles of his country in London, and you are putting your foot down on the post office in his constituency—in this Jubilee year especially.

Berthierville public building..... $5,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is the population and revenue?

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. The one post office serves both the parish and the town. The population of the town is over 1,500 and of the parish over 1,800. The present post office is placed at the most inconvenient part of the whole place. It is on a corner at the very limit of the town, and is very small, consisting of two small rooms, one of which is used also as a telegraph office. There is not thirty feet space in the whole office to serve so large a population. It has been a scandal for years that no better accommodation was given. Last year I presented a petition to the hon. Minister, signed by a large number of citizens, irrespective of party, asking for a new post office, because the old one was not satisfactory. The Government considered the question, and came to the conclusion that a post office was necessary. I have no personal interest in the matter, I never required any post office or other building to be erected in the county of Berthier to secure my election. I could be elected without the help of the post office, which will be situated in the most Conservative town of the whole county. There are no politics in this. It is a matter of necessity, and I thank the hon. Minister of Public Works for having granted the petition and done the county a small measure of justice.

Mr. COCHRANE. It is not fair to Ontario that post offices should be erected in small villages in Quebec and the maritime provinces, while the large towns of Ontario, containing 5,000 or 6,000 inhabitants, are neglected.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I am surprised at my hon. friend objecting to this, because he was a staunch supporter of the late Government, which spent money from year to year on post offices in similar places. He was one of the supporters of the late Government who voted to build an expensive post office in Laprairie, where the total receipts only amounted to $400 per year. I think the late Government did wrong in this, and I think the present Government are committing an error if they follow the same course. But there is nothing in the present Estimates that can be at all compared to some of the votes of the preceding Government, which my hon. friend supported.

Mr. COCHRANE. I do not object to this. What I object to is that after the Minister of Public Works supplies post offices to these little villages in the maritime provinces and the province of Quebec, he is not going to give us any in Ontario.

Mr. SPROULE. In my opinion you ought to drop all the small ones. The one at Kentville ought to be dropped. The St. Martin's, Montmagny, Berthier and Liverpool should be dropped.

Montmagny post office, custom-house, &c.. $7,500

Mr. CASGRAIN. I believe the hon. gentleman is going to purchase a building.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know yet.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It was stated by the hon. member for Montmagny, who prevailed on my hon. friend to put this in the Estimates, that the Government were going to purchase a certain building in the town of Montmagny, which had been erected on purpose as a post office some years ago. My hon. friend says at this moment that he does not know whether he will purchase the building or not. I may tell the hon. gentleman that five or six years ago the building was sold at sheriff's sale for $3,000 to the Quebec Seminary. The Seminary had a mortgage on it and nobody would bid. The mortgage was $3,000.

Mr. TALBOT. $7,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN. No one would bid, and the Seminary had to put in a bid for $3,000.

Mr. TALBOT. But the mortgage was $7,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What of that. They lent $7,000 on a building which was only worth $3,000.

Mr. TALBOT. It cost over $10,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I do not care what it costs: I am giving the value of the building now and I will tell the hon. gentleman—

Mr. LAVERGNE. How do you estimate the value?

Mr. CASGRAIN. Now, I would like to ask my hon. friend from Arthabaska (Mr. Lavergne) not to get excited. I say the Quebec seminary loaned a certain amount of money upon this building at the time it was built or shortly after. Some time after the building was sold at sheriff's sale, and it was bought in by the Seminary at $3,000.

An hon. MEMBER. What kind of a building is it?

Mr. CASGRAIN. It was a cottage; it was erected as a private dwelling.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Has it been improved since then?

Mr. CASGRAIN. I am not aware. Of course I am speaking en connaissance in this matter, because I go there to attend court.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Is it not agreed that the loaners considered the property well worth $7,000?

Mr. CASGRAIN. But that was 10 years ago. At that time probably they had certain hopes that the property would bring $7,500. But it is well-known that these institutions sometimes loan money on property on which they cannot recover. But as I say, it was sold at sheriff's sale and bid in at $3,000. Ever since then, nobody would touch it, and it has remained in the hands of the Seminary of Quebec, except for a certain time during which the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Choquette) occupied it as a printing establishment for his paper.

Mr. LAVERGNE. I have been asked by my hon. friend from Montmagny to say a few words about this matter. First I must assure the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) that I am not at all excited. I am as well acquainted with the facts of this locality as he may be. I claim to come from Montmagny myself. It is no argument to say that because a property is sold by the sheriff for $3,000, therefore it is only worth that. We understand very well the Seminary being bound to bid it up to the amount of the loan, nobody was anxious to increase the costs of the sale, which would be 3½ per cent to the sheriff. I myself have bought property from the sheriff for $4 which was worth $1,000, because nobody would bid against me.

Mr. CASGRAIN. But when the property is bought in the mortgage disappears.

Mr. LAVERGNE. Of course; who denies that?

Mr. CASGRAIN. What you say is no evidence that the property was worth more than $3,000.

Mr. LAVERGNE. I say that nobody was anxious to bid against the Seminary because the Seminary would be bound to bid up to the amount of the mortgage, and nobody would want to increase the payment to the sheriff. My hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) is a lawyer, and he knows about sheriff's sales as well as I do. Now, I will just put before the committee the figures my hon. friend from Montmagny has given me. The revenue of this post office is $1,743.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. That is the gross revenue; what was the net?

Mr. LAVERGNE. The net income is $1,043. The population of the town and parish is about—

Mr. COCHRANE. Give us the population of the town.

Mr. LAVERGNE. That would not be fair, because all the farmers of the parish go to this post office. The population is about 4,600. As I am informed, also, this is a centre of distribution for several other places including Grosse Isle, where there is the quarantine station. I may say also, on behalf of my hon. friend, that this post office has been promised both by the Conservative Administration and by the Liberals for a number of years. As my hon. friend says, it is not so easy to get rid of these promises made to the people, more especially where candidates have made these promises on the hustings on the authority of some gentleman in the administration.

Mr. FOSTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. LAVERGNE. In the last administration. Hon. gentlemen must remember also that our judicial districts are not organized as in Ontario and some other provinces. This is not only the shire town of the county of Montmagny, but it is the judicial centre for the district composed of the counties of Montmagny, L'Islet, and Bellechasse. All these people have to repair to this town for their superior and criminal court cases. Thus it will be seen that it is a very important centre.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have no objection to Montmagny getting a post office, if the town and parish is entitled to it, but I do object to putting a sum in the estimates for the purchase of a property. If the Minister wants to erect the building, let him ask for the money to erect it. But this property is owned by somebody, whether by the Seminary or by the hon. member for the constituency. The information I have is that the hon. member (Mr. Choquette) is the owner.

Mr. TALBOT. That is not true. He had the promise of sale, but that expired about two years ago, and the property has gone back to the Seminary.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). I do not pledge myself to buy it, and I do not know that I shall buy it.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) informs the committee that this property was sold for $3,000 five years ago. It is altogether likely that the party who mortgaged this property for $7,000 mortgaged other property with it, or if this was sold for $3,000, that they have a claim still against the party for the balance.

Mr. CASGRAIN. They took the best security they could get at the time for a bad debt.

Mr. TAYLOR. Here we have $7,000 put in the estimates to buy a second hand property.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is not stated that it is to buy it.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think it is a job of the worst kind. It may be an election pledge.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know whether I will buy it or not.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then amend the vote, and state that it is for the purpose of erecting a building, and not for the purchase of one.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Public Works does not know whether he will buy the building or not. I can tell him that the member for Montmagny (Mr. Choquette) knows that he will buy it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Then he knows more than I do.

Mr. SPROULE. Usually in country towns where they want a post office they give the land for the site. Now, the Minister ought to tell us what kind of a building he is going to erect, he ought to give us some kind of an estimate before he asks the House to vote the money without any knowledge of what he is going to do with it. The general impression is that it is to purchase this building, and that directly or indirectly the hon. member for that constituency is interested.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think when the statement was made the other day during a discussion of this item that the member for Montmagny was interested, he denied it positively, and I think the hon. gentleman should accept his statement.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not questioning his statement at all.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman says that the member for Montmagny is interested in it.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not, I beg your pardon. I said it was currently rumoured and the impression is abroad in some minds that it is so. I was going to say that there is urgent need for the Minister of Public Works to give full information to the House as to whether he intends to erect a new building, in order to disabuse the impression that there is a job connected with it. If he intends to buy this building he should be frank enough to tell the House so; otherwise let the vote stand over for another year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If I do not buy the building I will certainly not spend one dollar more than I am asking now.

Mr. SPROULE. You mean for this year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, I will never spend it.

Rat Portage public building..... $5,000

Mr. BERGERON. What is the hon. gentleman going to do with this $5,000?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot possibly build a post office there for this sum of money. I may buy a site with it, and I will be obliged to come down next year for more money.

Mr. HAGGART. Has the hon. gentleman any request from the Post Office Department for a building here?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The requests do not always come from the Post Office Department; sometimes they come from my hon. friends here.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. With regard to this item I may say that representations were made to the Post Office Department by the citizens of Rat Portage that the accommodation there was wholly inadequate. I think I sent the inspector up there, and I have a report from him on the subject. The town has grown very rapidly, and I endeavoured to see whether the postmaster could acquire better premises under the existing arrangements for which a direct yearly allowance is made. But evidence came to me that owing to the rapid growth of the town it was impossible for him to get a place, I believe that there is not a fit place to be had. The want of a building is certainly a grievance in Rat Portage. Now, I thought that as the town is growing so rapidly, to rent a building that would be satisfactory for three or four years, would probably be a better plan than to erect a building now, because at the rate that that town is growing it may have a population of 25,000 in the near future, and a building that might be erected in a year or two would be quite insufficient in a few years to come. However, circumstances are such that something has to be done in the town of Rat Portage immediately.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) said a few moments ago that in Ontario they generally made the Government a present of a site. In Rat Portage they have presented a site, but that rule is not applied to the maritime provinces. A few years ago Gananoque made application for a post office, and one condition of their getting it was that they should give a site, and they did present the Government with a site worth two or three thousand dollars. Gananoque furnishes a revenue of several thousand dollars, and has a population of over 4,000; yet they had to present a site before they could get a building.

Mr. ELLIS. The hon. gentleman has a habit of making references to the maritime provinces of such a character that he ought to revise his speeches before he makes them. Now, here are $300,000 being voted for public buildings, and $500 for the province of New Brunswick. Out of the whole $300,000 the hon. gentleman is not satisfied to give New Brunswick $500. Now that I am on my feet, I would suggest that, as the Minister of Public Works has withdrawn that grant to the post office at St. Martin's, he should put a grant in his estimates of $10,000 for a drill hall in St. John, where it is very much needed indeed, and that will make the thing square.

Mr. BRITTON. It is no doubt owing to the popularity of the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) that the town of Gananoque has a post office there and a custom-house, a very valuable property, worth in the neighbourhood of $30,000, in a place having a population of 3,500. If all the towns in Ontario were treated as well as Gananoque, I do not think the province would have much reason to complain.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FOSTER. I would suggest that we go on and finish the Crow's Nest Pass business to-night.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Some reference has been made on the other side of the House to the subject of the Crow's Nest Pass Bill and the suggestion is offered that we might proceed with it. The debate which took place this afternoon presented this matter from the Opposition standpoint probably, at all events, presented it in such a way that I feel that the statements which have been put forward ought to be met.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, we will listen to you now. It is only half-past twelve, and if we are going to get through on Monday we must do something.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I shall not move the House into committee upon it to-night.

Mr. FOSTER. I would certainly say to the hon. gentleman who leads the Government (Sir Richard Cartwright) that probably prorogation is further away than we agreed upon. If we undertake this debate to-morrow, we will put in the whole day upon it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I know the hon. gentleman professes a great desire to expedite business, but he and his friends have made an attack upon the Government by reason of its policy in respect of the Crow's Nest Pass and upon the details of that policy, and we do not propose that these statements shall go uncontradicted.

Mr. FOSTER. We are here to listen to you. I have rather a suspicion that my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals has something behind this, and that he wants us to help him to burk the business.

Mr. SPROULE. As one who took part in the debate on this question I desire to say that after looking over it very carefully since, I agree with the Minister of Railways and Canals that it does not necessarily follow that this road will be built without the Canadian Pacific Railway giving the 50,000 acres of land because that not only applies to them but to any company that is interested in the project.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman cannot discuss the question now.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought it was due to the Minister to say that after looking over the matter I believe he is correct in his interpretation of it.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 12.35 a.m. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, 26th June, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock, a.m.

PRAYERS.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask if to-day is to be a single sitting?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. We might have it understood, I presume, that the sitting be interrupted from one to three.

Mr. BLAIR.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Not quite so long as that. We might have reasonable intermission for an hour.

IRON AND STEEL BOUNTIES.

Bill (No. 149) to provide for bounties on iron and steel made in Canada, was read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I propose to omit the last clause which was the subject of discussion, and with this understanding the Bill may be passed.

The Committee reported; Bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

The House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Intercolonial Railway—To purchase additional rolling stock..... $100,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I propose to ask the consideration of the committee, in the first place, to the resolution appropriating a sufficient sum to enable us to make arrangements with the two railway companies, the Grand Trunk Railway and the Drummond County Railway, for the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, and the running of trains as part of the Intercolonial Railway until the expiration of the current year. If we are able to dispose of this question—the two votes probably will be considered together—in sufficient time to enable us to take up the Crow's Nest Pass Bill and advance it a stage and deal with the subsidy resolutions to-day, we will be disposed to do that. That will be the order in which the leader of the House proposes the business should be taken up.

Mr. FOSTER. The rumour has been circulated for some days that the Government proposed to join the fortunes of these two measures together, that unless they could get the consent of Parliament to the passage of the Intercolonial Railway extension project, they propose to hold back and ultimately not pass through the Crow's Nest Railway resolution. I would like to have from the hon. gentleman a denial or confirmation of that current rumour, to which some impressiveness has been given by the peculiar course taken by the Minister of Railways and Canals with reference to the Crow's Nest Pass Bill.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think the hon. gentleman could expect that an answer should be given by me or any one on behalf of the Government to the question he has raised. The conduct of the Government with respect to these measures, must be judged by the manner in which we deal with them, and the course to be taken in respect of any one of them will, in a measure, depend upon the treatment these receive from the House. I propose to take up the Crow's Nest Pass Bill, if time afforded for the purpose, immediately after the disposal of the present motion.

Mr. FOSTER. Why the provisos "if time allows"?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Because we propose to regulate the order of business by the progress made, and will exercise our choice as to the order in which these various measures are submitted for consideration.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend answer me one question? Is it the intention of the Government to press the Crow's Nest Pass resolution this session? That is a fair question and easily answered.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman will be enabled to judge, from the progress made with regard to these matters, as to what can be done. The Crow's Nest Pass could have been through yesterday were it not for the discussion prolonged by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. FOSTER. It could have been through last night.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). The Crow's Nest Pass Bill was brought up yesterday in the first session, at eleven o'clock, and bearing in mind the fact that the leader of the Opposition had endorsed the measure and that the hon. gentleman himself had also endorsed it in a measurable degree, it does strike me that we are not to blame if it did not go through committee. We gave it the whole sitting.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend understands, that the House was ready to pass that last night, so far as this side was concerned. I gave the opportunity, and with the full assent of my hon. friend himself we would have taken the opportunity to pass the measure, if my hon. friend could have persuaded his colleague, the Minister of Railways, to do as he wanted him to do.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it is evident that the Government were disposed to give the House every opportunity of passing the Crow's Nest Bill yesterday, but that hon. gentlemen opposite, who were "intensely anxious" that the Bill should be pushed through, at the same time, apparently, were more anxious to pose before the country as opponents of the Government's proposition, and thus get a certain amount of credit with those whom they thought would favour that position. As one member of the Government and of Parliament, and as the one having charge and direction of these Bills, I am not disposed to allow hon. gentlemen opposite to assume any such attitude before the country. I am not willing that, while they are heartily in favour of the Bill, they should be allowed to pose before the country as opposed to the Crow's Nest Pass measure, at all events without our having an opportunity to meet the attacks that are made upon us with regard to this Bill. I think that that is not an unreasonable proposition at all, and I do not think any person will say that I am claiming too much when I claim an opportunity of meeting the attacks that have been made on the Government policy from the opposite side of the House. Had the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) and those who are co-operating with him, been disposed to be candid in the treatment of the Bill, had they either said that they were in sympathy with the measure or said nothing at all, the Bill would have gone through without question. But they thought that some little advantage could be gained by pursuing a different course, and I am not willing that they should gain that advantage. I am not moved—of course, how could I be—by any feeling of opposition to the Crow's Nest Bill, but I am disposed to pursue the order of business which, at all events, will prevent our friends opposite from getting any advantage, politically, out of their strange attitude upon this question.

Mr. FOSTER. I had supposed that the Government were here, and the Opposition were here, to do what was for the advantage of the country and not merely what was for party advantage. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) must not, in his generosity, assume to define the functions of the Opposition. The hon. gentleman says that if the Opposition had said nothing, the Bill would have passed. But the hon. gentleman is too fresh in assuming that any Opposition which knows its duty and intends to do it is going to keep its mouth shut on the Bills brought before the House. It is the duty of the Opposition to criticise, to suggest, to amend as far as possible, and that duty the present Opposition intends to perform. We may approve a general policy, but not be satisfied with all the details. While the majority of us are in favour of the policy embodied in the Crow's Nest Pass Bill, we intend to criticise the details of the measure. And, further, the hon. gentleman must not confuse himself as an individual Minister with the Government, nor must he confuse the general policy with the details. And the hon. gentleman must remember this—that nine-tenths of the criticism that has been passed upon him has been on account of his tortuous course with respect to this Bill—

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I may as well say to the hon. gentleman—I have no doubt that he desires to get through with the business of the House that he may be able to attend to his own, as are myself and others—that there is no use in flinging taunts of this kind across the floor of the House. It will not help us on with business.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. leader of the House (Sir Richard Cartwright) was out when his colleague (Mr. Blair) was flinging his taunts across the floor of the House.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Let us have an armistice.

Mr. FOSTER. We are quite ready to observe it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) knows that I did not complain as to what the Opposition had done in the way of criticism. I do not pretend to place a limit upon their right to criticise. But I venture to think that they cannot expect to take the attitude of being heartily in sympathy with the Bill while, at the same time, complaining of our course in regard to it, and not, at all events, allow us the right to meet these criticisms in the fullest possible manner.

Mr. FOSTER. Nobody objects to that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the course that I claim I have a right to pursue, a course which, I think, the House will justify me in pursuing.

Mr. SPROULE. In connection with the statement—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPROULE. I am quite in order.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Why, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has the floor. How can two address the House at the same time?

Mr. SPROULE. I understood that these remarks of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals were preliminary to his explanations of this item, and that a discussion arose following the remarks made by the leader of the Opposition. Now, I wish to say that I refuse to be put in the position before the House and before the country of being intensely anxious for the passing of this Bill and, at the same time, opposing it. I opposed what I thought was wrong in it, while, at the same time, I state frankly that I believe there is some merit in the measure and some justification for passing it. Still, with all the objectionable features in it, I am not intensely in favour of passing it; I am not in favour of it at all; and, while saying that, if we let the measure pass, I hold that it should be only after trying, as far as possible, to perfect it and making it workable. That is the position I hold.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Let the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals make his statement and then criticise.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to remind the leader of the House (Sir Richard Cartwright) that my remarks are quite in place in view of what has passed between the Minister of Railways and Canals and the leader of the Opposition.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it only just to the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) to say that he was fairly criticising the Bill and that I had not him in mind in the remarks I made. I am bound to say that he has not evinced any intense desire that the Crow's Nest Pass Bill should go through.

I was moving the committee to the consideration of the vote of $157,500 for the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. I shall not detain the committee with any lengthened remarks upon it. The Government have, after due consideration, come to the conclusion that it is in the public interest that the Intercolonial Railway should be extended to the city of Montreal. Having decided upon that policy, we desire, if we can get the sanction of Parliament through this vote, to carry that policy into operation. And, while we are not pretending to dispute the right of the other branch of Parliament to take any view of that subject that may seem best to it, with regard to the conditions upon which to carry out the arrangement, we request this House to place us in possession of the funds to enable us to put the plan into, at all events, experimental operation. I have no doubt in my own mind, and I may say that the Government has no doubt whatever, as to the ultimate success of its policy. It is a policy which in the interest of the country will surely be adopted. The Intercolonial Railway must find its terminus in the city of Montreal. Now, that being the case, we are confidently asking Parliament to put us in possession of such funds as are necessary to extend the Intercolonial into Montreal as soon as the necessary agreement is come to and the other roads are equipped for the purpose during the current year. I hope to be able to operate it for nine months. At the expiration of nine months—

Mr. FOSTER. Beginning when?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We hope to be able to begin the 1st of November, possibly the 1st of October.

Mr. FOSTER. Are you sanguine of that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Quite sanguine upon it. After we shall have been running it for a while, we shall find it necessary, no doubt, to ask Parliament for a further grant to enable us to continue it for another year, and by that time all opposition to the proposal will have absolutely died out, in my judgment. I venture to predict that.

This idea that the arrangement which we proposed with the Grand Trunk Railway and the Drummond County Railway was a job will have been fully exploded by the investigation which is going to take place. We invite this investigation; we do more than invite it, we defy it. We challenge hon. gentlemen who have been building their opposition and their obstruction to this measure upon the ground that this agreement has its base in jobbery—we defy them to proceed with an investigation and unearth the transactions which have taken place in connection with the Drummond County Railway from its inception, and their dealings with this Government. We have nothing to fear from such investigation. I can affirm with confidence that the result which will take place will be to rob these people who have been opposing this project of the slightest pretext for any opposition. I have every confidence that when we meet Parliament, say two years hence, in the second session from now, all opposition to this proposal will have disappeared. At all events, the more the subject is inquired into, the more it is thought over, the more it is considered, the more strongly will it take hold of the public mind—that is my conviction, at all events. The idea has come here to stay, and it will take more than the opposition which has so far developed to it to occasion any permanent delay. Now, we ask the committee with confidence to make this grant, and I am sure that the results will justify our action.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it possible that we are asked to pass a vote of $157,000 on five minutes of combined declamation and prophecy?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Haven't you had this measure before you for some time?

Mr. FOSTER. We have never had this measure before us; we have had a measure for entering into a contract for ninety-nine years.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The greater includes the less.

Mr. FOSTER. The greater sometimes does not include the less. There is a great difference between making a nine months' trial with a company like the Grand Trunk Railway and making a ninety-nine years' lease with the Grand Trunk Railway. My hon. friend knows that there is every difference between subsidizing the Drummond County Railway and then paying them a rental for their road for nine months to experiment with, and giving a sum to the Drummond County Railway after it had itself completed its forty-two miles, giving them a yearly rental for 100 years, and then holding and owning the property. The propositions are as different as possible. The hon. gentleman comes down with a vote for $160,000, and he gives us a few minutes of prophecy, a few minutes of defiance and a few minutes of declamation, and sits down and asks us to vote the proposition. Now, we want the hon. gentleman to tell us how he proposes to use this $160,000. I think the House would stultify itself if it voted this money without having some explanation as to what the hon. gentleman thinks he can do, and how he is going to do it.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It bears the explanation on its face. This money is wanted to pay rental to the Drummond County Railway and to the Grand Trunk Railway in the same proportions as we originally asked.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman is giving us part of the information that the Minister of Railways did not give, that it is in the same proportion. The Minister of Railways did not say so.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The resolution says so. The hon. gentleman can make the computation.

Mr. FOSTER. Can any one take up that resolution and make a computation as to whether you are proposing to give the Grand Trunk Railway anything for terminals, anything for improvements and enlargements of terminals, on the basis of a 5 per cent interest upon half the cost? How far can we compute when we have no knowledge of the basis upon which the computation can be placed? The hon. gentleman wants us to give him $160,000, and he has not laid before this committee one single item of information as to what he proposes to do and how he proposes to do it. Is he going to ask the House to vote money in the gross to be followed by another large sum? Because the very minute he makes his agreement, the next minute he has to go to a large expense for rolling stock and material. More than that, he has to go to expense with reference to the road, if the road is to be put into a fit condition with which to make a fair experiment. He has not vouchsafed to us the least information as to whether the Drummond County Railway is to make the necessary improvements along the line, or as to what he and his Government propose to do. I say this is simply a bare proposition to give money for a project in the air, without the least basis of information upon which we may guide our conduct, and that is not right treatment for this House. The hon. gentleman must give us the details of the scheme as he has them worked out in his own brain.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am really surprised to learn that the hon. gentleman has not had any information on this subject, because I was under the impression that I had stated to him the other day, when notice was given and in answer to his own inquiry, that we had not made the arrangements, but that we expected to be able to make arrangements on the basis of the agreements that had been entered into between the Government and these parties. We have asked for a sum which absolutely corresponds with the amount of rental under those leases, and we hope to be able to complete the temporary arrangements with those companies upon the same lines. We certainly will not be authorized, nor do we propose to offer them any rent in excess of the sums which we agreed to pay them under those contracts. We certainly do not propose to assume any obligation of a permanent character. We do not propose to lay out any money in a reconstruction either of the Grand Trunk Railway or of the Drummond County road. The whole arrangement will be contingent upon the Drummond County road being built up to the proper standard to enable us to run the trains of the Intercolonial Railway without our having to incur any expenditure upon repairs or additions to or reconstruction of that railway in any particular. We are not asking for one farthing for that purpose. We are asking sufficient to pay the rental, we are asking sufficient to equip ourselves with proper running plant for the purpose. Beyond that we are not asking anything: and the fact that we are not asking anything for any other purposes than those that I have stated I think should afford conclusive evidence to the hon. gentleman, as I am sure it is satisfactory to the great body of this committee, that we have not in contemplation to make any expenditure whatever upon the roadway of either of these railway companies. I shall be glad to give the hon. gentleman any further information which he requires, and which he does not already possess. But I think I stated these things fully to the hon. gentleman the other day. I think if he were at all in an agreeable mood, if he were willing to be satisfied, he would have been satisfied without any restating what I assured him of a day or two since. Now, I do not complain at all that the hon. gentleman is not satisfied with our proposal, I do not complain that the hon. gentleman criticises our proposal; because I quite understand that it is his duty to criticise, and it is a duty which I am bound to say he discharges to the full. I have listened very patiently to the hon. gentleman throughout this whole session, and I have observed that it has scarcely been possible for a suggestion to emanate from this side of the House that did not receive the unqualified condemnation of the hon. gentleman. I am willing to assume that in all this he is but discharging the duty which he feels rests upon him as leader, or assistant leader of the party, and therefore I do not complain, but I do complain that when the hon. gentleman's objections are of one kind that he states them as being of another kind. When his objection is against our taking the authority of Parliament, to enter upon a policy to which we are absolutely committed, and in which this Government will persist to the end, I do object to his putting his objection in another way, and upon another ground, and saying that we have not given him information. I think the hon. gentleman has no sufficient basis for complaint. We had given him all the information which he can reasonably expect, all the information which is in our possession, and all the information which it is possible for me to supply him with.

Mr. SPROULE. There are several features of this transaction that suggest themselves to my mind as being worthy of consideration at the present time. The first is the proposal made by the Government to this House, and debated at considerable length, in this House, which after receiving the sanction of this House, notwithstanding the strong opposition given to it by a number of members, went to the other Chamber and was there thrown out. That was the expression of the will of Parliament and the will of Parliament was that this Bill should not be carried through because Parliament thought that it was not in the interest of the country to carry it through. The rules of parliamentary debate here do not permit us to accomplish in a roundabout way what we cannot accomplish in a direct way. It seems to me that this proposal is to accomplish in a roundabout way what the hon. gentleman opposite failed to get through Parliament in a direct way. Parliament refused its sanction to the proposed deal, and now an effort is being made to accomplish the same thing in a different way.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, no.

Mr. SPROULE. If the words of the hon. Minister who has just spoken are worth anything it must be accepted as so because his words were to this House that "We are determined to carry it out." The objectionable features of this proposal seem to be these. They say: "This Parliament has refused its sanction, but we can accomplish it in another way. We propose that Parliament shall grant us a certain amount of money for the purpose of making an experiment of this deal to prove to the country that we were right in our surmises of what the benefits would be to the country. For the purpose of enabling us to carry out this extension we require $175,000, and we also require $100,000 for the purpose of buying rolling stock." The $157,000, however much we might be disposed to allow that to pass, involves an additional outlay of $100,000 for rolling stock which we cannot dispose of at the end of nine months.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It will be very useful; we will need it all.

Mr. SPROULE. There are a great many things in life that we would find useful if we diverted them to some other purpose, and it is very possible that this rolling stock may be used on the Intercolonial Railway for another purpose. But we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that if this expenditure is indeed to carry out this deal, it is intended to commit the country to a lease for 99 years. This additional $100,000 is required for that purpose. If the $157,000 is only to try this experiment, there is no urgent need for a further expenditure of $100,000 for rolling stock. Now the question to my mind is whether Parliament would be justified in sanctioning this expenditure for an experiment. Parliament is not a deliberative body that commends experiments to be made at the country's expense. Schemes are proposed to it from the other side of the House after deliberation and investigation and after the Government can satisfy themselves of their ability to carry it through in the interest of the country. They lay those schemes before Parliament accompanied by explanations sufficient to convince Parliament that the schemes are sound, and if Parliament refuses in view of the explanations given in the interest of the country to sanction them I think they ought to fall to the ground. And so ought this proposal. Since Parliament has decided against it I think it ought to be allowed to remain in abeyance for the present. The Minister of Railways and Canals was kind enough to say with some degree of warmth, "We invite investigation," referred to by another Chamber. "We invite it; we challenge it," and he used the words, "We defy it." I do not know whether that meant, "We defy their right to make an inquiry."

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, we invite inquiry.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood that it meant, "We defy them."

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, no, we invite inquiry.

Mr. SPROULE. I would ask the hon. gentleman to allow me to make my own explanation, and if I am wrong he may put me right.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am sure the hon. gentleman does not wish to misstate the case. He has misunderstood me. My defiance was of their investigation, not of their right to investigate. I think it would have been better and a very proper thing if they had done that before they bowled out our measure, and I think it is better late than never.

Mr. SPROULE. I admit that, and I was only referring to it to enable the Minister of Railways and Canals to supplement his explanation by such further explanations as would make his meaning clear to both sides of the House. The Minister of Railways and Canals is wrong if he defied them to do what they did, but if he only defied them to show the country that there was anything wrong in it then he was quite proper. I fully recognize the right and I also recognize the wisdom of it. I confess that to my mind it would have been a proper thing if these hon. gentlemen had done it before passing upon the measure. But the question is this: Had they time to do it? One of the reasons why we object to this measure being proposed at such a late stage is because it may be impossible during the remainder of the session to make such further inquiry as is justifiable in my opinion under the circumstances. For that reason I think it wrong to submit this proposition at such a late period. But you may look at it in two lights. Some people regard that rather as a bluff to cover up the suggestion that there may be something wrong. So far as that might be regarded as a bluff I do not think it will go down.

Mr. LISTER. We do not know anything about bluffing on this side of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. There is no hon. member who knows more about it than the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) and no hon. member has been so long perpetrating it upon the House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I never bluff.

Mr. SPROULE. I am pleased to know that of the hon. gentleman the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair); but I am only referring to it to show how it is regarded by some people both in and outside of the House. Whatever doubt there may be, I think it was unwise in him to make a statement that might be regarded more as a bluff than as an invitation to hold an inquiry into the matter. If it were to be inquired into and it is found that there is merit in the proposition it would be possible to satisfy Parliament and the country of the fact, so that I think, the matter might reasonably be deferred for nine months until after an inquiry is made and, then, if all parties are satisfied that there is merit in the scheme, there would not be any reasonable objection to it, and it would go through without further delay. That is one reason why I think it is unwise to make this expenditure now. I do not think Parliament has a right to experiment to the extent of $257,000.

I also think, in view of the fact that the original scheme was thrown out by Parliament. that we ought to have some further explanation as to how this $157,000 is going to be expended. A portion of it is going to the Grand Trunk Railway Company for the privileges we get from that company, and a portion of it is going to the Drummond County Railway Company. The House ought to know how much of it goes to the Grand Trunk Railway and what privileges we get from them during the nine months; and how much goes to the Drummond County Railway, and what we get in return for it. How are we going to get an advantage from the Drummond County Railway when a portion of their line is not built at the present time. I suppose we must assume that the 42½ miles will be completed before the 1st of November. I object to this vote further, on the ground that it involves an additional expenditure of $100,000 to buy rolling stock that may be of little value to us, and of which we cannot divest ourselves at the expiration of the nine months, in the event of the experiment proving a failure.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). A short time ago the Government brought down to this House a measure providing for the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. That measure was fully discussed, and this House of Commons by a majority of 44 declared in favour of it. The Upper Chamber, acting within their rights I may say immediately, rejected the measure. As I have said, the question was fully discussed here, and I need not go into all the details again, but I feel bound to say a few words to-day, because of the reasons that have been advanced in the press, and in this Chamber, and outside of this Chamber, for the rejection of the Government policy. I happen to know the bottom of the reasons of the opposition we have in Montreal. There are rival schemes—more than one—by which the Intercolonial Railway could be extended to Montreal, and I hold in my hand now, a map of these schemes. First, here is, as has been before pointed out in this House, the Grand Trunk Railway running from Montreal to Quebec via Richmond. I suppose that nearly every member of the House has travelled over that road. It will be readily admitted, that it would be out of the question to make satisfactory arrangements to extend the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal by the Grand Trunk Railway. A bargain, of course, requires two parties to it, and it has been found impossible in the past to make any arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway Company in that direction. Now, there is another scheme. The South Shore scheme, part of which is now completed from Montreal to Sorel. It is a railway which has been built by Mr. Armstrong and which to-day is in the hands of Mr. Beauchemin, Mr. Fortier, the Leduc estate, and the Tourville estate. Those parties acquired the road between Montreal and Sorel from the creditors of Mr. Armstrong, who failed in this enterprise as in every other enterprise to which he has attached his name. From Sorel to Lévis there is a prospective scheme in the centre of which Mr. Armstrong has a charter which has been renewed during this session. At the end of this prospective road in Montreal, there is a scheme to build a bridge between Longueuil and Montreal, a scheme with which Mr. Armstrong is connected and the soul of which is, I say at once, that he has interested in that bridge scheme a certain number of parties in Montreal, amongst others, the owner of "La Presse" newspaper. They are to-day the possessors of $100,000 of snares in that scheme, and that is the reason why they are so strongly opposed to our policy. In one word, the policy of the Government is confronted by schemers and by interested parties who have knifed our policy with the expectation that later on they would put the pistols to our throats.

Mr. SPROULE.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They have done it already.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As my hon. friend the leader of the House says, they have done it already. Now let the country know what has taken place in the past. That man Armstrong came before this Government a few weeks ago, and he asked us to buy the Baie des Chaleurs Railway, or to give him a guarantee of a few million dollars. The Government investigated the case. I will take the House into our confidence. We have been blamed for operating the Baie des Chaleurs Railway. That scheme failed; Armstrong had been in it. But that vast district of Gaspé has and is still in bad need of railway communication. We made up our minds that it was necessary to see if we could not accommodate them, and we tried that experiment and at the same time we investigated it. What did we discover? We discovered that Mr. Armstrong had issued two million dollars of bonds, that he had pledged these two million dollars of bonds to the extent of $800,000 in the English market, and we found the Baie des Chaleurs Railway mortgaged for that large amount, on account of which there has been no money or scarcely any money spent. We made up our minds not to touch that man with a ten foot pole.

Mr. FOSTER. You have to go closer to it than that if you are going to touch a man.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Let my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) who has been unfair to me, who has not acted towards me as he should have acted, who has thrown out here and there unfair insinuations about me; let him hear me at any rate before he says anything more. I have a right to vindicate what we have done, and what I have done especially. Now, what did happen? That man Armstrong having failed to force us to go into his schemes, went to the Flynn Government in Quebec, and he got a guarantee of eight millions of dollars to back up the scheme I have before me. In other words, the credit of the province of Quebec has been pledged for eight millions of dollars to another wild scheme of Mr. Armstrong. Mr. Armstrong has been here during the first days of the session canvassing against us, and trying to turn public opinion against us. I am only surprised at one thing, that my hon. friend who leads the Opposition, and some of the hon. gentlemen of the other Chamber, should have listened to the poisoning calumnies of that man. Let us have a full investigation of the whole matter. My name has been connected with improper transactions in relation to this. Sir, I consent to go in disgrace into private life if anything can be proved against me. My hon. friend, who is a strong man, should, if he thinks I am guilty of anything wrong, have asked for an inquiry before this Chamber. The subject of my private accounts in the bank has been raised; my signatures on some notes have been photographed. Let an inquiry be made: I have not much fear. I am a political man; I have made some political fights; I have won some of them, I think; and I have been obliged to do what some other men have done—give notes and endorse notes. Let one of my actions be connected with that deal of the Drummond County Railway, and I say again, I will go into private life in disgrace. Sir, I say, and I will state it on my oath, that no promise has been made to me, and no money has been given to me, thank God; I have not done anything improper. I know that my name has been connected with that transaction, because "La Patrie" newspaper has been bought by the Liberal party, and because Mr. Greenshields' name has been connected with that purchase. I will state frankly what took place; and, I say again, let an inquiry under oath take place, and if my statements are not proved, I will go into private life a disgraced man. But what has been the case, Sir? The Liberal party had no organ in Montreal. Mr. Beaugrand, the owner of "La Patrie," telegraphed on the same day to Mr. Laurier and to myself that he was dying. I went down to Montreal; the Premier could not go with me.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, spare us, spare us.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I want to put myself right before this Chamber and before the country. My hon. friends have attacked me unfairly. Let my hon. friend who leads the Opposition get up in his place on the first day of next session, and ask for an inquiry, and let us settle our accounts; but until then I am not obliged to lie down under unfair and unjust accusations. Sir, I have been hounded; I have not been treated like a political man; and what is my course? I parted from my friends on the other side of the House. I parted from them manfully; I did not betray anybody or anything. What passed between the friends of the party and myself has remained a secret. They speak of my endorsing notes as if I had never endorsed notes in the past. They speak of election expenditures as if during twenty-five years of association with the Conservative party I had never spent any money. My colleagues will bear testimony for me that I have never uttered a word of what took place when I belonged to that party. I have my failings, but I am not a traitor. I was going to state that the leader of this Government had begged me over and over again to arrange to have a Liberal organ in Montreal. My hon. friend, who leads his party with great vigour and energy, will admit that a party ought to have organs of its own. I arranged that Mr. Greenshields, who was my lawyer in many other cases, should act as the purchaser of "La Patrie," as the lawyer of the party. They speak of a cheque which Mr. Greenshields gave. There is no secret about it. Mr. Greenshields had a cheque in his hands, not of his own money, but of the money of the party, and he paid that cheque. Let an inquiry take place, and all this shall be proved. Every private act of ours is scrutinized; our private affairs are no longer private. We are treated as if we were thieves and knaves. We are not thieves or knaves. This Government is composed of honest men, who want to govern honestly, and we will govern honestly, in spite of all the conspiracies that have been formed against us. What has taken place in connection with this scheme is a conspiracy of the first rank. Sir, I charge my hon. friends with being the tools of Armstrong and a lot of schemers in Montreal.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I demand that that statement be taken down.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Will my hon. friend allow me to explain?

Mr. FOSTER. I have made my demand.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is a parliamentary statement.

Mr. FOSTER. We will find out whether it is a parliamentary statement. The hon. gentleman has charged me and other members—but I will take my own personal case—with being the tools of Mr. Armstrong and his associates. I say he has no right in fact to make that statement; but I am not discussing that point just now. He has no right to say that of a member of Parliament.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend is right. Will he permit me to explain?

Mr. FOSTER. I have raised the point of order, and I want to know where we stand.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Will my hon. friend permit me to say one word?

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend wishes to retract that statement. There was no equivocation, no "if's" or "and's" about it. He shook his fist in my face, and said, "I charge the hon. gentleman."

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. FOSTER. We are perfectly cool on this side, however excited my hon. friends may be. He charged me personally with being the tool of Mr. Armstrong and his associates. I require your ruling, Mr. Chairman.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not mean to say that my hon. friends are the willing tools of Armstrong; I do not mean to say that at all. I know that my hon. friend is not; but I say that he is his tool all the same, in an indirect way.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I say that is not parliamentary language. I am here as an independent member of this House; I state on my word or honour as a man and a member that I have had no communication with Mr. Armstrong or with any of his party. I state, on the other hand, that no gentleman has a right to say of me as an independent member of Parliament that I am the tool of any man in my action in this Parliament.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I accept the statement of my hon. friend altogether. What I meant to say, if my hon. friend would permit me, is that that man Armstrong has deceived and poisoned public opinion to such an extent that those who have opposed the scheme have been unwillingly his tools—nothing more than that.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand, then, Mr. Chairman, that you either give your ruling on this, or that the hon. gentleman retracts that statement, made personally of myself.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I rise to a point of order. During the sixteen or seventeen years I have never heard such a trifling objection taken before. An hon. gentleman defending his conduct, points to his opponents as the unwilling tools of a vile conspiracy.

Mr. FOSTER. I rise to say—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There is a point of order before the Chair, which I understand the Minister of Marine and

Mr. FOSTER.

Fisheries in discussing, and hon. gentlemen ought not to interrupt him.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am addressing myself to the point of order, and in doing so I wish to speak with every deference to the hon. gentleman, but he is assuming an arrogant tone in this House which I for one will not submit to. He has taken charge of the House and endeavours to put down every hon. member who rises to address it.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the point of order?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am coming to the point of order. The expression which the hon. gentleman has used is apt, proper and parliamentary. He says the conduct of my hon. opponents opposite is that of the unwilling tools of a conspiracy. He did not accuse them of consciously being these tools, but he declared that they were the unconscious tools, but none the less the tools. Why, what better language could be used? My hon. friend has acquitted them of all moral guilt, but he says you are being made unwillingly or unconsciously the tools of a vile conspirator. My hon. friend has not scrupled to describe as a vile conspirator this individual who is at the head of the opposition to the Government scheme. Every one knows that this man has haunted the purlieus of Parliament in his attempt—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES—to prejudice the Senate against the Government scheme.

Mr. FOSTER. Order.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Surely I can make that statement.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Every one knows that this man Armstrong has haunted the corridors of Parliament. However, I do not propose to interfere in or anticipate what my hon. friend is going to say, but I say that, under the circumstances, for any hon. gentleman to warn his opponents that they are unconsciously the tools of that man is not parliamentary and proper, I for one am disposed to accept the responsibility of it.

Mr. FOSTER. I have raised no point of order against the hon. gentleman who has sat down, and who has only obscured, by the angry statement which he has made, what the hon. Minister of Public Works really did say. I asked that the statement made by my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works be taken down. That statement was not, as my hon. friend himself will bear me out in saying, what the hon.

Minister of Marine has just told us it was. I understand the Minister of Public Works to state that he did not intend to convey the idea which his words expressed.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I certainly did not.

Mr. FOSTER. But intended to say something else. Now, as between the Minister of Public Works and myself, we understand each other. If in the statement which he did make that I was really a tool, he did mean that without any unequivocation.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not intend to mean that.

Mr. FOSTER. That satisfies me, but this gratuitous insertion of himself by my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries simply obscures the issue.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand the hon. member is satisfied.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has taken it back manfully, and I am satisfied.

Mr. SPROULE. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The point of order has been disposed of.

Mr. SPROULE. I rise to another point of order. The parliamentary rule says :

No member shall speak disrespectfully of Her Majesty, nor of any one of the Royal family, nor the Governor General, nor shall he use offensive words against either the House or any member thereof.

I would ask whether it may not be regarded as offensive to say that any members of this House are tools, whether willing or unwilling.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. Minister of Public Works said that we were tools generally on this side of the House. He qualified that afterwards by saying that he believed we were unconscious tools, and he has assumed that this side of the House is entirely influenced by Mr. Armstrong. He does not better his position in the least by saying that we are unconscious tools, because he presumes we are influenced by Mr. Armstrong. I deny that, and it is equally offensive to say we are unconscious tools and have been so influenced.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am of opinion that the expression used at first by the hon. Minister of Public Works, that some members of this House were tools, was certainly offensive, but I understand that afterwards the hon. gentleman withdrew that expression. He declared that he did not want to make any reflection upon the character of members of this House, and I think that the expression "unwilling tool" is not absolutely out of order, and besides the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) has accepted the withdrawal.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When that incident took place, I was just giving to the House the inner side of the scheme through which our policy has been opposed and obstructed. At the head of this scheme is Armstrong. Through the guarantee that he obtained from the dying Flynn Government, he expects to be able, if he can float any loan, to buy the South Shore Railway, to build a bridge at Longueuil, and go on with a prospective road from Sorel to Lévis. We were asked this session for a subsidy to that line, but we did not see fit to grant it, because this Government—and any other Government would do the same thing, I hope—has made up its mind not to touch any scheme with which such men as Armstrong are connected. Hon. gentlemen opposite have never put themselves in direct opposition to the idea of extending the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. In the other House, I understand, the same stand has been taken. But our friends, the Senators, say—and it has been said in this House also—that some better and less expensive scheme might be propounded. Well, Sir, the map of the route is open to any member of this House, and it shows the position to be very clear. The Grand Trunk Railway, as I have said, comes as far as St. Hyacinthe, and anybody who will look at the map will see that the most direct route to St. Hyacinthe is by the Drummond County road. Our friends opposite speak a great deal of Mr. Greenshields—he is connected with the scheme, and so the scheme must be rejected. Let my hon. friends remember that Mr. Greenshields was not the promoter of this scheme originally; the scheme had been promoted and partially accomplished long before Mr. Greenshields went into it. The men who have promoted this scheme are business men, some of whom are living in the eastern townships and know the ground thoroughly well. They were able to get the financial support of the Eastern Townships Bank for this road, which is a paying road. These men made up their minds that some day the Grand Trunk Railway or the Government would feel justified in buying their road but, at any rate, they said to themselves, no doubt: If we do not sell our road, we can work it and make money out of it. But what are the other schemes, what are the other lines by which this Government, or any Government, might extend the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal? The South Shore scheme is before you. But it is a prospective scheme. The South Shore people, who have invested their money in this property, are friends of ours, nearly every one of them. But this Government has not to deal with friends or opponents, this Government has only to deal with business propositions. In what position are we to-day? Suppose we had made up our minds to make an arrangement to go by the South Shore and its extension to Quebec. Let any one of our friends opposite rise in his place and tell us how much it would cost. It would have implied the immediate carrying out of the scheme of building the Longueuil bridge, or would have submitted us to the necessity of making arrangements with the Grand Trunk to use their bridge alone, an arrangement to which they would never have consented. The South Shore scheme is out of the question. The Drummond County and Grand Trunk Railway scheme is the best, the cheapest, and the only practicable one. But hon. gentlemen opposite have another scheme. They say: Why do you not build a bridge at Quebec and come up to Montreal by the Canadian Pacific Railway? Those of us who know the ground, know that that is a preposterous scheme, to say the least. In the first place, a bridge at Quebec could not be built with prayers alone; it would cost, and will cost eventually, a great deal of money. I do not want to discourage my friends from Quebec; the old city of Quebec is dear to me for more than one reason. But to pretend that to carry out the Government's policy of extending the Intercolonial from Lévis to Montreal by means of the Canadian Pacific Railway is a ridiculous proposition. Suppose the bridge at Quebec to be built—can you imagine the Canadian Pacific Railway would give us the use of their line for prayers alone? We should be obliged to make an arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway; and, speaking of that, and remembering that our friends of the other side say that we are spending a large amount of money for our scheme, how much has the North Shore Railway cost the province of Quebec? The De Boucherville Government spent $7,000,000 to build it, and it was sold to the Canadian Pacific Railway for the large sum of $4,000,000. And, at the time, I opposed the sale because I thought the price given was not high enough. But after we had built the bridge at Quebec and had arranged with the Canadian Pacific Railway for the use of their line, we would then be obliged to arrange with the Canadian Pacific Railway for the use of their terminal facilities. Now, what have these terminal facilities cost the Canadian Pacific Railway? That company is spending $2,000,000 in addition to what they have already spent in the past.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. And should we then get equally good facilities with those we get by the Grand Trunk Railway?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, that is out of the question. Any one who lives in Montreal knows that what I say exactly represents the position. But our policy has been vilified, and why? Because—I say it again—because, in the press of Montreal, Armstrong has been in a position to give out shares in his schemes. I say on my responsibility as a member of Parliament, and on my responsibility as a Minister, that Armstrong has distributed shares among the press of Montreal. I know some of the men who have got shares in their pockets. I know the bottom of the whole conspiracy, a conspiracy against myself.

Mr. TARTE.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Every one has his enemies, sometimes, even in his own camp. I know what has taken place, and I challenge an investigation. I have acted as a man who means fight when he wants to fight, there is no doubt about that; but I have done nothing that needs to be covered up. I say that the Drummond County and Grand Trunk scheme is the only practicable scheme to extend the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal, and that scheme we have adopted after careful consideration. Of course, there are political friends of ours interested in the scheme. Mr. J. N. Greenshields is one of our most active and most efficient political friends in Montreal. He has helped us to the best of his ability ever since I came to Montreal; he has acted like a friend; he has acted like a man, and I will not go back on him to-day. But Mr. Greenshields is not the only party interested in this scheme; and hon. gentlemen opposite, after they have uncovered this mare's nest, will find that Mr. Greenshields is not the only man to be considered. And they will find that, in the past, subsidies to the Drummond County road have gone in ways that they would not like to have made publicly known. We did not get a dollar from the deal, we do not expect a dollar from the deal. Let the investigation take place over years past, and we shall know more than is known to-day. But, Sir, our policy has not been looked upon favourably by the Upper Chamber. We bow to the decision of the Upper Chamber, we must do so, and we come before this Parliament with a new proposal—I say, deliberately, with a new proposal. I am not the Minister of Railways and Canals, but I speak for myself.

Mr. FOSTER. And for the Government.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. And for the Government, for I am sure that we all understand each other on this point. This is what I mean to say: The proposal which was rejected by the Upper Chamber was one by which we arranged for ninety-nine years to get the use of the Drummond County Railway and of the Grand Trunk Railway. Now, what is our proposal to-day? To-day we ask Parliament to give us a sum to pay nine months rental, nothing more, and in that light I say it is a new proposal. We do not ask Parliament to bind the credit of Canada for ninety-nine years, we simply want to be authorized to spend a certain amount of money during the term of nine months. I say it again, this is a new proposal, and we feel that we have a right to expect that Parliament will agree with us. Our main proposal has been rejected by the Upper Chamber after it had been accepted by this Chamber. We do not desire any permanent conflict between the two Houses, I am sure, and the best means to settle that difficulty is the one which we are now proposing. We propose to test the project. Suppose we lost money—we will not lose money—but suppose we do lose a certain amount of money, Canada will certainly not be ruined. It is a pretty small vote we ask for compared with our Budget. We ask Parliament to authorize us to spend a certain amount of money in making the test. If the test does not prove that we have made a good bargain, we will let it drop. We are not the men to come to Parliament and ask for this vote unless we feel sure that the scheme is a good one. We are sure that those who are opposing us to-day, will collapse, their conspiracy cannot last after public opinion has become enlightened. I am sure there are members of the Senate who are beginning already to see this question in a different light. When our policy has been tested I have no doubt whatever that both Chambers will be able to agree on a plan. I have not much more to say on this question. I will only add that though I have my failings, though I have made mistakes, I am sure that I have never committed any dishonest act. I am sure that on this occasion no promise was made to me, no money was given to me, no consideration was offered to me or to any member of this Government. I say that during the next session of Parliament, if our hon. friends opposite want an inquiry, they will be welcome to one.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to say a few words in reference to the speech made by the hon. Minister of Public Works. He started out with a good deal of warmth to defend himself against supposed accusations, though there were none made that I am aware of.

Mr. LISTER. See what the newspapers say.

Mr. SPROULE. I take it that he was answering what took place in this House. Of course I have no doubt that he had those things in his mind, and probably was endeavouring to set public opinion at rest. The first contention that the hon. gentleman makes is that this side of the House is influenced by some rival scheme of Mr. Armstrong. I may tell him as one who opposed the Government's proposed contract, that I know nothing about Mr. Armstrong's schemes, or about himself, and they do not influence me in any degree. I have not considered any rival scheme. But I opposed this because I believe the deal was a bad one for the country; that we were paying too much for what we were getting in return, that Parliament was not justified in committing itself to the expenditure and to the long lease that was proposed by the Government. I opposed it because I believed the deal with the Grand Trunk Railway was a bad one; that we were not getting full value for what we were giving, and that the country ought not to be bound for ninety-nine years to any lease of this character. I believed we were paying too much for the Drummond County Railway in view of what has been expended by the country on that railway, and the small amount of money that was expended by the owners of that charter. I opposed it because I believed that we could get a better service in bringing the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal by another line.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Where would you suggest?

Mr. SPROULE. I suggested the building of the bridge across the St. Lawrence at Quebec, and using the Canadian Pacific Railway from Quebec to Montreal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How much do you suppose we would have to pay the Canadian Pacific Railway for the use of it?

Mr. SPROULE. I reasoned in this way: We have already a bargain to give the Canadian Pacific Railway the use of the Intercolonial Railway for a good many miles, more mileage than is involved in this proposal. Now, we have agreed to give it to them on reasonable terms, and I assume the Government would have a right, in view of the assistance which we have given the Canadian Pacific Railway, to ask them for some concession for the use of their road between Quebec and Montreal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman seriously imagine that we could get from the Canadian Pacific Railway a right to use 173 miles of their road for less than it would be worth, and does the hon. gentleman imagine then that we would be allowed the traffic which we could pick up on that road, under any arrangement that could be arrived at with the Canadian Pacific Railway? Or does he imagine that if we built the bridge across the river at Quebec we could do it for less than four or five millions? The hon. gentleman has not thought that question out, I am sure.

Mr. SPROULE. I may say that I have thought it out, and from the speeches made by hon. gentlemen opposite I assume that this bridge has got to be built.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not by us.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell) said distinctly that the Government are committed to this expenditure to this extent, that as soon as a company was formed that was able to build that bridge, the Government was prepared to subsidize it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But that is a very distinct proposition from the one that the hon. gentleman has put forward. He said a moment ago that we could build that bridge and then acquire rights on the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now he makes a very different proposition, that we should build the bridge across the river ourselves as distinct from our giving a subsidy amounting to 15 per cent of the cost.

Mr. SPROULE. No, I do not take that ground. I took the ground that they intended to build the bridge, and I was going on to elaborate the means by which they intended to build it, and I assumed that that was the mode they had in their minds when the hon. member for Quebec West said the Government would give a million dollars towards building that bridge. Then I assumed that they had a scheme on hand as to the building of the bridge and that it would be only a matter of a short time. It must be built at some time or other. But there would be a large outlay in carrying out this proposed deal. That was what I had in view in regard to the building of that bridge. I notice that during the present session the Minister of Railways and Canals has asked to have tacked on to every charter, passed through the Railway Committee of the House a condition that other railway companies shall have the right to use the road on fair and equitable terms. I assume that that was the policy determined upon by the Government and that it applies to any railways that are built in the future and which we must subsidize on the same principle as we have subsidized roads in the past, and I say that it would be no great injustice to the Canadian Pacific Railway, if we asked the same consideration from them in regard to a road which we have already subsidized and which is running by virtue of that subsidy.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) does not pretend to suggest that the Railway Committee or a railway commission could exercise any such jurisdiction as compelling any railway to submit the use of their railway for less than the board awarded.

Mr. SPROULE. No, but I imagine that the use of that railway could be got on more favourable terms. I assume that there would be some compensation of course. I do not imagine that the Government would take that right without the consent of the Canadian Pacific Railway and without giving them fair terms.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How much would you imagine that it would be proper to pay for 173 miles of the Canadian Pacific line? Do you think that you would be permitted to go upon its railway with the right to take up traffic along the line for anything like $1,000 a mile?

Mr. SPROULE. I think the right to pick up traffic along the line is another question.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is a question with us.

Mr. SPROULE. Do not the railway companies have the right to pick up traffic?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, they have not.

Mr. POUPORE. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) allow me to ask him a question. Does he not think that the Canadian Pacific Railway would be just as difficult to deal with as the Grand Trunk? My impression is that it would, and I am asking the hon. gentleman if the Government would not be obliged to pay fully as much money to the Canadian Pacific Railway as to the Grand Trunk?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. More.

Mr. POUPORE. It strikes me that you would find it more difficult to make an arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway than with the Grand Trunk.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It would cost us more.

Mr. SPROULE. I was going on to say that the right which we have of taking up traffic along the line of the Drummond County Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway is only a right that applies to a limited section of the country.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). It applies to all the local traffic there is.

Mr. SPROULE. These were my reasons for opposing the Bill and it was not because I thought there was any other rival scheme that was being engineered by Mr. Armstrong or any one else. The hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) said: "We are not thieves; we are honest men." We are not disputing that statement. I suppose this statement of one of the members of the Cabinet refers to the whole Government. He has given them a certificate of character, and I have no objection to it. He said: "We challenge inquiry." If there is nothing behind, that they are afraid to have come out, it would be perfectly natural that they should challenge inquiry. I think the hon. gentleman is quite within his rights in saying so because there are various rumours afloat through the country. I would like to ask him if there were not some grounds for the suspicion which is abroad. While I pay very little attention to newspaper rumours, I shall call his attention to a statement which is made the basis of an article that I saw some time ago. It was brought here for the purpose of drawing the attention of hon. members to it. I refused to bring the matter up at that time, because I said that it was a newspaper article and if it was libellous the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) has the right of redress by going to the courts. If it is only idle rumour there may be nothing in it, and yet there may be. But I read it only to show that there were grounds for the suspicions which I have referred to, although I do not pay any attention to newspaper rumour. The statement is in the "Pembroke Standard" of 5th May. It is going on to criticise the policy of the Liberal party, and it says :

As to the Drummond Counties Railway deal, the story is common property in Ottawa, that Mr. J. N. Greenshields, who practically owns and controls the road, has given "assistance" to the amount of $50,000 to prominent Liberals to aid in the promotion of "Purity of election," in the province of Quebec, in both federal and provincial elections. Of this sum, $30,000 is said to have been invested in the purchase of Mr. Beaugrand's paper, "La Patrie," for the sons of Hon. J. I. Tarte, who are not popularly supposed to be millionaires, but who were nevertheless able, thanks to the assistance of friends, to pay an enormously fancy price for a property which, largely through the illness of Mr. Beaugrand, had become so depreciated in value as to be considered worth very little. The payment was made the day after "La Patrie" was purchased, and it is said to have consisted of Mr. Greenshield's cheque on La Banque d'Hochelaga, Montreal, for $10,000, and his note in favour of Mr. Tarte's sons for $20,000, which was subsequently discounted in the same bank. A few days before the Champlain election, Mr. Greenshield's note for $20,000, endorsed by a very prominent Liberal politician, was, it is said, discounted in the same bank, and it is a remarkable coincidence that Hochelaga Bank bills were never so plentiful in Champlain county as during the last election, a fact which was shown by the remarkable quantity of bills of that bank which merchants of Three Rivers received from their customers in Champlain county within a few days after the election, one merchant alone being known to have received over $5,000. Although it has not been referred to, either in Parliament or by the press, the story has been current in Ottawa, and in Montreal and Three Rivers for some time, that the money which was spent by the Liberals in Champlain county, was obtained in connection with the Drummond County Railway deal; and it is understood that the matter will be brought up in the House at an early date.

Mr. SPROULE. Was there any reasonable ground for that suspicion?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Of course, I have not time to read all the newspaper stories. My hon. friend is a responsible member of Parliament. He is an old and respected member of Parliament. It was his duty if he thought that there was anything in that story to ask for an inquiry and it is still his duty to do it. I say that there is not one word of truth in all these statements.

Mr. SPROULE. I merely read this in order to give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) an opportunity of clearing himself.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) wants an inquiry now, let him put his seat in the balance of Parliament.

Mr. CASGRAIN. If an inquiry is granted, will my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) undertake to say that he will answer the questions put to him and not entrench himself behind the privilege of Parliament?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Any proper questions that will be put to me will be answered by me.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Yes, any proper questions.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Any question put to me by my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) if it is indecent, I will not answer it.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What do you mean by indecent? I would not put an indecent question to the Minister for fear I might shock his virtue.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I meant any improper question.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Well, I will put to him this question. If an inquiry is granted, will my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) shield himself behind any privilege as a member of Parliament, and refuse to answer questions as he did in other investigations?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will not shield myself behind any privilege of Parliament, provided a member of this House brings a charge against me. I know my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain).

Mr. CASGRAIN. Yes, we know each other well.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, I know you very well. You are just as pure as any other member, and no more. We are old friends. I elected him for Parliament, and I know how he got there. Let my hon. friend from Montmorency bring a charge against me, and we will not be the worse friends for it. If I am guilty of any wrong, and my hon. friend can prove it, I will suffer the consequences.

Mr. CASGRAIN. If we did bring a charge and asked for an inquiry, I am afraid that my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) would do what he did in Montreal when he was charged with receiving part of $10,000 from Whelan. He would shield himself behind some privileges, so as not to answer certain questions.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There was an inquiry in Montreal when I was in the Conservative party, and when the two commissioners were appointed by Mr. Mercier. I answered to any questions connected with the case before these commissioners. When the time came to give answers which would have exposed some of my political friends of the time, some of the friends of my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain)—

Mr. CASGRAIN. I don't admit that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Let me answer my hon. friend. They had committed no crime; we had made elections together, and spent money together.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Who?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I don't speak of you.

Mr. CASGRAIN. You had better not.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Well, if you are going on that ground, my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) knows enough of the past of the Conservative party to be sure that we never made elections with prayers. His own election has cost more than any other election. His own election has cost about $12,000, and yet he speaks of purity.

Mr. SPROULE. After this explanation, I hope I will be allowed to finish my speech. I have always rather admired the moral courage and the pluck of the Minister (Mr. Tarte). I have not done this for the purpose of making a charge by insinuation or otherwise, but for the purpose of enabling him, if he thought well, to deny it; and I merely did it in answer to the statement he made, that there were suspicions and insinuations. My answer to that was that there appeared to be some grounds for suspicion, and therefore it is right for a member of Parliament, knowing what has taken place, to try and probe the thing as far as possible to the bottom. I say that, taking that article, what more reasonable than to come to this conclusion: The Minister of Public Works whose sons purchased that paper has himself power to purchase a railway; that railway is owned largely by one Greenshields; the party who was interested in the sale of the railway, out of gratitude for that probably good bargain, what is more natural to suppose than that he is disposed to be as generous as possible out of gratitude for benefits received, and that, by way of accommodation, or otherwise, he has invested so much money for the benefit of the sons of the man who is instrumental in assisting to accomplish the deal. What more reasonable than to believe that there might be something in it. It gives fair ground for suspicion, and when he has discounted his notes to the extent of $50,000—to the extent of $20,000 in one instance—these, I assume to be facts, as they are allegations of fact.

Mr. TARTE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Will my hon. friend permit me to ask him a question, and I cannot ask it without his consent. Is it fair for him, with regard to a matter of which he knows nothing, to take a newspaper report and bring it into this House and spread it on the pages of "Hansard," when he himself says he knows nothing about it, and in the face of the fact that the Minister concerned says that there is no truth in it? If we adopt such a policy as that, every day we might make each other's lives very unhappy without any just cause. I am not complaining, but I ask the hon. member (Mr. Sproule) to consider for a moment if this is a fair thing to do?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I was about to rise and make the same observation as has been made by the Minister of Finance. A report from a newspaper has been read by the hon. member (Mr. Sproule) and it has been denied entirely by the hon. the Minister of Public Works. It is only fair and just, and according to the rules of debate, that the hon. gentleman's statement should be accepted and nothing more said on this subject.

Mr. SPROULE. I have not refused to accept the Minister's statement at all, and you must have entirely misunderstood me.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Perhaps I have misunderstood the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) but, at the same time, it is according to the rules of debate, which are well known to the hon. gentleman, that when a Minister or a member makes a statement in answer to a charge made by another member, that statement must be accepted, and there can be no further reference to the matter.

Mr. SPROULE. Certainly, but, at the same time, I have the right to apply myself to the argument of the Minister of Public Works. I brought this matter up for the purpose of giving him an opportunity of denying it, because I did not think it was right that he should lie under it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I deny it again. Let the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) and the House understand me well. I stated, and I state again, on my responsibility as a Minister, that Mr. Greenshields, out of this $20,000 that we paid cash, did not pay $1 out of his own pocket. Is that a fair statement? Can I say anything clearer than that?

Mr. SPROULE. I am not saying it is not a clear statement, and I am not refusing to accept it, but I thought it was my duty to the hon. gentleman himself, who may not have seen it, to bring the statement to his notice. Now, as to the right of any member to read a newspaper statement in this House, I think I understand the rights of a member, and I intend to avail myself of them. Every week during every session, newspaper articles have been read in this House, and the members concerned are given an opportunity of explaining or denying them. As regard this vote, I do not oppose it because of any suspicion that the Minister of Public Works is implicated in an improper deal. I do not oppose it upon the grounds that some parties are getting a large profit out of it. But I do oppose it on the ground that we are paying too much for what we are getting, and from the information we have in our possession with regard to what that railway cost. I oppose the deal because of the present condition of the road, because we are not getting sufficient for the money we are paying, and because of the long time we are bound by that lease. I oppose it on those grounds, and on those grounds alone. And, in opposing it on these grounds. I am doing so from motives as proper as could actuate any member of Parliament, and I am perfectly within my rights in opening it.

At One o'clock the Committee took recess for one hour.

At Two o'clock the Committee resumed.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with great attention to the discussion of this most important subject and I am satisfied that the merits of the question have been pretty well threshed out by both sides of the House. Despite what I have heard, my opinion as already expressed remains unchanged. The proposition put broadly before the people of Canada by the Government represents their sole object in attempting this undertaking, as being to show a balance on the right side, or at least to make the two sides of the ledger balance, in carrying on the Intercolonial Railway, so that if there is not a balance in favour of the Intercolonial in future, there will be at least no adverse balance. In asking Parliament to accept that proposition, it seems to me that it is the first duty of the Government to show, by reasonable and almost conclusive evidence, that there is something in sight that would warrant a conclusion of that kind, more than what may be called vague speculation. In the first place, it is not intended that there will be any increased traffic. The only hope of bettering the financial condition of the Intercolonial Railway by the extension to Montreal is based upon an expectation of securing a greater division of the receipts which were shared in by the other roads. Now, I am sure that the people of Canada will not be blind to one thing that seems so plain that no one can escape it—that the Grand Trunk Railway Company, in entering into this arrangement with the Government of Canada, feel sure of one of two things, either that the Intercolonial Railway is not likely to cut into their receipts to an alarming extent, or that the sum paid by the Government for their piece of line is worth infinitely more to them than the portion of the receipts which will be diverted to the Intercolonial Railway from that part of their line. If either of these propositions be true, and I care not which you take, it seems clear that the bargain is a bad one for the Government. Now, the Minister of Public Works declared that there was no difference of opinion in the House as to the advisability of an extension of the line in Montreal. I do not so understand it. The difference between the views held, I think, generally on both sides of the House is this. There is no difference of opinion as to the advisability of having better facilities for the Intercolonial Railway; but that does not involve the proposition that a line should be built to Montreal by the Government of Canada or that you should pay a sum for running over any of the lines already built.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How would the hon. gentleman suggest that we should reach there?

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman asks a very reasonable question. I am sure he himself would not argue that it is a good thing for Canada to own a single mile of railway more than it can possibly help, to be operated as a Government railway; otherwise we should extend the line to the city of Winnipeg. When the duty is cast upon the Government to operate a railway, then it becomes an admitted evil that must be tolerated rather than an advantage. Coming to the question how the traffic is to be reached at the city of Montreal, there are two alternatives. One is for the Government of Canada to avail itself of the competition existing either at the city of Quebec or at the city of Montreal. There can be no profit in hauling over that 170 odd miles, if the same competing lines are met with at the city of Quebec. Therefore, there is no object in going to Montreal. I do not propose, as has been suggested by some, that the Canadian Pacific Railway should be sought, rather than the Grand Trunk. It seems to me that the wise policy of the Government would be this: We cannot close our eyes to the fact that in the extension of commerce, and with capital seeking investment, it is only a question of a short time until there is a bridge at Quebec. Whether that will be contributed to largely by the Government of Canada, and how largely, is a question for future consideration. But there is a scheme in the air, which will probably mature, it may be in the near future, for a bridge at Quebec. Let us suppose that the Government of Canada contribute a reasonable sum towards that bridge.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What would you consider a reasonable sum?

Mr. CLANCY. I think my hon. friend has asked a rather unreasonable question.

I would say that any sum, if it were at all less than the sum proposed here, would be reasonable, even though it might be very large.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. member will allow me, I do not know that I quite follow him when he says that if it were at all less than the sum proposed here. Does he mean that we should contribute a sum for the bridge which would be represented by the whole rental we propose to pay under these agreements, for the lines between Chaudière and Montreal, including the terminals?

Mr. CLANCY. What I want to make clear is this, that the sum to be contributed by the Government of Canada would be less than the whole charge on the treasury of Canada involved in the scheme proposed to Parliament a few days ago.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then, the hon. gentleman would cross the river at Quebec by assuming obligations equal to those which we propose to assume under our agreement to carry us to Montreal?

Mr. CLANCY. No, it involves more. It involves all the good that can arise from meeting competing lines.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You would have no competing lines at all then. You would have the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. CLANCY. You would have the Canadian Pacific Railway as well as the Grand Trunk at Quebec. The Intercolonial could ship by either of the two competing lines already in operation at the city of Quebec, and there is a third line in sight. There would be three competing lines between Quebec and Montreal; and I would ask the hon. gentleman whether, having these three competing lines from Quebec, two of which have been subsidized heavily, it would be wise to secure running powers over any one of them more than another. No one would pretend to say that it would be any advantage.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman think, so far as the Canadian Pacific Railway is concerned, that it would afford any facilities for the Intercolonial Railway to carry any freight which might be originated on its western line, when it already has the short line through to St. John? It does not follow that the Grand Trunk Railway Company afford any such facility under the circumstances more than it has in the past, seeing that this is its own line.

Mr. CLANCY. But the hon. gentleman has competition under his own scheme. The Canadian Pacific Railway goes to St. John, and he cannot hope to compete there. The very thing which the hon. gentleman points out as a weakness in the proposition I am laying down, is equally fatal to his own. It is certainly unwise for the Government to build or operate a line from the city of Quebec to Montreal with the object of making it a competing line. In the first place, it will have to compete with railway companies already subsidized from the Treasury of Canada, and in the second place, I would ask why not go to Toronto as a distributing point instead of Montreal. Would the hon. gentleman not have infinitely better prospects if the Intercolonial Railway ran all the way to Toronto than if it terminated at Montreal?

Mr. CLANCY.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman think it should go to Toronto.

Mr. CLANCY. No, I do not, and for precisely the same reason why I think it should not go to Montreal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understand the hon. gentleman to say he would not favour the extension to Montreal or to Toronto, but he would favour the extension from Lévis to Quebec.

Mr. CLANCY. That is utterly unimportant at this moment, for the simple reason that if there is a bridge, traffic will find its way through the channels of the least resistance by high freights either by the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway from that point. You would have, under the proposition I have stated, all the competing lines from Quebec to Montreal and west that you would have from Montreal west, and therefore it is wholly illusory to say that you are limited to an arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway. There is no such proposition made from this side of the House as that you should take one line or the other, but the broad proposition is that another line will soon be added to the two already in operation, all of which may be made use of. More than that, the great bulk of heavier freight is carried over the St. Lawrence River during navigation. Laying aside all sentiment, there is no justification for operating a line from Quebec to Montreal, but there is every justification for seeking every means to better the financial condition of the Intercolonial Railway by getting better facilities, for freight and passengers from some competing point, and that can be had as well at Quebec as Montreal. You have to make a choice of evils, and I am afraid the hon. gentleman is taking the worst. The Intercolonial Railway has not been able to make the two sides of the ledger balance. There has been an adverse balance from year to year, and the hon. gentleman's object is to overcome that if possible. That being his object, he should have something clearly in sight before adopting what is an experimental scheme fraught with difficulty. No one will pretend to say that an arrangement extending over nine months, taking three-fourths of the sum proposed to be handed over to both of the railway companies—to the one for its ultimate purchase and to the other for running powers—does not involve very serious difficulties. Either the scheme has to be accepted by the country as a whole or rejected as a whole. Parliament will meet again before nine months, and the hon. gentleman could then come before the House and with some show plead that his scheme had not been given a fair chance, that nine months was not a reasonable time in which to try the experiment, and he would ask for another year. At the end of another year, the hon. gentleman will no doubt say that he requires another year's test. And let me suppose that at the end of the time, the hon. gentleman finds he made a mistake. What will that have cost us? There is first this $100,000 for rolling stock, which we would not require but for this experiment. Then, at the end of the nine months, we will have paid $157,000, and at the end of another year $210,000, so that the experiment would cost us altogether about half a million dollars.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Would you be willing to credit any, even a trifling amount, on the other side of the term?

Mr. CLANCY. If it be a failure, there will be nothing to the credit of the other side. I am simply pointing out what is in sight and likely to occur. I am satisfied that the country does not look with favour on this scheme. The hon. gentleman may have better reasons, but I tell him that the people of the country are not satisfied that these reasons are sufficient. The scheme is regarded with extreme doubt by the country. I do not propose at this late stage of the session to pursue the subject further. But I repeat that the hon. gentleman has put before Parliament a scheme respecting the Intercolonial Railway without giving us the slightest ground for hope that the people will be benefited either by reduction of rates to the shipper, or by equalizing the balance between the two sides of the account of this Dominion railway. He has shown no reason why the Government should adopt this proposition, instead of making Quebec the terminus. There is no advantage in going through to Montreal which cannot be gained just as well at Quebec. In proposing this scheme, the hon. gentleman is like the gambler who, having lost a part of his money at the table, stakes the rest in the hope of recovering what he has lost.

Mr. POWELL. Has the hon. Minister (Mr. Blair) any statement of the through tickets sold by the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal and points west via the Grand Trunk from Lévis or via the Canadian Pacific Railway from St. Johns.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not the information that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Powell) desires.

Mr. POWELL. Has the hon. Minister any statement of the through freight that is billed from points on the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal or points west, either via Lévis by the Grand Trunk or via St. Johns by the Canadian Pacific Railway?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I gave a statement that was furnished me by the chief engineer, but I have not it at hand now.

Mr. POWELL. That is your estimate; I want the actual figures.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I am not referring to the estimate that was made of the probabilities of the business. I refer now to the statement I made the other night as to the relative proportions of through and local business done by the Intercolonial Railway. I stated that four tons of freight carried by the Intercolonial Railway was purely local freight to every one ton of through freight.

Mr. POWELL. These figures, I presume, are reliable. There is no question about that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I gave them to the House as I got them.

Mr. POWELL. I will assume that they are absolutely correct. According to those figures one-fifth of the freight traffic of the Intercolonial Railway is through, and four-fifths is local traffic. Does the hon. gentleman remember what is the proportion in the passenger traffic?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not have any statement as to that traffic, but the proportion of through business is very much less in the passenger than in the freight department.

Mr. POWELL. Generally, we may say, the through traffic is very much less than the local or less, that will be sufficient. In view of these statements of the Minister of Railways I purpose directing a few criticisms as to the policy of projecting the line to Montreal—that is, on the lines of the present agreement. I purpose giving to the committee an analysis of the returns of the railway, both passenger and freight traffic. The hon. Minister estimated the other night, so far as the passenger traffic was concerned, that there would be a probable increase of 630,000 passengers.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think, if the hon. member (Mr. Powell) will allow me, there must have been some misapprehension as to the number being 630,000. I gave the hon. member (Mr. Foster) who leads the Opposition, the memorandum I received from the chief engineer, and the hon. gentleman did not return it. Perhaps he has it at hand.

Mr. FOSTER. No, I have not. It was passed on to gentlemen who were taking part in the discussion and was not returned to me. But I may say that I made the subtraction carefully, and it was 630,000. That is a matter that can be easily verified by asking the superintendent to send a duplicate of that estimate.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I know that very shortly after the statement was made that the estimate of increase was 630,000, the chief engineer told me that there was some misapprehension somewhere, as this was not in accordance with the figures he had made up, or, at any rate, in accordance with the statement he had intended to make. He said that he and Mr. Pottinger had furnished to a member of the Government in the Senate a copy of the statement, and, if my memory serves me well, the difference was only 300,000.

Mr. POWELL. My hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) made the subtraction, then the paper was passed to me and I made the subtraction, then it went to the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart), and he made the subtraction, and we all agreed in our figures. There may be some clerical error in the statement itself.

Mr. FOSTER. And it will be remembered that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) defended it afterwards in the debate.

Mr. POWELL. Moreover, on looking over the unrevised report of "Hansard," I find that the hon. Minister commits himself to that statement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I read the statement, but the chief engineer said that there was some misapprehension as to the number.

Mr. FOSTER. Does it not appear in the unrevised?

Mr. POWELL. No, the statement does not, I think, appear in the unrevised "Hansard," but simply the figure $517,000, the increase of tonnage of freight. I do not know that that figure appears in the hon. Minister's speech, but it appears in the speech of the ex-Minister of Finance who, as I have said, is correct in his figures. All this goes to show one thing, and that is that there has been no business method pursued in looking into this matter, and estimating what the amount of railway traffic is likely to be on the Intercolonial Railway as a result of this purchase. It is on a par with the Minister of Railways' action in having reserved the inquiry to be made by his engineers into the state of the Drummond County Railway to a time posterior to the making of the bargain. So, he has made his calculations as to the traffic upon the railway after the bargain and where the reports have failed him he has drawn upon his imagination—I use the words in no offensive sense—in forecasting the result of traffic. I took the trouble to make an analysis of the figures given in the published report of the Department of Railways and Canals which bear upon this question of increased traffic. First, as regards the freight traffic. The Grand Trunk Ry., with a total mileage of 3,146.98 miles has a total freight traffic of 7,587,148 tons. The Canadian Pacific Railway, with a mileage of 6,211.5 has a freight traffic of 4,776,632 tons. The Intercolonial Railway with a mileage of 1,150.5 has a total traffic in tons of 1,379,618; the Grand Trunk Railway has 2,410 tons of freight per mile; the Canadian Pacific has 737 tons of freight per mile, and the Intercolonial has 1,199 tons of freight per mile. Now, my hon. friend must know that every ton of through freight that will pass over this line that he intends to rent, with the exception of our share of the freight which will come from Quebec, won either from the Grand Trunk Railway or Canadian Pacific Railway, passes in some form or other over the Intercolonial Railway. My reason for making that statement is this: All freight originating at St. John must continue to pass over the Canadian Pacific Railway, the only freight that we can hope to get is that freight to the eastward of St. John which, if the Government gives better and cheaper facilities, will be diverted from the Canadian Pacific Railway and go to swell the revenues of the Intercolonial. Through traffic that originates on or passing over the Intercolonial to-day is billed as through traffic, and appears in the statement of tonnage over the Intercolonial Railway, billed as through traffic by way of the Canadian Pacific Railway, or billed as through traffic by way of the Grand Trunk Railway. It is not claimed, and no man can claim, that the purchase of this extension or the renting of this extension will create one ton of freight; it will not create a solitary pound of additional freight, but it simply enables the Intercolonial Railway to compete with the Canadian Pacific Railway for existing freight and possibly to get a larger portion of through freight than it now does. Let us bear in mind, therefore, that, with the exception of that freight which comes from Quebec to Montreal and which is to-day allotted to the Grand Trunk Railway and to the Canadian Pacific Railway, all this additional freight in the nature of through freight is included in the 1,379,618 tons I have given as the freight tonnage of the Intercolonial Railway. Of this amount the Minister says, not more than one-fifth or 275,923 tons is through freight. The extension cannot have more through freight than this until the trade of the country increases. Now, the hon. gentleman has given to this House the statement that there is going to be 517,000 additional tons of freight to accrue to the traffic of the Intercolonial by reason of this extension. Let us analyse these figures. That statement that 517,000 tons of additional freight for the Intercolonial Railway will accrue as a result of this extension, means that this little bit of line through a wilderness is going to give to the Intercolonial Railway system as large a traffic as one-fourteenth of the total traffic of the Grand Trunk Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway, with its immense traffic from the east, its transcontinental traffic that is shipped from Portland, its freight that goes to the United States, its freight that is a result of it having connection with these large centres, like Hamilton, St. Catharines, Sarnia, Windsor, Brockville, Belleville, Montreal, St. Johns, Toronto, London, Guelph, Oshawa, Peterborough, Sherbrooke, and a host of other places that I might mention—that this little bit of line will give to the Intercolonial Railway one-fourteenth of that traffic, is absolutely absurd. Now, take the Canadian Pacific Railway. We know what an enormous railway the Canadian Pacific Railway is, that it sweeps a continent, that it has branches in every direction which are immense feeders for railway traffic; and what about that? Why, this little bit of railway of 170 miles, it is claimed, will bring to the Intercolonial Railway system as much freight as is one-ninth of the total freight of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Is it not absurd? Take also, the Intercolonial Railway, and I may say I was surprised in looking into the returns of the Intercolonial Railway. I find there has been—I do not think that it is owing to political reasons—but there is something strange about the statistics of the Intercolonial Railway. I heard the leader of this House declare that the deficit in view of the traffic was perfectly phenomenal. I must say, in looking into the matter fully for the first time, that I am inclined to agree with him in that matter. We find that the Intercolonial Railway is a well-patronized road, that its total tonnage per mile is 1,199 as against 737 on the Canadian Pacific Railway, still the one is a magnificently paying institution and the other always has a deficit. But this, by the way, the Minister claims that this extension will bring upwards of 36 per cent additional traffic to the Intercolonial Railway. In respect to passengers, the Canadian Pacific Railway has a passenger traffic per mile of 489, but the Intercolonial Railway has the magnificent passenger traffic of 1,279 per mile. What does the Minister of Railways think that already great patronage will be increased to? From this 170 miles of railroad alone the Minister of Railways claims that he will derive a traffic to the Intercolonial Railway that is nearly 35 per cent of the present passenger traffic of the whole Intercolonial Railway. Why, it is absurd. The Grand Trunk Railway carries over all its main lines and branches, 5,077,671 passengers, or 1,613 per mile. The Canadian Pacific Railway carries over all its system, main line and branches, 3,036,619, or 489 per mile; the Intercolonial Railway carries 1,471,866, or 1,279 per mile. Now, what about the railway that we have here? At present it carries 263 per mile. But what increase does the hon. gentleman profess to be able to get? I will concede him as local traffic—which is simply absurd—the same patronage as the Grand Trunk Railway has, with its suburban traffic advantages, with the magnificent country through which it runs, the oldest and most densely populated portion of Canada, with its through traffic to the United States and that to the maritime provinces, the traffic on that basis for the 130 miles, exclusive of the thirty-five miles of the Grand Trunk Railway between Ste. Rosalie and St. Lambert—I say exclusive, for the two stand upon a different basis—would be 209,690 passengers. In respect to the thirty-five miles, the Intercolonial would only get a small fraction of the local patronage, while on the 130 it would I admit get the whole of it. Ninety miles of this little line has to-day 23,773; concede this 130 miles 209,690. Allow a traffic at the same rate as the Grand Trunk Railway over this thirty-five miles of road. This concession is absurdly large, because the Intercolonial Railway will not run a local train over the thirty-five miles, and the Grand Trunk Railway will practically monopolize all the local traffic. But let the Intercolonial Railway have the full rate over the Grand Trunk Railway and this thirty-five miles will have 56,455 which the House will notice gives 246,145 local passengers on the whole extension. Subtract that from the 630,000 the hon. gentleman gave us, and it leaves 383,855 of through passengers as the result of this extension. If he had the whole through passenger traffic to and from all points on the Intercolonial Railway he could only have as I will show at the very outside 147,186. The Minister of Railways admits that the through freight on the Intercolonial to-day is only one-fifth of the traffic, and that the through passenger traffic is a greatly less proportion of the total passenger traffic. Say the through passenger traffic is only one-tenth of the total traffic, the through passengers amount to 147,186. These figures are away above the true figures, yet they represent both the Intercolonial and Canadian Pacific Railway shares of the through passengers from points on the Intercolonial Railway. As a matter of fact I affirm, having the best of reasons for the affirmation, that the through traffic between points on the Intercolonial Railway and Montreal, and points west does not amount to 50,000 passengers per annum by all routes taken together. Yet the Minister counts on no less than 364,000 through passengers. If the local traffic on this extension is reckoned on the basis of the Canadian Pacific Railway traffic, the Minister would have to find 510,000 through passengers, allowing the Intercolonial Railway the same number of local passengers on the thirty-five mile section as I have done in the case of the estimate on the basis of the passenger traffic of the Grand Trunk. So far as the Grand Trunk Railway is concerned I am not going into the discussion of every particular feature of the Bill, but if there is one thing more than another which strikes me either as being preposterous from a business standpoint or as being prompted by other considerations than those of business, it is the arrangement in regard to that portion of the road between St. Lambert and Ste. Rosalie. The distance is thirty-five miles between those points. According to the figures given by the Minister of Railways and Canals as to the cost of constructing a railway in that district, $15,000 a mile would build and equip it. So that $600,000 would build and equip a road from St. Lambert to Ste. Rosalie or to the eastern terminus of the Victoria Bridge. What is the Minister of Railways and Canals giving to the company and what is he getting for the outlay? You can build the road for $600,000 and then own it completely. He is giving to the company an annuity of $37,500, which capitalized at 3 per cent would amount to $1,250,000. In addition to this, we are bound to what is an equivalent of an expenditure of five-sixths of the cost of the double tracking of the road. I say five-sixths, because we agree to pay 5 per cent on half the cost. The Minister may talk as he likes and disclaim if he pleases any intention to assist in building the second track, but this whole scheme rests upon and is conditioned upon the Government approving of the double tracking of that line of thirty-five miles. They are actually pledged for a grant already for double tracking the bridge. This will add at least what is equivalent to $200,000 to the cost to the Government, making in all what is equivalent to $1,450,000. To sum up: for a road that we could build, equip and own for $600,000, we are paying $1,450,000. Worse than that, we are paying that immense sum simply for the privilege of running trains over it. The Grand Trunk Railway Company would be getting for about one-tenth of the use of this thirty-five miles no less than $850,000 more than it would cost this country to build a new road and own it, or in other words, we are donating the Grand Trunk Railway $850,000 for the very small use we will have as a matter of fact of this thirty-five miles alone. This fact illustrates the nature of the transaction which we are asked to adopt. Is it any wonder this side of the House is suspicious and complains.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is opinion and not fact.

Mr. POWELL. I take the statements of the Minister of Railways and Canals as facts. He has given us the cost per mile and the mileage of this section, and if there is anything wrong in the calculations, I have made, the hon. gentleman, the Minister of Railways, can certainly point it out very easily. I shall not further take up the time of this House; I shall not go into the discussion of the questions raised by the Minister of Public Works. I can sympathize with a man who feels irritated that charges should be insinuated and not openly made against him; but I will say to that hon. gentleman that he has got a fair field where there is no favour in which to establish his innocence in respect to several matters of political charges that have been made against him, and before he exercises the declamatory powers he exercised so vehemently on the floor of this House to-day and boasts so loudly of his innocence, it would be just as well to have the issues in the criminal prosecution for libel pending at Montreal brought down to trial, so as to establish his innocence. Until he shows himself sufficiently courageous to do that, I for one will not attach much weight to those protestations of virtue.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the resolution carries, I propose to ask the indulgence of the committee for a few moments. I am not going to traverse the ground that my hon. friend (Mr. Powell) who sits behind me has so well covered, and the fact that neither the Minister of Railways and Canals nor any other hon. gentleman on that side of the House has seen fit to reply to his arguments gives us reason to conclude that they cannot reply to them. My hon. friend (Mr. Powell) has adopted a business basis; he has taken the traffic on the existing Canadian routes, he has reduced that down to the percentages; he has given us the very largest possible that can be claimed as an accretion of traffic upon the Intercolonial Railway, and he has reduced the matter down to figures on that basis which simply puts the calculation of the Minister of Railways and Canals in point of utter absurdity before this House. The Minister of Railways and Canals did say to us and it was the strongest argument that he had, and the statement that he read from he passed over to me, directly he had given it to this House, that there was an estimated increase of 630,000 passengers and 500,000 tons of freight. My hon. friend (Mr. Powell) has dealt with that, and I do not think there is a business man who has or will read the Minister's remarks but will conclude that it is perfectly absurd that such a prophetic statement should have been made and taken as the basis of voting the scheme that was voted through here a few days ago. I am not going to follow the Minister of Public Works in his peregrinations around his political and personal history during the last twenty-five years. The hon. gentleman has a little habit of placing himself ahead of his subject and obscuring the real issue by putting the personal issue in its place.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I never do that ; you do that.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) is content to let his history to be judged by his contemporaries and those who follow him, I am quite willing to allow it to go there for the present. I did not desire to mix the discussion of this question. However, I am bound, as he introduced the question, to go aside from the merits of what we are now discussing. I am bound to say when he assumes a position of virtuous indignation against and a great contempt for a certain person by the name of Armstrong, that it did not make any difference at all what his personal opinion of Mr. Armstrong was, what Mr. Armstrong had asked from him, or what he had refused to give to Mr. Armstrong, so far as the discussion of the proposition before the House is concerned. That is altogether aside from the question at issue. He dares not, and does not assert that there is any conspiracy in this House. He does not say that, of course. If there is not, then it is outside the issue so far as this question is concerned in this House. My hon. friend will not take the responsibility of pointing out a single member in this House who has opposed the scheme, and say to him that in respect to this, he has been conspiring from any motive which was referred to, to prevent the passage of the measure introduced by the Government a few days ago. I do not think my hon. friend will take the responsibility of making that charge. If he does not, all that he said in reference to the point was aside of the question, and whatever sympathy he will arouse by his allusions to anything connected with the impression he has endeavoured to create, he is entitled to, but it does not weigh as an argument in favour of this measure. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has distinctly stated that this proposition is quite different from that which was presented to us a few days ago. In some respects the present proposition is not, to my mind, so outrageous or untenable a one as the preceding proposition. But in another respect, it has an aspect which inclines me, for my part, to consider it less favourably than the permanent arrangement. If we were entering into a permanent arrangement, one for ninety-nine years, all the preliminary expenses that we would go to so far as the outlay for capital is concerned, would be spread over that period of ninety-years, and we should not have to meet the argument that because you would have to undertake, say, $200,000 of present expenses in order to put yourself in a position for the traffic you would have to consider that in no other light than as preliminary expenses if it were to be distributed over the whole term for which the operation was to be carried on. But does not my hon. friend see, and does not every one see, that it is very different to come to this House—in good faith I presume—to ask for simply an experiment of nine months or a year. I do not apprehend that the Minister of Public Works holds that the Government has decided to put this through perpetually year after year. The Minister of Railways did intimate that, but the Minister of Public Works took the only tenable ground, namely, that they proposed to try an experiment, and that if it did not eventuate in that year successfully, they would drop it. If they could show that it could be successfully run, then they would make it permanent and in that case the opposition would disappear. That is a reasonable thing for us to consider. When we are face to face with the arrangement for nine months and the initial expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars in order to carry out that experiment, you have a very much more difficult question than you had before, when that initial capital expenditure was to be distributed over the whole period of the arrangement, say, for instance, ninety-nine years. You, therefore, have to give additional grounds for your belief, that this experiment will eventuate successfully, in order to induce business men to put the extraordinary initial expenditure into operation. The Minister of Railways frankly confessed that he would not have asked for the hundred thousand dollars, except that it were made necessary for the carrying on of this scheme. Now, we have come down to that point. It is a very grave question whether we ought to do it or not. We are now in July, and taking the most sanguine view of it, your railway will not be ready for use before November. Everybody knows what is contingent in this matter of building railroads, and its more likely by far that the road will not be completed for traffic before January, than it is that it will be ready in November. Very well : in January this House meets, if you are going to have any common-sense arrangement with reference to the sessions. We have met late this year, against, I believe, the feeling and convictions of the Government who started in with the idea that they would have early sessions, and as a consequence we are thrown into the turmoil and confusion of passing millions of dollars in reference to most important matters, at a time when no person is in a position to give candid and clear and efficient consideration to any question, and when most of the members have returned to their homes. I apprehend that the Government do not intend to continue that, and that next year they propose to be ready for an early session. The probabilities are that you will not be able to put this experiment into execution until Parliament is able to meet next year. Is it wise for us to undertake the experimental business for nine months, with the fair probability that you will not get a rail to run on before the first of January, when, on the other hand, your Parliament can be called in January.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. February is more likely.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, the 1st of February if my hon. friend says so. Then, let Parliament when it has time, without hurry and without heat, take up the question as a permanency, and discuss it and settle it for good and all. If Parliament concludes then that it is to be undertaken, the initial expenditures will be scattered over the whole term, and Parliament will have decided upon it after a cool and calm discussion of all the probabilities in the case. I ask my hon. friend, and it is an important question: What will harm if this operation does not commence on the 1st of November and is left over until the 1st day of March, next year? The Intercolonial Railway has not entered Montreal since its existence, and it will not certainly make a revolution if it be allowed to remain on the same track, and with the same limitations for six or eight months longer. Will any hon. gentleman tell me: What will hurt if this is left over for six months? When you had your hard and fast arrangements for the ninety-nine years' lease, you had an argument why it should not be left over for nine months. You had your bargain concluded then, and you could argue that you might not be able to have the option and to make a bargain at the end of that time. Such an excuse is entirely gone. Your bargain is off. Again, I ask for a reasonable reason, as to what would be hurt if this arrangement were left even for the calm and cool discussion of another session, when people are ready to discuss it and are in a mood to discuss it. You might say, that you still would have a deficit on the Intercolonial Railway; but I tell you, that the deficit on the Intercolonial Railway, its proportion of it for that time, could be borne better than to go into this enormous initial outlay. I have searched for a reason as to what interests would be injured, and I have failed to find one. What insuperable objection is there, that we cannot leave this thing over for six months until Parliament has a chance to thoroughly discuss and look into it. I wait for a reason, and I hope before this discussion closes, some Minister will give a reason which could be urged in that respect.

Then, going on to another branch of the question. I do not emphasize this consideration any too strongly when I say, that it is a tremendous consideration for a business man to imperil $100,000 of capital for a nine months experiment, of the success of which he acknowledges that he has doubts. No business man conducting a business of his own would do that kind of thing. No business man would enter into that kind of arrangement on the airy basis of the supposed traffic that would accrue, and the supposed added profits that would come in.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. You do not suppose the rolling stock would be all lost, even if it were purchased?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Sutherland) heard the Minister of Railways say this morning, that if it were not for this experiment the $100,000 worth of rolling stock would not be called for.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not this year, perhaps.

Mr. FOSTER. Would any business man carry out an experiment under such circumstances, and say: Go into the expense and build an extra factory and put in extra machinery, and it will not all be lost. Would any one say, that if we were not going to take that extra mileage from Lévis into Montreal, that in the present state of the country's finances, we would store up $100,000 worth of rolling stock. You might store it up and in years to come it might be used on the Intercolonial Railway proper, but that is not a business arrangement, and no sane man would suggest it to Parliament. I want to put strongly two points: First, what injury would come to any interest if this matter were left over, and next session we took it up and thoroughly discussed it, and, perhaps, come to a conclusion for a permanency.

In the second place, is it not a very strong argument against a nine months' experiment that if at the end of the nine months, involved as it is in uncertainty, you find that the experiment has not come out well, you have, in addition to the nine months' experiment, to put $100,000 into rolling stock in order to carry out the experiment? Now, let us see what the hon. gentleman is going to undertake as a financial venture for nine months. He is going to pay on the eastern or Grand Trunk section $6,000 as a rental; on the Drummond Country section, $64,000 as a rental—I am taking the year's rental, because I imagine that it will run for the year at least; on the Ste. Rosalie section, $37,500; on the Grand Trunk bridge, $40,000; on the terminals, $62,500, and $100,000 for rolling stock. There is no uncertainty as to the items; they are all to accrue and to be paid and they foot up to the tidy sum of $268,800 for a year's experiment. That is the initial expenditure. Now, the Intercolonial Railway has been running between important points, with a long and well-established traffic, and it does not now meet the operating and maintenance expenses by its rates.

Mr. FROST. Is not that the fault of the terminals?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend puts a pertinent question. Would it not be the reverse if you got Montreal as a terminal? There is the whole point of the question, and I will come to that in a little while. But, in the first place, it will cost just as much, will it not, to operate and maintain the new section as it does the old Intercolonial Railway, because the old Intercolonial Railway has an old and well-established road-bed, with rolling stock and in good condition all through.

Mr. FROST. When you get to Montreal, you have the increased distributing centre.

Mr. FOSTER. We will come to that later. The maintenance and operating expenses of the new section will certainly be no less than on the Intercolonial. I would be perfectly fair in saying that they would be more, because it has not so settled or so good a road-bed and there are incidental expenses of which the hon. gentleman has not deigned to tell us the probable amount. When he gives the rental of $64,000 to the Drummond County Railway Company, is he going to put any improvements on the road in order to make it a good running road, or is the Drummond County Company to do that out of the $64,000 rental? Under the old agreement, the $64,000 was a rental, but outside of that the Government were to put on the road the expenses that were necessary to bring the whole line up to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway, or as near to the standard as the railway authorities thought necessary. There, then, is this plain statement, which no one will, I think, contravene, that you are going to pay as much if not more for the maintenance and operating expenses on the new section as you are paying on the Intercolonial. To-day the accounts do not balance on passenger and freight traffic, and they will not balance on the new line. The difference will be rather in the way of an increased deficit than of increased surplus. That is reasoning on the basis that you are going to get just as much, and no more traffic in proportion than you got on the Intercolonial Railway. Now you come to the main point, that is, whether you have any reasonable ground for thinking that you will get more traffic by going to Montreal. Would even that fill the bill? No, Sir. You have not only to get more traffic, but you have, in the first place, to get enough surplus traffic to pay these charges of $210,000 for the rental for the year; over and above that, you have to get a sufficient traffic to pay you for your proportion of the outlay on the capital stock rendered necessary for the experiment; and when you have got that much of extra traffic, you are just where you are to-day with reference to the old Intercolonial Railway, with a deficit on each mile of it, when you compare the receipts and expenditures. And, more than that, you have to meet the extraordinary expenditures for the new road, to bring it up to the standard, and the incidental expenses of any enlargement that may take place, for which you will pay 5 per cent interest on half the cost. Now, the whole question is: will you by getting into Montreal on any reasonable basis be able to get that surplus profit of $210,000 and whatever sum is necessary beyond that to meet all these extraordinary expenses which I have mentioned? There is the whole point, and no man on the other side has attempted to meet it. When you get your road into Montreal, and get the advantage of the terminals and the connection there, you are without, as my hon. friend well said, the creation of one single ton of freight. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) laughs. Am I not right? Was my hon. friend not right? Tell me whether, when you have got your road into Montreal, you have added one single ton to the surplus product of wheat, one single bale to the surplus product of cotton, one single ton to the surplus product of butter or of cheese. You have not created one single ton of freight. What have you to look for? Diversion and transfer, that is all. You may, out of the freight that offers, divert a certain amount to the Intercolonial; but you have created none. What better chance have you to divert it? I do not want to go into that long argument again. I made the argument as plain as I could, and so did other gentlemen on this side, that when you meet with competing railways in the city of Montreal you have to compete on all through freight at a great disadvantage. At Montreal you meet the Canadian Pacific Railway, with its immense western system, originating freight on every mile of it, with its 76 miles of advantage of haulage, as regards Halifax, a shipping port, and 278 miles of advantage as regards St. John, another shipping port. I ask any business man, whether under these circumstances, you have added anything to your position of competition for the transfer of through freight. With that mileage against you, you will be reduced to one of two things—either to suffer in the competition if you keep your rates on a paying basis, or to take freight at less than the paying basis; and your profits disappear when you come down to the line of payment for level haulage, without any surplus. I am willing to submit that to any business body in this world, and I believe that I would be safe in their verdict. I admit that you get at Montreal the local freight that offers at Montreal for distribution points on the Intercolonial Railway. You are there where you can originate the freight for yourself. Previously you had to have it originated by the Grand Trunk Railway to Lévis or by the Canadian Pacific Railway to Quebec, but then you could go in and originate local freight in Montreal yourself. That is some advantage, but when you try to originate freight in Montreal bound for Halifax or St. John, either for themselves or as distributing centres, you are met with somebody else who is originating freight too. You are met with the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway, you are met with every competitor which you had before, and they enjoy a better advantage because you are meeting them where they have competing routes straight out from the point. When you were at Quebec you had an advantage in getting whatever it was in the interests of the Grand Trunk Railway to give a longer haul over its line to Lévis, and whatever it was in the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway to bring down on the north shore and give a longer haul to. But when you go to Montreal you come to a point whence diverge these competing lines straight out from that point and when you try to originate freight in Montreal you find the Grand Trunk Railway offering to carry freight to Portland and thence to Halifax. Some one may say that it is not likely the Grand Trunk Railway will take freight from Montreal to Portland and thence by steamer to Halifax and distribute it from the wharfs of Halifax. But the hon. Minister of Railways used that argument, and, therefore, I am entitled to take it up. The Grand Trunk Railway can carry their freight down to Portland by the short line, put it upon vessels for Halifax, and distribute it from Halifax to the different points. You have to meet the competition of the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and with that competition to meet you are incurring an initial expenditure for this nine months' experiment of $268,800.

To say that by going to Montreal you will get 500,000 tons more of freight and 630,000 more passengers, is to my mind, to state an absurdity which every business man sees at once. That is not all. This proposed nine months' arrangement will lead the Government into an expenditure of at least $134,400 more. That is the minimum, but there is also a maximum which will amount to double that or $268,800, and which is more likely to be reached. Why? This was a solvent road or was it not?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was a solvent road.

Mr. FOSTER. Had it a property which was worth what my hon. friends have declared to be worth? If it was that kind of a road and had those prospects, could it not with those prospects have been allowed to build a paltry 42 miles without the Government coming down and giving it from

Mr. FOSTER.

$3,200 to $6,400 per mile. What imperative necessity was there that this Drummond County Railway should get ready money and get it quick? And so because the original arrangement could not get through and therefore it is disappointed in its annuity of $64,000 a year, upon which it could finance, therefore, in the last days of the session, the treasury box is opened and a certain $134,400, and a possible $268,800, is to be poured into the coffers of that company inside of four or, at the outside, six months from this date. What imperative necessity was there for this if it were a solvent road and a most excellent property? If it were, it would pay and pay well, and yet, by hook or crook, whether Parliament wishes it or not, it must get an annuity of $64,000 a year to commence at once, and if it cannot get that by the will of Parliament, then the treasury must be raided to an amount possibly of $268,800 for the benefit of this solvent and prosperous road. For until the defeat of the Government project, there was no contemplation of giving this road a bonus. Now, however, the bonus will be assured. A nine months experiment may be to the advantage of the Drummond County road, because if at that time the experiment prove a failure the Drummond County road has not failed entirely. It will have got this large bonus from the Dominion treasury and have satisfied its urgent need for ready money which it seems unable to obtain without the help of either the permanent or the temporary arrangement now proposed. These are inevitable bills drawn on the treasury to-day and which have inevitably to be met. The only contingency is as to the margin of difference between $134,400 and $268,800, which depends on two things—the ability of the company to make their road cost more than $15,100 per mile, and the good-will of the Minister of Railways who will pay that money if they can show him the road has cost that amount. There are the financial items, the outlays, the bills to be met—all for a nine months' doubtful experiment. Now, I plead for a better way. I plead for this Government to drop this costly experiment and to wait until the assembled wisdom of this House meets here next year. Why wait? I will tell you why. One very good reason is because you took care to see the House was scattered and confused before you brought your measure down for full discussion—because you wearied it out and sent it away and scattered it to the four corners of this country until you had but a declaimed residue, and then you went on with your proposals.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Are you quite sure it was we who wearied it and not yourself?

Mr. FOSTER. I leave that to the country to decide.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is we who have been the sufferers.

Mr. FOSTER. No doubt my hon. friend the Postmaster General has suffered, I have seen him suffer. No doubt he had a very bad quarter of an hour last night. No doubt two of his colleagues beside him had just as bad a quarter of an hour, and no doubt if I had not been as generous as I was, there would have been a very bad Cabinet crisis, so that I have great sympathy with my hon. friend when, in plaintive tones he declares to this House that he has been suffering so much.

Now, so far as the teaching of wisdom is concerned, if my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) were in a receptive mood, he would be the gainer by every hour he listened to the Opposition in this House, no doubt of it. For the reasons I have given, I plead with the Government to take the better way and leave this experiment, this costly and doubtful experiment, over until Parliament, fresh, strong, ready to debate and ready to decide, meets next year and takes the whole matter up, and until the Minister of Railways gets a little information which, to-day, he does not appear to have. Why, Sir, the idea of the Minister of Railways bringing a proposition like this down and defending it before this House by declamation and prophecy, and actually obliged to confess to my hon. friend (Mr. Powell) who questioned him, that he had no idea as to the number of through tickets that were sold on the Intercolonial Railway. And yet the whole basis of his calculation must have been—or ought to have been—a comparison of through traffic on the various roads and an estimate of what proportion of through traffic he could add to that already carried by the Intercolonial Railway. I think, then, the Government would be wise in leaving this experiment until Parliament, the whole of Parliament, had an opportunity of discussing the question—the whole of Parliament, because every member of this House has a right to have these great public questions brought before the House in some fair and reasonable time when his public duties will allow him to take part in the discussion and to share in the conclusion and in the responsibility that goes with it. I do not say that we can make an impression on hon. gentlemen opposite. If they have determined to carry this measure through, they have the physical force to do it. It remains with them to take the responsibility, and it remains to the country to decide. But, depend upon it, the decision will be based, not upon prophecy and declamation, but the Government for its action in rushing to this hasty and ill-considered experiment will have to face the business sentiment and the business intelligence of the country which will demand sound reasons for the course that is taken.

Resolution to be reported.

CROW'S NEST PASS RAILWAY.

The House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 146) to authorize the building of a railway through the Crow's Nest Pass.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid the House is getting into a position where there may be a misunderstanding, and I think we had better have it cleared up. According to my understanding, the vote of $100,000 for rolling stock for the Intercolonial Railway was not carried. When that was brought up this morning, the Minister agreed that it should be allowed to stand until the other was carried. We have carried the other, but not the vote of $100,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have a right to go back into Committee of Supply.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, but I wish the matter to be understood.

The committee rose and reported progress.

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Intercolonial Railway—To purchase rolling stock ..... $100,000

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) give us an explanation of what rolling stock he proposes to purchase, or did he give that before?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I gave that before, it will be found in "Hansard."

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask another question. Is it not possible for the hon. gentleman to carry out this experiment with the rolling stock he already has on hand, without incurring this expenditure of $100,000? Could he not carry on this service for nine months until the House meets again, without spending this money?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Anything that can be done in the way of avoiding the expenditure of money for rolling stock will be done. I am not in a position to say that there is any spare rolling stock upon the Intercolonial Railway which could be used for this purpose. We are not equipped in any superabundant way, I can assure the hon. gentleman. But no unnecessary expense will be incurred.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). May I ask the hon. Minister if the rolling stock proposed to be purchased is the rolling stock of the Drummond County Railway, or any other?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not had it in mind that we should use this vote for the purpose of purchasing any of their rolling stock. I do not say that we will not do so, but that is not the present intention.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the hon. Minister tell us what rolling stock they have on the Intercolonial now?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I could not, at the moment, give the hon. gentleman that information.

Mr. SPROULE. Upon what basis does the hon. gentleman ask for more, if he does not know what they have now?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Upon the basis of the report of the manager of the Intercolonial Railway, which is to the effect that they require more rolling stock to run this road. I gave the committee, at a previous sitting, a statement of what this additional rolling stock is to consist of.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman says he gave the information. Does he know what the rolling stock of the Drummond County Railway to-day consists of?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will send down and get the information, I thought it had been furnished.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. You will find all the discussion in the "Hansard"—about the additional stock.

Mr. FOSTER. There is this point yet to be cleared up. Under the old arrangement, the hon. gentleman bound himself to buy the Drummond Railway rolling stock.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are not at all bound to buy it.

Mr. FOSTER. Under the arrangement as proposed by the measure introduced in the House, the hon. gentleman bound himself to buy, at an agreed valuation, the Drummond County Railway rolling stock. Now, I understood from the hon. gentleman this morning, that the conditions were practically to remain the same. He is going to rent the Drummond County road. Does he feel himself bound, or is there anything in his contemplated arrangements which will make him buy the Drummond County Railway rolling stock under the rental conditions?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not understand the stipulation which was contained in the original agreement to bind us to purchase the rolling stock of the Drummond County Railway. I understood that that clause simply amounted to a declaration that we would buy the property if we could get it at a price which we thought was fair.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what I said.

Mr. BLAIR.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is not exactly what the hon. member said, and could not be so understood. It would be understood that we were bound to buy it on an agreed price, but it would not be understood by anybody who was reading that statement that we had an absolute right to determine the price, be it satisfactory or otherwise. It might be it would be determined in some other way, and that we were not to be necessarily a consenting party to the price which was to be named. However, that agreement is at an end and we are no longer under any obligation. It is open for us to make an arrangement with the Drummond County Railway to use their rolling stock if they are willing to let us use it on such terms, or to have nothing to do with the Drummond County equipment in any way. We are entirely free to act in the matter. We are under no agreement, expressed or implied, as matters now stand, to take any part of their stock.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the Minister consider himself justified in using this appropriation to buy new rolling stock?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would consider myself bound to exercise my very best judgment under the advice which I should receive from those who are competent to advise me in making any purchase Parliament might authorize me to make. I would feel bound to do what would be best in the public interest to do.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. Minister mean the committee to understand that the whole or a portion of this money may be invested in the rolling stock already on the Drummond County Railway? The hon. gentleman says that he is not bound to do so. But it would be well that the committee should have some information as to whether the hon. gentleman intends to invest any of this sum in the rolling stock that is now owned by the Drummond County Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman would be satisfied with my statement of what is in my mind now, without holding that I am committed by my present statement under all circumstances and at all hazards, no matter what might hereafter appear, I would say that I do not contemplate buying any part of the Drummond County Railway stock out of this fund under existing circumstances. That is my present statement.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Is it not more likely that the Drummond County Railway would be willing to make any arrangements with the Government for the lease of their road which would not include the rolling stock?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They might require a rental for the use of it, unquestionably; I think it is possible. But I am speaking of a purchase.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Does the Minister consider that portion of his agreement with the Drummond County Railway includes the lease of their rolling stock for the nine months' experiment?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is my present impression, although I have not exchanged a word with them on the subject. But I think it is reasonable to expect that they would be willing to let us have the use of their rolling stock for a reasonable consideration; and if they are, and we find any need of a part or a whole of it, I think it would be a good business to make an arrangement of that kind.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the Minister feel justified under this vote to purchase additional rolling stock instead of renting it? Would the Minister consider himself entitled to lease the rolling stock and use the money for that purpose?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think any portion of this vote could be used for the purpose of renting the stock. I think we would have to have ample authority under our general appropriation to pay for the use of any of the rolling stock on that road we might conclude to buy.

Mr. SPROULE. That is under the $157,000?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I mean under our general appropriation for the use of the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. CLANCY. Then it is apparent that in the event of no purchase being made of the Drummond County Railway rolling stock the sum of $100,000 will not be absolutely required for other purposes, because if it were contemplated to purchase a portion or all of their rolling stock, then this $100,000, or a portion of it, would be absorbed in that. If that be not the intention, and there is to be a mere rental paid for it, then the hon. gentleman does not seem to require the $100,000 that is now asked for.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I might find it desirable to expend a portion of the $100,000 for the purchase of the rolling stock. I have already said that the equipment of the Intercolonial Railway is not in excess of its needs; it is good, but it is not what you would call ample, it is not superabundant, and I think it might be concluded that it would be desirable to spend a portion of this amount in the purchase of new rolling stock to a limited extent. But I do not think that I ought to be asked to commit myself definitely to any statement beyond that.

Resolution to be reported.

CROW'S NEST PASS RAILWAY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 146) to authorize a subsidy for a railway through the Crow's Nest Pass.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. LISTER. Before this Bill is declared carried, I desire to say just a few words regarding it. I may say, in the first place, that I regret that my hon. friend the member for West York (Mr. Wallace) has not been able to complete the very interesting address which he partially delivered to this committee the other day. The address was interesting for more than one reason. We have on the other side of the House at least three leaders, and one or two embryonic leaders.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, my hon. friend (Mr. Lister) is going into controversies and party subject-matter, and it must be understood that we shall have to persist in our replies.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We must have something to say in reply.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We want to hear you again.

Mr. LISTER. Three or four men in Toronto, so rumour states, think of deposing the real leader of the party, but we have at least four leaders representing the Opposition to-day. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) who has been leading the Opposition during the session, and who is now absent, with perfect frankness declared that the scheme now under consideration was one in the interest of this country and should receive the support of all political parties in this House. That was a frank and open statement which we can well understand. We have the acting leader of the Opposition (Mr. Foster) who sits here to-day opposing the manner in which the scheme is being carried out, while the leader from West York (Mr. Wallace) is opposing it entirely. While we know that the real leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) frankly approves of this scheme in all its details, we have hon. gentlemen, with infinitely less frankness, pretending that they are opposed to the project of the Government when, in fact, they are in favour of it for the most selfish reasons. While these hon. gentlemen want this project carried out; while they desire that the work shall be proceeded with and completed, they are posing before this House and the country as opposed to the whole scheme. They want the Bill sent to the Senate; they want the Bill to become law, but at the same time they want to pose before the country as opposing the Bill when, in fact, they are in favour of it. The hon. gentlemen are trying to get on both horns of dilemma. They want the Government to construct this railway and they want the party advantage of going to the country and saying that this was not in the interest of Canada, that it was not a scheme that was as favourable to the country as the one they proposed and that, in fact, it was generally a bad scheme. The hon. member for West York opposed this Bill upon three grounds. First, he said that the Government should have disallowed the British Columbia charter altogether and thus prevented the construction of the road under the charter; in the second place, he argued that the road was not at all necessary; and in the third place he said that the agreement which the late Government proposed to make with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was an agreement much more in the interest of the country than the one now placed before the House for its consideration. It is wonderful, Mr. Chairman, how hon. gentlemen change their principles. While they were upon this side of the House they took up one set of principles, and as soon as they change their seats they immediately become possessed of another set of principles. The hon. member for West York says that the Government should have disallowed the British Columbia charter. Does not the hon. gentleman know that it has been a recognized principle of this House that where a local legislature legislates within the purview of its authority, this Government would be doing a violence to the constitution by disallowing that Act? British Columbia had a right to incorporate this railway; British Columbia had a right to make such grants as it thought proper in aid of the project and, having done so, and being a responsible Government, answerable to the people of British Columbia, it would have been doing violence to the constitution of this country if this Government had disallowed the Act. When hon. gentlemen were on this side of the House, when the hon. member for West York was supporting the then Government, what do we find? We find that the British Columbia Government gave a local railway company on Vancouver Island a grant of lands that, in fact, places the control of the coal lands upon Vancouver Island entirely in the hands of one vast corporation. Nobody else can acquire these lands, or work them, and yet the hon. gentleman who proposes in this House that this Government should have disallowed that legislation, was one of the men who supported the Government, who refused to disallow legislation giving the coal lands on Vancouver Island to a railway company. So far as he is concerned, it is not in his mouth to say that this Government should have disallowed the Act. The hon.

Mr. LISTER.

gentleman says further that the Crow's Nest Pass road is not necessary. The leader of the Opposition says that the road is necessary. The acting leader of the Opposition will not dare to say that it is not necessary, but the hon. member for West York has gone to the length of saying that the road under consideration is one which is not necessary in the interest of the country, and he has pointed out that railways from the south were being built into British Columbia and that the Canadian Pacific Railway with its water connections could find its way into the mining country, and that, in fact, there was no necessity of the road being built at all. What is the condition of affairs in that country to-day? We have, as a fact, a country of unexampled wealth; we have, as a fact, a country that produces nothing to sustain life—a mining country, pure and simple. We have a country that will attract from every quarter of the globe an enormous population seeking to get the wealth out of it. That means an enormous consumption of the products of Canada; it means a population that will open a market for the older provinces of Canada and for the North-west Territories; it means a market costing this country comparatively little, when we are travelling the world over for the purpose of finding new markets. I venture the assertion that within a few years it will be found that the mining country of British Columbia has a population of hundreds of thousands of people who will require to get from older Canada, not only what they consume, but their clothing and, in fact, everything that is necessary to life in that country. We have spent millions of money in constructing a great railway line through that country, and it is not fair to the people of Canada that this expenditure should not be made by which the people of the older provinces may have the trade which the development of the country will certainly bring forth. The man who opposes this scheme is a narrow-minded man. He is not equal to the occasion; he does not take in the great possibilities of the development of the riches of British Columbia. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) says that they can get their supplies from the south. That is not what we want. We want the people of the mining country to get their supplies from British Columbia and from older Canada, and they can only get that trade by getting these supplies in there through our own territory and not through the United States.

As a matter of fact, millions of dollars worth of property has gone into the British Columbia mining camps, and but a small tithe of that has been taken in from older Canada. It has been purchased in the markets of the United States and carried in by United States railways, to supply the Canadian residents of that country. I therefore say, that this scheme upon its face is one of absolute necessity, one that will bear fruit to the benefit of our people, and the Government would have been blind to their duty to Canada, if they did not take vigorous and early steps to secure the construction of a railway which will connect the older provinces of Canada with that country of wonderful wealth. My hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) goes on to say, that the agreement made by the late Government was better in the interests of the country than that proposed by the present Government. Sir, I deny it. I say that the two schemes will not bear comparison; I say that the agreement made by the Conservative Government would be an onerous agreement, an agreement that would fall far short of giving to the people of Canada the advantage which the agreement of the present Government gives them. Under the new agreement made by this Government, the people of the North-west alone will undoubtedly save of from $500,000 to $750,000 a year in freight charges. Is not that a great advantage? Then, Sir, under the new agreement, the Government of this country save for the people of Canada for all time to come, 50,000 acres of the coal lands of that country, which must for ever prevent a monopoly in the coal business. And, Sir, this agreement enables the people of western Canada to supply the people of British Columbia with such products as they require and we produce.

The agreement made by the late Government was simply this: They gave the railway company $5,000 a mile, and they lent the company $20,000 a mile more; taking from the company a mortgage upon the roadway or the bonds as security for that loan. I have no doubt that the railway company would prefer the arrangement with the old Government, because we know from our experience in lending public money to railway companies, and to harbours and such like, that while we take a mortgage from a company that mortgage would never be paid. As a matter of fact, the agreement entered into by the late Government would mean an addition to the public debt of Canada of $8,250,000. Sir, the country was amazed during the late elections at this proposition of the Conservative Government. They were amazed that the Government should borrow money upon the credit of the country, for the purpose of lending that money to a railway company, in consideration of a mortgage upon the roadbed. The proposition of the late Government involved an expenditure of $8,250,000, and the acceptance of a mortgage, which I venture to say, under circumstances which may arise, no Government of this country would be strong enough to enforce, if default was made in the payment of the mortgage or interest. The agreement made by the late Government practically was, that they should give $8,250,000 for the building of this road, and receive no concessions in return. This Government get the road for $3,600,000, and they have besides obtained concessions, that looking into the future, it is impossible now to put a value upon. I admit the necessity of the road; I admit that in the interest of older Canada we should have access to that mineral country, and admitting that, I declare that the present Government is entitled to every credit for placing before Parliament this scheme which must receive the fullest approbation of every man who takes a true interest in public affairs in this country.

Why need we be alarmed? The interest upon this $3,600,000 will amount to over $100,000 a year. I point to my hon. friend the Postmaster General; why, Sir, by this Government coming into power and that gentleman getting control of the Post Office Department, he saves more every year, by the economies he has made, than would pay the interest on the money which we have to borrow to pay this subvention. In addition to that, this Government has saved $250,000 a year in connection with the fast Atlantic service as compared with the contract entered into by the late Government. There is no need for alarm. If this country is to be developed, if this country is to be peopled, if this nation is to become great, as we hope it will, then no Government can afford to stand still. It must be progressive it must be business-like, it must be abreast of the times, and if it is not the people will not submit to it. We cannot expect to develop this country by a policy of standstill. Wherever it is necessary to pierce the country by railways, wherever it is necessary to cheapen transportation, wherever it is necessary to afford complete communication between the various parts of this country, the Government must be alive to the fact and the country expects they will accomplish it. I believe, Sir, looking at this scheme from every point of view, that it will satisfy all reasonable men in Canada, and that it is a scheme that will do more than anything that has been done in recent years, to develop the wonderful, and I believe illimitable resources of that great province of British Columbia.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lister) has availed himself of this opportunity of putting upon record an answer, to some at least, of the objections which were raised on the other side of the House against this proposal of the Government. I myself believed that the position taken by some of these hon. gentlemen opposite was scarcely frank or candid, because I well know that there was no genuine opposition on their part to the measure. On the contrary, there was a general consensus of opinion that it was desirable that this Bill should pass and become law; and I think it was a very transparent attempt upon the part of those gentlemen who did speak against the Bill, to win for themselves and possibly for their party a certain measure of commendation from those who, in the various constituencies might be hostile to the arrangement which we have made. Now speaking in all fairness, I think that those gentlemen would have appeared to some better advantage if they had allowed the Bill to pass as we submitted it, and had not made what I venture to regard as the futile attempt to appear to be resisting the measure in the public interest. I further think it required a good deal of intrepidity on the part of those gentlemen to oppose the measure, and to claim, by a comparison between the plan of the late Government and this plan, that the advantages were all in favour of the former and against the latter. The hon. member has made a comparison between some points of the two plans, and it does seem to me that if you put these two proposals side by side, there is not room for a difference of opinion as to the side to which the strong preference must incline. On the one hand, the late Government proposed to grant a subsidy of $5,000 a mile and a loan of $20,000 a mile upon the security of the property which was to be created by the loan itself—without condition, without stipulation, without seeking to secure from the corporation to which that loan was made any remission of any of the terms and conditions under which they were operating their railway system in Canada—without a single attempt to secure any concessions in the interest of trade, in the interest of the people of the western country, in the interest of those who have been complaining of the incubus which the operation of that great railway imposed upon the country.

Mr. CLANCY. Surely the hon. member does not want to impress the committee with the idea that the Government of Canada had not already the power to exact those conditions and might do so in case of exorbitant charges being made.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no hesitation in saying that the Government have not at present the power to do what has been secured in the terms set forth in this Bill. Perhaps we could exercise the arbitrary power, because there is no limitation, in a sense, on the power of Parliament; but we could not, without a distinct violation of a solemn compact, to be found embodied in an Act of Parliament—without being guilty of an act which I think this Parliament will never be guilty of, we could not secure the concessions which by this agreement have been obtained for the people of Canada. That is my answer to the hon. gentleman. There is a widespread feeling throughout western Canada, and I think shared in by the people of the eastern part of Canada, that the agreement which permits the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to impose such schedule rates as it pleases, so long as it does not show sufficient excess of revenue to pay a dividend of 10 per cent on its stock, is a condition of things which has been much attacked and which is believed to be a very great burden upon the people of the western country, from which for a long time they have hoped to secure some relief. I think I am not overstating the case when I say that there is a strong feeling in the country that it was a mistake that that condition was agreed upon, and that there would be a feeling of great relief if we could secure a complete rescinding of that agreement. We have not been able to accomplish that in its entirety, but we have succeeded to some extent. We have succeeded in securing from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company a rescinding of that agreement to such an extent that all traffic which may originate in any part of Canada for the western country, and all traffic which may originate in that country for any part of Canada or any portion of the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, shall be subject to such rates as either the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, or the Governor in Council, or a railway commission, should one be constituted, shall impose. That is a most important concession, one which I consider worth a very large amount of money, and one which I think the people of the western country will highly value; and if hon. gentlemen who object to this arrangement had been negotiating with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company on the subject, they would be satisfied that the Canadian Pacific Railway people at all events regarded it as a very important concession, that they valued it at a large amount of money, and that they only yielded when they found the Government determined that they should not get any financial assistance from the Government of Canada unless they consented to the terms which we demanded. Make a comparison of these two contracts, one beside the other, and can there be a doubt in any man's mind as to which contract is to be preferred? On the one hand, we were to grant the company $20,000 a mile as a loan and $5,000 a mile as a subsidy. That would have amounted to $8,250,000, which sum we would have had to go into the markets of the world and borrow and hand over to the company. I was amazed to hear hon. gentlemen say that that transaction was not adding to the public debt, while if we rent a railway and agree to pay $200,000 a year for it, we are adding to the public debt. In other words, it is not adding to the public debt to have to go into the money markets of the world, and float your bonds to the extent of $8,250,000. It only shows how differently hon. gentlemen view a transaction when they view it from a different standpoint. And the hon. gentleman who aspires to be the leader of the Conservative party, perhaps in the near future, ventured to assert that the Conservative party were not responsible as a party for a proposal, which was brought down and submitted to Parliament by the Conservative Government, under which they proposed that $8,250,000 should be handed over to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company with which to build this road, without a condition or a stipulation, except that they would agree to return the money. They proposed to lend that money upon the property that was created by it, and without even making an attempt to secure any relief for the people of Canada from the burdens under which they have been labouring, and of which they have complained for many years. If these two arrangements are compared, I do not think any one can doubt on which side of the balance the weight lies; and I can submit a very simple test as to which of them is to be preferred. I would like you to take the opinion of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company themselves as to whether they would sooner take $8,250,000 as a loan, agreeing to return the money, or the terms which we have offered to them and they have accepted. If any member of this committee were to be in conversation with the officials of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company after this matter is all closed, when they would have no interest in making any inaccurate statement regarding it, they would tell you that they would infinitely prefer the proposal of the late Government to those which we have insisted upon, and which form the basis of the present arrangement.

Now, the complaint has been made in some quarters that this agreement is not sufficiently explicit. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) criticised one of the conditions because it did not, he argued, make it obligatory on the Canadian Pacific Railway to convey the 50,000 acres of coal lands to us. The hon. gentleman, however, very frankly admitted, after he had studied the clause, that he was in error in his first view, and that he was thoroughly satisfied that it covered the ground. It unquestionably does cover the ground, because it provides that no matter what company—not the Canadian Pacific Railway alone, but any other company—may receive the land subsidy from the British Columbia Government for the building of this road, out of that land subsidy there must go to the Government of Canada 50,000 acres of coal lands. There would be only one possible contingency which would prevent the land coming to the Government of Canada, and that would be the withdrawal by the British Columbia Parliament or Government of the land subsidy before it had been earned, or the refusal of the British Columbia Government to enter into a contract with the company which had engaged to build the road. In that case, the lands would continue to be the property of the British Columbia Government, and would not pass into the hands of any company, but I do not apprehend that as a possible contingency. I therefore say with the utmost confidence, that this contract fully covers all the ground.

There are just one or two other matters I wish to refer to before sitting down, and I am sorry my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition is not here at this moment. He took occasion yesterday, and not for the first time in this committee, to refer to a statement which he said I made in British Columbia during my visit there last winter, with regard to the action of the British Columbia Government in giving this large subsidy to the British Columbia Southern Railway Company. My hon. friend's statement was repeated by one of the ex-Controllers, who followed him, namely, that I had denounced the Act of the British Columbia Government as being a most infamous transaction. Now, I do not wish to have the impression entertained that at any time or under any circumstances I expressed myself in such a way. I did not altogether forget the position which I have the honour to occupy, I did not forget that I was responsible for any statement I made as a Minister of the Crown, but I did take occasion once, or perhaps twice, to refer to what I thought was the unwise policy which the British Columbia Government had pursued in giving this very large grant to a railway company. I did not denounce their conduct as infamous, I made use of no strong language, and if the hon. gentleman had read the published reports of what I did say, he would find that on no occasion did I use any strong language on that subject. I only said that I thought the policy was unwise and that if I had the opportunity, in my character of Minister of Railways, to take a course which would protect the people against monopolies, I would feel it my duty to use my best efforts in that direction and to see that any aid given by the Government of Canada for the construction of that railway would be given upon conditions which would protect the people against the creation of any monopoly. There was no impropriety surely in that. I felt that that would be my duty, and I desire to say, with regard to the conditions which have been arranged between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway, that while they do not go as far as I would like to see them go, while they do not embody all my views, they do, in my opinion, fully protect the people of British Columbia against the existence and creation of monopolies in coal and timber lands. Therefore, I think I may fairly claim to have redeemed to the full any assurance I gave to the people of British Columbia in that respect.

The hon. gentleman made another reference, and it is not the first time it has been made in this House. He said that I had posed before the people of British Columbia as being entirely opposed to the Canadian Pacific Railway having the contract, and would insist upon its being built as a Government work. I need only say that at no time, when I addressed the people in British Columbia, did I express any such view or commit myself to any such policy. I always said that it was a matter which had not been considered by the Government, that there were these various possible ways by which the road could be constructed—either by the Government as a Government work, or through the medium of a company and the granting of bonuses in the usual way. I said that upon that subject I was not authorized to express any opinion on behalf of the Government, I was very careful to avoid expressing any opinion of my own. The hon. gentleman undertook to state with a good deal of confidence how I thought this road should be built and how I was then turned down by my colleagues on the question. He may have information as to my private and personal view, and he may think his information is accurate. I am not going to affirm or deny what my individual or personal view was on the question. I apprehend that Governments could not exist unless their members were willing, after consultation with their colleagues, to yield to an extent, so long as no question of principle was involved, to the judgment of the majority with whom they act; and whenever it becomes impossible for me to do so, I shall feel it my duty, of course, to withdraw from association with my colleagues. But I do not say that the ultimate conclusion which was arrived at by the Government, the policy which was finally determined upon was one which, if my views prevailed, would have been adopted. But I have no hesitation in taking my ground strongly upon this, that if the policy which the late Government propounded on this question is to be the other alternative, I would, and so would any prudent man, infinitely prefer the plan which the Government has now submitted to Parliament to that which was favoured by the late Administration.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I shall just for a few moments take up the time of the committee. I am in a peculiarly favourable position to express my views very fully upon the matter which is now occupying the attention of the committee. I was not in the Cabinet when the first project was discussed or decided upon—the one which was submitted to the company and which the hon. gentleman has referred to as having been discussed by the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace). I venture the opinion that the function of a constitutional Opposition is not to formulate the policy of the country, but to watch what is going on in the interests of the people, and to throw the responsibility for what is finally decided upon the Government, who command the confidence of the country, as shown by their coming successfully through the great test of the general election. I am sufficiently a constitutionalist to bow to the will of the people and to submit to the verdict that has been rendered. The Government, as was its duty, has formulated its policy upon this question, and we are now in a position to discuss it. I entirely agree with what has been said—that no sacrifice too great can be made to open up to the older provinces of the Dominion that wonderfully rich country that will be developed by the building of this road. As a rule, I am very much opposed to the building and management of roads by the Government, not because the Government would not build as good a road as a private company, but because when a railway is under the control of the Government, it is almost inevitable that political pressure will be brought to bear upon the Government that will prevent the road being administered as a business company would administer it—simply to carry the traffic of the country and yield due return upon the capital invested. Sir, the Government cannot be too careful to surround the building of such a road with all the precautions necessary to prevent injurious monopolies. Especially under the peculiar circumstances of this road, is it necessary that all precautions in this way should be taken. If, as I understand, the Crow's Nest Pass, owing to topographical conditions, cannot be made available for other railroads, then the future of that country depends upon the Government making such arrangements as will prevent this pass falling into the hands of a monopoly. Other railways must be allowed to use it under reasonable conditions so that they also may do their share in developing the wealth of the country. The hon. Minister of Railways has stated that every precaution has been taken in that direction. I assume that these conditions are actually provided in the Bill, and that the bargain is surrounded by such precautions as are necessary to be taken. We know that complaints have been made in the past, some of them probably reasonable, others quite as probably exaggerated, against the rates which were imposed by the Canadian Pacific Railway for the carriage of goods over their road. The Minister of Railways has said that it would be extremely difficult to interfere with the conditions under which the Canadian Pacific Railway was built and which were granted to the company at its inception. Those conditions were necessary in order to secure the building of the road which has done so much to make Canada what it is to-day. But it is important this new line shall be placed under the protecting eye of the Government so that by no possibility can anything interfere with it or make it a monopoly. These conditions being established, as I have already said, I think there can be no possible reason why the building of this road should not be entrusted to the Canadian Pacific Railway. That company have shown how perfectly they can build a line, and no doubt they will build this important road in a manner that will be satisfactory to the public. I do not wish to go into the details of the arrangement. I have not attempted to compare the two arrangements, except in a very cursory manner. The chief point that struck me as being of importance was not so much to discuss the policy of the Government, but because I considered that that policy must be left to the Government who have, through their majority, control in this House, and who must bear the responsibility. But when the time comes and the results of their policy is submitted to public discussion, then will be the time to judge of the policy from the results of it, and then will be the time for us to take the position which we shall consider right and proper and show, if we can, that their policy was not as favourable to the development of Canada as the policy which we advocated for so many years when we were sitting on the right of the Speaker. I wish merely to submit to my colleagues who sit behind me and to this House, without committing myself to the policy of the Government, that I am favourable to the Bill as it stands, provided, as the hon. Minister of Railways has stated, it is surrounded with such checks as will prevent this important road from falling into the hands of a powerful monopoly, who, by the rates imposed for freight, &c., thus impede the development of the country upon which we depend so much for building up the future of Canada.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have listened with much interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Three Rivers and St. Maurice (Sir Adolphe Caron), and I presume that, in the absence of the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster), he now speaks as leader of the Opposition.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I speak for myself.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Then it is to be regretted that at this, one of the last stages of this important measure, the hon. member for York is not present to say how far this completed scheme meets with his approval. The absence of the hon. member for York on this particular occasion, and at this particular moment, seems significant. He has for many weeks deluged this House, as have many of those about him, with criticism against this measure, calculated to create the belief among the public that they were fighting a desperate battle on behalf of the interest of the people. But when they are challenged, when the hon. member for York is challenged to say now whether that scheme as a policy, not all its details, is proper, he withdrew from this Chamber in the midst of this debate instead of remaining here and saying where he stood upon the measure which is now presented for final assent. In like manner we find the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Adolphe Caron) following in the footsteps of the hon. member for York in a somewhat similar way. It is gratifying to know at least that the hon. gentleman approves of the policy of the Government in regard to this important measure. It is a measure of far-reaching importance, its consequences will live long beyond the lives of any living people, and being so, it is gratifying to find that one so prominent in the counsels of the Opposition, approves of the great principle that is involved in the measure now before the committee. What are we in committee for? We are not in committee to deal with principles, but to deal with details; the committee is the place for every member to direct his attention towards the details. If there has ever been a measure before Parliament demanding the close attention and reasoning of every member of the House, it is the Bill now before the committee, and each member of this committee is bound to direct his attention to the details in order that there shall be thrown around the scheme all those safeguards the hon. gentleman alludes to. The hon. gentleman has had this measure and all its details before him for a month, and he, as one of the committee, has a duty to perform, and I call upon him now to say whether he finds anything in this measure that in his judgment should be removed, or anything absent from it that should be put into it before it becomes law. We are now at one of the last stages, but there is still an opportunity to consider objections, there is still an opportunity to consider any suggestions, there is yet a locus penitentiæ in regard to the whole measure. Instead of the member for Three Rivers shielding himself behind the plea that these are mere generalities, it is incumbent on him now to point out what defects, if any, there be, in his judgment, in this Bill before it passes. I ask him now: Is he satisfied with the details? Can he make any suggestion about it? I am sure the Government will receive him with a welcome, and give to them its best consideration if they are likely to promote the public welfare. I am anxious to know if there are any shortcomings in it. I am desirous in every respect of safeguarding the interests of the public; so I think it is due to the committee that we should have the advice of the member for Three Rivers in regard to the measure. If it has any weak points in it, if he has no suggestions to offer, if, as a lawyer, and as an old parliamentarian, he can point out nothing capable of improvement, then I think we are safe in assuming that he swallows it in its entirety, policy, details and all.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am afraid that the hon. gentleman hardly understood my speech. As to advising the hon. gentleman, I have been so unsuccessful in the past that I would not venture to give any advice to the hon. gentleman. It is very hard to convince the hon. gentleman that he is wrong.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am open to conviction.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. He may be, but it is very seldom that he shows it, consequently I would not attempt to advise the hon. gentleman. But I think the short statement I made was favourable to the Bill. Now the hon. gentleman cannot impose upon me in the way he has attempted. I think I am at perfect liberty to express my views upon any measure in the way I desire, and if I cannot satisfy the hon. gentleman, it is my misfortune. However, I generally follow my own views in such matters, I do not need to consult the hon. gentleman as to how I shall express those views on any matter coming before Parliament.

Mr. CLANCY. The Postmaster General seems anxious that every member of this committee should show where he stands in respect to this measure. Now, it is clear that there is no division of opinion in this House as to whether that road should be undertaken as a Government work or by a railway company. The proposed arrangement of the late Government was one on the lines that the hon. gentlemen have adopted, namely, that a railway company should undertake the construction of the road rather than the Government. But we come now to another important question, and that is as to whether this is a good bargain and as to whether the first offer made by the Conservative Government was better or worse than the one now proposed to be carried out. I have no hesitation in saying that the objections that have been raised against the first offer are visionary, they are in a mild sense, bubble blowing. The member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) casts discredit upon the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and the Minister of Railways did not hesitate to say much the same thing, that they cast a doubt upon the ability of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to repay the $20,000 per mile that would be loaned, in addition to the $5,000 per mile to be given as a subsidy. I would like to hear the Minister of Railways now say if he thinks there is the least doubt of the ability of that great corporation to pay back the $20,000 a mile that was proposed to be loaned.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would have no hesitation in saying that in my opinion the Canadian
Mr. MULOCK.

Pacific Railway would be able to respond to a demand of that kind. I did not say so, but I am quite ready to say so now. I think the loaning of eight millions and a quarter of public money upon an undertaking which was to be created out of that money and upon that loan, was a very unbusinesslike proposition, and that it was really asking the country to assume all the risks of the enterprise without being able to realize any profit out of it, should it succeed.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I think the correct figures were not eight and a quarter millions, but $6,600,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If you multiply 330 miles by 25,000, you will find about eight and a quarter millions.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Yes, if the hon. gentleman regards the loan and the subsidy as being distinct. I took both, on the ground that both would have to come out of the public treasury.

Mr. CLANCY. I hardly follow the point that the hon. gentleman is endeavouring to make there. He has stated to the committee that he believed the Canadian Pacific Railway would be able to respond. That being admitted he is not compelled to rely on the security involved in the scheme itself. It does seem to me that it is not a sound argument to put forward. The hon. gentleman has taken the security of a great corporation. He admits that it is perfectly good; he admits that they are able to respond. But why urge the point that you are taking that alone as security. There is absolutely nothing in the contention. If the money had been loaned to a corporation that had no standing in the country there might be something in the argument of my hon. friend. But he admits that the Canadian Pacific Railway will be able to respond.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) claim that it would be a more favourable arrangement if we were to give the Canadian Pacific Railway $5,000 a mile and loan them $20,000 a mile in addition to such subsidies and other privileges and concessions as they might have. If the hon. gentleman would put that strongly I have no doubt that we might consider it.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman is putting his own case. He has not told the committee that the loan of $20,000 a mile was to be repaid at the rate of 3½ per cent. Neither has he informed the committee that it was possible for the Government to have borrowed that money at a less rate or at 3 per cent.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not at 3 per cent.

Mr. CLANCY. The statement has been made that it could be borrowed at 3 per cent. The difference between 3 and 3½ per cent would reduce the grant of $5,000 a mile to something in the neighbourhood of $2,500 a mile. If that proposition be correct, then, leaving out the question for the time being the concession of the coal lands the hon. gentleman will admit that it would have been an infinitely better bargain to have made.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It would not have been, however, if we could not get our interest.

Mr. CLANCY. I think it is quite as true as the other calculation that the hon. gentleman has been making which he has brought down and has not vindicated. It is reasonable to conclude that the money could be borrowed at 3 per cent. There could be no doubt that it would have been a better bargain so far as that feature of it is concerned. Now, let us turn to the question of the monopoly of coal lands. I am informed that the quantity of coal lands is almost illimitable. I am further informed that where coal lands stand alone they are absolutely without any value, that is, if they are without facilities for bringing the products to market. My information is that, aside from convenient railway facilities they have no value in that country.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Suppose your information is incorrect?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think railway facilities would be necessary to make them valuable, but then there is so much of it that you could not make it all valuable. The value would be in a monopoly, if a monopoly existed.

Mr. CLANCY. If there is so much of it as the hon. gentleman states, is it a fair question to assume that there would be a monopoly? There are now some facilities for reaching those coal lands, partly by land and partly by water.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The people in that country were seriously afraid that there would be a monopoly.

Mr. CLANCY. If they were never alarmed before they will be when they read the hon. gentleman's speeches. They will come to the conclusion that they have been saved from a great monopoly, but the hon. gentleman has just said that there is so much coal land in that country that there is no possibility of a monopoly and, therefore, monopoly can only arise out of unfavourable railway facilities.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There would have been monopoly in dealing with one corporation.

Mr. CLANCY. I am informed that though one corporation will hold a large quantity they will not hold it all.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. All this land through that portion of the country and along the coal-bearing area passes to the corporation as a subsidy for the building of the road. That will include the coal lands as well as the others.

Mr. CLANCY. It would only be in a section. But the fact is that no great corporation are going to hold that property for mere pleasure; they must hold it for profit. There is nothing in this notion that these men might enter upon a monopoly because, if they ever expect to realize out of these coal lands they must depend on their development. If there is not a large development they will get no profit, and while men are ready to engage in monopolies there is nothing that I can see that would induce the notion of the possibility of a monopoly in these lands for the reason that it is against every business interest of the present holders.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is another thing.

Mr. CLANCY. But it is one of the natural conclusions to which you come. Now, as to freight rates: the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals says that it would be a violation of contract to undertake to get rid of this incubus that is placed upon the people by the provision preventing the reduction of freight rates until the profits have exceeded the 10 per cent limit. There is a feeling in this country that the time has come beyond which this limitation cannot further be continued.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Would you justify the repealing of that clause without any consideration of compensation?

Mr. CLANCY. That is another matter. The matter of giving compensation is independent of my contention, because it does not involve the question as to whether we should absolutely repeal that provision and that without compensation to make a case. The time is coming when no hon. gentleman in this House can shield himself behind what he considers the legal obligation resting upon the Government not to get rid of what the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals declared to be an incubus upon the people of Canada. I say the time is coming and this is not a matter for the hon. gentleman to put forth as one of the good features of the bargain, because he is bound to see that with this state of things, we should turn our attention to ridding the people of so dangerous a thing. There are two or three things that have been urged very strongly in favour of the proposition of the Government—first, the possibility of a coal monopoly; next, the relief you are giving to the people by way of freight rates; and next, the advantages of the bargain proposed, as compared with the one proposed by the late Government. These reasons for the adoption of the measure fall to the ground upon a careful examination of them. The hon. gentleman urged these as the principal reasons, but I wish to say that, so far as I am personally concerned, I shall hold myself perfectly free. I do not know any good reason why I should assent to the proposition that the bargain which the hon. gentleman has made is a good one or that it is as good as the one that was prepared by the former Government. All the benefits that were urged in favour of it have disappeared one by one, and possibly there will not be under it as many advantages as there would be under the former proposition.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to ask the Minister in regard to certain propositions contained in this agreement. The value of the propositions depend upon the way in which they are carried out. As to the running powers that are to be granted to other railways: in arriving at the basis of the payment for these running powers, is the amount of bonus that the Government is granting to the Canadian Pacific Railway for the construction of this road to be taken into the calculation, or is the total cost of the road to be the basis of calculation. That is to say, when another company comes to the Canadian Pacific Railway and says: we want to run over your road, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the other company come before the Government or before the commission, and the question arises what proportion of the original cost is to be borne by the second company? Is it to be a proportion of the total cost, or only a proportion of the cost for construction actually paid by the Canadian Pacific Railway? To put it another way: Is the country at large, through other lines of railway, to get the benefit of the money we are now paying for the Crow's Nest Pass Railway?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. Chairman, if I were sitting as one member of a tribunal which had to determine the question which the hon. member (Mr. Oliver) asks, and I had to decide upon what amount of compensation ought to be awarded to the dominant company, I will call it, I would not have any difficulty in reaching a conclusion. I cannot pretend to suggest upon what principle other gentlemen on the commission or tribunal which would have to interpret these powers would act. I can only state what my own view would be. I would consider that it would be proper to take into account the actual cost to the railway company itself of the construction of their line, after having deducted the amount of the aid or bonus which they received from the Government. I think that would be a fair basis of calculation. I would not think, however, as respects this road it would be proper to deduct the $11,000 per mile, because I do not consider that we are giving more than the ordinary subsidy of $6,400 per mile in consideration of the building of the road. We are giving the balance in consideration of the other concessions which the company had a right to refuse, or to make to us just as they chose, and the pecuniary value of which we consider is very large.

Mr. OLIVER. This question is a very far-reaching one, and it not only concerns the matter of running powers granted to other roads, but it also comes into the question of the general readjustment of rates by a commission. I take the liberty of suggesting that it would be a good thing to have that question decided when we are voting this large sum of money to the road. I will admit the contention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair), that only a part of this money is actually chargeable to construction, and that a part of it is properly to be credited to the concessions given by the Canadian Pacific Railway. But I take this position, that for whatever money we do pay which is properly chargeable to construction, the company is not entitled to the credit of that money in any dealings the Government may have with them, either in the matter of fixing rates or granting running powers to other roads. That is an important principle, and I take the liberty of saying that it is a principle which I consider should be decided here and now, and not left to a commission which may sit afterwards. This is the essence of the value of that branch of the concessions which have been given as to running powers and as to fixing the rates.

We have no right to cut down the proper earnings of the shareholders or bondholders of the Canadian Pacific Railway, but we unquestionably have the right to secure to the Canadian people adequate returns for the money we are actually paying to that company. I claim that now is the time to affirm that principle, and I should very much like to have it affirmed here and now, if that be possible. It is decided either one way or the other at the present moment. It cannot be that this bargain has gone through and that question been left in abeyance. Either the question is decided against us now, or it is decided in our favour. There are two parties to every bargain, and whatever our understanding of the matter may be, if the company have an opposite understanding, their understanding is as good as ours when we come to the question of readjustment. Now is the time that we want to know whether we are getting value for the money we are paying both in respect to the running powers and to the rates.

I want to ask another question. Does the power to regulate rates include passenger as well as freight rates?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, it includes both.

Mr. OLIVER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I shall avail myself of this opportunity to bring a certain matter, in this public way, to the attention of the Minister. That matter has reference to passenger rates. It is a local concern to some extent, but I will venture to occupy the attention of the House for a few minutes. The Kootenay country, in the process of its development is an employer of labour. The district of northern Alberta is a field for settlement. At the present time, of the number of people who have come to settle in northern Alberta a number are not too well endowed with this world's goods; and the present difficulty in securing a rapid and successful settlement of that country is that there is no profitable employment for labour there outside of the cultivation of the land. That is to say, there is no other means whereby a man can get employment and secure ready money for it. Now, if the Government will take this matter of passenger rates in hand to such an extent as to secure low rates for labourers between northern Alberta and Kootenay, it will have a double advantage. It will be an advantage to the Kootenay in getting cheap labour and it will be an advantage to the agricultural settlement of northern Alberta, in that the poorer class of people who are settled on that land will be able to reach the ready employment which they are now debarred from on account of the high rates of transportation. I call the attention of the Minister to that point for his consideration when there is any adjustment of passenger rates. It is an important question. The field for settlement in northern Alberta involves an area larger than the present settled area of the province of Manitoba, and the matter of securing profitable employment for the people who go in there is a most important question in connection with the settlement of that region. At the present time, the labour employed in the Kootenay country comes from the south of the line. The distance is short and the rate low. The labour goes back there, and we lose it. We might as well have the benefit of the result of that labour to assist in the settlement of our own country, but we cannot have it unless we get a reduction in passenger rates, which we could not obtain in any ordinary way.

Bill reported.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

The House resolved itself into committee to consider certain proposed resolutions (page 4736) respecting the granting of the subsidies therein mentioned to the railway companies, and towards the construction of the railways also therein mentioned.

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Mr. Chairman, I do not know that the committee will consider it necessary that I should occupy a great deal of time in making a general statement on these resolutions. I rather gather that it has not been usual to do so on occasions of this kind in time past, and therefore I do not apprehend that it will be necessary now. The committee will probably have noted that in these resolutions there are certain departures from the usual form in which proposals of this kind have in the past been submitted. The gross amount of the subsidies which are asked for will not, I think, be found to compare unfavourably with the amounts applied for in previous sessions. On the whole, I think it will be found that the requests we are making to Parliament in this direction are exceedingly moderate, and less in amount than have been submitted to Parliament on many previous occasions. I notice, however, that a good deal of criticism in the Opposition newspaper press has been directed to the fact that we are asking for so much in the way of railway subsidies; and these criticisms have rather led me to look a little into this subject in order to see how our proposals would compare with those that have been made by our predecessors in this direction, and I think I am quite warranted in stating that these proposals are in amount rather under than over similar proposals hitherto put before Parliament. In the first place, it will be noticed that a very large proportion of the votes which we are asking for are votes which have been already submitted to and have received the sanction of Parliament, and are in the nature of revotes. Of the total amount we are asking for, not less than $2,140,000 are in the nature of revotes, which would not leave much more than $2,000,000 which may be said to be new. I do not propose, therefore, to remark particularly upon these items in detail, unless it shall be deemed necessary to do so later, or unless some hon. gentleman may desire information which I may be able to give in respect to the different proposals. The committee will have observed that we do not propose to continue the system which has prevailed somewhat generally, I think very much more generally than was wise, of guaranteeing interest—of holding these subsidies, or receiving subsidies which may have been granted by any provincial Government, and holding them as a fund, guaranteeing to pay the amounts out in instalments, either annually or semi-annually, as may be agreed upon, by way of interest. We have abandoned that system, because we think it is calculated to give an unauthorized character to the undertaking with respect to which the payments are made. I think it is a bad system to continue. Therefore we have determined upon abandoning it entirely and confining ourselves to the giving simply of straight subsidies. We propose that the amount which will go to all companies shall be $3,200 per mile, but we have also provided—not, as seems to be the impression in some quarters, that any railway which has cost a sum in excess of $15,000 shall get the Government subsidy of $6,400—but we propose that if a railway costs more than $15,000 it shall get a percentage of the amount in excess of that figure. It shall receive a percentage of the excess over the $15,000, until it becomes entitled to the full $6,400, when its right to any further subsidies shall be at an end and the limit reached.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). $3,200 a mile is to be given a road that cost $15,000. I would like to know how the Minister arrives at the other result. On anything in excess of $15,000 the Government is to pay 50 per cent of that excess. It would appear as though the understanding was that a road which cost $15,000 should receive $3,200. Why does not the same proportion exist when the cost exceeds $15,000. Why is it that the Government pays in halves on any excess over $15,000?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is pretty difficult, the hon. gentleman will acknowledge, to lay down any rule of application which will be either a mathematical or scientific or logical or perhaps even equitable in its application to all railways. That would be an utter impossibility. There was no attempt to apply any principle at all in time past as respects the subsidies to railways, and we are making an effort to lay down a principle which will be of universal application and which will, at all events, be clear so far as its application under the like conditions is concerned. I cannot say to the committee that the limit of $15,000 is one which the highest wisdom would select or which all wisdom would agree upon as the limit that ought to be fixed up to which the subsidy of $3,200 should apply, and beyond which the increase should apply, but we had to fix some limit and it struck us that $15,000 would be as near an approach to what is fair and reasonable in its general application as we could select. The sum of $15,000, we thought, very fairly approached the outside limit of the average cost of an ordinary road, and I am inclined to think that our judgment in that regard will be found to agree with that of nearly all hon. gentlemen opposite.

I think hon. gentlemen will admit that a railway enterprise in one part of Canada, which is deserving and likely to be expensive, is entitled to receive the same liberal consideration as a railway enterprise in any other part of Canada. Locality ought not to give any particular undertaking, any preference or advantage over another, providing there is merit in the undertaking. Political influence ought not to operate as the sole criterion. And when I say political influence, I do not mean it in a general sense, but in an individual sense. If I have influence with my colleagues or if any hon. member has strong influence with the Government, he should not be in the position of being able to go the Government to give a $6,000 or possibly a $10,000 subsidy for a railway he desires to have constructed in his county, and for which otherwise he would only receive a smaller subsidy. It is no reason why the Government should ask Parliament to give a $6,400 or $10,000 subsidy to a railway because an hon. member, who is pushing its claims has a strong pull. It is not on a principle of that kind that I think the railway bonuses of this country should be given. We ought to establish a principle which properly enforced, will work out, not the same measure of equity in all cases, but which will, in the main, be fairer to all concerned and enable the Government to meet all applications upon the same basis. What do I find has been the case in the past? Glancing over the amounts of bonuses given to railways, I find the greatest disparity existing between the amounts given to some and the amounts given to other roads, without there being any real tangible substantial reasons given why any such distinctions should exist. I find that $3,200 subsidy has been the amount generally given, but I find also that railways, whose construction was not one whit more expensive than many of those which received the $3,200 subsidy, and were not one whit more entitled to consideration, received larger subsidies—some $5,000, some $5,161, others $6,000 and $6,400, and some $12,000. The amounts range all the way from $3,200 up to $12,000, and I defy any hon. gentleman to distinguish some of these different enterprises as regards their cost and value.

Now, there is one thing which I think the laying down of a fixed rule, of a plain, clear principle, will tend to accomplish. Hon. members know that there is not a railroad enterprise promoted in any quarter of Canada that is not considered in that particular quarter, as having as great if not greater merit than any railroad enterprise in any other part of the country. The fact, that people feel, honestly feel, that way and act upon that idea leads and naturally leads, to discontent, when they find that their valuable and important undertaking is to be put off with a subsidy of $3,200 a mile, while another no better, or more meritorious, gets a subsidy of $8,000 or $10,000 a mile. Is it not the part of wisdom that the Government should entrench itself, if possible, behind some principle where it can meet all these claims and say: We are dealing with your road upon the same principle as we apply to others, we may not have hit upon the very line of perfection in the figures we have made, but we give you exactly the same treatment that we mete out to other applicants for railway subsidies. I feel, and the Government feels, that it is an immense advantage to have some safe ground of principle upon which you can stand, and we think we have discovered it and have embodied it in the propositions now under consideration by the committee. And we believe that in applying them there is no reasonable ground for assuming that Parliament will be asked to contribute any more aid to railways, on the whole, than it has given under this go-as-you-please method that has hitherto been acted upon. We believe that the great majority of railways that are likely to be built with the assistance of the Government will be built at a rate inside of $15,000 a mile. And we say there will be no inducement for the railway company to spend more than $15,000 per mile upon its road, if the road can be adequately completed for less, for the simple reason that no capitalist is going to spend $1,000 for the sake of getting back $500. We are only giving 50 per cent of the excess beyond $15,000, and unless the undertaking is one that the construction of which requires a larger expenditure—absolutely requires it for its completion—it is not at all probable that this limit of $15,000 will be exceeded. There will be no inducement, so far as I can see, to exceed this sum. And we have supplemented the proposal with another to which probably exceptions may be taken in some quarters as an unreasonable burden to impose upon the railways—the condition that any company getting the $6,400 subsidy or anything in excess of $3,200 shall be bound to carry Her Majesty's mails free for a long term of years. I trust that this proposal will commend itself to the approval of Parliament. I trust it will commend itself to our friends opposite. While Oppositions are ordinarily very critical of anything the Government does, there seems to be a remarkable degree of unanimity when it comes to railway subsidies, which, usually have aroused very little opposition, at all events, that is my impression upon the subject. I hope that the proposal in this form will commend itself to the judgment of Parliament, and I do not think that there is any good reason to anticipate that there will be more than a very limited number of railways which are included in the list now before the committee which will be likely to call for anything more than the minimum subsidy. There is one that, unquestionably, calls for it. That is the railway in the Rainy River country. There possibly may be others, but I am not, at the moment, aware that there will be. But I think that I can safely assure the committee that they will be exceedingly limited in number and are not likely to include any roads which are not meritorious and which ought not to receive the sum we are proposing to give them.

Now, the hon. member (Mr. Sproule) asked me a fair question which I must answer before I sit down, and that is how we propose to apply the percentage in excess of the $15,000 per mile. That question has caused us a good deal of consideration and we think we have incorporated in this resolution all the precautions that can be devised or that are necessary in order to make sure that the spirit and intent of the resolution is being carried out. We provide, in the first place, that there shall be no subsidy beyond the $3,200 per mile unless we are satisfied not only that there has been an expenditure in excess of the $15,000 in the construction of the road, but that it has been an actual and not merely a fictitious expenditure, and not only an actual but a necessary expenditure. We require that the chief engineer of the Railway Department and the Governor in Council shall be satisfied that there has been an actual, proper and necessary expenditure beyond the $15,000 per mile before the maximum subsidy, or any part of it, shall be applied to the road. We provide that the chief engineer shall make or shall cause to be made, a proper inspection and investigation as to the case. It may be the opinion of some hon. gentlemen that we are imposing a very large and onerous duty upon the department. Well, we would be imposing a very onerous duty upon the department if my conjecture with regard to the number of roads costing over $15,000 were unfounded and a great many railways were likely to come within the maximum clause.

I have said that I think very few of them would be entitled to the maximum amount, and it is because I think so that I do not regard the duty which it is proposed to impose upon the department as very onerous. I think there is likely to be no difficulty or, at all events, none of an insurmountable character, arising in working out this provision in the clause. I think the chief engineer will be able to satisfy himself, not necessarily by a personal inspection of the road, but by an inspection of the road by some member of the staff of engineers who have to report under the past system, in order to entitle the company to be paid these subsidies. When such report is furnished, if it is found that a claim is being made upon an alleged expenditure by reason of an expenditure which from the general knowledge of the country, which the chief engineer or his staff would have, or the knowledge of the country which the department would have, appears to be excessive, then an inspection would require to be made, and then we would have to be supplied with reliable data to satisfy us that all these conditions as to the actual, and necessary, character of this outlay, are satisfied. Now, this report will pass through the hands of the Minister for the time being, and then would be laid before the Governor in Council, seems to me to supply about all the protection which Parliament would consider necessary to secure the proper working out of this principle.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to say a few words, first, with regard to the principle of subsidizing railways. Evidently, the Minister of Railways is not as well informed with regard to the platform laid down by one wing of his party, the Patrons, as some of the Ontario members are, or he could not have adopted this platform without putting himself in direct violation to theirs, because the Patron platform opposes subsidies to all railways. Several prominent members of the Liberal party, when we went to the country last time, acknowledged in public that they endorsed the platform of the Patrons, and stated that they had been fighting for their platform for years. Now, one plank of that was no subsidies to railways. Notably, I think, the Postmaster General publicly declared several times that the platform of the Reform party and that of the Patrons were practically the same.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman has any statements of mine of that kind, I should be glad to have him produce them; if not, I should request him to qualify his observations.

Mr. SPROULE. I have not got them under my hand, but I am sure I read them, and that I can find them in the "Farmers' Sun."

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman never read any utterances of mine to that effect. He may have read statements that I had said so, but I never uttered them. I will say that I sympathize with many of the planks of the Patron platform, including that with regard to railway subsidies, but in regard to which I expressly said that each application of that kind should be dealt with on its merits.

Mr. SPROULE. I never happened to notice that portion of his speech, but I certainly have noticed speeches made by himself and by other members of the party acknowledging that the platform of the Patrons was practically the same platform as that of the Liberals, and that they were all fighting for the same things. Now, I do not agree with the Patrons in that plank of their platform, because I am strongly of opinion now, as I always have been, that portions of the country where they have no railways are entitled to Dominion subsidies for that purpose. Next, the Minister of Railways said that it is of equal importance to build a railway in one part of the country as in another part, and that they should all be supported upon the principle that a railway in one part of the country was just as much entitled to a subsidy as it was in another. Now, I do not agree with that view. I hold that in sections of the country which are remote from a railway, where they have not a railway communication within reasonable distance, they are entitled to a larger grant than another section of the country in convenient access to a railway. Does the Minister of Railways believe that a section of the country where there is no railway within fifty miles is not more entitled to Government assistance than another section of the country where there is a railway within ten, or fifteen, or twenty miles, or does he believe that in both cases the same bonus should be given?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think that is a consideration which it is very proper to take into account.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. How could that be expressed in a resolution?

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that it is of equal value and equal importance to build a railway in one part of the country as in another, and, therefore, the subsidy should be the same.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think I failed to make myself clear. I had in my mind the different portions of Canada, the eastern and western portions; I did not have in mind any close divisions of the country.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood that he laid that down as a principle in contradistinction to the principle laid down by the late Government, of giving a larger subsidy to a railway in one locality than another.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It depended then upon the amount of pull that the applicants might have.

Mr. SPROULE. If it was based upon those grounds, then there would be no justification; but if it is based on the needs of a locality, I think the principle is sound. Take some portion of Ontario, for instance. Take the Rainy River district, where settlement is not thick enough so that municipal bonuses can be raised to aid in building railways, and they have no other resources except selling bonds. It is important in a case like that, that the Government should give a larger bonus than they would to build a railway say from here to Kingston, the Kingston, Smith's Falls and Ottawa Railway, for instance. The region through which this railway passes is old-settled and wealthy, as compared with Rainy River district.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The railway you instance is a revote.

Mr. SPROULE. No matter whether it is a revote or not, I am talking about the principle.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The principle in respect to that road is being conceded by Parliament, and the money has been voted.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman fails to understand my argument. I am trying to show that the principle laid down by the Minister of Railways is not sound when he said that one railway needs aid as much as another.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think that I stated it in that broad way. I said that railways of equal merits, because they were in different localities, ought not to stand, necessarily, upon a different footing.

Mr. SPROULE. Then I misunderstood the hon. gentleman, and the correction makes it satisfactory, because I hold that in granting subsidies, regard should be had to the remoteness of a locality from railway facilities. Now, then, I may say a word in regard to the calculation as to how we shall ascertain whether a railway has cost more than $15,000 or not. I do not know whether I understood the hon. gentleman correctly in his statement as to that. Does the amount of $15,000 include the equipment?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, the building alone.

Mr. SPROULE. The Minister said, "We have our engineers at our command; we have the records of the embankments and cuttings and other proofs as to what the road has cost." Suppose a railway company that was building a road put before the Minister an account of actual expenditure for the building of that railway and that it was above $15,000 or up to $20,000 or $25,000 a mile, would the Minister and his colleagues accept that as a correct statement of the cost of the railway?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I presume if an account of that kind was submitted, the chief engineer would look into it, and looking into it he could form a judgment as to whether or not the prices were excessive or reasonable, as to whether the quantities were excessive or reasonable, as to whether the work which had been done was necessary and proper, or unnecessary. On the whole, looking into the matter, he would form a judgment as to whether or not the statement was a reasonable one to be accepted. He would subject this statement to close inquiry, particularly if there were to be founded upon it a demand for an additional amount of subsidy.

Mr. SPROULE. I take it that that would involve a re-examination or re-engineering of the whole work because you would have to deal with quantities and other details.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The plans filed in the department would disclose to us the quantities, the earth, the masonry, the rock and embankment cuttings, &c.

Mr. SPROULE. Am I correct in supposing that the Minister would have regard to the actual amount that is put into the railway or would the company give you an account of the bonds sold?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That would not affect the question of the cost of the road.

Mr. SPROULE. From municipal bonuses or from whatever source you got the money, you would have to show that the money went into the railway?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. I can understand that it would be possible to make out a larger cost than the actual cost of the railway. In regard to the amount of bonuses, I understand that the minimum amount of the railway resolutions will be $3,863,928, and that the maximum amount, if you go to the limit of the resolutions, will be $7,727,850. Under these circumstances, we can fairly assume that the country is committed to an expenditure of $7,727,850.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Has the hon. member calculated how much that would actually come to per mile? That comes to nearly $22,000 per mile.

Mr. SPROULE. The only source of information we have at our command as to the cost of railways is Poor's Manual of Railways. I remember going over it carefully a few years ago, and the information I derived from it was that the average cost of railways at that time in Canada was over $21,000 a mile, while the average cost in the United States was over $35,000 a mile. If we left out a few railways in Canada the average cost is increased to $29,000 a mile.

Mr. LISTER. That would include the Grand Trunk Railway, which cost over $80,000 a mile.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman remember whether it includes the St. Charles branch, which cost $125,000 a mile?

Mr. SPROULE. I do not remember, because I did not go into an analysis of the railways, but the amount which I have stated was given as the average cost of railways in Canada, and if that was so at the time for which the statement was made we may reasonably assume that railways will cost nearly as much to-day. I will assume that it will cost more than $15,000 a mile, and that will call for the subsidy above $3,200 a mile. There is no doubt that in many cases the cost would be $20,000 or $25,000 a mile. Then the Government would have to consider how far they were exercising that stringent economy about which they have talked so much in this House and in the country. In regard to the railways that are aided in the different localities I have nothing to say, because I have not analysed that branch of the subject with sufficient care to enable me to intelligently speak upon it. I will call attention to this fact, however, that there is a proposal to spend as much money in sections of the country where they have good railway facilities as in localities where they have no railway facilities. That should not be the case. I think that in certain localities such as in the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, they do not deserve aid because they have railways all through those portions of the country. The country has made a large expenditure already in giving these portions of the country railway facilities and these bonuses are intended to provide railways for localities where there are no railroad lines within fifty or a hundred miles. It is proposed to give the Drummond County Railway a subsidy, although it is quite close to the Grand Trunk Railway. It is proposed to give that road the same amount as any other. Then, again, take the railway from Ottawa to Cornwall. It is proposed to give this railway a subsidy notwithstanding the fact that we have the Canada Atlantic and the Brockville and Ottawa Railways going over practically the same ground.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Did the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) have any objection to subsidizing these roads two or three years ago?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, I opposed it then, and I oppose it now. I always held that where you have another road within a reasonable distance, you should not subsidize these roads.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Did the hon. gentleman object when the proposals were made then?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, I did object. I have taken a consistent position in regard to this question. I held then, I hold now, that we should not put the country to an expenditure for railways in localities where they already have railway facilities. It is not justifiable to make an expenditure of this kind in localities where they have railway facilities, and to that extent I condemn these resolutions and because I find that there are a great many cases they propose to subsidize lines in localities already provided with railway facilities, but I will support them in so far as they propose facilities for districts now without them.

Mr. SPROULE.

After Recess.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies) moved that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Committee rose and reported progress.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 147) to amend the Act respecting certain Savings Banks in the province of Quebec—(from the Senate)—(Sir Louis Davies.)

POST OFFICE ACT.

The House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 129) further to amend the Post Office Act.—(Mr. Mulock.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 5,

Mr. FOSTER. This is a very important section, and it makes so generic a change in the administration, that it requires a great deal of serious and careful thought. The change is of such a nature that it should be well considered by the House. Every one will admit, that it is impossible to give this close consideration to a measure which touches all parts of the Dominion and in which no constituency is uninterested, at this stage of the session. My hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) seems to have had no valid excuse for deferring this legislation until this late hour. Here we are within a day or two of the prorogation of Parliament as we believe; probably only twenty or thirty members are here, and the larger part of the constituencies are unrepresented. This consideration alone ought to deter the Postmaster General from attempting to press this legislation through the House, under the circumstances. There are some kinds of legislation which refer simply to localities, but this touches every constituency in the Dominion, and the representative of each constituency has a right to be heard in regard to it. If the Postmaster General does not think that he ought to defer to that argument, it becomes the duty of these few who remain to make their protest against such legislation, at such a period of the session, and to conserve as far as possible the rights of their fellow-members. There are two different clauses in the Bill which claim the attention of the House; one being a complete change in the system of awarding contracts, but that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) wishes to allow remain for the time being—the other refers to the reorganization of the Railway Mail Department. This part of the Bill gives the Postmaster General power to appoint a controller, such superintendents as may be necessary all over the Dominion, and it confers upon him the very wide power also, to appoint such other employees as may from time to time be found necessary for the proper conduct of the business of the branch.

This latter clause gives the Minister, to all intents and purposes, power to constitute a new branch of the service. The Post Office Department is an immense one at the present time, with a large number of employees at Ottawa and many others scattered throughout all the constituencies of the Dominion. At a period when the finances of the country are not in the most flourishing state to say the least; when the demands upon them are such as were never before made during the same period by any Government, under ordinary circumstances, and in accordance with a general desire, theoretically expressed by hon. gentlemen opposite, for economy in the administration of the different departments at least; it does not seem to be opportune to give to the Postmaster General power to establish a new branch of the service, and to engage such additional employees as he may think necessary. There is, therefore, the additional objection to this measure on the ground of economy. The Postmaster General has not matured his plans with reference to it, and when he was asked the other day incidentally, as to whom he might employ he had but a very indefinite idea.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I had not an indefinite idea.

Mr. FOSTER. He did not know how many he might have to appoint, nor whom he would appoint, but he reserved that for future consideration. Then, he proposes to place over all of these a controller. That officer, I think he gave the House to understand, was to be somebody of experience taken from the service. With an appointment of that kind, once the legislation was adopted, I would have no particular objection, because it would be fair to appoint such a man, with a fullness of knowledge in the actual work of the service. That would not be in its widest sense a political appointment, although my hon. friend would have a perfect right to choose from amongst those capable and qualified, one of his own political persuasion.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not done so, though.

Mr. FOSTER. But there are one or two considerations with reference to the organization of this office in the hands of the Postmaster General. It takes all the railway mail clerks out of the category of those named under the civil service law and commissioners. Heretofore, the officers in that branch of the department, as in every other, had this guarantee of permanence, that they were to be examined and their merit proved by a non-partisan body, by the same body that had charge of this work in connection with the whole civil service, and certain examinations passed and their work done fairly, they had a certain guarantee of permanence, which under the present arrangement they will no longer have. In section 123, the duties of the new Controller are set forth. He is

To have control over the superintendents, railway mail clerks, transfer agents and other employees in such branch in the discharge of the duties from time to time assigned to them by the controller, and to deal with all breaches or neglect of duty, with power to suspend such persons for such breaches or neglect of duty or other sufficient cause, during the pleasure of the Postmaster General.

The power given to him is a large power. He has power absolute over all those employees for certain defined conduct, and then a clause is added, providing for that or other sufficient causes—and a sufficient cause would be, I suppose, which would commend itself to the Controller in his recommendation to the Minister, and which would be approved by the Minister; further, there is to be a certain examination of the railway mail clerks under the Controller, and the reports of these examinations are subject, of course, to the recommendations and decision of the Controller. This gives the Controller a very wide power indeed, and I think it introduces a possibility of a Minister making a great many disposals of persons who may not be grateful to him in a political sense. The very possibility of that being introduced, damages the service. At the present time there is a remote possibility of that kind, and only a remote one. The railway mail clerk, in the first instance, has to pass the civil service examination in order to qualify for eligibility, and, in the next place, he has to get the admission to the service, at which point the political part of our service comes in. Whatever party is in power takes these recommendations of its supporters, and the rule is, and, I suppose, always will be while we have party politics, that those recommendations will be for the adherents of that political party. While we have party government, we can scarcely object to that, so long as meritorious men receive these offices. Once a man has gained admission, however, to the service, and becomes a railway mail clerk, then he is as far as possible removed from political control, and from the difficulties involved in political control. If he attends to his work properly, he can hardly be dismissed by any Government which wishes to retain its reputation for fair dealing and for fair government in this country. Of late, of course, a new crime has been imported, that of political partisanship; and if the unfortunate individual has happened in an unguarded moment to make an expression which may be tortured into an indication that he has a leaning to a certain party, or, worse still, suppose some member of Parliament makes the assertion to a Minister that he is quite convinced that such and such a person has been an offensive political partisan, then, without trial, without being asked to rebut the charge, on the ground of this new political offence, the unhappy railway mail clerk or other employee may be dismissed. These are contingencies which he has to meet; this is a gauntlet he has to run; and it is quite severe enough for the civil service, without importing into it a new organization under the partisan methods which have already been carried out by this Government, in perhaps the mildest phase which it has yet assumed; because, from the back benches, we find very strong and very influential supporters of the Government telling them, if not to their faces, certainly to their backs, that they have not gone half fast enough. We had the expression from two members of Parliament, not long ago, with reference to the canals, that they would not rest satisfied until the canals had been entirely cleaned out, that is, free from Conservative labourers. Their ground of attack was, that the Ministers were too good-natured, that they had some bowels of compassion which they allowed now and then to be stirred, and had retained some Conservative employees; but, said these stalwarts, that is not what ought to be, and we advertise the Ministers that we will not rest content until the last vestige, not of protection, but of Conservative officialdom, shall be wiped out from such works as the Lachine Canal and others they had in view. So that you are importing into the service, and a most important part of the service, a Controller having the power of life and death, with yearly examinations, and reporting upon those yearly examinations to the Minister, who, however strongly humanitarian and sympathetic, he may be if left to himself, is to a certain extent at the mercy of his followers, and these pressing with a strong and ardent desire to have the last vestige of Conservative officials cleaned out from the public service of the country. This Bill furnishes a strong temptation for the dismissal of any of these railway mail clerks who may come within the area of the dislike of any member of Parliament or defeated candidate or office seeker, who wishes and believes that any place vacant will be filled up by some one who is of the right faith, a supporter of the party in power. Now, before we enter upon a course of that kind, it is well that we should at least take that course in cold blood, with all the members present, so that we may have really the voice of this House and the voice of Parliament. I therefore protest against the passage of this Bill for three reasons. First, that it has been delayed until this is no Parliament in reality. In the second place, because it is legislation which affects every constituency, and consequently the members representing these constituencies ought to have an opportunity of looking into this at a time when they are attending to their public duties. And in the third place, because it opens up possibilities, which, to my mind, are better not opened at the present juncture. Later, when this thirst for Conservative blood, speaking officially, shall have been to a certain extent slaked, when the veins of these office seekers shall have been cooled, when the fever is a little gone out of them, and the more normal temperature obtained by years in office shall have brought about a calmer and juster appreciation of existing conditions, the Postmaster General might bring up such a measure as this. At such a period to open up such a door as this would not cause such quakings of fear and tremblings of heart as I am sure this measure does on this side of the Horse at least. And perhaps it would be just as well for the adherents and followers of the Ministers, if they are not sufficient in themselves to restrain this desire, that the door should be kept, to a certain extent, closed, because even the best of Grits, as well as the best of Tories, are liable to yield to temptation, and if they see an opening for the dismissal of their opponents and the replacing of them by their own friends, they are very likely to yield to the temptation. So much with reference to that part of the subject, dealing with it not so much in detail as on principle.

With reference to the fifth section, of course when we come to that, the objections I have to it I shall state, in so far as they influence me. These are the reasons why I commend to the Postmaster General, whether it is not better for him, at this advanced stage of the session, not to press his Bill, but allow us to go on with the absolutely necessary measures which, we supposed, must be got through with before we adjourn. We had before us this afternoon, the railway subsidies. We simply had a discussion upon the principle, and I think the House might now take up the discussion again on these subsidies, whilst so many of us are here as now remain, because when Monday and Tuesday come there will still be fewer present. Surely, it would be wise and reasonable for my hon. friend the Minister of Railways, to push on this important matter of the railway subsidies, in which millions of dollars are involved, and allow trifling and unnecessary legislation to stand over. For some reason, my hon. friend the Postmaster General has intervened with this measure, and we are asked, on the last evening we shall be present in anything like even a quarter full array in this House, to waste the time of the House in discussing this unnecessary and vexatious measure. We are now fagged out. We have been sitting continually from 11 o'clock in the morning through the night, and it will take us until Monday or Tuesday to get through what is really necessary legislation. How many of us will be here on these days? Now that a quasi arrangement has been agreed upon that we shall get through the business, if possible, by Monday evening, every one knows that as many members as possible will go to their homes. I have no doubt that hon. gentlemen opposite had to prevail on members who support them to stay here until to-day. I know that we have had to use argument on this side. Why then should this Bill intervene now, when we have only this partial array present, and leave over important legislation till Monday when we will be still further depleted. I think I have good ground for appealing to the Postmaster General to be merciful if he is strong. I think I may appeal to him to temper his imperial strength with charitable and merciful feelings towards a hard worked House of Commons which, for the last ten days through daylight and darkness, has been sitting from 11 o'clock on the one day until the small hours of morning of the next. During these long hours and days we have remained in the House registering some very wicked propositions, doing the best we could to fight what is bad and help what is good, but none the less wearied because we have accomplished something in this direction. I think the whole House would be satisfied if my hon. friend would weigh well these representations and defer this legislation until next session, and allow the Minister of Railways to go on with what is really of great importance, and which ought not to have been delayed until these dying hours.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I cannot congratulate the hon. Postmaster General on his persistency in bringing forward his Bill before the House at this stage of the session. I have no doubt, from the amount of energy that he has displayed in pressing it, that he must consider it a very important Bill, and it is because it is of such importance that I join with my hon. friend who has just spoken in requesting him not to press his Bill at the present moment. I have no object in opposing its passage except that I do not believe it is a measure which should receive the approval of Parliament. I have stated on more than one occasion the reason why. The measure is one fraught with danger to the department over which my hon. friend presides. I do not believe that we should pass any measure which will remove from the control of Parliament the appointments to a department and leave them within the absolute control of any Minister, however perfect that Minister may be.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Will the hon. gentleman point out one clause of the Bill that proposes to do that?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I would call the attention of the hon. member (Mr. Mulock) to section 2:

When, in the opinion of the Postmaster General, the lowest tender received after public advertisement—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is not under discussion.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron) was not here when we began to discuss this Bill. Clause 1 has been adopted; clause 2 stands for the moment; clause 3 stands; clause 4 has been adopted, and we are now on clause 5—section 119 under clause 5.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I regret that I was not here when the Bill first came up for the consideration of the House this evening. I understood, from the information I received, that clause 2 was kept in abeyance, but was open to discussion still. If I am not in order in discussing it at the present moment, I am quite willing to wait until the Chairman decides that the proper time has come for me to offer my objections to it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. Postmaster General had agreed that, on account of the absence of the hon. gentleman, we should proceed with clause 5.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Well, Sir, I will take clause 5. This clause is an innovation upon the law, and it is manifest that it involves an increased expenditure in the department. As I have been able to understand the policy of the hon. gentleman from those newspapers that are supposed to be the organs of the Liberal party, he sought to make reductions in the expenditure and expressed the opinion that, under the old regime, if I may so call it, the expenditure of the department was very much larger than it should be. Where is the indication that the hon. gentleman wants to remedy the evil which he has pointed out to Parliament and to the public? We are not yet told how the hon. gentleman wishes to distribute the salaries, but we can see that there are important positions that he is going to give to several of the new nominees, and the salaries must be considerably increased, thus increasing the expenditure of the department. He is creating a controller and superintendents. Up to this moment this work has been carried on by the inspectors, who not only inspected this branch, but inspected post offices generally. Now a number of new officers are to be employed, increasing to a very large extent the number of employees, who are already supposed to be, as the hon. gentleman has stated, too numerous already. Are the inspectors going to be entirely relieved of the duty of looking after the mail clerks and the mail service? From my experience in the department, I do not believe that there is any advantage in centralization; but it seems to be the policy of the present Postmaster General to centralize as much as possible. The hon. gentleman wishes to dispense with the advice of Parliament in establishing the new offices under this Bill. The Controller is to be the head of the branch. I would like to know how many officials are going to be placed under his authority to work the branch, and, if these officers are under the Controller's authority, what is to become of the inspectors, who are to be relieved of this duty of looking after the mail clerks? The inspectors, from the nature of their position, are better able to look after the mail clerks than any official in the department. Their duty calls for them to travel throughout their several districts, and it seems to me natural to suppose that their experience gives them a knowledge of the department and of the needs of the service that can be used to a greater practical advantage than that of a controller with headquarters at Ottawa. But I see that the hon. gentleman wishes to complete that organization by placing under the authority of the Controller, superintendents and other officials, who will be doing the duty which, so far, has been perfectly done, in my judgment, by the inspector and by the organization that exists at present. It seems that superintendents are to be established "at points to be determined by the head of the department." Always "by the head of the department," "and such other employees as are, from time to time, necessary for the proper conduct of the business of the branch." This is manifestly increasing the expenditure, and I do not see how greater efficiency can be secured by the change which the hon. gentleman is anxious to introduce. It is further provided:

The Governor in Council may appoint to such branch an officer to be called the Controller of the Railway Mail Service of Canada, together with such superintendents of mail clerks, transfer agents—

I do not quite understand that "transfer agents" may be; they do not exist at the present time.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, they do. Does the hon. gentleman wish me to explain? I do not wonder at the hon. gentleman not knowing, though he was at the head of the department for years. A transfer agent is an agent who remains at the railway stations and see that the mails are safely transferred from one train to the other. For example, in the city of Toronto, the hon. gentleman may not be aware of it, he had agents appointed under the Civil Service Act, and it was their duty to see that the through mails were properly transferred from one train to the other.

Mr. MILLS. They were called mail-carriers.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, they are called mail-transfer agents.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not see any such officer named in the Post Office Act.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are such.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman need not be surprised that I did not know any of these transfer agents. I am surprised that he should be surprised that I never heard of them. The hon. gentleman has explained that the official who did that duty under the Act was never called a transfer agent. The hon. gentleman can run over the whole Post Office Act before he finds any officer designated by that name.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman will refer to section 29 of the Civil Service Act he will find provision there for a large number of officials, not merely of the postal service, but of other branches, messengers, sorters, packers, letter carriers, mail transfer agents, box collectors. Then on page 98 of the Civil Service List he will find Richard Dagg, under the head of the London division of the post office, mail transfer agent, date of appointment, 26th June, 1893. The hon. gentleman says he never heard of one, yet the hon. gentleman appointed a man named Kavanagh mail transfer agent at Brockville about two years ago.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I still state that in so far as the transfer agents are concerned, if they do exist, they certainly do not perform the duties which the hon. gentleman has stated, because when a train comes into a station the mail carrier, the man who has got the contract, is the man who must look after the transfer of mails from that train to another train, or to the post office. They are merely letter carriers, nothing else. Now, as to the transfer from one branch of the civil service to another, that is a point which has led to discussion on more than one occasion, and the reason is that in the administration of the department it has been the practice under several Postmasters General to make the promotions in the various classes. Promotions from one branch to another branch have always been opposed by the experts in the department and they have resisted them under very strong pressure. The Post Office Department is more technical than almost any other, and there are branches in that department the duties of which are absolutely separate from those of any other branch. Take, for instance, the money order branch, take the dead letter branch, it is impossible to take from one of those branches one man and transfer him to another where the work is quite different, without considerably interfering with the efficiency of the service. These promotions so far have been made within the various branches, and I express the opinion that it would be a great mistake to change what so far has been the rule in the department, and to make promotions from one branch to another, irrespective of the rule which has prevailed and which was always followed, so far as my experience goes, namely, to make the promotions within the branches, and not to take a man in one branch and to give him promotion in another branch. That is one of the reasons why I think that the change now contemplated would not be at all an improvement. I still believe that in these expiring days of the session, in view of the importance of this measure, it would be a great mistake to insist upon its being passed at the present moment. I think that the hon. gentleman, if he held over this Act until the next session, with the experience which he is fast acquiring in the different branches of the department, he would be in a better position to lay before Parliament a measure more complete, and less antagonistic than this one seems to be to the rules which have been followed in the Post Office Department. I do not think it will be an improvement. I think it will cause a large addition to the expenditure of the department. I think the new office of controller which is being created by the hon. gentleman, will necessitate a duplication of the different officers who so far, under the inspectors, have been able to carry out the work efficiently, and to the satisfaction of the public and of the department. I do not recollect that the hon. gentleman has given any reason that can be appreciated as satisfactory for the change by the House of Commons at this time. I do not see that the changes contemplated can improve the efficiency of the service, and I see that they must increase considerably the expense, without giving any better service to the public, or giving more control to the department over the branch in which the hon. gentleman wishes to make the change. The inspectors, so far, have fulfilled their duty in a very satisfactory manner, and I do not believe that the work they are called upon to do has increased to such an extent that this additional expense should be laid upon the country for the purpose of creating those new offices.

Mr. SPROULE. I wanted to ask the Postmaster General if he could give any opinion regarding the number of superintendents that he would be likely to require to appoint?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No superintendent can be appointed without first obtaining a vote from Parliament. No superintendent appointed will be a new official, but he will be one of the existing staff who has acquired experience in the service. There will be no additional expense incurred by the appointment of a superintendent, because he will simply be a transferee from some other office in the mail service. So that no matter how many there are there cannot be any more offices than there are at present. I would tell the hon. gentleman how many there are engaged in this task. There is one in the city of Hal-fax, another in the city of St. John, another in the city of Quebec, another in the city of Montreal, another in Ottawa, another in Toronto, another in London, one in Winnipeg and one in Vancouver. None of these are new appointments. They are simply men transferred from other branches of the railway mail service, men who will give good service or, at least, it is hoped they will. I have taken no part whatever in the choice of the staff. They have been chosen for me by those in the service who know their qualifications best. The Controller was recommended to me by the highest executive officer under the deputy. He is not of my political party. The superintendents have been chosen on the advice of the controller, and I think the chief superintendent. I have not done what has been suggested, made the appointments on political grounds. For example, the superintendent in the city of Ottawa is Mr. Charles Plumb, who has been a strong Conservative in the past, though I do not suppose he is now. I confirmed the recommendation for his appointment because he was recommended as the best available man for this office.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to get some more information about this matter. I would like to disabuse the hon. gentleman's mind of the impression that I am trying to make any political capital out of what he has done. What I want to know is what additional expense this will entail?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It will not entail any additional expense; on the contrary, I expect that it will result in the substantial reduction in the expense. Not only that, but it will promote greater efficiency. I submit that the arrangement is absolutely necessary for the efficient working of the railway mail service, as well as for its strict economical administration. I would not wish to be bound to a statement to-night as to the extent to which this system will produce economy, but I think that, after it has been enforced a few months it will commend itself to every one who desires to see the best service given to the country and, at the same time, to have the treasury properly safeguarded. There will be no increase; on the contrary, it will result in a substantial reduction.

Mr. MILLS. Do I understand the Postmaster General to say that the superintendents have already been appointed?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, temporarily, by Order in Council, on approbation.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman has just mentioned that there are superintendents at Halifax, St. John, Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, London, Winnipeg and Vancouver. Now, does the hon. gentleman refer to the inspectors or has he made appointments of new officers, called superintendents, for these different places? When I was in the department we had inspectors in these places. But the inspectors are still existing in these postal districts, and I would like to know if, besides these, the Postmaster General has appointed superintendents.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman appears to forget that the office of superintendent is not a new office at all. There are superintendents to-day, but I will not attempt to educate the hon. gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron) in the intricacies of his own department. They have been too much for him in the past.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Mail clerk superintendents?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, does the hon. gentleman deny that? I have simply this to say, that I have placed this service under the direction of a controller instead of the local inspectors. It is simply a transfer of the jurisdiction.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the arrangement is likely to make an improvement and, to that extent, it is commendable; but, on the other hand, we ought to be careful that we are not making a list of new offices which would entail additional expense to the country. The Minister has assured us that he is using the men now employed in the service, and that there is no additional expense. Of course, that would go a long way towards satisfying us that it was unobjectionable. But when you come to read it you see that "There shall be superintendents." He has mentioned nine places, in each of which there is to be a superintendent. That might imply that you would have new offices or it might only be nine offices that are already in existence. If that were so, it would not be objectionable, but if it meant a case of nine new offices, it would be open to objection. Then it says:

The scale of salaries of clerks and other employees in the offices of the superintendents shall be the same as for clerks in the city post offices.

That would seem to imply that there must be a number of clerks in the superintendents offices. If you have nine superintendents and nine new offices, which would require clerks, there is no question that it would involve the appointment of a large number of new men. If you take men from the railway mail service to fill these offices their places would be required to be filled by persons from the outside, but if it is only meant to apply to officers in the service to-day, and it is simply intended to change their names, it should not be so objectionable. The hon. gentleman says that he will only take the men in the service now. The Bill says, "transfer agents and other employees in the mail service branch," but it does not say that they shall be in that service.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Read section 127:

Mr. SPROULE:

Except in British Columbia, no person shall be eligible to be appointed such superintendent unless he has served at least ten years as a railway mail clerk.

That, of course, would necessitate his taking them from the railway mail clerks, but in that branch you would make vacancies which would have to be filled from the outside. It seems to me that, putting this work under a Controller is an improvement upon the present arrangement, from everything I can hear by talking with railway mail clerks and those informed upon it. If it does not mean the creation of a lot of new offices, then it would be unobjectionable on that account. As for the other portions of the Bill, they seem to be workable. It cannot be objectionable if it does not mean the creation of new offices and the appointment of a lot of new men.

Mr. MILLS. It may be that the present Postmaster General will declare that there shall be no new officers appointed, but succeeding Postmasters General may see fit to appoint quite a number of superintendents under this Act. I am rather inclined to agree with the last speaker (Mr. Sproule) that it is a good thing to have the post office mail service branch out of the hands of the post office inspector. From what information I could gather, I think it is a popular thing. I believe, however, that these districts for the superintendents should be defined by this Act.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That would never work.

Mr. MILLS. If that were done, it would not be at the discretion of a Postmaster General to have as many superintendents as he thought fit.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You would have to vote the money.

Mr. MILLS. Why not put a provision in the Act that the Postmaster General shall not appoint more than are therein stated.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Parliament always has a check in voting the money.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I wish to ask the Minister if the expression "head of the department" in this clause is supposed by him to be equivalent to "Postmaster General"?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The expression "Postmaster General" is specially used in different sections of the Post Office Act, and I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that for the sake of uniformity, and to prevent any difficulties that may arise hereafter. it would be better to retain the expression "Postmaster General."

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Civil Service Act uses the expression "head of the department."

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is because it is desired to designate the head of any department, but in an Act relating especially to a particular department, the custom is to refer to the head of the department by a particular name, and to adopt that name throughout.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have no objection to make the change.

Mr. POWELL. I have failed to discover what section of the statute relates to the duties of superintendents and authorizes their appointment.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Under the Post Office Act are what are called chief clerks, and these are discharging the duties under another name.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I was right in telling the Postmaster General that the superintendents did not exist under the Act.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I supposed that the hon. gentleman knew what duties were being assigned to these.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do, and I say that the duties which the hon. gentleman is assigning to the superintendents are not the duties performed by a chief mail clerk.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think they are.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am sure they are not.

Mr. POWELL. If the duties of the superintendents are not laid down by the Act, and even if they were laid down by the Act, they would not apply apparently to this, which is a special department. Serious consequences might arise from this. I presume that the Postmaster General is familiar with some litigation that arose a few years ago in connection with a question somewhat of this kind; I refer to the dismissal of young Waterbury. Under 31 Vic., there was power to appoint post office inspectors. The department undertook to appoint and constitute a new official by the name of the chief post office inspector, and this chief post office inspector was a Mr. Dewe who came down to St. John, N.B., to hold an investigation into certain alleged misconduct on the part of young Waterbury. While the investigation was going on he happened to make some statement in the presence of a third party, and Waterbury sued the chief post office inspector for slander. The matter came before the court in the first instance by way of demurrer, and that case is reported in 3 Pugsley, N.B.

Reports. Our court unanimously held that inasmuch as there were no statutory duties laid down for the chief inspector, and no such officer, therefore Mr. Dewe had no protection and no justification; that communication was not privileged, and he was mulcted severely in costs. This matter afterwards came before the courts on motion for a new trial, when all the facts were given, and this motion for a new trial is reported in 19 N.B. Reports, elaborate judgments having been given by the different judges. Judge Weldon gave a dissenting judgment; the other two judgments being delivered by Mr. Justice Wetmore and Mr. Justice Fisher, the latter of whom was a celebrated jurist, especially in these matters that had a constitutional phase. I see the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) casting a significant glance at me, as if this matter had gone up on appeal and a different judgment had been rendered. It did go up on appeal, and, in order to show the House that the judgment on appeal did not at all conflict with the judgment of the lower court, so far as that judgment may apply to the particular case now before the House, I will simply direct the attention of the Postmaster General to the fact that, under the old law, the duties of the inspectors were specifically laid down, and those duties are copied, almost verbatim, into the present law relating to the postal service, that is, chapter 38 of the Revised Statutes of Canada. Now, I will read one paragraph from the judgment of Judge Wetmore:

As this action was commenced 24th July, 1875, before the Post Office Act of 1875 came into operation, it must be discussed under 31 Victoria, chapter 10. Section 8 provides for the appointment of the Postmaster General. Section 10 specifies his powers in 18 subsections. Under none of them is reference made as to inquiry or investigations in respect to lost or missing letters, or such as the defendant was engaged in in the present case. By section 14, the Governor may from time to time appoint fit and proper persons to be and to be called "post office inspectors," and to be stationed at such places and exercise their power and perform their duties and functions within such limits respectively as he may from time to time appoint. Subsection 2 particularizes their duties under such instructions as may from time to time be given to them by the Postmaster General,—after specifying a number of other duties, to inquire into complaints of losses of valuable letters, and generally to do all and whatsoever they are from time to time lawfully instructed or required by the Postmaster General. Section 14 applies only to post office inspectors; these are to be appointed by the Governor at any time, and, when so appointed and the limits of their respective districts so fixed, they can legally act under instructions from the Postmaster General, or Deputy Postmaster General, whose appointment is authorized by section 15; but I apprehend there is no power to act until so appointed, and the person so appointed can only act within the limits fixed by the Governor. A report of a Committee of the Privy Council, in reference to the Inspectors' Branch of the Post Office Department, approved by the Governor General in Council, dated 25th May, 1870, was in evidence, in which Mr. John Dewe (the defendant) was recommended to be appointed Chief Inspector (with station at Ottawa). Under this, it may be presumed, he was appointed, as he says in his evidence he assumed the duties of that office in October, 1870. What the duties of that office are, or under what Act the appointment was made, does not appear.

When the case came before the Supreme Court of Canada, that court held that the fact that Mr. Dewe was appointed and named Chief Post Office Inspector, did not alter the fact that he was a post office inspector, that the wording of the Act applied to him, and that his defence that it was a privileged communication, was a defence that could be supported in law. Mr. Justice Strong, at page 155, vol. vi., Supreme Court Reports, said :

I have no difficulty in determining that the defendant was a duly authorized officer of the Post Office Department, under section 14 of the Act 31 Vic., c. 10. By that Act it is enacted that:

"The Governor may, from time to time, appoint fit and proper persons to be and to be called "post office inspectors," and to be stationed at such places, and exercise their powers to perform their duties and functions within such limits respectively as he may, from time to time, appoint."

I find nothing in this provision to interfere with the power of the Governor General to appoint an inspector with authority to act anywhere within the Dominion, that is to say, with powers coextensive with the limits of the Dominion. There is nothing in the language of this clause making it obligatory to restrict the office to any particular portion of the Dominion; the language is permissive, not imperative. Therefore, in my opinion, the Order in Council of the 25th May, 1870, constituted a valid appointment of the defendant as Chief Inspector for the Dominion. By section 15 of the same Act provision is made for the appointment of a Deputy Postmaster General, who, it is enacted,

"Shall have the oversight and directions of the other officers, clerks, messengers, or servants, and of all persons employed in the postal service, and shall have, under the Postmaster General, the general management of the business of the Department, and his directions shall be obeyed in like manner as the directions of the Postmaster General would be, subject, however, to the control of the latter in all matters whatsoever."

The Postmaster General may say that this clause applies to this particular matter, and that, under subsection "a" of section 123, the necessary protection would be afforded to this officer. However, I will read on :

The defendant acted under express directions from the Deputy Postmaster General in what he did in reference to the investigation at St. John, which resulted in the dismissal of the plaintiff, for the reasons given in the words which are complained of by the plaintiff as defamatory.

And this may support the view which is doubtless entertained by the Postmaster General :

Again, the statute 31 Vic., c. 10, organizing the Post Office Department, is not a disabling but rather, an enabling statute. It authorizes the Governor General to appoint officers, and may be considered as implying and undertaking by Parliament to provide salaries for officers appointed in accordance with its terms. But it contains nothing taking away from the Governor General the authority which the Crown can always exercise without parliamentary sanction, subject only to a sufficient provision for the payment of the salaries by Parliament, of appointing any officers it may deem necessary for the administrative service of the Dominion, and of defining in regulating to their duties.

Mr. POWELL.

The most important judgment was delivered by Chief Justice Ritchie, who takes a different view of the matter from that of Mr. Justice Strong. He says :

I think the law is very clear on that subject. It is for the judge to rule whether the occasion creates privilege. It is clear that defendant was de facto, and I think de jure, in the discharge of a public duty, and the words were spoken while in the discharge of that duty and in reference thereto, to subordinate officers having a corresponding duty; therefore, were privileged.

The result of all the litigation was, that Parliament considered the matter to be one of such gravity and uncertainty that at the very earliest opportunity afterwards it amended the Act; and I call the hon. gentleman's attention to section 12 of chapter 35, which amends the Act in this way :

The Governor in Council may, from time to time, appoint one or more person or persons to be Chief Inspector or Chief Inspectors of the Post Office Department of Canada, with authority over all or over as many post office inspectors and assistant post office inspectors and their respective districts as the Governor in Council designates, and with such other duties connected with the post offices of Canada as are, from time to time, assigned to him or them by the Postmaster General; and with power in any part of Canada to inquire into and investigate complaints or suspected cases of misconduct or mismanagement, &c.

And the specific duties are enumerated. The Postmaster General will see that, although the result of this litigation was to protect Mr. Dewe from the action that was brought against him by Mr. Waterbury, yet the full investigation of the subject threw considerable doubt on this matter of the protection of the inspector, unless his duties are specifically defined, or unless the Postmaster General or the Governor in Council are authorized to define those duties with particularity; and Parliament was so impressed with this view that it immediately altered the law and authorized the Chief Inspector to be appointed and his duties to be defined. I, therefore, suggest that a clause should be added, defining the duties of this official, so that he will have the protection of the law and will not be rendered liable to suits such as that brought against Mr. Dewe. The Postmaster General, a few moments ago, made an argument, in which he claimed that those individuals who are appointed, are inspectors, irrespective of this Act altogether. Now, from that construction I expressly dissent, and dissent most strongly. In the first place, I ask the hon. gentleman to look at his own Act. So far from these people being inspectors or superintendents by virtue of former Acts, the office did not exist at all and has no statutory status whatever. Let us see what section 120 says :

The Governor in Council may appoint to such branch an officer to be called "The Controller of the Railway Mail Service of Canada" together with such superintendents, railway mail clerks, transfer agents and other employees as are deemed necessary ; and such controller, superintendents, railway mail clerks, transfer agents and other employees may be appointed from among persons now in the civil service.

It is thus entirely a new office and not an old office. Why, the very wording of the hon. gentleman's Bill destroys his contention.

And, in such event, such appointments shall not, within the meaning of "The Civil Service Superannuation Act" or any other Act, be regarded as new appointments, but shall be regarded as mere transfers from one branch of the civil service to another.

Language could not make it clearer. It is entirely a new branch of the service. The duties performed under the previous section are not the duties they were liable to perform under the previous state of affairs at all, but the hon. gentleman has constituted a new and extraordinary office. If these officers are to be protected, they must be protected by statute, and if there is going to be a satisfactory administration of this Act, their duties must be defined by statute or else the substitutory course taken of authorizing the Governor in Council to make regulations

Mr. MILLS. If the superintendent relieves, as I understand he does, the post office inspector of some of his work, and a superintendent is taken from the service, there must of necessity be some work left undone by the superintendent in his former capacity. Then there will be a vacancy which must be filled and will consequently entail an increase of the number of officers. If the inspector is relieved from a portion of his work and that portion is done by the superintendent, and the superintendent is taken from the service, somebody must fill the superintendent's place, and this is all at the discretion of the Postmaster General. The Postmaster General may go outside of the service to get the superintendents. The word "may" in this section when it applies to the Postmaster General cannot, by any manner of means, be interpreted as meaning "shall," but he may go outside of the employees of the service to get some one to fill the position of superintendent. I cannot see how that coincides with what the Postmaster General tells us that there is to be no increase of officers. The officers must be increased if this Act is carried out. Now, as regards the number of the superintendents, I suggest that the country be divided into districts. The Postmaster General says that, according to the constitution of the service, that cannot be well accomplished ! I cannot see, if Canada cannot be divided into districts, why the number of superintendents cannot be defined and regulated, so that there will not be too many. I look with suspicion on this measure, and I shall tell the committee why. It looks to me as if it created a sort of congestion of power into the hands of one man, and taking into consideration the fact that in section 3, which will come up for discussion later, the word "four" is struck out in the second line of section 61 of the Postal Act, and the word "eight" substituted, which is an increase of time, this congestion of power and increase of time looks to me as if this Bill were on the same line as laws we passed recently in the province of Nova Scotia. In that province there was passed recently a Railway Act called "the Railway Development Act" or some such name, which gave power to the executive of that province, not only to bonus a road, but also to incorporate it without going to Parliament at all. All the applicants for incorporation have to do is to go to the executive and convince them that a road between certain points is necessary, and they have the financial ability the executive have power to incorporate that road at once, and not only incorporate it but bonus it at the rate of $3,200 per mile, without going to Parliament at all. This Bill looks very much like these Nova Scotia Acts. Then in Nova Scotia, at the very last session, they extended the duration of Parliament from four years to five years. Instead, therefore, of having an election every four years as formerly, they need only have a general election every five years. It is just as if instead of having a mail contract to last only five years, Parliament shall provide that it shall continue eight years. There was a great cry against the late Government for renewing contracts after the four years had expired, which is their limit of duration under the law. Now, however, when a contract is passed, it will last, by this amendment, not four years but eight years. It is on account of these things that I look with suspicion on this Bill and with that suspicion that amounts to certainty on clause 2 and 3.

In clause 5 there is an element which I am inclined to favour. I think myself that the railway mail service of Canada is of sufficient importance to have it stand separate and apart from the postal service of Canada, but I am inclined to criticise considerably the details of clause 5, and I am of opinion that it would be in the public interest if the Postmaster General would allow the Bill to stand until next session and not force it upon the House at this late stage. The department will suffer no inconvenience. I understand that the superintendents are appointed all the same. They are there doing their work, notwithstanding the fact that an Act of Parliament has not been passed. Well, if they can go on for a week, surely they can for a few months, and we will then have ample opportunity of thoroughly looking into this matter. I am inclined to agree in the main features of section 5, but some of the details are very objectionable.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I cannot say that I concur with my hon. friend that the principle of section 5 is a good one, but as we are more particularly concerned with the details just at present, I would like to point out to the Postmaster General that the language in section 14 is not at all carefully chosen.

Mr. LISTER. We want this well explained.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to direct the attention of my hon. friend (Mr. Lister) to this point, and I am sure he would agree with me.

Mr. LISTER. I think very likely.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think if the hon. gentleman will take a copy of the Act and just follow—

Mr. LISTER. I have it here. I am just following you.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the hon. gentleman has before him a copy of the Post Office Act as contained in the Revised Statutes, he will find that section 4 reads as follows:—

There shall be at the seat of government of Canada a Post Office Department for the superintendence and management under the direction of the Postmaster General, of the postal service of Canada.

I would suggest that it would be desirable to follow, as far as possible, the same language in creating this branch. The section I have already referred to does not say that there "shall be at the seat of Government of Canada a Post Office Department composed of the Postmaster General." But that is about the language that is used here:

The Governor in Council may establish a branch of the Post Office Department, to be called the Railway Mail Service Branch, to be composed of a controller, with headquarters at Ottawa, superintendents at points to be determined by the head of the department and such other employees as are, from time to time, necessary for the conduct of the business of the branch.

This is followed up by the next section in which it is provided that the Governor in Council may appoint to this branch a number of persons of whom the branch is to be composed. Now, I may say, and to this point I would ask specially the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), that in some of the measures that have been brought down during the present session, and in some of the contracts, there does not seem to have been a great deal of care in drafting. For example, in one of the measures brought down it is provided:

The said steamers are * * * except such letters as are not required by law to pass through the post office, the contractors shall not receive or permit to be received or convey on board of a mail ship other letters than those mentioned—

Making very little sense, if grammatically construed.

The said steamers are * * * the terms "mails" to include all boxes, bags—

And so on, which is perfectly meaningless. And it continues in this way through a long series of subsections. And another clause of the same contract says:

The contractors shall and will * * * at the same time they, the said contractors, will give to the Minister a guarantee—

And so on. I have been quoting from the contract for the fast Atlantic line. I did not direct attention to these matters at the time it was before us, because I thought probably a court would spell out what the contract meant. But if any one looks at the third section of the fast Atlantic contract, and also at the first section, and compares the main sections with the subsections, he will see that there is no meaning in them, if they are read according to the ordinary rules of grammatical construction. Something of the same haste or lack of care is manifest in the drafting of this Bill. I would suggest to the Postmaster General that it would be far better to follow the language of section 4 of the Post Office Act and use some such expression as this:

The Governor in Council may establish a branch of the Post Office Department, to be called "The Railway Mail Service Branch," and to be under the direction of a controller to be appointed by the Postmaster General.

I think that would be a much better form of expression and would make the statute much more intelligible. Now, with respect to the words "superintendents," which has been referred to by my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Powell), I do not see that term used in the Post Office Act. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mullock) can correct me in that or not. If the word "superintendent" is not used or defined in the Post Office Act, it seems to me quite clear that the office of the superintendent should be defined under subsection 119, or some subsequent subsection of the Act, and the duties of the office should be set forth. Otherwise, the difficulty may arise which my hon. friend from Westmoreland has pointed out. I understand the Postmaster General to state that officers have been appointed who, under the Post Office Act, or by some regulation of the Department are known as superintendents. If so, I have been unable to ascertain just where the word is defined. But, in any case, as has been pointed out, this statute involves the creation of a new department or the creation of a new branch of the department—to all intents and purposes it is a new department—and it might very well be thought that the word “superintendent,” as defined or used under any regulation of the department, if it is so used, would not have necessarily, the same meaning as under this Act. Therefore, I think it desirable that the Postmaster General should consider this before passing the Act in its present form.

Mr. SPROULE. I would ask the hon. Postmaster General to tell us what the duties of the superintendent are, as there seems to be some misunderstanding in regard to that. I understood him to say that these officers were already appointed. But I am informed by my hon. friend (Mr. Beattie) sitting to my left that while there is a man in London whom he regards as doing that duty, he has no office but simply goes on to the train and looks after the exchange of the mails. But he has no office and no one under him. But it is clear from the Postmaster General's explanation that this officer is to have a residence at some particular point and an office and is to have clerks under him, because the Bill speaks of “the scale of salaries of clerks and other employees in the offices of the superintendents.” Perhaps the hon. Minister could explain that.

Mr. BEATTIE. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) seems to have misunderstood me. Mr. McWhinney, who fills the position of superintendent at London, as I understand it, has an office up stairs in the post office building, but he has no clerks. His duty is somewhat the same as that of a superintendent. He visits the trains and railway mail clerks going both east and west. He is a very efficient officer, I must say. I may add that the transfer mail agent is an officer known in London for years. He has an office in the railway station and takes charge of the mails as they arrive and transfers them to their proper trains. It seems to me that this is merely putting the railway mail clerks under a new head and giving the present officers the different name of superintendents. So far as London is concerned both those positions mentioned in the Bill exist already. I think it is merely putting the department of railway mail clerks under a different head and making a new comptroller.

Mr. SPROULE. If that is the case, and it is the same man, and he is now named a superintendent, will the Postmaster General give us some explanation as to what additional duties he is expected to perform, which will necessitate the employment of other hands?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am only too glad to give any explanation. The Controller has certain duties assigned to him, as the hon. gentleman sees by reference to the Bill, and the superintendents are his agents, to assist to carry out those duties. If he has a staff to assist him, of course, their duties are those that are assigned to the branch. The general Post Office Act says that the Postmaster General may, subject to the limitations of the Act, assign duties to various officers, and that Act places railway mail clerks under local inspectors. That has not worked well; it has been an expensive and a cumbersome system, wholly against the public interest. This is a transfer of the most important branch of the service and placing it under direct control of the head of the branch.

Mr. SPROULE. What new duties will the superintendent have added to those which he has already performed?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There will be a great reduction in the work done in connection with the railway mail service by the system I am asking the House to assent to. At present, the country is divided up into small districts. For example, in the province of Ontario the mail clerks have been assigned to those districts, and you have groups of inspectors and their staffs, and a system of clerks attached to them, and red-tapeism that makes it expensive to carry on the service, and that sets up a cumbersome and awkward system of the civil service, and, worst of all, it has greatly impaired the efficiency of the railway mail service. There has been no stimulus to the railway mail clerks to excel and to acquire proficiency. Any inquiry required to be made was a most troublesome affair. If the hon. gentleman is familiar with the geography of the country, let me give him an illustration. There are at present railway mail districts and an inspector's district at Toronto; there is also another at Stratford, and another at Barrie. A train leaves Toronto with two railway mail clerks of the department in a postal car in charge of postal matter for Orangeville, where the train divides, and one portion of that mail matter, we will say, goes to Teeswater in the Stratford district, and another portion branches off and goes to Owen Sound in the Barrie district. At that point of separation the Stratford mail clerk proceeds with his mail matter to Teeswater and the other to Owen Sound. They return, and finally meet again at Orangeville and go down to Toronto. Now, of those two clerks, one, we will say, has been attached to the Stratford district, and another to the Barrie district. They have, therefore, an inspector to whom they report, the Stratford man to the Stratford inspector, the Barrie man to the Barrie inspector. Neither of them live in their inspectorates, and they start on their journey in the morning from the inspectorate at Toronto. Some difficulty occurs on that train, some letter goes astray, or something else happens, and it is a subject of inquiry. Instead of that being inquired about directly by the Controller in Ottawa, he would be advised of it by his local superintendent. The procedure today involves the most roundabout system of red tape. The inspector in Toronto, for example, has heard about it. What is his course of action? He writes to that mail clerk belonging to the Stratford division, who may be sitting in his office at the time; he writes to the inspector of Stratford, asking him to report upon the incident in connection with this trip from Toronto to Orangeville; the latter writes to his mail clerk, whom he does not see, and he gets his answer, and there are three letters. Then that answer is sent to the Toronto inspector; then he has to have it confirmed by a similar roundabout procedure. He writes to the inspector at Barrie, who writes to his mail clerk, and he sends his answer back to the inspector in Barrie, and then that letter is sent to the inspector in Toronto, and there will be ten letters written, and ten or fifteen days will elapse before the supposed transaction has been dressed up. Meantime the public service has suffered. That is a sample of the system of red-tapeism that has been built up by having these little groups or departments of the postal service scattered through the province of Ontario. Instead of this service being built up for the benefit of the people, there has been no practical administration at the head of it, and a system of red-tapeism has grown up, and the public is suffering. There is unnecessary expense and inefficiency in the service, and delays. The mail clerks are not encouraged in efficiency, and there is no supervision over them to speak of. They were not rewarded by reason of their efficiency. There were when I took office 404 railway mail clerks in the service of this country, a considerable number of whom would be unnecessary had they had proper encouragement and been under a proper system, free as much as possible from red tape, under a system devised solely in the interest of the people. When I detach that work, if you will permit me to do so, from the inspector's office,—

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would the hon. gentleman allow me? How would it be, for example, in Nova Scotia? As I understand, there is one inspector for that province and another for New Brunswick?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Well, now, do any of the mail clerks, for example, leaving Halifax in the morning, run beyond the jurisdiction of the inspector of Nova Scotia? Do any of them, for example, run as far as St. John?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not familiar with that particular district, but I will give the hon. gentleman an illustration. There are mail clerks who run from Lévis to Moncton, and there are mail clerks who now run from Moncton to Lévis. We have, temporarily, at least, abolished these inspectors' lines, the divisional lines, in so far as the railway mail service is concerned. The railway mail service is the same as that of the conductor, who continues his run to a reasonable distance, instead of having to break his journey because he has reached the end of his district. Of course, it is not to say that the abuse has existed to that extent, but it has existed to some extent. Now, to continue the line of explanation evoked by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). By this transfer of railway mail clerks from the local officers or inspectors to the Controller at Ottawa, the delays and the expenditure to which I alluded will be obviated, and the inspectors will then be at greater liberty to discharge the duty for which they were originally intended, for which their offices were created, namely, to regulate the work, such as inspection of post offices, watching the land service and the mail services, and to be on the move more or less, as in England, travelling from post office to post office, looking after their offices to see that they are kept well and in good order, to see that the postmasters understand their duties, and to avoid such things as obliged me to ask a vote of Parliament to prevent last year. I do not know that these frauds could have been discovered, but, as far as possible, there will be an active supervision over these postmasters and it will also enable them to feel that there is a reasonable supervision over them. It will leave the inspectors free to properly discharge the duties attached to their offices and it will also be a great saving of expense as time goes on. If this Bill is passed I do not intend to make the arbitrary use of it that has been suggested by some hon. gentlemen. I intend to use all these high offices as prizes for the worthy members of the mail service. As my hon. friend from London (Mr. Beattie) has illustrated, for the information of the committee, perhaps, the hon. gentleman will be good enough to tell me to what political party Mr. McWhinney belongs, whose appointment I recommended to Council, for the time being?

Mr. MULOCK.

Mr. BEATTIE. Mr. McWhinney has been in the service for forty years and he is also a very good Conservative, I believe. I must say that he is a most efficient officer. He has held the position of inspector or superintendent, as you now call him, for a number of years. He visits all the trains coming and going and looks after the mail clerks. I think that before being taken into the post office he was a mail clerk on the train. He was then promoted to the inspector of mail clerks. As far as I understand it you do not propose to make any new offices. These men are occupying these positions today as inspectors and you are promoting them by calling them superintendents.

Mr. MILLS. With the same duties as they had before.

Mr. BEATTIE. The same duties.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They are called superintendents in the United States. The system that I am suggesting here exists in the United States. There is one controller—I do not know his name or whether he is called a controller—and over the whole postal system of the United States there are these superintendents at railway centres where there are many trains. These superintendents must be always on the alert to see that the clerks engaged in the mail service are constantly at their duties.

Mr. SPROULE. The Minister gave us a statement in regard to what the routine would be, describing what would happen on a trip between Toronto and Owen Sound in the case of a letter being lost. Two railway mail clerks go out to Orangeville where they separate, one going to Teeswater and the other to Owen Sound. Owen Sound is in the Barrie division and Orangeville in the Stratford division. He gave us a statement of what would happen in a case of a letter going astray. Would he explain what would be the routine under the same circumstances of a letter going astray on that route as to where it would be reported and how it would be traced.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We would send out what is called a tracer.

Mr. SPROULE. Would it first be reported to the Toronto office?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We adopt a system of sending out a tracer. This is a sheet which is sent out, and when you get your clue you follow it up.

Mr. MILLS. That is done now.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is done in a roundabout way. This tracer is sent out and each person whose hands it passes through makes his note upon it, and at last it comes back to the place from which it started.

Mr. SPROULE. That would be Toronto, I presume?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It would come back again to the person who started the tracer.

Mr. SPROULE. How would you divide the country? There must be some divisions because I understand that no certain places where there are already superintendents which have been named by the Postmaster General. These are Halifax, St. John, Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, London, Winnipeg and Vancouver. These are all important cities and they must be centres of districts. Would a railway mail clerk report to the centre of the division or would he be obliged to report direct to the controller at Ottawa?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The matter would be worked out in the most expeditious way.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is with a great deal of diffidence that I make a suggestion in regard to this matter because the Postmaster General understands the practical working of the department and I do not know very much about it. Would it not be possible to provide that the inspector at Toronto, for example, might communicate directly with any mail clerk who might have had a letter in charge? Why could you not in that simple manner do away with a piece of red tape? It seems practicable, but there may be reasons why the suggestion should not be adopted.

Mr. CLANCY. The Postmaster General has informed the committee that there will be a very substantial reduction in the cost of this branch of the service, which, I understand, he now proposes to separate from the other service and make it a special branch. So far as that special branch is concerned, he states in general terms, that there will be a considerable reduction. But the hon. gentleman has not stated where this reduction will arise. There will be the same number of inspectors to do the work as before and their work will be confined to the branch from which this is separated or what is called, I believe, in the words of the Postmaster General himself, the railway mail service branch. There will be no reductions so far as that is concerned. Then I understand that there will be no reduction in the number of mail clerks. I do not understand that the hon. gentleman believes that there are too many clerks in the service or that it will be possible without destroying the efficiency of the service to reduce their number. There can therefore be no reduction in that quarter, nor do I understand that the Postmaster General proposes to reduce the number of transfer agents. The hon. gentleman indicated that there were nine post office inspectors throughout the Dominion, but he did not state that there would be any reduction in their number. Therefore it is not to be expected that there will be a reduction of the number of employees in the service, and still less is it to be expected that there will be a reduction in the salaries. The new controller will be something like a deputy Minister, having his office in Ottawa, and so far as he is concerned there will be an increase in the inside service. As to the question of letters going astray; at the present time persons having complaints to make are brought directly in contact with the local superintendent who sends out his tracers. There are obvious reasons why this can be much better done through the local inspector, than through the controller at Ottawa. Suppose a letter is lost in British Columbia, how much more readily can the evil be remedied if the local inspector is applied to in that province, and sends out his tracer, than that the complaint should be made to the controller at Ottawa, who will send out his tracers from here. The Postmaster General has not said there were too many mail clerks, but he thinks there is too much red tape, and he objects to a sort of irresponsibility which occurs when the mail clerks go beyond the division of the inspectors to whom they are responsible. I hardly think that is a very serious objection, but at all events it is not such as to necessitate the institution of all this new machinery. The hon. gentleman under this Bill makes the machinery more complicated, because he has divided the authority as to the search for letters lost in the land mail service, and the search for letters lost in the railway mail service. One searches in vain through the remarks of the Postmaster General to find a single substantial reason why this change should be made. The hon. gentleman has not stated, nor does anybody believe, that the present inspectors have been overworked, or that they require any relief in that direction. The Bill divides the responsibility between the land mail service and the railway mail service, and complicates the machinery. I should think that the experience of the heads of departments would lead them to centralize the responsibility as much as possible and to do that we should keep the service intact. Unless it can be shown that the railway mail clerks have been remiss in their duty generally, and unless the searching for lost letters has been a failure under the present system, no good reasons can be offered for this Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. There are a few questions I would like to ask the Postmaster General, because I imagine my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) has fully matured his information on this, having had so long a period to bring his measure before Parliament. It is objectionable in that the proposition in the 119th section looks towards centralizing the power in the hands of the Minister himself, which I am sure would be very disturbing to him, which would add greatly to his responsibilities, and which I do not think ought to be admitted as a general principle of legislation regarding the post office or any other department. I grant you from the start that the head of a department must have some power of control over the department to its uttermost point; otherwise the unity and consistency of the working of the whole department may suffer. But when the head of the department proposes in a Bill, in several points, to over-concentrate power in himself, and when general principles of great importance are shoved to one side in order to afford that concentration of power, I think that is very objectionable. The Chairman has stated that we are on clause 119. Very true; but I take it that all the sections of this Bill are members of one family, and that the blood relationship is found in them all. In section 2 we find the same principle of drawing inordinate control and power into the hands of the head of the department that we find in section 119.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think you ought not to discuss section 2 now. I suppose you would be able to make time on the other just as well.

Mr. FOSTER. I think I am in order in showing that what is a vicious principle in 119 is a vicious principle also in section 2, and we must take the Bill as a whole and object to it as a whole. In that section 2--

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I must object to the hon. gentleman discussing section 2. He can do time on section 119 just as well.

• Mr. FOSTER. I must discuss it, and if my hon. friend feels that he cannot grasp the argument without my first giving an outline of it, I will give an outline of it, and show that the one section has a bearing on the other. What I object to in section 119 is the principle of putting an overconcentrated power into the hands of the head of the department. If I can show that in section 2 that some over-concentration of power is aimed at by my hon. friend, a repetition of the offence in the same Bill makes the Bill all the more objectionable, and renders my argument all the stronger. I hope my hon. friend will not object on the ground of irrelevancy. In section 2 we find the principle violated of giving all these contracts by tender. In that section the hon. gentleman proposes, under certain circumstances, to take away the right of tender, and to take the right of granting contracts to himself. Having received tenders, if the lowest tender is higher than the interest of the public services warrants him in paying, then he would have power to take the matter up and award the contract to any person to whom he might wish to award it, the only limitation being that he did not give as much to the contractor as the lowest tender amounted to. Now, I take it upon me to say that in ninety-nine out of a hundred mail routes throughout the Dominion of Canada, the matter would be settled by the first calling for tenders; the lowest tender would be a reasonable tender, and would be accepted. In fact, the rule is that the getting of a little ready money in their hands quarterly induces men to neglect their business in order to carry the mails for a mere pittance, in some cases hardly enough to pay the wear and tear of their horses and carriages. I believe that in nine hundred and ninety-nine cases out of a thousand the work is done at absurdly low figures. But in order to provide for one case out of a thousand, my hon. friend takes a perilous step, and asks Parliament to do away with the principle of the lowest tender, and to put into the hands of the Postmaster General the power to award—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I may remark to the hon. gentleman that the discussion he is now making is concerning section 2, and we are on subsection 119 of section 5.

Mr. FOSTER. I am sure the Chairman is not unreasonable, but will allow me to make this argument strong, and then pile it up on my argument on section 119, to show that the argument is cumulative, and that has power with an audience, and I think has power with the Postmaster General.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). It is really too bad for the hon. leader of the Opposition, in a matter of this kind, to take up the time of the House as he is doing. We have no objection to his taking all the latitude possible, but I certainly think, after we have two or three hours on this measure, it is an abuse of the privilege of a member to go on discussing all round it as the hon. gentleman is doing. Is it worth while dragging on this debate?

Mr. FOSTER. No, it is not.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Bill has got to go through. I do not suppose that there are more than two or three days of the session left. And unless there is some strong argument against this section, I appeal to the hon. gentleman to let it pass.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, I shall just pass from that first stage of my argument to the section under hand, to show that what is essentially a centralization of power and a dangerous one if section 2 is carried out and repeated again in section 5. That really puts the whole system of railway mail clerk work in the power of the head of the department, because the controller is to be the appointee of the Postmaster General and makes his report to him. Now, I do not think that that centralization of power is a good thing, and it is for that and many other reasons that I make my protest against this measure. I repeat again that at this extremely late hour of the session, we should drop this measure and go on with more important business, and if my hon. friend is reasonable he will give way to my appeal. If my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) and my hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Lister) were here, I would ask them to join me in this appeal. If we have any time at our disposal, let us rather take up the plebiscite. That is a matter which is dear to the Minister of Agriculture and of very great interest to the hon. member for Lambton. That hon. gentleman interpolated myself and some other gentlemen on this side, the other day, with reference to it. Why should we go on with an unimportant piece of legislation such as the one before us when such an important and pledged-piece of legislation remain unfulfilled? Were they here I would appeal to them to join me in urging the Postmaster General to withdraw his Bill for the present and give up the hours we are now wasting to a discussion of the plebiscite measure. I think it is really too bad that that measure was not crystallized into form of law and placed before the people for their judgment, as was promised. That important legislation, however, is shoved off, and we are called upon to take up this Bill which is important, it is true, in some of its details, but which, at the same time, might very well wait for another session, when all the members are here.

Mr. MILLS. It would not be very satisfactory to pass this Bill in its present state, and I am sure the country is not pining for it. We have other legislation of vastly more importance to deal with. Some portions of this Bill I do not consider at all satisfactory, but quite the reverse, though, so far as section 5 is concerned, I repeat that in the main I approve of the railway mail service being made a separate department. This Bill was brought down for the first time when quite a number of members were present, and it was withdrawn on some objections to it being raised. Then it was brought on again, and again objected to, and again withdrawn; but now, in the dying hours of the session, the hon. Postmaster General brings it up again and persists in forcing it through. Under the circumstances, it is not decent for the Postmaster General to force this Bill upon the House as he is doing. There is not a shadow of excuse for his conduct, but we cannot but think that there is some sinister motive behind it and not a desire for the welfare of the country. I do not believe that there are three members on the other side who understand the Bill. We have had but very meagre information from the Postmaster General with reference to it. I looked over "Hansard" when it was first brought up, and could find very little information concerning it. I am sure that if this Bill should pass, and I were asked by my constituents to say what it means, I would not be in a position to do so.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Would that necessarily be the fault of the Bill?

Mr. MILLS. Well, it may be a lack of intelligence on the part of the Speaker. But I do not believe you will get the constituency of Annapolis to believe that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But you may not have read it.

Mr. MILLS. I doubt very much if the Minister of Railways understands it. I believe I could put to him some questions in regard to this Bill which he could not answer. And if he were to answer them as he has answered questions regarding other matters put to him by the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) I should go away with less knowledge of the Bill than before the questions were asked.

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) Here we are in the last days of Parliament—in fact, we thought we should have been in our homes almost a week ago—and this Bill which has been kept back and which we thought would have been laid over is pressed forward. It is reported that a great many friends of the Government on the other side had very strong objections to this Bill, and had been pressing their objections upon the Government. But many of these gentlemen have gone away, and, though others may be left on the other side to object to the Bill, they also are leaving one by one. Parliament has dwindled until but few representatives of the people are here. It is almost an outrage upon Parliament to press through so important a Bill under these circumstances. Now, this Bill, as I understand it—and it is a difficult Bill to understand, in fact I doubt whether the Postmaster General himself understands it thoroughly—contains one very objectionable feature, that is, the altering of the contracts from four to eight years. We find that a great deal has been said against the late Government—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I may remind the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald, P.E.I.) that the section which he is discussing is not now before us. We are on subsection 119 of section 5.

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) Under this section 5 we are face to face with the creation of a new branch of the service, and the appointment of a controller and superintendents of the railway mail service. We already have a mail service throughout the country and its work is done efficiently without these officers. In fact, one of the strongest accusations that we had to face during the last campaign was that we had too many officials under the Government. Yet the Postmaster General proposes to create a staff of new officers—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) I understand he will transfer some officers now in the service to this branch but others will have to be appointed to fill their places. I cannot believe that this is going to effect economy. And the fact that this Bill gives the power into the hands of the Postmaster General to extend the contracts from four to eight years, is, in my opinion, very objectionable.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I would Mr. MILLS.

call your attention, Mr. Chairman, to the fact that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald, P.E.I.) is wandering from the clause.

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) I was just going to wind up my remarks but as the hon. Minister (Sir Louis Davies) says I am wandering from the question, I say that it would not be wandering from the subject before us to say that the Bill refers to the extension of contracts from four to eight years. I was going to say that if there was one thing for which the late Government was called to account, it was for renewing contracts under certain circumstances. But here we are giving into the hands of the Postmaster General full power to renew—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I may remind the hon. gentleman—

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—those contracts, and under these circumstances—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. I exceedingly regret that the hon. gentleman is not ready to confine himself to—

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) I have finished my remarks, Mr. Chairman.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I wish to say a word by way of appeal to our hon. friends opposite. This Bill has been before the House nearly 20 days. It is a Bill not involving any principle advocated by either party, but it is merely a departmental Bill affecting the working of one of the large departments, and calculated, according to the opinion of the Government, to effect economy in the public service. The Government proposed the Bill after grave consideration. There is no desire to avoid the amplest and fullest and freest discussion, but we beg hon. gentlemen opposite, if they desire to facilitate legislation at all, in the discussion to confine themselves to the Bill itself and to the clause immediately under discussion. I see plainly that it may take us a long time, it may take us many days; but hon. gentlemen know that governments cannot bring down Bills after full consideration and allow them to be talked out by a few hours or a few day's discussion. Though I have no desire to limit the discussion, I would ask my hon. friends whether it is desirable at this late period, to waste time, and whether it is not desirable to come down to a fair and business-like discussion of the section, and if there are objections, we are ready to meet them and discuss them in a reasonable business-like way. Prolonging debates will not lead to good and will not be allowed to defeat the Bill. I suppose that if we sit here Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, the Government will find it necessary to carry the measure. If we meet again on Monday morning and talk on it all Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, going over the same thing, there still must be an end of it some time. I could understand if there was any principle at stake, and hon. gentlemen might say: We are prepared to sacrifice time, and stay here and fight it. But here is a departmental Bill, affecting the administration of one of the departments, which, in the opinion of the Head of that department, and in which opinion the Government coincide, will, when carried into effect, largely operate to reduce the public expenditure. Under these circumstances, I appeal to hon. gentlemen on the other side if it is proper that this prolonged and useless discussion should be continued. Nobody pretends that it is pertinent to the Bill, nobody pretends that anything has been said which could not have been said in two minutes respecting the particular section before the committee. Therefore, it is a palpable and plain wasting of time for a palpable object, and I appeal to the hon. members whether it is reasonable or fair.

Mr. POWELL. I am astonished at the remarks of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I can assure him that I have only one object, and that is to perfect this Bill. I appreciate the necessity for such a Bill, but there is a still greater necessity in having it properly drawn. The pruning knife should be applied with a wholesome degree of freedom in respect to this Bill; and I, in the exercise of my functions as one delegated by the people to the onerous duty of a member of Parliament, wished to make some suggestions that occurred to me as having particular force, and I am sorry to see that the Postmaster General paid no attention to them. Now, is it not desirable to have uniformity in our legislation? The Postmaster General, in adopting this procedure in reference to mail clerks, does not run it on lines parallel to ordinary postal administration in this country. In section 12 the Inspector has power to inquire into any complaints concerning the miscarriage or loss of letters. We find this gentleman who is appointed under the name of controller, has power to exercise control over superintendents, transfer agents and mail clerks and to deal with all neglect of duty. There must be a neglect of duty before this party can start an investigation at all. You have first got to charge a party with neglect of duty before you can have an investigation. Under the law, as it stood, the Postmaster General did not need to bring any such accusation against a member of the civil service, but he went with a roving commissioner to see if there was anything wrong. And when the wrong originated and how it could be remedied. I submit to the Postmaster General the great desirability of incorporating that provision in the new Bill. Then there is another question, one of statutory construction. I believe the Postmaster General either was or is a lawyer, but he may not be acquainted with the canons of construction, and in that case I would appeal to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries if, in view of the long series of judgments from the illustrations of Baron Park, to the equally illustrious Cockburn, it would not be well to incorporate the old provision in this Bill. Now, I submit this question in order to test whether the Postmaster General is bona fide in his desire to have this Bill perfected. Section 120, after enumerating the different officers, says that they may be appointed from among persons now in the civil service.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has probably forgotten that we are on subsection 119.

Mr. POWELL. I am directing my remarks entirely to section 110 as to the appointment of the parties, and connecting it with the subsequent provisions of the Bill to show who the officials therein named are. If it is a canon of legal construction that, on the creation of a new right, a procedure is laid down with respect to that right, then that procedure must be followed to the exclusion of every other procedure of common law, or otherwise. Now, if this Act, in the creation of new officials, makes it a qualification that they may be drawn from a certain class of people, then I submit whether it is not very desirable, in the public interest, in such a grave matter as this, that is going to work out retrenchment, reform and economy in the service, in this question of overshadowing importance it is necessary to inquire more thoroughly into this provision than the time at our disposal will permit. I don't commit myself to the correctness of the legal suggestion I make. In fact, I would lean to the opinion of the penetrating and comprehensive genius who has charge of the Bill. I could find out how to get the significance of my presentation into that hon. gentleman's cranial cavity. Now, I ask the hon. gentleman whether or not he considers that this is simply permissive or whether by the canons of construction it is imperative. If it is imperative, I denounce it as wretched in principle. Why? Because it is not all officers of the Post Office Department that are members of the civil service. The ordinary postmasters and the ordinary clerks are not and you are limiting this to the aristocracy in the Post Office Department. You propose to draw all your higher officials from these aristocrats while the ordinary plebian has no status whatever.

Mr. FOSTER. There are no democrats in the party since the leader left.

Mr. POWELL. It may be that the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) has changed his opinions with his change from democracy to aristocracy. After receiving knighthood his sympathies may be entirely with the aristocracy of this country. I as one who have no aspirations towards knighthood, who as one of the people, born of the people and who expects to die as one of the people—I, as a champion of the masses against the classes, now that our knight friend has forsaken the ranks and abandoned his democratic principles, stand up and demand that the ordinary member of this service should be admitted to the dignities and emoluments of this office, provided he is endowed with sufficient brains.

No person shall be eligible to be appointed Controller of the Railway Mail Service unless he has been for at least fifteen years employed in the Canada Post Office.

This is not very happy language. I do not know what the Canada post office is. The Canada Postal Department I know; the Postmaster General I know;—but who art thou?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If you turn up the Post Office Act you will find the definition there.

Mr. POWELL. I have turned it up, and I find that the Post Master General is not responsible for this linguistic atrocity, but it is referable to some predecessor of his, who has embodied this barbaric language in the statutes of the country, and a great shame it is. That recalls the statute passed by the Arkansas legislature, which expressly declared that you should pronounce the word Arkansaw. It is true, as the Postmaster General says, that this language is found in the old Postal Service Act. If that is true it makes no difference. If a barbarity were committed, I do not see why it should be perpetuated. Let the Postmaster General, if he has an earnest, yearning desire to perfect this Bill, eliminate such barbarities. Let it be clothed in the purity of English language and English idiom. I object. As a constitutional principle, the Postmaster General is peculiarly sensitive on this point. In the reign of one of the Edwards it was determined that no longer should an unknown tongue be used in the statutes of this realm, but language drawn from the well of pure English undefiled. I appeal to the Postmaster General not to neglect these great constitutional principles in a matter of such overwhelming paramount importance as the Bill now before the House.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Will the hon. gentleman give us the statutes of Edward that he refers to?

Mr. POWELL. If the hon. gentleman will go and look through the parliamentary rolls, or black letter books, he will find the necessary information. They are very hard to understand; they are written in what is known as bastard Latin, which it would give the classical Postmaster General great pleasure to translate.

Mr. FOSTER. The chancellor will translate them.

Mr. POWELL.

Mr. POWELL. Yes, the chancellor of the greatest university in Canada, a master of linguistic science before whom Grimm and Condolle pale, a greater than Whitney of Yale, or Max Muller, a linguistic authority of great repute, Sir, in this country, whose achievements in Archaism and philological reasearch reflect glory on the country that has given him birth? I submit that these two features of the Bill are great blurs upon it, in my judgment, and I ask the Postmaster General, in the breadth of his knowledge and exquisiteness of his taste, to review the Bill, to perfect it, to give us something worthy of his reputation and the gigantic scheme he has in hand, and the tremendous objects he has in view.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall this clause be adopted?—Carried.

Mr. DUPONT—

Mr. FOSTER. We have not finished this discussion yet, and you should not, Mr. Chairman, say carried when an hon. gentleman is on his feet.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman was not on his feet.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has a right to discuss this question and we have never been in the habit of rushing these Bills.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The question was put and carried.

Mr. POWELL. The hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) was right, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Dupont) will have an opportunity of discussing the Bill upon the next clause.

On section 12,

No person shall be eligible to be appointed Controller of the Railway Mail Service unless he has been for at least fifteen years employed in the Canada Post Office.

Mr. POWELL. I think that period is entirely too long. If the Postmaster General really has any desire to see this Bill go through, I would suggest to him on the eve of this Sabbath day that we should all be ruled by a calm and heavenly frame of mind. I would suggest that he should exercise more of Christian charity than to keep a man out in the cold for fifteen years. I would suggest that the term be reduced to five years.

Mr. FOSTER. It is necessary when you want a controller that you should have a man well fitted for the position. What range of choice are you going to have so far as this limits you. How many of the mail clerks have been employed for more than fifteen years?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is not limited to the railway mail service.

Mr. FOSTER. It goes out side of the railway mail service ?

Mr. MILLS. The interpretation is given in chapter 35 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, "An Act respecting the Postal Service." It reads : "The expression employed in the Canada post office applies to any person employed in any business of the post office of Canada."

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It is unfortunate that this Bill should take up so much of the time of the House, but the Opposition are not responsible for the delay. I understood that the Postmaster General had withdrawn this measure, but at all events it is quite certain that he brought it before the House on three occasions when there were very few members present. This is a very important measure, and I regret extremely that the Chairman declared clause 119 carried, while the hon. member for Bagot (Mr. Dupont) had risen to speak, but as I am always prepared to abide by the ruling of the Chair, I shall do so on this occasion. It is not in the public interest that a Bill of this importance should be rushed through the House in the dying hours of the session. This clause says :

No person shall be eligible to be appointed Controller of the Railway Mail Service unless he has been for fifteen years employed in the Canada Post Office.

I wish to ask the Postmaster General, does that mean that he must be fifteen years employed in the railway mail service ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It means any man holding an appointment in the post office service.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I understand that, but does the Postmaster General intend to confer these omnipotent powers on a controller who has not been in the mail service branch. If the hon. gentleman selects an officer outside of the mail service, he will be making a great mistake, because that is a special branch, and if it is to be improved at all, a specialist in the knowledge that appertains to that branch must preside over it. Does the Postmaster General think that he can improve the mail service by taking a man who does not belong to that branch ? I believe that he cannot. The hon. gentleman was good enough to go into details, and he told us that the controller would have the duty of sending tracers to hunt up lost letters. Well, that is not necessary at all, because the duty is to-day performed as perfectly as it can be under the supervision of the present inspector. The intention is apparently to centralize this work at the headquarters in Ottawa. Now, if any trouble occurs in the province of British Columbia, a person there cannot apply directly to the resident inspector, but he will have to write to the controller at Ottawa and get the controller to send a tracer from Ottawa to British Columbia, with all the delay and expense that involves. The system provided by this Bill is unworkable and cannot last, even if the Bill passes. It will create extra expense, and it will not give to the public as efficient a service as prevails at the present time. Take, for instance, a man who has been employed for fifteen years in the Money Order Branch of the department; would he be a proper man to place in charge of that branch of the service ? I say he would not, and that is why I am anxious to get information upon that point. I want to know whether the fifteen years of service would be limited to the railway mail clerk service, or whether the Postmaster General could select from any officers in the department outside of that branch the man who would be entrusted with the controllership of the department.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will answer the hon. gentleman if he will allow me. The present controller was not in the mail service. He had been in the Toronto post office. He was selected and recommended to me by chief inspector Sweatnam as having the best experience and being the fittest man in the service; because more than a mere knowledge of the mail service is required for the charge of a large organization. He is not a mail clerk, and never was a mail clerk. So that I do not contemplate limiting the choice to mail clerks, although I am free to admit that a railway mail clerk ought to have special qualifications for the office, and one would naturally look to the mail clerks for a controller.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Then, how does the hon. gentleman explain what he told us a few moments ago, that his main object in proposing this measure was to create a healthy emulation among the railway mail clerks. How does he create the emulation by taking a man outside of that branch, and putting him over the heads of all the railway mail clerks ? That is one of the reasons why I was so anxious to get the information from the hon. gentleman. He stated that he wished to give promotion to the deserving members of the railway mail service, and to create this emulation among them, which he believed would largely promote the efficiency of the service; and he starts to create that emulation by taking an officer outside of that branch, a man from the Toronto Post Office, and placing him over the heads of men who have been ten or fifteen years in that service. Another thing strikes me as very peculiar in this most peculiar of all Bills that I have ever seen introduced into this Parliament. The hon. gentleman has been insisting upon our passing this measure; but what does he say ? He speaks of the controller whom he has appointed from the Toronto Post Office. How could he appoint him until the Bill was passed ? What is Parliament reduced to to-day? Are we sitting here for three months simply to be told by the political head of a department that in his wisdom he has decided to do so and so, and has called us together simply to inform us that it was his sweet will to do what he has done? If the hon. gentleman has been able by some process of which I am ignorant to appoint his controller and superintendents, as he said he had done, why pass the Bill? Why not save time, and go on appointing controllers and superintendents without troubling Parliament? Why not follow the rule, which is new to us and new to any Parliament where constitutional government exists, and new to any man who has been following the precedents of this Parliament? If the hon. gentleman has been able to appoint a controller from the Toronto Post Office, and superintendents all over the Dominion, without a Bill, why should he keep us here in the last days of the session to pass a Bill which is incomplete, and which requires to be reconsidered before it can contribute to the efficiency of one of the most important branches of the service. The hon. gentleman has stated that he appointed the controller on the recommendation of his chief inspector. The chief inspector is an officer of great experience, an officer whose conduct has been everything that could be desired, and who has rendered great service to the department; but the chief inspector wishes to take a controller from the post office in Toronto, and to make him the head of a service of which he is completely ignorant, as the Postmaster General admits. I know not who that controller is; but the fact is admitted by the hon. Postmaster General that he is a man who knows nothing at all about the railway mail service.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I admitted nothing of the kind.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman, I thought, stated that the controller had never been connected with the railway mail service, and, no matter how large and important may be the post office of which he has been an official, he is not a gentleman who should be selected for the office of controller. These are points which I submit are of some importance and which must be discussed, however disagreeable it may be in the last hours of the session to discuss a measure which should not have been brought up at this late period, but which should have been brought forward at the beginning of the session when it could have been carefully examined and when its details could have been compared with the existing law, in order to see how the changes contemplated would affect the efficiency of the service. I venture to express the opinion that no one but a railway mail clerk should be placed at the head of that branch. It is a specialty in itself, it is different from any other branch of the service, and it is impossible for me to understand that one who is not familiar with that branch is fit to take control of the whole service. I also venture to express the opinion that instead of simplifying the service and making it more efficient, the present measure will complicate it and very much impair its efficiency; and I point out the reason. If you centralize everything at headquarters in Ottawa, if complaints must be sent from every part of the Dominion to Ottawa, and if the men who are to report to the controller have to be sent from headquarters to examine into these complaints, it will complicate the service and impair its efficiency.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The inspectors at present do all this work. How much experience had they in the Post Office Department when they were appointed?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. They were trained to that special service, and a good many of them had been railway mail clerks.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I should like to know whether Mr. Hawkins was ever a railway mail clerk.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I think he was.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. And Mr. Merrick, at Kingston, appointed two or three years ago? He was never a mail clerk, nor was Mr. Bolduc, of Quebec.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes, he was.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The inspector in Toronto, Mr. Barwick, was not a mail clerk? Mr. Barwick, whom the hon. gentleman appointed a few years ago as inspector, was practising law in Toronto. Mr. Bain, of Montreal, was a member of this House, and was appointed inspector a couple of years ago. Was he ever a railway mail clerk?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am not able, from memory, to give the whole history of every inspector in the Dominion, but from the very fact of their being inspectors they acquired experience, which the new man, the controller, whom the hon. gentleman asks power to appoint, could have had no chance of picking up.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. You made your inspectors before they were in the service.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. But the hon. gentleman is trying to improve the law. He wants to improve the service, and yet he is going to appoint a man as controller who knows nothing about the service. He tells us that he is going to select a man as head of the service who has never been connected with it and can know nothing about it. The inspectors, however, from the fact that they have been in charge of the service, must have gained experience and knowledge, and I tell the hon. gentleman that if I were going to appoint a man specially to superintend the mail service. I would certainly select one who has been in the service from the beginning. I have pointed out these objections, and would ask the hon. gentleman to hold his Bill over until next session.

Mr. CLANCY. We have learned to-night for the first time that the Postmaster General has appointed a controller and has all his staff in operation without any authority from Parliament. That simply means that he matures his plans and appoints his officers, and then comes down at the last hours of the session and asks the authority to do what he has already done. I asked the hon. gentleman to show us what reductions took place, and he disdained to answer that very plain question.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did answer it.

Mr. CLANCY. How many reductions ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The system has been tried for nearly six months, and we have been able to allow vacancies to occur without filling them up. There will be at least thirty-four mail clerks less under this system, whose salaries will aggregate $20,400, but I cannot contemplate dismissing them at once. I want to deal with them as gently as the hon. gentleman desired, and I propose just to allow vacancies to occur without filling them until the service gets down to its proper level. We are working with nineteen less now than under the old system.

Mr. CLANCY. How many transfer agents will there be in the future, and how many has he reduced ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have only reduced the number of transfer agents by one at present. I found a transfer agent at Brockville, by the name of Kavanagh, whom I dismissed for reasons the hon. gentleman can easily ascertain. He had a contract for performing some service, and this man was appointed transfer agent while a contractor. I am not able to say anything with regard to the transfer agents further than this, that I have opened negotiations with the railway companies to see whether at certain points we could utilize, to some extent, the station staff of the railway companies and divide the expense. That, however, is a thing that could be done quite as well, whether this passes or not.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman tells us that this system has been in force nearly six months and that he hopes to make a reduction amounting to something like $20,000 by the reduction of mail clerks. I did not understand him to say that that has all taken place, but that that was what he hoped to do in the future.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What has taken place ?

Mr. CLANCY. What I mean is, that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) has said that he is going to deal gently with the mail clerks. I understand that he will not make sweeping changes, that he does not mean to cut off all the heads at once, but that he will remove them by a slower and less painful process. I did not quite understand whether the hon. gentleman had saved $20,000 in the six months in which the system has been in force, or whether he hopes to make this reduction with regard to the mail clerks alone. He does not propose to make reduction in reference to the transfer agents. Does he mean to make a reduction in the superintendents ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The old officers known as the chief railway mail clerks, disappear as such, and will be available either to be made superintendents or employed as mail clerks. I have stated that there will be no addition to the staff under these arrangements. I cannot make it any clearer than the Bill makes it.

Mr. CLANCY. Now we are getting this matter much more clearly before us. There is to be no reduction in the transfer agents, and practically none in the superintendents, so that the whole reduction is to be made in the mail clerks. All this makes it perfectly clear that there is no necessity for this Bill at present. The hon. gentleman has seen carrying out the new system, and the service has gone on without a single jar. Surely, there is no need for this Bill at present until a more perfect measure can be submitted to Parliament when there is a larger attendance. The hon. Minister of Marine, who is usually very fair, has addressed the Committee, intimating that time is being wasted. I can fairly say that on this side there has been a disposition, personally, I may say the strongest disposition, to facilitate the closing of the session. The hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) himself will admit that the Opposition has shown its willingness to curtail the discussion of Bills, even of the most vital importance, in order to hasten the close of the session. This Bill before us might easily be postponed. It is a contentious Bill and involves new questions—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am sorry to be obliged to tell the hon. gentleman that he is not speaking to the question.

Mr. CLANCY. I am speaking now of the importance of the controller. I think, Mr. Chairman, you will see that I am perfectly in order. The duties of the controller are very important. I am sure that there is the desire on this side to facilitate business as much as possible and reach the close of the session as soon as we can. Personally, my only desire is that this should be made a good Bill, and I say that the Postmaster General should have the assistance of the House—not of a part of the House, but of the whole House—to make it as perfect a measure as possible.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Bill has certainly been treated as one of great importance. The leader of the Opposition (Mr. Foster) characterized it, in the beginning of his speech, as a measure of immense importance, but subsequently he spoke of it as a trifling Bill, not worthy of our present attention.

Mr. FOSTER. That is by way of comparison.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The leader of the Opposition can change his ground pretty quickly. However, I propose not to ask the Committee to dwell any longer upon the measure. I have no doubt that, after the thorough sifting the Bill has had, hon. gentlemen opposite will be better prepared to understand it when their attention is invited to it again on Monday. Under these circumstances, I shall ask that hon. members be relieved from further wrestling with the measure to-night.

I trust that after a day's rest they will come back sufficiently strong and vigorous as to be able again to devote themselves to this important measure, and bring again their energetic minds to bear upon it that has been so conspicuously displayed to-night. Some people, I won't say I am one, of course might think that the Opposition had not covered themselves with glory by such proceedings. They, of course, are judges of that; in the meantime, I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Committee rose and reported progress.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 136) to amend the Civil Service Superannuation Act.—(Mr. Mulock.)

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 11.58 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 28th June, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock, a.m.

PRAYERS.

THE LOBSTER FISHERY.

Mr. GILLIES. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) what decision his department has come to with reference to the extension of the lobster season in the eastern part of Nova Scotia. I have received several letters from individuals interested in that industry, stating that dire distress might result if the season is not extended, because this season has been a most inclement one for the prosecution of the industry and generally unfavourable to the fishermen.

Mr. CLANCY.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I am glad the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gillies) has mentioned this matter. I have received communications from all parts of the coast stating that the season has been an unfortunate one, that storms have broken the lobster traps, and all that kind of thing. In conjunction with officers of the department I have given this matter a great deal of consideration. I would like to see my way clear in the general interest to extend the time. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and I are discussing these telegrams as received from hour to hour. I can only repeat what I stated on a previous occasion, that my own inclination is strongly against any extension of the time, though I know it will subject me to a storm of protest, if not abuse, from many parties. Still, I think that the general interest of the industry will be best served—

Mr. GILLIES. The hon. Minister must not forget that this has been an exceptional year.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I never saw a year that was not an exceptional year for some reason. We must put our foot down some time or other, and unless my opinion is altered by the telegrams received to-day, as to the effect of these storms, I have determined to take the responsibility of adhering to the law.

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) While I know that there is strong pressure being brought to bear upon the hon. Minister of Marine in regard to this matter, and while I know that the refusal to extend the season may affect many people concerned in this industry, still I think it is of much more importance for this country as a whole, that the Minister of Fisheries should carry out his present intentions with a strong hand, in order to prevent the industry being completely destroyed.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

The House proceeded to consider resolutions adopted in Committee of Supply.

Public Works—Chargeable to collection of Revenue..... $171,700

Mr. SPROULE. I respectfully submit that we are going through these items in a way that was never before done, so far as my remembrance goes. It makes it utterly impossible to call attention to any of the items that we left over for further explanation on concurrence. The amounts only are mentioned and not the objects for which they are to be spent. We are going so fast that it is utterly impossible to turn up the items and find out what these votes are for.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Of course the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) is quite within his rights. I assume that we have to read them over seriatim, only it takes up time. If the hon. gentleman puts his Votes and Proceedings before him he will be able to follow the items.

Mr. SPROULE. It is utterly impossible to turn to the Votes and Proceedings at the rate we are going.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The resolutions are called in order and you will see each item in the Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) wishes delay at the Table there will be delay while he turns up the items, but of course we want to go on as quickly as possible.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If you take the Orders of the Day, in one hand, and the Votes and Proceedings in the other, you will have no difficulty.

Post Office—Outside service..... $3,636,657

Mr. FOSTER. Before that item passes in concurrence, I would like to ask the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) if he has yet brought down the return I have asked for. If it is not brought down I shall object to the passage of this item.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). What return is that?

Mr. FOSTER. The return I asked for a dozen times.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. About Mr. King?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I explained to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) the last time he mentioned the matter that I could not comply with the order of the House at present, because the papers in question had been mislaid. I thought perhaps the Deputy Postmaster General might know where they were. He has been away six weeks at Washington. He has returned, but I do not understand that he has been able to lay his hands upon them.

Mr. FOSTER. I suggest that we allow this item to stand over, for the present, and go on with the others. It is an odd way that after a return is asked for, at the beginning of the session, it cannot be brought down up to the last day of the session. There are certain rights that an Opposition does have, and that an independent member of the House has, and I certainly propose to ask that those rights shall be maintained. The Postmaster General can put his hand on that return and get his officers to make it. If he cannot he can wait a little for his estimate.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) means by saying that I can put my hand on the return. I have stated the fact which is simply that the secretary informed me that he could not find the papers.

Mr. WALLACE. Parliament has ordered this return to be brought down, and Parliament is very much larger than the Postmaster General. The order of Parliament must be obeyed. If the Postmaster General had stated six weeks ago that he could not find these papers, and if that was the reason for not making this return and that his officers were making an effort to find the papers that would have been a proper thing for him to do, but he has made no such explanation. On the last day of the session he says that the papers cannot be found. That is no information for Parliament. The papers should have been brought down or the Postmaster General should have stated three months ago, after the order was made, that he had made diligent inquiry and that the papers could not be found. It is an extraordinary thing, when the Postmaster General has 300 clerks to look after these papers and keep them in order, that they cannot be found. The Postmaster General should have come to Parliament months ago with the statement that he has made to-day. Such a statement is of no use to this Parliament.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will send for the deputy and see if he has been more successful.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, then this item may stand in the meantime. I would not be so strenuous upon this point if it had not been that, when I was trying to get this information, the Postmaster General blocked me on a puerile technicality thus showing his intention not to give the information. I have remembered that, and consequently it has made me less charitable to the hon. gentleman in regard to this case.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) will accept the Postmaster General's unequivocal declaration that the papers cannot be found. If the papers are lost, with all due respect to the power of Parliament, he cannot bring them down.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think a question was put once before and my deputy gave me the substance of the papers, in answer to the question, so that the information is practically on record.

Mr. McMULLEN. I admit it is quite right, when orders of the House are given for returns, that the papers should be brought down, but this is not the first time that this thing has happened. I can draw the attention of the ex-Controller of Customs (Mr. Wallace) to the fact that two years ago an order of this House was passed for a report of the investigation into the irregularities in the customs office at Winnipeg. The customs officer there was named Mr. Scott. I pressed for this return to be brought down. I urged it in the session before last, as well as last session, and it has never been laid on the Table of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) are not quite relevant to this question.

Mr. WALLACE. I altogether deny that there was any such order agreed to when I was Controller of Customs.

Mr. MACLEAN. Surely the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) is not going to set up the doctrine that because something has been done in the past which is bad, it will be done in the future.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question is whether this item should be allowed to stand.

Mr. MILLS. I would like to draw the attention of the Postmaster General to the fact that the returns I have asked for, time and time again, have not been brought down.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think they have all been brought down.

Mr. MILLS. No. I have just received word from the proper officer saying that they are not there.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) is too busy going over private correspondence to attend to the orders of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think if the Deputy Clerk would read the head line, such, for instance, as mail subsidies and steamship subventions, and then go on, it would be better.

Mr. SPEAKER. The item stands.

Steam communication during the season of 1897, i.e., from the opening to the closing of navigation, between Baddeck, Grand Narrows, and Iona, daily; between Port Mulgrave and St. Peters; between Grand Narrows, East Bay and Irish Cove..... $7,000

Mr. GILLIES. I wish to bring to the attention of the Minister of Marine (Sir Louis Davies), in the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) some facts with reference to this service, which is being performed upon the Bras d'Or Lake, in the Island of Cape Breton, between the railway terminus at Port Mulgrave and ports intermediate between that and Sydney. I wish to impress upon the Government the necessity of having a contract entered into with the Bras d'Or Lake Steamship Company, as to the proper performance of this service immediately.

Mr. McMULLEN.

Formerly a written contract existed between the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Bras d'Or Steam Navigation Company, for the performance of a service daily from Mulgrave to St. Peters; the steamer continuing from there to Irish Cove, thence across to the Grand Narrows, and back again through the canal to Mulgrave. That is really the important part of this service, because these people living there are deprived of all communication with the outside world, and the only means within their reach to have communication with the railway is through this subsidized company. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster), who was in charge of that service in 1891, before the creation of the Department of Trade and Commerce, was about to reduce the subsidy to that company, because the service performed by them was so much less in consequence of the opening of the railway through Cape Breton, but, upon strong representations made to him by myself and other members on this side of the House that the service east of St. Peter's to Bras d'Or Lake would be diminished, and therefore the people would suffer great hardships, he agreed to continue the subsidy of $7,000 to that company, in consideration of their performing the service in the Bras d'Or Lakes to which I now refer. Well, Sir, what is the fact? Although we are now entering the 1st of July, not a boat has gone down from St. Peter's through the Bras d'Or Lakes and no contract has been drawn up between the Government and the company.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Was there any money voted last year up to the 1st of July?

Mr. GILLIES. Oh, yes; voted every year since 1883.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Was the contract a yearly contract?

Mr. GILLIES. Yes, entered into at the commencement of every season.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Have the boats been running this year?

Mr. GILLIES. Yes, but the boat I speak of runs from Mulgrave to St. Peter's only, and the boats from the other end is running in a perfunctory manner up to the Grand Narrows and Whycocomagh, and sometimes to St. Peter's. But the boat running from Mulgrave to St. Peter's which should continue down—perhaps the hon. gentleman is not familiar with the geography there?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Oh, yes, I am quite familiar with the locality.

Mr. GILLIES. That boat should go down to Irish Cove and across to the Grand Narrows, and then back to Irish Cove on to St. Peter's on the return trip, as formerly. The service was four times a week in the past. I brought the matter to the notice of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), and he said to me, it was certainly a reasonable request that the company should be compelled to do in the future as in the past. Really this company are doing as they please now, and my hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) will understand the manner in which these corporations are apt to treat the public if they are not checked and brought to some sense of reason. What I wish to impress upon my hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) is: that he should immediately compel that company to enter into a contract for the due and proper performance of the service from Mulgrave down to St. Peter's, through to Irish Cove, and through the Grand Narrows and back again to St. Peter's. They are getting their $7,000 for that; and heaven knows it is a large subsidy, and they should perform the service. These people who are shut out from communication should not be treated by the company in the way they are now being treated.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What is the name of the company?

Mr. GILLIES. The Bras d'Or Steam Navigation Company. It is now the 1st of July, and certainly the contract should be entered into.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce told me that he found it impossible to attend to these small matters because of the rush of business, and I can quite understand that; but now when the session is brought to a close, knowing as I do the desire of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (because he himself assured me of it) to have a proper service performed there, I would again ask the Minister of Marine, in the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, to press this matter immediately on the attention of his confrères. It is a hardship as it exists now, and it is a hardship that should not be permitted.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will take a special note of the complaint of the hon. member (Mr. Gillies) and take care that it is laid before my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) when he returns this afternoon.

Railways and Canals—Chargeable to Capital—Intercolonial Railway—To pay for land and damages, Oxford and New Glasgow and Cape Breton divisions..... $2,000

Mr. GILLIES. Is it intended that this sum shall cover all the railway land damages in Cape Breton district? I know that there are several claims before the Railway Department, and I would like to know whether this sum is intended to cover all these claims.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). My impression is that it will cover all that we have any knowledge of up to the present time.

Mr. GILLIES. I have in my hands several claims for damages in the Cape Breton district. I wrote several letters to the department in reference to them, but received no reply. An official was sent from the department last winter to investigate them. I would like to ask the hon. Minister whether he has a return of all the claims for land damages resulting from the construction of the Government railway in the Cape Breton district, and if so, can I have a copy of these claims? I want to ascertain whether the claims on behalf of which I have made demand are in the department, as I cannot find out otherwise.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would be very happy to give the hon. gentleman any information he requires. I have not it in my hand at the present moment. I think the sum put in here is the usual amount. The claims are coming in from year to year, and we are endeavouring to settle them as soon as they come in, and I think they have averaged about $2,000. Whether the claims the hon. gentleman refers to are included I cannot say, but I shall be glad to allow the hon. gentleman, at any time, to have access to any information we have if he will call at the department; but there is no return in my possession.

Mr. GILLIES. There was a claim for damages at a place called Jamesville, near the Grand Narrows, which I wish to mention specially, as it has been hanging for some time. I wrote to the hon. gentleman's department four or five times, but, for some reason, I could not get a reply.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Did the hon. gentleman write to me?

Mr. GILLIES. I wrote once or twice to the Minister himself last winter. I was a little surprised at not receiving any reply. However, the department sent an officer down there to inspect the claim, and he visited the place. I happened to see him when he was there, and I directed him to go to the person whose land was damaged, and who would give him all the information he required. This was some time last January. I have not heard a word since, although my client has been frequently importuning me to get the matter settled in some way or other, or to get some decided answer. I would like to know, in this particular case, among several others, what decision the department has come to, and I will avail myself of the invitation now offered me by the Minister, to call at the department and see the papers, if I shall be accorded that privilege.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly, I shall be very glad. I would be sorry to have the hon. gentleman think that any letter he wrote to me I would not answer. I may say that when any such letters are received by me they are passed over, with instructions to reply to them, and I do not see them again. If there is any information for which the hon. gentleman has asked and which has not reached him, I shall take pleasure, if he will remind me of it, in seeing that he gets it.

Dominion Lands—Chargeable to Income..... $90,938 25

Mr. FOSTER. Before we pass this item, there is some information I would like to have. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) is not here, but I imagine that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) could give the information I desire. We have some notice of a call for tenders for certain mining franchises in some districts, and I am not quite sure whether in the Yukon, but I fancy somewhere up that way. It was mentioned once in the House—that was the first information the House had of it—that an advertisement had been issued calling for tenders for the purchase of these franchises or privileges. The statement of the Minister of the Interior then was that no contract had been entered into. I believe he also stated the condition upon which tenders were asked, and if so, that will appear in "Hansard." I would like to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries if the Government have gone further in this matter. It is a pretty grave question as the hon. Minister will see, to give up large tracts of that country to any company under tender in that way. I would like to know whether anything further has been done, or I would much rather get the information that nothing will be done until the House has had an opportunity of discussing the question of the conditions. This is a matter in which the people at large are vitally interested.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I am not aware that anything further has been done, nor is my colleague (Mr. Fielding), but I will send over to the Deputy Minister of the Interior and will inquire of him and later on I will let the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) know.

To meet cost of arbitration respecting the accounts between the Dominion of Canada and the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. (Payments on account of services rendered may be made to members of the civil service, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act)..... $7,500

Mr. SPROULE. I believe that the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) said, when this item was under discussion in Committee of Supply, that he would be able to give us some further information on concurrence as to these accounts and the progress that has been made by the arbitrators.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). If my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) will turn up the Public Accounts of last year, he will find out quite a lengthy statement covering the matter, which, I think, he will find quite satisfactory, as it explains the whole situation and gives a number of documents. If the hon. gentleman finds that this does not cover what he wants and will call my attention to it later, I will be glad to supplement it.

Mr. SPROULE. But the Finance Minister will see that the public accounts only bring the case down to 30th June, 1896. Work has been going on since then of which we have no information.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There has been nothing material since.

Mr. SPROULE. They are not making much headway.

Mr. FOSTER. Are the salaries still going on?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. These cases do not move very rapidly. I have some information with regard to it, but it is virtually a repetition of what appears in the Public Accounts.

Mr. SPROULE. What is in the Public Accounts we can see, but we would like some information as to what has been done since.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. One of the matters of importance that is standing over is an appeal, and substantially no progress has been made. This is a very slow matter, as my hon. friend must have learned in the years during which it has been in progress.

Mr. FOSTER. What position does the hon. Minister of Justice (Sir Oliver Mowat) take of the matter? I know the position he took two or three years ago, and I wonder whether the reversible patent applies to the Minister of Justice on these questions as well as on others. I hope my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) will be able to tell me that the Minister of Justice is standing strongly for the Dominion contentions.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. These gentlemen of the legal profession do not seem to have any difficulty in standing strongly for their clients for the time being. At present the Dominion of Canada is the client of the Minister of Justice, and he is standing for the interest of the Dominion with all the loyalty that members of the legal profession show for their clients.

Mr. FOSTER. Tempered, I suppose, in some slight degree, by the fees he receives.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). In order to avoid any such suggestion as that made by the leader of the Opposition, the Minister of Justice has thought proper to continue the lawyers recently employed in the case, Mr. Christopher Robinson, Mr. Ritchie, and Mr. Coste, leaving them in absolute control of the case.

Mr. FOSTER. That is very wise, because they were in it from the first.

Mr. SPROULE. Does that apply to the commission of interprovincial accounts only or does it apply to other questions between the provinces and the Dominion?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. What other question?

Mr. SPROULE. I understood that there was a question of Queen's Counsel.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That has nothing to do with this question.

Mr. SPROULE. No, but I understood the Solicitor General to speak of all questions that have arisen between the provinces and the Dominion. Has the same policy been pursued in connection with this question of Queen's Counsel?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This matter of the appointment of Queen's Counsel is now on the verge of solution as between the provinces and the Dominion. There is a tentative proposal that both sides shall accept the suggestion of the Supreme Court in the matter.

Mr. SPROULE. I was wondering if the lawyers in the case on one side would turn around like the Minister of Justice and argue the other way. But the Minister of Finance I understood, proposed to give us some information with regard to the interprovincial accounts.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have a memorandum, but it does not contain very much in addition to what is already known. The memorandum which I have obtained in answer to my hon. friend's question, is that practically all matters in dispute between the Dominion and the provinces have been settled, with the exception of the following:—

I. The Common School Fund.—In regard to this, Ontario and Quebec have appealed from the awards made by the arbitrators, and the appeals are standing for argument before the Supreme Court of Canada.

II. The Robinson Treaties.—In regard to those, the decision of the arbitrators, in their award of the 13th February, 1895, that Ontario should be liable for payments made by the Dominion to the Indians, was set aside by a payment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and, as a consequence of this latter payment, the matter has again been submitted to the arbitrators to determine whether Ontario and Quebec are not jointly liable for the payments.

III. Payments after Confederation.—The arbitrators have before them claims made by the Dominion against the old provinces of Canada for liabilities incurred and work done before confederation, but not paid for till after confederation. These claims amount to about $60,000.

IV. Treaty No. 3.—There is also a claim before the arbitrators against Ontario for expenditures made by the Dominion in connection with Indian Treaty No. 3.

Practically, however, the matter has not made very much progress since the date of the public accounts.

Mr. MACLEAN. I hope that in this matter the Solicitor General will give not only his passive support but his active support in maintaining the Dominion view on all these questions, especially in view of the fact that the Government is now largely made up of ex-provincial premiers who declared when they were at the head of their respective provincial governments that they proposed to vindicate the rights of their provinces and get as much of this money in dispute as they could. Now, I trust they will take the federal view, and not only in a passive way, as the Solicitor General stated, but in a most active way, vindicate the Dominion's rights on these questions.

Defence of Esquimalt, B.C.—

Dominion contribution towards expenditure for works and buildings.....	$24,000
Pay and allowance of a detachment of Royal Marine Artillery or Royal Engineers.....	42,500
	$76,500

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In that item the amount is correct, but the division of the item is incorrect. I propose to change the division—of course without changing the total, which we cannot change. I move that the item read $29,000 and $47,500, and that would not affect the total.

Mr. FOSTER. Are we able to do that? We are not dividing, in a sense, the total amount, but we have the item given to us in two parts.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. At first I had, myself, some doubt, but after looking closely into it, I see it is not a division that ought to be objected to, because it is for the same purpose, simply two items of the same purpose, for the defence of Esquimalt—that is the purpose. I am informed it is the practice of the House that where we do not change the amount of the item, the division can be made.

Mr. FOSTER. There is another little peculiarity in this. Stripped of all its explanatory part, the vote could run, "defence of Esquimalt, $76,500."

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The first part of the item would read $29,000, and the second $47,500, the total being the same, $76,500.

To pay E. St. O. Chapleau in full of all claims in connection with his patented poll-book, in use since 1891..... $1,000

Mr. FOSTER. I have not had the pleasure of a return from the Minister of Agriculture.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I must apologize.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to have that wonderful book so that I might make some edifying remarks upon this vote. Now I have been balked in my desire in that direction. You may absolve me, but how shall we absolve the Minister of Agriculture?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I shall cry peccavi.

Mr. FOSTER. In addition to peccavi, will the hon. gentleman bring this down this afternoon?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will bring it down.

To provide for the payments to collectors of customs for services in connection with the issuing of fishing licenses to United States vessels during 1896..... $479 32

Mr. CASEY. I am sorry to occupy the time of the House, but this is the only opportunity I shall have of asking certain explanations from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies). It appears that he has seen fit to reduce the price of licenses for pound-net fishing, in Essex, to $25. My constituents, as well as those of other members along the Lake Erie coast have urged that the same reduction should be extended to those localities. I have conversed with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries on that subject, and I wish to give him this opportunity of stating publicly why he has been unable to extend the reduction, which he has made in Essex, to other localities along the shore of Lake Erie. I am compelled to do this, in justice to my constituents.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I may say that this matter hardly comes up on the item before us, but I will have no objection of giving the hon. gentleman (Mr. Casey) an answer. He is not exactly correct in saying that this reduction has been made in the county of Essex, if by that he means to imply that it embraces the whole county. There was a small locality where I was informed there had been great difficulty in recovering the fees from the fishermen. My adviser, Mr. Prince, brought to me the information that last year they were not recovered at all, and the consequence was that I had to dismiss the officer there. He pleaded that he had done all he could but the fishermen were so poverty-stricken in the locality that they could not pay. I could not accept that as payment, or as an explanation, although it was, to some extent, an excuse. I had an investigation made by Commissioner Prince into the matter and he recommended to me that, under the peculiar circumstances of these few men, we should make a reduction in the amount of the fees. The moment we made it, as I had anticipated, the same thing was demanded all along the line, but I have declined because the circumstances in this case were of a special character.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. CASEY. To what locality did it apply?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It covered a small locality between Pelee Island and the mouth of the Detroit River.

Mr. KAULBACH. I desire to draw the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to a matter—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We are not on the subject of fisheries generally. I will be happy to answer any question the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kaulbach) desires to put, but I beg him not to go into the whole question of fisheries.

Mr. KAULBACH. I am not going to make any lengthened remarks at present. I had intended doing so, but I have not been able to carry out my intention, because I had not the necessary information I was expecting. I propose to ask the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the subject of the industry of fishing more particularly in regard to the introduction of artificial fish culture by the establishment of hatcheries and incubators in the maritime provinces, more particularly in Lunenburg, which is a fish centre. I hope that the Minister, or his commissioner, will give this his careful attention, during the recess, so that he may give us valuable information upon it when Parliament meets again.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Does the hon. gentleman refer to any particular species of fish?

Mr. KAULBACH. I refer to lobsters and codfish. The introduction of artificial fish culture would be obviously in the interest of these fisheries, and I think it would be the best investment that the Government could apply money to. It gives a big return, and adds greatly to the commerce and trade of the country. I did intend to go into the matter very carefully, but I have not had an opportunity of doing so.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will promise the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kaulbach) to consider this matter very carefully. So far I have not been able to bring my own views into unison with those of Commissioner Prince upon this particular matter.

To provide for the expenses and salaries of commissioners appointed to investigate charges against Government officials, including witness fees..... $2,000

Mr. SPROULE. I want to ask a question of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Has that any connection with the trouble between the Noble Brothers, of Collingwood and Killarney and the department, or is there any information as to how that case stands?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Judge Johnson was appointed some years ago to investigate that matter. He made an investigation in reference to the complaint in the time of my predecessor in the department. He reopened the case, and when I came into the department I found it hanging. The case had been reopened at the instance of the Nobles, and then they would not go on. There has been a great deal of correspondence between the lawyers of the Nobles and myself. They wanted to put the department in the position of defendants, requesting that the department should admit certain things and then go on and excuse themselves for seizing the Nobles' nets. We do not admit that we should take that position. We claim that the department was right in the course it pursued, and if they desire to give any explanation we say we will reopen the case and hear their witnesses. In the middle of this correspondence the decision came from the Supreme Court of Canada raising the whole question as to whether we ever had any jurisdiction in these waters at all. The Noble Brothers would then say to us: Well, we don't care now whether you are going on or not; if that decision holds we will sue you in law for damages for your illegal seizures, and if it does not hold we will be in no worse position than we are at present. I ordered the investigation at once to be closed, and there is $100 due to Judge Johnston. I have sent the account to the Department of Justice for taxation, but it is not embraced in the $200, and will be paid out of the general vote.

Public Buildings, Ottawa—Fire protection, electric lighting, &c..... $75,000

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to ask the Minister of Public Works if it is not true that the Government has a contract at the present time with the Ottawa Gas Lighting Company, which has still some three years to run, and which is current of course at the present time; whether that contract was not entered into after certain conditions agreed to on both sides, one of which was that the price of gas should be very largely reduced, and that the company should be compelled to supply a maximum quantity. In order to fulfil these conditions and to supply the quantity of gas that was required, it is represented to me that the company went to some $50,000 of extra expense to put themselves in a position to compass that cheapness and that supply. I am also informed that the price of gas not only has been reduced from $4 to $1.50, which is a very great reduction, but with the improvement in new burners you get a 40-candle light, and consume only about half the gas compared with former consumption. If these things be true, it modifies to a large extent the proposition which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) put before the House; and I myself had forgotten the circumstances at the time, and did not allude to it when the item was being discussed. If you are going to take the alternative of being in a position like that—and we must carry out contracts as fairly as we possibly can—you have got to go to the expense of wiring a large portion of the buildings, and you have to go to the expense of having a technical and efficient staff in order to carry this out, neither of which expenditures are needed if you light by gas; because of course the company looks after that. I bring this matter up because it is additional information which probably the House did not possess at the time, and I think it would modify the action of the Minister of Public Works. I do not make it a plea that because you are using gas now, therefore you should not make the change. But I do make this plea: that when the Government revises a former decision, and by conditions made on both sides, large expenditures are entered into, and a contract based upon them, it becomes a matter of great moment whether or not the Government is justified in destroying the investment to that extent, of the company with which it made the contract. Certainly the very best reasons should be given before that is done, and even then, it would be a question whether or not a consideration should be given to the contractor who entered into the contract in good faith. If my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) will view the circumstances in that light, and if he were to make a proposal to that company in certain directions he may find that he can make a much more advantageous arrangement in connection with the conditions as they exist, than by undertaking this very large expenditure of $75,000 for installing an electric light plant. I am sorry that the information was not at hand and the question discussed when the Minister had his estimate before the committee; but that does not render the information any the less pertinent. I want to ask my hon. friend to take that into his consideration; and I am sure he will see the force of it. If I might express an opinion, it would be that, under all the circumstances, it would be well to go a little slowly in the interim between now and January; and the hon. gentleman can obtain full information, and have his plans perfected by the time the House meets again.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I may say that my intention is to go slowly. As I explained to the House, it is proposed to supply these buildings with a suitable fire system, and to change the mixed system of gas and electric light which we have at present. Since the discussion took place here, I may say, that I have met Mr. Coates, the president of the Gas Company, who said that he would be glad to meet me later on.

Mr. MACLEAN. I hope the Minister of Public Works will consider this matter carefully, and go in for the state having its own system of electric lighting. In Toronto we have had some experience of gas, electric light and power companies, which are all monopolies entrenched there, and the citizens cannot get their rights from them. We have heard a good deal about the vested rights of these companies. While they are entitled to consideration, the public are also entitled to consideration. The whole tendency of the day is to wipe out these monopolies, and to have such things municipalized, or managed by the state or the city. I trust that the Minister will not have too many negotiations with the monopolies which are entrenched here, but will go in for a state system of lighting. If there must be a combination, let him form a combination with the city of Ottawa, and let the state and the city together provide themselves with the cheapest light supply they can get.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1 p.m.

Second Sitting.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House resumed consideration of resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Post Office—Outside service..... $3,636,657

Mr. FOSTER. When this item was under consideration this morning I objected to it on the ground that certain returns ordered by the House had not been brought down. To that objection the Minister stated that he had given orders to have the papers assembled, and that they had been mislaid. He has kindly sent to me a letter from his deputy, in which the deputy says that his impression is that the papers in the Marsh

Mr. FOSTER.

Hill case were given out in the ordinary way to a clerk to be copied before the deputy went to Washington, but that they cannot now be found; that he is having a search made for them, and that the probability is that they have got mixed with other papers. On that ground I cannot see that I have a right to block the passage of the Minister's estimate; but I take occasion to say that these papers are more important in the sense in which I am asking for them than probably the majority of the members know, and if they are not found, the matter will, of course, be spoken of later. It will be a case in which papers involving very important issues have in some way or other disappeared from view. They are not papers which have not been spoken about, because for more than a year now I have been trying to get at the information which I suppose is contained in them. I sincerely hope that the Postmaster General will not intermit any diligence to have these papers found or to answer the order of the House.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). The papers in question, so far as I remember, are very limited in number. They consist, I presume, of the appointment of Mr. King as postmaster at Marsh Hill, and his resignation. I think, speaking from memory, that his resignation was sent by telegram, and if it is to that the hon. gentleman attaches any importance, the probability is that a record of that can be obtained in the telegraph office through which it was sent; so that I do not think that ultimately there can be any prejudice in regard to the matter.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope my hon. friend does not suppose that I should hunt the telegraph office.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, but I just wished to intimate to the hon. gentleman that even if the papers have been mislaid, secondary evidence can be obtained of their contents, in all probability.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, I shall hope to get that.

Resolution agreed to.

Kentville public building.....	$ 5,000
Liverpool public building.....	5,000
Halifax drill hall (revote).....	12,000

Mr. McMULLEN. I was not in the House when the votes for the construction of post offices were under consideration. I am anxious to be entirely in accord with the Government, but at the same time I cannot lose sight of the fact that when in Opposition I advocated most strongly the principle laid down in 1890, with which principle I consider the item before us is at variance. I have frequently condemned hon. gentlemen opposite for not carrying out when in power that principle which they themselves had accepted, but their failure in this respect does not justify the present Government in pursuing a similar course. For fifteen years in Parliament, I have been advocating certain principles, and these principles I am anxiously looking to see carried now that we on this side have it in our power to do so. I desire to see every principle we advocated when on the other side carried out by us on this side. In this matter of public buildings, there was a clear understanding reached in 1890 that they should only be erected in places which contributed the largest revenue to the treasury and then only when the revenue of the country warranted their erection. We have nothing to show that the places mentioned in this vote are entitled to public buildings or that there is anything exceptional in their case which would justify a departure from the principle we have laid down and so persistently and strongly advocated, and therefore, if only for the sake of consistency which is proverbially a jewel, I feel impelled to move :

That the resolution be amended by striking out the appropriations of $5,000 each for Kentville and Liverpool public buildings.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My hon. friend from Wellington is perfectly within his rights in moving to strike out this vote. Some years ago the question of the policy which should control the Government in this matter was debated at great length, and a general principle adopted, which principle, we contended, was not adhered to by the late Government. It was stated the other day, and I had hoped my hon. friend would accept that statement, that this Government did not dissent from the principle laid down and were prepared to carry out the spirit of the resolution adopted. The hon. gentleman is of the opinion that the vote for this public building in Liverpool conflicts with the spirit of the resolution I have referred to. There may be some question about that. Liverpool is the shire town of the county of Queen's, it has no public buildings. It is a seaport town of some importance, and although the receipts there are not as large as in some of the other towns my hon. friend may be able to cite, that is not the only criterion by which we can judge the importance of a place and its title to a public building. Apart from that, the vote was assented to by the committee, and I was in hopes that the promise which the Government willingly made of its intention to proceed along the lines adopted some years ago would have satisfied my hon. friend. It is not the intention of the Government, as we have stated already, to erect a large building there but one of a reasonable moderate character. And considering that the county of Queen's has stood almost alone in the province of Nova Scotia for many years back, as regards expenditure on public buildings, and considering that the expenditure is to be very moderate and that this is an important shire town, which has some little claim to consideration, I think my hon. friend might very well let the vote go, upon the assurance given by the Government that the policy and principle of the resolution adopted some years ago will be carried out by them. In carrying out that policy, we did strike out the vote proposed for a building at St. Martin, which clearly did not come within the spirit of the resolution. The vote for Kentville I should imagine would come within that spirit. It is the leading town in the great Annapolis valley, and I could not imagine that any one would object to it. I myself saw the small, cribbed, cabined, and confined place which is now used there as a post office, and I thought it was hardly creditable to the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. You did not say anything about it ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, not even at the public meeting held there before the election. At the same time, I thought that the conditions in Kentville were such as would justify a small appropriation. I trust my hon. friend will accept the assurance given that the spirit of the resolution will in future be carried out, and that we shall not even shave on the lines of that resolution, as he may think we are doing in the matter of Liverpool.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to know if the Government are prepared to make any distinct statement as to the limit beyond which they will not go in the erection of these buildings ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is quite impossible at present, but I may give my hon. friend the assurance that the intention of the Government from the first was to put up a very moderate and economical building. There is no intention to build a large edifice which would overshadow every other building in the town.

Mr. SPROULE. I congratulate my hon. friend from North Wellington on his courage and good intentions in moving this amendment. All of us who sat in the last Parliament know how frequently and forcibly the hon. gentleman opposed this practice of building post offices in small places.

Now, he is carrying out that principle when he is supporting the Government. There is no doubt that it requires some moral courage to do that, because in doing it he is opposing his own friends. But I for one congratulate him on the course he has taken, and I am sure the country will do so as well, because it is an acknowledgment to the country that he is treating both sides alike, and that he was honest when advocating economy when in Opposition, and is willing to advocate it now as he was then. I can support this motion all the more freely because I myself have never advocated the building of post offices in small places. I take the post office returns, and I find that in that village—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Do you call Liverpool a village?

Mr. SPROULE. We would call it a village in our part of the country. I find that the gross postal revenues of that place last year was $2,085. Now, compare that with a village in my own locality which I know very well, in which there is only about a thousand people, and a gross postal revenue of $1,705.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The population of Liverpool is about 2,500.

Mr. SPROULE. But in these matters it should be judged by its postal revenue, which is only $2,085, and this cannot justify the expenditure necessary for the construction of a post office building. If it did justify it, I could pick out places by the dozen in the province of Ontario which have not asked for a post office building, but which would be equally entitled to it. I say that I support this resolution all the more freely because I never advocated the principle of putting up post offices in small places when my friends were in power. I have always said that there may be exceptional instances in which a Government is justified in putting up a post office in a small place, that is where they may be unable to get a suitable building to rent at a moderate figure. But where a building can be got for anything like a reasonable rent, a building that will serve the convenience of the public, the Government is not justified in undertaking a heavy outlay to construct another building. The rent paid for the building is comparatively a trifling item as against the expense involved in the construction of a Government building. Not only must the country suffer the loss of interest on the sum invested, but there must be a caretaker and all the paraphernalia of expense, which would be enough to pay the rent of a suitable building three or four times over. If we can save money for the country and at the same time meet the public convenience, why should we spend money in putting up new buildings? In our part of the country we have never urged the Government to put up new buildings in small places. When we were on this item I mentioned that in our county we had a population of about 75,000, and that it contained several towns that have an equal or greater claim to a public building than Liverpool. For instances, we have Owen Sound, the county town, with about 9,000 inhabitants; Durham, with about 3,000; Meaford, with between 2,000 and 3,000, and

Mr. SPROULE.

Thornbury with close upon 2,000, besides two or three villages, every one of which is nearly as large as Liverpool. Yet in the whole county there is not a building for post office or custom-house purposes, and there is not a proposition in these whole Estimates to build one in the county. And our county in this respect is an example of what may be found in almost every portion of the province of Ontario. The Government say: Let this pass, and we will see to it that in future the principle will be adopted in regard to these matters recommended a few years ago by this House. But we had better adopt that principle now. They may feel that they do not want to offend their friends. Their friends should not be offended at the striking off of an item that should never have appeared in the Estimates.

Mr. MACLEAN. I hope the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) will stand to his guns and that the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Bain) and the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Somerville) will support him. I am prepared to back him up to the fullest extent of my ability. I do admire independence in this House; I do admire men standing by their principles even in the face of their party. We have seen too many independent movements go to pieces in this House. We have seen the Patron movement go to pieces; are we to see the independent movement party in favour of economy now deserted? I hope not. I hope the hon. member for North Wellington will continue to advocate the same principles in power that he advocated in Opposition, and that the other gentlemen I have named will take the same position and assist him in the work he is doing, and I am sure that in doing so they will be upheld by the country.

Mr. CASEY. We have heard a good deal about consistency and independence, but it strikes me that the speeches of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) would have been much more in place, would have shown much more consideration for the public purse, if they had been made when their friends were in power and we were objecting to expenditures which we sometimes thought extravagant. Apart from that very obvious reflection, which must have occurred to the hon. gentlemen themselves I am sure, I want to say one or two words on the question at issue. I believe that when the House of Commons unanimously adopted the resolution already more than once alluded to, to the effect that public buildings should be distributed without regard to the political complexion of the constituency, the House did the right thing. But the glaring fact remains that for a number of years that have passed since that time, that resolution was not carried out by the party that was in power.

These buildings have not been distributed without regard to the colour of the constituency in which they were located. I believe that it devolves upon us as a duty to carry out the will of the House expressed in that resolution by, as far as possible, equalizing the distribution of the public buildings within the limits expressed in that resolution itself. It is a very great question whether it is the best economy in one case or another to have a public building rather than a rented one. My own opinion is that, in a great many places, a public building—it does not necessarily involve a caretaker and so on, as my hon. friend from East Grey said it did—may be a more economical arrangement and more favourable to the public interest. It is always easier to make a building convenient for the public when it has been built with a special view to accommodate the public. It is not always easy to rent a building that affords this convenience. And I believe there is just as apt to be jobbery in the way of renting a building from political friends as in putting up a public building when it is required. With all these considerations in view, with the broad fact before us that half the country has been defaulted of its necessary public buildings, notwithstanding the resolution of this House, by these gentlemen who have lately left office, I am not at all prepared to take the stand that we should be extremely critical in regard to the matter of the construction of public buildings by the present Government. If I did, in one or two cases, question their judgment in regard to this matter, I should hesitate a long time before I declared want of confidence in the Government or did anything to weaken their position by supporting a motion of this kind. I should give them the benefit of any doubt there may be in my mind as to the wisdom of the decision, and should, as I intend to do if this motion should come to a division, vote against any motion which implies want of confidence in their honesty of intention, or in the soundness of their judgment.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I just wish to say that I do not support the motion which has been made by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) on account of any approbation that I may receive from my hon. friends on the other side of the House, as has been promised by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean). I think every member of this House ought to have sufficient independence to vote for the same principles when he is supporting a Government as he did when he was in Opposition; and if my course does not meet with the approbation of the Government, I cannot help it. I sat on the other side of the House for fourteen sessions in Opposition, and every time these votes came up for post offices in all parts of the Dominion, it was the unanimous opinion of the Liberal party, led on by its leaders, and by the men who occupy prominent positions on the Government benches, that this policy should not be endorsed or supported by the people's representatives in this House. I for one am not prepared to swallow the principles or my words which I uttered in Opposition to the Government of the day at that time, in spending public money in this way; and although I am a warm supporter of the present Government, still I am not prepared to go the length of saying that I shall support everything they do, even though they do things which are contrary to the well-understood principles and practices of the Liberal party. That is the position that I take in regard to this matter. I say that there is no justification whatever, there can be no justification, for the expenditure of public money in erecting these post offices in small villages or towns, even though they may be shire towns, as mentioned in these Estimates. I say that in the province of Ontario there is not a riding where we cannot pick out three, or four, or five, sometimes ten or a dozen, towns which are just as important and far more important than the towns which are mentioned in this resolution. Therefore, I am bound to support the resolution moved by the hon. member for North Wellington.

Mr. SCRIVER. With regard to this question I have merely to say that I sympathize very strongly with the views that have been expressed by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Somerville) who has just taken his seat. If there was one subject upon which I felt strongly in the old days when our friends on the Opposition benches were bringing forward almost, every session, votes for public buildings in many instances in very small places, it was this very subject, and both by act and by word I have strongly opposed the granting of sums for erecting public buildings in comparatively small places. I remember particularly the case of a public building at a place called Laprairie, in the that part of the country where I live, a small village, the post office revenue of which was only four or five hundred dollars. I felt it was an abuse which could in no way be defended; and I remember raising my voice against the appropriation. Well, now because our opponents did wrong in the past in these matters, I consider is no reason why we should follow their example; indeed I think we are bound to take a better course, not only in regard to this matter, but in regard to a great many others. The vote in this particular case is for erecting a public building in what we would call in the province of Quebec, a village, or a small town, and where it has not been shown by any words uttered by the Finance Minister or by those who have followed him in support of this course, that a public building is needed. I believe with the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) that the erection of a public building will be followed by other outlays; in almost every instance, at all events, the services of a caretaker will be required, and thus an expense lasting for all time will be entailed upon the revenue; whereas it is very rarely the case that a suitable building cannot be rented at a very much less cost to the Government. I feel that I cannot stultify myself as I would be doing if I were to vote in support of an appropriation of this kind.

Mr. WALLACE. I regret that the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) did not include in his amendment several other places where I think the argument is just as strong or stronger.

Mr. SPROULE. We can only deal with one item at a time.

Mr. WALLACE. Well, Kentville is included in the same item. Now, with regard to Kentville the facts brought out when we were discussing the matter the other day were these: For the post office and custom-house $215 a year have been paid in rental for suitable accommodation for these two services, and a rough estimate was made of the interest on the cost of construction, of repairs, and of maintenance, which, for the first few years, I presume, would not be very much. Then there is the cost of a caretaker, the cost of heating, lighting and cleaning, and other services which are necessary in every public building, and which my hon. friend said might not be necessary. But you will particularly remember that of all the hundreds of public buildings in the country there was only one. I think, that at Orillia, where the Government dispensed with the services of a caretaker; and the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) was unkind enough to say that that was done for political reasons, and was a political job. Well, I do not know whether that is the case or not, but we can assume that a caretaker will be appointed here, and that, as in all other places, his salary will be paid by the Dominion Government. An estimate has been made that these services will cost $1,500. Now, in order to save $215 of rental, the Government wants to incur an expenditure at Kentville amounting, according to a rough estimate, it is true, but one that is likely to be as well within the mark as over the mark, to an annual expenditure of about $1,300, which will be incurred for all time in order to give a post office and a custom-house to one of those places. I need not go over any of the arguments that have been adduced here when these items were up before, but this House should consider the statements made by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), and I think it is a complete answer to the argument of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, that in the county of Grey, with its 75,000 inhabitants, with one town of 9,000 people, and with other towns of two or three thousand inhabitants each, they have not to-day a single public building within its borders.

Mr. SCRIVER.

Yet in this county and in this town it is proposed to give a public building though the revenue will not justify it. The argument used by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was that they were entitled to a portion of the public expenditure of this Dominion. Sir, I do not believe a more corrupting argument could be used before this House or before the people of this country, than the proposition that each locality is entitled to an expenditure of public money without regard to the requirements of that county. If a harbour requires to be opened for the safety of the public or for the promotion of commerce, there is an argument there for the expenditure of public money. If rivers require to be dredged so as to promote navigation and promote the safety of lives of people who have to travel up and down them, there is an argument for the expenditure of public money. But in this case the argument, I consider, is one which is entirely untenable. Then, Sir, we come to the next point. As has been stated by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), the hon. member for North Brant (Mr. Somerville) and the hon. member for Huntington (Mr. Scriver), they have been preaching this doctrine while they were in Opposition. A gentleman who preached one doctrine when he was in Opposition and preached another doctrine when he is in power, is the member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) who, this afternoon, to the surprise, and, I may say, to the disgust of every one who has heard his utterances in this House for the last eighteen years, not only denouncing the very thing he is prepared to support to-day, but denouncing the whole principle of expenditures in this direction, supported this proposition. For the last six or seven years it has been conceded that, although the Conservative Government had gone too far in the direction of putting up these public buildings, in 1890 they stopped short. At that time there was a declaration by resolution for a new policy. The Government of that day supported it; they permitted the motion to pass and bound themselves to be guided by it, and I am told that since that policy was laid down it has been very fairly adhered to. The ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) has stated that there may have been one or two departures from that rule during the last half dozen years, but no more, so that the rule that was laid down in 1890, that the revenues and the importance of the place must be sufficient to justify the erection of these buildings, has practically been the policy of the Government of Canada for the last half dozen years. To-day this proposal entirely reversed that policy. We have not only Liverpool and Kentville, but there are other and more flagrant instances in the Estimates in our hands. I would like to ask whether the St. Martin's post office has been struck out? I think it is quite right to strike it out, and that the same argument would apply to these other places where that argument has not been given. A reason has not been given to this House that will justify these expenditures, but the Government say: "Perhaps a mistake has been made; but if you let these items go through we will see that no objectionable items of this kind will come up again." I think the Government could more gracefully back down than that if they have adopted a wrong course. If these items are passed it will be regarded as a precedent for the renewal of a policy that has been abandoned. They have stretched that policy to a point that has not before been reached, though I must concede that in the past I could point to one place, at any rate, where a public building was erected, that could not be justified to-day. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the House will do its duty, and will sustain the pledge which was unanimously given in 1890 and which has been adhered to since, by voting for the motion of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen).

Amendment negatived.

Mr. COCHRANE. I was paired with the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Fraser). If I had not been I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. TOLMIE. If I had not been paired with the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. MACDONELL (Selkirk). If I had not been paired, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) If I had not been paired I would have voted in favour of the motion.

Mr. KAULBACH. Had I not been paired I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. McCLEARY. If I had not been paired I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. GUILLET. Had I not been paired I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). If I had not been paired I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. GILLIES. I am paired with the hon. member for Inverness, or otherwise I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. QUINN. If I had not been paired with the hon. member for Quebec Centre (Mr. Langelier) I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. MOORE. I would have voted for the motion if I had not been paired.

Mr. BRODER. I am paired, but I do not know with whom. I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. BAZINET. I am paired with the hon. member for Montcalm (Mr. Dugas). If I had voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. KLOEPFER. I am paired with the hon. member for Brant, or otherwise I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. LISTER. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is not in order to say how an hon. gentleman would vote.

Mr. MACLEAN. When did it get out of order ?

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. member (Mr. Kloepfer) is paired with the member for Brant who has voted.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member (Mr. Kloepfer) must vote unless he has a pair.

Mr. WALLACE. But he is paired with the hon. member for Brant, and the hon. member for Brant has voted.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is not for the Speaker to have anything to say in such a matter, it is for the hon. member himself.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I was paired a few days ago with the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder) by the Conservative whip. I saw the hon. gentleman (Mr. Broder) in the House and as I thought he voted, I voted also.

Mr. SPEAKER. Does the hon. member (Mr. Broder) wish to vote now, under the circumstances?

M. BRODER. I vote for the motion.

Mr. KLOEPFER. I vote in the same way for the motion.

Mr. GILLIES. There seems to be a doubt as to the statement I made. In order to make myself sufficiently clear, I wish to say that if I had voted, I would have voted against the motion of Mr. McMullen.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The senior member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) has not voted.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was paired with the hon. the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Russell), or otherwise I would have voted against the motion of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen).

Mr. RUSSELL. And if I had not been paired with my hon. colleague (Mr. Borden), I would also have voted against the motion of the hon. member (Mr. McMullen).

Rivière du Lièvre—Little Rapids Lock and dam ..... $4,500

Mr. FOSTER. Before these items are carried, Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to a matter which I brought up before with reference to the dismissal of Mr. McCallum who was lockmaster and foreman on the Le Lièvre works. We had some discussion across the floor with reference to that matter, and the Minister of Public Works gave a version of the reasons why Mr. McCallum was dismissed. These reasons went upon "Hansard," and Mr. McCallum of course read them. Mr. McCallum takes occasion to question the correctness of those statements made by the Minister—not of course because they were made by the Minister—but that the Minister's information was not correct, and consequently the statements were not as the facts actually were. The chief points of difference are these. In the first place, Mr. McCallum denies that he did anything else than loyally and fairly carry out the instruction that he received from the department. The instructions at first were given to him explicitly, to have recourse to Mr. Duncan McCallum. He had recourse to Mr. Duncan McCallum and to no one else. Then when the instructions were changed, he was told that it was not Duncan but Angus, and after that he was to have recourse to Angus McCallum for supplies, recommendations, and the like. From that time forward he had recourse to

Mr. SPEAKER.

Angus and not to Duncan McCallum. Mr. Angus McMillan, however, took the full interest in it, as he said himself, because Mr. Duncan McMillan did not care very much to be bothered with it, as there was nothing in it for himself. He, however, was employed, even before that time, whilst the patron of the works was Mr. Duncan McMillan. His time was constantly, or almost constantly, employed in carting the stone necessary for the work. This shows that even under Mr. Duncan McMillan, Mr. Angus McMillan, who, I believe, is a good Liberal, was not left out in the cold. The Minister declared that he had dismissed Mr. McCallum because Mr. Bourassa, the member for the county, had asked for his dismissal, and the Minister was of opinion that Mr. Bourassa had gone to the place, had held an investigation, and had found that the facts were in accord with the statement of the Minister, and that Mr. McCallum was untrue to his party. Now, Mr. McCallum denies point-blank that Mr. Bourassa ever made an investigation, or ever visited the works to make an investigation. Consequently, he is in the position of having been dismissed after simply doing his duty, without any investigation, and on testimony which he challenges and declares to be incorrect. Mr. McCallum's friends have asked the Minister, under these circumstances of misinformation, to give Mr. McCallum an investigation into the charges which were made against him by the member for the county, and in the remarks of the Minister whose opinion, I suppose, was drawn from that source, so that he may clear himself of those charges and those assumptions, which he declares to be false. He has sent in, I believe, a largely-signed petition, but not so largely signed as it would have been if he had had more time. What he asks for is simply an investigation. Acting for Mr. McCallum in the sense in which any person outside wishes a member to represent his case here, I mention these matters in order to ask the Minister to grant fair-play to Mr. McCallum and to have an officer investigate the charges. After that, it will be open to the Minister to employ Mr. McCallum or not; but I humbly submit that it is not open to the Minister to dismiss a man under aspersions which would impinge upon his character, and which he denies. It is the right of any man, though he does not enjoy the sweets or emoluments of office, to at least have his character left just as good as it was.

Mr. BOURASSA. The first time this matter was brought before the House I was not present. I have a very short explanation to make. For several months I resisted the pressure of some friends who asked for Mr. McCallum's dismissal from the employment of the Government because I did not care to have him dismissed on political grounds. But during the winter some repairs were made on the Little Rapids lock, and for the sake of economy the department appointed

Mr. McCallum, who was the lockmaster, to be the superintendent of works, and he was instructed to take advice from a certain resident of the township, Mr. Duncan McMillan, with regard to the employment of men. At the end of January he received direct instructions from the department not to apply to Mr. Duncan McMillan, but to Mr. Angus McMillan, with reference to the employment of men and the supply of materials. Instead of doing that, he employed all the same men for the full month of February, without giving any notice to Mr. Angus McMillan. Some of the men who wanted to get work applied to Mr. Angus McMillan, but Mr. Angus McMillan answered that he had no information on the matter, and it was seven weeks afterwards that I thought it my duty to the department to inform the Minister that an officer of his department, who had been instructed to take steps at the end of the month of January, had not done so. Having protected Mr. McCallum against dismissal on political grounds, I thought that he should be dismissed for having, during seven weeks, acted very badly in not acknowledging the duty he owed to the department, and in having disobeyed the orders of the department. It was only by special circumstances that I learned that he had not given notice to Mr. Angus McMillan. After the matter was brought to the notice of the department, he was dismissed on that ground, and on that ground only.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not wish to pursue this further than to say that Mr. McCallum absolutely denies that.

Mr. BOURASSA. I may say that I have the written proofs of all this. I have not them here, but I will bring them to the hon. gentleman at any time he wishes.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the Minister anything to say?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). I do not know that I have anything to say about it. I have not made many dismissals and I have been justified in making all I have made. In this case a member of Parliament stated to me what he has just now stated to the House, that is, that he had written evidence that one of our officers was disobeying us. I will never dismiss a man because he is a Conservative, but, at the same time, I will dismiss any of my employees who will not obey me, and I think my hon. friend would do the same. I have not done more than that. On the written statement of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, that Mr. McCallum had disobeyed the written order to apply for information to Mr. Angus McMillan, I dismissed him, and I am sure the hon. gentleman informed me rightly.

Customs—

Additional amount required to meet salaries and expenses of inspectors of ports and officers on preventive service.....	$6,250
Amount required for the purposes of defraying expenses of special preventive service.....	5,000
Amounts to be paid to Department of Justice to be disbursed by it and accounted for to it for secret preventive service.....	5,000
To pay John Reid for services.....	200

Mr. WALLACE. I wish to protest against all these items, but especially against the one providing an amount of $5,000 to be paid the Department of Justice for secret preventive service. My opinion is strengthened by further consideration of this item that it should be struck out. It is an innovation in the customs service which is not justified. As I have already said, it will open the door to practices we are not accustomed to and which will be injurious to the well-being of the country and the Customs Department in particular. It is a well-known fact that enormous powers are given to the Customs Department, because that is the great collecting department of the Government and the revenue requires to be protected. But this is an extension of that power, and the hon. Controller told us he was not going to expend this money but would hand it over to the Department of Justice. That makes the case still worse, because the Department of Justice does not know the customs laws, practice and rulings, and is not familiar with the machinery of the Customs Department for making investigations and of detecting wrongdoing and the requirements for the prevention of fraud against the customs. These are entirely unknown to the Department of Justice, and yet it is proposed to hand that money over to it. I presume it will be manipulated by the Dominion Police. Would the hon. Controller inform the House whether it is to be under the control and management of the Dominion Police?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). The Department of Justice.

Mr. WALLACE. Well, the Dominion Police are under the Department of Justice. The hon. Controller might tell us whether the intention is that the Dominion Police shall have the conduct and management of this matter. The Department of Justice has no officers of its own to conduct it. It has the control of penitentiaries and Dominion Police, and the only machinery it can utilize is the Dominion Police, and they are not the parties who should be entrusted with this important work. This will establish a system of surveillance over the importers, manufacturers and merchants, and authorize the expenditure of money to pay men to go into the offices of these people and become familiar with their business, or it may be used to bribe the servants and employees of these men. That appears to be almost the only way in which this money could be utilized beyond what can be properly done to-day under the customs law and the practices of the department. So I think this item ought to be struck out and the Government should take more time to consider the matter before they put such an item in the Estimates. They tell us that smuggling is on the increase. I think it can be safely said that, previous to the introduction of this new tariff, of which I will not speak further, smuggling was not on the increase but, on the contrary, owing to the efforts of the Customs Department, seconded by those in the communities along the St. Lawrence who desired to see law and order maintained—and particularly the Roman Catholic priesthood in the province of Quebec who strove most strenuously to prevent smuggling and who deserve great credit for their efforts, which efforts, I am glad to acknowledge—smuggling was decreasing. Where smuggling of whisky is carried on it demoralizes the whole community. Now it is proposed to take $5,000 of the people's money for a secret service fund. I think that is objectionable. The necessity for a secret service to be used in any such way as it is here proposed, has passed away. I would therefore ask the Government to reconsider this question, and, pending the reconsideration, to strike out this item.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The information that comes to the Government leads us to the belief that my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) is mistaken when he says that smuggling is on the increase.

Mr. WALLACE. I said that it had been on the increase up to the time the new tariff was introduced.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is just the point I was coming to. The idea that smuggling is on the increase since the introduction of the new tariff is not in accordance with the information we have. What the hon. gentleman says of the efforts put forth by the clergy in the province of Quebec is undoubtedly correct, and it is exceedingly gratifying to have my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) bear testimony to it. Notwithstanding that they have done the best they could to assist the strenuous efforts of the Government, the information in the department has been that the smuggling evil, previous to the new tariff even, was growing greater. The ordinary machinery of the department is not enough to grapple with this evil. The experiment is to be made—and it is only an experiment—to deal with the matter in another way. This is practically a detective vote, a police vote, not necessarily for the Dominion police, but for any officer who may be employed by the Department of Justice. In dealing with this matter we find it necessary to depart from the ordinary methods of Government. If we were to take a large sum for this purpose, no doubt it would be objectionable, or even if we were to take a small sum without providing for a proper audit, it would be open to objection. That aspect of the case has been very carefully considered. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) gave the assurance—I do not know whether the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) was present at the time—that the record of expenditures would be submitted to the Auditor General, and, if desired, to the leader of the Opposition. As the amount is not a very large one and the evil to be overcome is admitted to be very great, we feel that the House will support us in trying this experiment.

Mr. MACLEAN. Is there a similar vote in Washington?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This Government does not look to Washington—

Mr. MACLEAN. But I am asking whether there is such a vote.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am not aware; I cannot answer my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean).

Mr. MACLEAN. I was only going to say to the Minister of Finance that I do not know but that this is a good vote. I am a protectionist and—it may be an unwise admission for me to make—if you have a protective tariff and there are wrongs done under it, you must find means of putting down these wrongs and enforcing the law. I believe that at Washington they have such a vote as this, and I have never heard it complained of. In connection with this matter and in connection with specific duties, which hon. gentlemen have often talked against, that matter was brought before the House at Washington the other day, and it was shown that the only way that they could get a revenue in and protect native industries was by maintaining specific duties; and the free traders there were the men who attacked the ad valorem duties on the ground that they did not protect the revenues.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). In answer to the ex-Controller of Customs (Mr. Wallace), I may say that he is entirely mistaken when he says that smuggling was on the decrease prior to the introduction of the new tariff; at least, if he is correct, all the information in the department on that subject must be wrong. The hon. gentleman has given testimony, and, I think, just testimony, to the efforts of the clergy in the province of Quebec to abate this evil. I may say that the strongest representations we get on the subject are from these gentlemen, and their report is that, instead of smuggling being on the decrease before the present tariff, it was a continually growing evil. There are no people more anxious, I believe, to have vigorous steps taken to put down this smuggling than the clergy of the province of Quebec, and I am glad that the hon. gentleman bears testimony to the help they have afforded in that direction. My testimony from my experience with the department has been to the same effect. As to this being a fund that may be used to oppress people and so on, there is nothing in that at all. This is a fund to be put into the hands of the Department of Justice to be expended in such a way as will command the confidence of the House. This is not for the purpose of harassing importers, but to give additional strength to the Government to put down this great and growing evil.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not rise to criticise the vote, but, so far as it brings up the question of smuggling, I have a word to say. Smuggling of late years has assumed enormous proportions, and I am confident that hon. gentlemen opposite will find, as the late Government found, that it is no easy task to put it down. I am sure, however, that the whole House will wish the Government success, and members on both sides, I believe, would be willing to afford the Government every reasonable facility in dealing with this evil. But I wish to call the attention of the Government to one point, to a weak point in our administration, according to my view. The division of the proceeds of seizures are so made that they are themselves an inducement to smuggling. Therefore, it will not do merely to get a vote of Parliament such as this or ask further assistance in rewarding informers; you must begin nearer home. There is no use in leaving the law in such a way that it offers inducements to smuggling and then seek to counteract that by legislation and the expenditure of money. I have in the past looked into this case very carefully, because the department of which I was the head, the Inland Revenue Department, in co-operation with the Customs Department, had officers to enforce both the inland revenue and the customs laws. With the assistance of my officers I prepared a calculation which showed this condition of things, and one which exists to-day, and I ask the Government to take it into consideration. I found that a smuggler may go to the United States and buy a cargo of these strong wines or alcohols, and bring it in with the view of landing it at a Canadian port, or smuggling it in in some way. If he finds that he cannot escape one of our revenue cutters, and that he is exposed to the danger of seizure and confiscation, by some one stepping in and making a seizure, the whole cargo and the vessel may be seized and confiscated, and he still gets out with a profit.

If he escapes he makes an enormous profit, but if he is seized, under the present law, he makes some profit. Now, does not the House see that if I am right in that statement, there is an enormous inducement to the smuggler. If he is successful he makes an enormous profit; and if he fails in smuggling, he does not lose anything, but he actually makes a small profit. That is the point to get at. I strongly advise the Government to give this question their most earnest consideration.

Mr. QUINN. I must oppose this vote for two reasons. In the first place, I oppose it on the ground of its being called a secret service vote; and secondly, because I think it indicates a desire to move further in the wrong direction which has already been pursued by our customs authorities. It is an acknowledgment, too, that the moiety system to which reference has been made by the ex-Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Costigan), has been a failure. The moiety system has been the greatest curse which I think has ever been seen in this country, and has caused the perpetration of numerous frauds, and has brought into activity the worst characters that could have been found in the country. Yet by this vote the moiety system is not abandoned. If there was any hope that it would be abandoned, that would probably be a reason to make a trial of the secret service system. But we tack on to the moiety system a thing which I look upon with greater dread, and which I think will turn out to be a greater evil, than the moiety system, and that is the secret service system. Now, the Minister of Finance said that it is not in the true sense a secret service vote, that it is really a police vote. If it is a police vote why not put it in the form of a police vote? This House and the people of this country do not oppose giving to the Government all the powers necessary for the purpose of managing the police and detecting crime, either crime against the customs and excise laws, or the criminal laws. But the people of this country do object to giving any Minister the expenditure of a large sum of money without his being obliged to account for it to any one. That is what the people object to. Here is a sum of $5,000 going into the hands of the Minister of Justice to be used by him as he thinks fit. After it passes this House he is not bound to account to this House to show how he has used it, even for customs purposes. He is supposed to use it for customs purposes, but as far as the people are concerned, the moment this vote is concurred in, all control over it is lost, and the Minister is not bound to account to anybody. It is secret service money, and its very nature precludes the possibility of accounting for it. On this ground I must object to it. I think the Government would have done much better if, instead of asking for it as secret service money, they were to provide for the speedy trial of cases in which goods have been seized, and to pay for a commission, or a board of arbitrators, or a board of judges, or to devise some scheme, no matter what it is, that will secure the speedy trial of persons who are accused of infractions of the customs laws. Another mode might be the establishment of a police force having special powers to look after this smuggling in the Gulf, as I understand that is where it is intended to expend the money. Now, why not come out frankly and say: We want this money for police purposes, and ask for a vote of $5,000 or $10,000? There would be no objection to that. But to take a sum of $5,000 as a secret service money to be expended by the Minister with no obligations on his part to account for it to anybody, is revolting to the ideas of the people of this country, and I think the vote ought not to be concurred in.

To pay expenses of commission appointed to inquire into the Algoma election..... $547 30

Mr. SPROULE. Before this item is concurred in, I want to say a word with regard to the commission to inquire into the Algoma election. I looked over the report of that commission, and I cannot see why the information reported by the commissioner could not have been acquired just as easily from the Secretary of State here, as by appointing Mr. Crerar to go and make that report. He made one trip to Sault Ste. Marie and asked a few questions of the returning officer, then he made a trip to Dunnville and asked a few questions of Dr. Montague; and upon the strength of that and with the information that he got from the department here, he made his report. He bases his report upon the correspondence that passed between the returning officer and the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery here. It was the plainest thing imaginable. There was no information contained in it beyond what might have been got from the department here. I do not see, therefore, any need for that commission whatever, and this sum of $547.30 appears to me to be a very big sum for a very little service, paid to a needy party lawyer.

Lachine Canal—

Roofing and painting sheds at Jacques Cartier Basin..... $1,500
Complete electric station at Montreal.... 2,700

Mr. QUINN. Before this item is concurred in, I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals to the fact that he was to have brought down some papers giving information in connection with dismissals from the Lachine Canal. I have not seen any of these papers yet.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Minister of Railways and Canals is not in his place. I would like to ask the hon.

Mr. QUINN.

gentleman (Mr. Quinn) whether the return asked for was promised to be brought down on concurrence?

Mr. QUINN. Yes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In that case we will have to reserve that item until a later stage in the day.

Mr. QUINN. If you please.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Unless the hon. gentleman intends to move against the item, I hope he will allow it to pass and I will undertake to see that he has an opportunity to discuss it with the Minister of Railways and Canals. I do not know what promise the Minister has made.

Baie des Chaleurs Railway—Operating and maintaining..... $18,500

Mr. FOSTER. The House will remember that in discussing the Baie de Chaleurs Railway arrangement the other evening I asked, whether or not, before the Government had undertaken to operate that road, the Minister of Railways and Canals had laid sufficient information before the Council that the Council might base its action on a report from the Minister which would give them grounds for supposing that they could operate the road without involving the country in expense. I think the committee will remember that I ventured the assertion that the Minister of Railways and Canals had probably laid no such detailed information before the Government. I asked that the Order in Council be brought down. I shall just read an interesting and instructive portion of this Order in Council that the committee may know the utter absence of any information there was before the Council when they determined upon taking over the running of the road for which they had not the least parliamentary authority and for which they had no appropriation. The Order in Council reads:

On a report, dated 17th November, 1896, from the Minister of Railways and Canals, stating that the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company have made application for a revote of the subsidies granted to the Great Eastern Railway Company towards the construction of a railway from Sorel to Chaudière Junction, and also for a subsidy of $3,200 per mile for the extension of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway from Paspébiac to the Gaspé Basin, and have prayed that the amounts of the several bonuses given by the Dominion Government and the municipalities and provincial government may be taken and held by the Government of Canada as a fund out of which to guarantee and pay interest on the company's issue of bonds, as authorized by their charter, and in accordance with the scheme outlined in the company's proposals.

That is one share of their proposal.

The Minister observes that, in promoting their application, the company have pointed out that the Baie des Chaleurs Railway is at present in the hands of sequestrators, under proceedings pending in the courts of the province of Quebec, and is not, therefore, in running operation, greatly to the injury of the section of the country through which the road passes, and it is represented by the president, directors and other persons who have been heard by the Sub-Committee of the Privy Council in support of the application of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Company, that the operating of the said railway during the winter would be of immense benefit to the locality through which it runs, and would be a valuable feeder to the Intercolonial Railway, and they add that arrangements are practicable and could be made, if approved by Your Excellency in Council, between the courts having the sequestration proceedings before them and the Department of Railways and Canals.

The Minister adds that, in proposing that the Government should take over and operate the Baie des Chaleurs Railway for the coming winter, it was strongly represented to the Sub-Committee of the Privy Council that the road was in good, safe working condition, and was provided with sufficient rolling stock in good serviceable condition, and could be operated for the winter season by the Department of Railways and Canals as a branch or feeder to the Intercolonial Railway, not only without loss to the Government, but so as to produce a balance over working expenses.

That was the assertion of this celebrated individual by the name of Armstrong against whom my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) delivered such a fiery philippic and declared that he would not touch him with a ten foot pole. It was the assertion of this gentleman that this would be a valuable feeder and that if they would just take it over and operate it for six months in the winter it would not be a loss but it would actually bring in a valuable revenue. The Minister of Railways and Canals had no other information of any sort to back up the proposition. With the statistics of that road before him, with the expenses and receipts as sworn to by the company after it had been run for two years, he simply accepts the assertion of the promoters, leaps into an illegal and unauthorized operation of a railway and then comes to Parliament and meekly says: "We went into it as an experiment; we have lost $12,000; we ask this Parliament for money to recoup us our expenses." I simply thought it would be well to read this Order in Council to show upon what information a business Government undertakes an unbusinesslike arrangement.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me the most unbusinesslike proposition ever submitted by any Government in the history of this country. What are the arguments advanced in its favour? It has been strongly represented by the parties interested, they say. We have our own engineers whom we could send out at a day's notice to look over the railway. We could have ascertained how much traffic was handled. We could have got all this information but we did not take the trouble to get it. It has been strongly represented to us by the parties who are likely to profit by the transaction. To think that the Minister of Railways and Canals with all the officers at his disposal—engineers, accountants and others, who are in the pay of the Government, did not take the trouble to look into this and ascertain whether or not it was possible to operate the road without loss, seems almost incredible. If this is regarded as a business transaction that ought to satisfy the Council it should not be looked upon as a business transaction that will satisfy this House.

Welland Canal—

To pay William Higgins, from time he became unable to work, 20th October, 1896, until the date of superannuation, 1st February, 1897, at $38.....	$139 33
To pay G. Edwards, from time he became unable to work, 20th October, 1896, until date of superannuation, 15th December, 1896, at $45.....	79 16

Mr. McCLEARY. While we were discussing this question a few days ago, in reference to the Welland Canal, I called the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals to some of the dismissals there and he questioned the statement I made as to the number that had been dismissed. He said that about 45 men had been dismissed. I stated that in addition there were 50 or 60 others, and he questioned the accuracy of my statement. In addition to the 45 men dismissed along the line of the Welland Canal formerly referred to, in the counties of Lincoln and Welland there were 69 others, which would make 114 dismissals. And in addition on the feeder branch the men dismissed, would number 15 or 20 more, so that out of 160 or 170 men employed on the Welland Canal upwards of 125 or 130 have been dismissed. I just call the attention of the Minister to this because he has given his friends carte-blanche there and they have been carrying out his instructions to perfection.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the Minister nothing to say at all, when, after having made a statement to this House that no more than forty-five had been dismissed, in refutation of a statement made by a member of this House that many more had been dismissed, and now when the hon. member comes directly from the scene of action and reiterates this statement that more than he asserted have been dismissed, and the Minister simply says: I think your information is not quite correct. The Minister is in either one position or the other. Either he is not administering his own department, but it is being done by a committee, so far as dismissals and appointments in their places are concerned; or else, he is not giving to this House the information which the House ought to have, that is, authentic information when a Minister speaks as to the facts under consideration. I could easily see that the Minister might not be within a few of the number, but there is a wide divergence between the statement as to forty-five, and twice or three times that number, that it does lead to the conclusion that some committee somewhere is arranging the dismissals or reappointments without the knowledge of the Minister.

Amount required to pay the British American Bank Note Company for printing and engraving Dominion notes..... $33,656 15

Mr. FOSTER. The House will remember that on Friday there was a little conversation on this item with reference to the Jubilee stamps, and the Postmaster General made certain statements with reference to the British American Bank Note Company. These statements, of course, went upon the "Hansard," and I have had a communication from Mr. Burland with reference to what the Minister said. I do not want to put the House to the trouble of listening to the whole of the letter, but I may mention that Mr. Burland says that the statements made by the Postmaster General were, in Mr. Burland's opinion, not in accordance with the facts. He says:

When it became known that a Jubilee stamp was about to be issued, I waited upon the Minister, and, after discussion, he promised to give us the work. Our artists then prepared a design, which was submitted to the Minister. Upon examination, he admitted his ignorance of such matters, and referred the matter to Mr. Dobell by letter, which I conveyed in person along with the design. Mr. Dobell examined it carefully, approved of it, initialled it and wrote to Mr. Mulock to that effect. This letter I myself delivered to the Postmaster. He then delayed a decision, and from week to week for several weeks put the matter off, pleading that he was very busy and that he wished to take the opinion of a clerk in another department, whom he claimed was an artist. This clerk had himself made a design which was entirely unsuitable, and the Postmaster never at any time said the one submitted by us and approved by Mr. Dobell was not suitable. The design now actually in use is only slightly altered from ours, and not improved thereby.

All these delays were made, as it now appears, to allow our contract to expire.

Then Mr. Burland denies the statement made by the Postmaster General as to the inequality or unevenness of the work, and the inferior quality of gumming. Mr. Burland says that his work for thirty-five years answers for itself, and he is quite willing to let it go against the statement of the Minister. This is the substance of the assertions made by the president of the old company, and I think it only fair to have his statement go to the House, along with the statement made by the Minister on Friday, as his statement rather reflects upon Mr. Burland's work.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I quite adhere to what I said before, and with regard to the reference to Mr. Dobell, it is hardly worth while referring to it. It happened in this way: I was submitting my sketches to various persons, amongst others to Mr. Dobell, and I think I had given them all to Mr. Dobell to look them over. Mr. Burland was running after me perpetually—

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Burland denies that he ran after you.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He pursued me until he got possession of these sketches. I think Mr. Dobell made a selection out of the number, but they were in a crude state, wholly unfinished. I have nothing to withdraw of my statements whatever, and if Mr. Burland thinks I made any promise to him, and if he chooses to bring an action against the Crown, he shall have every opportunity to do so. If he has any promise from me he can have a remedy through an action for breach of contract. He called upon me after the work was given to the other company, and in the presence of my secretary we went over the whole matter, and in the course of that interview he stated that he recognized the fact that he had not received any promise, that he had no claim whatever, and that he only wished to publish this work himself. I myself would have preferred if I could have given it to him. I was anxious to have given it to him; my feelings were that way.

Public Buildings—Quebec..... $58,908 15

Mr. FOSTER. What is the estimated cost of the Berthierville public building?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will not spend a dollar more than I am asking for, $5,000.

Mr. WALLACE. I think there are some items here that should not pass, especially the vote of $7,500 for Montmagny post office. I therefore move that it be struck out, seconded by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean).

Amendment negatived, on division.

To meet expenses in connection with the visit of Hon. Mr. Laurier to England at the celebration of Her Majesty's Diamond Jubilee..... $8,000

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to have the leader of the Government tell us generally what is the proposed method of expenditure of this amount. I do not ask the hon. gentleman to give the details at all.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The hon. gentleman is of course aware that under the circumstances it would not be for the credit and honour of Canada that the Premier should be stinted in his expenditure. He will almost of necessity have to visit a great many places and people, travelling a great deal, and, as he himself and Lady Laurier, with his secretary and ordinary attendants, will form the party, he cannot by any possibility—

Mr. FOSTER. Does this include the body-guard ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No, I cannot say that the military gentlemen will form part of his retinue. They are provided for from a different source. I am not in a position, of course, to give the hon. gentleman the details, but I think he can be certain that Sir Wilfrid Laurier will maintain the honour of Canada in a suitable manner, without extravagance, but without undue parsimony. That is all the information I can give. I think both sides of the House will feel that he should acquit himself on all occasions in a manner befitting the Dominion, and the very great distinction with which he has been received by all parties in England and elsewhere.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no disposition at all to quarrel with even a generous amount for travelling expenses for the representative of Canada in Great Britain during the Jubilee celebrations. In fact, I would not be very careful to limit it exactly to the Jubilee week, or the time set apart for the celebrations. I am sure that gentlemen on this side as well as on that side can see in the Premier not simply the representative of a party, but the representative of the whole country on an occasion like this. It was not my disposition, in calling attention to this, to quarrel particularly with the amount. Of course, I know that Mr. Laurier—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FOSTER. I beg pardon—Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his immediate attendants are the guests of the Empire for the official period of the celebration; but I am quite aware also that outside of that there are large expenditures which any gentleman representing Canada as he does must be called upon to make; and I am not at all anxious to be carping or critical over the amount. While the people of this country are economical, the people of this country are also of sufficient good sense and sufficiently proud in their proper representation in Great Britain, to be willing that their representative should be treated in no niggardly way. I hope the hon. gentleman may have a most excellent good time. I am sure that Canada will be well represented, and I do not grudge hon. gentlemen opposite whatever pride and whatever satisfaction they may get out of their leader's position and tour as the representative of Canada during the Jubilee celebration.

Intercolonial Railway—Extension to Montreal—To pay rental to Grand Trunk Railway Company and Drummond County Railway Company for railway from Chaudière to Montreal, to be operated as part of the Intercolonial Railway, nine months..... $157,500

Mr. FOSTER. There is one point with reference to this vote that I would like to have some information about. The House will remember that this item did not come down in the preceding Estimates, although the conditions were settled and the arrangement was virtually concluded when the House met, and the contract was signed on the 15th day of May. The House will remember also that this proposition started in this House in the form of a Bill, and that it passed this House and went to the other component part of the legislature. There it was thrown out, and, if my memory serves me rightly, it was thrown out on the morning of the 24th of June. But if I am not mistaken, the Governor General's Message, which brought down this item of $157,000 as an item of the Estimates, thus seeking to carry out, in an indirect way, the intention of the Government which at first had been propounded in a Bill which failed to pass both Houses. What seems a little peculiar is that a Message should have been signed by the Governor General in advance of the decision of the Senate. To me it appears that at some period during the day of the 23rd June, before the Bill was negatived in the Senate, which happened on the morning of the 24th June, and consequently, before the decision of the Senate could have been possibly registered, the Governor General, with his own hand signed what was the alternative of the Government, provided their first proposition did not receive the assent of Parliament. I think an explanation is due the House, for the Government's sake, and probably for other reasons, and I hope my hon. friend will give us that explanation.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I may say that my hon. friend is in error in assuming that the item was in any way dependent upon the vote of the Senate. It was an item which would have been necessary anyway, and was omitted in the general Estimates, simply in error. It was a mere accident, and we brought it down as a supplementary Estimate irrespective of any vote in the Senate. It so happened that before we had the opportunity to bring it down as a supplementary Estimate, the decision of the Senate had been reached. The House was in committee all afternoon and night, or the item would have been laid on the Table at an earlier stage. It was not prepared in anticipation of any vote of the Senate, and would have been brought down even if the Senate had passed the Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. If the Government had been successful in putting through their scheme by way of a Bill, and this arrangement to pay $64,000 and $6,000 a year, and $37,500 a year and $40,000 a year and $62,500 a year had been carried through, does the hon. gentleman mean to say that he would have been obliged to come down to this House every year and include all these items in his Estimates, or would he have considered it amply sufficient, as in other cases in the past and present, that when a statutory financial obligation is provided for a series of years, it is not necessary to bring down a vote each year?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Statutory items are often submitted in the items for convenience. In this case, even if the Bill had passed, we would have required an appropriation for the nine months. That is the view taken by the hon. gentleman hitherto, and that was the view that we took, and the Estimate had been prepared and signed by His Excellency and ready to be submitted to Parliament before the vote was taken, and without respect to what the decision of the Senate might be.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has not answered the question. Would he ask for that vote in the Estimate every year for ninety-nine years?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is not an uncommon practice to insert in the Estimates the items which are provided by statute in order that the whole expenditure of the year might be known. My hon. friend took exception last year to the omission of an item of a statutory character. He thought it should have been in the Estimates, so that his own view then differs from his view to-day. The principle he laid down was that the Estimates should show the whole contemplated outlay for the year, and when I omitted to include the cost of the extra session of Parliament in the Estimates, my hon. friend took exception.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to have some more explanations from the Government with regard to this vote of $157,500. Those explanations are entirely unsatisfactory. The Minister of Railways tells us that this is an experiment to be followed by another vote of $100,000 for rolling stock, which is also an experiment, since it depends on this vote. Did anybody ever hear, in this or any other country, such a proposal as that made in these two resolutions? The Government had a scheme by which, at an expenditure of $210,000 a year for ninety-nine years, they were going to extend the Intercolonial Railway from Quebec or Lévis to Montreal, but Parliament would not accept it. Now they propose to get around the decision of Parliament in another way. How do they propose to do that? By voting for nine months—the three months, I presume, it will take to construct the connecting links—$157,500, and they will have to vote, I presume, a sum of money for the construction of that connecting link in addition, or give some further assistance, because that company could not go on with the construction of that link without some money to do it. Now, this proposal is to vote $157,500 as an experiment, presumably to see whether the work will be profitable, but the hon. Minister told us there was no experiment about it. He gave us the figures of freight and passengers; 1,100 passengers per day will require to be carried, and 400,000 tons of freight in a year. There was no experiment about it. He had the figures down fine, he had a certainty. There never was a more glaring fraud in any proposal submitted to this House. Here is the Grand Trunk Railway, which is interested to the extent of $5,000,000, because it is a moderate calculation to say that if the bargain which the Government desired to put through had been carried, the Grand Trunk Railway could have raised $5,000,000 on the strength of it. Parliament, however, threw out the proposal, and then the Government come down with this proposal as an experiment to try for this year. Why, it would be the most successful experiment that ever was submitted to Parliament. The Grand Trunk Railway being interested to the extent of $5,000,000 would send all their freight from Quebec to Montreal and Montreal to Quebec over this road within these nine months, in order to insure getting these $5,000,000, which they would get practically for nothing, because they would have, in any case, to build the works themselves to accommodate their own traffic, which the Government propose to pay them for building. And the Government's rolling stock running over the road will be the smallest injury to the line and the slightest possible inconvenience to the Grand Trunk Railway. They will get this $5,000,000 very largely for works which they contemplated building at any rate, and for which they would have had to raise funds from other sources. So, it would be to their interest, for these nine months, to make the experiment an abundantly successful one and, for that reason, to send their freight and passengers by the Government road for these nine months. They would receive two-thirds of $157,000, or $105,000 for these nine months, and other moneys besides. And when the Government came to Parliament next session, they would be able to say: You said this was not going to be a prosperous business, but we can show you that we have distanced the Grand Trunk, we have done twice as much business as they, and as it has been in the past, so it will be in the future. The proposition the Government made to have this experiment tried is so transparent that I wonder at the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) submitting it to the House. What did that road cost? I have a statement that I will read for what it is worth. It is said to have been made by a former officer of the road who knew what he was talking about, and who submitted these as official figures to parties to whom the road were creditors in an earlier stage of its existence. Grading, $500 a mile; ballasting, $250 a mile; ties, 2,640 at 18 cents each, $375 a mile; iron, 56 pounds to the yard, say $2,500 (this covered joints, bolts, and spikes ; track-laying, $150 ; five bridges, cost $150,000, say $1,500 a mile ; land damages, $750 a mile ; probable cost of the road a mile, $6,025. On the credit side were the following items :—Say $50,000 received from the local government for bridges, representing for the whole mileage, $500 per mile ; subsidy from the Quebec Government, $4,000 ; subsidy from Dominion Government, $3,200 ; making a total of receipts of $7,700 per mile, which, as against an expenditure of $6,025 would leave $1,675 as clear profit for those who carried out the work of construction. Now the Government propose to give them at least $2,000,000. I gave an estimate the other day, based upon careful calculation, that what the Government was giving would be worth $2,200,000. So, besides this $1,675 per mile, which was divided among a number of fortunate individuals. I presume they are to have over $2,000,000 divided amongst them ; and we are told that Mr. Greenshields, Mr. Mitchell, Mr. Farwell, of Eastern Townships Bank, and a number of others—particularly a number of others—are to have this very large sum divided amongst them. It is even said that members of this House—and perhaps not those on one side alone—are also to have a share in the distribution of this money, or were going to have a share in it if Parliament had been generous enough to vote the money.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. TALBOT. Do you know the names of any ?

Mr. WALLACE. I am told that another House is going to ascertain their names and other particulars, and if my hon. friend (Mr. Talbot) who has put his question has any further knowledge he can give it to the House. I have no doubt he has some information that would be very valuable to them, though he has not much that is of value to this House. Now, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) has taken, apparently, a very deep interest in this scheme. There is no doubt that whether he has any financial interests in it himself the investigation will disclose that he is in very close touch and in closest financial relations with Mr. Greenshields and those other gentlemen who are interested most deeply in this scheme. That cheques have gone from one to the other, have gone from the promoters of this scheme to the payment of indebtedness of the Minister of Public Works is something that, I think, he himself has admitted.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). No, I do not admit that ; and it is not true.

Mr. WALLACE. The statement that I made was that cheques have gone from these parties for the payment of the indebtedness of "La Patrie"—

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If the hon. gentleman will go further and state that I have financial interests with Mr. Greenshields and will have the manliness to ask for a committee of inquiry, I pledge myself that this Government will immediately consent to it in this House. I cannot say more than that. Sir, I ask that hon. gentleman, if there is any manhood in him, to bring out his accusation against me now, and from my seat in Parliament I will ask for an inquiry to take place immediately. If he is a man, let him do that.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not think that anybody is very much frightened by this little fireworks display on the part of the Minister of Public Works. He says that if I have the manhood and courage to do so, he will meet me. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that I have ever lacked the courage of my convictions ; and I can say this—that I have never run away from a prosecution—

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Nor I either.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister of Public Works started a criminal prosecution in the province of Quebec, and when the day was fixed for the trial, he was many hundreds of miles away from the province of Quebec.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What the hon. gentleman says is quite inaccurate.

Mr. WALLACE. What I say I know to be true.

Mr. SPEAKER. When a hon. member gives a denial on a matter which is within his own personal knowledge, of course, every hon. member must accept that statement.

Mr. WALLACE. That is just what I wanted. I was stating a fact that was within my own personal knowledge.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that he was referring to a statement contradicted just now by the Minister of Public Works. If the hon. gentleman will be good enough to withdraw that reference, then he will place himself in order ; otherwise he would be out of order.

Mr. FOSTER. Was that in connection with the inaccuracy of the distance that intervened between the hon. gentleman and the prosecutor ? If so, I understood the hon. gentleman to say that the member for West York (Mr. Wallace) knew that he, the member for West York, was inaccurate. That is not a denial by the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to know what the denial was. I made a statement that the hon. gentleman started a criminal prosecution against an individual in the province of Quebec. Has he denied that ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. And ran away, which is not true.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman says he did not run away. Is that the statement that I have to withdraw? The next statement I made, and which I shall not withdraw, is that when the case came on for trial the hon. gentleman was not in the province of Quebec. I made that statement knowing it to be true. And I make another statement, and that is that a criminal prosecution was started by the hon. gentleman—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I ask my hon. friend to keep in order.

Mr. WALLACE—a long time ago, and it has not come to trial yet, and I am told that the reason that it has not come to trial is because—

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman will please confine himself to the item that is under discussion. This matter is entirely irrelevant. It may be very interesting and proper to discuss on a proper occasion, but that is not just now.

Mr. FOSTER. The item under discussion is the Minister of Public Works, and it was raised by himself.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman understands that he is trifling with the House in saying that.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not know when a discussion of this question could come on more properly than in connection with a vote for the Intercolonial Railway extension to Montreal. That was the matter that I was discussing.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is before the House.

Mr. WALLACE. That is the matter that I was discussing when the hon. gentleman tried to draw a herring across the trail.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well, without my drawing his attention to it, that questions relating to a certain criminal trial in Montreal have no connection with this Intercolonial Railway vote, and the time of the House will be saved if the hon. gentleman will confine himself to questions that have to do with this vote.

Mr. WALLACE. If you will take the trouble, and I am sure you will, you can recall to your memory the fact that when I was addressing myself strictly to the item under discussion, I was interrupted by the Minister of Public Works who dragged in these irrelevant matters, or what you call irrelevant matters. He referred to my manhood, and challenged me to bring in some other matter. I think that that is quite within your recollection, Mr. Speaker; and consequently if there is any irrelevancy, it was not due in any degree to any statement that I made to this House. The whole matter was brought up by the Minister of Public Works himself.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am prepared to assume that the hon. gentleman considered that it was irrelevant when he introduced it; but I do not think it was, and therefore he will oblige me by keeping the debate within the limits of relevancy.

Mr. WALLACE. I think it is quite relevant to say that this matter is being now investigated by the other Chamber of this Parliament, and I am quite sure there will be a thorough investigation of this case; and according to the evidence that we have before us—but perhaps I should not prejudge the case—but at any rate there are sufficient facts before us to justify us in saying that it looks very much like another Baie des Chaleurs scandal, if not a great deal worse. We know, and it has become public property outside of this House, that men have been dividing up the shares of this company, they have been distributing them. Suppose one share is worth $100, the cash value of it would be easily worth $500, because there are two million dollars profit less $400,000, making easily $1,600,000 profit on this transaction. This is money that the Government proposes to hand over recklessly and extravagantly for the construction of this portion of the road, a total of three million dollars between what this company would get and what the Grand Trunk Railway will receive. So that this experiment that these gentlemen propose to make with $157,000 of the people's money and another $100,000 that appears immediately before it, and explains the evils of this experiment, I say is a wilful waste of the money of the people of Canada, and it will simply keep alive this further scheme for an expenditure of $210,000 a year for 99 years, for giving the Government's guarantee to it, is equal to a cash payment of $7,000,000 at the present time. I am entirely opposed to this scheme, and I do not believe that the people of Canada will consent to it. Why, just look at it. Lines of railway where there is no business to be done. There is a Grand Trunk Railway line from Montreal to Quebec, there is a Canadian Pacific Railway line from Montreal to Quebec, and there is a South Shore scheme, and here is a fourth line. But without the South Shore scheme, this would make three lines of railway running from Montreal to Quebec to do business that can easily be done by one line of railway. That proposal looks to me perfectly absurd. These two rival companies were perhaps justified each one in trying to get to the city of Quebec and connecting with the Intercolonial Railway that they might continue their road there. But that a third line should be proposed, and then this fourth line is absurd. With these three lines of railway reaching from one of these points to the other one along the south side of water communication, is totally unnecessary and a waste of the money of the people of Canada. There is a great big job behind it, whether the Government are aware of the extent of that jobbery is a matter that investigation will prove. But I do not accuse the Government of being parties to it as a Government; I do not accuse the Government as a body in being parties to any corrupt transaction, but investigation will prove whether there are any members of Parliament or of the Government connected with this job, or implicated in the transaction. I think the Senate did wisely in throwing out the Bill, and I think the Government would do wisely in refraining from pressing forward this vote for $157,000.

MILITARY EQUIPMENTS.

Mr. GUAY asked :

In re Lewis Military Equipment—Will a test be made by the authorities with a view of ascertaining the best equipment to be adopted for the use of the Canadian militia? When and where will the test be made? Will the Lewis and Oliver be considered in the test, and are there any other equipments to be considered? Who will be the judges in this matter? What are the conditions under which the test will be made? Has the question of the equipment been placed wholly in the hands of the General Officer Commanding the Militia?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Four sets of the Oliver, Merriam, and Lewis equipments are now being tested and will in due course be reported upon by the permanent corps at Halifax, London and Toronto. These are the only equipments under trial in this country. The reports will be considered by the general officer commanding in conjunction with the Minister of Militia and Defence. The conditions under which the tests are being made are their general suitability. The question of the equipment has not been placed wholly in the hands of the officer commanding the militia.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Intercolonial Railway—Extension to Montreal ..... $157,500

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to say a few words upon this item that is now engaging the attention of the House. I understood the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) before six o'clock to say in answer to the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) that this item had been assented to by the Governor General in pursuance of an arrangement that was entered into for the lease of the Drummound County Railway, and also with the Grand Trunk Railway Company, to enable the Intercolonial Railway to get into Montreal. Was I correct in that understanding?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What I did say was that the Message of His Excellency was obtained before the vote had taken place in the Senate, and that it had no reference to that vote.

Mr. SPROULE. For the purpose of paying for the balance of the financial year the moneys incurred under that lease?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. For the purpose of paying the rental for the period covered by these Estimates—for the fiscal year.

Mr. SPROULE. Under that lease?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, originally under that lease.

Mr. SPROULE. In my judgment, it cannot be constitutionally done, because if the Governor General's assent is got to any item in the Supply Bill the money must be appropriated for the purpose for which it is obtained, and not used for any other purpose. I think that there is nothing clearer and nothing plainer in the constitution than what is written in reference to that. I have here Dr. Bourinot's work which, to my mind, expresses it very clearly. In the first place, it lays down that :

All the checks and guards that the wisdom of English parliamentarians has imposed in the course of centuries upon public expenditures, now exist in their full force in the Parliament of the Dominion. The cardinal principle which underlies all parliamentary rules and constitutional provisions with respect to money grants and taxes, is this : Whenever burthens are imposed on the people, to give every opportunity for free and frequent discussion, so that Parliament may not, by sudden and hasty votes, incur any expenses, or be induced to approve of measures which may entail heavy and lasting burthens upon the country. Hence it is wisely ordered that the Crown must first come down with a recommendation, whenever the Government finds it necessary to incur a public expenditure, and that there should be full consideration of the matter in committee and in the House, so that no member may be forced to come to a hasty decision, but that every one may have abundant opportunities afforded him of stating his reasons for supporting or opposing the proposed grant.

In the old legislatures of Canada, previous to 1840, all applications for pecuniary assistance were addressed directly to the House of Assembly, and every Governor, especially Lord Sydenham, has given his testimony as to the injurious effects of the system. The Union Act of 1840 placed the initiation of money votes in the Crown, and this wise practice was always strictly followed, up to 1867, when the new constitution came into force. By the 54th section of the British North America Act, 1867,—which is copied from the clause in the Act of 1840—it is expressly declared :

Then, the clause of the British North America Act which gives that clause, says :

"It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any vote, resolution, Address, or Bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue, or of any tax or impost, to any purpose that has not been first recommended by a Message of the Governor General in the session in which such vote, resolution, Address or Bill is proposed."

The effect of this clause is that it is not only compulsory that the Governor General's assent to a vote, that is to the amount, shall be obtained, but he shall also approve of the purpose for which the money is to be expended. If it were a fact that the Governor General's assent was got to this item in pursuance of an agreement that was entered into subject to the approval of Parliament for the renting of a railway for ninety-nine years it will not be held that it would not be appropriating money for another purpose if you change that to the renting of a railway for the nine months which is the case here. The Minister of Finance does not contend that this lease in the event of its being carried out will extend over nine months, but the original lease was for ninety-nine years, and when the Governor General assented to this item he only assented to it for carrying out the previous lease for ninety-nine years and for that purpose alone. It is diverting the money from its original purpose to say that you will use it to pay the rental of the railway for nine months instead of ninety-nine years. On the other hand, it seems to me that this was to pay for the balance of the financial year during which this lease would run in the event of its being assented to by Parliament. The lease will commence on the 1st of November, but the financial year ends on the 30th June, so that there would be only eight months of the financial year to run instead of nine. Whatever view the Minister of Finance takes of it, he cannot constitutionally use this money for this purpose, or the Governor General was deceived when he was asked his assent to the expenditure to carry out the lease for ninety-nine years if the Government take it to carry out a lease that was entered into for only nine months. The Governor General was either misled or else the hon. gentlemen are using the money for a purpose other than that for which it was intended when they asked the assent of the Governor General. I think we are being asked to assent to something that we should not assent to. Why? Because in assenting to an expenditure of $157,000, we are assenting to an expenditure of $157,000 for an experiment. I think I might appropriately say that the only three principles of government adopted by the present Administrations are the following:—Government by commission, because they have appointed commissions for every conceivable purpose imaginable; government by plebiscite; and government by experiment. They are appointing commissions to get information upon which they base their judgment as to the need of legislation; they have promised to take a plebiscite to get information from the people as to what they want done, and lastly, they are now introducing a novel principle, that of experimenting. I think this experiment is going to cost us too much. It means not only an expenditure of $157,000 to pay for the lease of this Drummound County Railway and to obtain privileges from the Grand Trunk Railway for nine months, but it means an expenditure of $100,000 more for rolling stock, and of $300,000 to assist the enlargement of Victoria Bridge. I take it that if we had not contemplated this scheme the Government would not have consented to assist to the extent they have, the enlargement of Victoria Bridge, for the use of the Grand Trunk Railway, because, if the Grand Trunk Railway Company required, for their own purposes, on account of increased traffic, the enlargement of that bridge, I do not think Parliament would be justified in granting them any such assistance as that which is now proposed. I say that we have been drawn into that by virtue of this agreement which has been thrown out by the Upper Chamber. We shall be committed to an expenditure if this goes through, of $557,000 for the purposes of an experiment which is only to last for nine months. I do not think the people will appreciate that kind of government. We do not think the proposition is sound. We have always held that the proper course for a government to pursue is to lay their plans before Parliament, after they have been maturely considered, with such information as they have in regard to them and much explanations as will satisfy Parliament that they are in the interest of the country and that if they meet with the approval of Parliament, the Government should take the responsibility of carrying them out. In this case they submitted a plan and Parliament did not assent to it. Instead of dropping it, an effort is made in another way to force through the same scheme. I do not think this is right. It is an innovation that Parliament should not assent to. For these reasons, I oppose this vote, and I oppose it as strongly as I know how. I believe it to be unsound, I have not advanced any other reasons for that belief, although I think there are many. I think Parliament should refuse to assent to it. We should not, for the purpose of an experiment, or any other purpose, ask Parliament to vote that sum of money to carry out that portion of the agreement.

Mr. MACLEAN. I am in favour of the state ownership of railways, and I would like to see the Intercolonial brought to Montreal and not only brought to Montreal, but brought to Parry Sound. While I hold this view, and while I would like to have seen the Government introduce legislation to that effect, I cannot approve of the proposition before the House. It is not a well-matured proposition, it is not one in the public interest. While I cannot approve of the proposition on its merits, still less do I approve of it when I have regard to the railway policy of this Government. I would have expected that when the Liberal party came in power they would have seen the mistakes of the Conservative party in relation to railways if there were any mistakes, and avoided them, but their policy is one that will only aggravate the present railway situation and do nothing to improve it.

To my mind, the great problem before the people of this country is the railway or transportation problem. It exceeds all others in importance. The tariff question is nothing in comparison with the problem before the people to secure the cheapest and best possible transportation for the products of the country. That is what the whole country has at heart, and that is what Parliament ought to secure. But from what I can gather, this particular proposition, as well as the general proposition of the Government with regard to railways, is altogether at variance with that object. What has taken place up to the present in regard to railways? In the first place, the railways of this country have been built chiefly by railway promoters—by men who have got large bonuses from municipalities, large subsidies from the provinces, and large subsidies from the federal treasury; and what have these men done? They have given themselves stock; they have watered the stock of the railways they have controlled; they have issued bonds and given the bonds to themselves or sold them at a great discount; they have formed themselves into construction companies and cartage companies. In every way they have manipulated these railways in order to make large profits for themselves at the public expense; and, so far as I can see, the Government of this country up to the present time have aided them in doing so. Not only have these men done that, but when they exploited these roads and made all the money they could out of them, they abandoned them, and turned them over to the very railways they were to be the rivals of. The same thing is being done now. The more railways you build the less you solve the transportation problem. Instead of getting the largest amount of traffic moved at the smallest cost, all we do is to get the least traffic moved at the greatest cost. A railway manager to-day has this proposition put before him—not how to accommodate the people and give them cheap transportation, but how to make dividends on inflated capital, on bonds which were stolen, on a railroad that was built by a construction company and that had probably been robbed by the men who exploited it. The Liberal party who are in power to-day have not addressed themselves to the railway question. They have not sought to reduce railway freights or passenger fares.

They have not sought to do anything in the interest of the people. All we see to-day is an endeavour to do something in the interest of the railway promoter. The people of Canada have asked for reduced passenger rates. I have tried to bring that question before the House, and I have received very little encouragement. The people of this country have sought to have a stop put to the scandal that exists of railway passes. Almost all the members of this House and of the other House have railway passes in their pockets. The people of this country want to see an effort made to do away with that scandal, but this Government have done nothing in that direction. The people of this country want to see fewer lawyers on the railway committee of this House. The only persons whose interests are mainly consulted in that committee are the railway promoters, the men who exploit the railways and make money out of them. Surely it is time an end were put to this. Surely it is time that gentlemen with the opportunity which the Liberal party have to-day, coming fresh into office, should attempt to do something in the way of solving the transportation problem, and obtaining for the people cheaper rates. We would have expected that the very first measure of their railway policy would have been one looking to the establishment of a railway commission for this country. They say they will give us a railway commission; but we are only to get it after these monopolies have been strengthened, and put in a position to be still more injurious to the country. The railway men of this country have asked me and other members of this House to seek to induce this Parliament to protect them from accidents. We brought in a Bill for that purpose, had a special committee to inquire into the subject, and had a Bill reported, but it is thrown out. The leader of the House (Sir Richard Cartwright) told me the other day that I would have to wait several months for legislation in this direction. Why should not this Parliament do something for the people who sustain these railways and for the men who work on them? But instead of that, all we see is an effort to continue the old scandals, and the old way of doing business, and to strengthen these monopolies and give them all they desire. Take the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway. There is a great railway, which was built by the Conservative party, and they claim it as one of their great achievements. I give them credit for that; but that Canadian Pacific Railway to-day ought to be regulated by Parliament. Parliament ought to be the master of it; Parliament should have control over the rates of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. But, instead of that, Parliament is asked by the Liberal Government to strengthen that monopoly, and to give it greater privileges, instead of limiting its privileges and regulating it. Now, I hold that all this should come to an end—that this House should cease to legislate in the interest of these railway promoters. They come here in their private cars; you will see them down at the station; they are here every day. They are the men who get attention in Parliament; but the men who work on the railways get no attention. It was said the other day that the Conservative party are committed to all these projects for the extension of railways, and to this project in particular. As a Conservative, I must repudiate that, especially as a Conservative coming from Ontario. The Conservative party, now that they are in Opposition, are prepared to make a new departure. They are prepared to give their most earnest attention to this railway problem. They do desire to regulate these railway monopolies and to give the people some relief in passenger rates; they do desire to do something for the benefit of the men who work on the railways; and they would have expected that the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), of all the members of the Cabinet, would have joined them in this policy. He was a railway reformer some time ago, and he was supposed to be the railway reformer of the Government. But all we see is an attempt on the part of the Government to strengthen these railway monopolies. Look at the position of their great organ, the "Globe" newspaper. Is it not a scandal to find a newspaper which denounced the Pacific Railway from its inception, to-day the most pronounced advocate of increasing the powers and privileges of that great monopoly? Is it not a fact, as one of the members from British Columbia showed the other day, that the president of this great newspaper was interested in this deal in connection with the Crow's Nest Pass Railway? After the record of the newspaper, we would have expected that it and the men connected with it would have been to-day fighting the battle of the people and not the battle of the railway monopolies? So it is a matter of regret to me to see the Liberal party to-day, instead of making a new departure and doing something for the people who maintain these railways, strengthening these monopolies in every direction. They even propose to strengthen the monopoly in connection with the Rainy River Railway. That is a project for a railway from Lake Superior to Winnipeg or near Winnipeg, and it is the most desirable railway project in this country to-day. If the Government were earnestly desirous of solving this railway problem, they would not only extend the Intercolonial to Montreal, but they would secure control of the railway to Parry Sound, put a line of steamers on Lake Superior, and build the Rainy River Railroad to Winnipeg; and along with all this, they would have taken complete control of the Crow's Nest Pass

Mr. MACLEAN.

Railway. If they had done these things, the railway question would now be in process of solution. Instead of that, all they do is to temporize. They have not considered the matter carefully, or if they have considered it at all they have only considered it in the interest of railway monopolies. I to-day appeal to the Liberal party and to the Government to take their time. I say to them: Abandon this ill-digested proposal to bring the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal; have it investigated as it is to be investigated in another Chamber; and let there be also an investigation into this British Columbia Southern Railway Company. Let us know who these men in British Columbia are, who are so largely interested in that deal. Let us know who the Ontario men are who are so largely interested in that British Columbia deal, and who have tried to force it through this House. I say to the Government: Take time, take another year; first establish your railway commission, as we should have a railway commission in this country, and let Parliament first of all remove the scandal that surrounds the pass business. These pass scandals in connection with railway matters stink in the nostrils of the people of Canada. Here we see the Government and Parliament voting millions to railway companies, paying the greatest attention to railway presidents and railway solicitors who come here in their private cars: why, you see them all over this House, and you hear them through the press. But when the railway employees come here and ask for anything, it is a certainty that they will not obtain it. When the people of the great North-west come here and ask relief from oppressive railway rates, they cannot get it. Sir, all these scandals are continued to-day and are aggravated by the Reform party now in power. The Reform party has made no attempt to remove these evils. I say that if the Government are wise, they will not only abandon this poor scheme of theirs to bring the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, but they will throw the Crow's Nest proposition over and that they will throw the Rainy River proposition over until they first of all establish their railway commission and purge this country of the scandals which in the past have been extant in connection with railways, and which I am sorry to say are now being perpetuated. If the present Government will not do that, we of the Conservative party are prepared to stake our reputation and our future on a new solution of the railway problem, and we will become friends of the people and friends of the railway employees. We will do something to remove the scandals, and we will do something to give to the people of this country what they are entitled to and sadly need: lower passenger and freight rates. If there is any section of the members of this House who ought stand up for such a policy it is the farmers, and especially those who are posing here as Patrons. If the representatives of any section of the country should support this policy more than another, the representatives of the great prairie country to the west should take a foremost stand. I am sorry to find, Mr. Speaker, that a number of the western members who declared themselves as prepared to vindicate the rights of the people in regard to the railway problem, are not here to-day to continue the fight they commenced in the earlier part of the session. If these gentlemen were here to-night, and if they had joined in this fight against such a railway policy as we now have presented to us, I would do my best to assist them. I will content myself now by saying: I do regret that the Reform party has not put forward a progressive policy in regard to the railway problem. I do trust that they will take time and allow these railway proposals to go over for at least another year. Failing that, I undertake to say that the Conservatives who come from Ontario intend to make the transportation problem the great question before the people of Canada, and they will hold the Reform party up to the people for judgment in connection with this question.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). The hon. member from East York (Mr. Maclean) has done me the favour of referring to me in the course of his remarks. He has taken upon himself to announce a new policy for the Conservative party. I do not know whether he is the new leader or not, but he certainly would make a most worthy one, and I say it with all sincerity. But, Sir, when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) speaks in the name of the Conservative party, I am reminded of the fact that he is the first member on the other side of the House who has yet announced this great policy. I am not going to quarrel with him about his policy—on the contrary I largely sympathize with him in it—but when he tells us what friends of the people the Conservative party will be in formulating this policy and in liberating the people from the thralldom of railway tyranny, I am reminded of the peculiar fact, that for seventeen years the Conservatives were in power, and that during all that time they did all they could to fasten the shackles on the people of Canada. When did the Conservative party in the last seventeen years give any evidence of adopting the policy that my hon. friend from York (Mr. Maclean) now announces for them?

Mr. MACLEAN. I am one that did so for the last seven years.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, I will give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) credit for that. He is consistent in advocating the same course in Opposition as he did when his friends were in power. He spoke then in his own name, but he did not speak in the name of the Conservative party, and I fancy that he speaks now for himself and for himself alone, so far as the Conservatives are concerned. I need not give the record of the Conservative party in connection with the railways. It is written upon the pages of our history: it is written upon the statutes of our country, and it is written on the minds of the people who have no faith in them, and who have put them where they are to-day. My hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) has no hope from the Liberal party, but let me ask him: What has the Liberal party done so far? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) is in favour of the rationalization of railways. It is a popular idea: it has its attractions, but there are practical difficulties in the way. Nevertheless, the action of this Administration so far as has been in that direction. Whatever may be the demerits or merits of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway scheme, there is one consideration in connection with it which is at all events novel, and which is in the line of the policy of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean). That Crow's Nest Pass Railway agreement provides in the most unmistakable language, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company shall enjoy no monopoly of the carrying trade over these 330 miles of road between Lethbridge and the western terminus. On the contrary, the agreement that we have prepared provides that every railway company that desires it shall be entitled to running powers over that line, not upon terms that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company may impose, but upon terms that the Governor in Council shall impose, until a railway commission is established. The very fact that the agreement alludes to a railway commission, implies that the Minister of Railways, and the Government in sympathy with him, contemplate in the near future inviting the attention of Parliament and the country, to just such a tribunal as my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) refers. And, not only in the western country has our policy been in that direction. In the east we are aiming at bringing the Intercolonial Railway to the great metropolis of Canada, the city of Montreal. We have sought to nationalize the railway system of that section of the country, by securing at least running powers over other lines, and enabling the Government railway to control rates between the head of ocean navigation and the seaboard. I would rather approve, if it were possible, of extending that policy in which my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) has seen the realization of his hope, so that from one end of this great continent to the other there shall be at least one great Dominion Government road, operating as a regulating power to prevent railways in private hands being unjust towards the people of this country. And, Sir, inasmuch as the Liberal party both in the east and in the west have given evidence of the faith that is in them, it ill becomes the Conservative party as a whole—I except the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) for he has always been consistent—it ill becomes the Conservative party as a whole to pretend that they are the friends of the people now—proclaiming, Codling is your friend, not Short—when for seventeen long years in power, they failed to give any effect whatever to the policy that is new born in them; a policy which we are told they are to resort to in the future to try and delude the electorate to believe, that they are desirous of the people's welfare.

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) In case it might be taken for granted that my silence meant the approval of this item for the lease of the Drummond Railway, I think it my duty, in justice to myself and the province from which I come, to say that I am entirely opposed to any such grant, particularly in view of the fact that for sixteen sessions in this Parliament I urged on the party I supported the construction of certain branch lines in the province of Prince Edward Island. After a number of years of insistence and great patience, I succeeded in getting them to approve of the policy I advocated and to commit themselves to the construction of certain lines of railway in that province which would entail an expenditure of about one million dollars on the Dominion. The Conservative party, when it went out of power, was committed to that expenditure, at the rate of about $250,000 a year, until these branches were completed. Not only was the Conservative party committed to that expenditure, but my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) and my hon. friends from Prince County (Mr. Yeo and Mr. Perry), expressed themselves strongly in support of the construction of certain branch lines in the island which would have entailed a larger expenditure than that which I and others with me advocated. I think, therefore, it shows on the part of the hon. gentleman who has a seat in the Cabinet as the representative of Prince Edward Island, a great lack of interest in that province, or a very small amount of influence on his part with his colleagues, that while the Government are committed to the expenditure of millions of dollars throughout the length and breadth of this country, the claims of Prince Edward Island should have been entirely overlooked. We find that in the various railway subsidies which the Government have brought forward, in not one of which Prince Edward Island has any interest, there is to be expended over the length and breadth of this Dominion, with the exception of Prince Edward Island, about $11,000,000. That is the total which we will have paid in railway subsidies when the various lines to which they are granted are completed. The Government are committed to an expenditure of between three million and four million dollars on the Crow's Nest Pass. They are committed to an expenditure on the Drummond line lease for nine months of this year only, to $157,500, and which may be repeated for ninety-nine years if the Government could have their own way, as intimated to us by the Minister of Railways. We are further committed to an expenditure for rolling stock in connection with this same line amounting to $100,000. And the Government have asked Parliament for a vote of between $18,000 and $19,000 to pay for the expenses of running the Baie des Chaleurs Railway, which they had not the authority of law nor any other reason except their own political exigencies, for entering into. Besides this they had committed themselves to an annual expenditure of $210,000 on the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, which city has already three roads connecting with the Intercolonial Railway, and were only prevented from incurring this extravagant outlay by the refusal of Parliament to consent to it. They are committed also to a very large expenditure on the Victoria Bridge at Montreal, in the interests of the Grand Trunk Railway, amounting to some $300,000. I find that the Government have undertaken to provide for the construction of 346 miles of railway in Nova Scotia, twenty-six and a half miles in New Brunswick, 123 miles in the province of Quebec, besides an additional expenditure of $662,672; 181½ miles in Ontario, amounting altogether to 677 miles in these provinces, exclusive of 330 miles in British Columbia, making a total of over 1,000 miles of railway in these different provinces. And notwithstanding the fact that the little province of Prince Edward Island has to contribute to the construction of all these works, her claims to consideration are entirely overlooked. The plea was made by the Government in favour of the expenditure of public money for the construction of a public building in a certain county in Nova Scotia that it had not hitherto benefited by the expenditure of any portion of public money for such purposes. On that very ground, we could much more forcibly appeal for a fair share in the distribution of these moneys. We are called upon to pay taxes for the construction of lines of railway and all the other public works of Canada, and surely we ought to have these branch lines built in our province to connect with our present system, which, I beg to remind this House, the people of our province have built for themselves entirely at their own cost, for if that money had not been expended in the construction of the Prince Edward Island Railway, we would be entitled to the interest on the amount it cost, which would go towards meeting the expenses of the provinces. I therefore contend, and always have contended, that we owe nothing to the people of Canada for the construction of the Prince Edward Island Railway, and if we should get anything towards the construction of branch lines, that would be the first expenditure in the shape of railway construction for which we might be indebted to the people of Canada. Under these circumstances, I deem it my duty to object, in the strongest way possible, to the expenditure of this vast amount of money in the other provinces while our province is overlooked. I intended to have said something on this matter before, but I waited from day to day in the hope that my hon. friend the Minister of Marine would have been able to induce his colleagues to have put an item in the Estimates which would at least have carried out as good an arrangement for the construction of those branch lines as their predecessors in office had committed themselves to. I regret, however, that the hon. gentleman seems to have been quite over-ruled by his colleagues and unable to induce them to place an amount in the Estimates for this purpose.

Intercolonial Railway—To purchase additional rolling stock..... $100,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have been considering this matter since it came before the Committee of Supply, and talked it over with the officials of my department, and I have decided to propose to the House a reduction of this sum. The estimate was originally made when it was contemplated that the agreement entered into, which was submitted to Parliament, would have been approved, but in view of the fact that it has not, and therefore is at an end, we have thought it necessary to ask for a reduction of this sum of $100,000. With the consent of the House, I would move that the amount of $100,000 be reduced to $50,000.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. SPROULE. I suppose the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) has come to no clearer determination as to what rolling stock he will buy—whether he will buy from the Drummond County Road or get new stock.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can state very confidently that to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) that it is not our purpose to purchase any portion of the equipment of the Drummond County Railway.

WAYS AND MEANS.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

1. Resolved, That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending 30th June, 1897, the sum of $1,772,474.61 be granted out of the consolidated fund of Canada.

2. Resolved, That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service, the sum of $26,552,226.85 be granted out of the consolidated fund of Canada.

Resolutions reported.

SUPPLY BILL.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 150) for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service of the financial years ending respectively the 30th June, 1897 and 30th June, 1898, for purposes relating to the public service.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

The House again resolved itself into committee to consider certain resolutions (page 4736) respecting the granting of the subsidies therein mentioned to the railway companies, and towards the construction of the railways also therein mentioned.

(In the Committee.)

On resolution 1,

Mr. FOSTER. Before we go on to the different items, I would like to have a little information with reference to that expression that is used twice there as to what shall be the "cost" of the road. It comes in in reference to the limit fixed of $15,000 per mile for which the $3,200 shall be granted, the rule being, if it can be called a rule, that the cost over $15,000 per mile shall have a proportion equivalent to 50 per cent of the extra cost paid—I think that is the interpretation given—the whole not to exceed $6,400. Now much depends as to what you are going to lay down as the cost of the railway, as to what may actually enter into the cost, as to whether the sum may easily be brought up to over $15,000 on the ordinary railway or not. I take it, for instance—and it would be well if the committee could have a thorough understanding on that point—I take it to be granted at once that rolling stock of any kind does not enter into the cost to be computed for the payment of subsidies. Am I right in this?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, again, with reference to the surveys. There are, I suppose, different kinds of surveys; there is what you may call the exploratory survey which takes a view of the country in different directions to find out which is the section through which you may make the location survey of the road, and sometimes those exploratory surveys are very expensive. Is it to be understood that these exploratory surveys, or that any of the surveys, and if so, what part of the surveys, will enter into the computation as to the cost of the road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot say that I have given the subject to which the hon. gentleman refers, very careful consideration, but I would think that it would be a matter, with perhaps other things that will occur, and which would require to be considered in the same connection, in regard to which it would be rather difficult to lay down any hard and fast rule at the moment. It occurs to my view now, speaking, as I said, without giving the subject very careful consideration, that the cost of the survey would be a very fair item to take into account in determining what the whole cost of the road was.

Mr. FOSTER. The cost of the exploratory surveys?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Well, I should imagine that the cost of exploratory surveys would be quite as important as the cost of the final survey would be. It would all necessarily enter into the cost of construction, and it would be a very important thing for the companies to have the surveys made in a thorough manner. I think perhaps it would be dearing somewhat unfairly with any enterprise if we were to refuse to consider the sum which was actually laid out in necessary surveys, as a part of the cost of construction.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will see that opens a pretty wide question. A company undertake in the first place, just experimentally, the mere idea of putting a road between two points, and may go to a large amount of expenditure in general exploratory surveys before they can come to a conclusion as to whether it is possible to put the road through or not. Once they have made these exploratory surveys, then they commence the work of actual surveying to locate the road. Now, if the former are allowed, it may be easily seen that a very large expense may be heaped up which, distributed over the mileage, would go very far towards gathering a sum to enlarge the cost of the road. My hon. friend is aware, I think, that in a great many cases these exploratory surveys are paid for in stock, or may be paid for in stock of the road. Now, suppose that that takes place, or suppose, what often does take place, that the stock of the road is taken by the builder in part payment, that is, that he gets so much cash and then takes so much stock, the stock being simply of a nominal value. Is the stock either of these cases to be computed as a part of the cost, and if so, how would my hon. friend arrange rightly to apportion the value which he ought to allow as actual value of the stock so applied towards exploratory surveys or to building? Or does my hon. friend take the safer course of simply keeping down the cost to what is the actual cash put into the road? If my hon. friend confines himself to that, then, of course, he is upon more solid ground; but if he is going to allow stock as part payment to enter into computation of the cost, then he will have very great difficulties in determining as to what is to be attributed as the actual value of the stock of an incipient railway company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would think that when a claim is made for the maximum, or a sum in excess of the minimum, subsidy it would become the duty of the department to look critically into the question of the alleged cost, and require to be furnished a complete statement in detail of the items which have gone to constitute the total amount which it is alleged that the road has cost, and upon which a claim for the larger subsidy is made. I would think if it appeared that there had been a contract for the construction, one portion of which provided that the contractor should be paid in stock, a large amount of stock, or even a smaller amount of stock, or that he would be paid in stock at all, that moment, suspicion would naturally be aroused as to whether the claim that the company made, was one which would stand inspection or not. We are not, I think, at all likely to find much difficulty in getting at what ought to be the cost of the construction of any railway when a claim of this kind is made or a question of this kind is raised. It is not at all difficult for competent engineers to look the ground over, to examine the work which has been done, and to make an estimate of what it has cost actually or should have cost. When it is found that the figures which are presented by the company claiming the subsidy, are in excess of the figures contained in the estimate, I would feel that it was my duty to ask the officers of my department to look closely into the question and satisfy themselves as to whether in point of fact the cost had exceeded the estimate, and if so, why, and in what respect the excess had arisen. I think there would be no serious difficulty experienced in getting at what ought to be the true and actual amount of the cost.

Mr. FOSTER. I had hoped that the hon. gentleman the Minister of Railways and Canals would have said that in computing the cost nothing should be accepted as cost except the actual cash that went into the road. What consideration from stock or otherwise the contractor may get does not represent that which goes into the road. That is considered something which might mature in a number of years or might not.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think you are right about that.

Mr. FOSTER. If you allow stock at all as part payment of the contractor I think great difficulty will be experienced in arriving at the cost. But there is another difficulty that will be met, and that is in reference to the cost of bridges. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals on Saturday talked of there being no rule before, and said that there was a rule now. In what way? Before the rule was that $3,200 a mile should be given for each mile of road; to-day the rule is that $3,200 should be given for each mile of road not exceeding in cost $15,000 a mile, and if it exceeds $15,000 a mile then a certain proportionate part shall be given. How is one any more a rule than the other? You say that the former was not always carried out. There were exceptions to it. It is very true that as each road came up it was decided according to the circumstances of the case, the cost of the road, and the like of that. Perhaps cases may be found into which considerations entered which some one might submit did not exactly have reference to the cost of the road. But what I mean is that you simply had a rule that was laid down in the Subsidy Act for that one year and no other. You have no more of a rule now. You are not passing an Act of Parliament which you yourselves shall have no power to repeal, declaring that from this time on there shall be this rule adopted and no other. You are bringing down this Subsidy Act for one single year, and for a single year you say that this shall be the Subsidy Act, but it is perfectly open to you for another year to bring down another Subsidy Act and to grant subsidies on whatever conditions you see fit to impose. The rule will be determined, just as it has been heretofore, by what you think of the circumstances each succeeding year. There was one rule that was strictly adhered to in the past, and it was that as far as bridges were concerned we should not give more than 15 per cent of the cost of a bridge of $200,000 or over.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That only applied to bridges exceeding in cost $100,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, to bridges costing $100,000 or over. That rule was closely adhered to so far as I know. For bridges smaller than that no percentage was given. What will happen in this case, and it is an important fact that the committee should turn its attention to. Suppose you have 50 miles of road being built; under the old rule, we will say, you give $3,200 for each mile of road, that would amount, in round numbers, to $160,000 in subsidy for the 50 miles of road. You may have one bridge costing $100,000. Under the former law you would only grant 15 per cent of the cost, and upon that amount it would be $15,000, so that if you paid $160,000 for the road, and $15,000 for the bridge under the former rule you would be giving $175,000 for the 50 miles of road. Take the present case. You have 50 miles of road, which we suppose will not cost more than $15,000 a mile, so that the subsidy for the road will be $160,000. But there is a bridge which costs $100,000. Instead of giving 15 per cent for that bridge you distribute $100,000 over the 50 miles of road and you pay one-half of the cost to the whole road. Instead of paying $15,000 you are paying $50,000. Heretofore 15 per cent was given for a bridge if it came up to $100,000. Suppose with 50 miles of road you have four streams crossing each of which would require $25,000 for a bridge, you are paying on the four bridges $50,000 and you distribute that over the whole of the 50 miles. You are giving $50,000 where under the old system you would not pay a single cent for these bridges. This is a costly form of subsidy, leaving out of account the fact that no mile of road is going to cost more than $15,000 so far as the road itself is concerned. You have recommended a plan by which you are going to pay for bridging, a large amount. This is a matter which the committee must think of before it goes into ecstasies over this new rule. Another point is this. Suppose that a road of 50 or 100 miles is being built, and is coming into a city as one is now into Ottawa. It must have terminal facilities, and it spends $100,000 perhaps for one mile of road. You will be paying the subsidy over the whole road and be paying a half of the cost to be added to the $15,000 so that you may find yourself paying for half the cost of very expensive terminal facilities. These are important points which we ought to have settled. We ought to know just where we are. By adopting this new rule we will be paying more than under the old one. We will be paying for all this extra work of bridging and providing terminals while heretofore the country has not been paying for bridges unless $100,000 were exceeded, then only 15 per cent of the whole. We paid for no terminals, and we paid for no bridges under $100,000. If there was a $100,000 bridge we paid simply 15 per cent of the cost. We ought to have some very clear information as to these terminals and bridges. We ought to know just where we are being led before we vote this form of subsidy. I should much rather, and I think it will turn out better, to keep to the $3,200. Make it hard and fast if you want to, and I will support every effort to do that, but if Parliament at any time saw that a particular piece of road could not be built without a greater subsidy, Parliament would be free, as it will be free hereafter, to say whether or not that particular road, or part of a road, should be paid more than $3,200. You may depend upon it, that this principle that we adopt here, unless you limit it on the matter of bridges and terminals, will lead to very large demands of money so that in connection with all these roads that run into large towns and cities, you will find that you are paying the full $6,400 a mile.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. Chairman, it appears to me that it is not at all difficult to suppose cases in which there would appear to be a probability of the subsidy to be earned under these resolutions exceeding the subsidy which, in many cases, would be paid at the minimum amount, under the old system. But I do not feel, even supposing there were some such cases, that we would be thereby justified in preferring the continuation of the old system to the new plan which is here submitted. In the first place, I do not think that the question of terminals will be one which need be regarded as having any application in the present case, because, we are not proposing to pay subsidies further than upon the construction of the railway. We are not proposing to include in the calculation, any sum which is expended in the acquiring, or in the construction of costly terminal facilities. I do conceive, that what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has said on the subject of bridges, has been very fairly said, and may be taken as likely to occur in some cases under this plan. I do not at all, however regard that as an unsafe condition. I think, on the contrary, it has elements of fairness in it which will commend themselves to the approval of the committee.

I think that the object which Parliament has had in view in giving subsidies from time to time, is to lend its assistance towards the construction of railways upon something like an equitable plan, dealing in something like an equitable spirit with the various undertakings which the Government has approved. And in doing so, I do not think that it is fair to say to a railway company which is building a line having to cross in its route some extensive rivers, that it ought to be denied a fair and reasonable contribution from the treasury for its undertaking, in proportion to that which is given to other roads which have not these costly bridges to construct. I take it, that the effect of the refusal to give aid to bridges which were costly (though they did not come up to the sum which called for the usual 15 per cent contribution) has led in very many cases to the undue prolongation of the railway in order to, in the first place, avoid the cost of constructing these bridges; and, in the second place, to get the subsidy which the added mileage brings. On the other hand, it seems to be that the public interest on all sides demands that a railway which is projected to connect certain points should not be any longer than is absolutely necessary, and that every inducement should be offered to connect the desired points in the most direct possible way. The effect of our saying to the people who put their capital in these enterprises: We are willing to take into consideration in estimating the cost, the whole outlay that you are obliged to make from one end of your line to the other, including not only the cost of the roadbed, but the cost of bridging all the rivers which you may have to pass; the effect of our saying that will be to establish a fair principle and one which we can well afford to adopt. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that, on the whole, a recourse to the old method is at all desirable. I could name to this committee quite a number of railways which have been favoured by Government and Parliament, to the extent of receiving very much more than the ordinary subsidy of $3,200 per mile, which were not more costly in construction and had not one whit stronger claim to larger aid, than many railways—or perhaps the great bulk of the railways—that have been built in this country on the $3,200 subsidy. The difficulty that we wish to obviate is a serious difficulty. It is a difficulty which I am sure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) experienced when, as a member of the late Government, he had to consider applications for subsidies. He has felt constrained to yield to the demands which have been made on him in one quarter, for a large subsidy—$5,000, $6,000 or $8,000—and he has felt compelled to refuse to give to other claimants whose roads were going to cost just as much money, and had as great merit in them, he has felt compelled to refuse these any larger subsidy than the $3,200 per mile. Take, for instance, the case of the Rainy River Railway. From what we know of the general character of that country, all will concede that this road will be costly to build, and I think the feeling is that it is a road which will likely open up a class of country, the development of which we ought to encourage. Well, now, we could scarcely come to Parliament and ask for $6,400 a mile for that road, and refuse it to roads in other parts of Canada. We could not refuse it to the latter without creating a very great deal of dissatisfaction and without creating the belief in the minds of the people who are interested in these other railways that Parliament is dealing in one manner with an undertaking because it happened to be located in one part of the country, and dealing in a different manner with a road because it is located in another part of the country. I believe that every part of Canada should be dealt with in the same equitable way, and upon the same rule. Therefore, notwithstanding what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has said, I still feel that the principle embodied in the resolution is one that has very much to commend it over the practice, or custom, which has hitherto obtained. I admit what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has said, that it would be quite possible for us to come back next year and say: We will depart from this rule and we will adopt another rule; but we could not do it without stating to Parliament that the policy which we adopt to-day is a policy we had reason to recede from, and that there are good reasons why the policy we advocated in the session of 1897 ought not to be a policy which we would continue to advocate in the session of 1898. But, for our policy now, it is to be assumed that unless we shall have good reason to see that it was not a judicious policy to continue, unless the working out of this method of subsidizing railways shall prove to be unwise and not in the public interest, we shall continue it in the future. So that, I am not at all convinced by what the hon. gentleman has said that we are not laying down a rule. We are, I think, clearly. We are putting this forward as a policy, and it is a policy which will govern all railways included in the present resolutions.

Mr. FOSTER. Let us see what we have arrived at. We are not having any more fixed rule than before, because my hon. friend has himself stated that if next year the Government see fit, they will change it; that is, each year will bring its own wisdom and the cases will be judged on their merits, just as they have been in the past. What I want to draw the attention of the committee to is this—they may be in favour of it, or they may not, but let us understand it. Hereafter, with respect to every considerable railroad—because I think every good railroad will run to $15,000 a mile—you are paying one-half the cost of every bridge on it. Heretofore we have subsidized railways, but never bridges, unless to the amount of 15 per cent of the cost of bridges costing $100,000 and over. After this, on railways costing $15,000 or over, you will be paying just one-half the cost of bridges. If the road does not cost $15,000 a mile on the average, then you will have one-half the cost of the bridge to be added to the average of the whole to bring it up to $15,000 a mile or over, and you will pay one-half the cost over that. Do I understand that the terminals in the way of station houses, &c., are excluded?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, supposing you are subsidizing a railway which runs into a city, and which in order to get into the city has to build a mile or two miles of road, and has to pay a very heavy cost for the right of way into the city. Does the cost of this right of way form a part of the cost of the road, and are you going to take this into consideration. If so, wherever you subsidize a railway that runs into a city, such as Toronto, Ottawa, or Hamilton, or any other fairly large city, where it costs a great deal of money to get into the centre of business, that railway is going to get into the centre of the city while this rule prevails, by which you will pay half that cost, because of course the cost will be very large, going far above $15,000 a mile. If you exclude buildings, the question is, are you going also to exclude land damages for right of way?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We would necessarily have to include in the cost of railways the cost of land damages and right of way. That would properly form part of the cost of construction. But when the hon. gentleman conjures up a case of the subsidizing of a railway running into a large city, and feels that there is ground for alarm lest the cost will run up into large figures, I think he is rather allowing his fears to control his judgment. We are not likely, I think, to be subsidizing railways running into very large cities. My own view would be entirely against encouraging the construction of new lines into large cities. I think there are very few large cities in Canada, where the cost of entering the city would be high, into which there are not already sufficient railways constructed; and I think it would be a very proper thing for the Government to insist that any new roads coming from other directions and entering the city should enter over one of the existing lines. At all events, we would be very careful not to contract to give a subsidy to any railway which was likely, in entering a city, to roll up any very large expenditures, or which was likely to add very much to the amount of the subsidy. We would have to take all these matters into consideration. I do not think any of the roads here referred to are likely at all to present any such case for alarm as the hon. gentleman suggests. There is one road, the Kingston and Smith's Falls, and with respect to that I have a suggestion to make in amendment to the resolution, which will provide that we shall only subsidize it to a point distant from the city, so that it will have to make arrangements to enter the city by one of the existing railways. I do not know that any one of the railways here referred to would be likely to come within the case the hon. gentleman fears.

Mr. CASEY. While the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) is thinking up another conundrum, I want to ask for some explanation from the Minister as to his reasons for not granting the request of a certain railway company to share in these subsidies. The Lake Erie and Detroit River Railway is a railway which takes its origin at Windsor, under charter to reach Buffalo, according to its present amended charter, by way of Ridgetown and St. Thomas. The road has been completed as far as Ridgetown, which is just within the western boundary of my constituency, under the distinct understanding that it was at least to reach St. Thomas where it would obtain an eastern outlet. The part of this road already constructed serves a district of country which is not served by any other railway, and the municipalities in that district have given considerable bonuses to it in the hope of obtaining an eastern outlet for their produce. At the present time, even from the eastern end of that road, the competition it has created enables the people to get better rates eastward, by sending their freight first west to Windsor and then eastward over the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway, than they had before, but still not as good rates as they could get if they could ship east by way of St. Thomas. The distance is between forty and forty-five miles. I was on an influential deputation who urged the claims of this road on the Minister last winter. The objection urged against this road was that for some distance it would closely parallel the Canada Southern, operated by the Michigan Central. I think, however, that the circumstances of this road take it out of the category of those to which that objection would be fatal, for although there is a parallelism, it is only to the extent of 25 miles according to the latest plan, as I informed the hon. Minister, though, according to the first plan, which was before the Minister when the deputation waited on him, it would have been some 35 or 40 miles.

Now, the feeling of my constituents is that this road should be subsidized as an outlet for the country served by that part of it, which I am speaking of as the loop running through Southern Essex and Kent, which is a district not served by any other railway. In the second place they know from experience that the Canada Southern does not supply an outlet for their own trade. The county of Elgin, at least my constituency of West Elgin, has never had any Dominion money spent in it for railway construction. That county bonused the Canada Central to the extent of $250,000, and a part of it gave a further grant afterwards to what is now a branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, formerly the Credit Valley Railway. These people, who have been paying for years to subsidies granted in other parts of Canada, feel very strongly that it is about their turn to have a railway in their own county, which would be of material benefit to the business men and farmers of that district.

It has been suggested that along this part of the road, which is parallel to the Canada Southern, running powers could be obtained from the latter. In reply I would beg to say that I see very little hope of our obtaining such running powers on any reasonable terms. The Canada Southern is an extremely busy railway, carrying fully as much freight per mile as any part of the Grand Trunk Railway or Canadian Pacific Railway, if not more. It has an immense number of trains of its own running over the road, and I do not think it could accommodate any more. Then, it is practically a through road. Notwithstanding the bonuses it has received from the county, it has not laid itself out to encourage local traffic. The railway is practically a link in a through line over the Michigan Central and New York Central, and local traffic is not favoured by it to the extent it should be, and consequently our business men and farmers are suffering from want of accommodation.

In view of all these considerations which I have already urged strongly on the Minister of Railways, I would like, for the sake of my constituents, to have an explanation from him to-night of the reasons which have induced him to leave that road out of even the Supplementary Estimates. I do not propose to find fault with those lines which have secured subsidies, but there are certainly some which have no better claim on the Government.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is quite correct in the statement he has made. In company with a number of gentlemen interested in this railway, he applied to me to recommend to Council a subsidy for this road. In the course of the interview, they presented a plan showing the location of the proposed road and showing the other lines that were in the locality, and according to the plan, the new line, for which they desired aid, would parallel for a considerable distance, between 30 and 40 miles, the line of the Canada Southern, and parallel it within about half a mile distance. Under the circumstances, I did not feel that I could encourage the applicants in the hope that their request could be favourably considered. I thought that it was our duty to assist them in every way in our power to acquire running rights over the Canada Southern, and I learned from them that they had not applied to the Canada Southern at all to ascertain whether running rights could be obtained over that road on any reasonable terms.

Mr. CASEY. It was considered hopeless.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. So the delegation stated in the course of the interview, and so the hon. member has stated to me since. But I think that until the attempt, at all events, is made, and it appears clearly that there are good substantial reasons why such a concession cannot be obtained upon reasonable grounds, we would not be justified in assuming that such an arrangement is not within the bounds of probability or possibility. I fully sympathize with the desire of the people in that neighbourhood to have their own line of railway. I am well satisfied that the road which they have already constructed has been very useful. It has, I believe, encouraged business in that neighbourhood and it has given quite a stimulus to certain classes of products.

Mr. CASEY. Do you mean the Canada Southern?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I mean the Lake Erie and Detroit Road.

Mr. CASEY. It only comes four miles within my constituency so far.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not confine it to the hon. gentleman's constituency. It comes from the other side of the peninsula, starting at Walkerville. This line runs down in the form of a bow until it very nearly touches the lake shore, and then deflects until it comes within half a mile of the Canada Southern following that road for a great many miles. It runs through a very rich country, and has stimulated classes of production which would not otherwise have been stimulated, and I do feel that we ought to go slowly in the matter of subsidizing railways which will duplicate existing roads and closely parallel them. I am not, however, averse to looking very carefully into the whole subject in order to ascertain whether it is possible to effect arrangements with the Canada Southern Railway whereby running rights over it can be acquired by the Lake Erie and Detroit. If after every means have been exhausted, a reasonable arrangement cannot be made, I would be very sorry to say that I would, so far as I am individually concerned, refuse to consider the matter further. I would be very glad to give it the best consideration in my power, and I think that if there is a bona fide effort made on the part of those promoting the undertaking to secure running rights and they fail, then the Government will be in a very much better position than it is in to-day to ask the House to consent to a subsidy.

Mr. CASEY. Before we drop that question, I would like to say, with respect to running powers, that it does not seem likely that the Canada Southern or rather the Michigan Central, who control that company under lease, would be willing, of their own motion, to give running powers at any reasonable figure to a rival company. I believe that the price that the new company would have to pay for these running powers would be more than the interest on the cost of a road through that country. Unless compelled to give these running powers, they would put the figures as near as they could up to what it would cost another railway to build a new line. If the hon. Minister is willing to say that he will exercise powers vested in the Railway Committee of the Privy Council to compel a reasonable arrangement, and would take action in the direction of a subsidy in case any such arrangement could not be effected, it might put a different colour on the question, but still the railway company and I, as a representative of the people concerned, feel that would be a very different thing from having an independent line of road. A company using a part of another company's railway track either by sufferance, under rental or by decree of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council is not able to act with the same independence as if it had a line of its own, or to offer the same accommodation to the public. I would strongly urge, notwithstanding the paralleling of a short distance, my original contention. As to the plans of the Minister no doubt a trial survey was made on these lines. But it has been agreed to by the railway company with myself and others in the district that they shall leave the neighbourhood of the Canada Southern Railway at Dutton and cut across the country to St. Thomas, opening up a new country that really needs railway accommodation as much as any other in that district. Then, although the parallelism may exist for this 25 miles—I think that is the distance—the parallel road is required as a necessary outlet for what I have called the Essex loop of the road, which has no other means of outlet. For all these reasons I must strongly urge on my hon. friend the Minister, to reconsider if possible, before next session, if he cannot do it this session, the decision he has come to on that point, and to secure for these people the outlet for which they have largely paid municipal bonuses. I will emphasize again what I feel that I have been justified in already emphasizing, that fact that my constituents have paid out of their taxes for railway advantages, and that they are in a different position from counties that have had large sums of Dominion subsidies spent upon them. We have paid for our own roads as well as for others, and we think we are in a strong position when we ask for further accommodation in the construction of railways.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to say a few words about the principle involved in these railway resolutions before we go into the discussion of the several resolutions separately. To my mind the proposal is a very dangerous one. It may lead to all kinds of difficulties. It puts into the hands of the Government a power which they may use to an alarming extent to corrupt the constituencies. I think there is no doubt whatever about that. Since the first year when the Government adopted that railway policy it was held by the Opposition of that time that it was done for the purpose of corrupting constituencies, and that when the Government wished to exercise an undue influence over a constituency in which a railway passed, it had in its power to do so by reason of the system that had been adopted in the bonusing of railways. Now, if that be the case with regard to the old method under which it was laid down that a railway subsidy should be a certain amount per mile, $3,200 or $4,000 or whatever it might be, how much more must it be the case under the present arrangement by which the Government have it in their own hands to raise the subsidy from $3,200 to $6,400 a mile. There is no doubt whatever that it puts in the hands of the Governor in Council a power which they may exercise to an alarming extent to corrupt the constituencies of the country. We have heard complaints of this over and over again in this House when the gentlemen who now sit on the treasury benches were on this side of the House; it was thrown up to the Government in the House time after time and also to the individual member of the constituency that this was intended as a corrupting agency. So I am surprised that so many members on that side who formerly occupied places on this side of the House have not a word to say in regard to the matter to-day. I have never believed, when a specific amount was fixed as a railway subsidy that it could fairly be called a corruption agency. But when you leave to the Government to say whether a subsidy shall be $3,200, or $3,400, or $4,000, or $5,000, or $6,400 a mile—I think they can be depended upon to manipulate the figures so as to make the cost come out right—nothing else can be expected but that it will be used as a corrupting agency among the constituencies of the country. Therefore I view this proposal with great alarm. I think there is danger in it and that in the future we shall find it used against the best interests of the country. This departs from a principle laid down by the old Government in this respect. Before asking Parliament to vote a sum of money for the railway, the old Government first made inquiry with regard to the company and required a statement to be made to them as to the abilities of the promoters to build it, the probable cost of the railway and how it was expected to raise the money. And the gift of the Government was to supplement a financial structure which had previously been erected by the company. But now the Government subsidy to a railway will be the nucleus around which the financial structure will be built, and it will rather be a gift of the Government put into the hands of parties for the purpose of raising the balance necessary to build a railway. The subsidy will be given regardless of whether the road is absolutely needed or not, and whether the parties who have the structure under control are able to build the railway or not. Therefore,

Mr. SPROULE.

I regard with great suspicion the principle the Government have introduced. It is a most dangerous one to put into the hands of most honest men, but if you put it into the hands of unscrupulous men, what injury will it be? And there is no doubt that politicians use these things at times to bring support to their own candidates. We have seen that in the last election; we have seen it particularly in the by-elections since then. With regard to the construction of public buildings, subsidies to harbours, bonuses to railways, one way or another, the Government have impressed the people with the idea that if their candidate is returned they have the power to give the people money to assist in these desired public works. How much more will this be the case when the Government have the power to increase the railway subsidy from $3,200 to $6,400 per mile. Again, there is another principle connected with it that should not be lost sight of. Heretofore when you asked Parliament to vote money you did it upon specific information, and that information was given to Parliament so as to justify the granting of that money. In this case you do not give specific information, you give a running scale and you put the power of determining that scale into the hands of men who are represented by the Governor in Council, and they again act according to their engineers, who manufacture a large or small report that will give a larger or smaller amount. Suppose there is a railway projected through my constituency, and my people are desirous of having it built. I urge the Government to build that railway, and I would like to get as much subsidy as possible to help it along. But I am not a supporter of the Government, and the Government say to me: Now, you are not very friendly to the Government, we have no great reason to support your railway. But information may be given in a roundabout way, for that is the way it generally is given, that if you were friendly to the Government you might be dealt with with much greater generosity, and you might be better treated than on the line of cold justice. They send their engineer on to ascertain what that railway costs. It is an easy matter for the engineer to make a report to the Government that will enable them to give $3,200 a mile, or $4,200 a mile, or $5,200. We know this may be done by the reports that are made to the Government year after year; we require no better evidence of it than the reports that were put in with regard to the Drummond County Railway by the engineers that were sent down to report upon that railway. Every one of them, it can be seen upon the face of it, reported favourably to what the Government aimed at, they knew what the Government wanted, and they reported accordingly. How easy it is for the Government to get their own employees to make a report that will justify them in giving a larger or smaller amount, and when it is in their power to give a larger or smaller amount, how subservient the representative must be, how subservient the constituency must be who require in the interest of their own locality to have that railway built. For that reason I regard this proposal with great suspicion. There is great danger behind it, there is power given to the Governor in Council that we should not give. Parliament is asked to vote money on very imperfect information. I say we are not justified in voting money, and leaving it in the hands of the Government to manipulate that sliding scale according to their will. Now, if it was an engine which was powerful for injury before, how much more so will it be now. There is not a member in this House who supported the Government in the last Parliament but who held that to be the case when the Government commenced to subsidize railways on this line. Hon. gentlemen in Opposition also held that the Government were doing it for the purpose of corrupting constituencies. I say if that was the case before, how much more is it the case now. Now, I have a few words to say with regard to the calculations which may be made for the purpose of ascertaining the cost of a railway. I asked the Minister of Railways: What do you understand as cost? Will the right of way be regarded as cost? And I understood him to say, yes. The hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) asked him: Would the terminals be regarded as part of the cost? At first he said, yes, but afterwards he qualified it, and said that where the railway was going into a large city the terminal should not be included in the calculation. But he went on to say there was one railway here, the Cornwall and Ottawa Railway, in regard to which he would have to make an exception to the rule. Now, if that be the case, there is the Kingston, Smith's Falls and Ottawa Railway which also comes into Ottawa, and he will have to make an exception there as well, if he applies that rule. But I want to direct attention to the expression "cost" used in this resolution, where it says: "the true, actual and proper cost of construction." Now, surely that cannot mean right of way, according to a fair interpretation of the English language. If he had said the cost of the railway, then it would include the cost of the railway, but the cost of construction is one thing and the cost of the right of way is another. Therefore, I say, according to this resolution, the right of way could not be regarded as a portion of the cost. Now, I think the other feature to which the hon. member for York drew attention, is a very important one, namely, that while heretofore the Government gave no assistance for building railway bridges until they reached the cost of $100,000, and then they gave 50 per cent, now by this proposal they practically assist the building of bridges to the extent of 50 per cent of the cost. Suppose a railway is 100 miles long, and that railway has cost $15,000 per mile, and it has two bridges, each one costing $50,000. Under the old principle neither of these bridges would get any assistance from the Government. But as these two bridges costing $50,000 make $100,000, therefore it will increase the cost of that railway exactly $100,000. Now, the railway has already cost $15,000 a mile besides these bridges, therefore it makes the whole cost $16,000 per mile, and therefore the Government propose by this sliding scale to pay $500 a mile for 100 miles of that railway, or in other words, pay $50,000 on the cost of these two bridges, which only cost $100,000. Now, that will apply to any line. There is scarcely a line named in these resolutions upon which there is not one or more bridges, and it would be the easiest thing in the world for the Government engineer to say that the railway cost $15,000 per mile without the bridges, and therefore the cost of the bridges would be added to increase the cost upon which 50 per cent will be paid by the Government. Now, that is quite different from the old principle, it is an entirely new principle, and one that I think is unreasonable and would be greatly abused. For these reasons, I am opposed to this proposition of the Government. In the first place, I do not believe it is wise to put into the hands of the Governor in Council this great power which they propose to take in these resolutions. I think it is something that may be used to the detriment of the country, that will be used, I have no doubt whatever, to bring strength to hon. gentlemen opposite. They have two years in which to commence these railways and they have four years to finish them. The end of four years will be about the time when we shall go to the country again, and that will be just the time when they will have in their hands the power which they will use for the purpose of bringing grist to their own mill. Therefore, I say it is a bad principle, and it is a power that Parliament should not grant.

Mr. SCRIVER. I desire to say a few words upon this question. I have been long enough a member of this House to watch with interest and study with care the history of this system of subsidizing railways. It began, perhaps a score of years ago, and began as in a day of small things. So far as I can remember, the practice as first introduced, was confined to the subsidizing of branches of Government railways. From that it extended gradually to larger and independent lines, and as many of my fellow-members, who are here present, will recollect, the then Minister of Railways boldly presented a scheme of subsidizing railways on a very large scale, and in many instances without any reasonable justification for granting these subsidies. That it has grown to be a system which presses heavily upon the resources of the country, every one will concede who will inquire what the amount which has been granted to railways from various sources, municipal, provincial and federal, is at the present time. Several hundred millions of dollars have been expended upon railways from these sources, and that which has been contributed by the Federal Government alone is so much, including that given to the Canadian Pacific Railway, that the interest represents a very large proportion of the annual charge upon the resources of the Dominion. I do not forget, Mr. Chairman, that the party to which I have the honour to belong to, and which I trust I shall belong to as long as I remain in public life, was the first to oppose this system of subsidizing railways.

Mr. SPROULE. Hear, hear.

Mr. SCRIVER. The member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is quite right in stating that the system was characterized by us, while upon the Opposition side of the House, as essentially a corrupt one, and that the object in subsidizing many of these lines of railway was plainly and unmistakably a corrupt one. We can give many instances at all events we can give cases, of railways being subsidized, ostensibly for the purpose of opening up new and unsettled portions of the country, but really because it was hoped that the counties into which these lines would run would return a supporter of the Administration of the day. I have myself contended for that view of the case in more than one instance, not only on the floor of this House, but before my constituents, and I could not think of going before my constituents at this day and attempting to defend the introduction of this system by the Government which I support. I would not be consistent in doing it, and my constituents would have reason to accuse me of having forgotten my past professions and past views in regard to this matter. Another thing I desire to speak of now, and my friends and leaders of the Government I am sure will bear with me in what is intended to be friendly criticism. I trust that no members of this House will suppose, because I have felt it my duty to criticise the course of the Government on two matters in one day, that I am going across the floor of the House or that I have lost confidence in them in regard to the main line of their policy. But they are doing some things which I cannot as a Liberal and as a consistent Liberal, support them in. I think they are worthy of blame, as the predecessors of the Government of this country were worthy of blame, and of great blame, in that they have deferred the bringing down of these resolutions until the closing days of the session. I know the members of the Liberal party made it a matter of great reproach to the old Government that they brought these resolutions down at the closing days of the session, so that there was no proper opportunity for discussing them and examining them. I am bound to say that in the majority of cases the Minister of Railways of that day showed his complete ignorance of the merits of many of the schemes which he asked the House to subsidize. As a proof of this, I may state that on one occasion the Minister of Railways proposed that a line of railway not extending a very great distance, some twelve or fifteen miles, should be subsidized at so much a mile, and he was ignorant of the fact until I called his attention to it, that this railway was an extension of a Canadian railway into the United States. He proposed to subsidize twelve or fifteen miles of railway in the United States. It remains to be seen whether our present Minister of Railways has any better knowledge of the railways which he proposes to ask the House to subsidize than one of his predecessors in the past had. I think, Mr. Chairman, I may say, that it would have been much better if these resolutions had been brought down at an earlier period of the session, and if the House had been given ample opportunity to examine into their merits, if they have any, and to discuss them thoroughly. I know it is said by those who defend those resolutions, that the majority of them are re-votes. That does not lead me to regard them with any more favour. It shows plainly that these projects which it is proposed to subsidize now, by way of re-votes, were unable to be completed with the conditions attached to the subsidies which were granted to them, and now the persons behind them come before us again 'in forma pauperis,' and ask us for a renewal of these subsidies. I have no great confidence in extending these subsidies to them. I am bound to say that the proposition to subsidize railways at this time is an unfortunate one on the part of the Government of the day. The financial condition of the country is not such as to warrant the imposition of a large amount of additional debt upon us. The taxation of the country is large now, and we are proposing by the various schemes that are commended to our support to increase the debt very largely, and so increase the burden of taxation on the taxpayers of this country. My own province, I may say, the province of Quebec, is in an especially unfortunate position to be called upon to add to the taxation which it now bears. I suppose the majority of the members of this House are not aware, as I am, of the actual condition of things in that province from an agricultural point of view. Owing to the excessive rainfall of the spring and the unfavourable atmospheric conditions since, the crops of that country are not only belated, but they are in a very bad condition. I have no doubt in the world that the hay crop in that province, the most important crop that we raise, is no better than was the hay crop of Ontario two years ago, when it was an almost complete failure. Such a fact is really calamitous, apart from the consideration of other crops. Owing to the excessive rainfall, we have been unable to sow our grain in any reasonable time. Some of our sodden fields are unsown yet, and we are not able as we would like, to plant corn to take the place of the failing hay crop. I speak with great feeling when I speak of the condition of my own province, and of my unwillingness that the burdens that the people of that province have to bear should be added to. While I feel the force of party fealty, I felt that it should not be suffered to interfere with the duty that one feels he owes to his province, and to the country at large. While I hesitated to criticise as I felt it my duty to do, the general course of the Government of which I am a faithful follower I hope; still, I felt it to be my duty not to let these resolutions pass without expressing my candid opinion, that it was an unwise policy on the part of the Government of the day, at this period of our history, and in view of the condition of things prevailing in the province of Quebec and in the Dominion at large, to introduce a system which was, I sincerely believe, the cause of great corruption in days past and the cause of great injury to the country. I am afraid that if it is again introduced, and if it spreads, as I am sure it will, that injury will be perpetuated. Why, I am told that the subsidies which it is proposed to give to railways under the resolutions that are to be submitted to us, form a very small proportion of the demands made upon the Government, and I fear that this policy will result in an injury to the country, which it will take it many years to overcome.

Mr. SCRIVER.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, although I do not fully endorse the views expressed by the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver), as to the railway policy inaugurated by the Conservative Administration, still I may say that I subscribe, to some extent, to the opinions he has advanced on our general railway policy. There is no gainsaying that the line of policy pursued by the hon. gentlemen opposite is but a poor copy of the policy pursued by their predecessors in office, with this difference that instead of improving that railway policy, they have made it worse by the resolutions now under consideration. The hon. gentlemen opposite should have been taught, by experience, that the railway policy which has been carried out from 1884 was in some respects, vicious. It is no doubt within the remembrance of this House that I have, upon several occasions raised my voice against and found fault with the subsidies granted by my hon. friends, when they sat upon the Treasury benches, to some railway companies. If we are to judge from the resolutions now before us, the experience of the past has been an eye-opener for the hon. gentlemen opposite, as to the improvements to be introduced into the carrying out of that policy. They close their eyes to the light of experience, finding it a more congenial task, as remarked by an hon. gentleman this afternoon, to bonus railway enterprises of a very questionable character, financially speaking, only because those railways are built by their friends or are running through counties that return supporters of the Government of the day.

I do not think the day has yet come when this system of subsidizing railways should be brought to an end. I am of opinion, on the contrary, that it will be necessary to build new railway lines, in certain parts of the country; but, before bringing down resolutions for the subsidizing of railways, I think the House ought to be supplied with all the necessary information and data, and given ample opportunity to examine into the merits of these resolutions. This system of subsidizing railways entails an expenditure of several million dollars every year, and if we go on at that rate, at the end of another decade, we will have piled up a debt of at least one hundred million dollars. We go on, year after year, session after session, blindly voting between ten and fifteen million dollars for the bonusing of railway enterprises, without being given an opportunity of examining into the merits of these schemes, without being supplied with any data as to topography and conditions of the country through which these new railroads pass, or as to the revenues and possibilities of the country which they are expected to open up and develop. We are without any information or data on which to base our judgment as to the merits of the resolutions for which the Government ask our consideration and support.

I am very happy to have heard a friend of the Government sounding an alarm, this afternoon, and warning the Ministers that if they had the blind support of the file and rank of the party, they could not, at least, expect to have the unanimous support of the back benches, and that, further, if they meant to give strength to their followers by subsidizing railroads in the constituencies, the people of this country would have their eyes opened to the extravagance and folly of the Government in saddling the country with an expenditure of over a hundred million dollars in one single decade. Many of these railways are being subsidized merely to serve local interests, and not as a matter of public policy. What has become of several similar railways that were built in several portions of Canada with no other result, sometimes, but that of causing other railways to be closed to traffic, in the very country where it was proposed to build new roads? Several of these railways which we are asked to subsidize will cease to be operated, after millions of dollars have been expended on them, not by the promoters of these lines but by the Dominion Government, conjointly with foreign capitalists who have put capital in those enterprises. History will repeat itself, and experience of the failure of such enterprises, in the past, shows what resulted for us from the disappointment experienced by foreign capitalists who had invested money in those bonused railways, on the strength of the subsidies granted by the Government. Owing to this system of bonusing railway enterprises, capitalists had been put under a false impression and fooled into believing in the value of these roads, either from a trade standpoint, or from that of the opening up and development of the resources of the country. Capitalists were deceived and their capital is lost to them, as they no longer expect to be paid any dividends on the advances they have made, from the fact that those railways, some of which are no longer in operation, were operated at a loss and could never possibly be made paying properties either from the standpoint of trade or of the development of the country. I say that such a state of affairs, were it to become general, would simply be a calamity for Canada. Sooner or later, when foreign capitalists are invited to invest their money in important public undertakings, which might benefit the general interests of the country, they will decline assisting us in the building of railways that might prove useful to Canada, on the very ground of the distrust created abroad through the lack of prudence and wisdom of our Government in subsidizing railways which can be productive of no good either from the standpoint of trade or of the development of the country.

For my part, I do not believe it our duty to subsidize railways which can be of no assistance either to trade or to the opening up of the country. We are called upon to consider and assist such undertakings as may prove useful in the public interest, but not in a premature way. In my opinion, the Government of the day would evince a lack of wisdom in copying, in a slavish way, the railway policy of the old Administration. The House should not be invited to take into consideration any railway schemes, without first having been given, from the very outset of the session, ample opportunity to scrutinize their merits, and not until the Government have brought down on the Table of the House such maps and reports as are likely to give us an insight into the topography of the country through which these railways pass, as also such data and general information as might enlighten the House on the resources and possibilities of the country which these roads are intended to develop. With such information at hand, the House would be enabled to form a mature and healthy opinion as to the merits of the schemes which it is proposed to subsidize. I hold that it would be mere folly on our part to assist railway schemes, the merits of which are, to say the least, questionable. What, I ask, would the ratepayers in our great rural municipalities say, should the councils impose taxes upon them, for the opening of roads here and there, indiscriminately, and irrespective of the public interests? Such a corporation, the members of which acted in that way, would not long enjoy public confidence. Our municipal corporations being elective, the ratepayers would vote out of office councillors who had thus squandered public money.

I want the Government, next session, when they bring down resolutions for the purpose of bonusing railways, especially in the closing days of the session, not to do so, without those resolutions being accompanied by such maps as may show the survey of the projected lines, and the tract of country through which they are to pass. A report should also be submitted to the House, giving the population of the country, and showing the difficulties to be overcome in the building of the proposed railway, with such reports of engineers as may enable the House to form an estimate of the character of the obstacles met with, and the consequent cost of the undertaking. Moreover, the House should be given all such data and details as may be procured on the resources of the country which these new railways are to go through and accommodate.

Mr. Chairman, we have no right here to mortgage in that way the future of our country. The future of the country is not ours. The future of the country is the inheritance of our posterity, and should we, through our recklessness, mortgage the credit of the Dominion to such an extent that the next generation will find themselves handicapped, when called upon to carry out works of public interest, I say this Parliament, in my opinion, will incur an enormous responsibility, in the eyes of history and posterity.

Within the next twenty-five years, transportation may again be revolutionized. Science has not yet revealed all its secrets and surely the Government do not pretend to say that we have reached the acme of perfection in the matter of transport. No, I say, and I may even venture to predict that within the next twenty-five years, through the evolution of the mode of transportation, railways will likely be of less use than they are to-day. On that ground, I submit that we should not lay ourselves open to the reproach, that we have recklessly involved the credit of Canada to the very last limit in undertakings perhaps doomed to failure, and the merits of which, from a trade or a colonization standpoint, are, at least, questionable for the moment. Nowadays, Governments aim at doing things on a large scale, and at outdoing each other by their extravagant policy. But experience shows that, while trying to dazzle the people, they have, in several instances, squandered public money, without serving any useful purpose.

I am happy to say that my hon. friend from Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver) has taken a patriotic stand, this afternoon, and set to many of his colleagues an example of independence which they would do well to follow. The hon. gentlemen opposite, who, under the lash of the whip, are always ready to bow to the will of their leaders, would do well to take to heart the lecture administered to them by my hon. friend, who, I may say, is one of the veterans of the Liberal party and an honourable and honest man. I invite my hon. friends on both sides of the House to accept the suggestions of the hon. member from Huntingdon, which appeals, to the better sense of both sides in this House. As I said, at the outset, the time is not yet at hand, when we may consider our railway policy as completely carried out, but, from experience, we know that there are many improvements to be introduced into our system of subsidizing railways. Still, while still adhering to our old policy of bonusing railways, we ought to be careful not to put into the hands of the Government powers which belong to the House. If you give the Government the power to increase the railway subsidies, as they now do in the resolutions before the House, then the Government will have in their hands the power of raising those subsidies to $6,400 a mile. Who knows but that, through spurious reports prepared by two obsequious engineers, such as we have seen of late, the actual cost of those undertakings may not be over-estimated, so as to enable the Government or the Minister of Railways, for the time being, to raise to a higher figure the subsidy granted to a railway scheme, of no value either from the standpoint of trade or of colonization, but whereby speculators and political friends may be benefited, irrespective of public interests? Such schemers as I speak of, are to be found in the ranks of every political organization; they stick close to the steps of the Ministers, and attach themselves to their fortunes, with no other hope but that of public plunder. I have remarked that the better to reach their ends, they frequently interest in their schemes politicians of different political stripes, in order to escape unscathed, with the fruit of their plunder.

I am happy to join with the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver) in sounding an alarm and asking the Government not to allow themselves to be caught in the trap laid for them by those unscrupulous schemers who are merely aiming at controlling the undertakings which they want subsidized, irrespective of the results which may follow. Let, therefore, the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches, let this honourable House, ponder over what I have said, as public interests of the highest moment are at stake, under the resolutions now under consideration.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have been in hopes that since the leader of the House (Sir Richard Cartwright) and the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) have listened to the speech made by their faithful follower from Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver), they would withdraw these resolutions altogether. However, I presume they intend to force them through. To my mind nothing could better justify the course of the late Government, than the similar course which is now being pursued by the present Government. I expect, Sir, before the debate closes, to hear many hon. gentlemen supporting the Government rise in their places and make the same speeches as they did in years past when they were in Opposition. What does my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) say to all this. Why, I remember when the subsidy for the Cobourg, Northumberland and Pacific Railway was going through the House some sessions ago, my hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Lister) was loud in the denunciation of the Conservative Government granting that subsidy. It was characterized by these gentlemen as an election promise, and a bribe to the constituents, and yet these gentlemen opposite support it now. They grant 35 subsidies to different railways all over the country, involving an immense expenditure. Does the leader of the House know that some of those very railways, are those he denounced as bribes. He may claim that a great many of these are revotes, but nevertheless the late Government put a time limit, and if the companies did not earn the subsidy in a certain time they would not get it, but these gentlemen opposite come down now and give them two years or four years more to earn the money. The Liberals to-day pronounce that these enterprises are good, and that they are not bribes to the constituents. Where are the Patrons to-night to oppose this. Their platform declared that no more subsidies should be given to railways, and the leader of the House (Sir Richard Cartwright) publicly stated that the Patron policy was so much like the policy of the Liberal party, that the two might be blended into one. Where are the seven or eight Patrons supporting the Government; where are they to oppose this violation of their platform. The hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers), who I understand is the leader of the Patron party; where is he to denounce this proposal of the Government, and where are his colleagues? Where are they to denounce this proposal of spending $4,928,728, to subsidize railways at the extent of $3,200 per mile, and if that subsidy is increased by 50 per cent, as I presume it will be, where are they to oppose the expenditure of $6,439,392 which will be involved on that account. There is not a Patron in this House of Commons to protest against it. I am glad that my hon. friend from Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver), one of the staunchest supporters of the Liberal party, feels it his duty to rise in his place, and protest against such an enormous expenditure for railway subsidies. I am glad that he at least is here, to be consistent with his policy when in Opposition. As my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) remarked, these subsidies will have four more years to run, the general elections will then be coming on, and this Government will say to the companies: Put us in power and we will give you 50 per cent increase on the subsidies if the roads are built, and if the roads are not built we will extend the time in which you can do so. Is not this the reason why these large subsidies are now granted? Sir, I am not opposed to railway subsidies. I was opposed by a Patron in the last election, and I then announced to my constituents that in those counties which were not opened up by railway communication, I would feel it my duty to grant subsidies for their development. I do not feel disposed therefore to protest against these revotes, because I supported them when they were first proposed, nor do I feel that I can protest against some of the new subsidies. All of these revotes are for sums that were granted by the late Government, and I thought they were then, as I think they are now, worthy—

Mr. LISTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. TAYLOR. I thought so then, but the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) denounced them as bribes to the constituencies.

Mr. LISTER. Can you find anything of that kind?

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not think I would need to look through many pages of "Hansard" to find that when the bonus to the Cobourg Railway was being discussed, the hon. gentleman denounced it as a bribe to my hon. friend who now sits in this House. Hon. gentlemen opposite denounced the subsidy to the Ottawa and Cornwall Railway as one of the most gigantic frauds that had ever been perpetrated on this or any other country—it was a wholesale bribe. These two subsidies, I remember distinctly, were attacked by hon. gentlemen now supporting the Government, when they sat on this side of the House. But I am glad that, like the National Policy, and every other good thing which the late Government introduced and carried into effect, these hon. gentlemen now adopt and support every vote here, and say that they are good and worthy enterprises, and that the late Government did right in introducing them. But I rose more particularly to call on the Patron representatives, if there are any left in the House, to join hands with the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver), and denounce this Government for having introduced resolutions at this late period of the session, asking this Parliament to commit the country to an expenditure of $7,000,000 in these times of depression.

Mr. BOSTOCK. I want to ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, before these resolutions are passed, whether he has taken into consideration, the advisability of inserting a clause in these conditions that if at any time the Government should find it necessary, or consider it a matter of policy to buy or take over a portion or the whole of any of these railways, the amount of money we are now granting to them by way of subsidy should be taken into account. We have had an instance lately in which we have paid for a railway to which we had granted a subsidy, and it was claimed that no account should be taken of that subsidy. I think it is only right, therefore, that, in granting subsidies to railways, the Government should provide that if they take the railways over again or in any way deal with them, the moneys now proposed to be granted to them should be taken into consideration.

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to say a few words on those resolutions.

Mr. FOSTER. Lambton will come next.

Mr. McMULLEN. I quite admit that years ago I challenged the prudence of granting large railway subsidies, and when hon. gentlemen opposite were passing some of these votes, I found fault with them. I can well remember that some years ago, when Sir John Macdonald was passing similar resolutions, the fact was pointed out to him that the province of Ontario had completely altered its railway policy, in that it only granted subsidies to colonization railways, that is, those railways which opened up new sections of country; that it had ceased to grant any assistance whatever to railways which could, in any sense, be looked upon as rival lines to existing roads. I remember that the then leader of the Conservative party admitted that that was a good and correct policy, and declared that so far as his Government were concerned, the same policy would be followed, except in the case of lines which had already been subsidized and had properly earned their subsidies; because, in such cases, it would be right that the contracts entered into by the Government should be honestly implemented. Nobody could find fault with that position. In regard to these revotes, I must say that a number of them do not meet with my approval. They are for old, dead schemes, which were introduced years ago for political purposes. I believe, and I earnestly hope, that none of them will ever be built; I do not think the subsidies proposed by these resolutions will vitalize them, and I hope not. For my part, I think that there should be some provision made that the additional assistance for the construction of the roads should be confined to each mile of the road. I quite agree with the remarks of the ex-Finance Minister (Mr. Foster). If you are going to allow a very heavy expenditure, which may be made in carrying a road into a town or a city, to be applied over the entire line, so that the company may draw 50 per cent on the cost over $15,000 a mile, in addition to the $3,200, we may find ourselves called upon for very excessive additions to these bonuses. Take, for instance, the experience of the Canadian Pacific Railway. In entering the city of Montreal, I believe it cost that company something like $2,000,000 or $2,500,000 for two or three miles of road. It also cost them over $1,500,000 to get an eastern entrance into the city of Toronto to the Union station. If these large amounts were spread over forty or fifty miles of road, the Government would be required under this clause to pay a certain percentage. So that I think this clause, if it is to be applied at all, should be applied to the roads mile for mile, and that the companies should not be permitted to apply large expenditures for terminal accommodation in cities or towns over the whole line. The hon. Minister of Railways says the Government will exercise a great deal of caution. I have no doubt they will endeavour to keep the expenditure down; but if a company is proposing a very large expenditure for terminal accommodations in reaching a city, this resolution will be a great inducement to them to do it at once, so as to secure all the advantages of this extra 50 per cent. It is also well known that fully three-fourths of the railways, when first built, are built with wooden trestles and wooden bridges. The existence of this clause will be a temptation to the railways in future to build iron bridges and solid embankments at once, because, if a road costs over $15,000 a mile, its promoters will say that now is the time to complete the road by building solid embankments and iron bridges with stone abutments. I am afraid this provision is going to open the door to increased expenditure for railway construction. I do not think the Minister of Railways expects this, but I must frankly say, not pretending to interpret the clause like an experienced lawyer, but judging from my simple view of the whole matter, I think the resolution is likely to involve the country in excessive expenditure for the construction of railways. I think that we should go back to the principle I have just stated, and in no case subsidize a road unless to open up a new district through which there is running no rival line. We should cease subsidizing lines simply in order to promote competition. We have learnt in this country that competition in railways does not reduce rates. In order to bring about competition with the Grand Trunk Railway we subsidized the Canadian Pacific Railway, and to-day we find that these two lines combine as regards freight rates, and we are just in the same position in that respect as if we had but one road. I have no doubt a similar state of things will follow the construction of these branch lines. Every one of them will be operated either by the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the result will be that we will have really no competition. I think the Government would do well to revise these resolutions. I am very much afraid that, under them, the country will be called upon to pay a great deal more money than expected, and that they may be the means of revivifying schemes which, in the interests of the country, never could be resurrected.

Mr. SEMPLE. I noticed in the Votes and Proceedings of the 21st of June, that there are subsidies to eighteen lines of railways, which are re-votes, and of which the total mileage is 674 miles. I am very much afraid, from what I have heard, that in some of these cases there will be more to pay under these resolutions, than under those which were brought down by the late Government. We know that these railway companies are always promoted by the best legal talent and the best schemers in the country, and it will be very strange indeed if they will not come before the Government and plead very strongly that the cost of constructing these lines was much greater than it really was.

Speaking for the agricultural portion of the community. I have no doubt that their feeling is that the fewer subsidies granted the better and the less money spent the better. I have been informed that the subsidy has been fixed at $3,200 in order that the roads may be equipped with steel rails, but I am also informed that the price of steel rails is nearly $1,000 a mile lower at present than they have been, and if that be the case, the subsidies should be reduced instead of increased. One of the principle planks in the platforms of the Patrons was that railway subsidies should be abolished. There are hundreds of thousands of Patrons in this country, although it has been stated they have not a representative now on the floor of the House, which is correct. I was very glad to hear my hon. friend from Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver) sound a note of warning to the Government. I desire to assist the Government as much as possible, I desire to see it economize as much as possible, and that is why I have risen to make these few remarks, and I hope the Government will give attention to the criticisms which have been passed and spend as little as possible in subsidies to railways.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not desire to reflect upon the policy of the Government in granting these railway subsidies because they are following out the policy we took in the past and which I am not prepared to admit was wrong. I believe, however, that the first paragraph of these resolutions, providing that when a railway costs more than $15,000, it will be entitled to double the subsidy, is a very dangerous provision indeed. We all know, as the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has said, that these railway corporations are composed of most intelligent men, who will lose no opportunity of proving to the Minister of Railways that their several lines cost more than $15,000 per mile. If it were not for this clause, which is a very dangerous one, I would be very much disposed to support the whole policy of the Government with regard to these subsidies. I desire to call the attention of the hon. Minister to one line which is to be subsidized, the St. Lawrence and Adirondack. I see that it is to be subsidized for 13½ miles. If I remember rightly, this is one of the lines which was to have been subsidized by the late Government, but instead of 13½ miles the subsidy should be given for 16 miles. If the hon. Minister will make inquiries in his department, he will find that there are 3 miles of that railway at Valleyfield which were built by the company now operating it, and the hon. gentleman ought to grant the company a subsidy on the full mileage. I am not prepared to comment on the other subsidies, and I imagine they have all been examined into carefully, but there is one railway which is down for a subsidy, and with respect to which I desire to express my satisfaction to the Government for the aid it has given. I refer to the Montfort Colonization Company. If there is any railway which deserves a subsidy, it is this one. Amongst those hon. members who have spoken against subsidies, nearly all have said that in certain circumstances—when, for instance, the road was opening up a new country and is a colonization road—they are in favour of coming to its assistance. Well, the Montfort Colonization Company is one of these. It is opening up one of the best and richest portions of the province of Quebec, which has hitherto been left undeveloped, and I must say that I am personally very glad that the Government are granting it a subsidy.

I hope the Government will again seriously consider the first paragraph of these resolutions, for in taking the power to double the subsidy, the Government are undertaking a most dangerous experiment.

Mr. SCRIVER. Is the hon. gentleman quite confident that this vote for the St. Lawrence and Adirondack Railway is a revote?

Mr. BERGERON. I know that in the subsidies which were prepared in 1896, but did not come down because there was no money voted, there were 16 miles of road to be subsidized.

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. SCRIVER. Is the road not already contracted and in operation?

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, certainly.

Mr. BRITTON. This part is a revote. The statute of 1892 gives two subsidies to that same road, the St. Lawrence and Adirondack, for 5.42 miles from Huntingdon to the international boundary, for 18 miles between Valleyfield and Huntingdon, and 2.40 miles starting from the end of the 18 miles and going to the international boundary. It would look as if this was entirely new.

Mr. BERGERON. The present road, which is called the St. Lawrence and Adirondack Railway, is to-day the property of the New York Central. When it ran from Valleyfield to Malone, it was subsidized by the Canadian Government on Canadian territory. What this is for is a line from Beauharnois to Caughnawaga, which is a new line entirely, called the St. Lawrence and Adirondack Railway. And the three miles I speak of are at Valleyfield, starting from the old line which they have left, and coming down to the present station at Valleyfield. This has been built by a new company.

Mr. SCRIVER. When the item is before the House, I shall have a word or two to say about it.

Mr. BERGERON. I have spoken about it because I understood from the Chairman that we were speaking of the whole resolution.

Mr. OLIVER. There is one railway mentioned in the list of subsidies to which I would like to draw the attention of the House and of the Government, not because the part of the country in which I live is so directly interested as some other parts, but because, although it is a long distance from the constituency which I represent, still that constituency and the whole North-west Territories are very considerably interested in the possibilities of that road. I speak of the Rainy River project. As a local railway we have no interest in it whatever, but as a possible relief from railway monopoly for the North-west Territories, we have the greatest interest in it. Now, there has been a great deal of argument in this country and in this House in regard to railway monopoly in the Territories in connection with the Crow's Nest Pass scheme. But it is the part of the Canadian Pacific Railway system connecting Lake Superior with the prairies of Manitoba that is really the part that gives the Canadian Pacific Railway control of the traffic and trade of the North-west. It is that section of 425 miles which makes them masters of the situation. It is because over that distance they have no competitor, and because, owing to the great cost of construction through that country, they are not likely ever to have a competitor unless with Government assistance. Now, just to show the position in which the North-west Territories find themselves in relation to this question, I may say that by its control of this piece of land, the railway company is enabled to charge 161 per cent higher rates than are charged by the Intercolonial Railway between Halifax and Montreal. It is possible for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to levy that high, that extortionate rate, because they have a monopoly and are safe from competition there. There is another feature of the case that I may point out. Ontario communicates with Manitoba by means of lake navigation during the summer season. This is the cheapest route whereby grain can be brought out and merchandise taken in. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company have a line of steamboats on the lakes and other companies have lines of steamboats also. There is competition in traffic on the lakes, but when the steamboat lines reach Fort William they find that there is no competition from there to Winnipeg; and the Canadian Pacific Railway meets the competition of the vessel lines and steamers by charging an extra freight over that piece of road on goods or produce carried to Fort William by steamers other than their own. So they not only have a monopoly over that piece of road, but they use that monopoly to give them control of what ought to be the free, competing navigation of the lakes. It is because they are absolutely free of the possibility of another road competing with them there that they are enabled to hold their hand on the throat of Manitoba and the North-west and strangle the trade that should properly pass from the east to the west and from the west to eastern Canada. I put this strongly to impress upon the minds of the people of eastern Canada that this is not a matter that is only interesting to the west; it is not merely a question of getting the produce of the west out, but it is even more a question of getting the manufactures and commerce of the east to the west. If the east is to have an extension of its manufactures and commerce that extension must be in the west; and if the avenue of trade is choked by monopoly, the east suffers as well as the west. In this condition of affairs it is a matter of interest to the east as well as to the west to break that monopoly and to bring the cost of haul, especially over that 425 miles, down at least to the basis of the rate over the Intercolonial Railway, which would mean a rate of 7 cents per 100 pounds on grain from Winnipeg to Thunder Bay as against the present rate of 17 cents per 100 pounds. The rate on grain coming out, although high in proportion to that over the Intercolonial Railway, is not as high in proportion as that on merchandise and manufactures going in. Under these circumstances, I say that if this Government finds it necessary to come forward and aid the construction of a railroad into the Rainy River mining region, it seems to me that it is only reasonable that the Government and the House should take into consideration the possibility and desirability of extending that project so as to give a competing line between Winnipeg and Thunder Bay, so that the country both east and west may be relieved from the present monopoly. We are going to pay a certain amount to construct a railway to Rainy Lake, then by paying a small amount more we can have a through line that will not only develop the Rainy River mining region but will develop the whole North-west and Manitoba, and also develop the manufactures and commerce of eastern Canada. If that object can be attained, by even a considerable expenditure of money, it is desirable that it should be. As long as hon. gentlemen consider the Rainy River Railway project in the light of a local line, they are not considering it in the light in which it is, in my opinion, of most importance to this country, both east and west. Members of this House have heard of the project of the Manitoba Government to secure an independent line of railway from Winnipeg to Duluth over which grain would be carried at the rate at which, as I have already stated, grain is carried over the Intercolonial Railway. That is to say, the province of Manitoba is giving a bonus of say $100,000 to secure the carriage of grain from Winnipeg to Duluth at a cost of about six or seven cents per hundred. They also expect to secure a reduction of rates on freight coming in by 25 per cent. Everybody must admit that it is more desirable that the trade of Manitoba should be done by way of Port Arthur or Fort William than by way of Duluth, because if trade is done by way of Duluth it is to the disadvantage of this eastern country. If the province of Manitoba is interested to the extent of $100,000 a year in getting relief from the present monopoly (which is, I have no hesitation in saying, simply unbearable) surely it is reasonable to suppose that they will be just as willing to enter into an agreement with this Government to have their competing line built to Fort William, to have that terminus in Canadian territory and keep the trade on Canadian soil, as to expend their money to carry trade to Duluth. But if this Government will not do that, certainly they are bound to have relief in some way, and if they cannot get it to Thunder Bay they will get it to Duluth; and this Government any more than the late Government cannot prevent them. I say it is a national policy that should be taken into consideration by the House and by the Government, that by all necessary means they should endeavour to cheapen the freight between eastern and western Canada and to keep the trade of Canada within our own territory even if it should cost a few dollars more than for the building of a merely local line for the development of a certain section of the country.

Mr. McMULLEN. I propose that that clause be amended. I think it is necessary that we should prevent the scattering over the entire line of the enormous cost of entering into a city. If this cost amounts to $250,000 or $150,000, then you can scatter that over the entire line, and the country is called upon to pay for it. I think if we are to pay anything in excess of the $3,200 per mile, it should be confined to each mile, and if one mile cost $100,000 we should only be asked to pay $6,400. But under the reading of this clause, if one mile cost $100,000 you can scatter that over the entire line and you have got to pay 50 per cent of that entire cost. Now I think the additional subsidy should be confined to mile per mile of the road, and I suggest that after the words "average cost" in the tenth line, these words be added, "each line constructed and subsidized."

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have been considering the subject since some hon. gentlemen have presented their views with regard to this phase of it, and I perceive there is some fear on the part of hon. gentlemen lest the subsidies might be greater than we anticipate. I had concluded before the hon. gentleman arose, to suggest that perhaps the committee would adopt the resolutions as they are now on the table, and I would prepare some amendments which I think would afford all the guarantees that they might desire in order to avoid the possibility of these sums aggregating as large amounts as they fear they might under the present reading of the clause. If the committee would pass the resolutions in their present form, on the submission of the Bill for its second reading, I would be prepared with some words in amendment to the existing clause which I think would cover the ground. The Government have no desire to ask Parliament to give them power to grant any general subsidies. We have had the opinion, and I must say that that opinion is still maintained, that there will be but few roads entitled to anything more than the minimum amount of subsidy. I do not think that there is any substantial danger in regard to the cost of right of way in getting into towns where lands would be very expensive, and where the amount of cost would run up to large figures, because the only town which is named in connection with any of these proposed railways is the city of Ottawa. In looking over these carefully I do not note the case of any other city except Ottawa in which the danger could possibly arise. It is therefore largely an unfounded fear. I would therefore suggest to my hon. friend to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. McMULLEN. With that understanding I withdraw my amendment.

The Ottawa and New York Railway Company, for 53 87-100th of their railway, from Cornwall to Ottawa, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5. (Revote.)

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The name has been changed by Act of Parliament, and received the assent of Parliament early in the session.

Mr. FOSTER. Is any portion of the road built?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Nothing is done yet.

Mr. FOSTER. Has it been surveyed, and have estimates of the cost been put into the department, and the line laid down, or anything of that kind?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have no estimates of the cost.

To the Kingston, Smith's Falls and Ottawa Railway Company, for 101 miles of their railway, from Kingston to Ottawa, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5. (Revote.)

Mr. BRITTON. In this case there is an agreement between that railway and the Grand Trunk Railway in reference to running powers over the Grand Trunk Railway from the city of Kingston to a station called Rideau on some point between Kingston and Rideau. Therefore I have the consent of the Minister of Railways to moving this amendment, to add after the word Kingston, in the second line, the following words: "Or a junction with the Grand Trunk Railway at Rideau or other point near Kingston."

Mr. FOSTER. Can the Minister state with reference to either of these roads what is about the average cost, and if there are any large or small streams where fairly expensive bridges will be required?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot give the hon. gentleman information on that point.

Mr. FROST. There are no large streams between Kingston and Ottawa. The road runs through an almost level country, and they think the road can be constructed for something like $10,000 or $12,000 per mile.

Mr. McMULLEN. Are there any rocks?

Mr. FROST. There are no rocks; it is through a nice country. Fourteen or sixteen municipalities have voted bonuses to the line, showing that the people desire the road.

Mr. BRITTON. In addition to what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Frost) has said I may state that there is a bridge which will be included in that part of the Grand Trunk where we have that running power. There will also be a bridge across the Whitefish part of Delta Lake, near Morton. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) asked about rocks. There is a single portion of it rocky country in the township of South Crosby which will be a comparatively difficult portion of the road to build. But what the hon. gentleman for North Leeds (Mr. Frost) has said that it is not difficult on the whole to build is correct, and it certainly will not exceed, I think, $15,000 a mile.

Mr. SPROULE. About how far would be the average distance between this road and the Brockville and Ottawa road from here to Smith's Falls.

Mr. BRITTON. It runs at right angles to the Brockville and Ottawa and crosses it at Smith's Falls.

To the Joliette and St. Jean de Matha Railway Company, for 20 miles of their railway, from St. Félix de Valois to Ste. Emilie de l'Énergie, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 57-58 Victoria, chapter 4. (Revote.)

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I desire to move an amendment to this clause. The name of the company is not the Joliette and St. Jean de Matha Railway Company, but the St. Gabriel de Brandon and Ste. Emilie de l'Énergie Railway Company. I propose to substitute St. Gabriel de Brandon and Ste. Emilie de l'Énergie Railway Company for Joliette and St. Jean de Matha Railway Company; also, 15 for 20 in the first line; also, the word "St. Gabriel" for "St. Felix de Valois" in the second line, and insert after the word "l'Énergie" in the second line, "and five miles from a point on the main line to St. Jean de Matha, making in all twenty miles."

Amendment agreed to.

For a railway from Campbellton, on the Intercolonial Railway, towards Grand Falls, N.B., a distance of 20 miles, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 57-58 Victoria, chapter 4. (Revote.)

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would move that the words "commencing at Campbellton" be inserted after the word "miles" in the second line.

Amendment agreed to.

To the Schomberg and Aurora Railway Company, for 15 miles of their railway, from a point on the Grand Trunk Railway between King and Newmarket to Schomberg, in the province of Ontario.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this a revote?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This subsidy is for a road from a point on the Grand Trunk Railway between King Station and Newmarket to Schomberg, a distance of about fifteen miles. Although it runs through a fine country, it will be a very difficult road to build.

Mr. FOSTER. How much will it cost per mile?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It passes through a fine country, but it is hilly. The valley of the Holland River runs through there, and then there is a very high ridge running through the country for many miles which has to ascend and descend, and which will make it an expensive road to build. They hope to induce the Grand Trunk to take an interest in it and promote it. It reaches a fine country.

Mr. SPROULE. Was it not proposed to build an electric railway through this country a year or two ago.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not heard of it.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps the Minister of Railways and Canals will tell us what the cost of this road will probably be. It makes a great difference in the view that the committee may take, whether we are to pay $3,200 a mile or $6,400 a mile.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understand it can be built for $15,000 a mile.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the road been surveyed?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. So that the Minister has really no information about it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to commend this answer to the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver) who made a remark this evening as to the lack of knowledge possessed by the Minister of Railways in a Conservative Government in reference to the roads which he proposed to subsidize. I have put four questions in reference to four roads, and in respect to none of them have I been able to get any information from the Minister.

Mr. SCRIVER. I acknowledge the corn.

Mr. FOSTER. It is a commentary on Parliamentary proceedings to have fifty men here who are supposed to scrutinize the expenditures and vote moneys, called upon in the last night of the session to put through a string of railway votes of which there are not two men in this House—I doubt if there is one, the Minister of Railways included—who knows the least thing about any one of them, except, may be, the one in which he is least interested.

Mr. SCRIVER. You and your colleagues set us the example

Mr. FOSTER. You and your colleagues, after all your professions are going it just so much better than we did because you are not satisfied to give $3,200 a mile, but you want to make it $6,400 a mile. The Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) says that this road ascends and descends and goes up and goes down, and neither of them know anything about the cost of the road, yet the Minister of Railways asks us to vote this money. He has not a line of a report, he does not know whether it runs north by south or east by west, or whether it is going to cost $15,000 or $20,000 per mile. There is not an item of information in the hon. gentleman's department with reference to this, and yet he asks us to swallow this vote.

Mr. SPROULE. This road goes through a heavy country and I am quite sure it will cost $25,000 a mile.

Mr. FOSTER. Just one question more: When it stops, does it stop anywhere?

Mr. SCRIVER. It probably stops altogether, it is not started yet.

Mr. FOSTER. Not except as an election road. But when it gets to Schomberg is that on another road?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. FOSTER. There is a mild anticipation that if this subsidy of $6,400 a mile is granted, I think the Postmaster General said the Grand Trunk Railway would father it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I said that I thought the promoters hoped to be able to interest the Grand Trunk Railway some way in this scheme, but I have not said that officially.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, it is a promoter's road; get the money voted and shove it off on somebody else, and make something out of it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It was promoted by the late Administration and was included in the list of railways they proposed to subsidize.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Was not the first proposal to the late Administration to make it an electric road?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When they applied for incorporation I think they proposed to run it as an electric road, but when they came before the Railway Committee they changed their programme and applied for a charter for an ordinary steam railway and as such it received the imprimatur of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) and he gave an undertaking to give it a subsidy.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the Postmaster General is astray. My recollection is it never got a subsidy; they applied for one.

Mr. FOSTER.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The resolutions were not brought down to the House but the Minister of Railways thought so much of it that he gave a letter to a very prominent gentleman on the eve of an election, stating that it would have been openly given a subsidy, only, that because of the obstruction of the then Opposition the Conservative Government had not been able to proceed with their railway policy; but it was on the list all right.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) seems to be very much surprised that I am not furnished with information, and that my office is not loaded down with surveys and returns with regard to all these railways; and yet, I have in my hand 100 railway undertakings which were either subsidized or pledged to be subsidized by the late Government, and with respect to which there is not on file any survey or thing whatever.

Mr. FOSTER. No information?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No information and never has been.

Mr. FOSTER. I venture to think this is the first Minister of Railways who did not know anything about it.

To the Pembroke Southern Railway Company, for 20 miles of their railway, from Pembroke to Golden Lake, in the province of Ontario.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that a new road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. New.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Minister give us some information as to where it runs, the nature of the country through which it runs, and the estimated cost.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That railway will run across country.

Mr. FOSTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. POUPORE. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. FOSTER. Give the Minister a chance.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will give way to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Poupore).

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister has the floor.

Mr. POUPORE. I just want to explain this to the committee briefly. I have sent a page for the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. Mackie) whose project this is, and I am sure he will be able to explain it fully to the House. It is a line of railway from the prosperous town of Pembroke, to connect with the Ottawa and Parry Sound Railway. It runs through a very important section of the country, and will develop the resources of that part of our Dominion. There is no doubt that this is a very important railway project, and some very responsible men are connected with it. There is a company formed composed of wealthy capitalists who are putting their money in the scheme, and who intend to carry it through to completion, with the assistance of this subsidy. It is a very worthy project, and ought to receive the hearty assistance of this Parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. I am very sorry to see the Minister of Railways deprived of a chance to give this explanation. I noticed him looking around as if he had lost something, but he no doubt made an unexpected find in the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Poupore).

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is the Minister quite sure, that this line runs across country.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Oh, yes.

To the Ontario and Rainy River Railway Company, for 80 miles of their railway, from the Port Arthur, Duluth and Western Railway to Rainy Lake, in the province of Ontario.

Mr. FOSTER. Please where does that start and where does it end. I would like to have information about this road?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Almost every member of the House is well versed in the section of the country through which this railway is proposed to go. It starts from the western terminus of the Port Arthur, Duluth and Western Railway, and runs through the Rainy River district where rich iron and gold mines are now being developed, and which has some very fair agricultural country. This is about half the distance of the line that is proposed to be built. The matter has been before the country so long, both in the provincial House and also in this House, that I thought every one was familiar with the road. The company has been reorganized to some extent, and the persons now connected with it are amongst the wealthiest in the Dominion. The province of Ontario has subsidized the road for the full length of 160 miles.

Mr. FOSTER. Where will it get to when the 160 miles are built?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It will connect with navigation, either on Rainy Lake or Rainy River, I forget which. But it connects with the navigation which supplies that whole country, which is one of the finest sections in the province of Ontario, and which it is very desirable should be opened up.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not opposing this road. On the contrary, it is one of the meritorious ones which will open up a new country. This will be an expensive road to build, probably running up the subsidy to $6,400 a mile.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. SCRIVER. And the one preceding it, as well.

To the Strathroy and Western Counties Railway Company, for 7 miles of their railway, commencing at a point at or near Caradoc Station on the Canadian Pacific Railway and extending to the town of Strathroy.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the Committee ought to have some information with regard to this short line of road, because it seems to me that in this case the Government are adopting a new principle. I think I heard the Minister of Railways, a short time ago, state, not in so many words, but in fact, that where a section of country was well supplied with railway facilities, the Government ought to go slow in voting money for assistance to new enterprises. I happen to know something of this district, and in the short space of seven miles across country, to use the Minister's phrase, there are three main lines of railway. The town of Strathroy, which is a small town, is on the Sarnia branch of the Grand Trunk; a short distance from it is the main line of the Grand Trunk, the old Great Western; and near the main line of the Great Western is the main Ontario line of the Canadian Pacific; and the principle adopted by the Government, in aiding this seven miles of railway, is simply to give competition to the town of Strathroy. I would like to know whether it is the policy of the Government to aid railways whose only object is to oppose other railways which have already developed a section of country and have afforded it every possible railway facility, because that is what this line does.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I suppose that every railroad in the settled parts of the Dominion has received a bonus in past years, and that is what is intended in this case. There is no doubt that the object of this road is to give that section of country, which is, perhaps, the garden of Canada, connection with the Canadian Pacific at the town of Strathroy, and to provide that thickly-settled part of the country, which originates a great deal of freight, with competition between the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway. There is no doubt that that is the only object, excepting the local convenience for the thickly-settled part of the country through which it runs.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The question of local convenience does not come in at all. In the small triangle through which this road will run, between Strathroy and the station of Caradoc, the people have only two or three miles to travel to a railway station, and then they have a choice of the three main lines I have mentioned. I am not opposing this, because I am very friendly indeed to that section, but I am pointing out to the Government that they are laying down a principle which it will be very hard to carry out with equal justice to every section of the country, if they are willing to say that, if a town of 2,000 inhabitants has good railway facilities passing through it, and other good railway facilities for competitive purposes within five or six miles, it is the duty of the Government to vote the public money for the purpose of giving that town competition. In doing this I think, they are laying down a dangerous principle and bringing difficulties into their own path, as well as into the path of their successors.

Mr. FOSTER. Who will operate this road?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no doubt, from the information that has been given to me, that it is the intention of this company to build the road and allow the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to operate it. They expect to make that arrangement. If they do not, I doubt whether they will build it.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there a company formed to build it?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Before this resolution is carried, I think we ought to have some declaration of principle. The Minister of Railways ought to tell us whether the Government intend to go into the business of providing competitive facilities for towns and cities, because that is the only thing that will justify this subsidy for this seven miles of road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not say that we propose to make it a part of a regular system that we should give aid towards providing competitive roads; but when a case is made out for a small piece of railway such as this, I do not think it is any particular answer to the application to say: You are only providing a competitive road. I think it is right that, under certain circumstances, some competition should be secured by means of a small subsidy of $3,200 a mile, when people are willing to put in their capital and construct a railway perhaps costing $10,000 or $12,000 more. I do not think it will be wise for a Government to lay down an arbitrary rule and say that under no circumstances will it give assistance to an undertaking of that kind.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not understand, then, on what principle the Minister has gone. He refused to aid the Detroit River and Lake Erie Road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is a parallel line.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is a parallel line through a large section of country for a time, but it opens up another large section of country, eventually becoming a through route, affording great facilities for that section of country. Besides, the argument of the Minister of Railways fails. He says there is no objection to voting a large sum of money to provide a competitive line for that section of country. The hon. gentleman was not in this House when it voted a large sum of money to provide a competitive route for that very country. This Parliament has also voted a very large sum of money for competitive roads to that country. The Canadian Pacific Railway was bonused from London to Windsor, and that line runs directly through this section, to which it is said we ought to have a competitive line.

To the East Richelieu Valley Railway Company, for 24 miles of their railway, from Iberville to St. Thomas, boundary of Missisquoi county, in the province of Quebec.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Mr. Tarte). That road will connect Iberville with the American frontier and traverse one of the most fertile districts of the province of Quebec, which has been deprived of railway accommodation for a long time. It is 24 miles long, and I am very much obliged to my hon. colleague for having subsidized this line through my county.

Mr. FOSTER. I congratulate the committee on the large amount of information given it. But if we do not get information, we have had the mutual bows and congratulations of one Minister to the other, for having looked after each other's interests.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Ministers in this Government always bow to each other.

To the Portage du Fort and Bristol Railway Company, for 15 miles of their railway, to a point at or near Shawville, in the county of Pontiac.

Mr. FOSTER. Let us have an explanation of this from the Minister of Railways?

Mr. POUPORE. This is a very important branch which is to be a feeder to the Pontiac and Pacific Junction Railway, which that railway badly needs. It is to connect Shawville, a thriving village in the county of Pontiac, with another flourishing village in Portage du Fort. It is going to develop a very important marble deposit there and other mineral resources. This grant was promised by the late Government, and the Minister of Railways and Canals was kind enough to include it in the present resolutions, because he felt that the country was entitled to this line, and I beg to thank him for having given it that much consideration.

For a railway from a point at or near Windsor Junction, on the Intercolonial Railway, to Upper Musquodoboit, for a distance of 40 miles.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this a new road?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, this is a road to Upper Musquodoboit, a very thriving district in Halifax county, starting at or near Windsor Junction on the Intercolonial Railway and running through a good farming country, and a section of country entirely without railway facilities.

Mr. FOSTER. Any large bridges ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Is Upper Musquodoboit as important a town as Liverpool ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. When I represented Halifax county in the legislature, I thought there was no more important place than Musquodoboit. Now that I represent Queen's county, I think there are few more important places than Liverpool.

Mr. FOSTER. Will not gratitude for past favours induce the hon. gentleman to bring down in next year's Estimates, a post office for Upper Musquodoboit ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is worthy of anything you can give it.

For a railway from Sunny Brae to Country Harbour and thence to Guysborough, in the province of Nova Scotia, a distance of 65 miles.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We propose to make a slight alteration. I move to strike out the words "and thence" which are in the first line and insert the words "from a point at or near Country Harbour crossroad."

Mr. FOSTER. What will be the total length ?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). The road will be a few miles longer than 65. A survey has been made from Sunny Brae to Country Harbour. A subsidy was granted from the Intercolonial Railway to Sunny Brae by the late Government and also for five miles of the road now to be built. A company has offered to build this road to Country Harbour, which is a very important harbour on the southern shore of Nova Scotia, with a branch from Country Harbour crossroad to Guysborough.

Resolution, as amended, agreed to.

For a railway from Port Hawkesbury, Nova Scotia, to Port Hood and Broad Cove, 53 miles, for 53 miles of their railway, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 57-58 Victoria, chapter 4. (25 miles revote.)

Mr. GILLIES. Is there any proposition before the Government on the question of this line ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. GILLIES. How far north does the Government intend to subsidize this system, because I believe it is intended to be a system from Hawkesbury as far as Broad Cove, a distance of 53 miles ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The promoters of that road have looked forward to the extension of the road to Margaree and Cheticamp, but we think that the subsidy of 53 miles to Broad Cove will give a chance to start the enterprise. The ultimate destination of these enterprises is usually a point beyond. The Government is under no obligation to give a subsidy for an extension, but if the company were to build to Broad Cove, I do not see any reason why they should not get an extension at a future time. But at present we do not wish to commit ourselves beyond the limits of the resolution.

Mr. GILLIES. There is no proposition before the Government to that effect ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, I believe not.

Mr. FOSTER. That seems like inviting a proposition. I suppose if this goes on it will cost the full $6,400, going through that section of the country.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understand not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think it is a very expensive road to build. It follows the coast line from Strait of Canso and so on up.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Was not there a subsidy voted for a road to Orangedale to Sydney ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, that is a different project.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I wondered whether this would not be a competing road with that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It runs across an entirely different direction, Orangedale being a station on the Intercolonial Railway. They would connect I think at Broad Cove.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, at Mabou.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know very much about this particular road, but it occurred to me that the other road was looked into very carefully by the late Administration of the Dominion, and I think also by the Administration in the province in which the hon. Minister of Finance was the leader, and very probably the Minister of Finance is familiar with it for that reason. I believe that the route commended itself to the provincial Government and that contracts were entered into to build the road, though, for some reason, they did not go forward. It occurred to me that this might be a competing road with that, and, if so, it might require consideration.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Up to a certain point the two roads would not be competitors, until they reached Mabou, and from there they cover the same ground. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) was right in saying that there was a contract made for a road from Orangedale to Broad Cove. Though the enterprise did not succeed, the people in the section desired to have the road built, though there is no proposition at the present time to commence it actively. Whether they will be able to revive it, I do not know, but at that time the company were not able to prosecute the work.

Mr. GILLIES. As this is the only vote that touches the part of the country from which I come, I would like to refer to another line of railway that was taken up by the late Government and for which a subsidy was voted, and which I am sorry to see does not appear in these resolutions. I refer to the road between Canso and Louisbourg via St. Peter's, on the southern side of Cape Breton. The Minister of Finance is fairly familiar with that part of the country, I believe, because I think he drove over it once or twice. He will bear me out that this is a most important section of the eastern part of the Dominion. From Canso to Louisbourg is a distance of 90 miles, and the proposed line runs through a territory which is known to be very rich in minerals. Now, in the year 1894, a subsidy was granted for the first section of that road from Hawkesbury to St. Peter's, a distance of 30 miles, or one-third of the whole line, and an undertaking furnished by the Government to furnish the balance of the subsidy as fast as required. A contract was entered into for the construction of the road, but, owing to some financial difficulties, the work could not be gone on with. I regret very much indeed that the policy of the late Government in regard to this matter has not been taken up by the present Administration in preparing these resolutions. I had the pleasure of waiting on the Minister of Railways recently with some gentlemen and asked him for a subsidy to be brought down for this road, but he said that it was too late in the session to deal with it then, though I observed the resolutions with regard to other railways were brought down subsequently—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But they had been decided upon before.

Mr. GILLIES. No doubt, they had been dealt with before these matters were brought to the attention of the Minister. Now, inasmuch as it is a most meritorious line, that will accommodate some 30,000 or 35,000 people who are without railway facilities at the present time, and who find it impossible to get out of that section of the country in winter, and inasmuch as it is a very rich country, in respect of minerals and has a large industry in the way of fish and other products, I would ask the hon. Minister to give this system his attention; and I do trust that next year when he is preparing his resolutions in relation to railways he will not forget this important line. I would like to have an answer from the Minister of Railways if he will deal with this matter next year as it is not in his power to do so this session.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The application made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gillies) together with some gentlemen who were interested in the road was too late to be considered this session. It is quite true that additional resolutions were brought down after he had submitted the matter to me, but those resolutions embodied decisions that had been reached before, and it had also been decided that we could not take up for consideration any further application for subsidy.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a road of which I have some knowledge and in which I felt a very warm interest. When in the provincial government, I made a contract with a company to build a section of that line from the Strait of Canso to St. Peter's, in the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Gillies') county, but unfortunately that enterprise also failed. The contractor, owing to causes concerning which I never had any information, did not prosecute the work. I have not had a communication with him for a long time. If the contractor had been in a position to make a proposition to the Government, I think there would have been a fair chance of success, but as the promoters made no representations, we were not in a position to consider the work until after the railway policy of the Government had been agreed upon.

Mr. GILLIES. During the last session when the hon. Finance Minister was in the House of Assembly, an Act of incorporation was passed for a new company, covering this territory, and representatives of that company waited upon the Government, but the Government had not included a subsidy to this line. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance, as he is the only Minister from my province, what his policy would be with respect to this line next session.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is our policy not to make promises for next session. But, so far as I am personally concerned, I think that the people of the country, knowing what I have done in the past, will be willing to trust me to do what is fair and reasonable.

For a railway from a point on the Central Railway in the county of Lunenburg, Nova Scotia, to the town of Liverpool, via the village of Caledonia, or to the village of Caledonia, via Liverpool, or for any part thereof, the whole distance not exceeding 62 miles; 35 miles. (Revote.)

Mr. KAULBACH. I desire to ask the hon. Minister of Railways, for the information of those residing in the counties of Lunenburg and Queen's, as to where this proposed railway is to connect with the Central Railway in the county of Lunenburg?

It is to be hoped it is not contemplated by the Minister of Railways to interfere in any way with the proposed belt line already projected and subsidized, and upon which construction has already commenced between Shelburne via Indian Gardens, and Caledonia, connecting with the Central Railway at New Germany? I desire to further comment on this resolution, but I await an answer from the hon. Minister to my question.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I think I will have to ask the Minister of Railways to permit me to be his proxy in this case. The line to which the hon. gentleman opposite refers is one of 75 miles from New Germany to Shelburne, which was taken up by a company called the Nova Scotia Southern Railway Company, promoted by Mr. R. G. Hervey, of Brockville. Unfortunately the enterprise has not succeeded. The present vote is taken in such a form that if the company under the management of Mr. Hervey is able to carry on its work the Government will be in a position to grant the subsidy in accordance with the original design, for a line from New Germany, extending through Caledonia, in Queen's county, and on to the town of Shelburne. We are in a position to deal with Mr. Hervey's company if he is able to go on. But it is only fair to say that there has been considerable dissatisfaction in that district of country owing to the failure of Mr. Hervey to prosecute his enterprise, and it was not thought expedient to tie up the vote to that particular scheme. The vote is taken in such a form that if Mr. Hervey's company is not able to carry out its scheme, then the subsidy may be applied in another way, starting from the same point and going to the town of Liverpool, or starting from a point on the Central Railway, nearer the shore, say Bridgewater, and going by way of Mill Village to Liverpool, and thence up the river to Caledonia, thus leaving us in the position that, if Mr. Hervey's company is not able to carry on its work, we shall be free to deal with any other company.

Mr. KAULBACH. If I understand this resolution rightly, and I think the hon. Minister of Finance will agree with me, the people of Liverpool are anxious for railway connection, and they certainly are entitled to accommodation of this sort, and I am with them in the project. Now what is feasible and most advantageous for Liverpool is to construct a road from the referred to Indian Gardens to Liverpool following the valley of the Liverpool River, a distance of only about eighteen miles. The object of the people of Shelburne, Queen's and Lunenburg is to have the shortest possible line from Shelburne to connect with the Central Railway at New Germany, in the county of Lunenburg, with a view to extend the same direct from New Germany via New Ross to Halifax, having connection with Chester, Chester Basin and Hibbert's Cove. This contemplated road passes through a country excellently wooded, well adapted for farming purposes, also well watered by beautiful lakes and rivers abounding in fish and attractive to sportsmen and tourists, so that this road when constructed to Halifax will shorten the distance between Halifax and Boston via the Yarmouth boats to Boston in contrast with any other road by five hours, offering at the same time the most comfortable, attractive and as I have said the shortest medium of transit to Boston from Halifax. I certainly do not object to the resolution as submitted, providing it does not interfere with the belt line between Shelburne and New Germany via the Indian Gardens and Caledonia.

For a railway from Brookfield Station, on the Intercolonial Railway, to Eastville, 30 miles. (Revote.)

Mr. ELLIS. Where is this?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a railway up the valley of the Stewiacke River in Nova Scotia. It is a revote of a scheme which has been undertaken by a company called the Midland Railway Company. This end of it they have not so far undertaken. Eastville is on the Stewiacke.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance seems to have had no trouble in the outcome of wrestling with his colleagues. I think Nova Scotia has between a million and a million and a half dollars. There does not seem to be a crack left in Nova Scotia that will not be covered with railways after a while.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I wish it were so, but I can assure my hon. friend there is quite a number of cracks left yet.

To the Grand Trunk Railway Company, for a subsidy towards the rebuilding and enlargement of the Victoria Bridge at Montreal over the St. Lawrence River, 15 per centum upon the amount expended thereon, not exceeding $300,000.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to ask the Minister of Railways if the Government has undertaken the policy of granting 15 per cent upon the renewal of any bridges already built?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The circumstances in this case are entirely exceptional. A very large amount of money has got to be spent on reconstruction, not so much for the renewal as for the enlargement and extension of that bridge. We are informed that about two millions of money will be required to extend the capabilities of this bridge. In the first place it will be provided with another railway track; then there will be two tracks laid down for tramways, and there will be a highway for carriages and a foot-path for passengers. Take it altogether the bridge will be comparatively new. It goes without saying that the abutments will remain, although they will be extended, but the superstructure will be absolutely new.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Before you pass away from these itemized subsidies I hope the committee will not think me unfair having been absent so long, if I shall say just a word on a subject which has been considered, and it will be a brief word, in justice to some parties who have been attacked in connection with it. I refer to the line which it was proposed to give a charter from the Kootenay country to the coast. In order to put the committee and the country in possession of the facts of the case, and in order, as it seems to me, to do justice to a certain number of people who have been very bitterly attacked by the press, both Opposition and Governmental, it will be necessary for me to say a few words in connection with the history of the question. From the Kootenay to the coast it was proposed by two separate lots of promoters to build a railway. The one proposed, as I understand, to build from Nelson to Vancouver; the other proposed to build a road not perhaps the whole distance, but part of the distance with a view to eventually covering the whole distance over that same route. When the Minister of Railways and Canals was at the coast and going over the ground he collected information which I have no doubt was valuable to the Government and to the House, because no man can go over that section of the country without his views being very much broadened and without collecting a great deal of information, which must be of use to him. These promoters, one set representing the Victoria, Vancouver and Eastern Railway Company and the other representing the rival enterprise, asked an audience with the Minister of Railways and Canals and that audience was granted. They were each presenting the views as to the excellence of each one of their schemes, and they presented these views for the purpose of securing the all-powerful influence of the Minister of Railways and Canals in connection with the request for a charter which each one of them proposed, to ask of Parliament. The Minister of Railways perceived that the rivalry between these two parties might injure the project, and he proposed, and it was a very wise proposal I think, that these two sets of promoters should combine their efforts for the purpose of securing a charter for this route across the Hope Mountains, giving the trade, as they thought it would, of the Kootenay country, to the coast cities, Victorial, Vancouver and New Westminster. The suggestion made by the Minister of Railways was regarded by these two sets of promoters as a wise suggestion, and they adopted it. The people who came from Victoria were represented chiefly by Dr. Milne, who is a resident of Victoria and a prominent citizen of the coast. In that combined form they came to Ottawa for the purpose of securing a charter. I am not going to refer to anything that took place here, because being absent, and only receiving the papers very occasionally I have no knowledge of the history of the matter whatever. But the charge has been made in the papers that these people were charter hawkers. I see some of the Conservative press, as well as the Liberal press, have called upon the Government to pass legislation which will suppress this charter hawking business as they term it, and saying that they were endeavouring to secure this charter for their own profit and gain. I know nothing whatever as to any deal which was proposed by gentlemen representing that syndicate here; I know nothing as to what deal was proposed or accepted, and afterwards rejected or anything else, but I do want to say this that the Vancouver people who at the suggestion of the Minister of Railways are no charter mongers in any sense of the term. They only combined with the Victoria people because they felt it would be giving a more certain success to their efforts to acquire a charter. I say further that they put up their own private money and there are many of the most honourable citizens of Vancouver among them, to pay for surveying the route. They are not men who want a single dollar out of the sale of the charter. They would refuse to accept a single dollar out of the sale of the charter, and they asked me in justice to them to make that statement upon the floor of this House should I come here before Parliament was prorogued, and I make it with great pleasure. I want to say this further in their behalf. Some of them are Liberals and some of them are Conservatives. I want to say that they were willing to accept no proposition, however advantageous to them privately, individually or collectively that did not give them a railway from the Kootenay to the coast. I do not know any one of these people who have joined for the purpose of securing a consideration and they have no deal as I am assured by themselves. They have put up their own money, and they are willing to put up more as far as they are able for the purpose of testing the feasibility of the route across the Hope Mountains to Vancouver. I think it is to be greatly regretted from the Canadian standpoint, from the standpoint of the coast cities of Canada, that some aid has not been given to construct this road from the Kootenay to the coast. Rossland and Sandon are towns showing great progress and great activity.

Mr. BLAIR.

While they are Canadian towns, there is a large American element in them, and they are not so adverse to trading with Spokane and cities south of the boundary as are the people on the coast and other portions of British Columbia. What concerns the latter is the prosperity of the coast cities. What should concern this Parliament is the turning of the trade of what is bound to be the richest portion of the Dominion of Canada into the coast cities of Canada at the very earliest possible moment for hon. gentlemen on the Government benches will know that once trade gets into a channel to the south of the line it will be difficult for a road constructed then to bring it back to Canada. I do not care who builds the road. The Canadian Pacific Railway have given a splendid service now by their rail and water route. Let the Canadian Pacific Railway build it if you like; let another Canadian company build it if you like, but I think it should be the policy of the Government to assist in the construction of lines that will take the trade of the richest centres in one of the richest provinces in the Dominion into cities built on Canadian soil and whose people are Canadian citizens interested in Canada where Parliament votes this money for railway construction.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 151) to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned.—(Mr. Blair.)

THE POST OFFICE ACT.

Mr. FOSTER. It is now one o'clock, and I suppose we are not to be kept here any longer.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Call Item No. 2.

Mr. FOSTER. I must ask the leader of the House (Sir Richard Cartwright) if he is really going to impose any more on us. We came here at eleven this morning, and have done so for ten days, and we cannot be asked to do impossible things to satisfy one member of the Government who expresses dissent. I know that it is the feeling of the House that we should go home.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. On Saturday the House went into committee on the Bill, and the present leader of the Opposition took a course which probably commended itself to him, but the object of which was apparent to everybody. Four hours were frittered away by gentlemen on the other side speaking against time, with their eyes on the clock, until it would reach twelve o'clock on Sunday morning. The question is whether the minority in the House are going to regulate the course of business or not, or whether in a pure departmental matter they will be allowed to prevent the proper conduct of the affairs of the department. If the hon. gentleman and his colleagues had been directing themselves to a fair consideration of the measure, it would be another matter. But the most irrelevant discussions took place—anything to kill time, to reach twelve o'clock and prevent the work going on. He thought, I suppose, that by these methods the measure could be prevented from going through. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries announced then, and I think I can safely announce now, that it is not the intention of the Government to hand over the conduct of their affairs to a minority, and to allow unparliamentary methods to prevent the proper conduct of affairs. If the ex-Minister of Finance desires a fair discussion, if he thinks it is unreasonable to proceed at this hour of the night, and is prepared to discuss the measure honestly, and after reasonable discussion to let the view of the Government take effect, and the Bill to become crystallized into an Act, that is one thing; but if obstructive tactics are to be continued in regard to this measure, there is no course open to the Government but to proceed as it has a right to proceed. If it comes to a matter of endurance, I presume that the members on this side are quite able to endure as hon. gentlemen opposite, and they are resolved, whether to-night or another night, that this measure shall become law, for the Government are in a majority. The measure has been thoroughly discussed, its principles are well understood, and five minutes ought to complete it, unless the same old tactics are to be resorted to. Most important measures have been threshed out here at a later hour than this, and this is a measure of very considerable importance in a departmental way; and if no obstructive tactics are resorted to, the mere carrying of the decision of the Government need not take many minutes. If the Opposition, however, intend to obstruct the measure, and that obstruction lands them in the small hours of the morning, the responsibility is theirs. The ex-Minister of Finance need not plead that it is a late hour to proceed to obstructive tactics. But if he intends to persist in his obstructive tactics, we may as well have the matter out at one time as another. I think there is no justification whatever for the Bill standing over any longer. I therefore move that the House resolve itself into a Committee on Bill (No. 129) further to amend the Post Office Act.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not going to enter into a wordy warfare with my hon. friend.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am very sorry, but I think this discussion is out of order.

Mr FOSTER. I do not suppose the Speaker is going to put me down.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The House may go into committee, and then the discussion may take place.

Mr. FOSTER. What I want to do before the House goes into committee is to make an appeal to my hon. friend who is the leader of the Government for the time being. I am not going to waste a single moment in any warfare with the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. I simply rely on the common sense of the House to say whether we should be kept here any longer at this period of the session and this hour of the morning, and I think I may appeal with confidence to my hon. friend that it is time now to adjourn and go home.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. My hon. friend does not propose, I suppose, to enter into a mere contest of endurance as to this measure, but wants to criticise it fairly.

Mr. FOSTER. There has been every charge of obstruction made against me to-night—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Most flagrant obstruction.

Mr. FOSTER—without any reason or warrant.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I saw you organize the obstruction.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman proposes to be insolent. He may be so if he likes.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Let us have an understanding about this. I am quite sure that if the hon. leader of the Opposition says that it is not the intention deliberately to obstruct this measure, but merely to criticise it—

Mr. FOSTER. I would do anything for my hon. friend to pave the way to an adjournment—anything except to say anything untrue. I will say that it was our opinion on this side of the House that this measure was at one time practically withdrawn; we believe it ought to have been withdrawn. I cannot say that there will not be a very extended discussion on the Bill if it comes up again. It is the right of the Opposition to discuss it. I do not think any one wishes deliberately to obstruct. But my present plea is for reason in the conduct of the House, which I know my hon. friend will admit. I move the adjournment of the House.

Motion to adjourn negatived, and the House again resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FOSTER. I decidedly do not wish to undertake a speech of eight or ten hours to-night; I am not in a position physically to do it. I consider that this is nothing but an attempt to bulldoze a weary and tired House, and I again make my most earnest protest against being forced into a position of that kind. No man would agree for a moment to the proposition, put in the way in which it was put by the Postmaster General, and I do not propose to agree to it, that I should bind myself to stop obstruction and pass this Bill. That is not the way any man gets a Bill through this House—not the way a man should address other members of the House. I still hope, and still implore my hon. friend who leads the House that he will not force this House into that position.

Mr. FOSTER.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. All I would say to the hon. gentleman is this. He himself, I am sure, will admit that this is a Bill of considerable departmental importance, which my hon. friend informs me is really necessary to the proper working of his department, and to enable him to carry out the economies which both sides desire to see carried out. We do not in the least object to any amount of fair and reasonable criticism upon it; but surely the hon. gentleman can give us some idea of what length of criticism would be required. He can have all to-morrow to criticise it if he chooses; but there ought to be some kind of understanding. It is not fair to attempt to block the Bill altogether. It is perfectly fair to criticise it, but not to attempt to block it altogether. It is really a matter which my hon. friend assures the House on his responsibility as a Minister is extremely important to the well-working of his department. I will press my hon. friend to meet the wishes of the hon. gentleman as the House has been in session since eleven o'clock, but still this Bill has been up two or three times and no progress made, and I would ask the hon. gentleman to give some assurance that no unreasonable amount of time will be taken up.

Mr. FOSTER. We cannot make any promise as to time, but we shall give the Bill what reasonable criticism we think is necessary. There is one part of the Bill which is specially objectionable, and that is the provision dealing with contracts. That we do not feel disposed to agree to, and propose to oppose as vigorously as we can. The other portion is not so objectionable.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman says that the other portion is not so objectionable. If I saw in that the glimmer of a spirit of compromise, I am prepared to meet the hon. gentleman on that ground. I shall read, if you will permit me, a report from a gentleman whose opinion will have some weight.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman can read that to-morrow.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I must have an understanding on the subject. Day after day this Bill has been before the Committee and talked out. On Saturday night, hon. gentlemen opposite talked from eight to twelve with the clear object of reaching midnight, when the House would have to rise, without anything being accomplished. The hon. gentleman made a proposition that seemed very fair for the moment, but the very moment I made the suggestion—

Mr. FOSTER. The proposition is: Withdraw your clause with reference to contracts and leave that matter stand as it has been standing these many years, and we will give a fair reasonable criticism of the other portion and pass it in the ordinary course of legislation.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know what the hon. gentleman means by passing it in the ordinary course of legislation.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not going to promise at the dictation of any man that we shall discuss a thing five or ten minutes, or an hour. What I say is, that we shall give it a reasonable discussion.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have some reason for trying to arrive at a mutual understanding. The treatment I have received causes me to desire an explicit understanding; and to show that I am not proceeding without some justification, I shall read a document on the subject.

Mr. FOSTER. If you are going to come to an understanding, drop the document and come to an understanding, and let us go home. It will be daylight while you are talking about it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman's impression as to the understanding is so vague that he does not know what I mean.

Mr. FOSTER. If I were on that side of the House and in the position of the Postmaster General, I should be quite willing to leave it to my leader.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My leader and myself quite understand each other, and so do the Government. The understanding we have arrived at is, that, inasmuch as the Opposition has chosen to challenge the power of this Government to conduct its affairs, by the methods manifestly adopted on Saturday night, we are not going to depend altogether on hon. gentlemen opposite for the legislation we propose to invite the House to pass. If the hon. gentleman undertakes now to come to an understanding, with regard to this particular clause to which he objects, it will not take five or six minutes to pass the remainder.

Mr. FOSTER. I object to passing it to-night.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I propose to read, for the information of all who desire to know it, the opinion of the Chief Superintendent and Inspector of my department, showing what this measure—

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to put him a question?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Certainly.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Are we to understand that this document which the hon. gentleman wants to read, applies to the clause about which there is controversy?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It does not bear on that clause.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What I understood the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) to say was, that if the hon. gentleman would drop the contract clause, he would allow the Bill to pass with ordinary discussion. And I understood the Postmaster General to say: Yes, I will agree to that; but before that I will read the report of a certain officer to show why I proposed that clause.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not understand the leader of the Opposition to say he was willing to go on to-night and pass the Bill.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What do you propose?

Mr. MULOCK. I propose to go on with the Bill, and, if the rest of the Bill which is said to be not so objectionable, receives the approval of the Committee, I will view very favourably the request of the ex-Minister of Finance about clause 2.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does the report which the hon. gentleman proposes to read, bear on clause 2?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, it bears on the other clauses of the Bill, which the leader of the Opposition says is not objectionable.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman does not understand. As I understand it, the proposition of the ex-Minister of Finance was that if the Postmaster General would drop the objectionable clause and allow this Bill to go on in the ordinary course of legislation, and not force the House to sit through the small hours of the morning, he was willing to have it discussed in the usual way, but the hon. gentleman now proposes to go on, whether we will or not, by reading a report which is part of the discussion.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the rest of the Bill is so unobjectionable, it will only take a few minutes to pass.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman might understand the full sense of the House. It wants to go home. It has been sitting here long enough. We have plenty of time tomorrow to go on with this Bill. I made a proposition as clear as possible, and everybody except the Postmaster General understands it. I know that the hon. gentleman's leader understands it, and I leave it to him whether it is not a fair and reasonable proposition and whether we ought not to adjourn?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I would ask my hon. friend to accept the proposition of the leader of the Opposition in view of the fact that the House has undoubtedly done a great deal of work. As I understand it, the leader of the Opposition has promised that a reasonable discussion only will take place.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1.10 a.m. (Tuesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 29th June, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock a.m.

PRAYERS.

SUPPLY BILL.

Bill (No. 150) for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service for the financial years ending respectively 30th June, 1897, and the 30th June, 1898, and for other purposes relating to the public service, was read the second and third times and passed.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Bill (No. 151) to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned, was read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On resolution 1,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Agreeable to an announcement that I made last evening, I propose to introduce an amendment to the first section of the Bill, which I think will be found to remove any doubts which may have arisen with regard to the exact meaning of the clause. This portion as amended will read as I now read it, so that hon. members will be good enough to follow me :

Mr. FOSTER.

The expression "cost" used in this resolution, means the actual, necessary and reasonable cost, and shall include the amount expended upon any bridge up to but not exceeding $25,000, forming part of the line of railway subsidized and not otherwise receiving any bonus, but shall not include the cost of equipping the railway, nor the cost of terminals or right of way of the railway in any city or incorporated town.

Amendment agreed to.

On resolution 7,

Mr. FOSTER. Before the Bill is reported, I would like to inquire from the Minister of Railways what is the amount, at the minimum rate of $3,200 per mile, of the subsidies voted here, first, as to revotes; secondly, as to new subsidies.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am afraid that I cannot furnish the hon. gentleman the information at the moment.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman has not that information, if he will have that calculation made by his department and the information here before the third reading, I would have no objection to letting this go at the present time; but before the Bill is read the third time, I would like to have that information.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I had it all here, but a portion of my papers have gone back to the department. I think I can have it by the third reading.

Mr. FOSTER. It will not cause any delay in that way, because the Minister can send over to his department and have the calculations all brought over.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can tell the hon. gentleman the gross amount of the subsidies included in the revotes. It was $2,148,128.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the amount of the revote subsidies at $3,200 per mile?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. If my memory serves me well,—but I will get the exact figures—the whole amount will be $4,100,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Does that include the Grand Trunk Railway bridge?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That includes all.

Mr. FOSTER. I should like to have it accurately before the third reading.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I will give it; I have not the statement that I thought I had.

Bill reported.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 146) to authorize a subsidy for a railway through the Crow's Nest Pass.—(Mr. Blair.)

POST OFFICE ACT.

The House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 129) further to amend the Post Office Act.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FOSTER. I observe that the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) is not present. I have some weighty arguments which would have no force at all unless they are addressed directly to the Postmaster General. I think we must have him here. I have great hopes of persuading the hon. gentleman this morning.

On section 126,

Mr. SPROULE. I think it is entirely too bad that we have to run this Bill through like this without having any information as to what is to be done. No matter how good-naturedly we have tried for information we get none. We are putting this through practically in the dark. We do not know how many officers are to be employed or how the work is to be divided, where the officers are to be located, or anything about it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). If the committee has been behaving very well, I will try not to behave very badly—

Mr. FOSTER. I say if my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) will allow me, that the arrangement of last night is being carried out, and that subsections 2 and 3 are dropped, and the Bill is passed.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If you will allow me, I would like to explain to my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, how this matter stands. A day or so ago, after I had listened to the criticisms on clause 2, and having thought them over, I came to the conclusion that there was some force in them. I desired to meet the views of my hon. friends opposite and, for that purpose, I drafted an amendment which I thought would get over the difficulty. I may say that the present Act is wholly unworkable. It requires, in the first place, an advertisement of a mail contract for six weeks. Then, if it is found desirable to refuse all the offers on the ground that the fee is too high, we are not at liberty to offer another price to the tenderers all at once, but are obliged to take them in detail, offer it to the lowest and await his refusal, or allow a reasonable time for refusal and then repeat with the others until the whole list of tenderers is exhausted. If they refuse—if there is a ring, for instance—you are just where you were when you started, and have to go through the whole thing again. I had a case in point in the east, and public service suffered through the cause I have pointed out. There was another case in the west, but I have got through the difficulty in that case, but no thanks to the law as it stands. I do not, in the least, desire to destroy the principle of tendering, nor do I desire to go outside of the tenderers if one of them is ready to perform the service at a reasonable price. I therefore propose an amendment by striking out of section 2 all the words after "competition or," and substituting the following:—

May name a sum as the outside price for said contract, and may submit the contract for competition amongst all who have tendered and any others, such submission to be made by registered letter sent to said tenderers and to others, and to state outside price and to name a day, not being less than 15 days from the day of posting such letters, within which tenders will be received.

That is, if the lowest tender is not satisfactory, I can say: Here is a sum that is reasonable, and I offer the thing in competition again amongst the tenderers, and with permission to invite outsiders. If the tenderers are in combination as sometimes happens, it is idle to offer it amongst them, because they will stay where they were; and if we cannot escape from the tenderers we have got to readvertise and there is six weeks lost again; that together with the preliminary loss of time makes the Act practically unworkable when it comes to large contracts. With very small contracts there is no difficulty, but with large contracts involving a $30,000 plant the law is inoperative to-day. It is simply to get out of the difficulty of delay that I asked to have the statute amended. As my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has acted courteously to me, so I shall to him, and if he does not think it is in the public interest to accept this amendment willingly and gracefully, I shall withdraw it for this session. I shall accept any reasonable proposition my friend offers.

Mr. FOSTER. This is a new proposition which will involve discussion and we are not in a deliberative mood. The best thing we can do is to adhere to the proposition made last night.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Very well, I will not press it. Will you allow me to cut down the six weeks advertisement to four weeks.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no objection. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) has plenty of opportunity again for that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. An hon. gentleman on the other side suggested that the fifteen years mentioned in the Bill, should be cut down to ten years, I am willing to accept that suggestion.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no objection.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I wish to strike out the word "now" in section 120, line 18.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well. Will the hon. gentleman now accept a suggestion from me.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. With pleasure.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to have section 121 read "may be made by the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the Postmaster General." I wish to add the words "by the Governor in Council."

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Very well, that was the intention.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 130) to further amend the Civil Service Act.—(Mr. Mulock.)

SASKATCHEWAN RAILWAY AND MINING COMPANY.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the House, I would like to move a motion. It appears that a gentleman from Toronto who promoted a railway Bill which came before the Railway Committee and the House, gave the Clerk a cheque in payment of the fees. That cheque has been dishonoured, and several weeks have elapsed in which the maker of the cheque has had an opportunity to make it right. I think it is a very disgraceful thing for solicitors or others promoting Bills to be guilty of such conduct; and, with the permission of the House, I beg leave to move:

That all proceedings had in this House on Bill (No. 53) to revive and further amend the Acts respecting the Saskatchewan Railway and Mining Company and to change the name of the company to the Saskatchewan Pacific Railway and Mining Company, be declared null and void.

I do not know the parties at all, and cannot find any person who does. It is a great convenience to solicitors, members and others interested in legislation, to have cheques received and their word of honour taken in these transactions. I think it is disgraceful that any persons promoting a private Bill should fail to keep faith with the Clerk; and if only for a warning for the future, I think this motion should pass.

Mr. SPROULE. Was not this one of the Bills which were assented to?

Mr. SPEAKER. This Bill has not left this House.

Mr. FOSTER. Who was the promoter before the committee?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Bill was in the name of Mr. Lount as member; but he had no knowledge of the parties, I understand, or of the Bill itself.

Mr. MULOCK.

Mr. SPEAKER. The cheque is not, I understand, a cheque of the member who introduced the Bill, nor the cheque of any solicitor or agent before this House.

Mr. FOSTER. Has any communication been had with the parties?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am informed by the Clerk that there has been communication for several weeks. I can understand how, from the fact of a Bill being in the name of a member of the House, some misapprehension might arise as to his relation to it. The name given to me by the Clerk as the maker of the cheque is Mr. Cheeseworth.

Mr. SPEAKER. I may say that Mr. Lount had no responsibility for the Bill. He only took charge of it for a constituent.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT—KOOTENAY MAIL SERVICE.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I beg to extend my congratulations to hon. gentlemen on the approaching termination of the labours they have so zealously performed on both sides.

Mr. FOSTER. How near?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Perhaps my hon. friend has friends who can tell him better than I. In the meantime, I think, awaiting events, the House might adjourn until three o'clock, and I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Before the motion for adjournment is carried, I should like to ask the Postmaster General whether he has completed his investigation into the manner in which the mail service is conducted in the Kootenay mining district, and whether he is perfectly satisfied that he has now got that service placed on such a basis that it ought to prove satisfactory to the people of that district.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). I sent Chief Inspector Sweetnam to British Columbia to look into a large number of postal matters, including the service in question. I received a telegram from Mr. Sweetnam a day or two ago, stating that he is on his way back, and this will be one of the matters on which I am sure he will report to me on reaching Ottawa.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If there is one department of the Government which more than any other should be of great value to the Kootenay country, it is the department of the hon. gentleman. But I never saw a section of country in which the mail service was so badly handled, and in which people were so much inconvenienced as they are at the present time by the inefficiency of the postal arrangements there, and I sincerely trust that they may be improved.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The information which the hon. gentleman gives me is not new. I may say that persons engaged in government contracts and works out there are so deeply interested in other matters that even postmasters holding lucrative positions will neglect to attend to their duties, and I have had twice to send officers direct from headquarters to British Columbia to overhaul the officers who were more interested in speculations than discharging their duties. It was just such difficulties that made it necessary for me to send our chief officer out there, and it seemed impossible to stir up the officials of local affairs in that country. When Mr. Sweetnam arrives, I will be able to deal with the matter.

The contemplated extension of the service in British Columbia during the approaching year will cost a good deal of money, but it was quite impossible to form any opinion as to the amount, and therefore I was unable to put an item in the Estimates to cover the expenditure. The rates they charge are abnormally high, and in some cases quite beyond what one would be apparently warranted in paying. Therefore it will be necessary next session for me to ask a supplementary Estimate in order to pay for the service we intend to inaugurate in the near future.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at twelve (noon).

Second Sitting.

TUESDAY, 29th June, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock p.m.

PRAYERS.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved third reading of Bill (No. 151) to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned. He said: The hon. gentleman wished to have certain information which I hold in my hand. The amount of subsidies which are revoted wholly or in part, under the first resolution, $2,148,128, and under the second resolution, $16,000, making a total of $2,164,128. The amount of subsidies which are new votes, under the first resolution, is $1,825,560, and under the second resolution $277,000, making a total of $2,172,561—or in all the sum of $4,336,000.

Mr. FOSTER. This is, of course, on the computation of $3,200 per mile.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

REPORTS.

Summary Report of the Geological Survey Department for the year 1896.—(Mr. Fisher.)

Annual Report of the Department of Public Printing and Stationery, for the year ended 30th June, 1896.—(Mr. Fisher.)

PROROGATION.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Although not in a position to speak absolutely and authoritatively, we are in hopes that sufficient speed may be made in the other branch of the legislature to allow us to prorogue at 8 o'clock in the evening. If the House will kindly adjourn until 5 o'clock, we should then be in a position to state definitely.

At Six o'clock p.m.

Mr. SPEAKER. I beg to inform the House that I have received a letter from His Excellency's secretary to the effect that His Excellency will proceed to the Senate Chamber to prorogue this session of the Dominion Parliament on Tuesday, the 29th instant, at 8 o'clock p.m. Therefore, I will leave the Chair until 8 o'clock p.m.

PERSONAL—LIVERPOOL POST OFFICE.

Mr. HENDERSON. I beg the indulgence of the House for one moment. I read in the Montreal "Gazette," of yesterday, the following:—

Of the 20 who supported Mr. McMullen's amendment to strike out the item of $5,000 for Liverpool, N.S., P.O., five were Liberals, Messrs. Bain, Christie, Oliver, Scriver and Mr. McMullen himself, in spite of the fact that when he left Ottawa some days ago, presumably for the session, a standing pair was found for him in Mr. Henderson, who has gone home to remain. The fact that he was paired seemed to make no difference to Mr. McMullen, and he voted.

In justice to the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) I merely desire to say that I do not consider that by his voting yesterday on that motion he in any way violated his pledge as, had I been here, I would have voted just as he did. The statement that I had gone home for the session is also untrue, which is evidenced by the fact that I am in my place to-day.

The Speaker left the Chair, to resume the same at 8 p.m.

PROROGATION.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY :

The Commons of Canada have voted certain Supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the Public Service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Excellency the following Bill :—

"An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service for the financial years ending respectively the 30th June, 1897, and the 30th June, 1898, and for other purposes relating to the public service."

To this Bill the Royal Assent was signified in the following words :—

In Her Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks Her Loyal Subjects, accepts their benevolence and assents to this Bill.

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the Second Session of the Eighth Parliament of the Dominion with the following Speech :—

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

In relieving you from further attendance in Parliament, I desire to thank you for the assiduity with which you have discharged the duties of a fatiguing session, and I congratulate you on the very important legislation which has been the outcome of your deliberations.

The revision of the tariff, which occupied a large part of the session, has been completed in a manner which, I trust, will prove effective in promoting the trade and commerce of the Dominion. It is gratifying to know that this measure has been recognized as one of Imperial importance, and that it has already had a marked effect in strengthening the bonds which unite Canada to the motherland.

The arrangements for establishing a fast steamship line of the highest class between Great Britain and Canada, with the co-operation and assistance of the Imperial and Canadian Governments, encourage me to hope that at no distant day we shall see the accomplishment of that very important project.

I am pleased to observe that you have made provision for extending substantial aid to various important railway enterprises, which are designed to develop the vast mineral wealth of Canada, and to improve the facilities for transportation and travel.

The Bill to provide an effective system of cold storage on land and sea will promote the interests of our agriculturists, by affording means for the transportation of perishable food products and placing them in the best condition in the great markets of the world.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I thank you for the liberal provision which you have made for the public services.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons .

The session now closing will be memorable not only on account of the important measures which have been passed, but also because it has been held during the year of Her Majesty's Diamond Jubilee, in which the people of all parts of the Empire united in celebrating the sixtieth anniversary of the reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria. The splendid demonstrations which have taken place throughout the Queen's Dominions testify at once the loyalty and affection of the people towards their Sovereign and the unity of the British Empire. I know that you rejoice with me that Canada has worthily performed her part in these great events.

In now taking leave of you, I desire to express my best wishes for your personal happiness and my earnest hope that the work of the session may prove useful in advancing the prosperity of the people whom you represent.

The Speaker of the Senate then said :

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate, and Gentlemen of the House of Commons.

It is His Excellency the Governor General's will and pleasure that this Parliament be prorogued until Wednesday, the eleventh day of August next, to be here held, and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued until the eleventh day of August next.
